2 Nay worſe yet: For yee ſhall note malice in them (which is the worſt kinde of evill.) For, if yee marke, this Volumus of theirs, is, with a kinde of ſpite, with a kinde of diſgrace, to thoſe he had ſhewed before. They would ſee one: as who ſhould ſay; thoſe were none, they had ſeene: that was none they ſaw, even now. Maliciouſly: If He ſhewed none, then He was no bodie; could not indeed ſhew any; and ſo vilifie Him with the people: If He ſhewed one, then carp and cavill at it, as they did at that even now: Say, it was done by the blacke art. So, cavill out one; and call for another, to deprave that too. Nay maliciouſly evill.

3 Nay (which is worſt of all) Evill and abſurd men (ſaith the Apoſtle.) When is that? Vidi iniquitatem & contradictionem, ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Ye ſhall ſee, how abſurdly they contradict themſelves. But even now, they charged Him, to worke by the devill: and here now they come, and would have him ſhew a miracle. The devill cannot ſhew a miracle; a tricke of Sorcerie he can: Such may be done by the claw of the devill: miracles not, but by the finger of God, by power divine. Him then, Him, whom they even now had pronounced, to deale with the devill; Him come they to now for a miracle. So abſurdly malicious, as they cared not, in their malice, to contradict themſelves. To men, ſo evill, ſo maliciouſly evill, ſo abſurdly evill, Signum non dabitur eis. And abſurdly evill. 2. Tim. 3. 13. Pſal. 55. 9.

Well: howſoever they might erre that way, the men otherwiſe to be reſpected, they were ſo vertuous men, ſo ſtreight livers. See ye not their phylacteries, how broad they weare them? Nor that neither (ſaith CHRIST;) but, evill, and adulterous too. As, of evill minds, ſo of evill lives, too. Ye ſhall come now, to the uncaſing of a Phariſie. For, CHRIST lifts up their Phylacteries, and ſhewes what lurkes under them.

For, by adulterous I underſtand not, as if He charged them, they were borne of adulterie, came into the world the wrong way: the ſeed of Canaan, and not of Iuda:

As, having nothing in them of the Patriarchs; So nothing leſſe, than their children, of whom they bare themſelves ſo much. This, is adulterina rather than adultera : children of the adulterers, rather than adulterours themſelves. And, that was no fault of theirs : And CHRIST upbraideth no man, but with his owne faults.

Nor, I underſtand it not, of ſpirituall adulterie; though, that way, they might bee charged, as leaving Him the true Spouſe, the true Meſſias; taking no notice of Him, paſſing by Him, went after ſuch as had adulterate the truth of GOD, by devices of their owne taking up : Not with Idolatrie (perhaps) but (which is an evill, and differs but a letter) with idolatrie : For, to worſhip images, and to worſhip mens owne imaginations, comes all to one. That, they were faulty of: (and I pray GOD we be free.) But this, is myſticall adulterie, and I would make, as no more miracles, ſo no more myſteries, than needs I muſt:

For my part, I ſee no harme, to take the word in the native ſenſe, without figure, for men given to commit that ſin, the ſin of adulterie. For (for all their deepe fringes) all was not well that way: as is plaine, by Iohn VIII. Where, not one of them durſt take up a ſtone, to caſt at the woman taken in adulterie : but ſlunck away one after another, till there was not one left. CHRIST toucheth upon that ſtring: to ſhew, what heavenly men theſe were, that would have a ſigne from heaven, and none elſe ſerve them. Were not theſe meet men, to ſue for a ſigne? Were not a ſigne even caſt away upon them?

Ioh. 8. 1.

But, this is not all. For, this they were (ſaith our SAVIOUR) not here and there a man of them; but the whole bunch was no better: not the perſons onely, but the Generation ſo : not a good, of them all. And ſuch, you ſhall obſerve, there be: Not onely, ſuch men, but ſuch Generations of men, and faults (ſuppoſe of lying, ſwearing, and ſuch like) rooted in a ſtocke; kept even in traduce (as it were) and derived dovvne ab avis atavisque, from the father to the ſonne, by many deſcents, in a kinde of hereditarie propagation.

A generation of ſuch.

Pro. 30. 11. 12. 13. 14. Salomon in his time noted foure of them: [1] One, a generation unkind to their parents, and their children, ſo to them for it: [2] Another, pure in their owne eyes : [3] A third, of high eyebrowes: [4] A fourth, cruel hearted, whoſe teeth were as knives to ſhred the poore of the earth, ſhred them ſmall.

Such were theſe : and adulterie made way for ſuch. For, ubi corrupta ſunt ſemina, where a generall corruption that way, no good to be hoped for; the Countrie will not laſt long. By this, Chriſt had ſaid enough; and ſhewed, non dabitur eis, is a fit anſwer for theſe.

Now, this ye ſhall marke; the worſe the men, the more importune ever, and the harder to ſatisfie. They muſt have ſignes, and ſignes upon ſignes, and nothing will ſerve them: As, no leſſe than foure ſeverall times were they at Chriſt. [1] Here: [2] in the XVI. Chapter: [3] Mar. VIII. [4] Luc. XI. And ſtill to ſee a ſigne. As oft as they came, this had been their right anſwere: to diſpatch them, with a Non dabitur, and no more adoe. Other anſwere let them have none: even abſolutely none at all: For none they ſhould have had.

Chap. 16. 4. Mar. 8. 11. Luc. 11. 29.

II.

The denial qualified Non, Niſi.

Yet ſaith He not, None they ſhall have. He wilbe better to them, than they deſerve: Chriſt wilbe Chriſt: Redit ad ingenium: Forgets now all, He had ſaid erewhile. And, an evill and an adulterous generation though they be, yet a ſigne they ſhall have, for all that. Not ſimply None then, but Non niſi, None ſave; the Negative is qualified : ſo qualified, as upon the matter it proves an Affirmative. The Niſi deſtroyes the Non: Non dabitur niſi (that is) dabitur. So, one they ſhall have: Though not now preſently, at their volumus, at their whiſtling (as it were) but after, when He ſaw the time: And, though (perhaps) not ſuch an one, as they would have phanſied, yet ſuch an one, as they rather need, and would doe them more good : (that is) one for their want, not for their wanton deſires.

And

And this is the reason, why none but it: For, no Signe needed, but it. For, without others, well they might be, without this, they or we, could not well be. For, oportuit CHRISTUM pati, It behooved CHRIST, CHRIST ought to dye, and riſe againe. Luc. 24. 26.

None but that? Why afterward, betweene this and His paſſion, He ſhewed divers others: and how then ſaith He, none but it? Signes (indeed) He ſhewed: yet, not any of them ſo pregnant for the purpoſe, they ſought, as was this. They ſought a Signe of the Seaſon, as by the XVI. Chapter is plaine: that this was the time, the Meſſias was to come. To put them out of doubt of that; to that point, none ſo forcible, as His death and riſing againe, figured in that of Ionas. That, and none but that. All Hee did els, the Prophets had done the like: Given Signes from heaven (which they here ſought;) yea, even raiſed the dead. But raiſe himſelfe being dead, get forth of the heart of the earth, when once he was in, that paſſed their skill: never a Patriarch or Prophet of them all, could doe that: Non niſi, None but Hee. So as, therein He ſhewed Himſelfe indeed to be the true and undoubted Meſſias, and never ſo els, in any ſigne of them all. Chap. 16. 4.

For Signes being compounded of Power and Goodneſſe (not Power alone, but Power and Goodneſſe, that is, the benefit or good of them, they be done for:) Never ſo generall, ſo univerſall, ſo great a Good, as by CHRIST's death, (as it might be Ionas caſting in:) Nor ever ſo great, ſo incomparably great a Power, as by raiſing Himſelfe from death to life (ſet forth in Ionas caſting up againe:) Thoſe twaine, by theſe twaine, more manifeſt, than by any another. The Signe of the greateſt Love and power (Love, to die; power, to riſe) that ever was wrought.

This Niſi then, is a Non niſi in a new ſenſe: A None ſuch, a Signe paramount. All elſe nothing in compariſon of it. I keepe you too long from it. This Signe. Signum non niſi a ſigne paramount.

The Signe is laid in the Prophet Ionas, Sicut Ionas: and we are much bound to God, for laying it in him: they, and we both. And Ionas is a Non niſi: ſuch a Signe, for us, and (beſides) ſo many peculiars of CHRIST, in him, as (in effect) no ſigne but hee.

Firſt, for them, for an evill and adulterous generation, no ſigne ſo meete to be given as hee. For Ionas, and non niſi Ionas, was Propheta peccator, the treſpaſſer or Sinning Prophet, among them all. Sinners (I know) they were all: they confeſſe as much themſelves: But, for tranſgreſſing the expreſſe Commandement of GOD, in not obeying GODS immediate call; therein, none of the reſt to bee tainted: He onely was Propheta fugitivus, fled touch, was in the tranſgreſſion; ſent to Nineve and went to Ioppe; ſent Eaſt, and went flat Weſt: and was even taken with the manner (as we ſay) and areſted in the very flight. For an evill and an adulterous generation, this was a good ſigne (ſay I:) and ſo might they, if they knew their owne good. For them, and for us, and (in a word) for all ſinners; for he is Propheta peccator, and ſo Propheta peccatorum. And CHRIST is pleaſed to picke out His fugitive Prophet, His runaway, and make him (a Sinner, and ſuch a Sinner) His Signe. As to come Himſelfe in the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh; ſo, to make ſinfull fleſh His ſimilitude, to come into a ſicut with. All, that ſinfull fleſh might have hope in the Signatum, in Him, of whom this was the Signe. This, theirs, and ours. For them, Propheta peccator. Rom. 8. 3.

The next is ours, and we highly to bleſſe GOD for it: that being to let His ſigne in a Prophet, He would doe it in him; chooſe him out, to make him His patterne, who was Propheta gentium, the Prophet of the Gentiles, ſent to propheſie to Nineve, that were Heathen, as we and our fathers were. And in that, a Non niſi too: For, none but he was ſo; never a Prophet of them all, ſent to the Heathen: the reſt, to the Iewes, all. This ſending of his, to the Gentiles, was, to us of the Gentiles, a gate of hope, that in former ages, and long before CHRIST came in the fleſh, we Gentiles were not forgotten. Even then, ſent GOD a Prophet to Nineve. And what was Nineve? the head Citie of the Aſſyrians, the greateſt Monarchie then in being, and ſo the principall For us Propheta gentium. Hoſ. 2. 4. 5.

cipall place of all Paganisme. That thus, in Signo, we were not forgotten, a signe it was, no more should we be in signato; but CHRIST be to us, as Ionas to them; a light to lighten the Gentiles; and His salvation to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Luk.2.32. Esay.49.6.

Let me adde this yet more, to our comfort. This Ionas, whom He thus sent on this errand to the Gentiles, what was he? Of all the Prophets, all, whose propheeies we have remaining on record in the Bible; the foure great, the twelve lesse, of them all, all the sixteene, He was the first in time, Senior to them all. Plaine by 2 Kings. 14. that he propheſied long before any of them. For, it is there said, that his propheeie came to passe, in the daies of Ieroboam the Second, who lived the same time with Vzzia in Iuda. And, in Vzzia's time, the eldest of all the rest, did but begin to propheſie. So, his was done, before theirs was begun. Him, that was thus first in the ranke of them all did GOD send to us Gentiles; to us first, before any, to the Iewes. A Signe, wee were not last; nay first in His care: in that, visited by Him first, as to whom He sent the first of all the sixteene. And, I may say to you, this was to them an Item, as if GOD were now to turne Gentile, as looking that way, having a minde to them then, even in Ionas time; they to come in shortly, and the Iewes to bee shut out: and that, as they had then priority in Signo, so should they no lesse, in Signato, and the fulnesse of the Gentiles came in before the conversion of the Iewes. This, to us Sinners, to us Gentiles, to us Sinners of the Gentiles, was Salutare Signum, a healthfull Signe, every way.

Primus Prophetarum.

2 Kings.14. 25.

Rom.11.25.

These three are put, on the by. In the maine point of the Text, and of the time, two more.

1 Ionas Signum Non nisi, As piacularis hostia.

Hee, and non nisi, none but he, had the honour to be a piacularis hostia (as it were) for, the casting him into the sea, served (in a sort) as a kind of expiatorie sacrifice, as farre, as to the temporall saving of the ship, he sailed in. And therein, as a meet Signe he expressed Him, whose death was (after) the full and perfect expiation of the sinnes of the whole world.

2 As Propheta redivivus.

Then againe Ionas, and non nisi, onely he was propheta redivivus; that, his peculiar, above them all. He the onely Prophet, that went downe into the deepe into the Whales bellie, and came forth againe alive. Dead he was not, but (lege viventium) after the law of the living, one thrown overboard, into the Sea in a tempest, to all intents, may be given for dead; and so (I dare say) all the mariners in the ship gave Ionas. That he came out againe alive, it was by speciall grace, not by course of nature. For from the Whales bellie he came (for all the world) as if one should have come out of his grave; risen againe.

Among the Iewes, it goes for currant, the Rabbines take it up one after another, that this Ionas was the Widow of Sarepta's sonne, the child, whom Elias raised from death to life (1 Reg. 17.) If so: then well might he be a Signe; A Signe, dead in his cradle, once: as good as dead in the Whales bellie, now againe: In both, resembling Him, whose signe he was, if both be true: But, one is most certaine; and, to that, wee hold us. And this is (indeed) the maine sicut, the sicut of the Text, and of the Day.

1 Reg.17. 23.

3 As three daies & three nights, in the Whales bellie.

One more, and I have done; and that is, of the time: precise three dayes and three nights, For, in this a Non nisi. For, none but hee, so: just three, neither more nor lesse. For, I aske, why not the signe of Ioseph, or of Daniell? [a] Ioseph was in the dungeon, among condemned persons to die: [b] Daniel in the lions den, as deadly a place, as the Whales bellie: yet neither of them, made the signe of CHRIST. Why? Ioseph was in his dungeon too long: Daniel, too short, but a night; not long enough, to represent CHRIST being in his grave. Onely Ionas time, just. And the time is it here. Else might the others have beene his signe well enough, for the matter, if that had beene all.

b Dan.6.16.

But, the time is still stood on, and the daies numbred: that His Disciples, that all might know, how long, He would be from them, and not a day longer. And this, not without good cause. This day, was but the third day: and, this day, they were at speerabamus, rabamus, did hope; did, but (now) doe not; their hope was fallen into a tertian: that, it was time, He were up againe. This Signe ſet, that they might know for a ſurety, by this day at the fardeſt, they ſhould heare of Him againe. Luk. 24. 21

Of which three. To verifie His being there three dayes, it is enough, if He were there but a part of every one of them: for, it is not three whole daies. As, in common phraſe of ſpeech, we ſay, the Sun ſhone, or it rained theſe three daies paſt, though it did not ſo, all day long, but ſome part onely of each. And if it rained at all, in every of them, we ſay true: It is enough. And ſo heere, the firſt day of the three, Ionas was in the ſhip, and CHRIST on the Croſſe, till fryday, ſomewhat before the Sun-ſet. All the ſecond day, Ionas was in the Whale, CHRIST in His Sepulcher. The third day Ionas came out of the Whale, and CHRIST out of His grave, as it might be about the Sun-riſing; for, this day, both Sunnes roſe together.

To verifie the three nights: that doe we, reckoning as did the Iewes (and that, by warrant out of the Gen. 1.) the evening and the morning but for one, ſo, drawing ſtill the precedent night, and compting it with the ſucceding day. So doe they ſtill: the night paſt, with the day following, as (in Geneſis) they are taught; and we doing ſo, it will fall out right. Gen 1. 5. 8. &c

To the Sicut then, of theſe three daies. There is in each of them, ſet downe a ſeverall ſtate of Ionas; and ſo of CHRIST. [1] Their going thither: [2] Their being there: [3] And their comming thence. The Sicut of theſe three daies

1 In their going thither.

Thus fell it the firſt day: Ionas was at ſea, in a ſhip: A great tempeſt came; ſo great, as the ſhip was upon caſting away. Goodfryday. Ion. 1. 4. 5.

Of tempeſts, ſome are of courſe, have their cauſes in nature; and, in them, art and ſtrength will doe good. With Ionas (heere) it did not prevaile a whit. Thereby, they knew it to be one out of courſe, of GOD's immediate ſending.

GOD ſends not ſuch tempeſts, but He is angrie. He is not angrie, but with ſinne. Some great Sinner then, there is in the ſhip, and if the ſhip were well ridd of him, all would be calme againe.

To lotts they went: Ionas was found to be the partie.

Being found, rather then all ſhould be caſt away, he bid franckly, Tollite me & projicite, Take me, caſt me into the Sea. Ion. 1. 12.

Caſt in he was, and the ſtorme ceaſed ſtreight, and the ſhip came ſafe home. And the evening and the morning were the firſt day.

Will ye ſee now, what was acted in Ionas, actually fulfilled, in CHRIST? But (firſt) will ye note, that what is (in the Old Teſtament) written of Ionas, is not onely hiſtoria vera, but Sacramentum magnum, not a bare Storie onely, but beſides the ſtorie, pregnant alſo with a great Myſterie, Not onely, a deed done, but further, a Signe of a deed to be done, of a far higher nature; Dico autem in CHRISTO, I ſpeake it as of CHRIST and His Reſurrection: Of that hiſtorie, this the Myſterie, this, the Sacramentum magnum. Ephes. 5. 32.

Will ye note againe; it is on CHRIST's ſide with advantage. Sicut Ionas (ſaith this verſe) But ecce plus quàm Ionas (ſaith the next;) and both may ſtand; There may be a Sicut; where yet there may be a plus quàm; a likeneſſe in qualitie, where an exceeding in degree, though. Indeed, Sicut makes not a non niſi; plus quàm doth: and we then, ſo to remember the Sicut in this, as we forget not the Plus quàm, in that. No more will we. Veſſe. 41.

And now, weigh them over well, and whitherſoever ye look, ye ſhall finde a plus quàm. Plus, in the ſhip, in the tempeſt, in the cauſe, in the danger, in the caſting in, in the comming out againe: In every one, a plus quàm. All that was, in Ionas, in CHRIST more conſpicuous, and after a more excellent manner; in Signato, then in Signo. That ſo, in this, as in all els, CHRIST may have the preeminence. Col. 1. 18.

To beginne then. It is no new thing to reſemble the Church, the Common-wealth, yea the World, to a Ship. A ſhip there was, not a ſmall barke of Ioppe, but plus quàm, a Great Arke, or Argoſy, wherein were imbarqued all Mankind, having their courſe through through the Maine Ocean of the world, bound for the Port of Eternall bliſſe. And, in this great Carrick, among the ſonnes of men, the Sonne of Man (as He termes Himſelfe) became alſo a paſſenger, even as did Ionas, in his ſmall bottome of Ioppe.

Then roſe there a tempeſt. A tempeſt it ſelfe, and the cauſe of all tempeſts (the heavy wrath of God, ready to ſeiſe upon ſinners) which made ſuch a foule Sea, as this great Ship, and all in it were upon the point to be caſt away. The plus (heere) is plaine: take it, but as it was indeed litterally. For what a tempeſt was there at CHRIST's death! It ſhooke the Temple, rent the veile, cleft the ſtones, opened the graves, put out the Sunne's light, was ſeene and felt all the world over; as if heaven and earth would have gone together. But, the miſerable ſtorme, then, who ſhall declare?

Chap. 27. 51. & 52.

And, no mervaile: there was a great Plus, in the cauſe. For, if the ſinne of one poore paſſenger (of Ionas) made ſuch a foule Sea: the ſinnes of the great Hulke, that bore in it all Mankind together in one bottome, what manner tempeſt (thinke you) were they like to raiſe? In what hazard, the veſſell, that loaden with them all? But one fugitive, there: heere, all runne awaies, from God, Maſters, Marriners Paſſengers and all.

Now, the greater the Veſſell, the more ever the danger. With Ionas but a handfull like to miſcarrie: In this, the whole maſſe of Mankind like to periſh. So, in the perill, Plus too.

The ſtorm will not be ſtayed neither, till ſome be caſt into the Sea: and ſome great Sinner it would be: And heer the Sicut ſeemes, as if it would not hold: heer, the only Non ſicut Ionas. For Ionas there, was the only ſinner; all beſides, in the ſhip, innocent poore men. Heer, CHRIST onely, in the ſhip, Innocent, no ſinner; all the ſhip beſides, full fraught with ſinners: Mariners, and Paſſengers, grievous ſinners, all. Heere it ſeemes to halt.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither, for all that. For, in ſome ſenſe, CHRIST was not unlike Ionas; no, not in this point: but, like Ionas, as in all other reſpects, ſo, in this too. Not, as conſidered in Himſelfe; for ſo, he knew no ſinne: But, Him that knew no ſinne, for us made He ſinne: How? by laying on Him the iniquities of us all, even of all the ſonnes of men, upon this Sonne of Man. And, ſo conſidered, He is not onely Sicut, but Plus quàm Ionas heere. More ſinne on Him, then on Ionas: for, on Him, the ſinnes of the whole Ship, yea Iona's ſinne and all.

2. Cor. 5. 21. Eſay. 53. 6.

For all that, heere is another Plus, though. For what Ionas ſuffered, it was for his owne ſinne, and merito hæc patimur might he ſay (and we both) with the Theefe on the Croſſe. But CHRIST, what had he done? It was not, for his owne; it was, for other mens ſinnes, He ſuffered, He paid the things he never tooke. So much the more likely was He, to ſatisfie; the juſt, for the unjuſt, the LORD, for the Servant: Much more, then if one ſinner or ſervant ſhould do it for another.

Luke 23. 41. Pſal. 69. 4. 1. Pet. 3. 18.

Yet was CHRIST, as was Ionas, content to be throwen in. Tollite me (ſaid Ionas;) Sinite hos abire, (ſaid CHRIST) Let theſe goe. Take me, my life ſhall anſwer for theirs; as it did. As content (ſaid I?) Nay, Plus more. For, with Ionas, there was no other way, to ſtay the ſtorme, but overboord with him. But, CHRIST had other waies; could have ſtayed it with His word, with His Obmuteſce, as He did (the VIII. Chapter, before.) Needed not to have beene caſt in: Yet, to fulfill all righteouſneſſe, condeſcended to it (though;) and in He was throwen, not of neceſſitie (as Ionas) but, quia voluit: and Voluit, quia nos ſalvos voluit; would have us ſafe, and His Father's juſtice ſafe, both.

Ion. 1. 12. Ioh. 18. 8. Chap. 8. 26. Mat. 3. 15. Eſa. 53. 7.

Now to the effect. Therewith the ſtorme ſtayed, GOD's wrath was appeaſed, Mankind ſaved: Heere, the Plus is evident. That of Ionas was but Salus phaſeli, no more: This was Salus mundi, no leſſe. A poore boat, with the whole World, what compariſon? And the evening and the morning were Good-friday, CHRIST's firſt day.

In their beeing there. Easter Eve.

To Ionas, now, ſecundò: He was drowned by the meanes. Nay, not ſo: GOD (before, angry) was then pacified: Pacified, not onely with the ſhip, but pacified with

Ionas

Ionas too: provided a Whale, in ſhew, to devoure him; indeed not to devoure, but to preſerve him; downe he went into her belly.

There he was; but tooke no hurt there. 1. As ſafe, nay, more ſafe there, than in the beſt ſhip of Tharſis: no flaw of weather, no foule ſea could trouble him there. 2. As ſafe, and as ſafely carried to land: The ſhip could have done no more. So that upon the matter, he did but change his vehiculum; ſhifted but from one veſſell to another; went on his way ſtill. 3. On hee went, as well, nay better than the ſhip would have carried him; went into the ſhip, the ſhip carried him wrong, out of his way cleane, to Tharſis-ward: Went into the Whale, and the Whale carried him right, landed him on the next ſhore to Ninive; whither (in truth) hee was bound, and where his errand lay. 4. And all the while, at good eaſe, as in a cell or ſtudie; For, there, he indited a Pſalme, expreſſing in it, his certaine hope of getting forth againe. So as, in effect, where hee ſeemed to be in moſt danger, hee was in greateſt ſafetie. Thus can GOD worke. And the evening and the morning, were Iona's ſecond day. Ionas 2. 2. 6.

The like now, in CHRIST: but ſtill with a plus quàm. Doe but compare the Whales belly, with the heart of the earth, and you ſhall finde, the Whale that ſwallowed CHRIST (that is, the grave) was another manner Whale, farre wider throated than that of Ionas. That Whale caught but one Prophet, but Ionas; This, hath ſwouped up Patriarks, and Prophets, and all; yea, and Ionas himſelfe too. None hath ſcaped the jawes of it.

And, more hard getting out (I am ſure;) witneſſe Ionas. Into the Whales belly he went, and thence he gate out againe. After he gate thence, into the heart of the earth he went, and thence he gate not: there he is ſtill.

The Signe lyes, in this, by the letter of the Text. And, in CHRIST, the Signe greater. For, though to ſee a Whale tumble with a Prophet in the belly, were a ſtrange ſight: yet, more ſtrang, to ſee the SONNE of GOD, lye dead in the earth: and, as ſtrange againe, to ſee the Sonne of man, to riſe from the grave againe, alone. A double ſigne in it.

The heart of the earth (with Iuſtine Martyr, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine) I take for the grave: though (I know) Origen, Nyſſen, Theodoret take it for hell, for the place, where the Spirits are (as, in the body, that is the place of them.) And, thither Hee went in Spirit, and triumphed over the powers and principalities there, in His owne Perſon. But for His Body, it was the day of reſt, the laſt Sabbath that ever was: and then His bodie did reſt, reſt in hope, hope of what? That neither His Soule ſhould be left in hell, nor His fleſh ſuffered to ſee corruption. For, CHRIST had His Pſalme too, as well as Ionas. David compoſed it for Him long before (the XVI. Pſalme, the Pſalme of the reſurrection.) And ſo the evening and the morning were CHRIST's ſecond day, Eaſter eve. Coloſſ. 2. 15. Pſal. 16. 10.

Now to Iona's ultimò. Ionas his hope failed him not; the Whales belly, that ſeemed his tombe, proved his wombe, or ſecond birth-place. There hee was: not, as meat in the ſtomach; but, as an Embrio, in the matrix of his mother. Strange! the Whale to be as his mother, to be delivered of him; and bring him forth into the world againe. So, forth he came, and to Ninive about his buſineſſe. Thither hee went, to bring them out of the Whales belly too. And the evening and the morning were Iona's third day. 3 In their coming thence: Eaſter-day. Ionas 2. 10. 33.

Now the Whale could not hold Ionas, no more could the grave CHRIST, longer than this morning; after breake of day: But, forth came He too. And with a plus quàm, in reſpect of Ionas. It was in ſtrict ſpeech, with Ionas, no reſurrection: For the truth is, he was never dead: never he, but putativè. But, CHRIST, was dead, ſtarke dead indeed ſlaine out-right upon the Croſſe, His heart pierced, His heart-bloud ranne out. And, for dead taken downe, laid in, ſealed up in His grave, a ſtone John 19. 34. Matth. 27. 66.

rolled on Him, a watch ſet over Him. Made ſure (I trow) and roſe for all that.

Another. Ionas riſing, the Whale gaped wide, and ſtrained hard, and up came Ionas. It was long of the Whale, not of him, or any power of his. But, CHRIST, by His owne power, broke the barres of death, and looſed the ſorrowes of hell, of which is is impoſsible He ſhould be holden.

Act. 2. 24.

A third. Ionas roſe but to the ſame ſtate, he was in before; but mortall Ionas ſtill: When hee ſcaped, hee drew his chaine after him, and by the end of it was plucked backe againe afterward. But, CHRIST left them, and linnen clothes and all, in the grave behinde Him; roſe to a better, to ultrà non morietur, never to die more, He.

Rom. 6. 9.

And (in a word) the great plus quàm. Ionas was but ejectus in aridam: But, CHRIST was receptus in gloriam. And; in ſigne of it, the place whereon Ionas was caſt, was drie land, or cliffes, where nothing growes. The place, wherein CHRIST roſe, was a well-watered garden, wherein, the ground was in all her glory, freſh and greene, and full of flowers, at the inſtant of His riſing, this time of the yeare. So, as Hee went lower, ſo Hee roſe higher, then ever did Ionas, with a great Ecce plus quàm.

And yet, behold a greater than all theſe. For, Ionas, when he came forth, came forth, and there was all; left the Whale, as he found it. But, Ecce plus quàm Ionas hîc, plus quàm indeed. CHRIST ſlew the Whale that devoured Him, in the comming forth; was mors mortis: He left not the grave, as He found it, but altered the propertie, nay changed the very nature of it, by His riſing.

Verſe 41.

Three changes Hee made in it, very plainly: 1. Of a pit of perdition, which it was before, He hath made it now an harbour of reſt, Reſt in hope. Hope of a new; not the ſame it was before, but a better, farre, with a great Plus quàm.

2. Made it againe (as the whale, to Ionas, was) a convoy, or paſſing boat, to a better Port, than any is in our Tharſis here; even, to the haven of happineſſe, and heavens bliſſe without end. This for the ſoule.

Act. 2. 26.

3 And, for the body, made the grave, as a wombe for a ſecond birth, to travell with us anew, and bring us forth to life everlaſting; Made cor terræ ventrem ceti, the heart of the earth, to us as the belly of the VVhale was to Ionas, which did not ſtill retaine him. That, did not him, nor this ſhall not us; ſhall not hold us ſtill, no more than the VVhale did him, or the grave did CHRIST. There ſhall be a comming forth out of both. And, when GOD ſhall ſpeake to the earth (as to the VVhale, He did) the Sea and Grave both ſhall yeeld up their dead, and deliver them up alive againe.

Apoc. 20. 13.

The very terme [of the heart of the earth] was well choſen. There is heart in it. For, if the earth have an heart, there is life in it; for, the heart is the fountaine of life, and the ſeat of the vitall ſpirits, that hold us in it. So, there is (wee ſee:) for, the earth, dead for a time (all the Winter) now, when the waters of heaven fall on it, ſhewes, it hath life, bringing forth herbs and flowers againe. And, even ſo, when the waters above the heavens, and namely the dew of this day diſtilling from CHRIST's riſing, ſhall in like ſort drop upon it, it ſhall be (ſaith Eſay, Chap. XXVI.) as the dew of the herbs, and the earth ſhall give forth her dead. Dead men, as it doth dead plants now freſh and greene againe, in the ſpring of the yeare. And ſo, the evening and the morning were CHRIST's third day, this day, Eaſter-day morning.

Eſay 26. 19.

Thus many wayes doth this ſicut hold, and hold with a plus quàm. Were it not great pitie now, that CHRIST, who is ſo many wayes plus quàm Ionas, for all this ſhould come to be minus quàm Ionas, in this laſt, the chiefe of all? For, this is the chief. Ionas, after he came out of the VVhale, brought to paſſe that famous repentance, the repentance of Ninive. At Iona's preaching, they repented at Ninive; at CHRIST's they did not, in Ieruſalem.

Ionas 3. 5.

We ſhall mend this, if we be as the Ninivites; repent as they. As they? Abſit ut ſic (ſaith Saint Auguſtine; but addes then) ſed utinam vel ſic. As they? GOD forbid we ſhould be but as they: As CHRIST was more than Ionas, ſo Chriſtians ſhould ſhould be more than Ninivites. Well, in the meane time, I would we were, but as they; but ſo farre on-ward, never plead for a plus, but be content with Sicut, and never ſeeke more: But, that, we muſt: For, leſſe (ſure) we cannot be. CHRIST to be plus quàm Ionas, we to be minus quàm Ninivita, it will not fit, it holds no proportion.

The Sicut (ye ſee) and the plus quàm, both. Now, what is the profit of this ſigne of the Prophet? This ſigne being of CHRISTS giving, CHRIST gives no ſigne, but it is ſignum in bonum, a ſigne for good, a good ſigne; and a good ſigne is a ſigne of ſome good. Of what good is this a ſigne? Of hope of comming forth (ſure.) Comming forth, whence? From a Whale. What is meant by the Whale? (the deliverance (moſt-what) is, as the whale is.) And, three whales wee finde here: [1] Iona's Whale: [2] CHRISTS Whale: [3] and a third: And, hope we have, to come forth of all three. What this ſigne portends. Pſal. 86. 16.

Firſt, Iona's Whale, death it was not, it was but danger; but danger as neare death as could be; never man, in more danger to ſcape it, than he; if not in death, in Zalmaveth, in the vale of the ſhadow of death, it was. Pſal. 23. 4.

Of any, that hath beene in extreme perill, we uſe to ſay; he hath beene where Ionas was; By Iona's going downe the Whales throat, by Him againe comming forth of the Whales mouth, we expreſſe, we even point out the greateſt extremity, and the greateſt deliverance that can be. From any ſuch danger, a deliverance is a kinde of reſurrection, as the Apoſtle plainly ſpeakes of Iſaac, when the knife was at his throat, he was received from the dead ὅθεν ἐν παραβολῇ though yet he did not. This for the feaſt of the Reſurrection. Heb. 11. 19.

And thus, was, Ionas a ſigne to them of Ninive. As he eſcaped, ſo they: he his Whale, they theirs (deſtruction:) which even gaped for them, as wide as Iona's Whale. And, as to them a ſigne, this, ſo, to us. And, this uſe we have of it; When at any time, wee are hard beſtead, this ſigne then to be ſet up for a token. And there is no danger ſo deadly, but we may hold faſt our hope, if we ſet this ſigne before us, and ſay, What, we are not (yet) in the Whales belly; why, if wee were there, from thence can GOD bring us though, as Ionas He did.

Iona's Whale was but the ſhadow of death: CHRISTS was death. And, even there, in death, to be ſet up. And, we, no not in death it ſelfe, to deſpaire, but (with Iob) to ſay, yea, though He kill me, yet will I truſt in Him. My breath, I may; my hope, I will not forgoe: expirare poſſum, deſperare non poſſum. Here now is our ſecond hope, to come forth, to be delivered, from CHRISTS Whale, from death it ſelfe. Iob 13. 15.

But, if the Whale be, or betoken the death of the body; it doth much more, the death of the ſoule. So ſhall we finde another Whale, yet, a third. And that Whale is the red Dragon, that great ſpirituall Leviathan, Satan. And ſinne, the very jawes of this Whale, that ſwoupeth downe the ſoule firſt, and then the bodie, and in the end both. Ionas had beene deepe downe this Wales throat, before ever he came in the others: The Land-whale had devoured him, before ever the Sea-whale medled with him. In his flight, hee fell into this Land-whales jawes, before ever the Sea-whale ſwallowed him up. And, when he had got out of the gorge of this ghoſtly Leviathan, the other bodily Whale could not long hold him. And from this third Whale was Ionas ſent, to deliver the Ninivites: which when he had, the other (of their temporall deſtruction) could doe them no hurt. Their repentance rid them of both Whales, bodily and ghoſtly, at once. Apoc. 12. 3.

Here then is a third Cape of good hope: that, though one had beene downe as deepe in the entrailes of the ſpirituall great Leviathan, as ever was Ionas in the Sea-whales, yet, even there alſo, not to deſpaire. He that brought Ionas from the deepe of the Sea, and David from the deepe of the Earth (his body, ſo:) He alſo delivered his ſoule from the nethermoſt hell, where Ionas and He both were, while they were in the tranſgreſſion. Pſal. 71. 20. Pſal. 86. 13.

And now, by this, are we come to the very Signature of this ſigne, even to Repentance, which followeth in the very next words, for they repented, at the preaching of Ionas. Ionas preached it: and (indeed) none ſo fit to preach on that theme (on repentance) as he, as one that hath beene in the Whales belly; in both the Whales, the ſpirituall Whales too (for Ionas had beene, in both.) One that hath ſtudied his ſermon there, beene in Satans ſieve, well winnowed (cribratus Theologus) he will handle the point beſt, as being, not only a Preacher, but a ſigne of repentance (as Ionas was both) to the Ninivites.

Verſe 41.

And, as Ionas, ſo CHRIST: how ſoone He was riſen, He gave order ſtraight, that repentance (as the very vertue, the ſtampe of His Reſurrection) and, by it, remiſſion of ſinnes ſhould be preached in His name to all nations.

Luke 24. 47.

But (indeed) if you marke well, there is a neare alliance betweene the Reſurrection and Repentance; reciprocall, as betweene the Signe, and the Signature. Repentance is nothing, but the ſoules reſurrection: Men are dead in ſinne (ſaith the Apoſtle:) their ſoules are. From that death, there is a riſing: Elſe were it wrong with us. That riſing, is repenting: And when one hath lien dead in ſinne long, and doth eluctari, wraſtle out of a ſinne, that hath long ſwallowed him up, he hath done as great a maſtery, as if (with Ionas) he had got out of the Whales belly; Nay, as if (with Lazarus) hee had come out of the heart of the earth. Ever holding this, that Mary Magdalen raiſed from ſinne, was no leſſe a miracle, than her brother raiſed from the dead.

Epheſ. 2. 1.

And ſure, Repentance is the very vertue of CHRIST'S Reſurrection. There, it is firſt ſeene, it firſt ſheweth it ſelfe, hath his firſt operation, in the ſoule, to raiſe it.

This firſt being once wrought on the ſoule, from the ghoſtly Leviathan, the like will not faile, but be accompliſhed on the body, from the other of death; of which Ionas is here; Myſterium magnum, dico autem in CHRISTO. For, in CHRIST, this ſigne is a ſigne, not betokening onely, but exhibiting alſo what it betokeneth, as the Sacraments doe. For, of ſignes, ſome ſhew onely, and worke nothing, ſuch was that of Ionas, in it ſelfe; Sed Ecce plus quàm Ionas hîc: For, ſome other there be, that ſhew and worke both; worke what they ſhew; preſent us, with what they repreſent; what they ſet before us, ſet or graft in us. Such is that of CHRIST. For, beſides that, it ſets before us, of His: it is further a ſeale or pledge, to us, of our owne, that, what we ſee in Him this day, ſhall be accompliſhed in our owne ſelves, at His good time.

Verſe 42.

And even ſo paſſe we to another Myſterie. For, one Myſterie leads us to another: this in the Text, to the holy Myſteries we are providing to partake, which doe worke like, and doe worke to this: Even to the raiſing of the ſoule with the firſt reſurrection. And, as they are a meanes for the raiſing of our ſoule, out of the ſoile of ſinne; (for, they are given us and we take them expreſly for the remiſſion of ſinnes:) ſo are they no leſſe a meanes alſo, for the raiſing our bodies out of the duſt of death. The ſigne of that Body, which was thus in the heart of the earth, to bring us from thence, at the laſt. Our SAVIOUR ſaith it totidem verbis, Who ſo eateth My Fleſh and drinketh My Bloud, I will raiſe him up at the laſt day: raiſe him, whither Hee hath raiſed Himſelfe. Not to life onely, but to life and glory, and both without end. To which, &c.

John 6. 54.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAjestie at WHITE-HALL, on the V. of April, A. D. MDCXVIII, Being EASTER-DAY.

I CORINTH. Chap. XI. Ver. XVI.

Si quis autem videtur contentioſus eſſe, nos talem conſuetudinem non habemus, neque Eccleſiæ Dei.

But if any man ſeeme to be contentious, we have no ſuch cuſtome, neither the Churches of GOD.

THIS is no Eaſter Text, as we are wont to have: Nothing of the Reſurrection in it. It is not for the day.

It is not, directly: But if it ſhould happen, there were any contention about Eaſter, that would bring it within the word [contentious] here. Specially, if that contention about Eaſter were, whether it hath b ene ever a cuſtome in the Church of GOD, for that would bring it within in the word [cuſtome] here mentioned: And ſo would it both waies fall within the compaſſe of the Text. The Cuſtome of Eaſter, made a contention, would make it an Eaſter-day Text.

1 How the Text may ſerve for Eaſter.

I ſay not, any ſuch contention there is: I deſire to proceed (as the Apoſtle doth) without the leaſt offence. [1] He ſaith not, there be any contentious, but if any ſeeme to be. That any be co tentious, it may not be ſaid. They will deeply proteſt, that from their hearts they abhorre all contentions, and deſire to walke peaceably. Be not, then: but, ſeeme to be.

The Text two wives qualified.

1 Videtur Seemes.

[2] Nay, not ſeeme to bee, neither: Saint Paul ſay not ſo much: ſayes onely, ſi quis, if any; puts but a caſe (and there is no harme in that.) No more will wee: goe no further, further, than the Text: If any such seeme to bee, this Text tells what to doe: If none be, none seeme to be, it is but a case put. And so, by way of supposition, be all said, that shall be.

2 Si quis If any.

All upon supposition. The Division.

Vpon the view, three points give forth themselves: [1] Here are contentions; and [2] here are customes; and [3] customes, opposed to the contentious. These the three heads.

I. Contentions.

To breake them yet further, into certaine Theses or propositions; to proceed by. [1] First, it should seeme, there were contentions in the Apostles times. [2] Contentions, about what? About matter of circumstance. So was this here, Whether men were to pray uncovered, and women veiled, or no? [3] And that there were, which did not onely contend, but (which is more) were even contentious about these. [4] For those that were so, here is a Si quis set up, If any seeme to be such, what to doe to them.

II.

Not to passe them in silence, and say nothing to them: but this to say: Wee have no such custome, nor the Churches of GOD. And so oppose the Churches custome to contention.

The Church Customes.

In which saying, there are these heads: [1] First, that the Church hath her customes. [2] As she hath them, so she may, and doth alledge them. [3] And alledge them finally (as the Apostle here, we see, resolveth the whole matter into them, as into a finall resolution.) [4] And all this by Scripture confirmed: even by this Scripture: on which, the customes of the Church are grounded, and the power that shall be ever in them, to over-rule the contentious.

Non habemus talem. Mat 12.39. The Text the last yeare. Negative in shew; Affirmative, in effect.

And let not this move you, that it seemes to be negative, Non habemus talem. As (this time twelve moneth) Non dabitur nisi (a negative in shew) proved an affirmative, Dabitur, sed non nisi: So will this Non habemus talem, prove to Habemus, sed non talem. Churches we have, but none such. To apply it to the Apostles purpose: None to sit covered at prayer, Non talem, None such; but the contrary rather; To be un-covered then, talem, Such is our custome; Such an one, the Church hath.

The Two markes of a right custome. I

Where, because the negative referres not to habemus, but to talem, And, a custome is not therefore good, because we have it, but because it is talem, so qualified; The talem to bee: [1] First, if we (that is) the Apostles have had it, if it were Apostolike: The non talem to be, if our new Masters have taken it up the other day, and the Apostles never knew it. [2] The talem to be, if the Churches of GOD in generall have had it, if it be Catholike. The non talem to be, if the Church of Corinth, or some one Church perhaps had it, but the rest never had any such.

III. The Church custome for keeping Easter

Then, will we descend to shew the keeping of Easter, to be such: Ever in use with the Churches of GOD, from the time of the Apostles themselves. Which, if we can make plaine, here is a plaine Text for it: That if one should aske, What Scripture have you, why Easter may not be laid downe? It may well be answered, Non habemus talem consuetudinem, nec Ecclesiæ Dei, Custome to keepe it we have; the Apostles, the Church had it: but to abolish it, such Costome have we none; we depart from them both, if we doe.

There wants not Scripture for Easter Epist. 119. cap. 14.

Psal. 118. 24.

1 Cor. 5.7.8.

Protesting yet, that we have no purpose to waive Scripture quite, for the keeping of Easter. Saint Augustine is plaine; Hoc ex authoritate divinarum Scripturarum; per anniversarium Pascha celebratur. Even by authority of divine Scripture it is, that everie yeere, Easter is kept solemnly. We have touched two Scriptures heretofore: The day which the LORD hath made (118. Psalme) applied ever to this Feast. That Text for the Old. And for the New Testament, that verse in this Epistle, CHRIST our Passe-over is offered, let us therefore keepe a Feast.

But the Churches custome is more kindly.

But every thing standeth safest and surest, upon his owne base: And the right base of this, I take to be Custome. We doe but make our selves to be pitied otherwhile, when we stand wringing the Scriptures, to strain that out of them, that is not in them, and so can never come liquidè from them: when yet we have for the same point, the Churches Custome cleare enough. And that is enough, by vertue of this Text. There is, and shall bee enough ever in this Text, to avow any Custome; The Apostles, the the Churches of GOD had it: to diſavow any; The Apoſtles, the Churches of GOD, had it not.

The fruit of our labour will be this (I hope) at leaſt, to confirme us in the keeping of it. We keepe Eaſter, many of us, we know not upon what ground. By this, we ſhall ſee, we have a ground for that we doe. We doe no more, than the Churches of GOD, than the Apoſtles have done before us. So, our eares ſhall heare the voice in Eſay behinde us, Hæc eſt via, This is the way: Ambulate in eâ, Walke in it, as you doe, you are in the right, and there hold you. Eſay 30.21.

The uſe of the third point about Eaſter.

IF any. This (if) I take it, is no idle if, no vaine ſuppoſition; to ſay, if there be any, where there were none. No: contentions there were. When? when (we:) who be they? Saint Paul and his fellow Apoſtles, when they lived. And the Churches: what Churches? the Churches under them, of their times. In the very prime of the Primitive Church, then were there Contentions. I.

I Contentions in the Apoſtles time.

And thoſe not with an enemie without (Iew or Gentile;) that, were πόλεμος, warre abroad: this is νεῖκος but a jarre at home, among themſelves. That former (abroad) they repreſent by Iſmael and Iſaac, and they were of two venters. This latter (at home) by the two Twins in Rebecca's wombe. (I feare the time: elſe could I let you ſee this ſtrife, in every Church of them.) Gal 4.29. Gen.25.23.

This I note, firſt, that we may not ξενίζεσθαι (to uſe Saint Peters terme) thinke it ſtrange, if there be contentions in our times. They ſhall be no ſtrangers with us, in ours: They were not with them, in theirs. Neither contentions (in this verſe:) Nor ſchiſmes (in the next, the 18.) Nor hereſies (in the 19. next to that.) It is of the firy triall, Saint Peter ſpeakes it (of perſecution:) It is as true, of the waterie triall (of contention.) As true it is of the laſt, as of the firſt Church: I prooved thee alſo at the waters of ſtrife. Thoſe waters, the waters of Meriba, will hardly be dreined ever. 1 Pet 4 12. Pſal.81.7.

There were contentions then: About what? For, though peace be precious, yet of ſuch moment may the matters be, as they are to be contended for, yea, even to the death. For what then were theſe? for nothing, but a matter of Rite: Men praying, whether they ſhould be uncovered; women, whether veiled or no. For a Hat and a Veile, was all this adoe. It was not about any the high Myſteries, any of the vitall parts of Religion, Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: Onely about the manner, how; the geſture and behaviour, wherewith, in what ſort, to carry themſelves, at Preaching, Prayer, the Sacraments: about matter of circumſtance meerely, and nothing elſe. 2

Contentions about matter of circumſtance. Verſ.4,5.

And even theſe, even the meaneſt things would be done for the better, not for the worſe (ſaith the Apoſtle, in the next verſe.) And the more order, the better. So the Apoſtle had ſet order for them, and inter alia, for this too. Other his ordinances (he ſaith) they remembred well, but not this: this was oppoſed. For, with ſome, all is not worth a ruſh, if they ſee not further than their fellowes, nay their betters, then: if they finde not ſomewhat to finde fault with, if it be but a ceremonie. And to picke a quarrell with a ceremonie, is eaſie. A plauſible theme, not to burthen the Church with ceremonies: the Church to be free: which hath almoſt freed the Church of all decencie. Verſe 2.

About ſuch points as theſe, were there, that did not only contend, but that grew contentious. νεῖκος is one thing, to contend: φιλονεικία another, to be contentious. The Apoſtle ſaith not, if any contend: but, ſi quis contentioſus. And (oſus) is full: φίλος is one that loves it, is given to it. Strange, any ſuch ſhould be: But the Apoſtles if, proves to be no if. We ſee it daily, in perſons but meanely qualified (God wot) yet 3

Yea, contentioſus eſſe, which is more than contention.

1 Cor. 14. 26. yet ſo peremptory, as if the word of GOD had come, if not from them, yet to them only, and none beſides. Good LORD! Why ſhould any love to be contentious? Why? It is the way to be ſome body. In time of peace, what reckoning is there of Wat Tiler, or Iacke Straw? Make a ſedition, and they will beare a braine with the beſt. Primianus and Maximianus were the heads of the two factions of Donatiſts in Saint Auguſtines time. He ſaith, it was well for them, that faction fell out: Elſe, Primianus might have beene Poſtremianus, and Maximianus be Minimianus, well enough. But now, in ſchiſme, either of them was a jolly fellow, head of a party. This makes we ſhall never want contentious perſons, and they will take order, we ſhall never want contentions.

4 Such contention not to be neglected.

Well, if any ſuch ſhould happen to be, what is to be done in ſuch a caſe? What ſaith the Apoſtle? Saith he thus? Seeing it is no greater matter, it skils not greatly whether they doe it or no, covered or bare, ſit or kneele, all's one: ſets it light, and lets it goe. No: but calls them backe to the cuſtome of the Church, will not have them ſwerve from that; makes a matter of it. For (wee ſee) hee preſſes the point hard; ſpends many words, many verſes, even halfe the Chapter about it.

Not any contention.

Why doth he ſo? For two reaſons: 1. Firſt, he likes not contention at all. Why? If it be not taken at the firſt, within a while (within one verſe after) ye ſhall heare of a ſchiſme (looke the 18. verſe:) And within a little after that (looke but to the 19.) ye ſhall have a flat hereſie of it. The one drawes on the other: if the contentious humour be not let out, it will feſter ſtraight, and prove to an apoſtume.

No, not in theſe ſmall matters.

2. Nor, he likes not the matter, wherefore; (though it ſeeme but ſmall.) Saint Paul knew Satans method well: hee ſeemes ſomewhat ſhamefaſt at firſt, askes but ſome ſmall trifle: Give him but that, he will be ready for greater points. If he win ground in the Ceremonies, then have at the Sacrament: If he can diſgrace the one, it will not be long, but ye ſhall heare of him at the other.

For, from Ceremonies to Sacraments.

Speake I beſide the booke? was it not ſo here? At the very next verſe, there hee falls in hand with an abuſe of the Sacrament, and that takes up the reſt of the Chapter.

For, when they had ſit covered at Prayer a while, they grew even as unreverent, as homely with the Sacrament: Eat and drunke there, as if they had beene at home, in triclinio; that the Apoſtle is faine to tell them (at the 22. verſe) They had homes to be homely at: the Church, the houſe of GOD, they were to be uſed with greater reverence. He did not commend them for this their rude carriage, at the Sacrament. Did not commend them? you know what that meaneth (minus dicitur, plus intelligitur) He blamed them much for it.

Then, are we to make ſtay at theſe leſſe matters at firſt (as the Apoſtle doth.) To thinke the Wiſe-mans counſell worth the following, Ne ſit tibi minimum, non negligere minima, Count it no ſmall matter, not to neglect ſmall matters. What ſo ſmall as an haire? when theſe ſmall haires were gone from Samſon, his ſtrength left him. In it ſelfe, in his owne nature, a Rite is not ſo much: This is much; that by it, they learne to breake the Churches orders; and that thereby they are fleſhed, to goe on to greater matters.

Iudg. 16. 19.

II.

To theſe contentions, the Church cuſtome oppoſeth.

Oppoſing then to theſe, what courſe takes he? Layes for his ground, this, Non habemus talem. The force of his reaſon is, If we, if the Churches of GOD, had any ſuch cuſtome, it were ſomewhat; that were warrant enough, for a Rite. But now, we and they both, have none ſuch; nay, we and they, have the quite contrary; therefore, let us heare no more of it.

1 The Church hath her cuſtomes.

Where, it is plaine, the Apoſtle is for the Church-cuſtomes. And firſt, that ſhe hath them. Every Societie, beſide their Lawes in bookes, have their cuſtomes alſo in practice: and thoſe, not to be taken up, or laid downe, at every mans pleaſure. The Civill Law ſaith this of Cuſtome, Imò magnæ authoritatis hoc jus habetur: quod in tantum probatum eſt, ut non fuerit ſcripto comprehendere neceſſe. Men (it ſeemes) had a great great good liking to their customes, that they remembred them without booke, that they never needed to be put in writing, as their Lawes and Statutes did. Now, as every Society, so the Church, besides her habemus legem, hath her habemus consuetudinem too. There is such a thing, as mos populi Dei.

And feare not traditions a whit. Those respect credenda, , points of doctrine: These, but agenda, matter of practice: And that, not in points of substance; reach onely to matter of circumstance; goe no further. Nor doe wee even them with, much lesse oppose them to, that which is written. Never any custome, against that: No custome, that comes from the will or wit of man, against Scripture, which comes from the wisedome and will of GOD. But, hæc oportet facere, & illa non omittere. Mat. 23.23. Onely so.

The Church then, hath her customes. I adde, these (wee) here (that is) the Apostles had them; and the Churches under them, had theirs. It was but early day then, yet had they their customes, even then. At the writing of this Epistle, it was not (at the most) thirty yeares from CHRISTS Ascension. If that were time enough, to make a custome: Now, after these twentie times thirty yeares, and thirty times thirty yeares, and a hundred yeares to spare, shall it not bee a custome now, by much better right? A custome is susceptible of more and lesse: The further it goeth, the longer it runneth, the more strength it gathereth; the more gray haires it getteth, the more venerable it is: for indeede, the more a custome it is.

Now then, as the Church hath them, so she stands upon them: feares not (we see) to alledge them, to say habemus, or non habemus. Habemus, to uphold an ancient good one: Non habemus, to lay downe an evill one, new taken up.

The Church alledgeth her customes

Here, negativè, Non habemus talem. As our SAVIOUR likewise, A principio non fuit sic. And yet, by implication, this here is, One wee have, but not such an one. And our SAVIOURS there, A way there was from the beginning, but this was not it.

In the Negative. Matt. 19. 8.

But otherwhere, it is positivè also, to affirme, and to maintaine a good: And men positively referred, to know, what hath beene the use in former times.

In the Affirmative.

Higher than Moses, wee cannot goe. Moses as a Law-giver, one would thinke would be all for Law. He is positivè full, for custome too. Enquire (saith he) of the dayes that be past, how it hath gone, since the day GOD created the earth. (And that, in the second edition, or setting forth of the Law.)

Hath ever so alledged Moses. Deut. 4. 12.

Iob is for it too. Enquire, I pray you, of the former Age, and set your selves to aske after the Fathers (for we are but of yesterday) shall not they tell you, thus, and thus it was, in their times?

Iob. 8. 8.

And, say not the Prophets the same? Stand upon the wayes (it is Ieremie) and there looke for the good old way, and that way take, it is the onely way to find rest for your soules.

The Prophets. Ier. 6. 16.

To all which agreeable is that wherewith I will shut up this point; which all the Fathers in the first Nicene Councell tooke up, and which, ever since, hath beene the Churches crie, τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἤδη κρατείτω, Mos antiquus obtineat: Let old customes prevaile, let them carrie it. By this you see, Habemus consuetudinem, hath beene counted a sound allegation, not onely from the Apostles, but even from MOSES time.

The Fathers.

And now, for the talem. For, it is not the habemus that binds, but the talem. Not because we have it, but because it is so qualified. It is not every custome, hand over head, we may stand on. Why bindes not this? 1. Because though it may be, it was at Corinth (Ecclesia Dei, a Church of GOD, one Church) yet Ecclesiæ Dei, the other Churches of GOD, had it not; the word is plurall. 2. Because, though it hath liked some, not long since to like well of it; yet the Apostles never knew it: or (the other way) if it have liked them to dislike it, and lay it downe; yet the Apostles liked it well enough.

The Badges of a right custome, two.

Non talem (saith the Apostle) none such. Qualem then? How shall bee doe to know knew the right talem? Thus. Non talem is here opposed, to two: To the Churches of GOD: To nos (that is) the Apostles.

If it be Ecclesiarum Dei.

If it be but of some one Church, but at Corinth alone, it is too narrow; not large, not generall enough. If it bee but taken up by some of our masters of late, it is too fresh, it is not ancient enough: Non talem, No such.

But by these two, wee know our right qualem. If it bee Ecclesiarium (that is) if it be generall: If nos come to it (that is) the Apostles, if it be ancient: then it is rightly qualified; then it is as it should bee; then it may be alledged, and stood upon, then it will binde: and then if any oppose, videtur contentiosus esse.

I biginne with the Church (in the plurall.) Every Church hath power to beginne a custome: and that custome, power to binde her owne children, to it. Provided, her private custome affront not the generall, received by all others: for then binds it not. By the Rule in the Mathematiques, Ever Totum est parte majus: And by the rule in the Morals, Ever turpis pars omnis, toti non congrua.

As neither is any particular Church bound to the private custome of another, like particular, as it selfe is. But if the other Churches custome, have also beene the generall custome of the Church: then it binds, and may not be set light: For then said it must bee, that Saint Augustine doth say, If the whole Church usually have observed ought: to goe from that, or to question, whether it bee to bee observed, insolentissimæ insaniæ est. It savours of a distemper comming of a heat, or humor of pride: For onely by pride (saith Salomon) commeth contention. This for the Churhes custome.

Epist. 118. ca. 5.

Pro. 13. 10.

If nos (that is) the Apostles had it.

But if to this we adde, or rather, if before this wee set, this (nos) the Apostles had it too, that it is Apostolike: we have then said as much, as in this point can bee said, as much as may content any, that is not contentious, that is not more wedded to shew his wit, than to seeke the truth: and more set φιλόνικον τὸν ἄνδρα, to maintaine his owne position, than to regard the Churches peace. For sure, if a custome be to be esteemed by antiquity, such a custome is ab heroicis usque temporibus: for they be our Heroës. 2. If it be to be esteemed by the author: what author more worthy in themselves, more worthy of our imitation, than they? Nothing can be devised more reasonable, than that in the 118. quæst. ad Orthod. in Justin Martyr, That, of and from whom we received τὸ εὔχεσθαι to pray: of and from them, we should also receive τὸ πῶς εὔχεσθαι, how and when, at what time, at what feasts to doe it. Their example (that is, the Apostles) the Church commended to her children to practise (a better she could not:) that practice, in time grew to a custome. That custome is talem, may safely be alledged.

4 The Vse of this argument from custome.

Lastly, as this sheweth it may be alledged for a good argument in Divinitie: So doth it, 1 what the men are against whom: 2 what the matters, wherein: 3 what the penaltie, whereupon it may be alledged.

Against what parties.

1. Whom against. This may be alledged against si quis videtur contentiosus esse, such as are, or at least seeme contentious. Habemus, or Non habemus consuetudinem, is their proper answer. No reasoning with such, it will be to small purpose, they will be sine fine dicentes. Saint Augustine saith well, they cannot distinguish betweene respondere posse, and tacere nolle: They take them, for all one. So they crie lowdest, and have the last word, they take it they have answered sufficiently. Against these it lieth most properly. None so ready a way, to stop their mouthes: for custome is matter of fact, Habemus or Non habemus may be put to the twelve men, and there's an end. Saint Paul then using it here against these, teacheth us to use it against the like. Against such parties; against si quis videtur contentiosus esse, to put it upon this; Is there a custome, or is there none?

In what matters.

Specially, if the matter be of the nature of this here in the Text, where the question seemed to concerne but matter of circumstance, and outward order; there hath it his right use; that, the proper place of it. You will say; But had it not beene good though, to have used some reason for it? It had: And the Apostle used divers (if that would have served:) from the signification, at the third verse; from decencie, at the the thirteenth; from nature, at the fourteenth. But (to ſay the truth) ſuch, as (he ſaw) a wrangling wit would elude. The nature of the queſtion affoorded none other. It was well obſerved, and ſet downe for a rule by the Philoſopher, That in morall matters, men may not looke for Mathematicall proofes: The nature of the ſubject will not beare them. If not in morall, in rituall, much leſſe: they of all other, leſt ſuſceptible of a demonſtrative reaſon.

The Apoſtle ſaw this, and therefore finally reſolves all, into the Churches practice by cuſtome confirmed in matters of this kinde, enough of it ſelfe, to ſuffice any that will ſapere ad ſobrietatem. In ſo doing, as hee tooke the right courſe (we are ſure) ſo hee taught us by his example, in points of this nature, of ceremony or circumſtance, ever to pitch upon habemus, or non habemus talem conſuetudinem. This to be final.

3 And then followes upon what penaltie. Vpon no other paine, but to be pronounced to be fallen into the Apoſtles Siquis; to be taken and declared, pro contentioſo. Then if any, for every point of rite that takes him in the head, will hazard the Churches peace, will not acquieſcere, but ſet himſelfe againſt the Churches cuſtome; he knoweth his dome here. For it turnes backe reciprocè. As, if any be contentious, the Churches cuſtome is againſt him: So, if any turne upon the Churches cuſtome, be againſt it, it is no good ſigne; videtur (ſaith Saint Paul) to the Apoſtle he ſeemes ſo (and he had his eyes in his head.) And what ſuch ſeemed to him, they may well ſeeme to us; and we take them for no leſſe, that are like ſtirring in matters of no more weight. And ſo an end of this matter. For the Apoſtle, when he had ſaid this, thought he had ſaid enough, needed to ſay no more. The Churches cuſtome ſhall ever be of force, to over-rule ſuch as are contentious. And when Saint Paul had ſaid this, he had ſaid. And ſo have we.

Vpon what penaltie.

The argument.

III.

This then being ſet downe, That Cuſtomes ſo qualified are to be kept: Shall we now goe on to the hypotheſis, that the keeping of Eaſter is ſuch? (And now I would the houre were to begin againe, ſo much is to be ſaid for it.)

The keeping of Eaſter is ſuch a cuſtome.

One foot of our compaſſe wee fixe in the Apoſtles times. The other, where? They appoint us Gelaſius time, who was faſt upon the five hundreth yeare. Be it ſo.

The time to make this cuſtome.

From the Apoſtles Age (which ended with Saint Iohn, who ſurvived CHRIST ſixty eight yeares, and dyed the yeare CII. under Trajan) to Gelaſius Age. Of theſe five hundred, the firſt hundred yeares are for (Nos) the Apoſtles time. From thence, the foure hundred yeares following, are for the Churches. Which foure hundred we may divide againe, into two even moities, two hundred under perſecution: two hundred under peace.

How long the Churches. 400.

To prove (then) our habemus conſuetudinem: Wee cannot better beginne, than with this in the Text, the contentions, that from the beginning roſe about it. Thoſe very contentions prove it. It muſt bee, that muſt be contended for: and then it muſt bee, when it is contended for. Theſe three things in this one proofe. [1] The contentions that were about it, even preſently upon the Apoſtles times: [2] The great care had, and continuall paines taken, to lay them downe, that is, the Churches contending for the Feaſt: [3] The cenſuring of thoſe that tooke them up, with Saint Pauls contentioſus here, and with ſomewhat more: (Of Blaſius, at Rome in Europe; Of Creſcentius in Ægypt, for Afrike: Of Audæus, in Syria, for Aſia:) Theſe where the principals, theſe were all written up in the blacke booke, by thoſe that regiſtred the Heretickes; by Tertullian, Epiphanius, Philaſtrius, Auguſtine, and Theodoret (all five.)

Proofes for the cuſtome of the Churches, 1 Proofe. From contentions about it. 2 The Church tooke part with Eaſter. 3 Cenſured ever for Heretickes, that againſt it.

Tertul. de præſcr. cap. 53. Epipha. Hæreſ. 70. Syn Antioch. Can. 1.

But as GOD would have it, the queſtion never was of the Feaſt it ſelfe, but of the time of it onely. All kept Eaſter, though not all at one time. For the keeping, they had the Churches cuſtome: for the time of keeping, they had their owne: the Feaſt of the Chriſtians; the time of the Iewes.

The contention not about the Feaſt, but the time onely.

And

How the contention firſt came.

And I will tell you how this came, firſt, From Saint Iames (who was the firſt) there were ſucceſſively one after another, fifteene Biſhops of Hieruſalem, all of them of the Circumciſion. Theſe (the ſooner to win their brethren the Iewes) condeſcended to keepe their Eaſter XIIII°. Lunæ, as they did. That which was by them thus done by way of condeſcenſion, was after, by ſome, urged as a matter of neceſſitie, as if it were not lawfull, but in that day to hold it.

Chap. 53.

The firſt that it tooke thus in the head (Tertullian in the end of De præſcrip. ſaith) was one Blaſtus, about the dayes of Commodus. He began a ſchiſme. And Irenæus preſently wrote de ſchiſmate contra Blaſtum. But after, from ſchiſme Blaſtus fell to hereſie, and began that of the Quartodecimani: to whoſe manner of keeping it, for the moſt part, other Heretickes did cleave, leaving the Churches cuſtome of purpoſe, ſince they were departed from her.

Hie. deſcr. 35. Epiph. hær. 52.

Great pitie, ſome in our dayes had not beene then living, to have adviſed the Church to have ſaved her paines, and never have ſtriven ſo about it: the ſhorteſt way was to have made no more adoe, but kept none at all. But, non habemus talem conſuetudinem, would have beene their anſwer. For you will eaſily gheſſe: if theſe, for not keeping it at the right time, were ſcored up for Heretickes; what would become of them, that had been againſt the keeping of it at all.

None againſt Eaſter, but Aërius.

Till now in our dayes, there was never any ſuch, but Aërius; he tooke it away cleane, as Iewiſh: His reaſon was (ſaith Epiphanius, ſcorning it) becauſe CHRIST our Paſſeover is offered. CHRIST our Paſſeover is offered, let us therefore keepe a Feaſt (ſaith Saint Paul :) Let us therefore keepe none (ſaith Aërius) holden for ſo ſaying, for little better than crazed. There was never any Councell called about him: but as Aërius was his name, ſo was his opinion, and ſo it vaniſhed into aire, and was blowne over ſtraight. Otherwiſe, all Heretickes, an Eaſter they had: Not ſo much as the Novatians, that called themſelves Cathari (that is, the Puritans of the Primitive Church) but one they had: but like good fellowes (by their Canon adiaphorus) they left every one at liberty, ſo he kept one, to keepe it whether way he liſted; but keepe one he muſt. This contending about this cuſtome from the beginning, ſheweth, from the beginning, ſuch a cuſtome there was.

2 Proofe from the Cycli Paſchales.

Next we avouch the Cycli Paſchales (for the keeping it right) which were indeed the Churches yearely Calendar (which to this day the Greek Church call their μηνολόγιον) made of purpoſe for the juſt keeping it, at the very time. A pregnant proofe for this cuſtome, if there were none but it. By Hippolytus firſt a famous Biſhop and holy Martyr (his was the ſixteene-yeare Canon) ſet forth by him ſo timely, as it ended in the firſt yeare of Alexander Severus.

2 And after him, that of eight yeares, deviſed by Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria, who was a Martyr alſo, and of high account ever in the Church. (And both theſe under the perſecution.)

Then came Euſebius, whoſe device the Golden number was, or Cycle of nineteene yeares. His held, till Theophilus of Alexandria's began. Now the time of the ſetting his, is recorded to have beene the yeare 380.

Proſper came after him, and he ſet another. And laſt came Victorinus of Aquitaine about the yeare 460. (not much before Gelaſius.) Two more came after theſe before it was fully ſetled, (but we will not paſſe our bounds.) If no ſuch cuſtome were, what needed all theſe paines, all this adoe, in theſe Cycles ſetting, and calculation of times? It ſhewes the great eſteeme, the Church had the Feaſt in, that it was ſo carefull of the preciſe time of it, every yeare.

The uſe of the Cycli Paſchales.

And there was reaſon for it. Other-while they were at an after-deale, about the time. The yeare 454. (within a yeare or two, after the Councell of Chalcedon) all were at a ſtand. Eaſter fell ſo high in April, they were in a doubt, they had beene wrong: Yea Leo himſelfe (that then lived) and all. Preſently fell Leo to writing of letters about, to all, reputed any thing ſeene that way. To the Biſhop of [a] Lylybæum in Sicil. To the Biſhop of the Iſle [b] Coos. To the [c] Emperour Martian himſelfe (and to the [d] Empreſſe to ſollicite him) that he would not faile, but ſend to Proterius

Biſhop of Alexandria to helpe them out: As he did. And the like fell out in S. Ambroſes time. Damaſus and all, were to ſeeke about it, and he then faine to cleare it by his LXXXIII. Epiſtle, to the Biſhops of Æmylia.

Now, upon the conſulting of the Biſhop of Alexandria, there hangs a third proof. The Paſchales epiſtolæ yearely ſent abroad by that See, to this end. Leo confeſſeth to the Emperour, That becauſe, they of Egypt were held for the moſt skilfull in the Mathematikes, beſt at calculations; it was by the firſt Councell at Nice laid upon them (this truſt) yearely to calculate the day exactly, and to give notice of it in time to other Churches, yea, to Rome and all.

3 Proofe. From the paſchales epiſtolæ of λόγοι ἑορτάσιμοι of the Biſhop of Alexandria.

And it was antiqua conſuetudo, ſaith Caſsian (who lived with Chryſoſtome, and was his Deacon) that every yeare, the morrow after their Epiphania, the Biſhop of Alexandria ſent abroad his Paſchales epiſtolæ, to warne Eaſter, over the world. And, when (after) by reaſon of warres in the ſpring time, in many places they were intercepted, that they came not time enough: Order was taken anew by the great Councell of Africk, that letters for warning Eaſter ſhould come forth ſooner, by the one and twentieth of Auguſt every yeare, that ſo they might have time to come, whither they were ſent ſoone enough.

Theſe Paſchales epiſtolæ, were ever famous, and of high account, for other good matter contained in them. Three of them of Theophilus, we have extant, ſo highly eſteemed by S. Hierom, as he tooke the paines to turn them into Latine, and to him we owe them. But, though by the Nicene Councell this was laid upon the Biſhop of Alexandria; I would not have you conceive, it began then. Ruffin ſaith, the Councell did but antiquum Canonem tradere, deliver the old Canon, that had beene before in uſe. For, long before, Euſebius mentioned thoſe Paſchales epiſtolæ ſent about, by Dionyſe Biſhop there, even under the perſecution.

Now if we will follow * Iob's advice, and ſet our ſelves to aske of the Fathers: we ſhall finde habemus talem conſuetudinem, cleere with them for it. 1 Thoſe firſt, that lived after the Churches peace: 2 Then thoſe that during the perſecution. Thoſe in the Churches peace, foure wayes: 1. By the Homilies or Sermons made purpoſely by them to be preached on this day. We have a full Jury, Greek and Latine of them; and that of the moſt chiefe and eminent among them. S. Baſil, Nazianzen, Chryſoſtome, Nyſſen, Theophilus Alexandrinus, Cyril, Chryſologus, Leo, &c. And yet I deale not with any of thoſe in Ambroſe, Auguſtine, Maximus, now extant; I know, they are queſtioned. I rely only on the report of S. Hierome and Gennadius, who ſaw the right copies, and what they ſaw, have reported.

4 Proofe. * Iob 8. 8. From the Fathers in the Churches peace, the latter 200. yeares. By the Homilies upon Eaſter-day

I will give you a taſte of one. It ſhall be Nazianzen, ſurnamed the Divine, and ſo one that knew what belonged to Divinitie. Thus begins he a Sermon of his upon it. Eaſter-day is come, GODS owne Eaſter-day: and againe I ſay, Eaſter-day is come, in honour of the trinitie: the Feaſt of Feaſts, the ſolemnitie of all ſolemnities, ſo far paſſing all other Feaſts, holden not only by or for men, but even in honour of CHRIST Himſelfe, as the Sun doth the Starres.

1 In paſcha.

And, in his funerall Sermon for his father, having occaſion but to name it by the way (for that his father once brought to the laſt caſt, in a ſickneſſe of his, ſuddenly (as it were by a miracle) recovered upon an Eaſter-day morning.) It was (ſaith he) Eaſter, the great and famous Feaſt of Eaſter, the Queen and the Soveraigne of all the dayes in the yeare. That, in his dayes they had (ſure) ſuch a cuſtome.

(And ſo it ſeemes they had in Ignatius dayes: for from him borrowed he that terme of Lady and Queene of dayes, out of his Epiſtle ad Magneſianos.)

2. By the Hymnes ſet for this day, to be ſung on it. By Prudentius that lived in Saint Ambroſe's time. By S. Ambroſe himſelfe. Before him by S. Hilary. But, Paulinus I inſiſt on. He, in his Panegyrick for Fœlix, ſets downe in particular all the Feaſts in the yeare, as they were then in uſe among them: Eaſter for a chiefe Feaſt. He lived with S. Auguſtine. A pregnant Record, for the Churches cuſtome then.

By the Hymnes upon Eaſter-day

3. By their Writings. 1 Some of them in their Commentaries (as S. Hierom and namely on the Galatians, and on that place (yee obſerve dayes:) If that be a fault (ſaith he) we Chriſtians doe incurre that fault, all. For we keepe (by name) Eaſter, but not the Jewes Eaſter, of unleavened bread (which the Apoſtle excepts to) but the Chriſtian Eaſter of the Reſurrection of CHRIST. 2 Some, by way of Epiſtles and anſwers: as S. Ambroſe, LXXXIII. Epiſtle, full to it. S. Auguſtine, CXVIII. CXIX. ſet Epiſtles concerning queſtions about it. 3 Some, by their πολεμικὰ: As Epiphanius (the Treaſure of antiquitie) in his L. LXX. and LXXV. hereſie, ad oppoſitum. Poſitively in his Compendium of the true Churches orders, at the end of his Pannarium, whereof one is πανήγυεις μεγάλας ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ τοῦ πάσχα, The great Solemnitie upon Eaſter-day. 4 As S. Auguſtine expreſly contra Adimantum, the 16. Chap. and the 32. booke againſt Fauſtus (that found fault, the Church kept it, yet kept it not, as the Iewes:) confeſſeth the one, (the Churches keeping:) traverſes the other, that ſhe ought, neither at that time, nor in that manner to keepe it as they did: and that at large. 4 Some, by ſhort Treatiſes, as Ambroſe de myſterio Paſchæ. And ſome by full bookes, as Euſebius, who wrote a booke of the whole order of the Churches Service then, dedicated it to Conſtantine, was by the Emperour highly commended for it.

By their Writings touching Eaſter.

4 Laſtly, as by writing, ſo by matter of fact. As Chryſoſtome, who when he was depoſed, and ſo injoyned not to come in any Church: yet Eaſter-day comming, ſo loth he was not to keep it, as he got him in Thermas Conſtantini (a ſpacious great building, for the publike Bath of the Citie) and there held his Eaſter, with a very great company, that would not forſake him. As Athanaſius, who being accuſed to Conſtantius the Emperour, for keeping the Feaſt of Eaſter in the great Church at Alexandria (then but newly finiſhed, and as yet not dedicate) he layes the blame from himſelf upon the people, that would have it kept there, do what he could, the other Churches were ſo narrow, and the concourſe to the feaſt ſo great, as he ſaith, it would have done the Emperours heart good, to have ſeene it.

And in his Epiſtle ad Africanos; with open mouth he, cryeth out upon the Arrians, that came in military manner to inſtall their new Biſhop, and the many outrages by them done. Above all, that not only they did thoſe outrages, but did them (of all dayes) upon Eaſter-day, Et ne ipſum quidem Dominicum diem ſanctiſſimi feſti ullâ in reverentiâ habuere, and had not in any reverence, not the very Sunday of that moſt holy Feaſt.

Cuſtome for the three Holy-dayes at Eaſter. Cap. 8 Hom. 1. in Paſch.

Not the Sunday: for we are to to know, the cuſtome that is continued with us ſtill, they then had, to keep two dayes beſide the Sunday, three in all. For the Latine Church, plaine, by S. Auguſtine de Civitate Dei, 22. In tertium Feſti diem. For the Greeke, by Nyſſen, who expreſly termeth it, τριήμερος θεσμία.

Thus, all theſe wayes, by ſinging, by ſaying, by writing, by doing, all beare witneſſe to it: and I may ſafely ſay, there is not one of them, but one of theſe wayes or other, he hath his hand in it, and among them they make up a full proofe, of this habemus conſuetudinem.

5 Proofe. From the Councels. The Nicene.

From the Fathers, I paſſe to the Councels, and plead it by all the foure. The Nicene firſt.

Theod. l. 1. c. 9. Socrat. l. 1. c. 9.

1 Two cauſes there were (ſaith Athanaſius de Syn. Arim. & Sel.) of the aſſembling that Councell. Nam & claudicabant circa Feſtum (and he makes that the firſt cauſe) They halted about the Feaſt, kept it not uniformly: and that was ſet ſtraight againſt Creſcentius. And, the Deitie of the SONNE of GOD was queſtioned, and that was put into the Nicene Creed, againſt Arrius. You have the Councels Epiſtle for the ſetling it: you have the Emperours Sacra for the ratifying it, directed ad omnes Eccleſias (in the third book of his life, by Euſebius.)

The 2. of Conſtant.

2 For the two Generall at Conſtantinople. As Conſtantine in the firſt; ſo Theodoſius at this, was not behind. His Law remains, whereby he provided, that for fifteen dayes, from the Sunday before the day, till the Sunday after, no proceſſe ſhould go forth, none ſhould be arreſted; a generall ceſſation of all both proceſſes and proceedings, in honour of the High Feaſt. That you have Eaſter day, and the cuſtome of holding it ſolemnly, in the body of the Law too, in Theodoſius Code.

3. At the third of Epheſus, there have you (in the 2. Tom. c. 32.) Rufinus, Heſychius, and Ruffin, three Quartodecimani hereticks, publikely in the face of the Councel, recanting their errour, ſubſcribing, and promiſing ever after to conforme and keep their Eaſter, after the cuſtome of the Churches of GOD. At Epheſus.

4. And at the fourth of Chalcedon, the ſixt Seſſion (the Emperour being there then preſent in perſon) the whole Councell with one voice made this acclamation, Vnum Paſcha orbi terrarum: Thanks be to GOD, one Eaſter now, and but one, all the world over. At Chalcedon.

But before all theſe (the Nicene and all) by a dozen years at leaſt was the Councell of Arles, and in it, this cuſtome proclaimed. I mention it, not ſo much for the antiquity, as that by it appeareth, how the cuſtome of Eaſter went here with us in this Realme: for, at it was preſent and ſubſcribed, the Biſhop of London, Reſtitutus. A plain argument, We had ſuch a cuſtome then. Cuſtome in England.

And for the other Realme, Gelaſius ſhall ſpeak. In a Synod of ſeventy Biſhops, where he and they decreed, what bookes were to be read, what not: they ſay, there was then a Poeme of venerable Sedulius (who had the addition of Scotus for his nation) which they doe inſigni laude præferre, (that is) very highly commend. Sedulius intitles it, his Opus Paſchale, and begins it, with Paſchales quicunque dapes---- as it were inviting his Readers (his countrey-men, I dare ſay, ſpecially, if they will come to it) to a Feaſt, upon Eaſter-day. Cuſtome in Scotland. Sedulius.

But for both, none ſo worthy a witneſſe, as the Emperour Conſtantine, who in his Reſcript about Eaſter, directed to all Churches, expreſly nameth this Iſle, the Iſle of Britannie, among thoſe places, where this cuſtome was duly and orderly obſerved. Cuſtome in both. Conſtantine.

All this while the Church had reſt: during the perſecution, how went it? Two we will take in, in the paſſage betweene the times of perſecution. 6. Proofe From the Fathers in the firſt 200. yeares of perſecution.

[1] Lactantius, the moſt part of his life, lived under the perſecution, but dyed in the Churches peace. [2] So did Pierius of Alexandria (for his excellent learning, called Origen the younger.) In Lactantius ſeventh booke, and nineteenth Chapter, there is a plain teſtimony for the ſolemn keeping of Eaſter-Eve. And Pierius (ſaith Saint Hierom) hath a long Sermon upon the Prophet Hoſee, made by Him and preached at the ſolemne aſſembly on Eaſter-eve. And if the Eve were ſo held, we make no doubt of the day. Two, between peace and perſecution. Lactantius. Pierius. Hier. de Scr. 76.

1. Now in the middeſt of the perſecution, there fell out a ſpeciall caſe of Philip the Emperour, (ſuppoſed to have given his owne and his ſonnes name to the Chriſtian profeſſion, as Euſebius reporteth:) in ſigne thereof, He, on Eaſter-eve offered to joyne himſelfe at the Church-ſervice, as knowing that to be their chiefeſt ſolemnitie: which they failed not to keepe, no not then, when their caſe was at the hardeſt. Vnder the perſecution. The fact of Philip the Emperour. L. 6. c. 34. Euſeb l. 7. c. 22.

2. And even then at Alexandria, Dionyſius the Biſhop there, held this cuſtome. Thus writes he to Hierax (a Biſhop too) and to others: out of priſon, That, though the perſecution then raged much, and the plague more; yet were the Chriſtians, even then, ſo carefull not to break this cuſtome, as they kept their Eaſter, ſome in woods, ſome on ſhip-board, ſome in barnes and ſtables; yea, they in the very goale, keepe it they did even then, perſecution and plague both notwithſtanding. Dionyſ. Alex.

3. Cyprian held this cuſtome: Not by his Homily (I wave it, as doubtfull:) but in foure of his Epiſtles I find it. I name but one, his LIII. Some had conſulted him, in a queſtion of ſome difficultie. He writes backe, It was now Eaſter, his brethren were from him, every one at his owne charge, ſolemnizing the Feaſt with their people. So ſoone as the Feaſt was over, and they met againe, they ſhould heare from him, he would take their opinions, and returne them a ſound anſwer. Cyprian. Epiſt. 41. 24. 40.

4. Origen had this cuſtome. In his VIII. againſt Celſus, frankely he confeſſeth, That other Feaſts, Eaſter by name, the Chriſtians held them; and that (as he ſaith) σεμνότερον, in more ſolemne manner, than Celſus, or any heathen-men of them all, held theirs. Origen.

* Tertullianus de corona mil. c. 3. ad uxorem l. 2 c 4. contr. Marc. 4. 3.

5. 4.

5. Tertullian had this cuſtome. * Many places in him. Only one I cite, in the fourteenth chapter, de Ieiunio, Quod ſi omnem in totum devotionem dierum eraſit Apoſtolus, cur Paſcha celebramus annuo circulo? If it were the Apoſtles minde, to race out all devout obſerving of dayes quite, how comes it to paſſe, we celebrate Eaſter yearly, at the circle of the yeare turning about?

Irenæus.

6. Irenæus had this cuſtome: His Epiſtle to Victor ſheweth it: to Victor, and to many more (ſaith Euſebius) about that queſtion, (underſtand ſtill the queſtion of the time, not of the Feaſt.) A book alſo (we finde) he wrote de Paſchate, in the 115. quæſt. in Iuſtin Martyr. So, he will be for it, certainly.

Euſeb. l. 5. c. 26. Seven books then Written for it. Euſeb. l. 7. c. 32. Hier. de Scrip. 43. Hieron. de Scriptor. 44. Ibidem 61. Ibidem 38. Ibidem 24.

7. And it is ſtrange, even during the perſecution, how may bookes we finde written, to deduce the cuſtome by. [1] Beſide that of Irenæus, [2] One by Anatolius the great learned Biſhop of Laodicea: [3] By Theophilus Biſhop of Cæſarea, and [4] by Bacchylus Biſhop of Corinth, either of them one. [5] Another by Hippolytus, that made up the firſt cycle. Yet, [6] another by Clemens Alexandrinus. And laſt, which indeed was firſt in time of all, two bookes, [7] by the holy Martyr and Prophet Melito Biſhop of Sardis, (in the next Age to the Apoſtles themſelves) ſet forth by him (as he ſaith) at the time of the Feaſt, and in the very holy-dayes of it.

7. Proofe. From Councels in the perſecution.
1 Paleſtine.
2 Pontus.
3 Oſreena.
4 Italy.
5 France.
6 Græcia.
7 Aſia minor.
Euſeb. l. 5. c. 23

Nay, there wanted not Councels then neither, and that in ſeven ſeverall parts of the world at once: all in the midſt of the fervour of the fiery tryall, when the Church (GOD wot) could but evill intend it. It was no time to contend then. But it ſhewes, they made a matter of it, and no ſlight reckoning of the retaining it. Elſe might they have ſlipt it, without any more adoe.

Enough (I trow) to ſhew, ſuch a cuſtome there was in all the Churches, theſe parties lived in, which were all the Churches GOD then had. They muſt needs ſeeme contentious, that will contend againſt all theſe. I ſee not how they can ſcape the Apoſtles Si quis, that doe. And this I ſay, if ſome one example of ſome eminent man of worth, will ſerve to make an authoritie: If, that: Then this cloud of witneſſes, and thoſe [1] not perſons, but whole Councels and Churches: [2] not in ſome one Region, but in divers, all the world over: [3] and that not for one time, but ſo many ages ſucceſſively continued, from generation to generation: what manner of authority ought that to be? the greateſt ſure, and none greater, but of GOD Himſelfe.

Proofes. That this cuſtome was Apoſtolike. 1 Proofe by teſtimony. Auguſtine.

Now to (Nos) that is, to the Apoſtles themſelves. Firſt, that it was a Cuſtome Apoſtolike and ſo taken, Saint Auguſtine is direct in his CXVIII. Epiſtle to Ianuarius, who had purpoſely ſent to him, to know his opinion touching certaine queſtions, all of them about Eaſter. Thus ſaith he there. For ſuch things as come to us not by writing, but by practice (and yet ſuch as are obſerved quite thorow the world) we are given to underſtand, they come commended to us, and were inſtituted either by the Apoſtles themſelves, or by generall Councels, whoſe authority hath ever beene accounted of, as wholeſome in the Church. Now what be thoſe things ſo generally obſerved toto orbe terrarum? Theſe: that the Paſſion, the Reſurrection, the Aſcenſion of CHRIST, and the comming of the HOLY GHOST from Heaven, anniverſariâ ſolennitate celebrantur, are yearely in ſolemne manner celebrated. And (ſaith he) if there be any beſide theſe: for theſe, are moſt cleere.

First, he is cleere, It was the cuſtome of the Church, far and wide the world thorow. Then, that it muſt either by the Apoſtles be inſtitute, or by ſome Councell. Not by any Councell: Many met about the time: about the Feaſt never any: that, not queſtioned at all: taked pro confeſſo ever, and ſo, Apoſtolike. They be his own words (lib. 4. de Bapt. contra Donat. cap. 24.) If the whole Church obſerve any thing, not having beene ordained by ſome generall Councell, rectiſſimè creditur, we are to believe, rectiſſimè, by as good right as any can be, right in the ſuperlative, that it came to us, non niſi ab Apoſtolis, from the Apoſtles, and from none elſe, nor by any other way. So S. Auguſtine is for nos habemus talem. So he held it.

An hundred yeares before him, Conſtantine is as direct in his Epiſtle ad omnes Eccleſias. Many remarkable things there are in that Epiſtle. 1. The moſt holy Feaſt of Eaſter, foure times he calleth it. That is the good Emperours ſtyle, In ſo great a matter, matter, in ſo high a feaſt of our Religion to diſagree ἀδιαφόρον utterly unlawfull. And 3. τί κάλλιον, τί σεμνότερον, what more honeſt, what more ſeemly, than that this Feaſt ſhould be inviolably kept, by which we hold our hopes of immortality? (Mark that reaſon well.)

But, for Apoſtolike: Be it lawfull for us Chriſtians (ſaith he) rejecting the Iewiſh manner, That day, ἣν ἀφ' οὗ τὰ πάθη ἡμῖν ἄχρι τοῦ παρόντος ἐφυλάξαμεν, which day ever ſince the very firſt day of His paſſion, we have to this preſent kept; to tranſmit the due obſerving of it to all ages to come. Marke the words, [1] They had kept Eaſter from the firſt day of Chriſts paſſion, till that preſent time. [2] And after that, We have received it of our Saviour. [3] And yet againe, which our SAVIOUR delivered to us. And concludes, that [4] accordingly, when he came among them, he and they would keepe their Eaſter together. Nothing can be more full, that in his time this cuſtome was, and that it was reputed to have come from the Apoſtles, as begun from the very day of Chriſts Paſſion. Which Leo ſhortly, but fully expreſſeth, Legalis quippe feſtivitas dum mutatur, impletur. The legall Feaſt of the Paſſeover, at the fulfilling of it, was changed both at once. Fulfilled and changed, at one time, both. No diſtance betweene. And fulfilled (I am ſure) it was in the Apoſtles time, and ſo changed then alſo.

Leo Hom. 7. de Paſſ. Dom.

If you will ſee it deduced in ſtory, that may you too. Thus, of himſelfe Irenæus writeth, that he was brought up in Aſia under Polycarpus; and that he (yong though he were) obſerved and remembred well all his courſe of life. And namely, how comming to Rome in Anicetus time, he kept his Eaſter there. Not when Anicetus kept it, but keepe it he did though. In the keeping they agreed: in the time they differed. Either held his owne.

2 Proofe, by ſtory. Euſeb. 4. c. 14.

Iren. l. 3. c. 3. Tertul. de præſcript. c. 32.

Polycarpus then kept Eaſter. Now, Polycarpus had lived and converſed with the Apoſtles, was made Biſhop by them, Biſhop of Smyrna, (Irenæus and Tertullian ſay it directly) and he is ſuppoſed to be the Angell of the Church of Smyrna, Revel. 2. 8. And Polycarpus (as ſaith Irenæus) kept Eaſter with S. JOHN, and with the reſt of the Apoſtles, totidem verbis. Euſeb. lib. 5. c. 26.

Polycarpus kept Eaſter with S. Iohn and the reſt of the Apoſtles.

Μετὰ Ἰωάννου τοῦ μαθητοῦ τοῦ κυρίου ἡμῶν, καὶ σὺν τοῖς λοιποῖς Ἀποστόλοις ὡς συνδιέτριψεν ἀεὶ τετηρηκώς. Euſ. l. 5. 14.

Polycrates in his Epiſtle there (in Euſebius) expreſly ſaith, that S. Philip the Apoſtle kept it. If S. Philip and S. Iohn (by name) If the reſt of the Apoſtles had it, then nos habemus is true; then it is Apoſtolike.

S. Philip the Apoſtle kept it.

But yet we have a more ſure ground than all theſe: The LORDS Day hath teſtimony in Scripture, I inſiſt upon that; that Eaſter-day muſt needs be as ancient as it. For how came it to be the Lords Day? but that, as it is in the Pſalme, the Lord made it? And why made He it? but becauſe on it, the Stone caſt aſide (that is, Chriſt) was made the Head-ſtone of the corner? that is, becauſe then the LORD roſe, becauſe his Reſurrection fell upon it?

3 Proofe, from the Lords day. Apoc. 1. 10. Pſal. 118. Aug. Ep. 119. 13. Dies Dominicus Chriſtianis Reſurrectionis Dominicæ declaratus eſt, & ex illo habere cœpit feſtivitatem ſuam.

Now what a thing were it, that all the Sundayes in the yeare that are but abſtracts (as it were) of this day, (the very day of the Reſurrection) that they ſhould be kept: and this day, the day it ſelfe, the prototype and archetype of them all, ſhould not be kept, but laid aſide quite, and be cleane forgotten? That, the day in the weeke we ſhould keepe; and the day in the moneth it ſelfe, and returne of the yeare, we ſhould not keepe? Even of every congruity, it is to be as they, and ſomewhat more.

Take example by our ſelves. For His Majeſties deliverance the fift of Auguſt: for His Majeſties and ours, the fift of November (being Tueſday both:) for theſe a kinde of remembrance we keepe, on Tueſday every weeke in the yeare. But when by courſe of the yeare in their ſeverall moneths, the very originall dayes themſelves come about; ſhall we not, do we not celebrate them in much more ſolemne manner? what queſtion is there? weigh them well, you will finde the caſe alike. One cannot be, but the other alſo muſt be Apoſtolike.

4 Proofe, of the Churches cuſtome for Eaſter.

1 For the laſt proofe I have yet reſerved, one: or rather, three in one. [1] The cuſtome of Baptiſme, knowne to have beene miniſtred as upon that day, all the Primitive Church through. A thing ſo knowne, as their Homilies de baptiſmo were moſt upon that day. S. Baſils I name. In his upon Eaſter-day, he ſhewes the cuſtome of baptizing then, and the reaſon of it.

1 The cuſtome of Baptiſme.

2 The cuſtome of Baptiſme.

2 The cuſtome of the cenſures then determining.

2 The uſe of the keyes, at that time ſpecially. Then, were the cenſures inflicted:

then were they releaſed. [1] Inflicted. Againſt that time, did S. Paul cut off the inceſtuous perſon, that a little leven might not ſowre them all. Even againſt the time that Chriſt our Paſſeover was offered, and they therefore to hold this Feaſt. [2] Releaſed. So you ſhall finde the Councell of Ancyra (elder than that of Nice) order, the cenſures ſhould determine all, indure no longer than the Great Day (ſo, in their common ſpeech they termed Eaſter) and then, all to be reſtored. [3] To which purpoſe the Councell of Nice took order, there ſhould be in Lent, a Synod yearely to this end: that by it all quarrels being taken up, and all things ſet ſtraight, they might be in better caſe, to come with their oblation at Eaſter to the Sacrament.

1 Cor. 5.7,8. Can. 5.

3 The cuſtome of a Communion.

And laſt, by the never broken cuſtome of a ſolemne Euchariſt, ever upon this day. Origen in his ſeventh upon Exodus, he ſaith, Our Eaſter-day farre paſſeth the Jewiſh Eaſter. They had no Manna on theirs: (The Paſſeover was eaten in Ægypt: Manna, came not till they were in the wilderneſſe:) But we (ſaith he) we never keepe our Paſſeover, but we are ſure of Manna upon it, the true Manna, the Bread of life that came downe from Heaven. For they had no Eaſter then, without a Communion.

John 6.50,58.

Hom. 6. de Quadrag. Leo joynes both; (he might well all three.) Paſchalis quippe ſolennitatis hoc eſt proprium, This is a peculiar that Eaſter-day hath, ut in eâ tota Eccleſia, remiſſione gaudeat peccatorum: That on it, all the whole Church obtaineth remiſſion of their ſinnes. One part, qui ſacro Baptiſmate renaſcuntur, by vertue of the ſolemne Baptiſme then miniſtred: The reſt, by benefit of the Euchariſt they then receive; ad rubiginem mortalitatis (it is his terme) to the ſcouring off the ruſt, which our mortality gathereth by the ſinnes and errours of the whole yeare.

I will conclude all, with the words which S. Ambroſe concludes his LXXXIII. (his Paſchall Epiſtle, with) to the Biſhops of Æmilia: Ergo, cùm tot veritatis indicia concurrant, juxta majorum exemplum, Feſtum hoc publicæ ſalutis, læti exultantéſque celebremus. Since then there be ſo many proofes for this truth that thus meet: according to the example of our fore-fathers, let us with joy and gladneſſe keepe this Feaſt of our common ſalvation. How? Sumamus ſpiritu ferventi Sacramentum in azymis ſinceritatis. Let us receive the holy Sacrament, with the ſweet-bread of ſincerity. Poſtes noſtros, ubi eſt oſtium verbi, ſanguine Chriſti, in fide paſſionis, coloremus. The poſts of the doore of our mouth (that is, our lips) let us dye them with the Bloud of Chriſt, in the faith of His bleſſed Paſſion. Enſuing the ſteps of the Apoſtles and the Churches of GOD (all:) with whom joyning in both, let us expect the bleſſing of GOD upon us, &c.

JOHN Chap. XX.

VERSE 11 But Mary, ſtood by the Sepulcher, weeping: and as ſhe wept, ſhee ſtooped, and looked into the Sepulcher.

12. And ſaw two Angels, in white, ſitting, the one at the head, the other at the feete, where the Body of JESUS had lyen.

13. And they ſaid to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? Shee ſaid to them, They have taken away my LORD, and I know not where they have laid Him.

14. When ſhe had thus ſaid, ſhe turned her ſelfe about, and ſaw JESUS ſtanding, and knew not that it was JESUS.

15. JESUS ſaith to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? Whom ſeekeſt thou? She (ſuppoſing He had beene the gardiner) ſaid to Him, Sir, if thou have borne Him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid Him, and I will take Him thence.

16. JESUS ſaith to her, Mary: She turned her ſelfe, and ſaid to Him, Rabboni; that is to ſay, Maſter.

17. JESUS ſaid to her, Touch Me not, for I am not yet aſcended to my Father: But, goe to my brethren, and ſay to them, I aſcend to my Father and to your Father, and to my GOD and your GOD.

This laſt verſe was not touched.

IT is Eaſter-day abroad: And it is ſo in the Text. We keepe Solomons rule, Verbum diei in die ſuo: For, all this (I have read) is nothing elſe, but a report of CHRIST S riſing, and of His appearing this Eaſter-day morning, His very firſt appearing of all. S. Mark is expreſſe for it, that CHRIST was no ſooner riſen this day, but, He appeared firſt of all to Mary Magdalen: which firſt appearing of His, is here by S. Iohn extended, and ſet downe at large. 1 Reg. 8. 59. Mark. 16. 9.

The ſumme of it is, 1. The ſeeking CHRIST dead; 2. The finding Him alive.

The manner of it is, That Mary Magdalen ſtaying ſtill by the Sepulcher, firſt ſhe ſaw a viſion of Angels: and after, ſhe ſaw CHRIST Himſelfe. Saw Him, and was her ſelfe made an Angell by Him; a good Angell, to carry the Evangell, the firſt good and joyfull tidings of His riſing againe from the dead. And this was a great Act. 13.33. honour (all conſidered) to ſerve in an Angels place. To doe that at His reſurrection (His ſecond birth) that, at His firſt birth an Angell did. An Angell firſt publiſhed that; Mary Magdalen brought firſt notice of this. As he, to the Shepherds, ſo ſhe, to the Apoſtles, the Paſtours of CHRISTS flock; by them to be ſpread abroad to the ends of the world.

To look a little into it. 1 Mary is the name of a woman: Mary Magdalen, of a ſinfull woman.

That, to a woman firſt; it agreeth well, to make even with Eve; that as by a woman came the firſt newes of death; ſo, by a woman alſo might come the firſt notice of the Reſurrection from the dead. And the place fits well: for, in a garden, they came, both.

That, to a ſinfull woman firſt; that alſo agrees well. To her firſt that moſt needed it: moſt needed it, and ſo firſt ſought it. And it agrees well, He be firſt found of her, that firſt ſought Him: Even in that reſpect ſhe was to be reſpected.

In which two, there is opened unto us a gate of hope, two great leaves (as it were:)
Hoſ. 2. 15. one, that no infirmitie of ſex (for a woman we ſee:) the other, that no enormitie of ſin (for a ſinfull woman, one that had the blemiſh, that ſhee went under the com-
Luk. 7. 37. mon name of peccatrix, as notorious and famous in that kinde:) That, neither of theſe, ſhall debarre any to have their part in CHRIST, and in His Reſurrection; any, that ſhall ſeeke Him in ſuch ſort, as ſhe did. For, either of theſe non obſtante, nay, notwithſtanding both theſe, ſhe had the happineſſe; To ſee His Angels (and that was no ſmall favour:) to ſee CHRIST Himſelfe: And that, firſt of all, before all others, to ſee and ſalute Him: And, to receive a commiſſion from Him, of Vade & dic, to goe and tell (that is, as it were) to be an Apoſtle, and that to the Apoſtles themſelvs, to bring them the firſt good newes of CHRISTS riſing againe.

There are three Parties that take up the whole Text; and if I ſhould divide it, I would make thoſe three parties the three parts; 1 Mary Magdalen, 2 the Angels, 3 and CHRIST our SAVIOUR.

I. Mary Magdalen begins her part in the firſt verſe, but ſhee goes along thorow them all.

II. Then the Angels part in the two verſes next: 1 Their appearing, 2 and their ſpeech to her. Appearing, in the twelth; Speech, in the thirteenth.

III. And laſt, CHRISTS part in all the reſt. 1 His appearing, and Speech likewiſe. Appearing, firſt, unknowne, in the fourteenth, and His ſpeech then, in the fifteenth.

After, His appearing, and ſpeech againe, being knowne, in the ſixteenth and ſeventeenth. 1 Forbidding her, mane & tange, to ſtay and to touch; 2 and bidding her, Vade & dic, to get her quickly to His brethren, and tell them, His Reſurrection was paſt, for (aſcendo) He was taking thought for His Aſcenſion, and preparing for that. Thus lieth the order, and the parts.

The uſe will be, that we, in our ſeeking, carry our ſelves as ſhe did: and ſo may we have the happineſſe, that ſhe had, to finde CHRIST, as He is now to be found in the vertue of His Reſurrection.

Of

VER. XI.

But Mary ſtood by the Sepulcher, weeping: and as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped, and looked into the Sepulcher.

OF the favours vouchſafed this ſame felix peccatrix (as the Fathers terme her) this day, [1] To ſee but CHRISTS Angels, [2] To ſee CHRIST at all, [3] To ſee him firſt of all, [4] But more, than all theſe, to be imployed by him in ſo heavenly an errand; reaſon we can render none, that helped her to theſe, but that, which in a place Chriſt Himſelfe renders, Quia dilexit multùm, becauſe ſhe loved much. Luc. 7. 47.

She loved much: we cannot ſay, She believed much. For, by her ſuſtulerunt thrice repeated (the ſecond, thirteenth, fifteenth verſes) it ſeemes, ſhe believed no more, than juſt as much as the High Prieſts would have had the world believe, that he was taken away by night.

Defectus fidei non eſt negandus, affectus amoris non eſt vituperandus: It is Origen. We cannot commend her faith; her love, we cannot but commend; and ſo do: Commend it in her, commend it to you. Much it was, and much good proof gave ſhe of it. Before, to Him living: now, to Him dead. To Him dead, there are diverſe: [1] She was laſt at His croſſe, and firſt at His grave: [2] Staied longeſt there, was ſooneſt here: [3] Could not reſt, till ſhe were up to ſeeke Him: [4] Sought Him, while it was yet dark, before ſhe had light to ſeek Him by. Mat. 28. 1.

But, to take her as we finde her in the Text, and to looke no whither elſe. There are, in the Text, no leſſe than ten, all arguments of her great love; all, as it were a commentarie upon Dilexit multùm. And even in this firſt verſe, there are five of them.

The firſt in theſe words; ſtabat juxta monumentum, that ſhe ſtood by the grave. 1
A place, where faint love loves not to ſtand. Bring Him to the grave, and lay Him in the grave, and there leave Him: but come no more at it, nor ſtand long by it. Stand by Him, while He is alive, ſo did many ſtand, and goe, and ſit by Him. But, ſtans juxta monumentum, ſtand by Him dead; Mary Magdalen, ſhe did it, and ſhe only did it, and none but ſhe. Amor ſtans juxta monumentum.

The next in theſe, Maria autem ſtabat. But Mary ſtood. In the autem, the but (that helpes us to another.) But Mary ſtood (that is as much to ſay, as) others did not, But, ſhe did. Peter and Iohn were there but even now. Thither they came, but not finding Him, away they went. They went: But Mary went not, ſhee ſtood ſtill. Their going away commends her ſtaying behinde. To the grave ſhee came before them, from the grave ſhe went to tell them, to the grave ſhe returnes with them, at the grave ſhe ſtayes behind them. Fortior eam figebat affectus, ſaith Auguſtine, a ſtronger affection fixed her; ſo fixed her, that ſhe had not the power to remove thence. Go who would, ſhe would not, but ſtay ſtill. To ſtay, while others doe ſo, while company ſtayes, that is the worlds love: But Peter is gone, and Iohn too: all are gone, and we left alone; then to ſtay, is love, and conſtant Love. Amor manens, aliis recedentibus; Love, that when others ſhrink and give over, holds out ſtill. 2 Ver. 8.

The third in theſe, ſhe ſtood, and ſhe wept: and, not a teare or two; but ſhe wept a good (as we ſay;) that the Angels, that CHRIST Himſelfe pitie her, and both of them, the firſt thing they doe, they aske her, why ſhe wept ſo? Both of them begin with that queſtion. And, in this, is love. For, if, when CHRIST ſtood at Lazarus's graves ſide and wept, the Jewes ſaid, See how He loved him: may not we ſay the very ſame, 3 Ioh. 11. 36.

ſame, when Mary ſtood at CHRISTS grave and wept: See how ſhe loved Him? Whoſe preſence ſhe wiſhed for, His miſſe ſhe wept for; whom ſhe dearely loved, while ſhe had Him, ſhe bitterly bewailed, when ſhe loſt Him. Amor amarè flens, Love running down the cheekes.

4 The fourth in theſe, And as ſhe wept, ſhe ſtooped, and looked in, ever and anon. That is, ſhe did ſo weep, as ſhe did ſeeke withall. Weeping without ſeeking, is but to ſmall purpoſe. But her weeping hindred not her ſeeking; her ſorrow dulled not her dilligence. And, diligence is a character of love, comes from the ſame roote, dilectio and diligentia from diligo, both. Amor diligentiam diligens.

5 To ſeeke, is one thing. not to give over ſeeking, is another. For I aske, why ſhould ſhe now looke in? Peter and Iohn had looked there before; nay, had beene in the grave (they.) It makes no matter: ſhe will not truſt Peters eyes, nor Iohns neither. But,
Verſ 8. ſhe her ſelfe had before this, looked in (too.) No force, ſhe will not truſt her ſelfe, ſhe will ſuſpect her owne eyes, ſhe will rather thinke, ſhe looked not well before, than leave off her looking. It is not enough for love, to looke in once. Thus we uſe, this is our manner when we ſeeke a thing ſeriouſly; where we have ſought already, there to ſeeke againe, thinking we did it not well, but, if we now looke againe, better we ſhall ſurely finde it, then. Amor qnærens quæſivit: Love, that never thinkes, it hath looked enough. Theſe five.

And, by theſe five, we may take meaſure of our love, and of the true multum of it. Vt proſit nobis ejus ſtare, ejus plorare, & quærere (ſaith Origen) that her ſtanding, her weeping, and ſeeking, we may take ſome good by them.

I doubt, ours will fall ſhort. Stay by Him alive, that we can, juxta menſam · but juxta monumentum, who takes up His ſtanding there? And our love it is dry-eyed, it cannot weepe: it is ſtiffe-joynted, it cannot ſtoope to ſeeke. If it doe, and we hit not on Him at firſt, away we goe, with Peter and Iohn; we ſtay it not out with Mary Magdalen. A ſigne our love is little and light, and our ſeeking ſuitable, and ſo, it is without ſucceſſe. We finde not CHRIST, no mervaile: but ſeek Him, as ſhe ſought Him, and we ſhall ſpeed, as ſhe ſped.

And ſaw two Angels, in white, ſitting, the one at the head, the other at the feete where the Body of JESUS had lyen.

For what came of this? Thus ſtanding by it, and thus looking in, again and again, though ſhe ſaw not CHRIST at firſt, ſhe ſees His Angels. For ſo it pleaſed CHRIST to come by degrees: His Angels before Him. And, it is no vulgar honour, this, to ſee but an Angell: what would one of us give to ſee but the like ſight?

We are now at the Angels part. Their appearing, in this verſe. There are foure points in it: [1] Their place, [2] Their habit, [3] Their ſite, [4] and their order. [1] Place, in the grave, [2] Habit, in white, [3] ſite, they were ſitting, [4] and their order in ſitting, one at the head, the other at the feet.

1 The Place, In the grave ſhe ſaw them: and Angels in a grave, is a ſtrange ſight, a ſight never ſeene before; not till CHRISTS body had been there, never till this day; this the firſt newes of the Angels in that place. For, a grave is no place for Angels (one would thinke;) for wormes rather: Bleſſed Angels, not but in a bleſſed place.
Rev 14.13. But ſince CHRIST lay there, that place is bleſſed. There was a voice heard from Pſal 116.15. heaven, Bleſſed be the dead: Precious the death, Glorious the memorie now, of them that die in the Lord. And, even this, that the Angels diſdained not now to come thither, and to ſit there, is an auſpicium of a great change to enſue in the ſtate of that place. Quid glorioſius Angelo? quid vilius vermiculo? ſaith Auguſtine. Qui fuit vermiculorum locus, eſt & Angelorum. That which was the place for wormes, is become a place for Angels.

Their

Their Habit, In white. So were there diverſe of them, divers times, this day; ſeene, in white, all; in that colour. It ſeemes to be their Eaſter-day colour, for at this Feaſt, they all do their ſervice in it. Their Eaſter-day colour, for it is the colour of the Reſurrection. The ſtate whereof when CHRIST would repreſent upon the Mount, His raiment was all white, no Fuller in the earth could come neere it. And our colour it ſhall be, when riſing againe, we ſhall walke in white robes and follow the Lamb whitherſoever He goeth. 2 Revel. 7. 9.

Heaven mourned on Good-Friday; the Eclypſe made all then in blacke. Eaſter-day, it rejoyceth, Heaven and Angels, all in white. Salomon tels us, it is the colour of joy. And that is the ſtate of joy, and this the day of the firſt joyfull tydings of it, with joy ever celebrated, even in albis, eight dayes together, by them that found CHRIST. Eccleſ. 9. 8.

In white, and ſitting: As the colour, of joy; ſo, the ſituation, of reſt. So wee ſay, Sit downe, and reſt. And ſo, is the grave made by this mornings worke, a place of reſt. Reſt not from our labours only, ſo doe the beaſts reſt when they die: But as it is in the XVI. Pſalme (a Pſalme of the Reſurrection) a reſt in hope; hope, of riſing againe, the members in the vertue of their head, who this day is riſen. So, to enter into the reſt, which yet remaineth for the people of GOD, even the Sabbath eternall. 3 Pſal. 16. 9. Heb. 4. 9.

Sitting, and in this order ſitting, at the head, one; at the feet, another, where His bodie had lyen. 4

1 Which order may well referre to CHRIST Himſelfe, whoſe body was the true Arke indeed, In which it pleaſed the GOD-head to dwell bodily; and is therefore here betweene two Angels, as was the Arke (the type of it) betweene the two Cherubims. Col. 2. 9. Exod. 25. 19.

2 May alſo referre to Mary Magdalen. She had annointed His head, She had annointed His feet: at theſe two places, ſit the two Angels, as it were to ackno wledge ſo much for her ſake. Mat. 26. 7. Ioh. 11. 3.

3 In myſterie they referre it thus. Becauſe Caput Chriſti Deus, the God-head is the head of CHRIST, and His feete (which the Serpent did bruiſe) His manhood; that either of theſe hath his Angell. That to CHRIST man, no leſſe than to CHRIST God, the Angels doe now their ſervice. In principio erat verbum, His God-head; there, an Angell: Verbum caro factum, His man-hood; there, another. And let all the Angels of GOD worſhip Him in both. Even in His man-hood, at His cradle (the head of it) a queere of Angels; at His grave (the feet of it) Angels likewiſe. 1 Cor. 11. 3. Gen. 3. 15. Heb. 1. 6. Luc. 2. 13.

And laſtly, for our comfort (thus.) That, henceforth even ſuch ſhall our graves be, if we be ſo happie as to have our parts in the firſt Reſurrection, which is of the ſoule from ſin. We ſhall goe to our graves in white (in the comfort, and colour of hope) lie between two Angels, there: they guard our bodies dead, and preſent them alive againe at the Reſurrection. Revel. 20. 6.

1 Yet before we leave them, to learne ſomewhat of the Angels: ſpecially, of the Angell that ſate at the feet. That, betweene them there was no ſtriving for places. He that ſate at the feet, as well content with his place, as he that at the head. We, to be ſo, by their example. For, with us, both the Angels would have beene at the head, never an one at the feet: with us, none would be at the feet by his good will; Head-Angels all.

2 Againe, from them both. That, inaſmuch, as the head ever ſtands for the beginning, and the feet for the end, that we be carefull, that our beginnings only be not glorious (O an Angell at the head in any wiſe;) but that we look to the feet, there be another there, too. Ne turpiter atrum deſinat, that it end not in a black Angell, that began in a white. And this for the Angels appearing.

VER.

VER. XIII.

13. And they ſaid to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? Shee ſaid to them, They have taken away my LORD, and I know not where they have laid Him.

Their queſtion

Now to their ſpeech. It was not a dumb ſhew, this, a bare apparition, and ſo vaniſhed away. It was viſio & vox, a vocall viſion. Here is a dialogue, too: The Angels ſpeak to her.

And they aske her, Quid ploras? Why ſhe wept? what cauſe ſhe had to weepe. They meane, ſhe had none (as indeed, no more ſhe had.) All was in errour, piæ lachrymæ, ſed cæcæ, teares of griefe, but falſe griefe, imagining that to be that was not, Him to be dead, that was alive. She weepes, becauſe ſhe found the grave empty, which GOD forbid ſhe ſhould have found full, for then CHRIST muſt have beene dead ſtill, and ſo, no Reſurrection.

Gregory.

And this caſe of Mary Magdalen is our caſe oftentimes. In the errour of our conceit to weep, where we have no cauſe; to joy, where we have as little. Where we ſhould, where we have cauſe to joy, we weep: and, where to weep, we joy. Our ploras hath never a quid. Falſe joyes, and falſe ſorrowes, falſe hopes, and falſe feares this life of ours is full of, GOD help us.

Now becauſe ſhe erred, they ask her the cauſe, that ſhe alledging it, they may take it away, and ſhew it to be no cauſe. As the elench, à non cauſâ, pro cauſâ makes foule rule among us, beguiles us, all our life long.

Her anſwer.

Will you heare her anſwer to, Why weepe you? Why? ſuſtulerunt, that was the cauſe, Her Lord was gone, was taken away.

1 And a good cauſe it had beene, if it had beene true. Any have cauſe to grieve, that have loſt, loſt a good Lord, ſo good and gracious a Lord, as He had beene to her.

2 But that is not all: a worſe matter, a greater grief than that. When one dieth, we reckon him taken away, that is one kind of taking away. But His dead body is left; ſo, all is not taken from us; That was not her caſe. For, in ſaying (her Lord) ſhe meanes not, Her Lord alive, that is not it: ſhe meanes not, they had ſlain Him, they had taken away His life (ſhe had wept her fill for that, already.) But, her Lord, that is, His dead body. For, though His life was gone, yet His body was left. And, that was all, ſhe now had left of Him (that, ſhe cals Her Lord) and, that, they had taken away from her, too. A poore one it was, yet ſome comfort it was to her, to have even that left her, to viſite, to annoint, to doe other offices of love, even to that. Etiam viſo cadavere recaleſcit amor, at the ſight, even of that, will love revive, it will fetch life of love againe. But now, here is her caſe; that, is gone, and all, and nothing, but an empty grave, now left to ſtand by. That S. Auguſtine ſaith well, ſublatus de monumento, grieved her more, than occiſus in ligno, for, then ſomething yet was left; now, nothing at all. Right ſuſtulerunt, taken away quite and cleane.

Ambroſ.

3 And thirdly, her neſcio ubi. For though He be taken away, it is ſome comfort yet, if we know where to fetch Him againe. But here He is gone without all hope of recovery, or getting againe. For they (but ſhe knew not who) had carried Him (ſhee knew not whither) laid Him (ſhe knew not where) there to doe to Him (ſhe knew not what.) So that now ſhe knew not, whither to go, to finde any comfort. It was neſcio ubi, with her right. Put all theſe together, His life taken away, His body taken away, and no man knowes whither; and do they ask, why ſhe wept? or, can any blame her for it?

The truth is, none had taken away her Lord, for all this: for, all this while Her Lord was well, was, as ſhe would have had Him, alive and ſafe: He went away of him-

Himſelfe, none carried Him thence. What of that? Non credens ſuſcitatum, credidit ſublatum, for want of beliefe He was riſen, ſhe believed, He was carried away. She erred in ſo believing, there was errour in her love, but there was love in her errour too.

And give me leave to lay out three more arguments of her love, out of this verſe (to make up eight, towards the making up of her multùm.) Yet, her love.

The very title ſhe gives Him, of Dominum meum, is one, My LORD, that ſhe gives Him that terme. For, it ſhewes, her love and reſpect was no whit abated, by the ſcandall of His death. It was a moſt opprobrious, ignominious, ſhamefull death He ſuffered; ſuch, as in the eyes of the world, many would have been aſhamed to own Him (or ſay of Him, Meum:) but, any would have beene afraid to honour Him with that title, to ſtile Him, Dominum. She was neither. Meum, for hers; Dominum meum, for her LORD ſhe acknowledgeth Him, is neither aſhamed nor afraid to continue that title ſtill. Amor ſcandalo non ſcandalizatus. 1

Another (which I take to be far beyond this) That, ſhe having looked into the grave a little before, and ſeene never an Angell there; and of a ſudden looking in now, and ſeeing two, (a ſight able to have amazed any; any, but her) It moves not her at all. The ſuddenneſſe, the ſtrangeneſſe, the glorioufneſſe of the ſight, yea, even of Angels, move her not at all. She ſeemes to have no ſenſe of it; and ſo to be in a kinde of extaſie all the while. Domine, propter te eſt extaſe, ſaith Bernard. Amor extaſin patiens. 2

And thirdly, as that ſtrange ſight affected her not a whit: ſo neither did their comfortable ſpeech worke with her at all. Comfortable, I call it, for they that aske the cauſe, why, (why weep you?) ſhew, they would remove it, if it lay in them. Neither of theſe did, or could move her, or make her once leave her weeping: ſhe wept on, ſtill (CHRIST will aske her, quid ploras? by and by againe.) If ſhe find an Angell, if ſhe find not her Lord, it will not ſerve. She had rather finde His dead body; than them in all their glorie. No man in earth, no Angell in heaven can comfort her, none but He that is taken away, CHRIST, and none but CHRIST; and till ſhe finde Him againe, her ſoule refuſeth all manner comfort: yea, even from Heaven, even from the Angels themſelves. Theſe three. Amor ſuper amiſſum renuens conſolari. 3

Thus ſhe, in her love, for her ſuppoſed loſſe, or taking away. And what ſhall become of us, in ours then? That loſe Him [1] not once, but oft; [2] And not in ſuppoſe, as ſhe did, but in very deed; [3] And that, by ſinne (the worſt loſſe of all;) [4] And that, not by any others taking away, but by our owne act, and wilfull default; and are not grieved, nay, not moved a whit, breake none of our wonted ſports for it, as if we reckoned Him, as good loſt, as found. Yea, when CHRIST and the HOLY GHOST, and the favour of GOD, and all is gone, how ſoone, how eaſily are we comforted againe for all this? that, none ſhall need to ſay, quid ploras? to us, rather, quid non ploras? aske us, why we weepe not, having ſo good a cauſe to doe it, as we then have? This for the Angels part.

VER. XIV.

When ſhe had thus ſaid, ſhe turned her ſelfe about, and ſaw JESUS ſtanding, and knew not that it was JESUS.

Alwayes the Angels, (we ſee) touched the right ſtring, and ſhe tels them the wrong cauſe, but yet the right, if it had beene right.

Now, to this anſwer of hers, they would have replyed, and taken away her errour touching her LORDS taking away; that if ſhe knew all, ſhe would have left her ſeeking, and ſet her downe by them: and left her weeping; and beene in white as well as they.

But, here is a Superſedeas to them: The LORD Himſelfe comes in place. (Now come we from the ſeeking Him dead, to the finding Him alive.) For, when He ſaw, no Angels, no ſight, no ſpeech of theirs would ſerve, none but her LORD could give her any comfort, Her LORD comes. Chriſtus adeſt.

Adeſt Chriſtus, nec ab eis unquam abeſt, à quibus quæritur, ſaith Saint Auguſtine, CHRIST is found, found by her; And this caſe of hers, ſhall be the caſe of all that ſeriouſly ſeeke Him. This woman here, for one, ſhe ſought Him (we ſee.) They that went to Emmaus to day; they but talked of Him ſadly, and they both found Him. Why, He is found of them that ſeeke Him not. Eſay 65.1. but of them that ſeeke Him, never but found. For, Thou Lord never faileſt them that ſeeke thee, Pſalme, 9. 10. GOD *is not unrighteous, to forget the worke and labour of their love that ſeeke Him. Heb.*6.10.

So, find Him they ſhall, but happily not all ſo fully at firſt, no more than ſhe did. For, firſt (to trie her yet a little further) He comes unknown, ſtands by her, and ſhee little thought it had beene He.

Act.17.27. Iob 9.11. Luk.19.42. A caſe that likewiſe fals out full oft. Doubtleſſe He is not far from every one of us, ſaith the Apoſtle to the Athenians. But He is nearer us many times than we thinke; even hard by us, and we not aware of it, ſaith Iob. And, O ſi cognoviſſes & tu, O if we did know (and it ſtandeth us in hand to pray that we may know) when He is ſo, for, that is the time of our viſitation. Luk.19.44.

S. Iohn ſaith here, the Angels were ſitting: S. Luke ſaith, they ſtood, *Luk.*24.4. They are thus reconciled. That CHRIST comming in preſence, the Angels which before were ſitting, ſtood up. Their ſtanding up, made Mary Magdalen turne her to ſee who it was they roſe to. And ſo CHRIST ſhe ſaw, but knew Him not.

Not only not knew Him, but miſ-knew Him, took Him for the Gardiner. Teares will dimme the ſight, and it was yet ſcarce day, and ſhe, ſeeing one, and not knowing what any one ſhould make in the ground ſo early, but he that dreſſed it, ſhe might well miſtake. But it was more than ſo: Her eyes were not holden only, that ſhe did not know Him, but over and beſide, He did appeare ἐτέρᾳ μορφῇ, in ſome ſuch ſhape as might reſemble the Gardiner, whom ſhe tooke Him for. Luk.24.16. Mark 16.12.

Proper enough it was, it fitted well the time and place (this perſon.) The time, It was the Spring: the place, It was a Garden (that place is moſt in requeſt at that time) for that place and time, a Gardiner doth well.

Of which her ſo taking Him, S. Gregory ſaith well, Profectò errando non erravit. She did not miſtake in taking Him for a Gardiner: though ſhe might ſeeme to erre in ſome ſenſe, yet in ſome other ſhe was in the right. For, in a ſenſe, and a good ſenſe, CHRIST may well be ſaid to be a Gardiner, and indeed is one. For, our rule is, CHRIST, as He appeares, ſo He is, ever: No falſe ſemblant in Him.

1. A Gardiner He is then. The firſt, the faireſt Garden that ever was (Paradiſe) He was the Gardiner, it was of His planting. So, a Gardiner.

2. And ever ſince it is He that (as GOD) makes all our gardens greene, ſends us yearely the Spring, and all the herbs and flowers we then gather; and neither Paul with his planting, nor Apollo with his watering, could do any good without Him. So a Gardiner in that ſenſe.

Ierem.31.11. 3. But not in that alone; but He it is that gardens our ſoules too, and makes them, as the Prophet ſaith, Like a well-watered Garden, weeds out of them whatſoever is noyſome or unſavoury, ſowes and plants them with true rootes and ſeeds of righteouſneſſe, waters them with the dew of His grace, and makes them bring forth fruit to eternall life.

But it is none of all theſe, but beſides all theſe, nay over and above, all theſe, this day (if ever) moſt properly He was a Gardiner. Was one, and ſo after a more peculiar manner, might take this likeneſſe on Him. CHRIST riſing was indeed a Gardiner, and that a ſtrange one, who made ſuch an herbe grow out of the ground this day, as the like was never ſeene before, a dead body, to ſhoot forth alive out of the grave.

I ask

I aske, was He ſo this day alone? No, but this profeſſion of His, this day begun, He will follow to the end. For, He it is, that by the vertue of this mornings act, ſhall garden our bodies, too: turne all our graves into garden-plots: Yea, ſhall one day turne land and ſea, and all into a great garden, and ſo husband them, as they ſhall in due time bring forth live bodies, even all our bodies alive againe.

Long before did Eſay ſee this and ſing of it, in his ſong, Eſay 26. 19. reſembling the Reſurrection to a Spring-garden. Awake and ſing (ſaith he) ye that dwell for a time are as it were ſowen in the duſt, for His dew ſhall be as the dew of Herbs, and the earth ſhall ſhoot forth her dead. So then: He appeared no other, than He was: A Gardiner He was not in ſhew alone, but opere & veritate, and ſo came in His owne likeneſſe. This for Chriſts appearing. Now to His ſpeech, (but, as unknown ſtill.)

VER. XV.

JESUS ſaith to her, Woman, why weepeſt thou? whom ſeekeſt thou? She (ſuppoſing He had beene the Gardiner) ſaid to Him; Sir, if thou have borne Him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid Him, and I will take Him thence.

CHRISTS queſtion unknowne.

Still ſhe weepes: So He begins with quid ploras? askes the ſame queſtion the Angels had before; only quickens it a little with Quem quæris, Whom ſeeke you? So quem quæris, quærit à te quem quæris, whom ſhe ſought, He askes her whom ſhe ſought? Si quæris, cur non cognoſcis? ſi cognoſcis, cur quæris? ſaith Auguſtine. If ſhe ſeeke Him, why knowes ſhe Him not? If ſhe know Him, why ſeekes ſhe Him ſtill? A common thing with us (this alſo.) To ſeeke a thing, and when we have found it, not to know, we have ſo; but even CHRISTUM à CHRISTO quærere, to aske CHRIST, for CHRIST. Which however it fall in other matters, in this ſeeking of CHRIST, it is ſafe. Even when we ſeeke CHRIST, to pray to Chriſt, to helpe us to find CHRIST; we ſhall doe it full evill without Him:

Auguſtine.

This quid ploras? it comes now twiſe. The Angels asked it, we ſtood not on it then. Now, ſeeing CHRIST askes it againe, the ſecond time, we will thinke there is ſomething in it, and ſtay a little at it. The rather, for that it is the very opening of His mouth, the very firſt words that ever came from Him, that He ſpake firſt of all, after His riſing againe from death. There is ſure ſome more than ordinary matter in this quid ploras? if it be, but even for that.

Thus ſay the Fathers; 1 That Mary Magdalen ſtanding by the graves ſide, and there weeping, is thus brought in, to repreſent unto us, the ſtate of all mankind before this day, the day of CHRISTS riſing againe, Weeping over the dead, as doe the Heathen that have no hope: comes CHRIST with His quid ploras, Why doe you weepe? As much to ſay, as ne ploras, Weepe not, why ſhould you weepe? There is no cauſe of weeping now. Henceforth none ſhall need to ſtand by the grave to weep there any more. A queſtion very proper for Eaſter day, for the day of the Reſurrection. For, if there be a riſing againe, quid ploras? is right, why ſhould ſhe, why ſhould any weep then?

1 Theſ. 4. 13.

So that this quid ploras of CHRISTS, wipes away teares from all eyes, and as we ſing in the thirtieth Pſalme (whoſe title is, the Pſalme of the Reſurrection) puts off our ſack-cloth, that is our mourning weeds, girds us with gladneſſe, puts us all in white with the Angels.

Ploras then, leave that for Good-friday, for His Paſſion: Weep then, and ſpare not. But, quid ploras? for Eaſter-day, is in kinde (the Feaſt of the Reſurrection) why ſhould there be any weeping upon it? Is not CHRIST riſen? ſhall not He raiſe us with Him? Is He not a Gardiner, to make our bodies ſowne, to grow againe? Ploras, leave that to the Heathen, that are without all hope; but to the Chriſtian man, quid ploras? why ſhould he weepe? he hath hopes; the Head is already riſen, the members ſhall in their due time follow Him.

I obſerve, that foure times this day, at foure ſeverall appearings, 1 at the firſt (at this here) He asked her, quid ploras? Why ſhe wept? 2 Of them that went to Emmaus, quid triſtes eſtis? Why are ye ſad? 3 Within a verſe following (the nineteenth) He ſaith to the Eleven, Pax vobis, Peace be to them: 4 And to the women that met Him on the way, χαίρετε, that is Rejoyce, be glad. So, no weeping, no being ſad: now nothing this day, but peace and joy: they doe properly belong to this Feaſt.

Mat. 28. 9.

And, this I note the more willingly, now, this yeare; becauſe the laſt Eaſter we could not ſo well have noted it. Some wept then; all were ſad, little joy there was, and there was a quid, a good cauſe for it. But bleſſed be GOD that hath now ſent us a more kindly Eaſter, of this; by taking away the cauſe of our ſorrow then, that wee may preach of Quid ploras? and be farre from it. So much for quid ploras? Chriſts queſtion. Now to her anſwer.

Her anſwer.

She is ſtill where ſhe was; at ſuſtulerunt before, at ſuſtuliſti, now: ſi tu ſuſtuliſti: we ſhall never get that word from her.

But, to CHRIST ſhe ſeemes ſomewhat more harſh, than to the Angels. To them ſhe complaines of others, They have taken. CHRIST ſhe ſeemes to charge, at leaſt to ſuſpect of the fact, as if He looked like one that had beene a breaker up of graves, a carryer away of Corſes out of their place of reſt. Her (if) implies as much. But pardon love: as it feares where it needs not, ſo it ſuſpects oft, where it hath no cauſe. He, or any that comes in our way, hath done it, hath taken Him away, when love is at a loſſe. But Bernard ſpeakes to CHRIST for her; Domine, amor quem habebat in Te, & dolor quem habebat de Te, excuſet eam apud Te, ſi fortè erravit circa Te: That the love ſhe bare to Him, the ſorrow ſhe had for Him, may excuſe her with Him, if ſhe were in any errour concerning Him, in her ſaying, Si tu Suſtuliſti.

Origen.

And yet, ſee how GOD ſhall direct the tongue! In thus charging Him, Prophetat & neſcit, ſhe ſayes truer than ſhe was aware. For indeed, if any tooke Him away, it was He did it. So, ſhe was not much amiſſe. Her ſi tu, was true, though not in her ſenſe. For, quod de ipſo factum eſt, ipſe fecit. All that was done to Him, He did it Himſelfe. His taking away, virtus fuit, non facinus, was by His owne power, not by the act of any other: Et gloria non injuria; No other mans injurie it was, but His owne glory, that ſhe found Him not there. This was true, but this was no part of her meaning.

Chryſologus.

I cannot here paſſe over two more Characters of her love, that ſo you may have the full ten I promiſed.

1 One, in ſi tu ſuſtuliſti Eum, in her Eum, in her [Him.] Him? Which Him? Her affections ſeeme ſo to tranſport her, as ſhe ſayes no man knows what. To one a meere ſtranger to her, and ſhe to Him, ſhe talks of one thriſe under the term of Him, If thou haſt taken Him away, tell me where thou haſt laid Him, and I will fetch Him; Him, Him, and Him, and never names Him, or tels who He is. This is Solœciſmus amoris, an irregular ſpeech, but loves owne dialect. Him, is enough with love who knowes not who that is? It ſuppoſes every body, all the world bound to take notice of Him whom we looke for, only by ſaying, Him; though we never tell His name, nor ſay a word more, Amor quem ipſe cogitat, neminem putans ignorare.

2 The other is in her ego tollam; If He would tell her where He had laid Him, ſhe would goe fetch Him (that ſhe would.) Alas poore woman ſhe was not able to lift Him. There are more than one, or two either, allowed to the carrying of a corps.

Iohn 9. 39. As for His, it had more than an hundred pound weight of myrrhe and other odours upon it, beſide the poiſe of a dead bodie. She could not doe it. Well, yet ſhe would doe it, though. O mulier, non mulier (ſaith Origen) for ego tollam ſeemes rather the ſpeech of a porter, or of ſome luſty-ſtrong fellow at leaſt, than of a ſilly weak woman. But love makes women more than women, at leaſt it makes them have τὸν ὑπὲρ ἰσχὺν the courage above the ſtrength, farre. Never meaſures her owne forces, no burden too heavie, no aſſay too hard for love, Et nihil erubeſcit niſi nomen difficultatis; and is not aſhamed of any thing, but that any thing ſhould be too hard or too heavie for it. Affectus ſine menſurâ virium propriarum. Both theſe argue dilexit multùm. And ſo now, you have the full number of ten.

VER.

VER. XVI.

16. JESUS ſaith to her, Mary: She turned her ſelfe, and ſaid to Him, Rabboni; that is to ſay, Maſter.

Now magnes amoris amor. Nothing ſo allures, ſo drawes love to it, as doth love it ſelfe. In CHRIST ſpecially, and in ſuch, in whom the ſame minde is. For, when her Lord ſaw, there was no taking away His taking away from her, all was in vaine, neither men, nor Angels, nor Himſelfe (ſo long as He kept Himſelfe Gardiner) could get any thing of her, but her LORD was gone, he was taken away; and that for the want of JESUS, nothing but JESUS could yeeld her any comfort: He is no longer able to containe, but even diſcloſes Himſelfe; and diſcloſes Himſelfe by His voice. CHRISTS ſecond ſpeech.

For, it ſhould ſeeme, before, with His ſhape, He had changed that alſo. But now, He ſpeaks to her in His knowne voice, in the wonted accent of it, does but name her name, Mary, no more, and that was enough. That was as much to ſay, Recognoſce à quo recognoſceris, ſhe would at leaſt take notice of Him, that ſhewed He was no ſtranger, by calling her by her name. For, whom we call by their names, we take particular notice of. So GOD ſayes to Moſes, Te autem cognovi de nomine, Thou, haſt found grace in ‹My ſight, and I know thee by thy name. As GOD, ‹Moſes; So CHRIST ‹Mary Magdalen. Auguſtine. Exod. 33. 17.

And this indeed is the right way to know CHRIST; to be knowne of Him firſt. Gal. 4. 9. the Apoſtle ſaith, Now we have known GOD (and then correcteth himſelfe) or rather have beene known of GOD. For, till He know us, we ſhall never know Him aright.

And now, loe, CHRIST is found; found alive that was ſought dead. A cloud may be ſo thick, we ſhall not ſee the Sun thorow it. The Sun muſt ſcatter that cloud, and then we may. Here is an example of it. It is ſtrange, a thicke cloud of heavineſſe had ſo covered her, as, ſee Him ſhe could not, thorow it: this owne word, theſe two ſyllables [Mary] from His mouth, ſcatters, it, all. No ſooner had His voice ſounded in her eares, but it drives away all the miſt, dries up her teares, lightens her eyes, that ſhe knew Him ſtraight, and anſwers Him with her wonted ſalutation, Rabboni. If it had lien in her power to have raiſed Him from the dead, ſhe would not have failed, but done it (I dare ſay.) Now, it is done to her hands. Her anſwer.

And with this all is turned out and in. A new world, now. Away with ſuſtulerunt; His taking away, is taken away quite. For, if His taking away were her ſorrow; Contrariorum contraria conſequentia. Si de ſublato ploravit, de ſuſcitato exultavit, wee may be ſure: If ſad for His death, for His taking away; then glad for His riſing, for His reſtoring againe. Surely, if ſhe would have beene glad but to have found but His dead body; now ſhe findes it, and Him, alive, what was her joy; how great may we thinke? ſo that by this ſhe ſaw, Quid ploras was not asked her for nought, that it was no impertinent queſtion, as it fell out. Well now, He that was thought loſt, is found againe: and found, not, as He was ſought for, not a dead body, but a living ſoule; nay, a quickning ſpirit, then. And that might Mary Magdalen well ſay. Hee ſhewed it, for He quickned her and her ſpirits, that were as good as dead. You thought you ſhould have come to CHRISTS Reſurrection to day, and ſo you doe. But not to His alone, but even to Marie Magdalens reſurrection, too. For, in very deed, a kinde of reſurrection it was, was wrought in her; revived, as it were, and raiſed from a dead and drooping, to a lively and cheerefull eſtate. The Gardiner had done His part, made her all green on the ſudden. Auguſtine. 2 Cor. 15. 45.

And all this, by a word of His mouth. Such power is there in every word of His; ſo eaſily are they called, whom CHRIST will but ſpeake to.

But, by this we ſee, when He would be made knowne to her after His riſing, He did chooſe to be made knowne by the eare rather than by the eye. By hearing rather than than by appearing. Opens her eares firſt, and her eyes after. Her eyes were holden, till Luk. 24.16. her eares were opened; comes aures autem aperuiſti mihi, and that opens them.

Pſal.40.6. With the Philoſophers, hearing is the ſenſe of wiſdome. With us, in Divinitie, it is the ſenſe of faith. So, moſt meet. CHRIST is the Word, hearing then (that ſenſe) is CHRISTS ſenſe; voce quàm viſu, more proper to the Word. So, ſicut audivimus goes Pſal.48.8. before, and then, ſic vidimus comes after. In matters of faith the eare goes firſt, ever, and is of more uſe, and to be truſted before the eye. For, in many caſes faith holdeth, where ſight faileth.

Pſal.95.7. This then is a good way to come to the knowledge of CHRIST, by Hodiè ſi vocem, to heare His voice. Howbeit, it is not the only way. There is another way to take notice of him by, beſides, and we to take notice of it. On this very day we have them both.

For twice this day came CHRIST; unknown firſt, and then knowne, after. To Mary Magdalen, here; and to them at Emmaus. Luc. Chapter 24. To Mary Magdalen unknown, in the ſhape of a Gardiner. To thoſe that went to Emmaus unknowne, in the likenes of a Traveller by the way-ſide. Come to be knowne to her by His voice, by the word of His mouth. Not ſo, to them. For many words He ſpake to them, and Luk.24.32. 35. they felt them warme at their hearts, but, knew Him not for all that. But He was known to them in the breaking of the bread. Her eyes opened by ſpeaking a word: their eyes opened by the breaking of bread. There is the one and the other way, and ſo now you have both. And now you have them, I pray you make uſe of them. (I ſee, I ſhall not be able to go further than this verſe.)

It were a folly to fall to compariſons, committere inter ſe, to ſet them at oddes together, theſe two wayes: as the fond faſhion now adayes is, whether is better, Prayer or Preaching the Word, or the Sacraments. What needs this? Seeing we have both, both are ready for us; the one now, the other by and by. We may end this queſtion, ſoone. And this is the beſt and ſureſt way to end it, to eſteeme of them both, to thanke Him for both, to make uſe of both, having now done with one, to make triall of the other. It may be (who knowes) if the one will not worke, the other may. And if by the one or by the other, by either, if it be wrought, what harme have we? In caſe it be not; yet have we offered to GOD our ſervice in both, and committed the ſucceſſe of both to Him. He will ſee they ſhall have ſucceſſe, and in His good time
Phil.3.10. (as ſhall be expedient for us) vouchſafe every one of us, as He did Mary Magdalen in the Text, to know Him and the vertue of His Reſurrection; and make us partakers of both, by both the meanes before remembred, by His bleſſed Word, by His holy Myſteries; the meanes to raiſe our ſoules here, the pledges of the raiſing up of our bodies hereafter. Of both which He make us partakers, who is the Author of both, JESUS CHRIST the Righteous, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the I. of Aprill, A.D. MDCXXI. being EASTER-DAY.

JOHN XX. VER. XVII.

Dicit ei JESUS, Noli me tangere.

JESUS ſaith unto her, Touch me not.

MARY Magdalen, becauſe ſhe loved much, and gave divers good proofes of it, had this morning divers favours vouchſafed her: To ſee a viſion of Angels: To ſee CHRIST Himſelfe: To ſee Him before any other, firſt of all: He ſpake to her, Mary; ſhe ſpake to Him, Rabboni: Hitherto all was well. Now, here, after all this love, after all theſe favours, even in the neck of them (as it were) comes an unkind word or two, a Noli me tangere, and marres all; turnes all out and in. Make the beſt of it, a repulſe it is: but a cold ſalutation for an Eaſter-day morning. Verſ. 12. Verſ. 14. Verſ. 16.

A little before He asked, Why ſhe wept. This is enough to ſet her on weeping afreſh. For if ſhe wept for ſuſtulerunt Dominum, that others had taken away her LORD. Much more, now, when her LORD takes away Himſelf from her, that ſhe may not ſo much as touch Him. Verſ. 15.

We obſerved, that (this morning) CHRIST came in two ſhapes; and at either of them ſpake a ſpeech. At firſt, he came unknowne, taken for a Gardiner: the latter He ſpake in His owne voyce, and became knowne to her. I know not how; but, unknowne, CHRIST proves better to her, than when He came to be knowne: better for her, He had kept Himſelfe unknowne ſtill. For, then unknowne, He asked her kindly, Why ſhe wept? as much to ſay as, weep not, Noli te angere, noli me plangere: there is ſome comfort in that. But knowne, He growes ſomewhat ſtrang on the ſudden, ſudden, and asks her, what ſhe meanes to come ſo neare Him, or offer to touch Him; which muſt needs be much to her diſcomfort, to be forbidden, once to come neare or touch her SAVIOUR: and to be forbidden by His owne mouth.

But there is a good uſe of noli me plangere, and noli me tangere, both. One, we have touched already: of the other, now. One would little thinke it, but they ſort well: Quid ploras? and Noli me tangere. Quid ploras? To rejoyce at His riſing: Noli Pſal. 2. 11. me tangere, to do it with reverence. They amount to exultate in tremore.

The Diviſion. The Verſe of it ſelfe fals into two parts. We may divide it (as the Iewes doe the Law) into Doe not, and Doe: ſomewhat forbidden there is, and ſomewhat bidden. Forbidden, doe not, not touch me: Bidden, but doe, Goe your wayes and tell. The forbidding part ſtands of two points: [1] a Reſtraint; and [2] a Reaſon. 1. The
I Reſtraint in theſe: Noli me tangere, &c. 2. The Reaſon in theſe: Nondum enim, &c.
II. For I am not yet aſcended, &c.

The Bidding part, of three, 1. A Miſſion or Commiſſion, to goe doe a meſſage, Vade & dic. 2. The parties to whom: to my Brethren, that is, to His Diſciples. 3. The Meſſage it ſelfe; I aſcend to my Father, &c. And this latter is as it were an amends for the former: That the Text is like the time of the yeare: the morning ſomewhat freſh, but a faire day after: Noli me tangere, the Repulſe is the ſharpe morning: Vade & dic, the welcome Meſſage, the faire day (we ſpake of) that makes all well againe.

Either of theſe will ſerve for a Sermon, the former Noli me tangere, &c. it is ſo full of difficulties: but withall, of good and needfull caution. The latter of the Meſſage, it is ſo fraught with high Myſteries, and beſide, with much heavenly comfort. They call it Mary Magdalens Goſpell: (for, glad tidings it containes; and what is the Goſpell elſe?) The firſt Goſpell or glad tidings after CHRIST's Reſurrection. The very Goſpell of the Goſpell it ſelfe, and a Compendium of all the foure. Of which (if GOD will) at ſome other time. Now, I will trouble you no further, but with Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to the Father.

I. The Reſtraint. Noli me tangere

NO ſooner had CHRIST's voice ſounded in her eares, but ſhe knew ſtraight Rabboni, it was He; and withall (as it may be gathered by this Nolo me, &c.) ſhe did that which amounted to a Volo Te tangere: that is, ſhe made toward Him, ſtretched forth her hand, and offred, would have touched Him, but for this Touch me not. Touch not? why not? What harme had there beene, if He had ſuffered her to touch Him? The ſpeech is ſtrange to be ſpoken either by Him, or to her: the reaſon, the For, yet more ſtrange: Many difficulties in both, GOD ſend us well thorow them. There be but three words, [1] Noli, [2] me, and [3] tangere; touch, at which of theſe three you will, tangere, the thing; noli, and me, the two parties: Me, Him, CHRIST; Noli, her, Mary Magdalen: you will finde ſomewhat ſtrange this ſpeech of His.

1 Tangere, the thing forbidden. Matth. 9. 21.

Tangere, the thing. Not touch? Why, it is nothing, to touch; and becauſe it is nothing, might have been yeelded to. And yet to touch CHRIST, is not nothing. Many deſired, yea, ſtrove, to touch Him: there went vertue from Him, even while He was mortall: But now He is immortall, by all likelihood, much more. That was not her caſe; to draw ought from Him: it was for pure love, and nothing elſe, ſhe deſired it. To love, it is not enough, to heare, or ſee; it is carried farther, to touch and take hold: It is affectus unionis; and the neareſt union is per contactum.

2 The parties.

Secondly, the Parties. Me: not Me, not CHRIST. Why not Him? CHRIST was not wont to be ſo dainty of it. Diverſe times, and in diverſe places, He ſuffred the rude rude multitude to throng and to thruſt Him. What ſpeak we of that? when, not three dayes ſince, He ſuffered other manner of touches and twitches both. Then, Noli me tangere would have come in good time; would have done well on Good-friday. Why ſuffered He them then? why ſuffered He not her, now? She (I dare ſay for her) would have done Him no hurt, ſhe. Noli, is to her: Not ſhe: Not Mary Magdalen. She had touched Him before now; touched His head, touched His feet; anoynted them both: what was done, ſhe might not, now? She hath even now, this morning, brought odors in her hand to embalme Him: and with theſe, and with no other hands, doth ſhe offer to touch Him at this time: ſhe might have beene borne with. It was early: as early as it was, ſhe had this morning given many good proofes of her love. [1] That ſhe was ſo early up; [2] came to the Grave firſt: [3] ſtayed there laſt: [4] had been at ſuch coſt: [5] had taken ſuch paines: [6] had wept ſo many teares: [7] would not be comforted, no not by Angels, till ſhe had found Him; And, now ſhe hath found Him, not to touch Him? All theſe might have pleaded for as much as this comes to. For all theſe, one poore touch had been but an eaſie recompence. Of all other, this prohibition lay not againſt her: of all times, not at this. The more we looke into it, the further off we finde it, to be ſpoken either by Him, or to her.

But if we goe further, and looke the Reaſon, we ſhall finde it yet more ſtrange: it will increaſe the doubt. Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended: What a reaſon is this? As who ſhould ſay: when He was aſcended, ſhe ſhould, then. But, then when He was aſcended, one would think, ſhe ſhould be further off, than now. Si ſtans in terra tam propè non tangitur, receptus in cœlum quomodo tangetur? If ſtanding on earth by Him, He is not to be touched; when He is taken up into heaven, no arme will then reach Him: paſt touching, then: that if not till then, never. The reaſon makes it yet further from reaſon. No remedy, but we muſt pray a conſultation (as they call it) upon this Prohibition.

II. The Reaſon.

It cannot be denied, but for Noli me, there is a time and place. It is worth the noting: the world began with a Noli me tangere; both the worlds. The old world: the firſt words (in a manner) GOD ſpake then, were a kinde of a Noli me tangere; Touch not the forbidden fruit. And as in the old, ſo here at the beginning this new, (for, with CHRIST's riſing, began the New creature) it is CHRIST's firſt ſpeech, we ſee. CHRIST riſing, it is His firſt precept: His firſt Law is negative: it is the firſt thing He forbiddeth us: the firſt, He thought good to warne us of. Of His firſt words, we will have ſpeciall care, I truſt. The rule is: Things that will hurt us, beſt not touch. Beſt, not touch? nay, ſound and good was Arſenius the Eremite his advice touching thoſe: Impera Evæ & cave Serpentem, & tutus eris: Tutior autem, ſi arborem non aſpexeris. Can you command Eve, can you ſo? and can you beware the Serpent? well: do ſo then, and you ſhall be ſafe: But (heare you) Tutior, you ſhall be yet more ſafe, if you ſee not, looke not upon, come not within the reach; nay, not within the ſight of the forbidden tree. But Chriſt is not the forbidden tree: the tree of life rather; to be touched and taſted, that we may live by Him. No place in Chriſt for a Noli me tangere.

Of thoſe that hurt us, ſome we have no ſenſe of at the firſt. Such are all things unlawfull and forbidden: which, though for the time they ſeem pleaſant, yet they have their ſtings in their taile: ſooner, or later, we ſhall finde, they will hurt us; any fruit of the forbidden tree.

Other things we feele hurt us, we forbeare eaſily. An angry inflammation there is, the name of it is a Noli me tangere; and not that onely, but any bile or ſore indures not the touching. What? had Chriſt any ſore place about Him, ſince His paſſion? No: For Saint Thomas put his finger, nay, his whole hand into the place of His wounds, and put him to no paine at all. No place in Chriſt for this Noli me tangere, neither.

Verſe 27.

I. Not on Chriſts part.

Not to hold you longer: Noli me tangere can riſe but one of theſe ways: Either out of of Noli; or [2] out of Me: Ex parte tacti, or Ex parte tangentis; His that was touched; or hers, that did touch him. [1] Touch me not, you will hurt me, I am ſore; Ex parte tacti: [2] or, Touch me not, I ſhall hurt you; I am hot or ſharpe; Ex parte tangentis: Fire, I ſhall ſcorch you: an edge-toole, I ſhall wound you: Pitch, I ſhall defile you: ſome contagious thing, I ſhall infect you. Every one of theſe cries, Noli me tangere. But neither of theſe hath place in CHRIST. CHRIST riſing, was not now in ſtate, to receive any hurt; and neither now, nor ever in caſe to do any; to prick or to burn the fingers of any that touch Him.

2 But on Mary Magdalens.

We reſolve then; it was not on CHRIST's part, this Touch me not. It ſhould then more properly have beene Nolo me tangi: But it is, Noli me tangere, and ſo on hers. No let in Him, but He might be touched: the let, in her; ſhe might not touch Him. That it was never CHRIST's meaning, after He was riſen, He would not be touched of any at all, it is evident. This very day, at even, appearing to the eleven, He not onely ſuffered, but invited them to touch Him; nay more, Palpate Me, which is, touch Me thorowly. This very Chapter, at the XXVII. verſe, He calls to Saint Thomas, Infer digitum, put in your finger: Nay, Affer manum, hand and all: which is to touch, and touch home (I am ſure.)

Luke 24. 39.

How then? would He have Men touch Him, and not Women? nor that, neither. This is His firſt appearing: at His ſecond, and next to this, certaine Women met Him on the way: He ſuffered them to touch Him, and take Him by the feet. Some vertuous woman it may be: But Mary Magdalen had been a notorious ſinner, and ſo unworthy of it. No, nor that: for that, of the women that ſo met Him, and ſo touched Him, ſhe was one. See Matth. 28. Mary Magdalen touch, and Mary Magdalen not touch? the difficulties grow ſtill. For I ask: if at the ſecond appearing, why not at the firſt? Why after, and not now? Why, there, touch and ſpare not; and here, Noli me tangere, not come thither.

Matth. 28. 9. Luke 7. 47.

Let me tell you what we have gained: Theſe three things. [1] The Prohibition is not reall: the touch, the thing is not forbidden: it is but perſonall. [2] Nay, not perſonall, neither abſolutely; not ſhe ſimply, but not ſhe, as now at this time. She might touch, (it ſeemes) for ſhe did, not long after. Mary Magdalen might: but not this Mary Magdalen. [3] And laſt, that it is not finall; there is life, there is hope in it. Not, never to touch; but not, Stando in his terminis, ſtanding in the termes ſhe doth. What termes are thoſe? And now (loe) we are come to the point, to that we ſearch for.

Three ſenſes I will give you, and they have great Authours, all three, Chryſoſtome, Gregory, Auguſtine. I will touch them all three; and you may take your choyce of them; or, if you pleaſe, take them all: for, they will ſtand well together.

To correct her want of due reverence: S. Chryſoſtomes ſenſes.

One is (it is Chryſoſtomes) That, all was not well; ſomewhat amiſſe; ſhe ſomething to blame in the manner of her offer, which was not all, as it ſhould. The moſt we can make ſhe failed in ſomewhat. Not, that ſhe did it in any immodeſt or undecent manner: GOD forbid: never think of that. But onely a little too forward, it may be: not with that due reſpect that was meet.

We ſee by that is paſt; how the world went. CHRIST ſaid, Mary: She anſwers Him with her wonted terme, with a Rabboni. And as ſhe ſaluted Him with her wonted terme, ſo after her wonted faſhion, ſhe made toward Him, to have touched Him: not in ſuch manner, as was fit to have been obſerved; nor with that regard, which His new glorified eſtate after His reſurrection, might ſeeme juſtly to require. It is in Me: not the ſame Me, He was. That that was enough to CHRIST, a few dayes agoe, was nothing neare enough, to day, for Him. He that three dayes ſince indured ſo much, the day is now come, He will be touched after another faſhion: Propter hoc exaltavit Eum DEUS, For, to this end GOD ſo highly exalted Him. I tell you plainely, I did not like her Rabboni: it was no EASTER-day-ſalutation, it would have been ſome better terme expreſſing more reverence. So, her offer would have been in ſome more reſpective manner; her touch no Eaſter-day touch; her tangere had a tang in it (as we ſay.) The touch-ſtone of our touching Chriſt, is, with all regard and reverence that may be: Bring hers to this, and her touch was not the right touch; and all, for want of expreſſing more regard; not, for want of toto, but tanto: not, of reverence at all; but of reverence enough.

Two cauſes they give of this faile. One, a defect in her judgment: The other, an exceſſe in her affection. Her amiſſe in the manner grew, out of her amiſſe in the minde; a miſconceipt, he had been but even Rabboni ſtill. As it ſhould ſeem, it ſeemeth to her, it was with him no otherwiſe, than with her brother Lazarus: that Chriſt had riſen idem qui prius, neither more nor leſſe, but juſt the ſame, he was before. To be ſaluted, approached, touched, as formerly he had been. Formerly, he might have been touched: She thought, he might have been even ſo ſtill. Whereas, with him, the caſe was quite altered: He riſen in a farre other condition than ſo. His corruptible had now put on incorruption; and his mortall immortality. He died in weakneſſe and diſhonour: Roſe againe in power and glory. And, as in another ſtate, ſo to another end: Not to ſtay upon earth, or converſe here any longer, but to aſcend up into heaven. There was no aſcendi in her minde. 1 Cor. 15. 53. 43.

His reaſon imports as much. You touch Me, not as if I were upon aſcending; but, as if to ſtay here ſtill. For, in ſaying, I am not yet; his meaning is, ere long, he ſhould. Nondum aſcendi; yet I am not: but aſcendo, preſently I am to do it: to leave this world and all here beneath, and to goe up and take poſſeſſion of My Kingdome of glory. To this new glorious condition of his, there belonged more than Rabboni; another manner approach than more ſolito. He being ſo very highly exalted, and farre otherwiſe than he was, her acceſſe to have beene according: Not being ſo, it made her unmeet to touch him, now. Nay, if you be but at Rabboni, and make toward Me in no other ſort than thus, Noli me tangere; Touch me not.

Hence we learne, that when he ſees, we forget our ſelves, Chriſt will take a little ſtate upon him; will not be ſaluted with Rabboni, but with ſome more ſeemely terme. Saint Thomas his, My LORD, and my GOD, a better farre than Rabboni. Nor be approached to, after the old accuſtomed faſhion, but with ſome more ſeemly reſpect; ſicut decet ſanctos. They that ſo preaſſe to touch Him, and be ſomewhat too homely with him, they are in Mary Magdalen's caſe. Her noli me tangere, touches them home. And their puniſhment ſhall be, that touch Him they ſhall not. Verſe 28. Epheſ. 5. 3.

It is no excuſe to ſay, all was out of love: Never lay it upon that. Love, Chriſt loves well: but, love, if it be right, ὐ ἀσχημονεῖ, nihil facit perperam (ſaith the Apoſtle) οὐκ ἀσχημονεῖ, doth nothing uncomely, keeps decorum; forgets not, what belongs to dury, and decency; carries it ſelfe accordingly. And ſuch love Chriſt loves. Otherwiſe, Love may, and doth forget it ſelfe other-while: and then, in that caſe, the Heathen mans ſaying is true, Importunus amor parùm diſtat à ſimultate: ſuch love is not love. A ſtrange kinde of love, when, for very love to Chriſt, we care not how we uſe him, or carry our ſelves towards him. Which being her caſe, ſhe heard, and heard juſtly, Noli me tangere: you are not now in caſe, till you ſhall have learned to touch after a more regardfull faſhion.

This may truly be ſaid: ſhe was not, before, ſo carried away, with ſorrow (that Paſſion;) but ſhe was now as farre gone in the other of joy: and ſo like enough to forget her ſelfe, in offering to touch Him no otherwiſe than heri and nudius tertius, as two or three dayes ago ſhe might have done. S. Peters caſe in the Mount, was juſt her caſe here: He knew not what he ſaid, nor ſhe, what ſhe did: ſo ſurpriſed with the ſudden joy, as ſhe had no leiſure to recollect her ſelfe, and to weigh the wonderfull great change, this day wrought in him. Marke 9. 6.

— Out of which, our leſſon is, that in the ſudden ſurpriſe of any paſſion, Chriſtus non eſt tangibilis, no touching Chriſt then. But, when the paſſion is over, and we come to our our ſelves, it will be with us, as with her: her judgement calmed; her judgement ſetled better, than now on the ſudden it was (as it ſeemed) ſhe will be then fit, and then ſhe may be admitted: and ſo, ſhe was, and did touch Him: but, that time, when ſhe did ſo touch Him, ſhe was upon her knees, downe at His feet, another manner of geſture, than here ſhe offered.

Matth. 28. 9.

Say, ſhe were unfit, yet hangs there a cloud ſtill: all is not cleare. For, why then did others touch, to our ſeeming as unfit as ſhe? Thomas with his faith in his fingers ends? The reſt, in whoſe teeth, He caſt their unbeliefe and hardneſſe of heart, they touched him at firſt: why not ſhe, as well as they? They were unfit, I grant; but their unfitneſſe grew ex alio capite, another way, than did hers. They believed not, were in doubt; thought, he had beene but a ghoſt. To rid them of that doubt, that they might be ſure it was he, and be able to ſay another day, Which our hands have handled of the Word of life; they were ſuffered to touch him. Touching was the proper cure for their diſeaſe. So, was it not, for hers. She never doubted a whit; was ſure, he whoſe voice ſhe heard, was Rabboni. She had no need to be confirmed in that. Her diſeaſe grew another way. Not from want of faith, of feare, rather: from want of due regard. To touch would not have cured her diſeaſe, but made it worſe. So, they touched, becauſe they believed not: ſhe touched not, becauſe ſhe miſ-believed; believed not of him aright. They touched, that they might know, he was riſen: She touched not, that ſhe might know, he was not ſo riſen, as ſhe wrongly imagined, that is, as in former times, ſhe had knowne him.

* Luke 24. 38. 37.
1 Iohn 1. 1.

Out of that hath been ſpoken, we learne; That they be not ſo well adviſed, who, if they heare one ſpeak of Noli me tangere, imagine ſtraight, it muſt needs be meant of a bile, ulcer, or ſome dangerous ſore. Every Noli me tangere is not ſo: Chriſt's here is not ſo. Learne here, there doth to Excellency belong a Noli me tangere, inducing reverence; no leſſe than to biles or ſores procuring indolency. Touch me not, come not neare me, I am uncleane (ſaith the Leper.) Stand back, touch not my skirts, I am holier than you, (ſaith one, Eſay 65.) that is, Touch me not, I am ſo pure and cleane; as if to his excellent holineſſe there belongeth this priviledge, not to be touched.

Levit. 13. 45.
Eſay 65. 5.

The truth is, in the Naturall body, the eye is a moſt excellent part; but withall, ſo tender, ſo delicate, it may not indure to be touched; no, though it aile nothing, be not ſore at all. In the Civill body the like is; there are in it, both Perſons and Matters, whoſe excellency is ſuch, they are not familiarly to be dealt with by hand, tongue, or pen, or any other way. The Perſons, they are, as the apple of God's owne eye: Chriſti Domini. They have a peculiar Nolite tangere, by themſelves. Wrong is offered them, when after this, or in familiar or homely manner, any touch them. The Matters likewiſe, Princes affaires, Secrets of State, David calleth them magna & mirabilia ſuper ſe, and ſo ſuper nos: points too high, too wonderfull for us to deale with. To theſe alſo, belongs this Touch not.

Pſal. 105. 15.
Pſal. 131. 1.

And, if of Kings ſecrets this may truly be ſaid, may it not as truly, of GOD, of his ſecret Decrees? May not they, for their height and depth, claime to this Noli, too? Yes ſure: and I pray GOD, he be well pleaſed with this licentious touching, nay, toſſing his Decrees of late; this ſounding the depth of his Iudgements with our line, and lead; too much preſumed upon by ſome in theſe dayes of ours. Iudicia ejus abyſſus multa (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) His judgements are the great deepe. S. Paul, looking downe into it, ran backe, and cried, O the depth! the profound depth! not to be ſearched, paſt our ſadoming or finding out. Yet are there in the world, that make but a ſhallow of this great deepe: they have ſounded it to the bottome. GOD's ſecret Decrees, they have them at their fingers ends, and can tell you the number and the order of them juſt, with 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Men, that (ſure) muſt have been in GOD's Cabbinet, above the * third heaven, where S. Paul never came: Mary Magdalens touch was nothing to theſe.

Rom. 11. 33.

* 2 Cor. 12. 2.

This was but upon the by. The maine of the Text, that it beareth full againſt, ex tota ſubſtantia, is undue and undutifull carriage: and againſt them that uſe it. Not, that Mary Magdalens was ſuch: hers, was but Tekel, certaine graines too light, minus habens:

habens: Not altogether without regard, but not altogether ſo full of regard as it might and ought to have beene. Make it as little as you will, CHRIST ſaith Noli to it: and Noli is a word of unwillingneſſe. CHRIST is not unwilling with ought that is good: what he ſaith Noli to, is eo ipſo, not good, would be forborne: would not be offered Him, be it no more then hers was. She (it may be) ſhewed more regard then we: Yet, if we ſhew not more regard then ſhe, we ſhall hardly eſcape this Noli me tangere.

But, from this we riſe. If CHRIST ſaid Noli to her, that failed but in tanto; what ſhall he ſay to them that faile both in tanto and in toto? The Noli to her given, reacheth them in a higher degree. Greater muſt their fault be, now, then hers was, then. She had no Noli to warne her: they have hers to warne them, and will take no warning by it. CHRIST, as He ſaw, ſhe was; ſo, He foreſaw, others would be as (yea, more) defective this way. The Noli that was given to her, was (in her) given to them all. Even to this day, CHRIST crieth ſtill, Noli me tangere: Even to this day, there is uſe of it, to call upon us for a better touch. 2.

If the Text be againſt rudeneſſe, to reſtreine it; then, is it for reverence, to enjoyne it. If He ſay Noli, to the want of regard; we know, what He will ſay Volo to: that the more reſpectively, the better we carry our ſelves, the better He will like us. This is ſure: He will be approched to, in all dutifull and decent ſort; and He will not have us offer Him any other. Whatſoever is moſt or beſt in that kinde, if there be any one better then other, be that it. The beſt, we have (I am ſure) is not too good for CHRIST. It is better to render accompt to Him of a little too much, then of a good deale too little. 3.

Take this with you: CHRIST can ſay Noli, then. For (I know not how) our cariage, a many of us, is ſo looſe; covered we ſit; ſitting, we pray; ſtanding, or walking (or as it takes us in the head) we receive: as if CHRIST were ſo gentle a perſon, we might touch Him, doe to Him, what we liſt, He would take all well: He hath not the power, to ſay Noli to any thing. But, He hath, we ſee; and ſaith it; and ſaith it to one highly in his favour: and ſaith it, but for a touch a little awry, otherwiſe then it ſhould. 4

As the Heathen ſaid, vultu; ſo the Text ſaith, tactu lædi pietatem. One may offend CHRIST, onely by touching Him; ſuch the touch may be. We will allow him greater then the Arke: That, would not indure Vzza's touch; He died for it. We will hold us to our Text: if we touch Him unduely, we ſhall doe it nolenti; it ſhall be much againſt His will; He likes it not: Witneſſe this noli here. 5. 2. Sam. 6. 7.

Which, though it goe but to the touch, yet, à paritate rationis, it reacheth to all the body, and to every member of it. To our very feet (ſaith Salomon:) We to looke to them when we draw neere to Him. To our very fingers (ſaith a Greater then Salomon) we to looke to them, when we touch Him. And, as not with the foot of pride, nor the hand of preſumption; ſo, along through the reſt: neither with a ſcornefull eye, nor a ſtiff knee: All are equally forbidden, under one; all to be farre from us. 6. Eccleſ. 4. 17. Luk. 11. 31.

It reacheth to all: but yet for all that, the native word of the Text (the touch) is to have a kind of pre-eminence. Moſt kindly, to that. To CHRIST it is every way; but moſt of all, to CHRIST as He is tangibilis; comes under our touch. To all parts of His worſhip; but, other parts will not come under tangere ſo fitly, as the Sacrament. So, as the uſe may ſeeme properly to have relation to that: and we, there, to ſhew our higheſt reverence. If we doe ſo, Dicite juſto quia benè, we do well. But, diverſe have too much of Marie Magdalen in them. I know not, how they would touch CHRIST, if they had Him: that, which on earth doth moſt neerely repreſent Him, His higheſt memoriall, I know not how many both touch and take, otherwiſe then were to be wiſhed. 7. Eſay 3. 10.

But, thus are we now come to the day, the very day, it was given on. CHRIST gave this Noli me tangere, that it might be verbum Diei, a watch-word for this day. Take heed, how you touch: for, He eaſily foreſaw this would be tempus tangendi, the Iohn. 6. 56. time whereon, touch we muſt: Nay, more then touch Him, we muſt; for, eat His fleſh and drinke His blood we muſt; and, that can we not doe, but we muſt touch Him. And this we muſt doe by vertue of another precept, Accipite & man-

Matt 26. 26. ducate.

How will Accipite & manducate, and noli me tangere cleave together? Take, eat, and yet touch not? If we take we muſt needs touch, one would thinke: If we eat, guſtus eſt ſub tactu (ſaith the Philoſopher:) ſo, that comes under touching too.

It ſeemes the Text was not ſo well choſen, theſe points conſidered. Nay, ſet the day aſide we have no need (God wot) to be preached to of not touching: we are not ſo Verſe. 27. forward that way. It would rather have beene that of Saint Thomas, Affer manum. This, is now out of ſeaſon.

But, you will remember ſtill, I told you, this Noli was not generall. It was but to Marie Magdalen: And, to her, but till ſhe had learned a little better manners. Not to any, but ſuch as ſhe, or worſe then ſhe, that in unbeſeeming manner preaſſe and proffer to touch Him (the onely cauſe of her repulſe.) But, at another time, when ſhe
Matt. 28. 9. was on her knees, fell downe at His feet, then did ſhe touch Him, without any checke at all. Be you now, but as ſhe was then, and this noli me tangere will not touch you at all.

It is the caſe of the Sacrament right. There is place in the taking it, for noli me tangere: So is there, for Affer manum. To them, that with Saint Thomas, in a feeling of the defect of their faith, or of any other ſpirituall grace, caſt themſelves downe, and Verſe 27. cry, My LORD, and my GOD, Affer manum to them: I ſet them free; I give them a diſcharge from this Noli me tangere. But, for them that are but at Rabboni, and ſcarſe ſo farre; bold gueſts with Him; baſe in conceipt, and homely in behaviour: to them, and to them properly, belongs this Noli me tangere: More properly, then ever it did to her. And ſo, that point reconciled. Thus farre for Saint Chryſoſtome, and his taking.

2. To haſten the Meſſage S. Gregorie's ſenſe.

There is a ſecond, and it is Saint Gregorie's: That the Vade & dic, was the cauſe of Noli me &c and that all was but to ſave time, that ſhe was not permitted it. CHRIST was not willing to ſpend time in theſe complements (it was no other;) but, to diſpatch her away, upon an errand, better pleaſing to Him, that required more haſte. As if He ſhould have ſaid: Let us have no touching now; there is a matter in hand, would be done out of hand and therefore for this time hands off, Touch me not.

And the reaſon will follow well, ſo: Nondum enim aſcendi. You need not be ſo haſtie, or eager to touch me; I am not yet, aſcended: though I be upon going, yet I am not gone. You may doe this, at ſome other time, at ſome other meeting & quod differtur non aufertur, at better leyſure, you may have your deſire: forbeare it, now.

Why, what haſte was there of doing this errand? Might ſhe not have touched Him, and done it time enough? Peradventure, ſhe might thinke ſo: She, knew CHRIST was riſen; She, was well. But, they that ſate in feare and ſorrow, that knew not ſo much; they would not thinke ſo: Not, to them. To them Nihil ſatis feſtinatur, No haſte was too much; all delay too long.

Nor to CHRIST neither. Who was (we ſee) ſo deſirous to have notice given with all ſpeed, that He would not take ſo much time from it, as wherein Marie Magdalen might have had but a touch at Him. So carefull, they might receive comfort with the firſt, that He ſaith, Goe your wayes with all ſpeed; Get you to them, the firſt thing you doe: It will doe them more good to heare of my riſing, then it will doe you, to ſtand and touch me.

Yet, a touch and away would not have taken up ſo much time. True: but He eaſily foreſaw, in the termes ſhe ſtood, if He ſuffered her to touch, that would not ſerve the turne; She would have taken hold too. And, if ſhe had taken taken hold once, nor that neither: She would have come to a Non dimittam, with her in the Canticles, Tenui Eum & non dimittam: She would not have let Him goe; or beene long, yer ſhe had: So, much time ſpent in impertinencies, which neither He nor ſhe the better for. So, ſhe to let her touching alone, and put it off till another time, being to be imployed in a buſineſſe of more haſte, and importance. Cant. 3. 4.

The third place is Saint Auguſtine; That, CHRIST in theſe words, had a further meaning; to weane her from all ſenſuall and fleſhly touching, and teach her, a new and a true touch; truer than that, ſhe was about. This ſenſe groweth out of CHRISTS reaſon: Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended; as if, till He were aſcended, He would not be touched; and, then, He would. As much to ſay: Care not to touch mee, here. Stand not upon it: Touch me not till I be aſcended, Stay till then, and then, doe. That, is the true touch; that is it, will doe you all the good. 3 To weane her from ſenſuall touching: S. Auguſtines ſenſe.

And, there is reaſon for this ſenſe. For the touch of His body, which ſhe ſo much deſired; that, could laſt but forty dayes in all, while He in His body were among them. And, what ſhould all, ſince, and we now, have beene the better? He was to take her out a leſſon, and to teach her another touch, that might ſerve for all, to the worlds end; that might ſerve, when the body and bodily touch were taken from us. Acts. 1. 3.

CHRIST Himſelfe touched upon this point (in the ſixth Chap. at the 62. ver.) When at Capernaum they ſtumbled at the ſpeech of eating His fleſh; What (ſaith he) finde you this ſtrange, now? How will you finde it, then, when you ſhall ſee the Son of man aſcend up where he was before? How then? And yet, then you muſt eat, or elſe there is no life in you.

So, it is a plaine Item to her, that there may be a ſenſuall touching of Him here: but that is not it: not the right: it availes little. It was her errour, this; She was all for the corporall preſence; for the touch with the fingers. So, were His Diſciples, all of them, too much addicted to it. From which they were now to be weaned: That if they had, before, knowne CHRIST, or touched Him after the fleſh; yet now from hence-forth, they were to doe ſo no more, but to learne a new touch; to touch Him, being now aſcended. Such a touching there is; or elſe His reaſon holds not: And, beſt touching Him, ſo; Better farre than this of hers, ſhe was ſo eager on.

Doe but aske the Church of Rome; Even, with them, it is not the bodily touch, in the Sacrament, that doth the good. Wicked men, very reprobates, have that touch, and remaine reprobates, as before. Nay, I will goe further: It is not that, that toucheth CHRIST at all. Example, the multitude that thronged and Thruſt Him; yet for all that, as if none of them all had touched Him, He asks, Quis me tetigit? So that, one may rudely thruſt Him, and yet not touch Him, though: Not, to any purpoſe, ſo. Marke 5. 31.

CHRIST reſolves the point, in that very place. The fleſh, the touching, the eating it, profits nothing. The words He ſpake were ſpirit: So, the touching, the eating, to be ſpirituall. And Saint Thomas, and Mary Magdalen or whoſoever touched Him here on earth, niſi fælicius fide quàm manu tetigiſſent, if they had not been more happy to touch Him with their faith, than with their fingers end, they had had no part in Him; no good by it at all. It was found better with it, to touch the hemme of His garment; than, without it, to touch any part of His body. Ioh. 6. 63. Matth. 9. 20.

Now, if faith be to touch, that will touch Him no leſſe in Heaven than here: One, that is in Heaven, may be touched ſo. No aſcending can hinder that touch. Faith will elevate it ſelfe, that aſcending in ſpirit, we ſhall touch Him, and take hold of Him. Mitte fidem & tenuiſti: It is Saint Auguſtine. It is a touch, to which there is never a Noli: feare it not.

So, doe we then: Send up our faith, and that ſhall touch Him, and there will vertue come from Him: and it ſhall take ſuch hold on him, as it ſhall raiſe us up, to where He is; bring us to the end of the verſe, and to the end of all our deſires; to Aſcendo ad Patrem, a joyfull aſcenſion to our Father and His, and to Himſelfe, and to the Vnitie of the Bleſſed SPIRIT. To whom, in the Trinitie of Perſons, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAjestie, at White-Hall, on the XXI. of April, A.D. MDCXXII, being EASTER DAY.

IOHN. CHAP. XX. VER. XVII.

Dicit ei IESVS &c.

IESVS saith to her, Touch me not: For, I am not yet aſcended to my Father: But, goe to my brethren, and ſay unto them, I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God.

IF noli me tangere the former part, you have formerly heard. Marie Magdalen might not touch: at leaſt-wiſe, not, as thus; not, as now.

The reaſon: 1. On her part, ſhe forgat her ſelfe a little in her touch, as in her terme, toward Him, who, though nondum He were not yet, was preſently to aſcend, and be taken up into heaven, and would be touched in ſome better manner. And, till ſhe had learned, ſo to touch, Noli me tangere.

2. On CHRISTS part. She need not be ſo eager; Nondum enim Aſcendi: that is, though He were going, yet He was not gone. Some other time might ſerve her, to touch Him in. Now, He had matter of more haſte, to ſend her about, and would have no time taken from it. And ſo, for ſaving of time, Noli me tangere.

3. On the touch it ſelfe. He was not yet aſcended: And to touch Him before He were ſo, was not the true touch; not the touch that would doe her, or us, any good. For theſe all, or ſome of theſe, Noli me tangere, no touching, now.

But what, ſhall ſhe be quite caſt off in the meane time? Denied touching; denied it, graunted nothing for it? That were hard. Nothing to comfort her, in liew of it? Yes: CHRIST is not unrighteous, that He ſhould forget the worke and labour of her love, which ſhe, this day, made, ſo many waies to appeare. Somewhat He deviſeth to comfort her, ſomwhat: in that He will have her doe ſomewhat for Him. So, the old rule was: quem non honoro non onero. He will imploy her in a meſſage; and ſuch a meſſage, as was to the preſent joy of them, it was ſent to, and ſhould be to the generall joy and good, not of them onely, but of us all.

Heb. 6. 10.

Now then, this muſt needs be reckoned as a ſpeciall favour ſhewed her by our bleſſed SAVIOUR. For, otherwiſe, He could as eaſily, Himſelfe, have appeared to them, he ſent her; as, to her, He did: but that, His will was, to vouchſafe her the honour of the firſt bearing of theſe ſo joyfull tidings, to them, and in and by them, to the whole world. When time was, ſhe broke her boxe of precious ointment, and the ſent of it filled the whole houſe: The breaking of this boxe now, of the tydings of CHRIST, and His riſing, with the ſweete ſavour of life unto life hath filled, and ſtill filleth the whole world, from one end to the other.

Ioh. 12. 3.

2. Cor. 2. 16.

The Summe. The Summe of the Text is; A diſpatch of Marie Magdalen by CHRIST, to deliver a meſſage to his Diſciples. It is in effect, as if he ſhould have ſaid: You know, I am riſen, now; you are well for your part: There be others, that know not ſo much; and, becauſe they know it not, ſit in ſorrow, heavy and halfe dead at home. It would comfort them much, revive them, put life into them againe, to know what you know. Now you are well, thinke upon them that are not. Remember, what was your owne caſe but even now. You cannot doe a better deed, then carry comfort to the comfortleſſe. I would they knew it; I wiſh them well: They be my brethren, how-ever they forgat themſelves when time was.

But, this is not all, that they might know of it: but, they muſt know of it with all ſpeed. For, that ſhe may the ſooner goe tell them, ſhe muſt not touch. For, if you marke it, It is not vade & dic; but Sed vade & dic: It is not barely, Goe and tell them; It is, Touch me not, But, goe and tell them, That is, inſtead of touching, ſhe muſt be gone in all haſt to tell them. As if he ſhould ſay; Goe to, let us have no touching now: Get you to them, the firſt thing you doe, and tell them of it. It will doe them more good to be told of this, then it will doe you to ſtay heere and touch me never ſo oft.

This ſo great haſt of the carrying it, is much for the credit of the meſſage: Much for it; I cannot but note it. That CHRIST thought the notice of it ſo neceſſarie, the bearing of it ſo every way important, as (we ſee) He is carefull, no time be taken from it: but with all poſſible ſpeed, with the very firſt, they acquainted with it. So carefull, as He would not take ſo much (or rather, ſo little) time from it, as wherin Marie Magdalen might have had but a touch at Him; but takes her off, and ſends her away in all haſt. As if, ſome matter had lien in it, if they ſhould not have heard of His riſing, before the Sun-riſing.

Much for the honour of the Feaſt, on which it was done. That He would for ever have a Feaſt celebrated in memorie of this Day, whereon theſe tydings came to the world firſt.

Moſt of all, for His owne honour; Who ſheweth himſelfe ſo deſirous, that they that are in heavineſſe may receive comfort, as He thinketh no haſt too much, no haſt enough, till they heare of it, till they heare of His loving kindneſſe betimes in the morning.

Pſal. 143. 8.

To

To take the Text in ſunder. The parts be two : [1] A Commiſſion to carry a meſſage; [2] And the Meſſage it ſelfe. The Diviſion.

In the Commiſſion, againe, there are two [1] the Parties firſt : [2] and then, the Charge.

[1] The Parties, Fratres meos : [2] The Charge, Vade & dic eis.

In the Meſſage, two. likewiſe : [1] Firſt, that He is upon aſcending : [2] Then, the Party, to whom. That Party, to whom is but one; yet repreſented here, under two names, [1] Father and [2] GOD. And (that which, to us, is the capitall point of all, and which we to lay hold of ſpecially) His Father, but ours, withall : and His GOD, but, ours, as well as His. The laſt and beſt part of the meſſage : For, in it lieth the joy that commeth to us this morning.

On which foure, [1] My Father, and [2] your Father, and [3] my God, and [4] your God, as it were ſo many wheeles, is His aſcendo drawen : Vpon the ſame, is ours likewiſe to be, and is therefore the Conſummatum eſt of the Text, and of the Feaſt, and of this yea, (I dare add) of the whole Goſpell.

And, let not this move you a whit, that His Father and our Father, His God and our God (who are the end to which we aſcend) are made the chariot by which we aſcend. This is no ſtrange thing in Divinitie. Ad CHRISTUM non itur, niſi per CHRISTUM (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) and ſo neither ad DEUM, niſi per DEUM. With us nothing is more certaine, then that the end of our way, which we come unto, is alſo the way it ſelfe whereby we come thither. One and the ſame ad quem and per quem aſcenditur.

We ſhall make foure ſtands. [1] One, at fratres meos, the Parties. [2] Another, at Dic eis, the Commiſſion. [3] The third, at Aſcendo, the Motion. [4] And the laſt, at My Father your Father, My God and your God, the Terminus ad quem, which giveth the perfection to all our motions, and ſo, to this, the laſt end of all our motions; For, after aſcendo, we ſhall move no more, but reſt for ever.

I.

Fratres meos. The Parties.

VAde ad fratres meos, Goe to my brethren. Our firſt ſtand is to be at fratres meos, my brethren, the Parties He ſent to.

Who be they? They ſhe went to. To whom went ſhe? To his Diſciples (in the next verſe :) They then the Parties, He meant : They, His brethren. Ver. 18.

A ſtrange terme to begin with, conſidering how they had dealt with Him, ſcarſe like brethren, not long before. We ſhall therein doe the worke of the Sabboth, which is to tell of His loving kindneſſe betimes in the morning; and this morning, more then ever any. Pſal. 59. 16.

Yer then we goe any further, let us touch a little at this terme, He gives them. It is no noli me tangere (this) It is a word to be touched and taken hold of: It was ſo, when time was, by Benhadad's ſervants, this very word .Is Benhadad alive (ſaith the King of Iſrael) Frater meus eſt. He is my brother : which they preſently caught hold of, yea, thy brother Benhadad is yet living. So they. 1. King. 20. 32, 33.

And ſo we, Fratres meos. Let us not let this word fall to the ground, but ſay (with Bernard) Salvum ſit verbum Domini mei, GOD ſave this word; bleſſed be the lipps that ſpoke it. Yea thy brethren, Good LORD, if ſo thou wilt vouchſafe to call them.

Out of it firſt I note, here is nothing that ſavours of any diſpleaſure, of remembring any old grudge. Not ſo much as an harſh terme in all the meſſage; no mention they had fled from Him, forſooke Him, forſwore Him (full un-brotherly.) He hath forgotten it all, all is out of His minde: Caſts not them off, as they did Him, but ſends to them; and, by the name of brethren, ſends to them: They be my brethren, and I theirs, and by that name commend me to them. Nothing, here, that ſavours of any anger.

Nor nothing, that ſavours of any pride. But, even as Ioſeph in the top of his honour; So he, in this, the day of his glorious exalting from the dead, claymes kindred of them, a ſort of poore forlorne men: and (as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it) non eſt confuſus vocare, is not a whit aſhamed of them that were aſhamed of Him. Diſdeignes not, poore as they were, unkinde as they were, but vouchſafes to call them brethren for all that.

Which word [brethren] implies two things: 1. Firſt, Identitie of nature. His nature is not changed by death. The nature He died in, in the ſame He riſes againe. Thereby lies a matter. For, If He roſe, as man, then man alſo may riſe: If one be riſen, there is hope for others: If the nature be riſen, the perſons, in it, may. So it was with the firſt Adam. In his preſon was our nature; and, in him, it died; and we, in it. So is it in the ſecond. In His perſon our nature is riſen; In our nature, we all. This firſt: Riſen in the ſame nature, He had before: Not changed it.

2. And ſecond, Riſen with the ſame love and affection, He had before: Not changed it, neither. Yes, changed it: (I ſaid not well in that:) but, changed it for the better. Before this, when He ſaid moſt, He ſaid but, I will call you my friends: The higheſt terme He came to, before. But here, being riſen, He riſeth (we ſee) higher, as high as Love can riſe, to compt them and ſtyle them fratres meos. And ſo much for that, Goe to my brethren.

Ioh. 15. 15.

II.

Dic eis. The Commiſſion.

Well, when ſhe comes to His Brethren, what then? Et dic eis, and ſay to them, or tell them. By which words, He gives her a Commiſſion. Vade, is her Miſſion: Dic eis, her Commiſſion. A Commiſſion, to publiſh the firſt newes of His riſing, and (as it falls out) of His aſcending too.

The Fathers ſay, that, by this word, ſhe was, by CHRIST, made an Apoſtle. Nay Apoſtolorum Apoſtola, an Apoſtle to the Apoſtles themſelves.

An Apoſtle: For, what lacks ſhe? 1. Sent firſt, immediatly from CHRIST Himſelfe: And what is an Apoſtle but ſo? 2. Secondly, Sent to declare and make knowen: And what difference betweene Ite prædicate, and Vade & dic, but onely the number? the thing is the ſame. 3. And laſt, what was ſhe to make knowen? CHRIST's riſing, and aſcending: And what are they but Evangelium, the Goſpell, yea the very Goſpell of the Goſpell?

Mat. 28. 19.

This day, with CHRIST's riſing beginns the Goſpell: Not before. Crucified dead & buried, no good newes, no Goſpell they, in themſelves. And them, the Iewes beleeve as well as we. The firſt Goſpell of all, is the Goſpell of this day, and the Goſpell of this day is this Marie Magdalen's Goſpell, πρωτευαγγέλιον, the prime Goſpell of all, before any of the other foure. That CHRIST is riſen, and upon His aſcending: and ſhe the firſt, that ever brought theſe glad tydings. At her hands the Apoſtles themſelves received it firſt: And, from them, we all.

Which, as it was a ſpeciall honour (and whereſoever this Goſpell is Preached, ſhall be told for a memoriall of her:) ſo was it withall, not without ſome kinde of enthwiting to them (to the Apoſtles) for ſitting at home, ſo drowping in a corner, that CHRIST not finding any of them, is faine to ſeeke Him a new Apoſtle: And finding her, where He ſhould have found them, and did not, to ſend by the hand of her, that He firſt found at the Sepulcher's ſide, and to make Himſelfe a new Apoſtle. And ſend her to them, to enter them (as it were) and catechize them, in the two Articles of the Chriſtian faith, the Reſurrection and Aſcenſion of CHRIST. To her, they and we (both) owe them, the firſt notice of them.

And, by this (lo) the amends (we ſpeak of) is made her for her Noli me tangere: Full amends. For, to be thus ſent, to be the meſſenger of theſe ſo bleſſed tydings, is a higher honour, a more ſpeciall favour done her, a better good turne, every way better, than if ſhe had beene let alone, had her deſire, touched Chriſt, which ſhe ſo longed for, and ſo eagerly reached at. Better (ſure:) for I reaſon thus. Chriſt (we may bee ſure) would never have enjoyned her to leave the better, to take the worſe: To leave to touch Him, to goe to tell them, if to goe to tell them had not beene the better.

So that, hence we infer, that to go and carry comfort to them that need it, to tell them of CHRIST's riſing, that doe not know it; is better than to tarry and doe nothing but ſtand touching CHRIST. Touching CHRIST gives place to teaching CHRIST. Vade & dic better than mane & tange. CHRIST (we ſee) is for Vade & dic. That, if we were in caſe where we might touch CHRIST, wee were to leave CHRIST untouched, and even to give our ſelves a noli me tangere, to goe and doe this: And to thinke our ſelves better imployed in telling them, than in touching Him.

Will you obſerve withall how well this agrees with her offer (a little before) of Ego tollam Eum? She muſt needs know of the Gardiner, Tell me where you have layd Him, Et ego tollam, and ſhe would take Him, and carry Him, that ſhee would. Why, you that would ſo faine take and carry me, being dead, goe take and carry me now alive: That is; carry newes, that I am alive: And you ſhall better pleaſe mee with this, ego tollam, a great deale: It ſhall bee a better carrying, Ego tollam, in a better ſenſe, than ever was that. Stand not here then touching mee: Goe and touch them; and, with the very touch of this report, you ſhall worke, in them, a kinde of (that you ſee in mee, a kinde of) reſurrection from a dolefull and dead, to a cheerefull and lively eſtate. Verſe 15.

III.

Aſcendo.
The Motion.

Tell them: What? Tell them that I aſcend; that is, am about to aſcend, am upon the point of it, am very ſhortly to doe it. Quod propè abeſt, ut fiat, habetur pro facto, that that is neere done, we reckon as good as done.

Tell them that I aſcend. Why how now, What day is to day? It is not Aſcenſion day: It is Eaſter, and but early Eaſter yet: His aſcenſion is fourty dayes off. This were a Text for that day. Why ſpeakes He of that now? Why, not rather, Tell them I am riſen (more proper for this day?) why, He needs not tell her that: She could tell that of her ſelfe, ſhe ſaw it. And beſides, in ſaying, I aſcend, He implyes fully as much. Till He be riſen, aſcend He cannot: He muſt aſcend out of the grave, yer He can aſcend up to heaven. Reſurrexit muſt be paſt, yer Aſcendo can come. Aſcendo then puts His reſurrection paſt all peradventure: He needs ſay no more of that, of His riſing. But, as ſhe ſaw by his riſing that He had the keyes of hell and death, had unlocked thoſe doores and come out from thence; So, by aſcendo, He tells her farther, that He hath the Keyes of Heaven gates alſo, which He would now unlock, and ſo ſet open the Kingdome of Heaven to all Beleevers. Apoc. 1. 18.

I

And yet, there is a further matter in aſcendo, to ſhew us what was the end of His riſing. CHRIST did not riſe, to riſe; no more muſt we. The reſurrection it ſelfe is for an end; it is not the end: It is but a ſtate yet unperfect, but an entry to a greater good, which unleſſe it lead us and bring us to non habetur propoſitum, it is ſhort, ſhort of that it ſhould be. We muſt not then ſet up our reſt upon our riſing. There is ſomewhat more required than barely to riſe. What is that? Aſcendo: Chriſt roſe to aſcend; ſo are we to doe. And riſing is no riſing, no right riſing, we riſe not on our right ſides (as wee ſay) if that follow not upon it, if we aſcend not withall. For, to riſe from the bottome of the grave to the brinke of it, to ſtand upon our feete againe, and tread on the grave-ſtone, and no more, is but halfe a riſing; is but Lazarus's riſing. To riſe up, up as high as heaven, that is to riſe indeed; that is Chriſts riſing: and that to be be ours. As, to riſe is nothing but to aſcend out of the grave: So, to aſcend is nothing but to riſe as high as heaven: And, then we are truly riſen, when ſo riſen. Before, I ſaid there was no Goſpell till the Reſurrection: I now ſay, the reſurrection it ſelfe is no Goſpell; (nor, of it ſelfe) unleſſe aſcendo follow it. Reſurrexit, tell that to all the world: All that die in Adam, ſhall riſe in Chriſt, Miſcreants, Iewes, Turkes and all: No Goſpell that, properly. Tell the Chriſtian of more than ſo: tell him of aſcendo too, that goes withall, that pertaines to it. You muſt take that with you too, if it be Chriſts, if it be the right riſing, the reſurrection to life and not to condemnation.

Marke this well: it is a materiall point. Better lye ſtill in our graves, better never riſe, than riſe and riſing not to aſcend. Of them that ſhall riſe, they that ſee they ſhall not aſcend, ſhall wiſh themſelves in their coffins againe: Nay, they ſhall pray the mountaines to fall on them, and the hils to cover them, and bury them quicke. So much doth this concerne us, that theſe two part not; that aſcendo attend us at our riſing. And therefore this you ſhall obſerve, that, in all this ſpeech or Text, CHRIST doth not ſo much as mention, as once name the word riſing or reſurrection, as if He made no great reckoning of it: But, in this one ſhort verſe here, in theſe few words, He is, at aſcendo twice; ſpeakes of that, mentions that, over and over againe. All to teach us, aſcendo, is all in all. That reſurrexit is nothing, if it be nothing but reſurrexit; nor any account to be made of it, if aſcendo goe not with it, but, if aſcendo goe with it then it is. And, that it may goe with it, that to be all our care. Never take care for reſurrexit; that will come of it ſelfe without any thought taking. Never trouble your ſelves with that. Take thought for aſcendo, ſet your minds there. Aſcendo, looke well to that: Reſurrexit let that goe.

Luke 23. 3[illegible]

A third reaſon there is of aſcendo, For, He ſaw upon theſe tydings, as ſhe did thinke, ſo they would ſay; O is He riſen, then ſhall we have His company againe, as heretofore we had. But, by ſending them word of His aſcending, He gives them warning betimes; He roſe not, to make any abode with them, or to converſe with them on earth, as formerly He had; that ſo, they might have timely notice of it and know what they were to looke for. For, this, He knew would be a hard leſſon. His riſing they would like well, but His aſcending be againſt: would not abide to heare of that, to loſe his company at any hand. It was a conceit, that troubled them much: they were ſtill and ever addicted to His bodily being with them. Here, they would have kept Him, built Him a Tabernacle, here; and by their good will never have let Him gone from hence. All for mane nobiſcum, and for Domine ſi tu fuiſſes hîc; all in Mary Magdalens caſe, had Him here to ſee Him and to touch Him; and then, all had beene well as they thought.

Iohn 11. 32.

This was their errour: And to rid them of it, of this earthly minde of theirs, thus ſtriving to affixe and keepe Him here on earth, and that then all ſhould be well, He ſhewes them that they were quite wrong, and ſets them right. That for Him to be here below on earth, that is not it: But for them to be with Him there above in heaven, that is it: There it is right. And, never ſhall they, or we, be well, till there wee bee with Him. And thither would He raiſe them and us, with this His aſcendo.

4 Yet, one more. For, this very point, that Chriſt riſeth with aſcendo in His mouth; that no ſooner riſen, but makes ready for His aſcending ſtraight; this (I ſay) if there were nothing but this (the ſo immediate joyning it, ſo cloſe upon His riſing, one hard to the other, no meane betweene) were of it ſelfe, enough to make the idle dreame of the old and new Chiliaſts to vaniſh quite; that phanſie to themſelves I wote not what earthly kingdome here upon earth, ſomewhat like Mahomets Paradiſe, and will not heare of aſcendo, after they be riſen, till a thouſand yeares at leaſt. This is none of Chriſts riſing, I am ſure: So, to be none of ours. As with Him, So, with us, riſing and aſcending are to follow ſtraight on upon the other.

CHRIST then doth aſcend. And out of what CHRIST did, we learne what we to doe, Seeing, CHRIST ſtayed not heere, we not to ſet up our ſtay here neither, not to make earth our heaven, not to place our felicity here below.

The

The Goſpell is(we ſee)when Chriſt was riſen,his minde was upon aſcendo preſently. The Epiſtle is framed fit for it, That if we be riſen with Chriſt, we would ſet our mindes and ſeeke the things above where Chriſt is: that is,if we be riſen with Him,make no more adoe but aſcend with Him alſo. Col. 3. 1.

All things in heaven and earth doe ſo; riſing, they aſcend preſently. In heaven,the ſtarres they be no ſooner riſen above the horizon,but they are in there aſcendent, eo ipſo, and never leave aſcending, till they be in the higheſt point, over our heads, in the very topp of the skie. In earth; the little ſpires that peepe out of the ground, now at this time (nature's time of her yearely reſurrection) they be no ſooner out, but up they ſhoot, and never leave to aſpire, till they have atteined the full pitch of their higheſt growth, they can aſcend to. In our ſelves, though(I know) for earthly men to have earthly minds it is not ſtrange πηλον ἐχοντες πατέρα having clay to our father,and προπάτορα χοῦν duſt to our Sire, we ſhould have χαμαιπετοῦς our ſoules ſhould cleave to the duſt,as Nazianzen excellently ſaith. Not ſtrange (I ſay) that, ſo it is with us, yet, ſo it ſhould not be. The very Heathen ſaw, that, though we be made of the earth, yet we are not made for the earth: That the heavenly ſoule was not put into the earthly body, to the end, the earthly body, ſhould draw it downe to the earth; but rather, to the end, the ſoule ſhould lift it up to heaven. And ſo much they gathered out of our Os ſublime, and vultus ad ſydera, the very frame of our body that beares up thitherward, and bodes (as it were) a kinde of aſcending whither it lookes, and gives naturally. Nature doth teach this.

But grace by Chriſt's example much better. If Chriſt riſe, that we riſe with Chriſt, Not, in body yet; but to compt our ſelves dead to ſinne, and riſe from that, and live to GOD (the firſt reſurrection.) And, if Chriſt aſcend, we likewiſe to aſcend: not to part with Him, but to follow Him as we may. Not yet in body; it cannot be ſurſum corpora yet; it may be ſurſum corda, we may lift up our hearts thither, though. There our treaſure is; if Chriſt be our treaſure: there, our hearts to be; there we in heart to be at leaſt, which is the firſt aſcenſion, the προοιμίδιον of it, the præludium, ſo. Apoc. 20. 5.

There are two words in the Text, [1] Nondum aſcendi, I am not yet aſcended; and, [2] aſcendo, yet I aſcend though: which will very well fitt us, if, while we are not at aſcendi yet (that is, in body aſcended) we be, for all that, at aſcendo (that is, aſcend in mind) even as Chriſt here did. And Bleſſed is the man (ſaith the Pſalme) cui in corde aſcenſiones, that hath the aſcenſion in his heart, or his heart on it; That, while it is nondum aſcendi with him, yet at times it is aſcendo, lifts up his eyes, ſends up his ſighes, exalts his thoughts otherwhile, repreſents (as Chriſt doth) anticipates the aſcenſion, Voto & deſiderio in will and deſire, before the time it ſelfe come of the laſt and finall aſcenſion. Thus much for aſcendo. Pſal. 84. 5.

IIII.

Aſcendo is a motion. Every motion hath an Vnde, and a quò; a whence and a whither; a terminus à quo, and a terminus ad quem. The ad quem is (here) ad Patrem. Ad Patrem meum: The Ad quem.

To aſcend is, to Chriſt, His naturall motion: Heaven is his naturall place. Thence He came, Thither He is to goe againe. Specially, His worke being done, He came for. That was conſummatum eſt, with us, three dayes ſince. But, till He be in heaven againe, it is not conſummatum eſt, with Him. So, the motion is naturall. Chap. 19. 30.

And the Ad quem, ad Patrem, no leſſe. Seeing, for the Sonne, to goe to the Father, is very kindly too; we may not be againſt it. Chriſt ſaid, If you loved me, you would verily reioyce, becauſe I ſaid, I goe to the Father. For very love to Chriſt, we cannot but rejoyce with Him. In the ad quem, all is well, if we conſider that. But, ſo, is not, in the à quo. For, when all is ſaid, make the beſt of it we can, aſcendo is diſcedo, to goe up is to goe from; from them: And this is no good newes. For Him, no ſooner to come, but gone againe, and leave them to the wide world, it might trouble them, Chap. 14. 28.

them, for all Tell my Brethren. For, by Brethren He might meane falſe brethren, that had left Him; and ſo would He them, now: and peradventure doe their errand in heaven to His father, and make them have but little thankes for it, at His hands. So that, this aſcendo implying a nolo manere (in a manner) was as evill to them, as noli me tangere was to her.

What is then become of the Goſpell we ſpake of? where, or what is their comfort, or ours, in this tyding? To deale plainely: when we ſeeke it in aſcendo, we find it not: Nor, in ad Patrem: Nor, in ad Patrem meum. None of theſe is it. But, in His & ad Patrem veſtrum, there, we find it; there it is. There was (you will ſay) as much at this comes to, in fratres meos. It is true; it implied no leſſe. But, CHRIST would not deliver this implicitè by way of implying, but explicitè, as explicate and plainely, as He could. And not once but twiſe. And it is a happy turne for us, He did ſo: For, this point can never be too plainely ſpoken to, too often repeated, too much ſtood upon. All the joy of the morning is in this veſtrum. Tell them, I goe to the Father, that is not all: Tell them this too, As I goe to the Father, ſo the Father I go to, is their father, as well as mine; Not mine alone, but theirs alſo. And tell them againe, that, if Patrem meum be the cauſe of my aſcending (as here is none other ſet downe;) If I goe to Him thus, becauſe He is my Father; becauſe He is theirs alſo, they alſo ſhall come after me, the ſame way, to the ſame place, upon the ſame reaſon.

And He doth expreſſe here the terminus ad quem by the Party to whom, rather then by the Place to which, becauſe the Party will ſoone bring us to the Place, and to ſomewhat beſides. To the Place: For, you ſhall ſee, what will follow of this: that His houſe, that heaven is now become Paterna domus to us, as our father's houſe; And who ſhall keep us from our father's houſe? No more ſtrangers now; but of the houſhold of GOD. And, in the Houſhold, not ſervants but children; and have thereto as good right and title, ſhall be as welcome thither every way, as any child to his owne father's houſe here uſeth to be. GOD, through Him, ſtanding no otherwiſe affected to us, then as a father to his child; as well diſpoſed, as willing, as ready to receive us. CHRIST his beloved Sonne, in whom He is ſo abſolutely well pleaſed as He alwaies heares him, hath prayed to Him and obtained of Him, that where He is, we may be alſo, and, in due time, aſcend up, whither He is now aſcended, Pandens iter coram nobis, opening the paſſage for us to follow Him.

Mic. 1. 13.

But, I told you, there was ſomewhat in the Perſon, more then in the Place. For, by vertue of this Patrem veſtrum, while we are here, if we cry Abba father (as now we may) He is ready to receive our prayers: and when we goe hence, ready to receive our perſons. While we are here, if at any time we repent, and ſay Ibo ad Patrem (with the child in the Goſpell) ready to receive us to grace: And, when we goe hence, we may ſay with CHRIST, Vado ad Patrem, ready to receive us to glorie. So, of ad Patrem veſtrum, there is uſe here and there, both.

Rom. 8. 15.

Luk. 15. 18.

And, all this by meanes of CHRIST's reſurrection: beſides the generall vertue whereof, to make all men riſe (all, in the ſecond Adam that die in the firſt) there is further a ſecond ſpeciall vertue for us Chriſtians, to make us riſe, not onely from the grave, but riſe higher then ſo, even as high as to heaven it ſelfe. And that we may have good right ſo to do, to make His Father ours, and his Father's houſe ours, that there we may dwel together fratres in unum. On which dependeth, and from whence riſeth all our hope of happineſſe for ever. And this is the joy of the Feaſt we celebrate, the loving kindneſſe of this morning, the glad tydings of Marie Magdalen's Goſpell. It is evangelium parvum (ſo they call it) but a little one, but it hath in it, in theſe few words couched, much matter both of high myſterie and of heavenly comfort.

There be of the Fathers, that, telling the words of the Meſſage (which are fifteene in number) make them as ſo many ſtepps or rongs (as it were) of Iacob's Ladder, which we to aſcend by. There be others, that more properly and to the Text more agreeable obſerve theſe foure, [1] Patrem meum, [2] Patrem veſtrum, [3] Deum meum, [4] Deum veſtrum, as ſo many wheeles, as it were, of Elias his chariot, in which he was carried up to heaven. 2 King. 2.

Aſcendo the chariot; theſe, the foure wheeles of it.

The truth is, there lie faire before us in it, foure paires or combinations, by which foure, aſcendo is here drawne in the Text. 1 Two ſingle: Patrem and Deum, one: 2 Meum and veſtrum, the other. Two double; 3 Patrem meum and Patrem veſtrum, one: and 4 Deum meum, Deum veſtrum; the other. I will but touch them briefly.

Father and GOD at large firſt, without any pronounes put to them at all. It was not ſo, Stylo veteri. There, in the Law, it was Dominus Deus. To change this, and to make it Stylo novo, Pater Deus; in place of Dominus putting Pater, making of GOD a LORD, GOD a Father; is worth the while. It mends the terme, and it mends the matter much; as much as a Father is better than a LORD. Bonum Paſcha, bonus tranſitus: and we bound to our bleſſed SAVIOUR, for making this Paſſeover, for working but this change or alteration in GOD's ſtyle. 1 Patrem Deum: The firſt paire. Exod. 32. 2.

A Father: How a Father? For, a Father in a ſenſe (we know) He may be ſaid, and is, to all things whatſoever. Father of the raine, and of the drops of dew (in Iob.) Iob 38. 28.
But, of us men, of mankinde, more ſpecially, in that we beare His Image. But, that is not it neither, that here is meant. That, is here meant, is aſcendo ad Patrem, a Father to aſcend to. Not for our prayers onely, but even alſo for our perſons to aſcend to. So, a Father He is to none, but to CHRIST, and to the true Chriſtian.

And this now, a Father to aſcend to, is it that puts the difference betweene Him and all other fathers beſide Him. Fathers to aſcend to, ſuch fathers there are none: None ſuch here. Our fathers here, we deſcend to, go down to them; down, down to the grave. Him, and him onely, we goe up to, up to heaven, up even where CHRIST is ſitting at the right hand of GOD; and He, to that end, a father, even to make us aſcend thither to him. Heb. 10. 12.

Why would not Father ſuffice? Why is GOD added? Father is a name of much good will: But many a good father wants good means to his good will. GOD, is added, that He may not be defective that way; have means to His meaning. For, if he be a Father, firſt it is the voice of a father to his ſonne (in the Goſpell) omnia mea tua ſunt. Now then, if this Father be alſo GOD, and all his be ours, what can we deſire more, than all GOD hath, all that ever GOD is worth; able to ſatisfie never ſo vaſt a deſire (this.) For ſo, if Heaven and the joyes of it be his, they be ours too; and then there lacks nothing but aſcendo, to go up and take poſſeſſion of them: and here (loe) it is, Aſcendo ad patrem. Luke 15. 32.

Bound to him for this firſt, Patrem Deum. No whit leſſe bound for the ſecond; for putting to theſe pronounes poſſeſſives, Meum, and veſtrum (which is the ſecond ſingle combination.) For, till they came, till they in this wiſe were put to; Meum was meum, and Veſtrum was veſtrum; His was his, and Ours was ours: his; his owne; and ours, to our ſelves, and there an end. No relation either to other; no intereſt either in other. But, now, Meum is made veſtrum; and veſtrum, meum. His, ours; and ours his, entertchangeably. A bleſſed change may we ſay: His great Meum for our little veſtrum: Little ours for great His. Every one will ſee the odds betweene theſe. That (indeed) we are as much bound for meum and veſtrum, as for Patrem and Deum. Nay, more. For, as there is no comfort in heaven, without GOD; nor in GOD, without a Father: So, is there not any either in Father, Heaven, or GOD, without [ours] to give us a property in them. This then for the ſecond ſingle. Now to the two double. 2 Meum, veſtrum. The ſecond paire.

Patrem meum ſtands firſt, and is firſt every way. But Patrem meum will do us no good. That which muſt do us the good, is the ſecond in place; but (to us) the firſt. Patrem veſtrum, that will ſerve; that alone will ſerve us, we need no more. Oſtende nobis Patrem & ſufficit (ſaith Saint Philip.) But, how that ſhould be compaſſed, 3 Patrem meum, Patrem veſtrum: The third paire. Iohn 14 8.

and His meum ſhould be our veſtrum, that He ſhould be ours, hic labor eſt, that is all the matter.

Deum meum.
Deum veſtrum:
The IV. paire.

This leads us to the other, the laſt combination of all, of Deum meum and veſtrum. For, that His Father may be our Father, no remedy, but our GOD muſt firſt be his GOD. So, this fetches in that. One would not ſerve: there behooved to be twaine: elſe the chariot will not goe.

It will be beſt, ante omnia, to ſet forth, in theſe termes, what is proper, and what not; what CHRIST's and what ours. Much light we ſhall receive thereby.

Patrem meum.
Deum meum.

CHRIST, on His part, ſaith My Father: and He ſaith alſo, My GOD. For Him to ſay, My Father, is proper; we ſee reaſon for it. But, for him, to ſay, My GOD, no reaſon at all, altogether unproper. For, how can GOD have a GOD?

Deum veſtrum.
Patrem veſtrum.

CHRIST, on His part, ſaith Deum veſtrum, your GOD; right and true (that) we are His poore creatures, He our GOD; ſo knowne, ſo acknowledged to be. But He ſaith further, Patrem veſtrum, your Father: how that can be ſaid, we ſee not. Alas we are but duſt and aſhes: Our lineage is well ſet forth by Iob: We muſt ſay to rottenneſſe, Thou art my father; And to the wormes, Ye are my mother; Ye are my ſiſter. No Father of ours He, not properly.

Iob 17.14.

Patrem meum:
Deum veſtrum.

In exact propriety of ſpeech then, Father here referres to CHRIST: GOD to us. His Father, is right: ſo is, our GOD. We will never ſpend a word on them, let them goe. But, his GOD, no way right; no more than, our Father. Theſe two, it is ſure, are unproper, both. And if ever they ſhall be verified one of the other, it muſt be brought about by ſome other wayes and meanes. And, ſo it is; and by the ſame way that the one, by the very ſame the other. His Father, our Father, By His meanes. Our GOD, his GOD, by ours.

Deum meum.
Deum veſtrum.

Deum meum.

To ſet them in right method, in their true order, Erunt noviſſimi primi; the laſt is to be firſt: we to begin at Deum veſtrum, the very laſt word of all, as it were the foot of the ladder, or the two ſmaller wheeles that go before. To make meum veſtrum; his, ours; Veſtrum is to be made meum, ours to be made his. Our GOD to become His GOD, firſt, that his Father may become our Father after. Him, that was our GOD, we to make his GOD; that him, that was his Father, He may make to be our Father.

That this might proceed, he that doth here aſcend, was to deſcend. Deſcend, whither? Even to be one of us: and we were creatures; and ſo, being one of us, He to be a creature as well as we. So he was, and ſo he is. For, even the ſoule and body of CHRIST are in the rank of creatures; and, relation had to them, a creature he is, a GOD he hath, the ſame, that we (for there is but one:) and ſo He may truly ſay, Deum meum, Our GOD is his GOD. That we might aſcend to the higheſt heaven, he was to deſcend εἰς κατώτερα τῆς γῆς, to the loweſt parts of the earth: and ſo did. Deſcendo ad matrem with him, that aſcendo ad Patrem with us. That we might crie Abba Father, he was content to crie that ſtrange crie Eli, Eli, My GOD, My GOD, on the Croſſe.

Ephes. 4 9.
Matth. 27. 46.

So CHRIST might then ſay, and truly ſay, My GOD, no leſſe than My Father: His Father, as GOD; his GOD, as man. As the Sonne of GOD, a GOD he hath not; a Father he hath: As the Sonne of man, a Father he hath not; a GOD he hath. A GOD (I ſay) then, he hath; but, never till then; never till He medled with us. But then, he had: and ſince he hath. He, that was ours, not his; is now his, as well as ours. Theſe two wheeles are ſet right.

Patrem veſtrum.

We have brought it to this, that CHRIST may ſay Deum meum. After we have brought him to Deum meum, we are halfe way; Our GOD is his. But now, how ſhall we get his Father to have him to be our Father? Firſt, his Father he was from all eternity: he, and none but he can ſay, and ſay properly, Patrem meum. But he is content to quit that (none but he) and to take us in; and he being our brother before fore, to make us His, now. Ours, in our eſtate of this mortall: His, in His eſtate of immortall life. For, here (now) riſing, and upon His aſcending, He adopts us; and, by adopting, makes us; and by making, pronounces us His brethren, and ſo children to His Father. Us, His children; Him, our Father, witneſſe fratres meos, and patrem veſtrum, both from His owne mouth. Salvum ſit verbum Domini mei, by vertue whereof, it is now Abba Pater with us. Now Vado ad Patrem, we a Father of GOD (even as CHRIST that ſpake it) to pray to, to goe to. Meum and veſtrum both now in one. Then we had a Father of Him, and ſince we have: But, till then, a GOD we had, but not a Father: at leaſt, not ſuch a Father of Him as ſince we have. This, the bonum paſcha, the fœlix tranſitus, the bleſſed enterchange we ſpake of.

Who gets by this? Deum meum, His, His GOD, was His humiliation. He as low as we, nay lower than the loweſt of us, when He cried My GOD, My GOD. Deum meum, His humiliation, and Patrem veſtrum, our exaltation; by it, we are made, in caſe, as He, to riſe, to aſcend: to goe whither, to be where He is, for ever; to ſay, Ibo ad Patrem; to ſay, Vado ad Patrem; to ſay with Him, Father forgive; and againe, Father, into Thy hands I commend My Spirit. In Patrem veſtrum are all theſe. Deum meum Patrem veſtrum. Luke 23. 34. 46.

So by this time, we ſee the neceſſity of both theſe combinations, of both paire of wheeles; and that to our great comfort.

But we are not ſo to look to our own comfort, but that withall we be carefull to preſerve His honour; that ſo, both may goe hand in hand together. And there is order taken for that too, by ſevering of each paire; that it is not noſtrum in one word ours: but meum, and veſtrum (in two words) mine, and yours? Yet, otherwiſe His, and otherwiſe ours; Both, as Father, and as GOD. Meum and Veſtrum, not Noſtrum.

As Father. His, by nature, by very generation: Ours, by grace, by meere adoption. As GOD (and there we are before Him) our GOD, by nature. His no otherwiſe, than as He tooke upon Him our nature.

But, His honour thus ſet ſafe, by this partition kept on foot, then let the wheeles run, purſue the reſt, as farre as you pleaſe, make of it the moſt you can, for your beſt availe. That one and the ſame is both His and ours. One Father, one GOD, to Him and us both. Father, to Him; GOD, to us; GOD, to Him; Father, to us. If we, a GOD; He one. If He, a Father; we, one. Our GOD, CHRIST'S GOD, CHRIST'S Father, our Father. There is aſcendo your chariot, and theſe are the foure wheeles on which it moveth, and is carried up to Heaven.

But, where is Eaſter-day, what is become of it all this while? For, me thinks, all the time, we are thus about Father and Sonne, and taking our nature and becomming one of us, it ſhould be Chriſtmas by this, and not Eaſter (as it is) that this a meeter Text (one would think) for that Feaſt; and that (now) it comes out of ſeaſon.

Not a whit. It is CHRIST that ſpeaketh, and He never ſpeaketh but in ſeaſon; never, but to the purpoſe; never, but on the right Day.

A brother-hood (we grant) was begun then, at Chriſtmas, by His birth, as upon that Day, for loe then was He borne. But, ſo was He now alſo, at Eaſter: borne then, too: and after a better manner borne. His Reſurrection was a ſecond birth, Eaſter a ſecond Chriſtmas. Hodiè genui te, as true of this day, as of that. The Church appointeth, for the firſt Pſalme, this day, the ſecond Pſalme, the Pſalme of hodiè genui te. The Apoſtle ſaith expreſly (Acts 13. 33.) When He roſe from the dead, then was hodiè genui te, fulfilled in Him, verified of Him. Then He was primogenitus à mortuis, Gods firſt begotten from the dead. And upon this latter birth doth the brother-hood of this day depend. Pſal. 2 7. Coloſſ. 1. 18.

There was then a new begetting, this day. And if a new begetting, a new Paternity, and fraternity, both. By the hodiè genui te of Chriſtmas, how ſoone He was borne of the Virgins wombe, He became our brother (ſinne except) ſubject to all our infirmities; ſo, to mortality, and even to death it ſelfe. And, by death, that brotherhood had been diſſolved, but for this dayes riſing. By the hodiè genui te of Eaſter, as ſoone as He was borne againe of the wombe of the grave, He begins a new brother-hood, founds a new fraternity ſtraight; adopts us (we ſee) anew againe; by His fratres meos; and thereby, Hee that was primogenitus à mortuis, becomes primogenitus inter multos fratres: When the firſt begotten from the dead, then the firſt begotten in this reſpect, among many brethren. Before, He was ours: now, we are His. That was by the mothers ſide; ſo, He ours: This is by Patrem veſtrum, the Fathers ſide; So, we His. But halfe-brothers before; Never, of whole bloud, till now. Now, by Father and Mother both, fratres germani, fratres fraterrimi, we cannot be more.

Rom. 8. 29.

To ſhut all up in a word: That of Chriſtmas was the fraternity riſing out of Deum meum, Deum veſtrum; So, then, brethren. This of Eaſter, adopting us to His Father, was the fraternity of Patrem meum, Patrem veſtrum: So, brethren, now.

This dayes is the better birth, the better brother-hood by farre: the fore-wheeles are the leſſe, the hinder, the larger, ever. For, firſt, that of ours was when He was mortall: But, His adoption He deferred, He would not make it, while He was mortall: reſerved it, till He was riſen againe, and was even upon His aſcending, and then he made it. So, mortall He was, when He ours: But, now (when we His) He is immortall, and we brethren to Him, in that ſtate, the ſtate of immortality. Brethren, before; but not to aſcendo: now, to aſcendo and all. Death was in danger, to have diſſolved that: But, death hath now no power on Him, or on this, this ſhall never be in danger of being diſſolved any more. That, without this, is nothing.

But we ſhall not need to ſtand in termes of compariſon: ſince, then, it was but one of theſe; now, it is both. His Father is now become Our Father, to make us joynt-heires with Him of His heavenly Kingdome: His GOD likewiſe, become our GOD, to make us partakers, with them both, of the Divine Nature. Patrem meum and Patrem veſtrum, Deum meum, and Deum veſtrum run both merrily together, and aſcendo upon them both.

Whereof (I meane, of the partaking of His divine Nature) to give us full and perfect aſſurance, as He tooke our fleſh, and became our brother, fleſh of our fleſh then; ſo He gives us His fleſh, that we may become His brethren, fleſh of His fleſh, now: And gives it us now upon this day, the very day of our Adoption into this fraternity. By taking our fleſh; ſo begun His: By giving His fleſh, ſo, beginnes ours. For, requiſite it was, that ſince we drew our death from the firſt Adam, by partaking His ſubſtance; ſemblably and in like ſort, we ſhould partake the ſubſtance of the Second Adam, that ſo wee might draw our life from Him; Should be ingrafted into Him, as the branches into the vine, that wee might receive his ſap, (which is His Similitude:) Should be fleſh of His fleſh, not He of ours, as before, but we of his now: that we might be vegetate with His Spirit, even with His Divine Spirit. For, now in Him, the Spirits are ſo united, as partake one, and partake the other withall.

And it hath beene, and it is therefore an ordinance in the Church for ever, that, as upon this day, at the returning of it continually, His fleſh and bloud ſhould be, in Sacrament exhibited to us; As to make a yearely ſolemne renewing of this fraternity, ſo likewiſe to ſeale to us the fruit of it, our riſing; aud not riſing onely, but, ſo riſing, as aſcendo goe withall. A badge of the one, a pledge of the other. For which cauſe, as it is called the living bread for that, it ſhall reſtore us to life, and raiſe us up in the the laſt day: So is it alſo, the bread that came downe from heaven; came downe from thence, to make us go up thither, and in the ſtrength of it to aſcend into GOD's holy hill, and there reſt with Him in His Tabernacle for ever. That ſo, the truth of the Feaſt, and of the Text both, may be fulfilled in us everlaſtingly, with GOD (Patrem veſtrum) our Father; and with CHRIST (fratres Meos) our Brother: and with the bleſſed Spirit, the Love of them both one to the other, and of them both to us.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XIII. of Aprill, A.D. MDCXXIII. being EASTER-DAY.

ESAY, Chap. LXIII. Ver. I. II. III.

Quis eſt Iſte qui venit de Edom, &c.

Who is this that commeth from Edom, with red garments from Bozra? He is glorious in His apparell, and walketh in great ſtrength: I ſpeake in righteouſneſſe, and am mighty to ſave.

Wherefore is thine apparell red, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-preſſe?

I have troden the wine-preſſe alone, and of all the people there was none with me: for, I will tread them in mine anger, and tread them under foot in my wrath, and their bloud ſhall be ſprinkled upon my garments, and I will ſtaine all my rayment.

Acts 8. 34.

EVer when we read, or heare read any text or paſſage out of this Prophet, the Prophet Eſay, it brings to our minde the Noble-man, Acts VIII. that ſitting in his Chariot, read another like paſſage out of this ſame Prophet. Brings him to minde: and with him, his queſtion, Of whom doth the Prophet ſpeake this? of himſelfe, or of ſome other? Not of himſelfe, that's once: It cannot be Himſelfe. It is he, that asks the queſtion. Some other then it muſt needs be, of whom it is; and we to aske who that other was.

The tenour of Scripture, that Noble-man then read, was out of the LIII. Chapter, and this of ours out of the LXIII. Ten Chapters betweene. But, if Saint Philip had found him reading reading of this here, as he did, of that: he would likewiſe have begun at this ſame Scripture, as at that he did, and preached to Him CHRIST: Onely with this difference: out of that, CHRISTS Paſſion; out of this, His Reſurrection. For, Hee that was led as a ſheep to be ſlaine, and ſo was ſlaine there; He it is, and no other, that rides and comes here backe like a Lion, from Bozra, imbrued with blood, the blood of His enemies. Eſay 53.7.

I have (before I was aware) diſcloſed, who this partie is. It was not amiſſe, I ſo ſhould; not to hold you long in ſuſpence, but to give you a little light at the firſt, whom it would fall on. CHRIST it is. Two things there are that make, it can be no other but He. [1] One is without the text, in the end of the Chapter next before: There is a proclamation, Behold, here comes your SAVIOUR, and immediately, He that comes, is this Partie here, from Edom. He is our SAVIOUR, and beſides Him there is none. Even CHRIST the LORD. [2] The other is in the Text it ſelfe, in theſe words: Torcular calcavi ſolus, I have trod the wine-preſſe alone. Words, ſo proper to CHRIST, ſo every where aſcribed to Him, and to Him only, as you ſhall not read them any where applied to any other: no, not by the Iewes themſelves. So as, if there were no more but theſe two, they ſhew it plainely enough, it is, it can be none but CHRIST. Chap. 62.11.

And CHRIST, when? Even this day, of all dayes. His comming here from Edom, will fall out to be His riſing from the dead. His returne from Bozra nothing but His vanquiſhing of Hell. We may uſe His words in applying it, Thou haſt not left my ſoule in hell, but brought me backe from the deep of the earth againe.) Nothing but the act of His riſing againe. So that, this very morning was this Scripture fulfilled in our eares. Pſal.16.10. 71.20.

The whole text entire is a dialogue between two, [1] the Prophet; and [2] CHRIST. There are in it two Queſtions; and to the two queſtions two Anſwers. [1] The Prophets firſt queſtion is touching the Partie Himſelfe, who He is; in theſe words, Who is this? To which, the Partie Himſelfe anſwers, in the ſame verſe, theſe words, that am I, one that, &c. I.

The Prophets ſecond queſtion is about his colours, why He was all in red (in the ſecond verſe:) Wherefore then is thy apparell, &c. The anſwer to that is (in the third verſe) in theſe: I have troden &c. For I will tread them downe. II.

Of CHRIST: Of His riſing or comming back: of His colours: of the wine-preſſe, that gave Him this tincture, or rather of the two wine-preſſes: [1] the Wine-preſſe of Redemption, firſt; [2] and then, of the other Wine-preſſe of Vengeance.

THE Prophets uſe to ſpeake of things to come, as if they ſaw them preſent before their eyes. That makes their Prophecies be called Viſions. In his viſion here, the Prophet being taken up in ſpirit, ſees one comming. Comming, whence? From the Land or Countrey of Idumæa or Edom. From what place there? From Bozra the chiefe Citie in the Land, the place of greateſt ſtrength. Who will lead me into the ſtrong Citie? That is Bozra: Who will bring me into Edom? He that can doe the firſt, can doe the latter. Win Bozra, and Edom is won. I

The firſt Queſtion touching the Partie: Who it is. Pſal.60.9.

There was a crie in the end of the Chapter before: Behold, here comes your SAVIOUR. He looked; and ſaw one comming. Two things he deſcries in this Party. [1] One, His habit, that he was formoſus in ſtolâ, very richly arrayed. [2] The other, His gate: that He came ſtoutly marching, or pacing the ground very ſtrongly. Two good familiar notes, to deſcrie a ſtranger by. His Apparell, whether rich or meane:

which the world, moſt commonly takes notice of men, by. His Gate: for, weake men have but a feeble gate. Valiant ſtrong men tread upon the ground ſo, as, by it, you may diſcerne their ſtrength.

Now, this Partie He came ſo goodly in His apparell, ſo ſtately in His march, as if, by all likelihood, He had made ſome conqueſt in Edom (the place He came from;) had had a victory in Bozra (the Citie where He had beene.) And the truth is, ſo He had. He ſaith it in the third verſe, He had trodden downe his enemies, had trampled upon them made the blood even ſtart out of them; which blood of theirs had all to ſtained His garments. This was no evill newes, for Eſayes countriemen, the people of God; Edom was the worſt enemie they had.

With joy then: but, not without admiration, ſuch a Party ſees the Prophet come toward him. Sees Him; but knowes Him not: thinkes Him worthy the knowing: ſo thinking, and not knowing, is deſirous to be inſtructed, concerning Him. Out of this deſire, askes, quis eſt? Not, of himſelfe, (he durſt not be ſo bold) Who are you? but of ſome ſtander by, Whom have we here? Can you tell, who this might be? The firſt queſtion.

What is meant 1 By Edom. Mat. 2. 14.

But before we come to the queſtion, a word or two of the place where He had beene, and whence He came: Edom, and Bozra what is meant by them? For, if this Partie be CHRIST; CHRIST was in Ægypt a Child: but never in Edom, that wee reade; never at Bozra in all His life. So as here, we are to leave the letter. Some other it might be the letter might meane: we will not much ſtand to looke after Him. For how ever poſſibly ſome ſuch there was, yet it will plainly appeare by the ſequele, that the Teſtimonie of JESUS, as it is of each other, ſo it is the ſpirit of this propheſie. Apoc. 9. 10.

Go we then to the kernell, and let the husk lie: let go the dead letter, and take we to us the ſpirituall meaning that hath ſome life in it. For, what care we for the literall Edom or Bozra, what became of them: what are they to us? Let us compare ſpirituall things with ſpirituall things: that is it muſt do us good.

I will give you a key to this, and ſuch like Scriptures. Familiar it is the Prophets (nothing more, than) to ſpeake to their People, in their owne language; than to expreſſe their ghoſtly enemies, the both mortall and immortall enemies of their ſoules, under the titles and termes of thoſe Nations and Cities, as were the knowne ſworne enemies of the Common-wealth of Iſrael. As, of Egypt where they were in bondage: as of Babylon, where, in captivitie: elſe-where as of Edom here, who maliced them more than both thoſe. If the Angell tell us right, Rev. XI. there is a Spirituall Sodome and Egypt, where our LORD was crucified: and, if they, why not a ſpirituall Edom too, whence our LORD roſe againe? Put all three together, Egypt, Babel, Edom: all their enmities, all are nothing to the hatred, that Hell beares us. But yet, if you ask, of the three which was the worſt? That, was Edom. To ſhew, the Prophet, here, made good choice of his place: Edom upon earth, comes neareſt to the kingdome of darkneſſe in Hell, of all the reſt. And that, in theſe reſpects: Apoc. 11. 8.

1 Firſt, they were the wickedeſt people under the Sunne. If there were any devils upon earth, it was they: if the Divell, of any countrey, he would chooſe to bee an Edomite. No place on earth, that reſembled hell neerer: next to hell on earth, was Edom, for all that nought was. Malachi cals Edom, the border of all wickedneſſe; a people with whom God was angry for ever. In which very points, no enemies ſo fitly expreſſe the enemies of our ſoule, againſt whom the anger of GOD is eternall, and the ſmoke of whoſe torments ſhall aſcend for ever. Hell, for all that nought is. That, if the power of darkneſſe, and hell it ſelfe, if they be to be expreſſed by any place on earth, they cannot be better expreſſed than in theſe, Edom and Bozra. Malach. 1. 4. Apoc. 14. 11.

2 I will give you another. The Edomites were the poſteritie of Eſau: the ſame is Edom. So, they were the neereſt of kinne to the Iewes, of all Nations; ſo, ſhould have beene their beſt friends. The Iewes and they came of two brethren: Edom was the elder: that was the griefe; that the people of Iſrael comming of Iacob Gen. 36. 1.

the younger brother had inlarged their border; got them a better ſeat and countrey by farre, than they (the Edomites) had. Hence grew envie: and an enemie out of envie, is ever the worſt. So were they: the moſt cankred enemies that Iſrael had. The caſe is ſo betweene us and the evill ſpirits. Angels they were (we know) and ſo; in a ſort, elder brethren to us. Of the two intellectuall natures, they the firſt created. Our caſe (now) CHRIST be thanked, is much better than theirs which is that enraged them againſt us, as much and more, than ever any Edomite againſt Iſrael. Hell, for rancour and envie.

Yet one more: they were ready to do Gods people all the miſchiefe, they were able; and, when they were not able of themſelvs, they ſhewed their good wils, though; ſet on others. And when they had won Ieruſalem, cryed down with it, downe with it, even to the ground: lo leſſe would ſerve. And when it was on the ground, inſulted and rejoyced above meaſure: Remember the children of Edom, this is right the divels property quarto modo, He that hath but the heart of a man, will even rue, to ſee his enemie lying in extreme miſery. None but very divels, or divels incarnate will doe ſo: corrupt their compaſſion, caſt off all pitie; rejoyce, inſult, take delight at ones deſtruction. Hell for their ὑπερηφανία, inſulting over men in miſery. 3 Pſal. 137. 7.

But will ye goe even to the letter? None did ever ſo much miſchiefe to David; as did Doeg: he was an Edomite. Nor none ſo much to the Son of David, CHRIST; none bore more malice to Him, firſt and laſt; than did Herod; and He was an Edomite. So, which way ſoever we take it, next the kingdome of darkneſſe was Edom upon earth. And Chriſt comming from thence, may well be ſaid to come from Edom. 4 1 Sam. 22. 9.

2. By Bozra.

But, what ſay you to Bozra? This: that if the countrey of Edom, do well ſet before us the whole kingdome of darkneſſe, or region of death; Bozra may well ſtand for hell it ſelfe. Bozra, was the ſtrongeſt hold of that kingdome Hell, is ſo of this. The whole countrie of Idumea was called and known by the name of Vz, that is of ſtrength; And, what of ſuch ſtrength, as death? all the ſons of men ſtoope to him. Bozra was called the ſtrong Citie: Hell is as ſtrong as it every way. They write it was invironed with huge high rocks on all ſides: one only cleft to come to it, by. And, when you were in, there muſt you periſh: no getting out againe. For all the world like to hell, as Abraham deſcribes it to him that was in it, They that would goe from this place to you cannot poſſibly; neither can they come from thence to us; the gulfe is ſo great, no getting out. No habeas corpus, from death; No habeas animam out of hell; you muſt let that alone for ever. Pſal. 60. 9. Luk. 16. 26. Pſal. 49. 8.

Now then, have we the Prophets true Edome; his very Bozra, indeed. By this, we underſtand what they meane. Edom, the kingdome of darkneſſe and death: Bozra, the ſeat of the Prince of darkneſſe (that is) Hell it ſelfe. From both which CHRIST, this day, returned. His ſoule was not left in hell: His fleſh ſaw not (but roſe from) corruption. Pſal. 16. 10.

For, over Edom, ſtrong it was, yet David caſt his ſhooe over it, (that is, after the Hebrew phraſe) ſet his foot upon it, and trod it downe. And Bozra, as impregnable a Hold as it was holden, yet David won it; was led into the ſtrong City: led into it, and came thence againe. So did the Son of David, this day from His Edom, death, how ſtrong ſoever, yet ſwallowed up in victorie, this day. And, from Hell His Bozra: how hard ſoever it held (as he that was in it, found there was no getting thence;) CHRIST is got forth, we ſee. How many ſoules ſoever there were left, His was not left there Pſal. 108. 9. 1 Cor. 15. 54.

And, when did He this? when, ſolutus doloribus inferni, He looſed the paines of hell; trod upon the Serpents head, and all to bruiſed it; tooke from death his ſting; from hell his victorie (that is) his ſtandard, alluding to the Romane ſtandard that had in it the image of the goddeſſe Victorie. Seazed upon the Chirographum contra nos, the Ragman roll, that made ſo much againſt us; took it, rent it, and ſo rent, nailed it to His Croſſe; made His banner of it (of the Law cancelled) hanging at it banner-wiſe. And having thus ſpoiled Principalities and Powers, He made an open ſhew of them, triumphed over them Act. 2. 24. 1 Cor. 15. 55. Col. 2. 14.

Coloſſ. 2. 15. in ſemetipſo, in His own perſon: (All three are in Col. 2.) and triumphantly came thence with the keyes of Edom and Bozra both, of hell and of death, both at His girdle, as He ſhewes Himſelfe. Apoc. 1. And when was this? if ever, on this very day. On which, having made a full and perfect conqueſt of death, and of him that hath the power of death, that is, the Divell (Heb. 2.) He roſe and returned thence, this morning, as a mighty Conquerour, ſaying as Debora did in her ſong: O my ſoule, thou haſt troden downe ſtrength, thou haſt marched valiantly.

Heb. 2. 14. Jud. 5. 21.

And comming back thus, from the debellation of the ſpirituall Edom, and the breaking up of the true Bozra indeed, it is wondred, Who it ſhould be. Note this: that no body knew CHRIST at His riſing; neither Mary Magdalen, nor they that went to Emmaus. No more doth the Prophet here.

Joh. 20. 14. Luk. 24. 16.

1 Now, there was reaſon to ask this queſtion, for none would ever think it to be CHRIST. There is great oddes; it cannot be He. 1. Not He: He was put to death, and put into His grave, and a great ſtone upon Him, not three dayes ſince. This Partie is alive and alives like. His Ghoſt it cannot be: He glides not (as Ghoſts, they ſay, doe) but paces the ground very ſtrongly.

2 Not He: He had His apparell ſhared among the ſouldiers; was left all naked. This Partie hath gotten Him on glorious apparell, rich ſcarlet.

3 Not He: for, if He come, He muſt come in white, in the linnen, He was lapped in, and laid in His grave. This Partie comes in quite another colour, all in red. So the colours ſuit not.

4 To be ſhort, not He: for He was put to a foile, to a foule foile, as ever was any: they did to Him even what they liſted; ſcorned, inſulted upon Him. It was then the houre and power of darkneſſe. This Partie, whatſoever He is, hath gotten the upper hand, won the field; marches ſtately, Conquerour-like. His, the day ſure.

Luk. 22. 53.

The firſt anſwer. That Partie is Chriſt.

Well; yet CHRIST it is. His anſwer gives Him for no other. To His anſwer then, The partie (it ſeemes) over-heard the Prophets asking, and is pleaſed to give an anſwer to it Himſelfe: we are much bound to Him for it. No man can tell, ſo well as He Himſelfe, who He is. Some other might miſtake Him, and miſ-enform us of Him: Now, we are ſure we are right. No error perſonæ.

His name indeed, He tels not, but deſcribes Himſelfe by two ſuch notes, as can agree to none properly but to CHRIST. Of none can theſe two be ſo affirmed, as of Him they may. That, by theſe two, we know, this is CHRIST, as plainly, as if His name had beene ſpelled to us. 1. Speaking righteouſneſſe, and righteouſneſſe referred to ſpeech, ſignifieth truth ever. No guile to be found in His mouth: and, omnis homo is, you know what. 2. Mightie to ſave. and, Vana ſalus hominis, vaine is the helpe of man. Who ever ſpake ſo right as He ſpake? Or who ever was ſo mightie to ſave as He? And this is His anſwer to quis eſt iſte.

1 Pet. 2. 22. Iſal. 115. 11. 60. 15.

That am I. One that ſpake righteouſneſſe, and am mighty to ſave. Righteous in ſpeaking; mighty in ſaving, whoſe word is truth: whoſe worke is ſalvation. Juſt and true of my word and promiſe; Powerfull and mightie in performance of both. The beſt deſcription (ſay I) that can be of any man: by his word and deed both.

1 His Natures. Ioh. 1. 1. Matth. 1. 21.

And ſee how well they fit. Speaking is moſt proper; that, referres to Him, as the Word: (in the beginning was the Word:) to His Divine nature. Saving, that refers to His very name JESUS, given Him by the Angell, as man, for that He ſhould ſave His people from their ſins: from which none have ever power to ſave, but He. There have you His two Natures.

2 His Office. Malach. 2. 7. Dan 9. 25.

Speaking referres to His Office of Prieſt: the Prieſts lips to preſerve knowledge; the Law of righteouſneſſe to be required at His mouth. Saving (and that, mightily) pertaines to Him as a King; is the office (as Daniel cals Him) of Meſſias the Captaine. Righteouſneſſe He ſpake by His preaching. Saving, that belongs firſt to His miraculous ſuffering: It being farre a greater miracle for the Deitie to ſuffer any the leaſt injury, than to create a new world, yea many. But, ſecondly (which is proper to the Text and time) in His mighty ſubduing and treading down hell and death, and all the power of Satan. Prophetiza nobis (they ſaid, at His Paſſion) ſpeak who hit you, there: and Ave Rex, they ſaid too: Both in ſcorne; but moſt true, both. Luk. 22. 64. Matth. 27. 28.

You may refer theſe two, if you pleaſe; to His two maine benefits redounding to us from theſe two. Two things there are that undoe us: Errour and ſin. From His Speaking, we receive knowledge of His truth againſt errour. From His Saving, we receive the power of grace, againſt ſin, and ſo, are ſaved from ſins ſequele, Edom and Bozra, both. This is His deſcription; and this is enough. A full deſcription of His perſon, in His Natures, Offices, Benefits; in word and in deed. He it is, and can be none but He. To reflect a little on theſe two. 3 The Benefits.

You will obſerve, that His Speaking is ſet down ſimply, but in His ſaving, He is ſaid to be mighty, or (as the word is) multus ad ſervandum. So, mark where the multus is. He is not multus ad loquendum, one that ſaith much; and paucus ad ſervandum, and then does little, as the manner of the world is. Multus is not there, at His ſpeech. It is put to ſervandum; There, He is much, and His Might much, Much of might to ſave. 1 Mighty not in ſpeaking.

That His might is not put, in treading down or deſtroying. No, but multus ad ignoſcendum, in the fifty five Chapter before: and multus ad ſervandum, here. Mighty to ſhew mercy, and to ſave. Yet, mighty He is too, to deſtroy and tread downe: Elſe had He not atchieved this victory in the Text. Mighty to ſave, implieth ever mighty to ſubdue; to ſubdue, them, whom He ſaves us from. Yet, of the twaine, He chooſeth rather the terme of ſaving (though both be true) becauſe ſaving is with Him primæ intentionis: So of the twaine, in that, He would have His might appeare rather. Mighty to deſtroy, He will not have mentioned or come in his ſtyle: but mighty to ſave, that is his title; that, the quality, he takes delight in: delights to deſcribe himſelfe, and to be deſcribed by. 2 But, in ſaving. Eſay 55. 7.

You will yet marke alſo, as the coupling of theſe two in the deſcription of CHRIST (for, not either of theſe, alone will ſerve; but betweene them both, they make it up) ſo, that they goe together, theſe two, ever. He ſaves not any, but thoſe he teaches. And note, the order of them too. For, that that ſtands firſt, he doth firſt; firſt teaches. Mighty to ſave he is; but whom to ſave? whom he ſpeakes righteouſneſſe to, and they heare him, and returne not againe to their former folly. There is no phanſying to our ſelves, we can diſpenſe with one of theſe; never care, whether we deale with the former, or no; whether we heare him ſpeake at all: but take hold of the latter, and be ſaved with a good will. No: you cannot; but if you heare him ſpeake firſt. He ſaith ſo, and ſets them ſo himſelfe. 3 Yet he teacheth too: and that firſt.

And put this to it, and I have done this point. That, ſuch as is himſelfe, ſuch, if we heare him, will he make us to be. And the more true and ſoothfaſt any of us is of his word, the more given to do good and ſave, the liker to him, and the liker to have our parts in his riſing. We know, quis eſt iſte now. This for the firſt part. We to be like Him in both.

Now, the Prophet hearing him anſwer ſo gently, takes to him a little courage, to aske him one queſtion more, about his colours: He was a little troubled with them. If you be ſo mighty to ſave, as you ſay, how comes it then, what ailes y our garments to be ſo red? and adds, what kinde of red; and he cannot tell, what to liken them better to, than as if he had newly come out of ſome wine-preſſe; had beene treading grapes, and preſſing out wine, there. He cals it wine: but the truth is, it was no wine: It was very blood. New wine, in ſhew; blood indeed; that upon His garments. So much appeareth in the next verſe following. Where He ſaith Himſelfe plainly, that Blood it was, that was ſprinkled upon His cloaths, and had ſtained them all over. We know well, our reaſon leads us, there could be no vintage, at this time of the yeare, the ſeaſon ſerves not: Blood it was. II The ſecond queſtion. why His apparell is red:

But,

The Anſwer.

But becauſe the Prophet made mention of a wine-preſſe, had hit on that Simile; taking occaſion, upon the naming it, He ſhapes Him an anſwer according: That (indeed) He had beene in a wine-preſſe. And, ſo He had. The truth is, He had beene in one: Nay, in two then. In one He had beene, before this here. A double wine-preſſe (we loſe nothing by this) we find; CHRIST was in both. Wee cannot well take notice of the one, but we muſt needs touch upon the other. But, thus they are diſtinguiſhed. In that former, it was in torculari calcatus ſum ſolus: in this latter, it is Torcular calcavi ſolus. In the former, He was Himſelfe trodden and preſſed: He was the grapes and cluſters Himſelfe. In this latter here, He that was troden on before, gets up againe, and doth here tread upon, and here tread downe, calcare and conculcare (both words are in the verſe) upon ſome others (as it might be the Edomites,) The Preſſe He was trodden in, was His Croſſe and paſſion. This, which He came out of, this day, was in His deſcent and reſurrection: Both, proper to this Feaſt; One to Good-friday, the other, to Eaſter-day.

The firſt wine-preſſe.
Chriſts calcatus ſum.
Iohn 15.5.

To purſue this of the wine-preſſe a little. The preſſe, the treading in it, is to make wine: Calcatus ſum is properly of grapes, the fruit of the vine. CHRIST is the true vine, He ſaith it Himſelfe. To make wine of Him, He, and the cluſters, He bare, muſt be preſſed. So He was. Three ſhrewd ſtreines they gave Him. One in Gethſemane, that made Him ſweat blood: The wine, or blood (all is one) came forth at all parts of Him. Another, in the Judgement hall, Gabbatha; which made the blood runne forth at his head, with the thornes; out of his whole body, with the Scourges; out of his hands and feet, with the nailes. The laſt ſtreine, at Golgotha: where, He was ſo preſſed, that they preſſed the very ſoule out of his body, and out ran blood and water both. Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina ſacramenta (ſaith S. Auguſtine) out came both Sacraments, the twine Sacraments of the Church.

Mat. 26.36.
17.

Out of theſe preſſures ran the blood of the grapes of the true vine; the fruit wherof (as it is ſaid Iudge 9.) cheereth both GOD and man. GOD, as a libamen, or drink-offering to Him. Man as the cup of ſalvation to them. But to make this wine, his cluſters were to be cut; cut, and caſt in; caſt in, and trodden on; trodden and preſſed out: all theſe, before he came to be wine in the cup. As likewiſe, when he cals Himſelfe, granum frumenti the wheat corne, theſe foure, 1 the ſicle, the 2 flaile, the 3 milſtone, 4 the oven, He paſſed thorow: All went over him, before He was made bread: The Shew-bread to GOD; to us, the Bread of life.

Iohn 12.24.

But, to returne to the wine-preſſe, to tell you the occaſion or reaſon, why thus it behoved to be. It was not idly done; What need then was there of it, this firſt preſſing? we find (1 Cor. 10.) Calix Dæmoniorum: The Divell hath a cup. Adam muſt needs be ſipping of it: Eritis ſicut Dii, went downe ſweetly, but poiſoned him: turned his nature quite. For Adam was by GOD, planted a naturall vine, a true root; but thereby, by that cup degenerated into a wilde ſtrange vine, which, inſtead of good grapes, brought forth labruſcas, wild grapes, grapes of gall: bitter cluſters, Moſes cals them: Coloquintida, the Prophet, Mors in ollâ, and mors in calice: by which is meant, the deadly fruit of our deadly ſinnes.

Eſay. 5.24.
Deut. 32.32.
2 Reg. 4.40.

But, (as it is in the fifth Chapter of this Prophecy) where GOD planted this vine firſt, He made a wine-preſſe in it: So, the grapes that came of this ſtrange vine were cut and caſt into the preſſe; thereof came a deadly wine; of which (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) In the hand of the LORD there is a cup, the wine is red, it is full mixt, and He powres out of it; and the ſinners of the earth are to drinke it, dreggs and all. Thoſe ſinners were our fathers, and we. It came to Bibite ex hoc omnes: They and we, were to drinke of it, all one after another round. Good reaſon, to drink as we had brewed; to drink the fruit of our own inventions, our owne words and works, we had brought forth.

Iſai. 26.27.

About, the cup went: all ſtreined at it. At laſt, to CHRIST it came: He was none none of the ſinners, but was found among them. By His good will, He would have had it paſſe, Tranſeat à me calix iſte; you know who that was. Yet, rather than we, than any of us ſhould take it (it would be our bane, He knew) He tooke it; off it went, dregs and all. Alas, the myrrhe they gave Him at the beginning, the vinegar at the ending of His Paſſion, were but poore reſemblances of this cup, ſuch as they were. That, another manner draught. We ſee it caſt Him into ſo unnaturall a ſweat of blood all over; as, if He had beene wrung and cruſhed in a wine-preſſe, it could not have beene more. This (loe) was the firſt wine-preſſe, and CHRIST in it, three dayes agoe; and, what with the ſcourges, nailes, and ſpeares, beſides, ſo preſſed, as forth it ran (blood or wine, call it what you will,) in ſuch, ſo great quantitie, as never ran it more plenteouſly out of any wine-preſſe of them all. Here is CHRISTUS in torculari, CHRISTS calcatus ſum. Eſay. 53. 12. Mat. 20. 39.

Of which wine ſo preſſed then out of Him, came our Cup, the Cup of this day, the cup of the New Teſtament in His blood, repreſented by the blood of the grape. Wherein long before, old Iacob foretold, Shilo, ſhould waſh his robe; as, full well He might have done, there came enough to have waſhed it over and over againe. So, you ſee now, how the caſe ſtands. That former, our cup due to us, and no way to Him, He drank for us, that it might paſſe from us, and we not drink it. Ours did He drinke, that we might drinke of His. He, the cup of wrath, that we, the cup of bleſſing: ſet firſt, before GOD as a Libamen, at the ſight or ſent whereof He ſmelleth a ſavour of reſt, and is appeaſed. After, reached to us, as a ſoveraigne reſtorative to recover us of the Divels poiſon (for, we alſo have beene ſipping at calix dæmoniorum more or leſſe, woe to us for it; and no way but this to cure us of it.) Lnk. 22. 20. Gen. 49. 11. Eſay 51. 22. 1 Cor. 10. 16.

By this time you ſee the need of the firſt preſſe, and of His being in it. Into which, He was content to be thrown and there trodden on; all, to ſatisfie His Father, out of His Juſtice, requiring the drinking up of that cup, by us, or by ſome for us: and it came to His lot. And never was there Lambe ſo meeke before the ſhearer, nor Worme ſo eaſie to be trodden on; never cluſter lay ſo quiet and ſtill to be bruiſed, as did CHRIST in the Preſſe of His Paſſion. Ever He be bleſſed for it.

Now come we to the other of this day in the Text. This is not that we have touched, but another. Wherein the ſtyle is altered: no more calcatus ſum, but calcavi and conculcavi too. Up (it ſeemes) He gat; and downe went they, and upon them He trod. His enemies of Edom lay like ſo many cluſters under His feet; and He caſt His ſhooe over them, ſet His foot on them, and paſhed them to peeces. The ſecond wine-preſſe. CHRISTS 1 Calcavi. Pſal. 108. 9.

If it had meant His Paſſion, it had beene His owne blood: but, this was none of His now; but the blood of His enemies. For, when the yeare of Redemption was paſt, then came the Day of Vengeance: then, came the time for that, and not before.

For, after the conſummatum eſt of His owne preſſure, (ſic oportuit impleri omnem juſtitiam) and that all the righteouſneſſe He ſpake had beene fulfilled: then riſe up, riſe thou arme of the LORD (ſaith the Prophet) and ſhew thy ſelfe mighty to ſave: He tooke Him to His ſecond attribute, to be avenged of thoſe that had been the ruine of us all, the ruine everlaſting, but for Him. To Edom, the kingdome of death, He went, whither we were to be led captives: yea, even to Bozra, to Hell it ſelfe, and there brake the gates of braſſe, and made the iron-bars fly in ſunder. He that was weake to ſuffer, became mighty to ſave. Of calcatus, He became Calcator. He that was throwne Himſelfe, threw them now another while, into the Preſſe, trod them downe, trampled upon them, as upon grapes in a fat, till He made the blood ſpring out of them, and all to ſprinkle His garments, as if He had come forth of a wine-preſſe indeed. And we, before, mercifully, rather than mightily, by His Paſſion; now mightily alſo ſaved, by His glorious Reſurrection. Mat. 3. 15. Eſay 51. 9. Eſay 45. 2.

Thus have you two ſeverall vines, the naturall and the ſtrange vine: the ſweet and the wilde: two Preſſes, that in Iury, that in Edom: two Cups, the curſed Cup, and the Cup of bleſſing: Of Wine or blood. His owne, His enemies blood: One ſanguis agni, the blood of the Lamb ſlaine: the other ſanguis Draconis, the blood of the Dragon, the red Dragon (Apoc. 12.) trod upon. One of His Paſſion, three dayes ſince: the other of his victorie, as to day. Betweene His buriall and His rising, some doing there had been, somwhat had beene done; somewhere He had beene; in some new wine-presse, in Bozra, that had given a new tincture of red to His rayment all over.

Both these shall you finde together set downe in one and the same Chapter, in two verses standing close one to the other, Apoc. V. 1 CHRIST represented first, as a Lambe, a Lambe slaine, died in His owne blood: this is the first Presse. 2 And immediately, (in the very next verse) straight represented again in a new shape, as a Lion, all be-bloodie with the blood of His prey: A Lion of the Tribe of Iuda; which comes home to this here. For Iuda (it is said) he should wash His robe in the blood of the grape. And so much for Torcular Calcavi.

Gen. 49. 9. 11.

2 Solus, alone. We must not leave our solus in any wise: that both these He did alone; so alone, as not any man in the world with Him in either.

Not in the first; there, pressed He was alone. All forsooke Him: His Disciples first; alone for them. Yet, then, He was not alone; His Father was still with Him: but after, Father and all: as appeares by His crie, Why hast thou forsaken me? Then, was He all alone indeed.

Mat. 26. 56. 27. 46.

Not in the second neither. The very next verse, He complaines, how that He looked about him round, and could not see any, would once offer to helpe Him. Out of Bozra He got alone; from death He rose, conquered, triumphed in semetipso, Himselfe alone. The Angell indeed rolled away the stone: but, He was risen first, and the stone rolled away after.

Accordingly, we to reckon of Him: that since in both these Presses He was for us; He, and none but He: that His, and none but His be the glory of both. That seeing neither we for our selves, nor any for us, could bring this to passe, but He and Hee onely; Hee and Hee only might have the whole honour of both; have no partner in that which is only His due, and no creatures else at all, either in Heaven or Earth.

And, is CHRIST come from Bozra? then, be sure of this, that He returning thus in triumph (as it is in the LXVIII. Psalme, the Psalme of the Resurrection) Hee will not leave us behind, for whom He did all this, but His owne will He bring againe, as He did from Basan: as from Basan, so from Bozra: as from the deepe pit of the Sea, so from the deepe pit of Hell. He that raised Iesus, shall by Iesus raise us up also from the Adama of Edom, the red mould of the earth, the power of the grave: and from the Bozra of Hell too, the gulfe whence there is no escaping out. Will make us in Him (saith the Apostle) more than conquerours, and tread downe Satan under our feet.

2 Cor. 1. 14.

Rom. 8. 37.

CHRISTS garments, why red.

You see, how CHRISTS garments came to be red. Of the wine-presse that made them so, we have spoken; but not of the colour it selfe. A word of that too. It was His colour at His Passion. They put Him in purple: then it was His weed in derision: and so was it in earnest. Both red it was it selfe, and so, He made it more with the dye of His owne blood. And the same colour he is now in againe, at his Rising. Not with his owne, now; but, with the blood of the wounded Edomites; whome treading under his feet, their blood bestained him and his apparell. So, one and the same colour at both: Dying and Rising, in red; but, with difference, as much as is betweene His own, and his enemies blood.

The Spouse in the Canticles, asked of her Beloveds colours, saith of him; My Beloved is white and red; white, of his owne proper: So hee was, when hee shewed himselfe in kinde, transfigured in the Mount; His apparell then so white, no Fuller in the earth could come neare it. White of himselfe: how comes He red then? Not of Himselfe, that, but for us. That is our naturall colour, we are borne polluted in our owne blood. It is sinnes colour, that: for shame is the colour of sinne. Our sinnes, (saith Esay, Chap. 1.) are as crimson, of as deep die as any purple. This, the true tincture of our sinnes: the Edomites colour right: for Edom is red. The tincture (I say)

Cant. 5. 10.

Mat. 17. 2.

Mark. 9. 3.

Esay 1. 18.

(I ſay) of our ſinne originall, died in the wooll; and then againe of our ſinnes actuall, died in the cloth too. Twice died: ſo was CHRIST twice. Once in His owne: againe in His enemies: right dibaphus, a perfect full colour, a true purple, of a double die, His too. So was it meet for crimſen ſinners, to have a crimſen Saviour: a Saviour of ſuch a colour it behoved us to have. Comming then to ſave us, off went His white; on went our red: laid by His owne righteouſneſſe to be cloathed with our ſinne. He to weare our colours; that we, His. He, in our red, that we, in His white. So we find (Apoc. 7.) our robes are not only waſhed cleane but dyed a pure white in the blood of the Lambe. Yea, He died and roſe againe both, in our colours; that we might die and riſe too, in His. We fall now againe upon the ſame point in the colours, we did before, in the cups. He to drink the ſowre vinegar of our wilde grapes, that we might drinke His ſweet in the cup of bleſsing. O cup of bleſsing, may we ſay of this cup! O ſtolam formoſam, of that colour! Illi glorioſam, nobis fructuoſam: glorious to Him, no leſſe fruitfull to us. He, in mount Golgatha, like to us; that we, in Mount Tabor, like to Him. This is the ſubſtance of our rejoycing in this colour. Apoc. 7. 14.

One more: how well this colour fits Him, in reſpect of His two titles, Loquens juſtitiam, and Multus ad ſervandum! Loquens juſtitiam, is to weare red: Potens ad ſervandum is ſo too. The firſt. To whom is this colour given? Scarlet is allowed the degree of Doctors. Why? for their ſpeaking righteouſneſſe to us, the righteouſneſſe of GOD, that which CHRIST ſpake. Nay, even they which ſpeake but the righteouſneſſe of mans Law, they are honoured with it too. But CHRIST ſpake ſo as never man ſpake, and ſo, call ye none on earth Doctor, but one: none in compariſon of Him. So, of all, He to weare it. This ye ſhall obſerve; in the Revelation, at the firſt appearing of the Lamb, there was a Booke with ſeven ſeales. No man would meddle with it: the Lambe tooke it, opened the ſeales, read it, read out of it a Lecture of righteouſneſſe to the whole world, the righteouſneſſe of GOD, that ſhall make us ſo before Him. Let Him be arrayed in ſcarlet, it is his due: his Doctors weed. From Loquens juſtitiam, as a Doctor. Iohn 7. 46. Rev. 5. 6.

This is no new thing. The Heathen King propounded it for a reward to any that could read the hand-writing on the wall. Daniel did it, and had it. Sed ecce major Daniele hîc. Thus was it in the Law. This colour was the ground of the Ephod; a principall ingredient into the Prieſts veſture. Why? For, his lips were to preſerve knowledge; all to require the Law from his mouth. And indeed, the very lips themſelves, that we ſpeak righteouſneſſe with, are of the ſame colour. In the Canticles it is ſaid, His lips are like a ſcarlet thred. And the fruit of the lips hath GOD created peace: and the fruit of peace is ſowen in righteouſneſſe: and, till that be ſowen and ſpoken, never any hope of true peace. Dan 5 7. Mat. 23. Can 4. 3.

Enough for ſpeaking. What ſay you to the other, Potens ad ſervandum, which (of the twaine) ſeemes the more proper to this time and place? I ſay, that way, it fits Him too, this colour. Men of warre, great Captaines, mightie to ſave us from the enemies, they take it to themſelves, and their colour it is, of right. A plaine Text for it, Nah. II. Their valiant men (or Captaines) are in ſcarlet. And I told you, CHRIST, by Daniel, is called Captaine Meſsias, and ſo well might. So, in His late conflict with Edom, He ſhewed himſelfe: fought for us, even to blood. Many a bloody wound it coſt him, but returned with the ſpoile of his enemies, ſtained with their blood: And, who ſo is able ſo to do, is worthy to weare it. So, in this reſpect alſo, ſo in both; his colours become him well. 2. From potens ad ſervandum, as a Captaine. Nahum. 2. 3. Dan. 9. 15.

Shall I put you in minde, that there is in theſe two, in either of them, a kind of wine-preſſe? In mighty to ſave, it is evident: Troden in one preſſe, treading in another. Not ſo evident in the ſpeaking of righteouſneſſe. Yet even in that alſo, there is a preſſe going. For, when we reade, what doe we but gather grapes here and there: and when we ſtudy what we have gathered, then are we even in torculari, and preſſe them we doe, and preſſe out of them that which daily you taſte of. I know, there is great odds in the liquors ſo preſſed, and that a cluſter of Ephraim is worth a whole vintage of Abiezer: but, for that, every man as he may. Nay, it may be further ſaid, and that truly, that even this great title, [Mighty to ſave] comes under loquens juſtitiam. There is in the word of righteouſneſſe a ſaving power. Take the word (ſaith S. Iames) graffe it in you, it is able to ſave your ſoules: even that, wherein we of this calling, in a ſort, parcipate with CHRIST, while, by attending to reading and doctrine, we ſave both our ſelves and them that heare us; we tread downe ſin, and ſave ſinners from ſeeking death in the errour of their life.

Iames 1. 21. 1 Tim. 4 16.

But though there be in the Word a ſaving power; yet is not all ſaving power in that, nor in that only: there is a preſſe beſide. For, this preſſe is going continually among us; but, there is another that goes but at times. But, in that, it goes at ſuch times, as it fals in fit with the wine-preſſe here. Nay, fals in moſt fit of all the reſt. For, of it comes very wine indeed, the blood of the grapes of the true vine, which in the bleſſed Sacrament is reached to us; and with it, is given us that, for which it was given, even remiſſion of ſins. Not only repreſented therein, but even exhibited to us. Both which when we partake, then have we a full and perfect communion with CHRIST, this day: of His ſpeaking righteouſneſſe in the Word preached: of His power to ſave in the holy Euchariſt miniſtred. Both preſſes runne for us; and we to partake them both.

I may not end, till I tell you, there remaineth yet another, a third wine-preſſe: that you may take heed of it. I will but point you to it: it may ſerve as ſowre herbs to eat our paſchal Lambe with. The Sunne (they ſay) danced this morning at CHRISTS Reſurrection: the earth trembled then (I am ſure:) there was an earthquake at CHRISTS riſing. So, there is trembling to our joy: Exultate in tremore, as the Pſalmiſt wils us. The vintage of the earth, when the time of that is come, and when the grapes be ripe and ready for it, One there is, that crieth to him with the ſharp ſickel in his hand (Apoc. 14.) to thruſt it in, cut off the cluſters, and caſt them into the great Wine-preſſe of the wrath of God. A diſmall day, that: a pitifull ſlaughter, then. It is there ſaid, the blood ſhall come up to the horſe-bridles by the ſpace of a thouſand ſix hundred furlongs. Keep you out; take heed of comming in that preſſe.

Apoc. 14. 18. 19. 20.

We have a kinde Item given us of this, here in the Text, in the laſt verſe. There be two acts of CHRIST: one, of being trodden, the other of treading downe. The firſt is, for His choſen: the other againſt His enemies. One is called, the Yeare of Redemption: The other, the Day of vengeance. The Yeare of Redemption is already come, and is now; we are in it: during which time, the two former wine-preſſes run, [1] of the Word: [2] and Sacrament. The Day of vengeance is not yet come: It is but in his heart; ſo the Text is: that is, but in His purpoſe, and intent yet. But certainly, come it will, that day; and with that day, comes the laſt wine-preſſe with the blood to the bridles: yer it come, and during our yeare of redemption, that yeares allowance, we are to endevour to keepe our ſelves out of it; for, that is the day of vengeance, of ira ventura, GODS wrath for ever. So as, all we have to ſtudy is, how we may be in at the firſt two, out at the laſt preſſe: and the due Chriſtian uſe of the firſt, will keepe us from the laſt.

Ver. 4.

While then it is with us the yeare of Redemption; and before that day come; while it is yet time of ſpeaking righteouſneſſe, that is, to day if ye will heare his voyce: while the cup of bleſſing is held out, if we will take it; lay hold on both. That ſo, we may be accounted worthy to eſcape in that day, from that day and the vengeance of it: and may feele the fulneſſe of his ſaving power in the Word ingraffed, which is able to ſave our ſoules; and in the cup of ſalvation which is joyned with it; and that to our endleſſe joy. The yeare of Redemption is laſt in the verſe: with that the Prophet ends. With that, let us end alſo: and, to that end, may all that hath beene ſpoken arrive and bring us.

A SER-

A SERMON PREPARED TO BE PREACHED ON EASTER-DAY,

Anno Dom. MDCXXIV.

HEBR. Chap. XIII.

Deus autem pacis, &c.

Ver. 20. The God of peace, that brought againe from the dead, our Lord Jesus Christ, the great Shepherd of the Sheep, through the blood of the everlasting Testament.

2. Make you perfect in all good workes, to doe his will, working in you that which is pleasant in His sight, through Jesus Christ, to whom bee praise for ever and ever, Amen.

These words [who hath brought CHRIST againe from the dead] make this a Text proper for this Day. For, as this day, was CHRIST brought againe from thence.

And these words [the blood of the everlasting Testament] make it as proper every way for a Communion. For, there, at a Communion, we are made to drink of that blood. Put these together: 1 The bringing of CHRIST from the dead, 2 and the blood of the testament, and they will serve well for a Text, at a Communion on Easter-day.

I will touch in a word, 1 the Nature of the Text, 2 the Summe, and 3 the partition of it.

1 The Nature of the Text.

For the Nature: It is a Benediction. The use, the Church doth make of it and such other like, is to pronounce them over the Congregation, by way of a blessing. For not only the power to pray, to preach, to make and to give the Sacrament; but the power also to blesse you, that are GODS people, is annexed, and is a branch of ours, of the Priests office. You may plainly read the power committed, the act

Num.6.23. injoyned,and the very form of words preſcribed all in the 6.of Numbers. There GOD
Chap.7.10. ſaith, Thus ſhall you bleſſe the people, (that is) do it you ſhall ; and, thus you ſhall do it, in hæc verba. Neither was the act Leviticall,or then firſt taken up : It was long before: While Levi was yet in the loines of Abraham, even then it was a part of Melchiſedechs Prieſt-hood, and (if the bread and wine were no more but a refreſhing) the only part, that we read of, to ſay Benedictus over Abraham, as great a Patriarch as he was. There is nothing elſe mentioned, to ſhew he was a Prieſt, but that.

This bleſſing they uſed firſt and laſt: but rather laſt. For (lightly) then,the people were altogether. They be not ſo, at firſt: but only a few, then. And here (you ſee) the Apoſtle makes it his farewell. With this he ſhuts up his Epiſtle; and with ſome other ſuch, all the reſt. And that, by CHRISTS example. The laſt thing that CHRIST
Luk.24.50. did in this world, was: He lift up His hands, bleſſe His Diſciples, and ſo went away to Heaven. And ſo you ſhall find it was the manner in the Primitive Church: at the end of the Liturgie, ever to diſmiſſe the aſſembly with a bleſſing. Which bleſſing, they were ſo conceited of, they would not offer to ſtirre (not a man of them) till bowing downe their heads they had the bleſſing pronounced over them. As if ſome great
Gen.32.26. matter had lyen in the miſſing of it: as if they had been of Iacobs mind, Non dimittam te niſi benedixeris mihi: they would neither let the Prieſt depart,nor depart themſelvs, till they had their bleſſing with them: Such a vertue they held in it. The bleſſing pronounced they had then leave to go with λάος ἄφεσις,in the Greek; Miſſa eſt fidelibus, in the Latine Church; and none went away before.

An evill cuſtome hath prevailed with our people: Away they goe without bleſſing, without leave, without care of either. Mark if they run not out, before any bleſſing; as if it were not worth the taking with them.

Verſ.17. I marvell, how they will be inheritors of the bleſſing,that ſeem to ſet ſo little by it.
Mat.25.34. If they meane to heare Come ye bleſſed, they ſhould (me thinks) love it better than by their running from it, they ſeeme to doe.

This would be amended. We are herein departed from the Primitive Chriſtians, with whom it was in more regard. Sure, there is more in the neglect of it, than we are aware of.

This bleſſing could not be delivered in better terms,than in thoſe, that came from the Apoſtles themſelves: which accordingly have been ſought up here and there in their writings: and, by the Church, ſorted to ſeverall dayes, which they ſeemed beſt to agree with. As this here,having Eaſter-day in it,was made an Eaſter-day benediction. For, the ſpeciall mention in it of CHRIST brought againe from the dead, doth in a manner appropriate it to this Feaſt, Utter it but thus: The God of peace, who did now, as upon this day, bring againe Chriſt from the dead: do but utter it thus, and it will appeare moſt plainly how well they ſuit, the Time, and the Text.

2 The Summe. For the Summe. It is no more in effect, but ſhortly this. That GOD would ſo bleſſe them, and us, as to make us fit for, and perfect in all good workes. A good wiſh, at any time. But, why at this time ſpecially,upon mention of CHRISTS riſing he ſhould wiſh it,is not ſeen at firſt. Yet there is ſome matter in it; that, at CHRISTS riſing, He doth not wiſh our faith increaſed,or our hope ſtrengthened, or anyother grace or vertue revived:but only,that good works might be perfected in us,and we in them. Surely,this ſorting them thus together, ſeems to imply, as if CHRISTS Reſurrection had ſome more peculiar intereſt in good workes: as (indeed) it hath. And, there hath ever beene,and ſtill are more of them done now, at this time, than at any other time of the yeare.

A generall reaſon may be given. That what time CHRIST doth for us ſome principall great work (as, at all the Feaſts, He doth ſome: and now at this time ſenſibly;) we to take occaſion by it, at that time, to doe ſomewhat more than ordinary, in memory and honour of it. More particularly, ſome ſuch, as may in ſome ſort ſuit with and reſemble the act of Chriſt then done. As it might be, when Chriſt died, ſinne to die in us: when CHRIST roſe againe, good works to riſe together with Him. CHRISTS Paſſion, to bee, Sinnes paſſion: CHRISTS Reſurrection, good workes reſur- reſurrection. Good-friday is for ſin: Eaſter for good works: Good-friday, to bring ſin to death: Eaſter, to bring good works from the dead. And we, that were dead before to good works, by occaſion of this, to revive againe to the doing of them: And not (as the manner is with us) ſin to have an Eaſter, to riſe, and live againe; and good works to be crucified, lie dead, and have no reſurrection.

For the Partition. Two verſes there are, and two Parts accordingly. [1] The Premiſſes, and [2] the Sequele. The Premiſſes are GOD; and the Sequele, good works. The former verſe is nothing but GOD, with his ſtyle or addition: The GOD of peace, who hath brought againe, &c. The latter is all for good works, Make you perfect, &c. We may conſider them thus. Of the two, [1] One a thing done for us, in the former verſe. [2] The other a thing to be done by us, in the latter verſe. The bringing back CHRIST, the benefit done us by GOD: The applying good works, our duty to be done to Him for it. 3 The Diviſion.

The thing done is an act (that is) a bringing back. Which act is but one, but implieth another precedent neceſſarily. For, ἀναγαγὼν (which is a bringing backe) implieth ἀγαγὼν (which is a bringing thither.) I.

To this Act there is a concurrence of two Agents. [1] One, the Party, that brought: [2] The other, the party that is brought. The party that brought is GOD, under the name or title of the God of peace. The party, that was brought, is Chriſt; ſet forth here under the Metaphor of a Shepheard, the great Shepheard of the ſheep. 1 2

The GOD of peace did bring againe this Shepheard; from whence? and how? 3 From whence? From the dead. Then, among the dead He was, firſt. Firſt, brought thither: 4 How from thence? by what meanes? By the bloud of a Teſtament everlaſting. All which is nothing elſe, but the Reſurrection of CHRIST extended at large through all theſe points. 3 4

The thing to be done. That GOD would ſo bleſſe them, as to make them, [1] Firſt, fit to doe; [2] and then to do good works. [1] Fit to do, in the word καταρτίσαι. To do: Wherein we conſider two things: [1] the doing, to which doing there is a concurrence of two Agents, [1] εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι ὑμᾶς, what we to doe: [2] And ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, what he to doe. [2] And then the work it ſelfe expreſſed in two words, [1] θέλημα, and [2] εὐάρεστον: Θέλημα (that is) his Will: εὐάρεστον that which is well pleaſing in his ſight. Theſe two be holden for two degrees: and the latter of the twaine to have the more in it. II.

And laſt of all, the Sequele. Where is to be ſhewed, how theſe two hang together, and follow one upon the other. Firſt, the GOD of peace, and the bringing of CHRIST from death. Then how the bringing of Chriſt from death concernes our bringing forth good works. Which being ſhewed; what this Feaſt of Eaſter hath to do with good works, will fall in of it ſelfe. That with Chriſt now riſing, they alſo ſhould now riſe: They are thought as good as dead; that there may be a Reſurrection of them, at Chriſts Reſurrection. III.

I.
The thing done for us.
1 The Party, by whom.

THE God of peace, &c. Here is a long proceſſe. What needs all this ſetting out his ſtyle at length? Why goes he not to the point roundly? And, ſeeing good workes doing is his errand, why ſaith he not ſhortly, God make you given to good works; and no more adoe? but tels us a long tale of Shepheards, and Teſtaments, and I wote not what (one would think, to ſmall purpoſe?) But ſure, to purpoſe it is, The Holy Ghoſt uſeth no waſte words, nor ever ſpeaks but to the point (we may be ſure.)

His title, The God of peace.

Let us ſee, and begin with his firſt title, the God of peace. Gods titles be diverſe, as be his Acts: and his Acts are, as his properties be, they proceed from. And (lightly) the title is taken from the property which beſt fits the Act it produceth. As, when God proceedeth to puniſh, he is called the righteous God: when, to ſhew favour, the God of mercy: When to do ſome great worke, the God of power. Now then, this ſeemes not ſo proper; Should it not rather have beene, the God of power which brought againe, &c. To bring againe from death, ſeems rather an act of power, than of peace. One would think ſo. But being well lookt into, it will be found to belong rather to peace. No power of his will be ſet on working, will ever bring againe from death, unleſſe he be firſt pacified, and made the LORD of peace. Of his power there is no queſtion: Of his peace, there may be ſome. I ſhall tell you, why. For, all the Old Teſtament through, you ſhall obſerve, Gods great Title is the Lord of Hoſts; which, in the New, you ſhall never read: but, ever ſince he roſe from the dead, it is in ſtead of it, the God of peace. To the Romanes, Philippians, Theſſalonians, &c. and now here to the Hebrewes, and ſtill the God of peace. It is not amiſſe for us, this change. For, if the Lord of Hoſts come to be at peace with us, his hoſts ſhall be all for us, which were againſt us, while it was no peace. So as, make but God, the God of peace, and more needs not. For, his peace will command his power ſtraight.

When his hoſts were ſo about him, it ſeemed hoſtility: how came he then to lay away that title of the Lord of Hoſts, to become Deus pacis? That did he, by thus doing: he brought againe one from the dead; and that bringing brought peace, and made this change, Stylo novo, the God of peace.

2 The ſecond Party.
Our Lord Ieſus
Paſtorem,
The Shepheard.

This brings us to the other, the ſecond Party: he is not named till all be done; and then he is, in the end of the verſe: our Lord and Saviour JESUS CHRIST. But, at firſt, he is brought in as a Shepheard. Think never the meaner of him for that. Moſes and David, the Founders of the Monarchy of the Iewes; Cyrus and Romulus, the Founders, one of the Perſian, the other of the Romane Monarchy, were taken all from the Sheep folds. The Heathen Poet cals the great Ruler of the Grecian Monarchy, but ποιμὴν λαῶν (that is) the Shepheard of the people. CHRIST gives it to himſelfe, and God doth not diſdaine it in the LXXX. Pſalme. And the name (howſoever it fals to us of the Clergie now) ab initio non fuit ſic. Secular men, Ioſeph, Ioſua, and David, were firſt ſo termed; and are more often ſo termed, in the Bible, than we.

Pſal. 80. 1.

The terme of Shepheard is well choſen, as referring to the God of peace. Peace is beſt for Shepheards and for ſheepe. They love peace: then, they are ſafe; then, they feed quietly. Yet, not ſo, but that Shepheards have ventured farre, to reſcue the Sheepe from the Beare, and from the Lion, as did King David; and as the Sonne of David here that ventured further than any, who is brought in (here) in Sanguine, bleeding, howſoever it comes.

1 Sam. 17. 36.

But, this title was not ſo much for God, as for us: (Paſtorem ovium) and, in Ovium, are we; there come we in: we hold by that word. For ſo, there is a mutuall relation betweene Him and us: that we thereby may be aſſured, by this very terme relative, whither, and whenſoever He was brought; all He did or ſuffered, it was not for Himſelfe. For then, an abſolute name of His owne would have been put. All was for His Correlative, for Ovium (that is) for us. He is no wayes conſidered, in all this, as abſolutely put, or ſevered from us, His flock; but ſtill with reference and relation unto us.

But, becauſe others enter-common in this and other His names with Him, He beares it with a difference; Paſtor Magnus, the great ſhepheard. Not (as Diphilus ſaid to Pompeius Magnus) noſtrâ miſeriâ Magnus es; Great, by making others little: but, Miſericordiâ ſuâ Magnus; by making Himſelfe little, to make us great. Paſtorem magnum, the great Shepheard.

The graduall points of His greatneſſe, in reſpect of others are theſe. Great firſt, For, Totum is parte majus, greater is he that feeds the whole, than they, that but certain parcels of the flock. All elſe feed but peeces: So, they be but pettie ſhepheards to Him. But He, the whole, maine entire flock: He, and none but He. So, He the great ſhepheard of the great Flock. 1

Againe, greater is He that owes the ſheep He feeds, than they that feed the ſheep they owe not. All others feed His ſheep: None can ſay, Paſce oves meas. His they be: and reaſon. For, He made them; they be the ſheep of His hands: He feeds them, ſo the ſheep of His hands, and of His paſture both. 2 Iohn 21. 16. Pſal. 94. 2. 100. 3.

But, this is not the greatneſſe here meant. But Ecce quantam charitatem, ſee the great love to His ſheep! Others ſell and kill theirs: He is ſo farre from ſelling, or killing, as He (this Shepheard) was ſold and ſlaine for them, though they were His own. Paid for them, bought them againe; and then He brought them againe. It may be, there were others had ventured their lives; but not loſt them, and ſo loſt them, as He did. Which makes Him not onely great, but primæ magnitudinis (that is) ſimply the greateſt that ever was. 3 1 Iohn 3. 1.

Of which greatneſſe two great proofs there are, in the two words, [1] Sanguis, and [2] Teſtamentum. Sanguis, a great Price; Teſtamentum, a great Legacie. Sanguis, what He ſuffered; Teſtamentum, what He did for them.

The next word is in ſanguine, a Shepheard, in His bloud. So, this Shepheard ſweat bloud, yer He could bring them back. It was no eaſie matter; it coſt bloud: and, not any bloud (ſuch, as He could well ſpare) but, it coſt Him His life-bloud. It could not be the bloud of the Teſtament, but there muſt be a Teſtament: and, a Teſtament there cannot be, but the Teſtator muſt die. So, He died, He was brought to the dead, for it. This bloud brought Him to His Teſtament, which is further than bloud. In ſanguine, through the bloud.

We ſaid there were two Acts: [1] One expreſt, brought Him thence, ἀναγαγὼν, [2] The other implied, brought Him thither, ἀγαγὼν: But firſt, brought thither, before brought thence. We will touch them both. [1] Why brought thither, and how? [2] and why brought thence, and how? The two Acts.

If, when He was brought thence, it was peace: when He was brought thither, it was none. How came it, there was none? What made this ſeparation? That did ſin: ſin brake the peace. Brought thither.

Why, ſinne touched not Him, He knew no ſinne. True: it was not for Himſelfe, nor for any ſinne of His. Whoſe then? Here are but two, [1] Paſtor, [2] and Ovium: Paſtor, He; Ovium, we. If not the Shepheards, then the ſheeps ſin: if not His, ours. And ſo it was: peccata veſtra (ſaith God, in Eſay) and ſpeaks it to us. No quarrell He had to the Shepheard: nothing to ſay to CHRIST, as CHRIST. But he would needs be dealing with ſheepe, and His ſheepe fell to ſtraying, and light into the Wolves den: And thither He muſt goe, to fetch them, if Hee will have them. 2 Cor. 5. 22. Eſay 59. 2.

For Ovium then, is all this adoe; and that is for us. For, all we (as ſheepe) had gone aſtray. I may ſay farther; all we (as ſheepe) were appointed to the ſlaughter. So it was, we ſhould have been carried thither, and the Lord laid upon him the tranſgreſſions Eſay 53. 6.

greſſions of us all; and ſo, he was carried for us: This Paſtor became tanquam ovis, as a ſheepe, for his ſheepe; and was brought thither, and the wolves did to him whatſoever they would.

As if God had ſaid: away with theſe ſheepe; Incidant in lupos, quia nolunt regi à paſtore, to the wolves with them, ſeeing they will be kept in no fold. But, that, the Shepheard indured not: but rather than they ſhould, he would. When it came to this; who ſhall go thither, Paſtor, or Ovium, the Sheep, or the Shepheard? Sinite hos abire (they be his owne words) Let them go their way; let the Sheep goe, and ſmite the Shepheard; ſentence him to be carried thither. The Sheepe were to be, they ſhould have been: but, the Shepheard was. In ſanguine noſtro, it ſhould have been, In ſanguine ſuo, his bloud, it was. So, to ſpare ours, he ſpilt his owne.

Ioh. 18. 8.

2 Brought againe thence.

Thither now He is brought. Brought thither, by his owne blood-ſhedding. We can underſtand that, well: but not, how he ſhould be brought thence by his bloud. Yet, the Text is plaine, how he was brought againe, in ſanguine, by his bloud.

Firſt then, let us make God, the God of peace: and, when he is ſo, you ſoone ſee him bring him backe, againe. That, which broke the peace (as we ſaid) the very thing that carried him to the Croſſe, took him down thence dead, carried him to his grave, and there lodged him among the dead, was ſin. Away with ſin then, that ſo there may be peace. But, there is no taking away ſin, but by ſhedding of bloud; the bloud, either of Paſtor, or of Ovium, one of them.

3 In ſanguine, By the bloud. Ephes. 2. 14. Col. 1. 20.

Why then, here is bloud; even the Shepheards bloud: and ſhed it is; and, by the ſhedding of it, ſin is taken away, and with ſin Gods diſpleaſure. It is the Apoſtles own word (Epheſ. 2. 16.) Hatred was ſlaine; and ſo, hatred being ſlain, peace followed of her own accord. He was our peace (ſaith the Apoſtle) in one place: he made our peace, or pacified all by his bloud, in another.

Now then, upon this peace, he, that was before carried away, was brought backe againe: And ſo, well might be. For, all being diſcharged, he was then to be inter mortuos liber, no longer bound, but free from the dead: not to be kept in priſon any longer, but, to come forth againe. And, by his very bloud, to come forth againe. For, it was of the nature of a Ranſome; which being laid downe, the Priſoner, that was brought thither, is to goe thence, whither he will. For, a Ranſome hath poteſtatem eductivam or reductivam, a power to bring forth, or bring back againe from any captivity.

1 Sam. 2. 6.

In both theſe bringings, God had his hand: God bringeth to death, and bringeth backe againe. True (if ever) in this Shepheard. Brought him to the dead, as the Lord of hoſts. Brought him from the dead, as being now pacified, and the God of peace. Out of his juſtice, God ſmit the Shepheard; out of his love to his ſheepe, the Shepheard was ſmitten. But, quem deduxit iratus, reduxit placatus, whom, of his juſt wrath againſt ſin, He brought thither; now having fulfilled all righteouſneſſe, he was to bring thence againe. And ſo, brought back he was; and, the ſame way that he was carried thither. Carried, the way of juſtice, to ſatisfie for them, he had undertaken for. And having fully ſatisfied for them, was in very juſtice to be brought backe againe. And ſo he was: GOD accepted his paſſion in full ſatisfaction, gave preſent order, for his raiſing againe.

And, let not this phraſe, of Gods bringing back, or of CHRIST's comming backe; of GODS raiſing him, or of CHRIST's riſing, any thing trouble you. The Reſurrection is one entire Act of two joynt Agents, that both had their hands in it. Aſcribed one while to CHRIST himſelfe, that he roſe, that he came backe, to ſhew, that he had power to lay downe his life, and power to take it againe. Another while, to God; that he raiſed him, that he brought him back: to ſhew, that God was fully ſatisfied ſatisfied and well pleaſed with it; reach him his hand (as it were) to bring him thence againe.

To ſhew you the benefit that riſeth to us, by this his riſing. Brought thither he was, to the dead: ſo, it lay us upon: if he had not, we ſhould. We were even carrying thither; and that we might not, He was. Brought thence He was, from the dead: So, it ſtood us in hand: if He had not beene brought thence, we ſhould never have come thence, but been left to have lien there world without end. Brought thither He would be: He, and not we: He without us. So carefull He was, not to ſpare Himſelfe, that we might be ſpared. Brought thence He would not be; not without His ſheepe we may be ſure: He would bring us thence too, or He would not be brought thence without us. You may ſee Him, in the Parable, comming with His loſt ſheepe on His ſhoulders. That one ſheepe is the image of us all. So carefull He was, as He laid Him on his own neck, to be ſure: which is the true portraicture or repreſentation of His ἀναγωγὴν. That, if the God of peace bring Him backe, He muſt bring them alſo: For He will not come back without them. Upon His bringing back from death, is ours founded: in Him, all His were brought back. In His perſon, our Nature: in our Nature we all. Luke 15.5

Thinke you, after the payment of ſuch a price, He will come backe Himſelfe alone, He will let the ſheepe be carried thither, and not ſee them brought back againe? He did not ſuffer all this (we may be ſure) to come away thence, and leave them behind Him. It was never ſeen, that any that paid after ſo high a rate for any, be it what it will, that when he had done, would not ſee it brought away, but loſe all his labour and coſt. No: as ſure as himſelfe was brought, ſo ſure he will bring them, whom he would not part from; (He will die firſt.) Nothing ſhall part them now. Paſtor and Ovium, ſheepe and Shepheard now, or no bargaine. He with his flock, and His flock with Him: it with him, and He with it: He and they, or not he himſelf; both together, or not at all. Will you heare himſelfe ſay as much? Father, my will is, that whither I go, whence I come, where I am, thither, thence, and there, theſe be alſo.

But when he had brought us thence, what ſhall become of us (trow?) Will he leave us at randome, to wander in the mountaines? No: but, Vbi deſinit Paſtor, ibi incipit Teſtator, where the Shepheard goes out, the Teſtator comes in; which we finde plainly in the word Teſtament. For (though peace be a faire bleſſing in it ſelfe, if no more but it; and bringing back be worth the while, yet) here is now a greater matter than ſo. There is more in the bloud than we are aware of. This is alſo meant: that there is the bloud of a Teſtament, which bodeth ſome further matter. There ſhould need no Teſtament, if it were for nothing but to make peace. A Covenant would ſerve for that: My covenant of peace would I make with thee (ſaith GOD.) Sanguis fœderis would have done that, if there had been no more but ſo. But here, it is the bloud of a Teſtament. 4 Sanguine Teſtamenti, the bloud of the Teſtament. Ezek. 37.26.

It is Sanguis cum Teſtamento annexo; Blood, with a Teſtament annexed. Beſide the pacification and back-bringing, this Scripture offereth more grace; even a Teſtamentarie matter to be adminiſtred for our farther behoof.

For, I ask. Every drop of this blood is more worth than many worlds: Shall this blood then ſo precious, of ſo great a Perſon, as the Sonne of GOD, be ſpent, to bring forth nothing but pardon and peace? Being of ſo great a value, ſhall it produce but ſo poore an effect? Pitie it ſhould be ſhed, to bring forth nothing, but a few ſheep from death. There is enough in it, to ſerve further, to make a purchaſe; which he may diſpoſe of to them, he will vouchſafe to bring againe from the dead. For, when he hath brought them thence, how he will diſpoſe them, that would be thought on too.

I finde then aſcribed to his bloud, a price: not onely of ἀπολύτρωσις (that is) a Redemption or ranſome; but alſo περιποίησις (that is) of Perquiſition, or Purchaſe. And I finde them both in one verſe (Epheſ. 1.14.) So that, this blood availed, as to pay our debt; ſo ſo, over and above, to make a purchaſe: Served, not onely to procure our peace, bur, to ſtate us in a condition better than ever we were before. Not onely brought us, but bought us: Nay, not onely bought us, and brought us backe; but bought for us further an everlaſting inheritance, and brought us to it.

Two powers were in it: [1] as ſanguis fœderis, the Bloud of the Covenant, the Co-
Gen. 15.9. Exod. 24.8. venant of peace: for, in bloud, were the Covenants made; that, with Abraham, in Gen. 15. that with Moſes, in Exod. 24. in bloud both: And among the Heathen men, never any Covenant of peace, but in bloud. [2] Now, for peace, this were enough: But, it is ſanguis Teſtamenti too, the bloud of a Teſtament. Which is founded upon better promiſes; bequeathes legacies; diſpoſeth eſtates: Matter farre of a higher nature, than bare peace. As the bloud of the Covenant, ſo it pacifieth and appeaſeth: As the bloud of the Teſtament, ſo it paſſeth over, and conveyeth beſides.

But ſay, it did not; it were for nothing elſe, but our peace: Yet, it is much better for us, that our peace goe by Teſtament, rather than by a Covenant. Leagues, Covenants, Edicts of Pacification have oft beene, and are (we ſee) daily broken. Small hold of them: A ſtronger hold than ſo, behoved us. A ſtronger hold there is not, than that of a Teſtament. That is holden inviolable, never to be reverſed. Nothing in rebus humanis is held more ſacred. So as, peace by a Teſtament, is farre the ſurer of the twaine.

Of which Teſtament, and the greatneſſe of it, there is much to bee ſaid. For, it is not as other Teſtaments, to be fully adminiſtred: This ſhall never be ſo; it is Everlaſting. Everlaſting: For, ſo is he that made it: His goings out are
Mic. 5.2. from everlaſting. Everlaſting: For, ſo is the Teſtament it ſelfe: Though it be executed in time, it was made ab æterno, and lay by him all the while. Everlaſting: For, ſo is the bloud wherewith it is ſealed: the vertue and vigour thereof doth ſtill continue as a fountaine in-exhauſt, never dry; but flowing ſtill as freſh, as the very firſt day, his ſide was firſt opened. We, that now live, come to it, of even hand with the Apoſtles themſelves, that were then at the opening. And they that come after us, ſhall not come too late, but to full as good a match, as either they or we. Everlaſting: For, the legacies of it are ſo. Not, as with us, of things temporall: Nor as of the former Teſtament of the land of Canaan, now growne a barren wilderneſſe: but of eternall life, and joy, and bliſſe; of eternity it ſelfe. And laſtly, Everlaſting: That we may looke for no more: Our Goſpell is Evangelium Revel. 14.6. æternum (Revel. 14.) None to come after it. This is the laſt: and ſo to laſt for ever.

Now lay theſe together and tell mee: Was he not the Great Shepheard indeed, that indured this carrying thither, whence this day he came? that paid this great Ranſome; purchaſed this great eſtate; made this great will; diſpoſed theſe great Legacies, even his heavenly kingdome to his little flocke? was he not every way as good, as great (which is the true greatneſſe: ὁν πρὸς ἓν, τὸ μέγα) here with us, men bee good, becauſe they bee great: with GOD they bee great, becauſe they bee good: For this his great love, his great price, his great Teſtament, was hee not worthy to weare his title of Paſtor magnus, of Paſtor, and of Teſtator, both? For ſo, both he was: And we, not onely his Sheepe, but his Legataries: both, in his Paſtor-ſhip, and in his Teſtator-ſhip: in his bringing forward, and in his bringing backward: No wayes to be ſevered from us. He procured no peace, ſhed no bloud, made no Teſtament; was neither brought to the dead, nor from the dead for himſelf, but for his flock: for us ſtill. All he did, all he ſuffered, all he bequeathed, all he was, he was for us.

And now, when all is done, then now (lo) he is the LORD JESUS CHRIST. Till then, a Shepheard wholly and ſolely: The more are we beholden to him. Then (loe) he tels us his name, that he is the great Shepheard, he that was brought backe: the bloud, his; his, the Teſtament. Truely called the Teſtament: There can no Inventorie be made of this. It hath not entred in the heart of man to conceive, what things GOD hath prepared for thoſe, that have their part in this Teſtament: above all that we can desire or imagine. Upon earth, there is no greater thing than a Kingdome: and, no lesse than a Kingdome, it is his Fathers will to dispose unto us. But, a Kingdome eternall, all glorious and blessed: farre above these here. Luk. 12. 32.

All this is a good hearing. Hitherto wee have heard nothing, but pleaseth us well. God at peace: The Shepheard brought to death, that we might not: and brought from death, that we also might be brought from thence: and not brought, and left to the wide world; but further, to receive those good things which are compriſed in His Testament. This is done: done by Him for us. Now, to that which is to be done; to be done by us. Not, for Him: (I should not doe well to say so) but indeed, for our selves. For so, for us, in the end, it will prove. Both what He did, and what we doe our selves.

II. The thing to be done by us. 1 The fitting or doing.

That, which, on our part, the Apostle wisheth us, is, that we may be so happie, as that God would in effect doe the same for us, He did for Him: (that is) bring us back; back from our sinfull course of life, to a new, given to doe good workes.

The Resurrection is here termed ἀναγωγὴ, a bringing back. So that, any bringing back from the worse to the better, carrieth the Type, is a kind of a resurrection, referres to that of CHRIST: who died, and rose,, that sinne might die, and that good workes might rise in us. Both the time and the Text lay upon us this duty, to see, if good workes that seeme to be dead and gone, we can bring life to them, and make them to rise againe.

The rule of reason is: Vnumquodque propter operationem suam; every thing is, and hath his being, for the worke, it is to doe. And, these are the workes; which we were borne, and came into the world to doe. The Apostle speakes it plainly: we were created for good workes, to walke in them (Ephes. II. X.) And againe: That we were redeemed, to be a people zealously given to good workes (Tit. II. XIV.) So, they come doubly commended to us, as the end of our Creation and Redemption, both.

In this Text (wee see) it is Gods will, it is His good pleasure, we doe them: if wee any thing regard either His will, or pleasure.

In this Text, the Apostle prayes, that we may be made perfect, in them. So, unperfect we are, without them: unperfect we, and our faith both. For, by workes is our faith made perfect (Iam. 2.) even as Abrahams faith was. And, the faith, that is without them, it is not only unperfect, but starke dead: so as, that faith needs a Resurrection, to be brought from the dead againe. Iames 2. 22.

And, whatsoever become of the rest, in this Text it is, that He hath not left them out, nor unremembred in His Testament. They are in it: and divers good legacies to us for them. Which, if we meane to be Legataries, we must have a care of. For, as His Blood serveth for the taking away of evill workes; So doth His Testament, for the bringing againe of good. And, as it is good Philosophie: Vnum quodque propter operationem suam: So, this is sure; it is sound Divinitie; Vnusquisque recipiet secundùm operationem suam. At our comming backe from the dead (whence we all shall come) we shall be disposed of according to them: Receive we shall, every man according to his workes. And, when it comes to going, they that have done good workes shall goe into everlasting life; and they (not, that have done evill, but they) that have not done good, shall goe, you know, whither. Let no man deceive you: the Root of Immortality, the same is the Root of Vertue: But one, and the same Root, both. When all is said, that can be: Naturally; and by very course of kinde, good workes (you see) doe rise out of CHRISTS Resurrection. Mat. 16. 27.

Make you perfect (so we read it:) which shewes, We are (as indeed we are) in state of imperfection, till we doe them. Nay, if that be all, we will never stick for that Cognoscimus imperfectum nostrum, we yeeld our selves for such, for unperfect: And, that is well. But, we must so finde and feele our imperfection, that as the Καταρτίζαι, To make perfect. Psal. 51. 4.

Chap.6.1. poſtle tels us (in the VI. Chapter before) we ſtrive to be carried forward to perfection, all wee may. Elſe, all our cognoſcimus imperfectum, will ſtand us in ſmall ſtead.

Why, is there any perfection in this life? There is: Elſe, how ſhould the Apoſtles exhortation there, or his bleſſing (here) take place. I wot well, Abſolute, compleat, conſummate perfection, in this life there is none: It is agreed of all hands: None
Phil.3.13. may be out of it. Non puto me comprehendiſſe (ſaith Saint Paul) I compt not my ſelfe to have attained: No more muſt we, not attained. What then? But, this I doe (ſaith he, and ſo muſt we;) I forget that which is behinde, and endeavour my ſelfe to make forward ſtill, to that which is before. Which is the perfection of Travellers, of way-faring men: the further onward on their journey, the nearer their journeyes end, the more perfect: which is the perfection of this life: For, this life is a journey.

Phil 4.12. the ſteps of the faith of our Father Abraham, who went that way, and wee to follow him in it. And the more of them we doe, the more ſteps do we make, the further ſtill ſhall we find our ſelves to depart from iniquitie, the nearer ſtill to approach unto GOD in the Land of the living: whither to attaine, is the totall, or Conſummatum eſt of our perfection.

Καταρτίζω. To make fit or even. But not to keepe from you the truth, as it is: The nature of the Apoſtles word [Καταρτίζω] is rather to make fit, than to make perfect. Wherein, this he ſeemes to ſay. That to the doing of good workes, there is firſt requiſite a fitneſſe to doe them; before we can doe them: Καταρτίζω, and ποιῆσαι are both in the Text. Fit to do them, yer we can doe them. We may not thinke to doe them hand over head, at the firſt daſh. In an unfit and indiſpoſed ſubject, no agent can worke: Not GOD Himſelf but by miracle. Fit then we muſt be.

Now of our ſelves, as of our ſelves we are not fit ſo much as to think a good thought, It is 2 Cor. 3.5. Not ſo much as to will: For, it is GOD, that worketh in us to will (Phil. 2.13.) if not theſe two, [1] Neither think, [2] not will; then, not to worke. No more we are: Neither to begin, (Phil. 1.4.) nor having begun to goe forward, and bring it to an end. Fit, to none of theſe. Then, made fit we muſt be. And, who to reduce us to fitneſſe, but this GOD of peace, here, that brought againe CHRIST from the dead.

Καταρτίζω: To ſet in joynt. Now, if I ſhall tell you, what manner of fitneſſe it is, the Apoſtles word Καταρτίζω (here) doth import: It is (properly) the fitneſſe, which is, in ſetting that in, which was out of joynt: in doing the part of a good Bone-ſetter. This is the very true and native ſenſe of the word; Set you in joynt, to doe good workes. For the Apoſtle (Epheſ. 4.
Eph.4.16. and Coloſ. 2.) tels us, that the Church and things Spirituall goe by joynts and ſinewes, Col.2.19. whereof they are compact, and by which they have their action and motion. And, where there are joynts, there may be (and other-whiles, there is) a disjoynting or diſlocation: no leſſe in things Spirituall, than in the naturall body. And that is when things are miſ-ſorted, or put out of their right places.

Now, that our Nature is not right in joynt, is ſo evident, that the very Heathen men have ſeene and confeſſed it.

And, by a fall things come out of joynt: and (indeed) ſo they did: Adams fall wee call it, and we call it right. Sinne, which before broke the peace; which made the going from or departure, which needed the bringing back; the ſame ſinne, here now againe, put all out of joynt. And, things out of joynt are never quiet, never at peace and reſt, till they bee ſet right againe. But when all is in frame, all is in peace: and ſo it referres well, to the GOD of peace, who is to do it.

And marke againe. The putting in joynt, is nothing, but a bringing backe againe to the right place, whence it ſlipt: That ſtill there is good coherence with that which went before: The peace-maker, the bringer-backe, the bone-ſetter are all one.

The

The force or fulneſſe of the Apoſtles Simile (out of joynt) you ſhall never fully conceive, till you take in hand ſome good worke of ſome moment: and then you ſhall for certaine. For, doe but mark me then, how many rubs, lets, impediments there will be, as it were ſo many puttings out of joynt, yer it can be brought to paſſe. This wants, or that wants: one thing or other frames not. A ſinew ſhrinks, a bone is out, ſomwhat is awry: and what adoe there is, yer we can get it right? Either the will is averſe, and we have no minde to it; or the power is ſhrunk, and the means faile us; or the time ſerves not; or the place is not meet, or the parties to be dealt with, we finde them undiſpoſed. And the miſery is, when one is got in, the other is out againe. That, the wit of man could not have deviſed a fitter terme, to have expreſſed it in. This for the diſeaſe.

What way doth GOD take, to ſet us right? Firſt, by our Miniſtery and meanes. For, it is a part of our profeſſion under GOD, this ſame καταρτισμὸς, to ſet the Church in, and every member that is out of joynt. (You may read it, in this very terme (Epheſ. 4. 12.) πρὸς καταρτισμὸν.) And that we doe, by applying outwardly this Teſtament and the bloud of it: Two ſpeciall Splints (as it were) to keep all ſtraight. Out of the Teſtament, by the word of exhortation (as, in the next Verſe he cals it:) praying us to ſuffer the Splinting. For, it may ſometimes pinch them, and put them to ſome paine, that are not well in joynt, by preſſing it, and putting it home. But both by denouncing, one while the threats of the Old Teſtament, another while by laying forth the promiſes of the New, if by any meanes, we may get them right againe. This, by the Teſtament, which is one outward meanes. The Bloud is another inward meanes. By it, we are made fit and perfect (chooſe you whether:) and that ſo, as at no time of all our life, we are ſo well in joynt, or come ſo neare the ſtate of perfectneſſe, as when we come new from the drinking of that bloud. And thus are we made fit. Verſe 22.

Provided, that καταρτίσαι do end (as here it doth) in ποιῆσαι and ἐν ἔργῳ: that, all this fit making do end, in doing and in a worke: that ſome work be done. For, in doing it is to end, if it end aright; if it end, as the Apoſtle (here) would have it. For, this fitting, is not to heare, learne or know; but to do his will. We have been long at Teach me thy will, at that leſſon: There is another (in Pſal. 143.) Teach me to doe thy will; we muſt take out that alſo. Teach me thy will; and Teach me to doe thy will, are two diſtinct leſſons. We are all our life long about the firſt; and never come to the ſecond, to εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. It is required, we ſhould now come to the ſecond εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι. We are not made fit (when we are ſo) to do never a whit the more: καταρτίσαι is to end in ποιῆσαι (which is) doing: and in ἔργον (that is) in a work.

Pſal. 143. 10.

In work, and in every good work. We muſt not ſlip the collar there, neither. For, if we be able to ſtirre our hand but one way, and not another, it is a ſigne, it is not well ſet in. His, that is well ſet, he can move it to and fro, up and downe, forward and backward; every way and to every work. There be that are all for ſome one worke; that ſingle ſome one peece of GODS ſervice; wholly addicted to that, but cannot skill of the reſt. That is no good ſigne. To be for every one, for all ſorts of good works, for every part of GOD's worſhip alike: for no one more than another: that (ſure) is the right. So chooſe your Religion; ſo practiſe your worſhip of GOD. It is not ſafe, to do otherwiſe; nor to ſerve God by Synechdoche: but ἐν παντὶ, to take all before us.

Ἐν παντὶ ἔργῳ. In all good works.

But in the doing of all or any, beſide our part (εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι) here is alſo ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, a Worker beſides. For, when GOD hath fitted us by the outward means, there is not all. He leaves not us to our ſelves for the reſt: but to that outward application of ours, joynes his ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, an inward operation of His owne inſpiring, His grace; which is nothing but the breath of the Holy Ghoſt. Thereby enlightening our mindes, inclining our wils, working on our affections, making us homines bonæ voluntatis: that when we have done well, we may ſay with the Prophet; Domine, univerſa opera noſtra operatus es in nobis: LORD, all our good works thou haſt wrought in us. Our works they be: yet, of thy working. And with the Apoſtle: We did them; yet not we, but the grace of God that was with us. Both ways, it is true: what He worketh by us, He works in us; and what He workes in us, He workes by us. For, ἐνεργεῖ συνεργεῖ take not away one the other, but ſtand well together. This for the doing.

Eſay 26. 12.

1 Cor. 15. 10.

2 The worke. Chap. 12. 28.

Now for the worke. In every good worke we doe His will: yet (it ſeemeth) degrees there are. For, here is mention of θέλημα, His will; and beſides it, of εὐάρεστον, His good pleaſure, and this latter ſounds, as if it did import more than a ſingle will. Ones good pleaſure, is more, than His bare will. So, in the Chapter before, He wiſheth λατρεύωμεν εὐαρέστως, (that is) we may ſerve and pleaſe: (that is) may ſo ſerve, as that we may pleaſe. Acceptable ſervice then, is more than any, ſuch as it is. There is no queſtion, but that, as of evill works ſome diſpleaſe GOD more than other; ſo, of good workes, there are ſome better pleaſing, and that He takes a more ſpeciall delight in.

And, if you would know, what they be: above, at the XVI. verſe, it is ſaid, that, to doe good and to diſtribute, (that is) diſtributive doing good. It is more than an ordinary ſervice: it is a ſacrifice every ſuch worke. It is of the higheſt kinde of ſervice, and that with that kinde εὐαρεστεῖται (our word here) GOD is highly pleaſed. So doth Saint Paul call the bounteous ſupplying of his wants from the Philippians, θυσίαν δεκτὴν, a ſacrifice right acceptable and pleaſing to GOD, and ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, a moſt delightfull ſweet ſavour. And, that you may ſtill ſee, He lookes to the Reſurrection, He ſaith: the Philippians had lien dead, and drie a great while, as in winter trees doe uſe. But, Phil. 4 11. when that worke of bountie came from them, they did ἀναθάλλειν (that is) ſhoot forth, wax freſh, grow green again, as now at this ſeaſon plants do. That ſo, the very vertue of CHRISTS reſurrection did ſhew forth it ſelfe in them. So fitting Natures reſurrection time (the time of bringing things, (as it were) from the dead againe) with this of CHRIST. Which time is therefore the moſt pleaſing time, the time of the greateſt pleaſure of all the times of the yeare. So, we know, how to do that, is pleaſing in His ſight.

Yet, even this pleaſing, and all elſe, is to conclude (as here it doth) with through JESUS CHRIST our LORD: He is in, here too. In, at the doing: In at the making them to pleaſe GOD, Vt faciat quiſque per Chriſtum quod placeat per Chriſtum, that what by CHRIST is done, by CHRIST may pleaſe when it is done. In, at the doing, infundendo gratiam, gratiam activam, by infuſing or dropping in His grace active; making us able and fit to doe, and ſo to doe them. In at the pleaſing, affundendo gratiam, gratiam paſſivam, by powring on His good grace and favour paſſive, as it might be ſome drops of His blood, whereby it pleaſeth being done. Gracing His worke (as we uſe to ſay) in GODS ſight, that ſo, He of His grace may crowne it.

III.

We have gone through with both points. Now comes the hardeſt point of all, the ſequele, to couple them and make them hang well together.

1 The ſequele.

Firſt then, they be aſcribed to the GOD of peace. There are but three things to be done in the Text, and Peace doth them all. And, if Peace; then GOD, by no other title than the GOD of Peace. 1 Peace bringeth from death: For, warre (I am ſure) bringeth to death many a worthy man. There is little queſtion to be made of this: that the GOD of peace doth the one; but the Divell of diſcord doth the other.

2 Secondly, Peace ſets in joynt, Warre brings all out of joynt: War is not good for the joynts, as we ſee daily. Peace doth them no hurt.

3 Thirdly, peace makes us fit for good: Warre, for all manner of evill workes (ſaith Saint Iames in the III. Chap. Verſe XVI.) Therefore the God of peace, ſay we. (And, if He take it from us for a time, that He bring it quickly backe to us againe.) For when He was firſt brought into the world. among the living, at His birth, Ianus was Luk. 2. 14. ſhut: the Angels, they ſung Peace upon earth. And, when He was brought againe from from the dead, this day, he was no ſooner riſen, but the firſt newes was, the Souldiers ran all away: A ſigne of peace. And indeed, when he had ſlaine hatred, it was moſt kindly then, to bring peace. As, this evening, with his owne mouth, he ſpake it once and twice, Pax vobis, over and over againe. Which is the Apoſtles benediction here. So, Reſurrection and Peace, they accord well. Iohn 20. 21.

Now for the ſequele of good works upon CHRIST's bringing from the dead. Being to inferre good works; he would never put in all this, of CHRIST's bringing back againe from the dead, if there had not been ſome ſpeciall operative force to or toward them, in CHRISTS Reſurrection. If CHRISTS riſing made not for them, had not ſome ſpeciall reference to them, ſome peculiar intereſt in them, all this had not been ad idem, but idle, and beſide the point quite. We muſt take heed of this errour, to think, the Paſſion, or Reſurrection of CHRIST (though it be actus tranſiens, that with the doing paſſeth away) that it hath not a vertue and force permanent; that it left not behinde it a vertue and force permanent to worke continually ſome grace in us; as, to thinke, his Reſurrection to be Actus ſuſpenſus, an act to have his effect at the latter day, and in the meane time to ſerve for nothing, but to hang in nubibus (as they ſay.) But that, this day, it hath an efficacie continuing, that ſheweth forth it ſelfe: And as the rule is, in the ſoule, before it doth on the body. We will leave the Heathen to their habits, and habitualities: But, with us Chriſtians, this is ſure: Whatſoever, in us, or by us is wrought, that is pleaſing to GOD; it is ſo wrought by the vertue of CHRIST's Reſurrection. We have not thought of it perhaps; but, moſt certaine it is, it is ſo. So GOD hath ordained it. Whatſoever evill is truly mortified in us, it is ſo, by the power of CHRIST's death; and thither to be referred properly. And, whatſoever good is revived or brought againe anew from us, it is all from the vertue of Chriſts riſing againe. All do riſe, and are raiſed, thence. The ſame power, that did create at firſt, the ſame it is, that makes a new creature. The ſame power, that raiſed Lazarus the brother, from his grave of ſtone: the ſame raiſed Mary Magdalen the ſiſter, from her grave of ſin. From one, and the ſame power both. Which keepeth this method: Worketh firſt, to the raiſing of the ſoule, from the death of ſin; and after, in the due time, to the raiſing of the body, from the duſt of death. Els, what hath the Apoſtle ſaid, all this while?

Now, this power is inherent in the Spirit, as the proper ſubject of it: even the eternall Spirit, whereby Chriſt offered Himſelfe firſt unto GOD, and after raiſed himſelfe from the dead. Now, as in the texture of the naturall body, ever there goes the Spirit with the bloud: ever, with a veine (the veſſell of the one), there runs along an arterie (the veſſell of the other:) So is it in Chriſt, his bloud, and his Spirit alwayes goe together. In the Spirit is the power: in the power, vertually, every good work it produceth, which it was ordained for. If we get the Spirit, we cannot faile of the power. And, the Spirit, that ever goes with the bloud, which never is without it.

This carries us now to the bloud. The very ſhedding whereof upon the Croſſe, primum & ante omnia was the nature of a price. A price: firſt, of our ranſome from death due to our ſin, through that his ſatisfaction. A price againe, of the purchaſe, he made for us, through the vale of his merit, which by his Teſtament, is by him paſſed over to us.

Now then, his bloud, after it had, by the very powring it out, wrought theſe two effects; it ran not waſt, but divided into two ſtreams. 1. One into the Laver of the new birth (our Baptiſme) applied to us outwardly to take away the ſpots of our ſin. 2. The other, into the Cup of the New Teſtament in his bloud, which inwardly adminiſtred, ſerveth, as to purge and cleanſe the conſcience from dead works, that ſo live works may grow up in the place: So, to indue us with the Spirit, that ſhall enable us with the power to bring them forth. Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina Sacramenta: theſe are (not two of the Sacraments, but) the two twin-Sacraments of the Church (ſaith S. Auguſtine.) And with us there are two Rules. 1. One, Quicquid ſacrificio offertur, Sacramento confertur; what the Sacrifice offereth, that the Sacrament obtaineth. 2. The other, Quicquid Teſtamento legatur, Sacramento diſpenſatur; What the teſtament bequeatheth, that is diſpenſed in the holy Myſteries. Titus 3. 5. Luke 22. 20. Chap. 9. 14. 1 2

To draw to an end. If this power be in the Spirit, and the bloud be the vehiculum of the Spirit; how may we partake this bloud? It ſhall be offered you ſtraight, in 1 Cor. 10. 36. the Cup of bleſſing, which we bleſſe in His name. For, Is not the Cup of bleſſing which we bleſſe, the communion of the blood of Chriſt (ſaith S. Paul?) Is there any doubt of that? In which bloud of Chriſt is the Spirit of Chriſt. In which Spirit is all ſpirituall power: and namely this power, that frameth us fit to the works of the Spirit. Which Spirit we are all made, there, to drink of.

And what time ſhall we do this? What time is beſt? What time better than that day, in which it firſt ſhewed forth the force and power, it had in making peace, in bringing back Chriſt, that brought peace back with Him, that made the Teſtament, that ſealed it with His bloud; that died upon it, that it might ſtand firme for ever? All which were, as upon this day. This day then, ſomewhat would be done: ſomewhat more than ordinary, more than every day. Let every day, be for every good worke, to doe His will: But, this day, to doe ſomthing more than ſo, ſomething that may be well pleaſing in his ſight. So, it will be kindly: So we ſhall keep the degrees in the Text: So, we ſhall give proof that we have our part and fellowſhip in CHRIST, in CHRISTS reſurrection, in the vertue of CHRISTS reſurrection: Grace riſing in us; works of grace riſing from it. That ſo, there may be a reſurrection of vertue, and good workes, at Chriſts reſurrection. That as there is a reviving, ἀναβίωσις, in the earth, when all and every herbes and flowers are brought againe from the dead: So, among men good works may come up too, that we be not found fruitleſſe, at our bringing back from the dead, in the great Reſurrection: But have our parts, as here now, in the bloud, ſo there then in the Teſtament, and the Legacies thereof; which are glory, joy and bliſſe for ever and ever.

On the VIII. of June, A. D. MDCVI. being WHITSVNDAY.

ACTS Chap. II. Ver. I, II, III, IV.

And when the Day of Pentecoſt was come, (or, when the fifty dayes were fulfilled, they were all with one accord, in one place.

And there came ſuddainly from heaven the ſound of a mighty Wind; and it filled the place where they ſate.

And there appeared tongues cloven, as they had beene of fire, and ſate upon each of them.

And they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and they began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

WE are this day (beſide our weekely due of the Sabboth) to renew, and to celebrate the yearely memorie, of the ſending downe the HOLY GHOST. One of the Magnalia Dei (as they be termed after in the XI. Verſe;) One of the great and wonderfull benefits of God; Indeed, a Benefit, ſo great and ſo wonderfull, as there were not tongues enow, upon earth, to celebrate it withall, but there were faine to be more ſent from heaven, to help to ſound it out throughly: Even a new ſupply of tongues from heaven. For all the tongues, in earth, were not ſufficient to magnifie GOD for His goodneſſe, in ſending downe to men the gift of the HOLY GHOST. Verſe 11.

This

This we may make a ſeverall benefit by it ſelfe, from thoſe of CHRISTS. And
Gal. 4. 4. 6. ſo the Apoſtle ſeemeth to doe. Gal. 4. Firſt, GOD ſent His Sonn, in one verſe; and then after GOD ſent the Spirit of His Sonne, in another.

Or we may hold our continuation ſtill, and make this the laſt of CHRISTS Benefits: For Aſcendit in altum, is not the laſt; there is one ſtill remaining, which is Dona dedit hominibus. And that is this dayes peculiar; wherein were given to men, Pſal. 68. 18. many and manifold, both graces and gifts, and all in one gift, the gift, of the Holy Ghoſt.

Howſoever we make it, ſure it is, that all the reſt, all the Feaſts hitherto, in the returne of the yeare, from His Incarnation, to the very laſt of His Aſcenſion, though all of them be great, and worthy of all honour in themſelves; yet, to us, they are as nothing, any of them, or all of them (even all the Feaſts in the Calendar) without this Day, the Feaſt, which now we hold Holy to the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt.

CHRIST is the Word, and all, of Him, but words ſpoken, or words written: there is no ſeale put to, till this day: The Holy Ghoſt is the Seale or Signature, In quo

But we will not compare them: they are both above all compariſon. Yet, this we may ſafely ſay of them: without either of them, we are not compleat, we have not our accompliſhment; But, by both, we have; and that fully, even by this dayes royall exchange. Whereby, as before, He of ours; ſo now, we of His are made partakers. He, cloathed with our fleſh, and we inveſted with His Spirit. It is Tertullian: Chriſtus, Legis; Spiritus Sanctus, Evangelii Complementum. The comming of CHRIST was the fulfilling of the Law: The comming of the HOLY GHOST, is the fulfilling of the Goſpell.

The Diviſion.

I. Of which comming of the HOLY GHOST the report is here ſet downe by Saint Luke; both of the [1] time, and the [2] manner of it. 1. The Time, in the firſt words: When the day of Pentecoſt was come. 2. The Manner, in all the reſt of the foure Verſes.

II. And the Manner, firſt on their parts, to whom He came: Of the preparation for His comming in the firſt verſe. And then, the manner of His comming in the other three.

1 On their parts, to whom He came, how they ſtood prepared, how they were found framed and fitted to receive Him when He came, in theſe three: 1. They were all of one accord. 2. They were all in one place. 3. And both theſe (dum complerentur) even ſo long, till the fiftie dayes were fulfilled.

2 On His part, the manner of His comming to them thus prepared. [1] Firſt, as it is propropounded in Type or Figure, in the second and third Verſes. 2 And then, as it is expounded in truth and in deed, in the fourth.

1. In Type or figure Symbolicè; and that is two wayes, agreeable to the two chiefe ſenſes, 1 the hearing, and 2 the ſight. 1 To the Hearing, by a ſound, in the ſecond verſe, 2 To the ſight, by a ſhew, in the third.

1 To the hearing by a ſound, in the ſecond. A ſound of a wind; A wind; 1 ſudden, 2 vehement, 3 that came from heaven, and 4 filled that place where they ſate.

2 To the ſight, by a ſhew in the third: There appeared, 1 Tongues; 2 cloven; 3 as it were of fire; 4 which ſate upon each of them. Thus farre, the Figure.

2 Then in the fourth, followeth the thing it ſelfe. Which verſe is (as it were) a Commentary of the two former. 1: Of the Wind inward, in the firſt part of it, and theſe words: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. 2. Of the Tongues outward, in the latter, and theſe words: They began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

The one, to repreſent the inward operation. The other, the outward manifeſtation of the Spirit. Thus ſtandeth the Order; Theſe are the Parts.

THe firſt point is the Time of His comming (that is) The day of Pentecoſt. I.

The Time. When the day of Pentecoſt was come.

1 Why that day? The day of Pentecoſt was a great Feaſt under the Law: And meet it was, this Comming ſhould be at ſome great Feaſt. 1 The firſt Dedication of CHRIST'S Catholike Church on earth; 2 The firſt publiſhing the Goſpell; 3 The firſt proclaiming the Apoſtles Commiſſion, were ſo great matters, as it was not meet, they ſhould be obſcurely carried; ſtolne as it were, or done in a corner. Much lay upon them: and fit it was, they ſhould be done in as great an Aſſembly as might be. And ſo they were: even in a Concourſe (as in the V. Verſe it is) of every Nation under heaven; That ſo, notice might be taken of it, and by them carried all over the world, even to the utmoſt corners of the earth. Saint Paul ſaid well to King Agrippa: This is well enough knowne; This was not done in a corner. Act. 26. 26.

2 At a great Feaſt, it was meet: but, there were many great Feaſts; why at this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt?

It is agreed by all Interpreters old and new; (* Cyprian is the firſt, we finde it in) That it was to hold harmony, to keepe correſpondencie betweene the two Teſtaments, the Old and the New. So it was, at CHRIST'S Death (we ſee.) He was ſlaine, not onely, as the Lambe was; but even, when the Lambe was ſlaine too: On the Feaſt of the Paſſeover, then was CHRIST our Paſſeover offered for us.

a As the Feaſt of giving the Law.
* Cyprian. Ser. de Spiritu.
1 Cor. 5. 7.

Now, from that Feaſt of the Paſſeover, reckoning fiftie dayes, they came to Sinai: And there on that day (the day of Pentecoſt) received they the Law: (a memorable day with them, a high Feaſt; even for ſo great a Benefit: and is therefore by them called the Feaſt of the Law.)

And, even the very ſame day (reckoning from CHRIST our Paſſeover, fiftie dayes) that the Law was given in Sinai, The very ſame day doth the new Law here goe out of Sion (as the Prophet Eſay foretold, Exibit de Sion Lex,) which is nothing elſe, but the promulgation of the Goſpell. The Royall Law (as Saint Iames calleth it) as given by CHRIST our King: The other, but by Moſes, a ſervant: And ſavoureth therefore of the Spirit of bondage, the feare of Servants; As this doth, of the Princely Spirit, the Spirit of ingenuitie, and adoption, the Love of children.

On the Feaſt of Pentecoſt then; becauſe then, was given the Law of CHRIST written in our hearts by the HOLY GHOST.

The Feaſt of beginning of Eaſter.

To this doth Chryſoſtome joyne a ſecond harmonie. That as, under the Law, at this Feaſt, they firſt put their ſicle to the Corne; (Harveſt, in that Climate, beginning with them in this Moneth:) the firſt fruits whereof they offered at Eaſter; and was called therefore by them Feſtum meſſis: in like ſort we ſee, that this very day (the LORD of the Harveſt ſo diſpoſing it, who not long before lifting up His eyes and looking on the regions round about, ſaw them white and ready to the Harveſt) His firſt Worke-men, the Apoſtles, did put in their firſt ſicle into the great Harveſt, Cujus ager eſt Mundus, whereof the world is the field, and the ſeverall furrowes of it, all the Nations under heaven. On the Feaſt of Pentecoſt, then ſecond, becauſe then began the great Spirituall Harveſt.

1ohn 4. 35. Matth. 13. 38. Verſe. 5.

The Feaſt of Iubilee.

To theſe two doth* Saint Auguſtine adde a third, taken out of the number in the very name of Pentecoſt, and that is fiftie. Which, being all along the Law, the number of the Iubilee (which was the time of forgiving of debts, and reſtoring men to their firſt eſtates) it falleth fit with the proclaiming of the Goſpell (done preſently here in the 38. Verſe of this Chapter) which is an Act of GODS moſt gratious generall free pardon of all the ſinnes, of all the ſinners in the world.

Cyril. Cat. 17. Pſal. 104. 30.

And no leſſe fit falleth it for our Reſtitution, whereunto Cyril applyeth excellently the XXX. Verſe of the CIV. Pſalme, Emitte Spiritum tuum & creabuntur & renovabis faciem terræ. Shewing, there was firſt an emiſſion of the Spirit into man, at his Creation; Which, being ſince choked with ſinne, and ſo come to nothing: this day, there is here a ſecond emiſſion of the ſame Spirit into man, fully to reſtore, and renew him, and in him the whole Maſſe of the Creation. On the day of Pentecoſt then laſt, becauſe therein, is the true number and force of the true Iubilee. This for the choice of the time.

II.

The Manner.

1 On their parts, Their preparation.

The Number thus ſetled, wee deſcend to the ſecond point, of the Manner. And firſt on their parts on whom the HOLY GHOST came: how He found them framed, and fit to receive ſuch a Gueſt. It is called by the Fathers, Paraſceue SPIRITUS, The preparation (as there was one for the Paſſeover, ſo here) for Pentecoſt.

It is truly ſaid by the Philoſopher, That Actus activorum ſunt in patiente diſpoſito; if the patient be prepared aright, the Agent will have his worke, both the ſooner and the better. And ſo conſequently, the Spirit, in His comming; if the parties to whom He commeth, be made perſpirable.

And this is three-fold, ſet downe in theſe words, 1. They were all with one accord. 2. They were all in one place. A double Vnitie: [1] Vnity of minde (ſo is ὁμοθυμαδὸν, θυμὸς:) or of hearts (ſo is accord, cordium.) [2] And ſecondly, unitie of place. 3. And thirdly, theſe two, dum complerentur: Patiently expecting, while the fiftie dayes were accompliſhed.

1 They were all of one accord.

Vnitie is the firſt: unitie of minde. And for it, take but any ſpirit, that is to give life to a naturall bodie; Can any ſpirit animate or give life to members diſmembred, unleſſe they be firſt united and compact together? It cannot: Vnitie muſt prepare the way to any ſpirit, though but naturall. A faire example wee have, in EZEKIEL, Chap. XXXVII. A ſort of ſcattered dead bones there lay: They were to be revived. Firſt, the bones came together; every bone to his bone; then, the ſinewes grew and knit them: then the fleſh and skinne, and covered them: and then, when they were thus united, then and not before, called Hee for the Spirit from the foure winds, to enter into them and to give them life. No Spirit, not the ordinary, naturall Spirit will come, but where there is a way made and prepared by accord and unitie of the bodie.

Ezek. 37. 7, 8, 9.

Now then take the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of all ſpirits, the third Perſon in Trinity: He is the very eſſentiall Vnity, Love, and Love-knot of the two Perſons, the Father and the Sonne; even of GOD with GOD. And He is ſent to be the Vnion, Love and

Love-

Love-knot of the two Natures united in CHRIST; even of GOD with man. And can we imagine, that He will enter Essentiall (unitie) but where there is unitie? The spirit of unitie, but where there is unitie of spirit? Verily there is not, there cannot possibly be a more proper and peculiar, a more true and certaine disposition; to make us meet for Him, than that quality in us, that is likest His nature and essence, that is unanimitie. Faith, to the Word; and Love to the Spirit, are the true Preparatives. And there is not a greater barre, a more fatall or forcible opposition to His entrie, than discord, and dis-united mindes, and such as are in the gall of bitternesse: They can neither give nor receive the HOLY GHOST. Divisum est cor eorum, jamjam interibant (saith the Prophet) their heart is divided, their accord is gone, that Cord is untwisted; they cannot live; the Spirit is gone too. Act 8. 23. Hos. 10. 2.

And doe we marvell, that the Spirit doth scarcely pant in us: that we sing and say, Come HOLY GHOST, and yet He commeth no faster? Why, The Day of Pentecost is come, and we are not all of one accord. Accord is wanting: The very first point is wanting, to make us meet for His comming. Sure, His after-comming will be like to His first: to them, that are, (and, not to any, but them that are) of one accord.

And who shall make us of one accord? High shall be his reward in Heaven, and happy his remembrance on earth, that shall be the meanes to restore this accord to the Church: that once we may keepe a true and perfect Pentecost, like this here, Erant omnes unanimiter. I passe to the second.

But suppose wee were of one accord; is not that enough? May we not spare this other, of one place? If our mindes be one, for the place it skills not: it is but a circumstance or ceremony, what should we stand at it? Yes sure; seeing the HOLY GHOST hath thought it so needfull, as to enter it; wee may not passe it over, or leave it out. Not onely, of one minde (that is) unanimitie: but also, in one place too (that is, uniformitie.) Both, in the unitie of this Spirit, that is inward, and in the bond of peace too, that is, outward. An Item, for those, whom the Apostle calleth Filii substractionis, that forsake the Congregation (as, even then, in the Apostles Times, the manner of some was) and doe withdraw themselves; to their perdition, to no lesse matter. GODS will is, we should be, as upon one foundation, so under one roofe: That, is His doing, Qui facit unanimes &c. Hee that maketh men of one minde to dwell in one house. Therefore it is expresly noted, of this Company here (in the Text) where they prayed, they prayed all together (Chap 4. 24.) When they heard, they heard all together (Chap. 8. 6.) When they brake bread, they did it all together (Verse 46.) All together, ever: not, in one place, some; and some in another: but, all ὁμοῦ τὸ αὐτὸ all in one and the selfe-same place. For, say what they will, Division of places will not long be without division of mindes. This must be our ground: The same Spirit, that loveth unanimitie, loveth uniformitie; unitie even in matter of circumstance, in matter of place. Thus the Church was begun, thus it must be continued. 2 In one place. Ephes. 4 3. Heb. 10. 39. Heb 10. 25. Psal. 68. 6.

To these, doe the Fathers joyne a third: which they raise out of the word, Dum complerentur. A disposition in them, whereby they held out, and stirred not, even till the fiftie dayes were fulfilled. That former unanimitie; this latter, longanimitie. There is in us, a hot hastie spirit, impatient of any delay: what we would have, we would have out of hand: and these same Dum and Donec, and such like words we love them not. This Spirit was even in these here (the Apostles themselves) at the first, as we may see in the last Chap. Verse. 6. where they shew it: Domine jamne vis? LORD wilt thou now? even now? by and by? But that Spirit He cast out, with Non est vestrum, &c. Manete vos, dum. After which charge given, though at the instant of His ascending, He promised He would send them the HOLY GHOST; yet 3 while the fiftie dayes were fulfilled. Chap. 1. 7.

they did not looke for Him, the ſame afternoone; nor ſtayed but till the morrow after Aſcenſion Day; nor (as the Bethulians ſtint was) foure or five dayes, at the fartheſt, Iudith. 7. 30. and then waxed weary, and would wait no longer: But, as He willed them to wait, ſo they did wait; not five dayes, but five, and five: And ſo continued waiting, even uſque dum complerentur, till they were accompliſhed: And then brake not up neither, to keepe Holy-day, but held on their waiting, Holy-dayes, and all.

We ſay before, this Feaſt had divers names: [1] The Feaſt of the Law, [2] The Feaſt
Deut. 16. 9. of harveſt, [3] The Feaſt of Pentecoſt: We may put to a fourth (out of Deut. 16. 9.) It is there called [4] the Feaſt of Weekes. It is not houres will ſerve the turne, nor yet dayes: it muſt be weekes, and as many weekes as be dayes in a weeke, to make it Pentecoſt (that is) fiftie dayes. Thus long they ſate by it (as it is in the next verſe) and tarried patiently the LORDS leaſure, till He came unto them, Qui crediderit ne feſtinet (ſaith the Prophet Eſay) He that beleeveth, let him not be haſtie:
Eſay 18. 16. And, ſi moram fecerit, expecta Eum (ſaith Abacuk) If He happen to ſtay, ſtay for Him.
Abac. 2. 3. And ſo we ſhall, if we call to minde this, that Hee hath waited for us and our converſion, more yeares, Abac. 2. 3. than we doe dayes for Him. And this withall, veniendo veniet; ſtay He may for a time, but if we wait, come He will certainly; and when He commeth, Manebit vobis in æternum, He will never forſake us, but continue with us for ever. Dum complerentur
John 14. 16. ſhall have His accompliſhment.

And in this manner doth the Scripture beare witneſſe of them, they were prepared, and that they ſped of the Spirit; and let us of like preparing, looke for like ſucceſſe.

The Manner, On His part. 1 His comming in type.

And now we come to the Manner, of His comming. And that, firſt in type ſenſibly; thus deſcribed. [1] There came a ſound; [2] There were ſeene tongues, which is a ſenſible kinde of Comming.

And that is a comming rare, and nothing uſuall with the HOLY GHOST; which as an inviſible Spirit, commeth (for the moſt part) inviſibly. So ſaith Iob: He Iob 9. 11. commeth to me, and I ſee Him not; He paſſeth hard by me, and I perceive Him not. It was
Ch. 10. Ver. 24. thus here, for this once: But after, we (ſee in the tenth Chapter) He came upon Cornelius and his company; And after that, upon the Twelve at Epheſus (in the ninth Chap.)
Chap. 9. 6. But on neither, that ought could be ſeene or heard: Onely diſcerned by ſome effect, He wrought in them. He that beſt knew the Spirit (CHRIST) ſets us downe the manner of His comming; Spiritus ſpirat, ſed neſcis unde aut quo, Hee doth come and in- Iohn 3. 8. ſpire, but how or which way, that know you not.

Yet here, in this preſent caſe, for this once, it was meet, He ſhould thus come in ſtate; and that there ſhould be a ſolemne, ſenſible deſcending of it.

1 Meet: that no leſſe honour done to this Law of Sion, than to that of Sinai, which was publike, and full of Majeſtie; and ſo was this to be.

2 Meet: That having once before beene, and never but once, upon CHRIST the Head: it ſhould be ſo once more, on the Church too, the Body. It pleaſed Him to vouchſafe to grace the Church His Queene with like ſolemne inauguration to that of His owne, when the HOLY GHOST deſcended on Him in likeneſſe of a Dove; that ſhee might no leſſe, than Hee Himſelfe, receive from Heaven like ſolemne atteſtation.

3 Laſtly, meet it was, it ſhould remaine to the memory of all ages teſtified, that a day there was, when even apparantly to ſenſe, Mankind was viſited from on high: And that this Wind here, and theſe Tongues came not for nought, at ſo high a Feaſt, in ſo great an Aſſembly.

This Comming then of His, thus in State, is ſuch, as it was both to be heard and ſeene, To the eare and the eye both. So ſaith Saint Peter of it after (Verſe 33.) Being thus exalted (ſaith he of CHRIST) and having received the promiſe of the Father, He hath ſhed forth this, which you now both ſee and heare. And with good reaſon, both: To both ſenſes is the HOLY GHOST preſented. To the eare, which is the ſenſe of faith: To the eye, which is the ſenſe of love. The eare, that is the ground of the word, which is audible: the eye, which is the ground of the Sacraments, which are viſible.

To

To the eare, in a noiſe; To the eye, in a ſhew: A noiſe, of a mightie Wind; A ſhew, of firy Tongues. The noiſe, ſerving as a Trumpet, to awake the World, and give them warning, He was come. The firy Tongues; as ſo many Lights, to ſhew them, and to let them ſee the Day of that their viſitation.

To begin with the firſt: There came a ſound. Which very ſound, is to ſhew, that the Spirit, whereof it is the fore-runner, is no dumbe ſpirit but vocall. And ſo it is: the ſound thereof is not onely gone into all Lands: but hath beene heard, in all ages; before the Floud it ſounded in [a] Enoch a Prophet, and [b] Noe a Preacher of righteouſneſſe. All the Law long, it ſounded in them, by whom [c] Moſes was preached every Sabbath day. The very beginning of the Goſpell, was with a ſound, [d] Vox clamantis: and but for this ſound Saint Paul knoweth not, how we ſhould doe; [e] How ſhould they beleeve (ſaith he) in Him, of whom they have not heard? and without a ſound, there is no hearing. But, we ſhall come to this againe in the apparition of the tongues.

There came a ſound. Rom. 10. 18.

b 2 Pet. 2. 5.
c Chap. 15. 21.
d Matth. 3. 3.
e Rom. 10. 14.

There came a ſound: and not any ſound; it will not be amiſſe, to weigh what kinde of ſound is expreſſed in the word here uſed [ἦχος] you know, what ſound an Echo is: a ſound at the ſecond hand, a ſound at the rebound. Verbum DOMINI venit ad nos; The Word of the LORD commeth to us: there is the firſt ſound, To us: and ours is but the Echo the reflection of it to you. GODS firſt, and then ours ſecond. For, if it come from us directly; and not from Him to us firſt, and from us then to you (echo-wiſe) it is to be ſuſpected. A ſound it may be; the HOLY GHOST, commeth not with it: His forerunner it is not; for that is ἦχος.

A ſound, Echo-wiſe.

There came a ſound, and it was the ſound of a wind: and this too, very fitly. For, the Wind, which is here the type of the HOLY GHOST, of all the creatures, doth beſt expreſſe it.

A ſound of a wind.

1 For firſt, of all bodily things, it is the leſt bodily, and commeth neareſt to the nature of a ſpirit: inviſible as it is.

2 And ſecondly, quicke and active, as the ſpirit is. Of the Wind it is ſaid, Vſque adeo agit, ut niſi agat non ſit: ſo active it is, as no ſtirring the aire, no action, no wind: even ſo, no operation, no ſpirit. So like, as both have but one name: nay, all three but one: [1] The wind in the wide world, [2] the breath in our bodies, [3] and the Spirit in the myſticall Body (the Church:) and much adoe we have, to diſtinguiſh them in many places; they be taken ſo one for another.

Now, this Wind that came and made this ſound, is here deſcribed with foure properties. [1] It fell ſuddenly: [2] It was mightie or violent: [3] It came from Heaven; [4] It filled that place where they ſate; that place, and no other. Of which, the two firſt are ordinarie, and (like the wind) common, [1] To be ſudden, [2] and to be violent. The other two, not ſo, but diſlike: [3] To come from Heaven, [4] and to keepe it ſelfe within one place; and that of no great compaſſe.

1 It came ſuddenly.

It fell ſuddenly, ἄφνω φερομένη: ſo doth the wind. It riſeth oftentimes in the midſt of a calme; giveth no warning, but ruſheth up of a ſudden; and even ſo doth the Spirit: For, that [a] commeth not by obſervation neither (ſaith our SAVIOUR;) you can make no ſet rules of it; you muſt wait for it, as well when it commeth not, as when it comes. [b] Many times it is found of them that ſeeke it not; and therefore little account make of it; and therefore little deſerve it; [c] Cecidit ſuper eum Spiritus, is ſo common in both the Old, and New Teſtament, as wee can make no doubt of this. Which ſheweth, it falls ſuddenly; it creepes not: ſerpentis eſt ſerpere. Commonly, motions that come from the Serpent, creepe upon us: but, neſcit tarda molimina Spiritus Sancti gratia (ſaith Ambroſe.) [d] Velociter currit ſermo Ejus, His Word runneth very ſwiftly, and [e] His Spirit commeth with the wings of the Wind. And therefore ſudden (ſaith Gregorie,) becauſe, things, if they be not ſudden, awake us not, affect us not; but, Repentina valdè mutant, ſudden things ſtart us, and make us looke up. And, therefore ſudden (ſaith he againe) that men may learne, not to deſpiſe preſent motions of grace, though ſuddenly riſing in them; and though they can give no certaine reaſon of them: but take the Wind while it bloweth, and the water, while the Angell moveth it; as not knowing, when it will, or whither ever it will blow againe, againe, or ſtirre any more. It is ἄφνω φερομένη, it fell on a ſudden.

2 A vehement Winde.

It was a mightie or vehement wind. The Wind is ſo; and the Spirit is ſo: both in this well ſorted together.

Of the Wind, it is a common obſervation, that being nothing elſe but a puffe of aire, the thinneſt, the poore ſt, and (to our ſeeming) of the leaſt force of all creatures, yet groweth it to that violence, and gathereth ſuch ſtrength, as it [f] rattles together the great ſhips of Tharſis, as [g] it rents and rives in ſunder mountaines and rocks: pulls up trees; blowes downe huge piles of building: hath moſt ſtrange and wonderfull effects, which our eyes have often ſeene: and all this but a little thinne aire.

g 1 Reg. 19. 11

And ſurely, no leſſe obſervable, , or admirable (nay, much more) have beene and are the operations of the Spirit. Even preſently after this, this Spirit, in a few poore, weake and ſimple inſtruments (GOD knoweth) waxed ſo full and forcible, as it [h] caſt downe ſtrong holds, brought into captivitie many an exalting thought, [i] made a conqueſt of the whole world, even then, when it was bent fully in maine oppoſition againſt it: as it hath ſet all men in a maze to conſider, how ſo poore a beginning ſhould grow to ſuch might, that, Wiſdome, and Learning, and Might, and Majeſtie, and all have ſtooped unto it: and all was but GODS [k] little finger; all [l] the breath of His mouth. Verily, the wind was never ſo vehement as the Spirit hath beene and is, in His proceeding.

Theſe two are common with the Wind; and for theſe two, it might have beene no more, but even a common wind. The other two are not ſo; but ſhew it to be more than a wind: [3] The comming from Heaven, [4] the filling but of that one place. In theſe two, it is diſlike; as, in the former two, like the ordinary wind that bloweth.

3 It came from Heaven.

It came from Heaven. Winds (naturally) come not from thence, but out of the caves and holes of the earth: they blow not downeward, but move laterally from one coaſt or climate to another. To come directly downe, not onely de ſurſum, from above (ſo it may be, from the middle region of the aire) but de cælo, from Heaven it ſelfe; that, is ſupernaturall, ſure: that, is a Wind out of GODS owne Treaſury indeed: that, points us plainely to Him, that is aſcended up into Heaven, and now ſendeth it downe from thence.

Pſ. 135. 7.

And therefore ſendeth it from Heaven, that it may fill us with the breath of Heaven. For, as the wind is, ſo are the blaſts, ſo is the breath of it: and, as is the ſpirit, ſo are the motions, it uſeth; ſo are the reaſons, it is carried by.

To diſtinguiſh this Wind from others, is no hard matter. If our motions come from above; if we fetch our grounds there, de cælo, from heaven, from Religion, from the Sanctuary; it is this wind: but thoſe, that come from earthly reſpects, we know their cave; and that there is nothing but naturall in them. This wind came thence, to make us heavenly minded, [n] ſapere quæ ſurſum, to ſet our affections on things heavenly, [o] and to frame the rules of our converſation agreeable unto Heaven. So wee ſhall know; what wind blowes; whether it be de cælo, or de hominibus: whether it be defluxus cæli, or exhalatio terræ; from heaven or of men, a breath from heaven, or a terrene exhalation.

4 It filled that place only.

And like to this is the fourth: It filled that place where they ſate. That place, where they: That place, not the places about. That place it filled: the other felt it not. And this is another plaine diſſimilie, To blow but in one place: and ſheweth it to be more than ordinary. The common wind, all places within his circuite, it aireth all alike; one as well as another, indifferently. This here ſeemeth to blow Electivè; as if there were ſenſe in it, or it blew by diſcretion. For, it blew upon none of the neighbour houſes; none of the places adjacent, where theſe men were not. That, and onely that roome it filled, where they were ſitting.

And this [of blowing upon one certain place] is a property very well fitting the Spirit, Vbi vult ſpirat. To blow in certaine places, where it ſelfe will; and upon certaine perſons, and they ſhall plainely feele it, and others about them, not a whit. There ſhall be an hundred or more in an auditory; one ſound is heard, one breath doth blow: at that inſtant, one or two and no more; one here, another there; they ſhall ſhall feele the Spirit, ſhall be affected, and touched with it ſenſibly: Twenty on this ſide them, and forty on that, ſhall not feele it; but ſit all becalmed, and goe their way no more moved than they came. Vbi vult ſpirat, is moſt true.

And that Vbi is not any where, but where theſe men ſate; that is, it is a peculiar Wind, and appropriate to that place where the Apoſtles are, that is, the Church: elſewhere to ſeeke it, is but folly: The place, it bloweth in, is Sion: and, in Sion, where men be ſo diſpoſed, as we ſhewed ere-while; that is, where there is concord and unity, the dew of Sion, Ibi mandavit Dominus benedictionem: There, GOD ſendeth this Wind; and there He ſendeth His bleſsing with this wind, which never leaveth us till it bringeth us to life for evermore, to eternall life. So doth Salomon deſcribe the nature of the Wind: That it goeth forth, and that it compaſſeth round about, and then laſt, That it returneth, Per circuitus ſuos: So doth this, it commeth from heaven, and it bloweth into the Church, and thorow, and thorow it, to fill it with the breath of heaven: and as it came from heaven to the Church, ſo it ſhall returne from the Church, into heaven againe, per circuitus ſuos: and whoſe ſailes it hath filled with that wind, it ſhall carry with it along per circuitus ſuos; even to ſee the goodneſſe of the LORD in the Land of the living, there to live with Him and His Holy Spirit for ever.

Eccleſ. 1. 6.

So we have briefly the foure properties of this Wind, and of the Spirit whoſe Type it is: [1] That it is ſudden, in the firſt comming; [2] That it is mightie in proceeding; [3] That it commeth from heaven; [4] That it commeth into the Church; to fill it with the Spirit of heaven, and to carry it thither whence it ſelfe commeth. Thus much for the ſecond, The firſt Type.

This wind brought downe with it tongues, even imbrem linguarum, a whole ſhower of them, which is the next point, Of the ſhew which appeared. By which appearing, it appeareth plainely, that the Wind came not for themſelves onely, but for others too beſide: In that here is not onely ſent a Wind, which ſerveth for their owne inſpiration; but there be alſo ſent tongues with it, which ſerve for elocution (that is) to impart the benefit to more than themſelves.

2 To be Seene. There appeared Tongues. &c.

It ſheweth, that the HOLY GHOST commeth and is given here, rather as gratia gratis data, to doe others good; than as gratia gratum faciens, to benefit themſelves. Charitas diffuſa in corde would ſerve them, Charity powred into their hearts; but gratia diffuſa in labiis, Grace powred into their lips, that is not needfull for themſelves, but needfull to make others, beſide them, partakers of the benefit. The Wind alone, that is to breath withall; the grace of the HOLY GHOST whereby our ſelves live: but, the Wind and Tongues, that is to ſpeake withall; the grace of the HOLY GHOST, where by we make others live, and partake of the ſame knowledge to life. An union of the Wind and Tongue here on earth, expreſſing the unitie of the Spirit and Word in Heaven: that, as the VVind or breath in us is to ſerve the Tongue; ſo is the Spirit given, to ſet forth the VVord, and the HOLY GHOST to ſpread abroad the knowledge of CHRIST.

Rom. 5. 5.
Pſal. 45. 2.

Where, it is not unworthy your obſerving neither, that as in the naturall body, one and the ſame breath of ours, is Organon both vitæ and vocis, is the inſtrument both of life and voice; the ſame that we live by, is the ſame that we ſpeake by: Even the very like is, in the body myſticall; and both the vitall breath, and the vocall, come both (as we here ſee) from the HOLY GHOST.

This alſo ſtandeth of foure parts, as did the former. For, there appeared, [1] Tongues [2] cloven, [3] as it were of fire, [4] ſitting upon each of them.

The tongue is the ſubſtantive, and ſubject of all the reſt. It is ſo: And GOD can ſend from Heaven no better thing; nor the Devill from hell no worſe thing, than it. The beſt member, we have (ſaith the Prophet;) The worſt member, we have (ſaith the Apoſtle:) Both, as it is imployed.

1. Tongues.
Iames 3. 6.

The beſt, if it be of GODS cleaving; if it be of His Lightning with the fire of Heaven; if it be one that will ſit ſtill, if cauſe be. The worſt, if it come from the Devils hands. For, he, as in many other, ſo in the ſending of tongues, ſtriveth to be like GOD; as knowing well, they are every way as fit inſtruments, to worke miſchiefe by, as to doe good with. There be tongues of Angels (in 1 Cor. 13.1.) and if of good Angels, I make no doubt but of evill; and so, the Devill hath his tongues.

And he hath the art of cleaving. He shewed it in the beginning, when he made the Serpent, linguam bisulcam, a forked tongue, to speake that, which was contrary to his knowledge and meaning, They should not die; and as hee did the Serpents, so hee can doe others.

Gen. 3. 4.

There is fire in Hell, as well as in Heaven; that, we all know.

Onely, in this, they agree not, but are unlike; his tongues cannot sit still, but fly up and downe all over the world, and spare neither Minister, nor Magistrate, no nor GOD Himselfe.

But if we shall say to our tongue, as David did to his; Awake up my glory (that is) make it the glory of all the rest of our members; it can have no greater glory than this, to be the Organ of the HOLY GHOST: to set forth, and sound abroad the knowledge of CHRIST, to the glory of GOD the Father. And, so used, it is heavenly; no time, so heavenly as then; in no service, so heavenly as in that.

Psal. 108. 2.

Not to inlarge this point further, there is no new matter in it. This here (of the Tongues) is as that before of the sound; both are to no other end, but to admonish them of their Office, whereto they here received Ordination: even to be Tongues, to be trumpets of the Counsell of GOD, and of His Love to mankinde, in sending His Sonne to save them.

Here is wind to serve for breath; and here are Tongues now, and what should let them to doe it? That which before they received in charge audibly, Ite, Prædicate; the very same they here received visibly, in this apparition, which is after expounded thus; Cæperunt loqui, by vertue of these tongues they began to speake.

Marke 16. 15.

Tongues and cloven tongues. And that very cleaving, of right necessary use, to the businesse intended. For, that of theirs was but one whole entire tongue, that could speake but one poore language, the Syrian, they were bred in. There was not a cleft in it. So, could they speake their minde to none. but Syrians; and by that meanes; should the Gospell have beene shut up, in one corner of the world.

1 Cloven tongues.

τὸ κοινωνικὸν is the goodnesse of all that is good; even the imparting; it to the good of the common. To the end then; this great good of the knowledge of the Gospell, might be dispersed to many Nations, even to every nation under heaven; To that end, clove He their tongues: to make many tongues, in one tongue; to make one man to be able to speake to many men, of many Countries, to every one, in his owne language; If there must be a calling of the Gentiles, they must have the tongues of the Gentiles, wherewith to call them. If they were debters, not onely to the Iewes, but to the Grecians; nay, not onely to the Grecians, but to the Barbarians too, then must they have the tongues not onely of the Iewes, but of the Grecians, and of the Barbarians too, to pay this debt, to discharge the duty of Ite, Prædicate, to all.

Marke 16. 25.

And this was a speciall favour from GOD, for the propagation of His Gospell farre and wide, this division of tongues: and it is by the ancient Writers (all) reckoned a plaine reversing of the curse of Babel, by this blessing of Sion: since they account it all one (and so it is) either, as at the first, for all men to speake one language; or, as here, one man speake all. That is here recovered, that there, was lost; and they inabled for the building up of Sion in every Nation, to speake so, as all might understand them of every Nation.

But this withall we are to take with us: that, with their many tongues, they spake, one thing, and that Vnivocè. With one mouth (Rom. 15.6.) With one voice (Chap. 4. 24.)

Chap. 4. 24.

With diverse tongues to utter one and the same sense, that is GODS cloven tongue; that, is the division of Sion, serving to edification.

With one tongue, æquivocè, to utter diverse senses, diverse meanings; that, is none of GODS, it is the Serpents forked tongue, the very division of Babel, and tendeth to nothing but confusion.

Tongues cloven, and as they had beene of fire. As they had beene: to keepe a difference in these (as before, in the Wind;) and to shew, that they were not of our elementarie fire.

fire. For, it is added; ſate upon them: which they could not have done, without ſome hurt; without skorching them, at leaſt; if it had beene ſuch fire, as it is in our chimneyes. But it was ὡσεί, as it were ours: (that is) in ſhew, earthly; in deed, celeſtiall: And as the Winde, ſo the fire from heaven; of the nature of that (in the III. of Exod.) which made the buſh burne, and yet conſumed it not. Exod. 3. 2.

Where firſt we are to obſerve againe, the conjunction of the tongue, and fire. The ſeat of the tongue is in the head; and the Head of the Church is CHRIST. The native place of heat (the quality, in us, anſwering to this fire) is the heart: and the Heart of the Church is the HOLY GHOST. Theſe two joyne, to this work: CHRIST, to give the tongue; the HOLY GHOST, to put fire into it. For, as in the body naturall, the next, the immediate inſtrument of the ſoule, is heat, whereby it worketh all the members over; even ſo, in the myſticall body, a vigour there is, like that of heat which we are willed to cheriſh, to be [a] fervent in the Spirit, to [b] ſtirre and to [c] blow it up: which is it, that giveth efficacie to all the ſpirituall operations. Ephes. 1. 22. a Rom. 12. 11. b 1 Theſſ. 5. 19. c 2 Tim. 1. 6.

To expreſſe this qualitie, it appeareth in the likeneſſe of this element; even to ſhew, there ſhould be an efficacie, or vigour, in their doctrine, reſembling it; Quòd igneus eſt illis vigor, that the force of fire ſhould ſhew forth it ſelfe in their words: both in the ſplendor; which is the light of knowledge to cleare the miſt of their darkned underſtanding; and in fervour, which is the force of ſpirituall efficacie, to quicken the dulneſſe of their cold and dead affections.

And indeed, the world was then ſo overwhelmed with ignorance and errour; and ſo overgrowne with droſſe, and other bad matter, by Paganiſme, it long had beene, that their lips did need, to be touched with a cole from the Altar. Tongues of fleſh would not ſerve the turne, nor words of aire: but there muſt be fire put into the tongue, and ſpirit and life into the words, they ſpake; a force more than naturall (that is) the force of the Spirit: even to ſpeake ſparkes of fire in ſtead of words, to drive away the darkneſſe, and to refine the droſſe of their heatheniſh converſation ſo long continued. Eſ. 6. 6.

Our SAVIOUR CHRIST ſaw this, and ſaid: Every ſacrifice then had need to be ſeaſoned with fire: but there was no fire to doe it with. Therefore He addeth, in another place: I came to ſend fire upon earth; and, this day, Hee was as good as His word, and ſent it. Marke 9. 49. Luke 12. 49.

And with ſuch a tongue, ſpake He Himſelfe, when they ſaid of Him, Did not our hearts burne within us, while He ſpake unto us by the way? With ſuch a tongue Saint Peter, here in this Chapter: for ſure, there fell from Him ſomething like fire on their hearts, when they were pricked with it and cried, Men and brethren, what ſhall we doe? Luke 24. 32. Verſ. 37.

And even to this day yet; in them, that move the dead and dull hearts of their hearers, and make them to have a lively apprehenſion of things pertaining to GOD, there is a remainder of that, which this day was ſent; and they ſhew plainly, that yet, this fire is not cleane gone out.

But this is not alwayes, nor in all, with us; no more was it with them; but, in thoſe of their hearers, which had ſome of the anointing, and that will eaſily take the fire; in them good will be done: Or at leaſt, where there was ſome ſmoaking flax, ſome remainder of the Spirit, which without any great adoe will be kindled a new. Them, it doth good: the reſt, it did not. This for the fire. 1 Iohn 2. 27. Matth. 12. 20.

Theſe ſate upon each of them. In which ſitting, is ſet downe unto us, their laſt qualitie, of continuance and conſtancie. The vertue is πυρόσπδειν, firy tongues ſitting: the vice oppoſite ἐπιπολάζειν, firy Tongues flitting. They did not light, and touch, and away, after the manner of butterflies; but both they ſate themſelves (in the former Verſe;) the tongues ſate on them (that is) they abode ſtill, and continued ſtay'd and ſteddie, without ſtirring or ſtarting aſide (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) like a ſwarving bow. 4 And ſate one each of them. Verſe 2. Verſe 3. Pſal. 78. 57.

Of our SAVIOUR CHRIST Himſelfe, how to know Him, GOD Himſelfe gave Saint Iohn Baptiſt a privie ſigne; and it was this: On whomſoever thou ſeeſt the Spirit lighting, and abiding on Him, That is He: Lighting is not it, though it be the HOLY GHOST: but, lighting and abiding; that is the true Signe. Iohn 1. 33.

The

Psal 68.18,19. The ſame our SAVIOUR is, this day, ſaid: That aſcending on high, He gave gifts unto men: and to what end? that the LORD their GOD might dwell among them. Marke that; Dwell: not might ſtay and lodge for a night, as in an Inne, or Hoſtry, and then be gone in the morning; but, Dwell: (that is) have His habitation, take up His reſidence among them.

Psal. 51. 10. The GOD, or that Perſon of the Deitie, He there ſaith, ſhall dwell, is the HOLY GHOST: One of whoſe chiefe Attributes (in the Pſalme) is, that He is רוח נכון a conſtant Spirit: (and, if Sanctus come of Sancio, there is as much ſaid in the Latine word as in the Hebrew:) Conſtant, not deſultory: and His fire not like the fooliſh me-

Levit. 6. 12. teor, now in, now out; but permanent ſtill, like the fire on the Altar.

So in vigour, as His vigour, is not brunts onely, or ſtarts, impetus; but, habitus, that it holdeth out habit-wiſe. Not onely like the ſparkes, before, which will make a man ſtirre for the preſent; but, leaving an impreſſion, ſuch an one as iron red hot leaveth in veſſels of wood; a fire-marke never to be got out more. Such doth the HOLY Psal. 119. 93. GHOST leave in the memories: In æternum non obliviſcar, I ſhall never forget it.

And ſuch did it leave in the hearts of the firſt Chriſtians, that could never be got out of their hearts by their perſecutors, till they plucked out hearts and all.

Marke 9. 49. With this Salt, as well as with that fire (ſaith CHRIST) muſt every ſacrifice be ſeaſoned: Not onely with that fire, to ſtirre it up; but with this ſalt, to preſerve it; By this vertue (in the former verſe) they were diſpoſed to the Spirit: and now here, you ſee againe, by the Spirit, they are diſpoſed to this vertue: And not onely diſpoſed to it, but rooted, and more and more confirmed in it; that we may learne to eſteeme of it accordingly.

And thus have we (as before, heard what the ſound, ſo now) ſeene, what the ſight can ſhew us, even all foure: 1. Tongues, that they might preach: 2. Cloven, that they might preach to many: 3. Fire, that they might doe it effectually; 4. And Sitting, that ſo effectually as not flittingly, but that it might be an efficacie, conſtant, abiding, and ſtaying ſtill with them: So forcible, that continuall.

Now are we to know, what all this amounts to; what is the Signatum or thing ſignified of both theſe ſignes: What was wrought in them, by inward concurrence with this outward reſemblance. And that followeth in the fourth verſe; wherein, there is a Commentary of this Winde, and a Gloſſe of theſe tongues. Of the Winde, in the forepart: They were all filled with the HOLY GHOST. Of the Tongues, in the latter; They began to ſpeake with other Tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.

But, the time being alreadie ſpent, I will not ſo farre preſume, as to enter into it: It would aske too long a treaty.

It remaineth now, that firſt wee offer up our due praiſe and unfeined hearty thankes, giving to Him that is aſcended up on high, for ſending, this day, this bleſſing upon that His Church, the Mother of us all. The fruit whereof, even of this Winde, and of theſe tongues, in the effect of them both (the blowing of the one, and the ſpeaking of the other) we all feele to this day, ſo farre as Chriſtendome is wide. It is the dutie of the day.

Firſt then this: and then withall ſecondly, to endeavour that we may have this day ſome feeling of this dayes benefit, our ſelves; and ſome way finde our ſelves viſited with the ſame Spirit.

I told you, after this firſt, there is no more viſible comming to be looked for: but that, after His accuſtomed uſuall manner, inviſibly He ceaſeth not to come ſtill, nor will not to the worlds end.

Even in this booke, after this time here, three ſeverall times (in the fourth, tenth, and nineteenth Chapters;) and at three ſeverall places (Ieruſalem, Cæſarea, Epheſus) The ſame Spirit came upon the faithfull people, and yet nothing heard nor ſeene; onely diſcerned after, by the impreſſion; it left behinde it. And this comming is ſtill uſuall with Him; and this we may hope for; hope for, and have, if we labour and diſpoſe our ſelves for it.

And we may direct our ſelves, how to doe this, by thoſe three places, I even now alleaged. [1] In the fourth Chapter, 31. Verſe: As they prayed, the Spirit came upon them: [2] In the tenth, Verſe 44. While Peter yet ſpake, the Spirit fell upon them: [3] In the nineteenth Chapter, Verſe 6. As they received the Sacrament, the Spirit was ſent on them. In which three, are plainely ſet downe to us, theſe three meanes to procure the Spirits comming: [1] Prayer, [2] The Word, [3] The Sacraments.

I know well, it was the Sacrament of Baptiſme in the place laſt alleaged: but that is all one. In one Verſe, doth the Apoſtle name them both, as of equall power (both) for the purpoſe; (1 Cor. 12. 13.) Vno Spiritu baptizati eſtis; (and, before he ends the verſe) & uno Spiritu poti. Baptized in the Spirit, There is theirs at Epheſus; but made drinke of the ſame Spirit, that is this of ours here. For, ex ſimilibus ſumus & alimur. Ours here (I ſay) where we doe drinke of the Spirit, if aright we receive it; in which reſpect he calleth it the Spirituall drinke (1 Cor, 10. 3.) becauſe we doe even drinke the Spirit with it.

And even in this very Chapter before the end, it is noted by S. Luke, as a ſpeciall meanes, whereby they invited the Spirit to them againe and againe; Their continuing in the Temple with one accord, and breaking of bread. Of one accord, we ſpake at the firſt, as an effectuall diſpoſition thereto: And this Sacrament of breaking of Bread is the Sacrament of accord; as that, which repreſenteth unto us perfect unity in the many graines kneaded into one loafe, and the many grapes preſſed into one Cup; and what it repreſenteth lively, it worketh as effectually. 1 Cor. 10. 17.

Howſoever it be, if theſe three, [1] Prayer, [2] The Word, [3] the Sacraments be every one of them as an artery, to conveigh the Spirit into us; well may we hope, if we uſe them all three, we ſhall be in a good way to ſpeed of our deſires. For, many times we miſſe, when we uſe, this one, or that one, alone; where it may well be, GOD hath appointed to give it us by neither, but by the third. It is not for us, to limit or appoint Him, how, or by what way, He ſhall come unto us, and viſit us: but, to offer up our obedience, in uſing them all; and uſing them all, He will not faile but come unto us, either as a wind, to allay in us ſome unnaturall heat of ſome diſtempered deſire in us to evill; or as a fire to kindle in us ſome luke-warme, or ſome key-cold affection in us to good: Come unto us, either as the Spirit of truth, lightning us with ſome new knowledge; or as the Spirit of Holineſſe, reviving in us ſome vertue or grace; or as the Comforter, miniſtring to us ſome inward contentment, or joy in the HOLY GHOST; or, in one or other certainely He will come. For, a compleat obedience on our part, in the uſe of all His preſcribed meanes, never did goe away emptie from Him, or without a bleſſing: Never did, nor never ſhall.

Never: but not on this day, of all dayes; the day, wherein Dona dedit hominibus, He gave gifts unto men. It is Dies donorum, His giving day, His day of Donatives: Some gift He will give, either from the Wind, inward; or from the tongue, outward; ſome gift He will give.

There be nine of them ſet downe, Nine manifeſtations of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12.) ſome of them nine. There be nine more ſet downe, nine fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5. ſome of them nine: Some gift He will give. 1 Cor. 12. 8. Gal. 5. 22.

Onely let us diſpoſe our ſelves by the uſe, not of this one, or that one, or two, but of all the meanes, to receive it by. Inwardly, by unitie, and patient waiting His leaſure, as theſe here: Outwardly, by frequenting thoſe holy duties, and offices all, which (we ſee) ſucceeded with thoſe there in the three places remembred.

And, in theſe, the bleſſed Spirit ſo diſpoſe us, and in them ſo bleſſe us, as we may not onely by outward celebration, but by inward participation, feele and finde in our ſelves, that we have kept to Him, this day, a true Feaſt of the comming of His Spirit, of the ſending downe the Holy Ghoſt. Which Almightie GOD grant, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAjestie, at GREENWICH, on the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCVIII. being WHITSUNDAY.

ACTS CHAP. II. Ver. IV.

Et repleti ſunt omnes SPIRITV SANCTO, & cœperunt loqui variis linguis, prout SPIRITVS SANCTVS dabat eloqui illis.

And they were all filled with the HOLY GHOST, and began to ſpeake with other tongues, as the SPIRIT gave them utterance.

1 THIS day hold we holy to the HOLY GHOST, by whom all holy dayes, perſons, and things are made holy. And with good reaſon, hold we it: He that maketh all holy dayes, it is meet ſhould bee allowed one, Himſelfe. And if we yeeld this honour, to this and that Saint; much more to the Saint-maker; to Him, that is the onely true Canonizer of all the Saints in the Calendar.

2 This honour were we bound to yeeld Him, if there were nothing beſides: but, ſeldome ſhall ye finde a Feaſt, wherein, with his honour, there is not joyned the remembrance of ſome memorable benefit then vouchſafed us; as (here) this Feaſt is not to the HOLY GHOST ſimply; but; but, to the ſending or comming of the HOLY GHOST: to the HOLY GHOST ſent.

3 Sent: not, as in former times, qualified or by measure, but even in plenitudine, in plentious manner, fully. It is ſaid, They were filled with the Holy Ghoſt.

4 Filled: not to hold, but to ſet over. For, ſo many tongues, ſo many pipes to derive it to others, that, by preaching, they might impart the Spirit they received: preaching being nothing elſe (as the Fathers obſerve, out of the 11. Num.) but the taking of the ſpirit of the Preacher, and putting it on the hearer: or to expreſſe it by the type of fire) the lighting of one torch by another; that ſo, it might paſſe from man to man, till all were lightned. Nnm. 11. 25.

For this Holy Spirit, thus ſent, plenteouſly ſent, ſent to them, and by them, to all and to us, are we here met to render our thanks to GOD: even to imitate Him; to ſend, this day, tongues into heaven, there to laud and magnifie Him, who as this day ſent theſe tongues into earth.

Now, of this benefit, (ſo far as the two types in the former verſes)* hath formerly been treated: and we are now to ſupply what was then left in remainder. * At Pentecoſt A.D. 1606.

This fourth verſe then, is nothing elſe but a Commentary of the former; what in them was ſet forth in figure, is here expreſſed in plaine termes. The types were of two ſorts, according to the two chiefe ſenſes; 1 Audible to the eare, in the ſound of winde; 2 Viſible to the eye, in the ſhew of tongues. Theſe two are expounded in the two moities of this Verſe. The former, the Commentary of the winde, in theſe words: They were filled with the Holy Ghoſt. The latter, the gloſſe of the tongues, in theſe: And they began to ſpeak with tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance. The Summe.

For the firſt. The place was filled with a winde from Heaven. The filling of the place was a ſigne of the filling the perſons in the place; the winde was a ſigne of the Spirit; the winde from Heaven, of the Holy Spirit: which Spirit filled the Perſons, no leſſe than did the winde, the roome they ſate in. Two points there bee in it: 1 One of the Gift it ſelfe, in Spiritu ſancto. 2 The other of the meaſure of the gift, in Repleti ſunt. The Diviſion. I 1 2

For the latter: foure things were in the type, 1 Tongues, 2 cloven, 3 ſitting, 4 of fire; all foure here expreſſed, and ſuited. 1 Tongues: they began to ſpeake. 2 Cloven: with other tongues. 3 Sitting: as the Spirit gave them. 4 Fire: ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, (utterance, it is turned; it is more.) Theſe are the Heads. But, for that there is no ſpeaking of the ſpirit, without the ſpirit, no hearing neither; to the end that ſpeaking and hearing of Him, He may helpe our infirmities, &c. II 1. 2. 3. 4.

THe truth anſwering the type, per omnia, as there were in that, two; 1 the Wind, and 2 Tongues: ſo are there here, two; 1 the ſpirit, 2 and ſpeech. Spirit, becauſe ſpeech without ſpirit, is but a dead ſound like the a tinckling of a Cymball. Speech; becauſe ſpirit without ſpeech, is but as the ſpirit that CHRIST caſt forth, b and illud erat mutum, a dumbe ſpirit; none the better for it. Which made the HOLY GHOST come in ſpirit and ſpeech: not in ſpirit only, but, in ſpirit, and ſpeech. I The Commentary of the winde. Of both parts joyntly. Spirit and ſpeech both. a 1 Cor. 13. 1. b Luke. 11. 14. But Spirit firſt in order.

But in ſpirit firſt, and then ſpeech. So is the order. The HOLY GHOST begins within, à centro, and worketh outward: alters the minde, before it change the ſpeech: giveth another heart, before another tongue: works on the ſpirit, before on the phraſe or utterance: ever, ſo. It is prepoſterous, and all out of order, to have the tongues come, before the winde; where they doe, it commonly falls out in ſuch, all their religion is in common phraſes and termes well got by heart, and nothing elſe. This for their joyning, and for their order.

I. Of the parts ſeverally.

Now of either, apart. Of the Spirit firſt, which they were filled with; After, of their filling; that is, [1] firſt of the Gift it ſelfe; [2] then of the Meaſure. That, they were filled with, is ſet downe in two wrods; [1] ſpiritu and [2] ſancto. Firſt, that it was ſpirit; then, that that ſpirit was holy. A ſpirit; for, men may be filled, and not with the ſpirit: Holy, for, there is a ſpiritu without ſancto. We muſt needs put the difference; ſpirit and holy, are the two diverſe things.

I The Gift. 1 It was a Spirit.

A ſpirit, not An humour.

With the ſpirit: for men may be filled, and not with the Spirit. That which enforceth this note, is, a ſpeech at the 13. verſe; there, they ſtick not (ſome,) this, that was the ſpirit indeed, to reproach with the terme of new wine: Theſe men are full (ſay they;) full, they grant: but, with wine, a liquor though full of ſpirit, yet no ſpirit though. It was falſe as it fell out: yet, this it worketh, that if the ſpirit may bee taken for a humour, why not a humour for the ſpirit likewiſe? And not the humour of the vine only: but, the Philoſopher (in his Problemes) tels us, that looke whatſoever operation wine hath, the ſame have ſome humours in our bodies, with a little fermenting. The Prophet Eſay ſeemeth to ſay the ſame in two places: that men may be drunk, and not with wine; their owne humour will doe it as well.

Eſay. 29. 9. 51. 52.

I wiſh, it were not true, this: that humours were not ſometimes miſtaken, and miſ-termed the ſpirit. A hot humour flowing from the gall, taken for this fire here, and termed (though untruly) the ſpirit of zeale. Another windie humour proceeding from the ſpleene, ſuppoſed to be this winde here, and they that filled with it (if no bodie will give it them) taking to themſelvs the ſtyle of the godly brethren. I wiſh, it were not needfull, to make this obſervation. But, you ſhall eaſily know it, for an humour: Non continetur termino ſuo; It owne limites will not hold it: They are ever mending Churches, States, Superiours; mending all, ſave themſelves: alieno, non ſuo, is the note to diſtinguiſh an humour.

2 The Holy Spirit. Not our Owne ſpirit.

With the ſpirit; yet, not every ſpirit. I told you, there was a ſpiritu without ſancto; and I mean not the wicked ſpirit (away with him, we will not once mention him;) but, two other: [1] There is a ſpirit in a man (ſaith [a] Elihu) that is, our owne ſpirit; and many there be, [b] qui ſequuntur ſpiritum ſuum, that follow their own ghoſt, in ſtead of the Holy Ghoſt: for, even that ghoſt taketh upon it, to inſpire, [c] and fleſh and blood (we know) have their revelations.

a Iob 32. 8.
b Ezek. 13. 3.
c Matth. 16. 2.

2 Not the Worlds ſpirit.

The other is, that the Apoſtle calleth [d] ſpiritum mundi, the worlds ſpirit (or worldly ſpirit) [e] qui poſuit mundum in corde ſuo (ſaith Salomon) hath ſet up and ſhrin'd the world in his heart: thence riſe all his reaſons, by them he frames and meaſures Religion. Up ſhall the golden calves, to uphold the preſent eſtate: downe ſhall Chriſt, [f] ne veniant Romani, that the Romans come not, and carry us all away. Either of theſe is peradventure Sacer ſpiritus, as the Poet calleth auri ſacra fames; but neither is ſanctus. [g] S. Peter oppoſeth the firſt (of private reſolution) to the Holy Ghoſt: [h] S. Paul the ſecond (of worldly wiſdome) to the ſpirit of GOD. The winde (before) had foure qualities: two of them ([1] ſuddenneſſe, and [2] vehemency) are paſſed by. Every winde, every ſpirit hath them. And commonly, other ſpirits are more violent, and make a greater noiſe, than the true ſpirit. The other two, [1] of comming from heaven, [2] comming for the Church; from the holy Heaven, to the holy Church; are both, in ſancto, and ſapere quæ ſurſum, being wiſe from thence, and regard to Religion and the Church; are the two beſt Characters to diſcerne the Holy ſpirit by.

The Holy ſpirit, that is, His Graces.

Now ye will underſtand of your ſelves (I ſhall not need to tell you;) when we ſpeake of the holy ſpirit, as it filleth us, we meane not the Eſſence or Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt that filleth Heaven and earth (ſaith the Prophet;) and there is no going from it, (ſaith the Pſalmiſt:) but only certaine impreſſions of the ſpirit. The Pſalmiſt calleth them Gifts (Pſal. LXVIII. XVIII.) The Apoſtle, Graces (1 Cor. XII. VII.) which carry the name of their Cauſe: ſo that (in the Dialect or Idiom of the Scriptures) to be filled with them, is to be filled with the Spirit. To ſhew this, otherwhile they be joyned: the ſpirit and power of Elias (that is) the power of the ſpirit; the Wiſdome and ſpirit of STEPHEN, (that is) the wiſdome of the Spirit. Act. 6.10.

And, becauſe theſe Gifts, and Graces be of many points (more Points of this Wind than there be of the Compaſſe) and as it were many ſpirits in one, ſix, (ſaith[a] Eſay;) ſeven, (ſaith[b] Saint Iohn:) they are all recapitulate under theſe two. 1 Under the wind is repreſented the ſaving grace, which all are to have (ſo to ſerve GOD, that they may pleaſe Him;) as neceſſary to all, and without which, we can be no more, in our ſpirituall life, than we can, without our breath, in our naturall. This is generall to all. It is ſaid repleti ſunt omnes: the hearer muſt have it, as well as the ſpeaker. It muſt aire and drie up the ſuperfluitie of our nature; elſe, the fire will not kindle in us, but turne all to ſmoke. Of this Spirit are thoſe nine points (*Gal.*5.22.) 2 The other, (repreſented in the Tongues,) ſet forth unto us another kinde of Grace, principally meant and ſent for the benefit of others: given therefore in Tongues, which ſerve to teach; and in fire, which ſerveth to warm others: to ſhew they are given and received, for the good of others, rather than of themſelves. And of this Spirit are the points reckoned up, (1 *Cor.*12.7.)

b Apoc 1.4. 3.1.
Gal. 5.22.

And now we know, what it was they were filled with, let us come to the meaſure, Repleti ſunt. It was not ſpiritus tranſiens, but implens: a wind, not that blew thorow them, (as it doth thorow many of us, I know not how oft) but, that filled them: they were the fuller for it. Which word [of filling] wanteth not his ſpeciall force: referre we it to their eſtate now, compared with what it was before, repleti ſunt; or to their eſtate in this point, compared with other ſince, and namely with our ſelves, Repleti ſunt illi.

The meaſure. Repleti ſunt.

With their owne eſtate firſt. For, there is no queſtion, they were not emptie or void of the Spirit, before this comming. They had not beene baptized by CHRIST; He had not breathed on them, and bid them receive the HOLY GHOST, in vaine: If, before this, they had dyed, none would have doubted of the eſtate of their ſoules. This filling then (firſt) ſheweth us, there be divers meaſures of the Spirit: ſome ſingle, ſome double portions, as appeareth by ELISHA's petition: not all of one ſize or ſcantling. That, as there are degrees in the winde, Aura, ventus, procella; a breath, a blaſt, a ſtiffe gale: ſo are there in the Spirit. One thing; to receive the ſpirit, as on Eaſter-day; another, as on Whit-ſunday. Then, but a breath: now, a mighty winde: then, but received it; now, filled with it. Sprinkled before, as with a few drops, Ezekiels ſtillabo ſpiritum; but, now comes Ioels Effundam ſpiritum (which very Text is alleged at the XXVIII. verſe after by Saint Peter) powred out plenteouſly, and they baptized (that is) plunged in it. Imbuti ſpiritu, covered with ſome part of it; ſo were they before: here now, they be induti ſpiritu, cloathed all over with power from above, as CHRIST promiſed (Luke XXIV. XLIX.) To conclude: the HOLY GHOST came here (ſaith Leo) cumulans, non inchoans; nec novus opere, ſed dives largitate: rather by way of augmenting the old, than beginning a new. Though (to ſay the truth) both wayes He came here. The rule of the Father is (Hierome and Cyrill have it) where the HOLY GHOST was before, and is ſaid to come againe, it is to be underſtood, one of theſe wayes: 1 Either of an increaſe of the former, which before was had; 2 or of ſome new not had before, but ſent now for ſome new effect. Breath they had before: breath and winde are both of one kinde: differ only ſecundùm magis & minus: to be filled is but to receive only in a greater meaſure: therefore greater, becauſe their worke was now greater. Before but to the loſt ſheep of Iſrael: now to all the ſtray ſheep in all the mountaines of the whole earth.

But, beſide that increaſe, here is a new forme too. Which is a ſigne of a new gift, utterly wanting in them before, and wherewith now, and never till now, they were furniſhed; to ſpeake to all nations, of all tongues under Heaven. Thus farre, compared with themſelves.

2 Repleti ſunt illi, with reference to others

Pſal. 133. 2.

Now, repleti ſunt illi. Illi, with reference to others ſince, and (if you will) to our ſelves. They, in the ſucceeding ages, and we, to this day, receive the ſpirit too, or elſe it is wrong with us. But, both they before us, ſhort of the Apoſtles; and we ſhort of them, by much. It fareth herein, as it doth in the powring forth of an ointment, (the Pſalme ſo likeneth it:) No ointment at the skirts, or edges of a garment, doth runn ſo freſh, and full, as on the head, and beard, where it was firſt ſhed: ever, the further it goeth, the thinner and thinner the ſtreames be. Therefore it is ſaid, Repleti ſunt illi; and even illi wants not his force, they were filled, they. We, but a Hin, to their Epha; but an handfull, to their heape; but a rantiſme, to their Baptiſme. They filled: had as much, as they could hold: We have our meaſure, ſuch as it is; but, full we are not. None of us ſo full, but we could hold more.

Pſal. 68. 18. Epheſ. 4. 8.

And, two reaſons there are rendred: 1 One, ſuch a Pentecoſt, as this, never was but this; never the like before, nor ſince. It was CHRIST's Coronation day, the day of placing him in his Throne, when He gave theſe gifts unto men. That day, all magnificence was ſhewed, the like not to be looked for ever after.

2 Reaſon.

Then againe, to ſay truth, our task-worke is not ſo great, that we need require ſuch a filling. We have to deale with but a handfull of men, in compariſon; and thoſe brought up in religion, and (as it were) broken to our hands. They, with the fulneſſe of the Gentiles, all mankinde; wilde as then, and enraged; filled full of malice againſt them; and their doctrine by the evill ſpirit: that they needed the good ſpirit, to fill, to encounter ſuch oppoſition. The caſe (you ſee) differs much. It was happie for the world, they had this overflowing fulneſſe of the ſpirit. It is enough for us, we have the meaſure ſpoken of, 2 Cor. 12. 9. Sufficit tibi gratia, grace ſufficient for us: and let that content us. And thus much for the commentary of the winde. Now, to the gloſſe of the tongues.

The gloſſe of the tongues. And they ſpake * Pſal. 39. 3.

They were filled; and, in ſigne they were filled, it is added, they ranne over. The * fire was kindled in them, by this wind; and in ſigne thereof, they ſpeake with their tongue. Indeed, pitie they ſhould be thus full, and have no meanes to vent it: have a ſpirit to fill, and not a tongue to emptie, or impart it. Therefore, the tongues were requiſite. The wind would have ſerved them, if they had beene to bee Chriſtians only: But, they were to be Apoſtles (that is, Ambaſſadors) and ſuch muſt have tongues, needs. But; two imperfections were in their tongues: 1 They were but ſingle: Hee cleft them, and made them able to deale with many. 2 Their tongues were wateriſh and weake: He gave them the force and operation of fire, to kindle ſuch a light, as ſhould burne to the worlds end. In a word: where they knew neither how, nor what to ſpeake, He gave them both: both ſicut, how; and ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, what: Hee gave them both, and ſo made them perfect Apoſtles. Theſe foure, 1 courage, 2 language, 3 diſcretion, and 4 learning.

The dependance of Repleti, and loquuti their skil.

Firſt, a word of the dependance of Repleti, and loquuti: They were filled, and then they began to ſpeake. It is well they began not before; but were filled firſt, and then ſpake after. This, is the right order. Somewhere, ſome fall a ſpeaking, I will not ſay before they be full, or halfe-full; but while they be little better then emptie, if not empty quite. There, is not repleti ſunt, & cæperunt loqui: cæperunt loqui begins the verſe with them; Repleti ſunt is skipped over. Ever, emptying preſuppoſeth filling: Repleti hath reference to the ciſterne; Loquuti to the cocke. The ciſterne would be firſt looked to, that it have water ſtore, before we be too buſie, to ply the cocke; Elſe, follow wee not the Holy Ghoſt's method: Elſe, it may be cæperunt loqui, but not ſicut dedit ſpiritus: He giveth leave to none, to ſpeak, empty.

It is but a Grammar note (that of Hieromes) but it is to the purpoſe, upon the word quem docebo ſcientiam (Eſay 28.) that doceo, if it have his right, would have a double Accuſative: not only quem, whom (that is) an auditory; but ſcientiam, what (that is) knowledge.

knowledge. So as, he that hath not ſcientiam, ſhould not have quem; and they that get themſelves whom to teach, and have not ſcientiam, what to teach, goe they never ſo oft into the Pulpit, it is not ſicut dedit Spiritus, the HOLY GHOST gave them neither miſsion nor Commiſsion. He ever taketh order for repleti, before He giveth licence for cæperunt loqui.

And this for their skill. But, he that reades the Fathers writings, ſhall find they referre this cæperunt loqui, no leſſe to their boldneſſe, than to their habilitie: began, not only, poſſe, to be able, in reſpect of their skill, but audere, to dare, in regard of their courage. Before, neither courage, nor skill; now, both: that any man might ſee, there was a new ſpirit come into them. In ſaying [they began] it is, as if before they had beene tongue-tyed, had never ſpoken. No more they had: never as they ſpoke now; never, with that confidence. Before, they did not ſpeake out, they durſt not; they ſpake betweene the teeth, hoarſly, as if they had loſt their voice. A poore Damoſel did but ask S. Peter a queſtion, he faultered preſently, could not ſpeak a right word. Every thing, then, took away their voice. But, after this mighty Wind, had filled them and blowen up the fire, and they warmed with it; then (ſaith Auguſtine) In omni prætorio, in omni Conſiſtorio, in every Iudgement-place, in every Conſiſtory, then, they ſpake what they had heard and ſeene, even before Kings, and were not abaſhed. It confirmed them; it gave them ſides, and ſtrength. Which ſo ſudden change, from ſo great puſillanimitie, to ſo great courage and conſtancie, was ſure mutatio dexteræ Excelſi, a change wrought by the hand of the moſt High. No other hand could work it.

1 Cæperunt loqui Their courage

Pſalm. 77. 10.

And (that we may know, that not only the tongues wrought in them, but even the cleaving alſo had his effect) they began, not only to ſpeake; but, with other tongues: other, than ever they had learned. For, looke what tongue ſoever it was, beſide the Syriack, it was another tongue, it was not theirs: they had but one till now; any other. they could not skill of. But now, on a ſudden, Greeke, Latine, Arabicke, Perſian, Parthian, none came amiſſe: yet, never were they taught them; but came to them, as it were with a cleft only. A great miracle, in it ſelfe: And a great inabling to them. For, by this meanes, every Apoſtle, look how many tongues he would ſpeak, ſo many Apoſtles was he, as ſerving for ſo many ſundry men, as muſt elſe have beene uſed for the ſpeaking ſo many ſundry tongues, to ſo many ſundry Nations. Whereby, as the line of the Creator is ſaid to have gone in to all lands, (Pſalm 19. 4.) ſo is the ſound of the Apoſtles ſaid likewiſe to have gone as farre (Rom. 10.) The one, to proclaime the creation; the other, the redemption of the world. And ſo, by ſpeaking all tongues, they have gathered a Church, that ſpeaketh all tongues; a thing much tending to the glory of GOD. For, being now converted to CHRIST, they ſend up daily to Heaven, ſo many tongues, there to praiſe His name; as He, this day, ſent downe to earth, to convert them withall to His truth. And indeed, it was not meet, one tongue onely ſhould be imployed that way, as (before) but one was: It was too poore and ſlender; like the muſicke of a monochord. Far more meet was it, that many tongues; yea, that all tongues ſhould doe it; which (as a conſort of many inſtruments) might yeeld a full harmony. In which, we behold the mighty worke of GOD: that the ſame meanes of divers tongues, which was the deſtroying of Babel, the very ſame is here made to worke the building of Sion: that meanes, that ſcattered them, from the Tower of Confuſion; the very ſame, to reduce them, to the fold of unitie: that ſo, the curſe might be taken away, and a bleſſing come in place, the confuſed tongues being united into GODS glory; and there being neither ſpeech nor language, but His praiſe is heard among them. The Nations being once converted to the faith (moſt of them) this gift is ceaſed: ceaſed ſo farre, as by immediate inſpiration: though, in part to attaine it, by our endeavours, and GODS bleſſing upon them, is found ſtill of good uſe. For, even to this day, it is holden for requiſite, there be one cleft (at leaſt) in the tongue; and wee able to ſpeake one tongue more, than our mothers taught us. Better yet, if the cleft, which GOD hath made in His Word, in the tongues of the Old and New Teſtament,

2 Linguis, &c. Their language.

Gen. 11. 7.

be it in our tongues too. That hath ſtill a neceſſary ſervice; and maimed are we, without it: For, we muſt (elſe) receive the embaſſage from GOD, by an Interpreter, which is not ſo convenient. But, enough of the cleft of the Tongues.

3 Their diſcretion. Sicut dedit ſpiritus.

Pſal. 45. 1.

Now, that this might not prove to vaine-glory (as it did after, in ſome at Corinth) it is well added, Sicut dedit Spiritus, which is the third:) that they began to ſpeake, not, as their owne vanitie carried them, but as the HOLY GHOST directeth them. Their tongue was but the pen; He, the Writer. His wind blew the fire, ſlaked it, and made it more or leſſe, as need was. The tongues ſate on them, and He in the tongues, holding (as it were) the reines in His hand; guiding and moderating their ſpeech; making them keepe time, meaſure, and manner: time, when; meaſure, how much; manner, how to ſpeak. Which Sicut is the gift of diſcretion; many times as much worth as dedit, the Gift it ſelfe. Sure, theſe are two: [1] Dedit is one thing, the Gift; [2] Sicut another, the uſe of the gift. To many is given to ſpeake, but not with the right Sicut. Two diſtinct things be they: and howſoever wee doe with the one, we ſhall find a needfull uſe of prayer to obtaine the other. We may begin to ſpeake when we pleaſe: but, who ſhall give us our Sicut? Sure, none but the Spirit: Of Him we muſt receive this, or elſe we ſhall never have. Let that ſuffice.

4 Their learning: As the Spirit gave them utterance.

Laſt then, that we miſtake not, what it was He gave them to ſpeake; (for, all this while, it is not ſaid, what.) That they began to ſpeake is ſaid; and wherewith, with other tongues; and how, as the Spirit gave them utterance. Leſt therefore we might miſtake, it was quicquid in buccam, any thing that tooke them in the head, it skilled not what: he tels us, what it was, in the laſt word; that He gave them ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, Vtterance, we read; it is of larger contents, a more pregnant word, and more full of ſignificancie.

They began to ſpeake as the Spirit gave them. Why not there ſtay, what needed any more? Yes: more (it ſeemes) needed; there goeth more unto it, than ſo, Speaking will not ſerve the turne: elſe, λαλῆσαι had beene enough, and not any word more put to it. He foreſaw, that to ſpeak, and only to ſpeake, would be enough for ſome. So we goe up for an houre and ſpeak, be it to the purpoſe or no, it is all one. For the common man it skils not, it contents him well enough: But, the HOLY GHOST is not content with λαλῆσαι: It is not every ſpeaking; but, a kinde of ſpeaking it muſt be, and that kinde is ἀποφθέγγεσθαι.

The Word, I wiſh well weighed. Chryſoſtome, Oecumenius, the Interpreters (all) weigh it; and aſſure us, it is no ſlight, or light word, but verbum talenti, a word of weight, of a talent weight. To tell you, what it is: You have heard of Apophthegmes; (So doth both Greekes, and Latines, call wiſe and weightie ſententious ſpeeches:) that word [Apophthegmes] is the true and proper derivative, of this ἀποφθέγγεσθαι here. Such the Spirit gave them to utter. Not the crudities of their owne braine, idle, looſe, undigeſted geere (GOD knoweth:) No, but pithie and wiſe ſentences: thoſe be ſicut dedit Spiritus, ſuch as the HOLY GHOST gave them. It is after ſaid in (the 11. verſe) that by vertue of this, when they ſpake, they ſpake Magnalia: Magnalia, great and high Points, not Trivialia, baſe and vulgar ſtuffe, not worth the time it waſteth, and taketh from the hearer. Yet now, all is quite turned: and we are come to this, that this kinde of ſpeaking, is only from the Spirit of GOD: and the other (ſaid here to be given by the HOLY GHOST) is ſtudie or affectation, or I wot not what; but, Spiritus non dedit, that is certaine.

1 Pet. 4. 11.

Well, Saint Luke ſaith ἀποφθέγγεσθαι is that, the Spirit giveth. So ſaith Saint Paul, λόγῳ κατὰ διδαχὴν, Speech according to learning: ſo Saint Peter, ſuch ſpeech as may ſeeme or beſeeme the very oracles of GOD: as may work light in the underſtanding, or fervour in the affection: thoſe two ſhew it fire. The fire of the Old Teſtament, the burning coale, wherewith the Seraphim touched Eſay's mouth, and gave him (as he ſaith) linguam eruditam, a learned tongue; not only a tongue, but a learned tongue. As the fire of the Old; ſo, of the New. So (I am ſure) was our SAVIOURS promiſe,

Eſay 6. 7.
50. 4.

Dabo

Dabo vobis os & ſapientiam, He would give them a mouth and wiſdome. Not a mouth onely, but, a mouth and wiſdome. Put theſe two together, [1] a mouth and wiſdome, [2] and a learned tongue, and you know, what is ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, and you know what is meant by a tongue of fire. For, fire cannot ſpeake chaffe, it conſumes it (we ſee;) therefore, if it be chaffe, it is no fiery tongue that ſpeaks it. Luke 21. 15.

And where it is required, that not only the tongue have this fire, but that it ſit and bide by us; ſure it is, that volubility of utterance, earneſtneſſe of action, ſtraining the voice in a paſſionate delivery, Phraſes and figures, theſe all have their heat, but they be but blazes. It is the evidence of the Spirit, in the ſoundneſſe of the ſenſe, that leaves the true impreſſion: that, is the tongue, that will ſit by us; that, the fire, that will keep ſtill alive. The reſt comes in paſſion; move for the preſent, make us a little ſermon-warme for the while; but, after, they flit and vaniſh, and goe their way; true marke leave they none. It is onely verba ſapientum clavi (ſaith the Wiſe-man) the wiſdome of the ſpeech, that is the naile, the naile red-hot, that leaveth a mark behinde, that will never be got out. Enough (I truſt) to ſerve them that doe λαλῶσι, as their owne ſpirit; from them that doe ἀποφθέγγεσθαι, as the ſpirit of God giveth them: and to ſtop their mouthes for ever, that call it not ſpeaking by the Spirit, unleſſe never a wiſe word be ſpoken. So have we the Gloſſe of the tongues: [1] The tongues themſelves in cœperunt loqui: [2] Cloven, in linguis aliis: [3] Sitting, in the Spirits ſicut: [4] Fire, in ἀποφθέγγεσθαι: the truth anſwering the type, in every point: ſhewing us, what was in them; and what they ſhould be that hold their places: able to ſpeak more tongues than one; to ſpeak diſcreetly, and to ſpeak learnedly. Eccleſ. 12. 11.

The Application.

And now, to draw to an end. Let us returne to our Pentecoſt-duty, to glorifie God, for the Holy Ghost thus ſent, theſe two wayes: [1] As the Spirit (within) filling; [2] As the tongues (without) uttering. The tongues, they are a peculiar to one kinde of men, though all now invade them, and talk even too much. Of them firſt. Where the Apoſtle expoundeth that of the Pſalme [Going up on high, He gave gifts unto men;] he tels us what thoſe Gifts were: He gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts: and he ſtayes not there, but tels us, that part of that Gift were Paſtors, and Teachers, whereof there were none at Christs Aſcenſion, but they were ordained after, for the ſucceeding ages. Intending (as it ſeemeth) a part of our Pentecoſtall duty ſhould be, not onely to give thanks for them, He firſt ſent, on the very day; but even for thoſe, He ſent ever ſince; and for thoſe, He ſtill ſendeth, even in theſe dayes of ours. To thank Him, for the Apoſtles; thank Him for the ancient Doctors, and Fathers; thank Him for thoſe we have, if we have any ſo much worth. And are theſe the Gifts, which Christ ſent from on high? was S. Paul well adviſed? Muſt we keepe our Pentecoſt in thankſgiving for theſe? Are they worth ſo much, trow? we would be loth to have the Prophets way taken with us (Zach. 11.) that it ſhould be ſaid to us, as there it is: If you ſo reckon of them indeed, let us ſee the wages you value them at; and when we ſhall ſee, it is but eight pound a yeare; and having once ſo much, never to be capable of more; may not then the Prophets ſpeech there well be taken up: A goodly price theſe high Gifts are valued at by you! And may not He juſtly (in ſtead of Zachary, and ſuch as he is) ſend us a ſort of fooliſh ſhepheards; and ſend us this ſenſleſneſſe withall, that, ſpeak they never ſo fondly, ſo they ſpeake, all is well; it ſhall ſerve our turne as well as the beſt of them all? Sure, if this be a part of our duty, this day, to praiſe God for them, it is to be a part of our care too, they may be ſuch, as we may juſtly praiſe God for. Which, whether we ſhall be likely to effect, by ſome courſes as of late have been offered, that leave I to the weighing of your wiſe conſiderations. Ephes. 4. 8. 11, 12, 13. Zach. 11. 12.

But leaving this, which is peculiar but to ſome, let us returne to the Holy Spirit common to all, and how to be filled with it. A point which importeth every one of us: this day eſpecially; when firſt, certaine it is, we are not to content our ſelves (as Bernard well ſaith) quibuſvis anguſtiis, with every ſmall beginning, and there to ſtick ſtill; to think, if we have never ſo ſmall a breath of it, and that but once in all our life, that that is enough; we may ſit us downe ſecurely, and take no more thought, but rely upon that, for that will doe it: but to aſpire ſtill, as we may, nearer and nearer, to this meaſure here; and know, that repleti ſunt was not ſaid for nothing. Which how to do, we may take ſome light from the Text. The two types, He came in, being bodily, ſerve to teach us, we are not to ſeeke after meanes meerely ſpirituall, for attaining it: but truſt, as here He viſited theſe, ſo will He us, and that per ſigna corporea (ſaith Chryſoſtome.) For had we been ſpirit, and nothing elſe, GOD could and would immediately have inſpired us that way: but conſiſting of bodies alſo (as we doe) it hath ſeemed to His Wiſdome moſt agreeable, to make bodily ſignes, the means of conveying the graces of His Spirit into us. And that, now the rather, ever ſince the Holy One Himſelfe and Fountaine of all holineſſe (CHRIST, the Sonne of GOD) partaketh of both body and Spirit; is both Word and fleſh. Thus it is: that, by the Word we are ſanctified, & per linguam verbi patrem (ſaith Chryſoſtome) even by thoſe tongues here, Iohn 17.17. But no leſſe, by His fleſh and body, *Heb.*10.10. And indeed, this beſt anſwereth the terme filling, which is proper to food; & Spiritus eſt ultimum alimenti, the uttermoſt perfection of nouriſhment. In which reſpect He inſtituted Eſcam ſpiritualem, ſpirituall food, to that end: ſo called ſpirituall, not ſo much for that it is received ſpiritually; as for that, being ſo received, it maketh us, together with it, to receive the Spirit, even potare Spiritum (it is the Apoſtles owne word.)

1 Cor. 10. 3. Iohn 6. 63. 1 Cor. 12. 13.

In a word: our Penteceſt is to be, as theſe types here were. They were for both ſenſes: [1] The eare, which is the ſenſe of the Word; [2] and the eye, which is the ſenſe of the Sacrament, viſibile verbum, ſo it is called. Meant thereby, that both theſe ſhould ever goe together, as this day; and as the type was, ſo the truth ſhould be. And, for our example, we have themſelves and their practice in this very Chapter: who, on this Feaſt, joyned together the Word (at the 14.) and the breaking of bread (at the 42. verſe.) And ſo let us too: and truſt, that by filling up the meaſure of both types, we ſhall ſet our ſelves in a good way, to partake the fulfilling of His promiſe, which is, to be indued with power from above, as they were: at leaſt, in ſuch ſort, as He knoweth meet for us. Which Almighty GOD grant we may.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XXVII. of May, A.D. MDCX. being WHITSVNDAY.

JOHN, Chap. XIV. Ver. XV. XVI.

Si diligitis Me, mandata mea ſervate,
Et ego rogabo Patrem, & alium Paracletum dabit vobis, ut maneat vobiſcum in æternum.

If ye love Me, keepe my Commandements.
And I will pray the Father, aud He ſhall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever.

THey are CHRISTS words to His Apoſtles, they touch the comming of the Holy Ghoſt; of whoſe comming this Text is a promiſe: A promiſe of a prayer to procure the Comforter ſent them. Which Comforter, who it is, is told us, Verſe 26. the Comforter which is the Holy Ghoſt. Let this bee ſaid to the honour of it. An Angell ſerved to annunciate Chriſts comming: No Angell would ſerve for this Annunciation; Chriſt Himſelf did it: thought not Himſelfe too good to doe it. A ſpeciall high benefit therefore it is, we may be ſure. And this Comforter (the Holy Ghoſt) was by the Father ſent, and by them received; and ſo, the prayer heard, and the promiſe performed all as this day. Which day

we yearely hold holy in thankfull remembrance of the HOLY GHOST promiſed to be ſent, and ſent.

The Holy Ghoſt is the Alpha and Omega of all our ſolemnities. In His comming down, all the Feaſts begin; at His Annunciation, when he deſcended on the Bleſſed Virgin: whereby the SONNE of GOD did take our nature, the nature of man. And, in the Holy Ghoſts comming they end, even in His deſcending this day upon the 2 Pet. 1. 4. ſonnes of men; whereby they actually become partakers θείας φύσεως, of His nature, the nature of GOD. Of which His laſt and great comming, in this Text is the promiſe, and at this time the performance: that, as Promiſe and Performance, ſo the Text and time agree.

Every promiſe is glad tidings; but every promiſe is not Goſpell: nor is it good to make a Text of it, while it is in ſuſpence: But, when it is dixit & factum eſt, ſo ſaid and ſo done, then it is a Goſpell, and may be preached on. Being then made good this day, the Church hath made it the Goſpell of this day; it being Feſtum ſolutionis, the Feaſt whereon it was to be, and whereon it was paid.

This promiſe grew thus. They were to be deprived of CHRISTS preſence: He to be gone. They were troubled with: troubled at the very heart. In that ſtate, they needed comfort. A Comforter He promiſeth them. His promiſe is in manner of a Deed; not abſolute, but as it were with Articles on both parts per modum Syngraphæ. A Covenant on His part; A condition on theirs. He covenants two things: the one ſuppoſed, love: If ye love me. The other impoſed, Then keepe my commandements. Theſe two on their part well and truly performed and kept, He ſtands bound to pray, and praying to procure them a Comforter, another in His ſtead: And, that they might not be every other while to ſeeke for a new, one that ſhould not leave them, as He did, but abide with them for ever.

Many are the benefits that come to us by the Holy Ghoſt; and ſo, His titles many: He is here expreſſed in the title of a Comforter. Comfort never comes amiſſe: but it is moſt welcome to men in their eſtate (here) troubled in minde. It may be, our eſtate is not yet, as theirs was; and we have our terrenas conſolatiunculas, which yet ſerve our turne well enough. But, there is none of us, but the day will come, when we ſhall need Him and His comfort. It will be good to look after Him: and the Acts 2. 15. ſooner, the better. He came here (we ſee) before the third houre of the day, that is, nine in the morning: let us not put Him off, till nine at night. It will be too late, to Matth. 25. ſeek for our oyle, when the Bridegroome is comming.

Thoſe Articles were here drawne, for them: but, he that liketh the ſame conditions, may have title to the ſame covenant to the worlds end. For, to the worlds end, this covenant here holdeth; and the Holy Ghoſt offered to be ſent (though not in viſible manner, as this day; it was meet, it ſhould be, with ſome ſolemnity at His firſt comming for the more credit, yet) ſenſibly to them, that receive Him. No day excepted: yet, this day pleadeth a ſpeciall intereſt.

It will then not be amiſſe, if we take inſtructions, what is required on both parts, ſo many as are deſirous to be partakers of His heavenly comfort, which (I truſt) is the deſire of us all, that ſo with comfort we may celebrate this Feſtum Paracleti, this Feaſt of the Comforter.

The diviſion. Thus, they will riſe to be treated of. 1. The condition firſt: [1] Their Love,
I. [2] their looking to His Commandements keeping. 2. Then the Covenant: [3] CHRISTS
II. interceſſion: [4] His Fathers giving: [5] Giving the Comforter: [6] Another Comforter. Where, both will come to be touched: but, His diverſity. [7] At laſt His perpetuity, or abode with them for ever.

The

THe Condition ſtands firſt, as firſt commended to our care. For of our part we had need have care: On His, we need not. And, let me ſay this of it: No condition could have been deviſed more proper and fit for this Feaſt: Both parts of it. Firſt, If you love me, Love; and this is Feſtum charitatis, the Feaſt of Love; and He, whoſe the Feaſt is (the Holy Ghoſt) Love it ſelfe, the eſſentiall love and love-knot of the two perſons of the God-head, Father and ſon. The ſame the love-knot between God and Man; and yet more ſpecially betweene CHRIST and His Church. Properly, as faith referreth to Chriſt the Word; So doth Love, to the ſpirit, and comfort to love. It is the Apoſtle: Si quod ſolatium Charitatis, If there be any comfort, it is in love. What condition could be more fit? Phil. 2. 1.

I.
The condition.
Their Love.

And the ſecond is like to it; as fit every way: Keepe my Commandements. For yee ſhall read in Exodus, that, at this Feaſt of Pentecoſt, the Commandements were given. The very Feaſt it ſelfe inſtitute, in remembrance of the Law then given: then very meet they be remembred of them at this Feaſt. And the Holy Ghoſt ſent, inter alia that they may be written not in ſtone, but in their hearts; not with the letter, but, with the Spirit: and the Spirit not of feare, but love; as, by whom the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts. Which love is the fulfilling of the Commandements, and they all abridged in this one word Diliges. So, whether we regard the Feaſt, or the Perſon, or the Office of Him to whom we hold the Feaſt, the Condition is well choſen. Rom. 31. 10.

To begin then with the firſt: If ye love me. Love is not ſo fit here, as If is unfitting. For, If, is as if there were ſome if, ſome doubt in the matter, whereof, GOD forbid there ſhould be any. It would be without if. Thus rather: Foraſmuch as you love me, Keepe my, &c. That they and we love Him, I truſt ſhall not need to be put in Hypotheſi---Et erat tum dignus amari: ſeeing He is ſo well worthy our love, that we too blame, if we endure any if, any queſtion to be made of it. 1 Love.

It grieveth me to ſtand long in this condition; to make an If of it, at Pentecoſt. Take the Feaſts all along, and ſee, it by every one of them, it be not put paſt If. Chriſtmas-day; for us, and for our love, He became fleſh, that we might love Him becauſe, like us He tooke our nature on Him. New-yeares-day; knowing no ſinne, He was made ſinne for us; ſealed the bond with the firſt drops of His blood; wherewith the debt of our ſin light upon Him. Candlemas day; He was preſented in the Temple, offered as a live oblation for us, that ſo the obedience of His whole life might be ours. Good fryday; made a ſlaine ſacrifice on the Croſſe that we might be redeemed by the benefit of His death. Eaſter-day; opened us the gate of life, as the firſt fruits of them that riſe againe. Aſcenſion-day; opened us the gate of Heaven; thither, as our fore-runner entered, to prepare a place for us. And this day ſeales up all by giving us ſeiſin of all Hee hath done for us, by His Spirit ſent downe upon earth. And after all this, come ye in with If ye love me? Shall we not out with Si, ſtrike out (if) and make the condition abſolute? Shall we not to S. Pauls If, If any man love not the LORD JESUS, let him be Anathema Maranatha, All ſay, Let him be ſo? John 1. 14. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Luk. 2. 22. 1 Cor. 15. 20. 1 Heb. 6. 20. 1 Cor. 16. 22.

If we love them that love us what ſingular thing doe we, ſince the very Publicans doe the like? That, if our love be but as the Publicans, there would be no If made of it, for He loved us. Mat. 5. 46.

And not becauſe we loved Him, but He loved us firſt. Et nulla major ad amorem provocatio quàm prævenire amando: Nimis enim durus eſt, qui amorem etſi nolebat impendere, nolit rependere. No more kindly attractive of love, than in loving to prevent: For, too hard metall is he of, that though he like not to love firſt, will not requite it and love againe, either firſt or ſecond.

Speci-

1 Iohn 3.1. Iohn 15.13. Specially, ſince His love was not little, but ſuch as S. Iohn makes an Ecce quantam Charitatem of, ſee how great love! How great? So, as none greater. For, greater love hath no man, than this, to give his life for his friends. No man greater, but He: For His was beyond. To give His life, is but to die any ſort of death; But morte crucis, to die as He died, that is more. And, for ſuch as were His friends, is much: Rom. 5.10. But, cùm inimici eſſemus, is a great deale more. And yet is it If? Put it to the Prophets Eſay 54. queſtion, quid debuit facere? And add to it (if ye will) quid debuit pati? What ſhould He have done, and what ſuffered? If He did it not, if He ſuffered not, make an If of His love: but if He did both, out with it.

But the Publican will be the Publican, and the world the world: their love is mercenary ſale ware; ſi nihil attuleris, no profit, no love. To take away that If, even thither He will follow us, and apply Himſelf to that. And if we will make port-ſale of our love, and let it goe by who gives more; He will out-bid all. All, by the laſt word, In æternum. For, whatſoever we may have here, if it were a kingdome, it is not for ever. But this Comforter that ſhall abide with us, is but a pledge of that bliſſe and Kingdome of His wherein we ſhall abide with Him eternally. Let any offer more for our love, and carry it.

Verily, Bonum, ſi non amatur, non cognoſcitur, ſaid the Heathen. But more true of CHRIST, If we love Him not, we know Him not. If we did but know, what He is in Himſelfe; what, to us: what He hath already done, what He is ready to do for us ſtill, we would take it evill, a caſe ſhould be put, and yeeld to it without more adoe.

Why ſo we doe: take it evill, an if is made: yeeld to it, we love Him all. Yet great reaſon there was, we ſhall ſee, CHRIST ſhould ſo put it, being to inferre the ſecond. For, at that, there will be ſome ſticking: which would not be, if we were not defective in this former; of love. If our love were not light, His Commandements would not be heavie. If love were as it ſhould be, nothing is heavie to it; Amor erubeſcit nomen difficultatis, Love indures not the name of difficulty, but ſhames to confeſſe any thing too hard for it. De internis affirmare tutum (ſaith the Heathen) It is ſafe affirming of any thing within us, where no man can convince us; for, none is privy to it but our ſelves. How many ſhall we heare ſay, I have ever affected, wiſhed you well, borne you good will, and never a word true. Foraſmuch then, as 1 Iohn 4.20. there be two loves (ſaith Saint Iohn) one in word and tongue, and that is fained; and another in deed and truth, and that is right: and that CHRIST conditioneth Iames 2.18. not, If ye ſay ye love me; but if ye love me indeed: We muſt come to Saint Iames aſſay, Oſtende mihi, ſhew me thy faith: and as well, ſhew me thy love, by ſome oſten-1 Iohn 3.1. ſive ſigne. So did CHRIST to us. Ecce quantam charitatem oſtendit! Behold how great love (not, He verbally proteſted, but) really ſhewed! and ſo, they to doe the like; to ſhew it.

Why, thus they ſhew it: He is going away, and they be very ſad for it: which ſheweth, they love Him, and would keep Him ſtill. But, that may be a ſigne, they love themſelves, in that they are to have ſome good by His ſtay with them.

2 Their keeping His Commandements. That may deceive you. But, will you have a ſigne infallible? Take this: His Commandements. His Word. He that keeps it, loves Him: true in the affirmative. He that keepes it not, loves Him not: true in the negative. This then is the ſecond condition: If ye love Me (not, keep Me ſtill; but) Keep My Commandements. Let your heart be troubled, not, if ye keep not Me; but, if you keep not them: Not, if not Me; Me, that is, My fleſh: but, not Me; Me, that is, My Word, whereof the Commandements are an abſtract. The Word is the better part of Me, better than My fleſh: ſtrive to keep that, be troubled, for not keeping that; and then, your love is paſt If, true indeed.

And is this the other part of the condition? This ſomewhat troubleth us: for who can doe this, keepe the commandements? as good condition with us, to flie or walke on the Sea. We are even as well able to doe the one, as the other. So upon the matter, all this promiſe fals out to prove nothing: the Condition cannot be kept, and ſo, the Covenant void. No Holy Ghost, or Comforter to be hoped for, or had: we are but deluded.

Deluded! God forbid: Christ loves us too well, to delude us. He will never doe it. A Melius inquirendum would be had, to looke a little better into it, and not ſo lightly loſe our intereſt in ſuch a gift as the Holy Ghoſt. It ſtands us ſo in hand to get the condition made good: elſe we forfeit our eſtate in the promiſe.

If we be to be relieved, it is, by the word Mea; that they be His. And ſome alteration there is plainly in them, by Him, and His comming. It is not ſaid, for nought (and that, by way of oppoſition) that the Law came by Moſes, but grace came by Him, and grace for grace; that is, not only grace active which we receive, which relieveth us in the keeping them; but grace paſsive too, which we finde with Him, which relieves in abating the rigour, when we are called to accompt about them. You ſhall finde an alteration, in this very point. The Apoſtles would not preſſe the Gentiles to be circumciſed: being circumciſed, S. Paul teſtifieth, they become debters, to keep the whole Law: A yoke (ſaith S. Peter) that neither they (the Apoſtles) nor their fathers were able to beare, it was ſo heavy. This, as they came by Moſes. But after Christ, with His grace, came; and His grace with Him; when they came to be His, Mandata Ejus (ſaith S. Iohn) gravia non ſunt, they are not heavy. And Himſelfe, that beſt knew the price of it, ſaith plainly of His yoke, that it is eaſie, and it were hard to gaine-ſay Him.

Ioh. 1. 17. 16.
Gal. 5. 3.
1 Iohn 5. 3.

This qualifying then groweth two wayes: 1. One, that the Law, at the very giving it by Angels, was (ſaith S. Paul) ordinata in manu Mediatoris, ordained to be in the Mediators hand (that is, Christ) whoſe hands are not ſo heavy, as Moſes were. 2. The other, that Pater omne judicium dedit Filio (ſaith Himſelfe) His Father hath made Him Iudge of the keeping or not keeping them. All judiciall power and proceeding concerning them, is committed over to Him.

Gal. 3. 19.

By the firſt, that they are ordained to be in His hand, He may take them into His hands when He will; and having them in His hands, order them and eaſe them as pleaſeth Him. Lex in manu Mediatoris, is it we muſt hold by. If a bruiſe in the reed, Moſes would break it quite. If the flaxe ſmoake and flame not out, he would quench it ſtraight. So will not He: His hand will not break the one: nor His foot tread on the other. To Mary Magdalen, He ordained, that fecit quod potuit ſhould ſerve, and He would require no more. Credo Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam, I believe Lord, helpe my unbeliefe, a beliefe mixed with unbeliefe, would never have indured Moſes aſſay: In Manu Mediatoris, it did well enough. Thus He ordained; he that neither doth them, nor prepareth himſelfe, Non fecit, neque præparavit (Luke 12.) he ſhall be puniſhed: But if he prepare, ſtirre up himſelfe, have a care, a reſpect unto them that (it ſeemeth) in manu Mediatoris, will be taken. That if there be (ſaith the Apoſtle) prompta voluntas, a ready will; a man ſhall be accepted according to that, he hath; and not according to that, he hath not. For, the Mediator is man, and hath had experience of mans infirmities: He knoweth our metall and our mould, and what our condition will bear. He knoweth, there is that conflict in us, we cannot do what we would. And indeed, why ſhould concupiſcence to evill be reputed ſin, on the worſe part; and a like deſire (concupivi deſiderare mandata tua) not be as well reckoned, for as much on the better part, though it be not full out according to the purification of the Sanctuary? Thus, as, in His hands ordained.

2 Cor. 8. 12.
Heb. 4. 15. 5. 2.
Pſal. 119. 40.

Then againe, as, in His Court, to be judged. For, the Court may alter the matter much, as with us here it doth. Sedens in ſolio juſtitiæ (as, to ſome) in His Tribunall ſeat of ſtrict juſtice, there ſitting, ſentence will proceed otherwiſe, than Si adeamus thronum gratiæ, if we have acceſſe to Him in His throne of grace, where we may obtaine mercy and finde grace. And S. Iames brings us good tydings, that Super-exaltat, &c. the throne of grace is the Higher Court; and ſo an Appeale lieth thither, to whom he will admit. To cruell men (ſaith He) there ſhall be judgement without mercy: which ſheweth, judgement with mercy ſhall be to ſome other, to whom He will vouchſafe it.

Heb. 4 ult.

And thus, it muſt ſtand upon Mea, and Manu Mediatoris, and the throne of grace, or els, even thoſe here (the Apoſtles) it will goe wrong with them, they will hardly be relieved in their claime of a Comforter. For, within twenty foure houres and leſſe, it came indeed to an If, their love: They loved Him not ſo well, but they loved their owne ſafety better: fell away, and fled away, and denied Him; even he, that ſaid, he loved Him beſt. Matth. 26. 33. 69.

And what, kept they His Commandements? Sinned they not? In multis, omnes (ſaith S. Iames) in many things, all: and if they ſhould ſay otherwiſe (ſaith S. Iohn) that they had no ſin (not, they were ſomwhat proud, and there were no humility, but) they were very liers, and there were no truth in them. So that, keeping the commandements, and having of ſin, muſt ſtand together, or els they kept them not. Iam. 3. 2. 1 Iohn 1. 8.

But, this they kept (and ſo may we too;) they were troubled, their hearts were troubled for not keeping them: and at the throne of grace, that was accepted; and the not keeping not reckoned a breach of the Commandement, if we be troubled for it.

Againe (as, well ſaith S. Auguſtine) Amongſt His Commandements this is one, which we muſt not faile duly to keep; and that is, the Commandement of daily praying Dimitte nobis, forgive us our not keeping, which helps all the reſt. We keep (Lord) help our not keeping, as well as I believe (Lord) helpe my unbeliefe. Mar. 9. 24. A true indeavour with an humble repentance (for ſo he reſolves) and then Omnia mandata facta deputantur, quando quod non fit ignoſcitur: All are accounted as kept, when what is not, is pardoned out of His mercy; and ſo the reſt rewarded out of His bounty, that alloweth a dayes wages for an houres worke, as to them that came at the eleventh houre to the vineyard, that is, at five of the clock after noone. Matth. 20. 6. This will it be with us in hope: Thus was it with them. For, the Covenant held, and the Prayer went forward, and the Comforter came notwithſtanding.

II. The Covenant.

Now to CHRISTS part. Rogabo Patrem & dabit: that CHRIST will pray, and His Father give. And there is nothing more effectually ſheweth, they were ſhort in their Condition, than theſe two words, 1 Rogabo, and 2 Dabit. The Father ſhall give: It is His free gift, not due debt, upon deſert of the former. And Dabit roganti, give it to Chriſts prayer, rather for Rogation weekes ſake with Him, than for any work of ſupererogation with them. But, it commeth from GODS bounty, and CHRISTS intreaty; without which, our love and commandement-keeping. would not carry it: They are not ſufficient to weigh it downe pondere meriti; it muſt come rogatu Chriſti, or not at all. Then, not to leane on them: CHRIST it is, and His interceſſion, we take to. Not, you ſhall love, and keepe my Commandements, and then my Father ſhall be bound; but, and then CHRIST ſhall pray, and the Father will give, if Chriſt pray; and not otherwiſe.

But, a doubt here ariſeth: May we love Chriſt, or keep His Commandements, before we have the Holy Ghoſt, without whom firſt had, it is certaine, we can doe neither? How ſhall we love Chriſt or keep His Commandements, that we may receive the Holy Ghoſt, when unleſſe we firſt receive, we can neither love Him, nor keep them, nay not ſo much as ſay, Ieſus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghoſt? Nay, not ſo much as think that, or any other thought that is good? How ſaith He then, Keep, and I will give, when He muſt give, or we cannot keep? 1 Cor. 12. 3. 1 Iohn 4. 2. 2 Cor. 3. 5.

This ſcruple will ſoon be removed by Habenti dabitur. A promiſe may be made tam habenti, quàm non habenti, as well to him that hath a thing already, as to him that hath it not at all. To him that hath it already, in a lower or leſſe; may be promiſed to have it in a more ample meaſure or more high degree, than yet he hath: or to him, that hath it in one kinde, that he may have it in ſome other. To all (ſave Chriſt) the Matth. 13. 12.

Spirit

Spirit is given in meaſure: Where there is meaſure, there are degrees: where there bee degrees and more or leſſe, the more may well be promiſed to him, that hath the leſſe. John 3. 34. To him that hath it in the degree of warme breath, it may well be promiſed in tongues of fire. To him that hath it as the firſt fruits, which is but an handfull, it may well be promiſed as in the whole ſheafe, which filleth the boſome. But (that which is more agreeable to this text here) wee conſider the Spirit, as S. Peter) multiformem; the Spirit, in his graces; or the graces of the ſpirit, as of many kindes. Of many kinds; for, our wants and defects are many. Not to goe out of the Chapter: In the very words, He is called the ſpirit of truth: and that is one kinde of grace, to cure us of errour. In the 26. verſe after, the ſpirit of holineſſe, which is his common name, which ſerveth to reduce us from a morall honeſt life, to a holy, and wherein the power of Religion doth appeare. And here he is termed the comforter, and that is againſt heavineſſe and trouble of mind. To him that hath him as the ſpirit of truth, which is one grace, He may be promiſed as the Spirit of holineſſe, or comfort, which is another. It is well known, many partake Him, as the ſpirit of truth in knowledge, which may well be promiſed them (for ſure, yet they have Him not) as the Sanctifying Spirit. And both theſe wayes may He bee had of ſome, who yet are ſubject to the Apoſtles diſeaſe here, heavie and caſt downe, and no cheerefull ſpirit within them. So, they were not cleane deſtitute of the ſpirit at this promiſe making, but had him; and ſo well might love Him, and in ſome ſort keepe His Commandements, and yet remaine capable of the promiſe of a Comforter for all that. So that Christ may proceed to His Prayer, that His Father would ſend them the Comforter. 1 Pet. 4. 10.

Where we begin with matter of Faith. For, wee have here the Article offered to us and ſet downe in the three Perſons, 1 Ego, 2 Ille, and 3 Alium: 1 I, 2 He, and 3 Another. 1 I will pray the Father, that is Christ the Son. 2 And He ſhall give it, that is, the Father, (His Perſon is named.) 3 Alium, another third Perſon beſides, that is, Paracletum the Holy Ghost. 1 One praying; 2 the other prayed to; 3 the third prayed for. 1 Filius orans; 2 Pater donans; 3 Spiritus conſolans. The Sonne praying; the Father granting; the Spirit comforting: A plaine diſtinction. 3 Chriſts interceſſion.

And Christs prayer ſets us to ſeeke His other nature. For here Hee intreats, as inferiour to His Father, in ſtate of Man: but (in the twenty ſixth verſe) as equall to His Father, in the nature of God, joynes in giving with like authority. Rogabo, as Man: dabo, as God.

Finding the Father giving here, and the Sonne giving there, we have the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt from both; quem mittet Pater, whom the Father ſhall ſend, in the twenty ſixth of this; quem ego mittam, whom I will ſend, in the twenty ſixth of the next. Called therefore the Spirit of the Father, Matthew 10. 20.) and againe, called the Spirit of the Son (Galathians 4. 6.) the ſpirit of both, as ſent and proceeding from both.

And laſt the equalitie of the Holy Ghoſt. For, ſending and procuring, He muſt ſend and procure them one equall to Himſelfe; as good every way; or elſe, they had changed for the worſe, and ſo pray Him to let His prayer alone; they were better as they were; they ſhall be at a loſſe.

Christ will pray: and if He pray, great likeli-hood there is, He will ſpeed. He that is ſued to, is eaſie to intreat; He is a Father: and He that doth ſue is gratious to prevaile, He is a Sonne. Pater à filio rogatus, great oddes, the ſuit is halfe obtained, yer begunne. Specially, His ſuit being not faint or cold, but earneſt and inſtant, as it was. He ſued by word, and it was clamore valido, with ſtrong crying in an high key: & lachrymis, and He added teares (ſaith the Apoſtle) and they have their voice. And yet ſtaid not there, but His blood ſpeakes too; cries higher and ſpeakes better things than the blood of Abel. And the effect of His prayer, was not only Pater condona, Father forgive them; but Pater dona, Father give them the Holy ſpirit to teach, ſanctifie 4. His Fathers giving. Heb. 5. 7. 12. 24. Luk. 23. 24.

ſanctifie and comfort them (*Chap.*17.17.) This was His prayer; and His prayer prevailed: as good as His word He was. His Father ſhould ſend, He ſaid; and His Father did ſend, and the Holy Ghoſt came: witneſſe this day.

And came in that ſort, He undertook: even in that kinde, whereof they had moſt need: (moſt welcome to them, as their caſe then ſtood:) under the term of Paracletus a Comforter. If we aske, Why under that terme? To ſhew the peculiar end for which He was ſent, agreeable to the want of their private eſtate, to whom He was ſent.

If they had been perplexed, He would have prayed for the Spirit of truth. If in any pollution of ſin, for the ſanctifying Spirit. But they were (as Orphans) caſt down and comfortleſſe: Triſtitia implevit cor eorum, their hearts full of heavineſſe: no time, to teach them now, or frame their manners: they were now to be put in heart. The Spirit of truth or holineſſe would have done them ſmall pleaſure. It was comfort, they wanted; a Comforter to them was worth all.

Many good bleſſings come to us by the Holy Ghoſts comming: and the Spirit in any forme, of truth or holineſſe (or what we will) by all means worthy to be received, even all His gifts: but a gift in ſeaſon goes beyond all; carrieth away the name from all the reſt. Every gift then, in his time. When troubled with erroneous opinions, then the Spirit of truth: when aſſaulted with tentations, then the Spirit of holineſſe: but, when oppreſſed with feare or ſorrow, then is the time of the Holy Ghoſt the Comforter. Sorrow doth chill, and make the ſpirits congeale: therefore He appeareth in fire, to give them warmth; and in a tongue the inſtrument of comfort, by miniſtring a word in due ſeaſon; and cloven, that it might meet with diſmayes of all ſorts, and comfort them againſt all.

And ſo did it: and that apparently. For, immediately upon the receiving it, they were thought to be full of new wine. That was but an errour: but ſo comforted they were, as before being exceeding fearefull, they grew exceeding full of courage and Acts 5.41. Spirit; ſo as, even when they were ſcourged piteouſly, ibant gaudentes, they went away, not patiently induring, but even ſenſibly rejoycing; not as men evill intreated, but as perſons dignified, having got a new dignity, to be counted worthy to ſuffer for CHRIST'S Name.

6 Another Comforter.

A Comforter then: and two things are added: 1 Alium, and 2 qui manebit in æternum. 1 Another comforter, and 2 that ſhall abide with them for ever. Both which are verified of Him, even in regard of CHRIST: but much more in regard of other earthly, fleſhly, worldly comforts and Comforters whatſoever. Another: which word preſuppoſes one beſides: ſo that two there be. 3 One they have already: and now another they ſhall have (which is no evill newes.) For thus in ſtead of a ſingle, they find a double comfort. But both they needed.

This ſets us on work to find the firſt: and we ſhall not need to ſeek farre for Him. Speak to them of a Comforter, and they underſtood it not, but of CHRIST: all their comfort in Him: loſe Him and loſe all. Indeed, CHRIST was one: was and is 1 Iohn 2.1. ſtill. And the very terme of Paracletus is given Him by Saint Iohn: and though it there be turned an Advocate, upon good reaſon; yet the word is the ſame in both. CHRIST had been their Comforter, while He was their Bridegroome and they Matth.9.15. the children of the Bride-chamber. But, expedient it was, He ſhould go, for, expedient it was, they had one in heaven; and expedient withall, they had one in earth, and ſo another in His ſtead.

1 Apoc.12.10. For the firſt: even now abſent, He is our Comforter ſtill, that way, we named right now: that is, our Advocate, to appeare for us before GOD, there to anſwer the ſlanderous allegations of him that is the accuſer of us and our brethren. And a comfort it is, and a great Comfort, to have a good Advocate there, in our abſence: For, then we be ſure, our cauſe ſhall take no harme.

2 Iohn 5.45. But ſecondly. If as an Advocate, He cannot defend us, becauſe the accuſation oft falleth out to be true, if Moſes accuſe us too; yet a ſecond comfort there is, that as a

High

High-Prieſt for ever. He is entred into the holy places made without hands, there by His interceſſion, to make attonement for them as Sinners, whoſe innocency, as an Advocate, He cannot defend. Heb. 7. 17. 9. 11.

And to both theſe, He addeth a third, at the beginning of this Chapter. That His leaving them, is but to take up a place for them, to be ſeized of it in their names, whom, He will certainly come againe and receive to it; there, to be for ever with Him. Verſe 3. 2.

And in the meane time, He will take order, we ſhall have ſupply of another: in abſence of His body, the ſupply of His Spirit. That if we look up, we have a Comforter in heaven, even Himſelfe: and if we look downe, we have a Comforter on earth, His Spirit: and ſo are at an anchor in both.

For, as He doth in heaven, for us: So doth the Spirit on earth in us, frame our petitions and make interceſſion for us, with ſighs that cannot be expreſſed. And, as Christ is our Witneſſe in heaven; ſo is the Spirit here on earth, witneſſing with our Spirits that we pertaine to the adoption, and are the children of God. Evermore in the midſt of the ſorrowes that are in our hearts with His comforts refreſhing our ſoules. Yet not filling them with falſe comforts; but (as Christ's Advocate here on earth) ſolliciting us daily, and calling upon us, to looke to His Commandements and keep them; wherein ſtandeth much of our comfort, even in the teſtimony of a good conſcience. And thus theſe two; this one, and this other; this ſecond, and that firſt yeeld plentifull ſupply to all our wants. Rom. 8. 25. 26. Rom. 8. 16.

A ſecond note of difference, is in the tenure they ſhall have of this other; that He ſhall ſtay with them ſtill, which, of Christ they had not. For, this is the griefe; when we have one that is our comfort, that we cannot hold Him: and this their feare, that when they have, another, ſtill they ſhall be changing, and never at any certainty. Chriſt, as man, they could not keep. Given He was by the Father; but, given for terme of yeares; that terme expired, He was to returne. Therefore His abode is (Chap. 1. ver. 14.) expreſſed by the word ἐσκήνωσε, the ſetting up of a Tent or Tabernacle to be taken downe againe, and removed within a ſhort time: No dwelling of continuance. But, the Holy Ghost ſhall continue with us ſtill, and therefore He is allowed a Temple, which is permanent, and never to be taken downe. We have in Him, a ſtate of perpetuity, to our endleſſe comfort. 7 To abide for ever. 1 Cor. 3. 16. 6. 19.

Howbeit, it may well be thought, Alium and manebit in æternum, are not put ſo much, for Chriſt, to make a difference from Him; as for theſe ſame other terrenæ conſolatiunculæ, petty poore comforts and ſolaces of the world: which God hath given us, and we may uſe; but we muſt looke after Paracletum alium, another and another manner Comforter, when all is done. For, of theſe, it may be, we ſhall feele ſome comfort, while we be in health and meetly good eſtate, and in caſe not much to need it. But, let us come into their caſes here, the heart troubled, the minde oppreſſed, the Spirit wounded; and then, what earthly thing will there be, can miniſter any ſound comfort to us? It will not be: we muſt needs ſeek for this Paracletum alium here, at any hand. What ſpeak I of the minde? If but ache come into a joynt, we know, we have tried them and found them, they are not able to drive away the leaſt paine from the leaſt part. And how then, when ſickneſſe commeth, and ſorrow, and the pangs of death, what comfort in theſe? Comfort! Nay ſhall we not finde diſcomfort in the bitter remembrance of our intemperate uſing them, and little regard of the true Comforter? Shall we not finde them (as Iob found his friends) like winter-brookes, full of raine in winter, when no need of it, when it raines continually; but, in Summer, when need is, not a drop in them. So, when our ſtate of body and minde is, that we can ſuſtaine our ſelves without it, then (perhaps) ſome they yeeld: but, when ſorrow ſeazeth on the heart, then none at all. In the end, we ſhall ſay to them as he did, miſerable comforters are ye all. Wherefore another comforter we are to ſeek, that may give us eaſe in our diſeaſe of the minde, and in the midſt of all our ſorrows and ſufferings make us ire gaudentes, goe away rejoycing. No other will do it but this: that, when we have Him, we need look no further. Iob 6. 15. 16. Iob 16. 2.

The other is likewiſe a difference: of ſtaying with us for ever. For ever? the weak poore comfort we have by the creatures here (ſuch as it is) we have no hold of it: it ſtayes not, not for ever, nay, not for any long time. There be two degrees in it: [1] Non in æternum, that is too plaine; [2] Nay, not manent nobiſcum, they ſtay not with us: fugiunt à nobis, they flie from us many times in a moment; as Salomons fire of thornes, a blaze, and out ſtraight.

Num. 11. 6. Nay, if they would tarry with us, would they not tire us? Even Manna it ſelfe, did it not grow loathſome? Do we not find, that when we are ready to ſtarve for hunger, and have meat to drive it away; if we uſe it any while, the meat is as irkſome as the hunger was, and we are as hungry for hunger, as ever we were for meat? That we may not be cloyed, we change them; and even thoſe, we change them for, within a while, cloy us as faſt. What ſhall we doe? where ſhall we finde comfort aright? Ever Per quod faſtidio occurritur, faſtidium incurritur: ſo that, if they would tarry, we muſt put them away: the not tarrying of them with us, that is, the change of them, is it, that makes us able to indure them.

Well then; comfort us they cannot, when we need it: we muſt pray for Alium. If they could, they cannot ſtay: not, for any ſpace; much leſſe, for ever. If they could, their very ſtay would prove faſtidious, and yeeld us but diſcomfort. Seeing then, we cannot intreat them to ſtay with us; and if we could, in the evill day, they could not ſtead us; but, then faile us ſooneſt when our need is greateſt; Let us ſeeke for another, that through ſickneſſe, age and death, may abide with us to all eternity, and make us abide with Him in endleſſe joy and comfort.

The Application to the Sacrament. Such is this here, which CHRIST promiſed, and His Father ſent this day: and which He will ſend, if CHRIST will aske: and CHRIST will ask, if (now we know the Covenant, and ſee the Condition) we will ſeale to the deed.

To a Covenant there is nothing more requiſite, than to put to the Seale. And we know the Sacrament is the Seale of the new Covenant, as it was of the old. Thus, by undertaking the duty He requireth, we are intitled to the comfort which here He promiſeth. And, doe this, He would have us, as is plaine by His Hoc facite. Luke 22. 19.

And ſure, of all the times in our life, when we ſettle our ſelves to prepare thitherwards, we are in beſt termes of diſpoſition to covenant with Him. For, if ever we be in ſtate of love toward Him, or toward one another; then, it is. If ever troubled in Spirit, that we have not kept His Commandements better; then, it is. If ever in a vowed purpoſe and preparation, better to look to it; then, it is. Then therefore of all times moſt likely to gaine intereſt in the promiſe, when we are beſt in caſe, and come neareſt to be able to plead the condition.

Beſides, it was one ſpeciall end, why the Sacrament it ſelf was ordained, our comfort; the Church ſo telleth us; we ſo heare it read, every time to us: He hath ordained theſe Myſteries, as pledges of His love and favour, to our great and endleſſe comfort. The Father ſhall give you the Comforter: Why He giveth Him, we ſee: How, He giveth Him, we ſee not. The meanes, for which, He giveth Him, is Chriſt: His intreaty by His Word, in prayer; by His fleſh and bloud in Sacrifice: For, His bloud ſpeakes; not, His voice only. Theſe, the means for which: And the very ſame, the means, by which, He giveth the Comforter: by CHRIST the Word; and by CHRISTS body and bloud, both. In tongues, it came: but the tongue is not the inſtrument of Speech onely, but of taſte, we all know. And, even that note hath not eſcaped the Ancient Divines; to ſhew, there is not only comfort by hearing the Word, but we may alſo taſte of His goodneſſe, how gracious He is, and be made drink of the Spirit. That not only by the letter we read, and the word we heare; but by the fleſh we eat, and the bloud we drink at His Table, we be made partakers of His Spirit, and of the comfort of it. By no more kindly way, paſſeth His Spirit than by His fleſh and bloud, which are Vehicula Spiritus, the proper carriages to conveigh it. Corpus aptavit ſibi, ut Spiritum aptaret tibi: CHRIST fitted our body to Him, that He might fit His Spirit to us. For, ſo is the Spirit beſt fitted, made remeable, and beſt exhibited to us, who conſiſt of both.

Heb. 12. 24. Pſal. 34. 8. 1 Cor. 12. 15.

This

This is ſure: where His fleſh and blood are, they are not exanimes, ſpirit-leſſe, they are not, or without life; His Spirit is with them. Therefore was it ordained, in thoſe very elements, which have both of them a comfortable operation in the heart of man. One of them (bread) ſerving to ſtrengthen it, or make it ſtrong: and comfort commeth of confortare, which is to make ſtrong. And the other (wine) to make it cheerefull or glad: and is therefore to be miniſtred to them that mourne, and are oppreſt with griefe. And all this, to ſhew that the ſame effect is wrought in the inward man, by the holy Myſteries, that is, in the outward, by the Elements: that there, the heart is eſtabliſhed by grace, and our ſoule endued with ſtrength, and our conſcience made light and cheerefull, that it faint not, but evermore rejoyce in His holy comfort. Pſal. 104. 15.

To conclude: where ſhall we finde it, if not here, where, under one, wee finde CHRIST our Paſſe-over offered for us, and the Spirit our Pentecoſt thus offered to us? Nothing remaineth, but the Father Himſelfe: And of Him we are ſure too. Filium in pretium dedit; Spiritum, in ſolatium: Se ſervat in præmium. His Son He gave, to be our price; His Spirit to be our comfort: Himſelfe He keepeth to be our everlaſting reward. Of which reward there, and comfort here, this day and ever may we be partakers, for him that was the price of both, Ieſus Chriſt.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WINDSOR,

On the XII. of May, A.D. MDCXI.

being WHITSVNDAY.

JOHN, Chap. XVI. Ver. VII.

Sed ego veritatem dico vobis: expedit vobis, ut Ego vadam: si enim non abiero, Paracletus non veniet ad vos; si autem abiero, mittam Eum ad vos.

Yet I tell you the truth: It is expedient for you, that I goe away: For, if I goe not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but, if I depart, I will send Him unto you.

VT if I go, I will send Him unto you. And He did go, and He did send Him; and, this day He did send Him. So that, betweene this Text and this Feast, there is that mutuall reference and reciprocation, that is between promissio missionis, and missio promissionis; the promise of the sending, and the sending of the promise: The promise of the sending, the substance of the Text; and the sending of the promise the substance of the Solemnitie: It being the solemnitie of mittam, and veniet (both in the Text) the sending and comming of the Holy Ghost.

CHRISTS words they be: and all is nothing else, but a setting forth or demonstration of the Non veniet: Of non veniet, the not comming, and of Expedit the Expediencie of CHRISTS going, and consequently of this Feast.

There seems to be a question here, whether best, the Comforter come, or not come: that that is, whether any Whit ſuntide, or no? The queſtion of His comming grew out of another, of CHRISTS going; whether beſt CHRIST goe, or not goe: That is, whether any Aſcenſion-day, or no. The Apoſtles were all mainly againſt His going, and ſo oppoſed hard againſt the Aſcenſion. But CHRIST here reſolveth the point thus: If they were againſt the Aſcenſion, they loſt Feſtum Paracleti, a feaſt, which they might not miſſe out of their Kalendar: and ſo with promiſing them this perſwades them, to beare with that; to yeeld to the Aſcenſion, in hope of Whit-ſuntide.

Which two Feaſts are both in the Text, and the two maine points of it: Here is an abeam, a going, and here is a veniet, a comming: CHRISTS going, that is the Aſcenſion; The Holy Ghoſts comming, that is Pentecoſt (the day which we now celebrate) as it were ἀντιβεβηκὸς, one to make amends for the other. And ye ſhall obſerve, it is uſuall. Anon after Chriſtmas-day, and the poore eſtate of Chriſts birth, there commeth the Epiphanie with a ſtarre, and great mens oblations, as by way of compenſation. Preſently after Good-friday, and the ſorrow of His paſſion, Eaſter-day followeth ſtraight, the day of His triumph, to revive us againe. And even ſo here, upon His Aſcenſion, or going from us, there enſueth Whitſunday, the mends together withall. No impedit, without an expedit: no abeam, but a mittam: no going away, to bring a loſſe; but a comming too, to make a ſupply.

The truth is: Aſcenſion-day, though to Him it were a day of glory; yet, to them it could not be, but a day of ſorrow. It was a going to His Father; but, it was a going, from them. Going from them, they were to loſe Him; and loſſe breeds ſorrow; and a great loſſe (as this was) great ſorrow. It did ſo; the very next words before theſe are, Your hearts are full of ſorrow. And good reaſon: 1. To part with, to forgoe any friend, is a griefe. Not without ſome griefe, doth the Apoſtle recount, that even Demas was fallen off, and had forſaken Him. 2. And, if any friend; how much more of ſuch a friend, as CHRIST was to them? It was a Feſtivall, all the while, and they the Children of the Bride-chamber, ſo long as Hee was with them. To forgoe ſuch an one, muſt fill up the meaſure, a good way. Ver. 6. 2 Tim. 4. 10. Mat. 9. 15.

3. But to fill it full; if to part with ſuch an one be grievous, at any time; then, to part with Him; then, He to leave us, and we Him, when we have moſt need of Him, when troubles are at hand, is above meaſure grievous. And at hand they were (ver. 2) perſecutions to riſe, and they to be in that caſe, that they that cut their throats, ſhould thinke they did God good ſervice. If needs Hee would leave them, Hee ſhould ſtay, till faire weather: Now, a tempeſt is toward; then, to be left, is the worſt time that may be.

Now, joyne all theſe, 1 of a friend; 2 of ſuch a friend; 3 at ſuch a time, to bee deprived; and tell mee, if there were not great reaſon, ut triſtitia impleret cor eorum, their hearts ſhould be full of ſorrow, For His going: Non expedit ut abeas. This for them.

Now for CHRIST: we ſhall ſee, quàm incertæ providentiæ noſtræ. It falleth out many times, men are grieved with that, which is for their good: and earneſtly are ſet on that, which is not expedient for them. It was their caſe, in deſiring, CHRIST might not goe. All was out of miſtaking. Therefore CHRIST begins: But I tell you the truth: (as much to ſay) you are in an errour all this while: your hearts be full of ſorrow, becauſe your heads are full of errour. You conceive of my ſtay as beneficiall to you, but falſly: I tell you true, it is ſo far from that, as, impediet, it will hinder you, turne to your loſſe. You apprehend my going, as an hinderance; but erre. 1. I tell you true, expedit vobis, it ſhall be your gaine. 2. This gaine, and loſſe, are ſet downe both: 1 The loſſe, in the not comming: 2 the gaine, in the comming of the Comforter, this day. 3. This comming, or not comming, depends upon Chriſts going, or His ſtay. Non veniet niſi, if Chriſt goe not, He commeth not: veniet ſi, if CHRIST goe, He commeth. Seeing then, ye ſhall be loſers by my ſtay, and gainers by my going, be not for my ſtay: My ſtay will deprive you of Him: non veniet. Be not againſt

My

My going, my abſence will procure you Him: Mittam. I love you not ſo evill, as to ſtay with you for your hurt. Be not you grieved; be not againſt that, which is for your good.

The manner, of this anſwer is, [1] Firſt retorquendo (holden ever to be the beſt.) You think, it will hinder you: I ſay συμφέρει, it will benefit you, that I goe. [2] Then, to prove it, He proceeds, abducendo ad abſurdum. For why, if I goe not, there will follow a maine inconvenience, which by no meanes is to be admitted, and that is, Non veniet Paracletus. The expedience of veniet, we deduce out of the inconvenience of non veniet.

This inconvenience, if He goe not. What if He goe? He will come certainly: For, He will be ſure to ſend Him. Now chooſe, whether I ſhall goe, and you have Him: or ſtay, and you want Him. The anſwer is cleare: have Him ye muſt; want Him yee may not. So, if this be the caſe; If no Aſcenſion, no Pentecoſt; we yeeld, Aſcendat Chriſtus ut deſcendat Paracletus.

The Diviſion.

I Where we have to conſider of theſe: 1. Of the reaſon: It is expedient, expedient for you, I goe.

II Then, of the two. [1] The inconvenience of non veniet, the HOLY GHOST not comming: [2] And of the neceſſitie of ſi non abiero, that CHRIST muſt goe, that He may come.

III. And laſt, of Veniet and Mittam, His comming and Chriſts ſending. Where we are to treat, [1] of Paracletus, His name and nature firſt; [2] and then of the time, and manner of His ſending.

I

The Reaſon, it is expedient.

THere is no act of our Saviour Chriſts, but ever at the firſt view, there ſheweth forth; nor ſpeech, but ever at the firſt hearing, there ſoundeth ſome vertue in it. As here, in this; that vertue which the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 1. 10.) calleth ἐπιείκεια His mildneſſe and equitie; the beames of that vertue brake forth in this. [1] Herein is equitie: This very firſt, that He would yeeld to yeeld them a reaſon of His departure: Not uſe His authoritie (as well He might;) come, and goe at His pleaſure, who could aske Him why? but even condeſcends to render them (though farre His inferiours) a reaſon of His going and comming; which (ſure) He was no way bound to doe.

2 And what reaſon? that is next. It is not Licet, what is lawfull for Him; but Expedit, what is expedient or meet to doe.

3 And thirdly, His expedit is not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis: meete or expedient, not for Himſelfe, but for them, to whom He renders it.

1 A reaſon given. 1 Sam. 2. 16:

There was, amongſt the heathen, one, that would have His will ſtand for reaſon. And was there none ſuch, among the people of GOD? Yes: we finde (1 Sam. 2.) one, of whom it was ſaid: Thus it muſt be, for Hophni will not have it ſo, but thus. His reaſon is, for, hee will not: And GOD grant, none ſuch bee found among Chriſtians.

2 Not licet; but expedit. 1 Cor. 6. 12. 10. 23.

But, among Chriſtians, there were, that ſtood with S. Paul, upon licet: what they might doe, this was lawfull for them, and who ſhould abridge them of it? St. Paul may well ſeeme to have had relation there, to his Maſters reaſon here, where He teacheth them a better rule, if they could hit of it: That licet is not it; expedit is CHRISTS, and is the true Chriſtians reaſon.

3. Not expedit mihi, but expedit vobis.

And not expedit, at large. For ſo, we know not whom it referres to. It may be

to

Himſelfe, expedit mihi; as, all the worlds reaſons tread inward. No: but expedit vobis, for them, their profit and benefit, rather than His owne. We finde one before, in this Goſpell (Chap. 11.) and He was the High Prieſt, that made His, from expedit; but, it was expedit nobis: ſo reaſons Caiaphas, there. But, CHRIST our High Prieſt taketh it the other way. I doe it, becauſe it is expedient for you, that I doe it. And, the Apoſtle followeth Him in that too: Heb. 13. Vſe your Rulers, (your ſpirituall Rulers) ſo as they may doe their office with joy, not with griefe; Ἀλυσιτελὲς, for that is not good for you: not for you (heare you) and let them go. Well, certainly herein is equitie; herein is mildneſſe, in theſe two firſt words. It was, to his Father, and to His glory He went: He would not doe it, but acquaint them with the reaſon of it: and that reaſon was, He would not doe it, but that it was for their good. I have enough, from theſe three, if we learne to avoid [1] Hoſbnies non vult enim, to make our vult our enim; And the [2] Corinthians ſtanding with him, upon his licet; [3] And frame our Rule, by expedit: and that, not Caiaphas expedit nobis, but CHRIST'S expedit vobis: for you, it is good; you the Diſciples: and make that the rule of our going out and comming in. This for Expedit vobis.

Heb. 13. 17.

If it be good, and good for them, they will not hinder it; Nemo impedit, quod expedit: That leſſon will ſoone be learned, to yeeld to that, which is for our behoofe. All the matter will be, to bring [expedit vobis] and [ut ego abeam] together: to underſtand that good; how [Ego abeam] can be expedient for them. Indeed it is hard to conceive. This we can well conceive: Expedit vobis, ut ego veniam, expedient it is, that I come; and ſay with the Apoſtle, etiam veni, yea, come Lord, come quickly. And this we can alſo Expedit vobis, ut ego mancam, expedient it is, that I tarry, and ſay with them (Luke 24.) mane nobiſcum Domine; yea, tarry with us good Lord. It is more than expedient, for thee, ſo to do. But Expedit vobis ut ego abeam, expedient, I goe my way and leave you, Durus eſt hic ſermo, it is a hard ſaying and who can endure it, That it ſhould be good for them, or for any, to have Chriſt goe from them or forſake them?

II.
The inconvenience of non veniet.

Luk. 24. 29.

And ſure, the propoſition is not ſo hard, but the reaſon that induced it is as hard, and more, if more may be: The Comforter will not come. Be it ſo: let Him not come; ſtay you. Inteſatis nobis, we are well enough, we deſire no other Comforter. And the other moveth not neither, unleſſe I goe: why, may He not ſtay, and He come notwithſtanding? What hinders it, but we may enjoy both together? Two difficulties, which muſt be cleared, or we cannot proceed.

Non veniet, that may be anſwered with, Ne veniat. But, He is a Comforter. No comforter to CHRIST: no loſſe ſo great, as to loſe Him: if we may keepe Him, we care not: Ne veniat. Stay His Aſcenſion, we feare not Pentecoſt. But, He is in earneſt, and tells us for a truth, It is altogether expedient, the HOLY GHOST come: So expedient, Vt expedit, ut ego abeam, potiùs quàm ille ne veniat: Better I goe than he not come; of the twaine, better I ſpared than he. So it muſt be; elſe hee ſaith nothing: elſe the ballance hangs even; one, as good as the other, they may take which they will; ſay, they were well enough, as they are. But weigh the Feaſts together, Aſcenſion, and Pentecoſt; the expedience of Ego abeam, and the expedience of Ille veniet; better CHRIST depart, than the HOLY GHOST ſtay from us. This ſets before us and ſhews us the greatneſſe of this Dayes benefit: conſequently, the highneſſe of this Feaſt: not only, that it is equall, to any of thoſe precedent; (that the HOLY GHOST is equall to Chriſt, elſe ſhould wee bee at an after deale, and change for our loſſe: No, Saint Auguſtine prayeth well, Domine da mihi alium te, alioqui non dimittam te, give us another as good as your ſelfe, or we will never leave that, or conſent that you leave us:) But, that ſome inequality there is; elſe they might ſtand, as they are, ſeeing they ſhould be never the better: but ſure, as the caſe ſtandeth, more for their behoofe, than Chriſt Himſelfe.

We

1 The inconvenience of non veniet.

We ſhall never ſee it in kind, the experience of veniat, the abſolute neceſſity of His comming, till we ſee the inconvenience of non veniet; that it by no meanes may bee admitted; we cannot be without Him. Firſt then, abſolute neceſſity it is; in both the maine principall workes of the Deitie, all three perſons cooperate, and have their concurrence. As, in the beginning of the creation, not only dixit Deus was required, which was the Word; but ferebatur Spiritus, the motion of the Spirit, to give the Spirit of life, the life of Nature. As, in the Geneſis, ſo in the Palingeneſie of the world, a like neceſſity: not only the Word ſhould take fleſh; but fleſh alſo receive the Spirit, to give life, even the life of grace to the New Creature. It was the counſell of GOD, that every perſon of the Trinitie, ſhould have his part in both; in one worke, no leſſe than the other, and we therefore baptized into all three.

Gen. 1. 3. Gen. 1. 2. Ioh. 1. 14. Gal. 6. 15.

But I adde ſecondly; more than expedient it is, the worke of our ſalvation be not left halfe undone, but be brought to the full perfection; which, with non veniet, cannot be: if the Holy Ghoſt come not, CHRISTS comming can doe us no good; when all is done, nothing is done. NO, ſaid not He Conſummatum eſt? Yes: and ſaid it truly in reſpect of the worke it ſelfe; but quoad nos, in regard of us and making it ours, non conſummatum eſt, if the HOLY GHOST come not too. Shall I follow the Apoſtle, and humanum dicere, ſpeake after the manner of men, becauſe of our infirmitie? GOD Himſelfe hath ſo expreſſed it: A word is of no force, though written (which we call a deed) till the ſeale be added: that, maketh it authenticall. GOD hath borrowed thoſe very termes from us: CHRIST is the Word; the HOLY GHOST the Seale, in quo ſignati eſtis, Epheſ. IV. XXX. Niſi veniat, if the Seale come not too, nothing is done.

Ioh. 19. 30. Rom. 6. 19.

2 Yea, the very will of a Teſtator, when it is ſealed, is ſtill in ſuſpence, till adminiſtration be granted: Chriſt is the Teſtator of the New Teſtament: The adminiſtration is the Spirits, I Cor. XII. If that come not, the Teſtament is to ſmall purpoſe.

Heb. 9. 15. 1 Cor. 12. 5. 11.

3 Take CHRIST as a Purchaſer: the purchaſe is made, the price is paid; yet is not the ſtate perfect, unleſſe there be inveſtiture, or (as we call it) liverie and ſeiſin: that maketh it compleate. Perquiſitio, that very word is CHRISTS: but, the inveſtiture is by the Spirit, II Cor. V. V. If He come not, we lacke that: that, we may not lacke; and ſo not lack Him. What will ye, that I ſay? Unleſſe we be joyned to Him, as well as He to us; as He to us, by our fleſh, ſo we, to Him by His ſpirit: nothing is done. The exchange is not perfect, unleſſe, as He taketh our fleſh, ſo He give us His Spirit: as He carrieth up that to heaven, ſo He ſend this downe into earth. Ye know, it is the firſt queſtion the Apoſtle asked: Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt ſince ye believed? If not, all elſe is to no purpoſe: without it, we are ſtill (as Iude calleth us) animales, Spiritum non habentes, naturall men, but without the Spirit. And this is a certaine rule, Qui non habet, He that hath not His Spirit, is none of His; Chriſt profiteth him nothing.

Act. 19. 2. Iude ver. 19. Rom. 8. 9.

Shall I let you ſee one inconvenience more, of non veniet? As nothing is done for us, ſo nothing can be done by us, if He come not. No meanes on our part, availe us ought. 1 Not Baptiſme; for niſi ex Spiritu, if He come not, well may it waſh ſoile from our skinne, but no ſtaine from our ſoul: no Laver of regeneration, without renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. 2 No Preaching, neither; for, that is but a letter that killeth, except the Spirit come too, and quicken it. 3 No Sacrament; we have a plaine Text for it: The fleſh profiteth nothing, if the Lord and giver of life (the Spirit) bee away. 4 To conclude, no prayer: for niſi, unleſſe the Spirit helpe our infirmitie, and make interceſsion with us, we neither know how, nor what to pray. So, the Spirit muſt come to all: and it goeth through; neither can ought be done for us, or by us without it. Away then with ne veniat: we cannot ſay it; we may not thinke it: We cannot ſpare this firſt. Another veniat there muſt be; a ſecond Advent, beſides CHRISTS. CHRISTS Advent begins all: this, ends all our ſolemnities. Come He muſt: and wee muſt all agree, to ſay, Veni Creator Spiritus: the inconvenience of non veniet we cannot endure.

2 Cor. 3. 6. Ioh. 6. 63. Rom. 8. 26.

But

But then, there ariſeth a new difficulty upon Si non abiero. We ſee a neceſſity of His comming: but, we ſee no neceſſity of CHRIST's going. Why not Chriſt ſtay, and yet He come? Why may not CHRIST ſend for Him, as well as ſend Him? Or, if He goe, come againe with Him? Before, it was, Ne veniat ille, mane tu: now, it is, Veniat ille, et mane Tu. Why not? Are they like to buckets; one cannot goe downe, unleſſe the other goe up? If it be ſo expedient, He come, CHRIST (I truſt) is not impedient, but He may come.

2 The neceſſity of Si non abiero

CHRIST (ſure) and He are not ἀσύμφωνα, incompatible: they may be, and abide together well enough. We beleeve, He was conceived by the HOLY GHOST: then, no antipathy betweene them. At His Baptiſme, He was knowne by this, that the Spirit reſted and ſtayed upon Him: why not now, as well? We ſee not, how this holdeth: If I goe not, He will not come. It cannot be denied, they two can ſtay together, well enough; and the time ſhall come, we ſhall enjoy them both together, and the Father with them. That time is not yet: now, it is otherwiſe. Not for any let in themſelves; that is not all: but, for ſome further matter and conſiderations noted by the Fathers, for which, it was expedient, CHRIST ſhould goe, that the Holy Ghoſt might come.

John 1. 32.

First, for veniet. The HOLY GHOST cannot come, as He ſhould, He ſhould come as GOD. The ſtay of CHRIST would have beene a let of the manifeſtation of His God-head. To manifeſt His God-head, being to ſhew great Signes, and worke great Wonders, if CHRIST had ſtill remained and not gone His way, they would not well have beene diſtinguiſhed, and great odds have beene aſcribed to Chriſt. So, the Holy Ghoſt have wanted that honour and eſtimation due to Him: an impeachment it would have beene, to his Divinity. But Chriſt aſcending; all ſuch imaginations ceaſe.

1 On the Holy Ghoſts part.

From mittam Eum: a little impeachment it would have beene, to Chriſts equality with His Father. For, He not going to ſend Him, but ſtaying ſtill here, the ſending of the Spirit would have beene aſcribed to the Father alone, as His ſole act. This would have beene the moſt: that the Father, for His ſake, had ſent Him; but Hee, as GOD, had had no honour of the ſending. Being aſcended and glorified, mittam will ſtraight be conceived: Quem mittet Pater, & quem mittam à Patre: that with the Father, He ſends Him equally, and we alike beholden to them both.

2 On Chriſts.

Iohn. 40. 26. 15. 26.

A third is in vobis, on their part alſo. As their caſe was to be, it was (ſo) meet, even in regard of them. They were to be ſent abroad into all coaſts; to be ſcattered all over the earth to preach the Goſpell, and not to ſtay together ſtill, in one place, His corporall preſence would have ſtood them in ſmall ſtead: He could have beene reſident but in one place, to have comforted ſome one of them; S. Iames at Ieruſalem: as for Iohn at Epheſus, or Thomas in India, or Peter at Babylon; as good (for them) in heaven as in earth; all one. The Spirit, that was to ſucceed, was much more fit for men diſperſed. He could be, and was preſent with them all, and with every one, by Himſelfe, as filling the compaſſe of the whole world.

3 On theirs, as their caſe was to be.

This as their caſe was to be. But, the Fathers rather pitch upon their eſtate as preſently it was: Vobis, that is, vobis ſic diſpoſitis: for you, that is, you ſo diſpoſed, as I find, you are. So, it is ad homines: to them affected in ſuch ſort, as then they were. Whereby he giveth us to underſtand; ſome are in that caſe; as it is expedient, Chriſt withdraw Himſelfe from them. And is there any vobis, can any man be in that caſe, it ſhould be good for Chriſt to depart for him? It ſeemeth ſo. We ſee oftentime, the caſe ſo ſtandeth, even in regard of this life; that, from ſome, it is good their meate be taken, and yet is meate the ſtay of their life; that, from ſome, it is good their bloud be taken, yet bloud is natures treaſure, and that holdeth us in life; that, from ſome, light be taken, in ſome diſeaſe of the eyes, yet is light the comfort of this life. All this we conceive, Expedit, ut cibus, ut ſanguis, ut lux abeat; and all this better, than expedit ut Chriſtus abeat; we may ſpare them all, better than Him.

4 On theirs, as their caſe was then.

1 For His bodily preſence.

Yet CHRIST it is, that telleth it us, and telleth it us for a matter of great truth:

theſe were: (and whoſe caſe is better than theſe?) But, if theſe, ſome there are, in that caſe, it may be ſaid to them truly, It is expedient I be gone. And what caſe may that bee? Even that caſe, that maketh the mother many times withdraw her ſelfe, from her young child, whom (yet) ſhe loveth full tenderly, when the child groweth fooliſhly fond of her: which grew to be their caſe juſt. Chriſts fleſh, and His fleſhly preſence, that, and none but that. So ſtrangely fond they grew of that, as they could not endure Hee ſhould goe out of their ſight: Nothing, but his carnall preſence, would quiet them. Wee know, who ſaid: If thou hadſt beene here Lord: as if, abſent, He had not beene, as able to doe it, by His Spirit, as preſent by His bodie. And a tabernacle they would needs build Him, to keepe Him on earth ſtill; and ever and anon they were ſtill dreaming of an earthly kingdome, and of the chiefe Seates there, as if their conſummation ſhould have beene in the fleſh. Theſe phanſies (indeed, errors) they fell into, about the fleſh: they had need have it taken from them. The Spirit was gone quite: they had more need, to Have Him ſent. This was, at no hand, to be cheriſhed in them: they were not to be held as children ſtill, but to grow to mans eſtate, to perfect age and ſtrength; and ſo conſequently to be weined from the corporall preſence of His fleſh; nor to hang all by ſenſe, to which (it is too true) they were too much addicted. The corporall therefore to be removed, that the ſpirituall might take place: the viſible, that the inviſible: and they, not in ſight or ſenſe, as hitherto; but, in ſpirit and truth, henceforth to cleave unto Him. To ſay (with the Apoſtle) If we have knowne CHRIST after the fleſh, yet now henceforth we know Him ſo no more. This was for them: And we ſhould have beene no better, as now we are; the fleſh will but hinder the ſpirit; even the beſt.

Matth. 17. 4.

2 Cor. 5. 16.

2 For His ſpirituall preſence.

This, for His bodily preſence. But, the Fathers goe yet further; and inquire, whether this alſo be not true, in His ſpirituall preſence: and reſolve, that, even in regard of that, it is no leſſe true. To ſome vobis, it is expedient, that, even after that manner alſo, CHRIST goe from them. And who are they?

As growen faint. Cant. 3. 1.

1. One Vobis; when men grow faint in ſeeking, and careleſſe in keeping Him (as in Cant. 3.) lie in bed, and ſeeke Him. Gone He was; and, meet, He ſhould ſo bee, to teach them to riſe and ſeeke; to watch and keepe Him better.

As overweening. Pſal. 30. 7. Matth. 20. 33.

2. Another Vobis, when men grow high conceited and overweening of themſelves, and their owne ſtrength; and ſay (with David) non movebor, as if they had CHRIST pinned to them; and (with Peter) Etſi omnes non ego. It is more than time, CHRIST be gone from ſuch; to teach them to ſee and know themſelves better.

But, if CHRIST leave us, if He withdraw His ſpirituall preſence, we fall into ſinne; and that cannot bee expedient for any. Good, that I have beene in trouble; for before I was troubled, I went wrong: but, not good for any, to fall into ſinne. Yes indeed: Audeo dicere (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) I dare avow it, Expedit ſuperbo, ut incidat in peccatum (there are the very termes) it is expedient they fall into ſome notorious ſinne (as David, as Peter did) that their faces may be filled with ſhame, and they, by that confuſion, learne to walke with more humilitie. The meſſenger of Satan, that was ſent the Apoſtle, to buffet him, was of this nature, and to no other end ſent, but to prevent this maladie. In a word: CHRIST muſt withdraw (no remedie) that we may grow humble, and being humble, the HOLY GHOST may come: for He commeth to none, reſts on none, giveth grace to none, but the humble. So we ſee, Chriſt may be, and is, even according to His ſpirituall preſence, withdrawne from ſome perſons, and for their good. Chriſtus abit, ut Paracletus veniat: and that many wayes meet it is, it ſo ſhould be. This makes us ſay, Goe Lord, Set up thy ſelfe above the heavens, and thy glory, over all the earth.

III. Of Mutam Eam.

If Hee goe not, the Holy Ghoſt will not come. But, if CHRIST goe, will Hee come? ſhall we not be left to the wide world, without both? will the Comforter come? He will: for, CHRIST will not faile but ſend Him. If He take His bodie from our eyes, He will ſend His Spirit into our hearts. But, ſent He ſhall be; here is mittam Eum, And ſo He did. CHRIST ſent Him, and He came; and in memorie of this Veniet & mittam, hold we this Day. He did, to them: but, will Hee alſo to us? Hee will. And, ſhall wee ſee fierie tongues? That, is not Chriſts promiſe, to ſend fierie tongues; but Illum, Him, the Comforter. And, Comfort it is, we ſeeke. It is not the tongues, or fire, we care for, or will doe us good. We conceive (I truſt) after two manners, He came, as this day: [1] One viſible, in tongues of fire that ſate upon their heads: [2] The other inviſible, by inward graces, whereby He poſſeſſed their hearts: The former was but for ceremonie at firſt; the other is it, the reall matter, Illum, Him. And Him, this day as well as that, this day and ever, He will not faile to ſend. Alwaies, we are to thinke, His promiſe and His prayer were not for theſe onely, but for all that ſhould beleeve on Him, by their word, to the worlds end.

Now this laſt point (theſe two, [1] Mittam [2] Illum) we are ſpecially to looke to. CHRIST is gone, once for all. We have no hold now, but of this promiſe, I will ſend Him. That we take heed, we forgoe not Him, and loſe our part in the promiſe too. A great part of the world is (ſure) in this caſe: CHRIST is gone, and the Comforter is not ſent. Not this: for I ſpeake not of the worlds comfort, the rich mans (Luk. 16.) qui habeat hîc conſolationem, who had his comfort, here in good fare and braverie, and all manner delights of the fleſh; fleſh-comforts: but, this here is Paracletus qui eſt Spiritus.

Luk. 16. 25.

And becauſe all Religions promiſe a Spirituall comfort; it is ſaid further, Paracletus qui eſt ſpiritus veritatis: No ſpirit of error, but the ſpirit of truth. And becauſe all Chriſtians (though counterfeit) claime an intereſt in Spiritus veritatis; yet further, it is added, Paracletus qui eſt Spiritus ſanctus: He is no uncleane Spirit, but one ſanctifying, and leading us into an holy and cleane life. This is the true Comforter (and none other) that Chriſt promiſeth to ſend.

2 Paracletus.

Chriſt will ſend Him. But (that we miſtake Him not) not, unleſſe we call for Him, and be readie to entertaine Him: For [cletus] is in Paracletus, Of which let me tell you, theſe three things: It is the chiefe word of the Text, and chiefe thing of the Feaſt. It is tranſlated Comforter: that tranſlation is but ad homines, for their turne, to whom Hee ſpeakes; for, as their caſe was, they needed that office of His, moſt. But, the true force of the word Paracletus is Advocatus (not the Nowne, but the Participle) one called to, ſent for, invited to come, upon what occaſion, or for what end ſoever it be. For what end ſoever it be, the perſon ſent for, is Paracletus (properly) pro eâ vice; for that time and turne, Advocatus. But, becauſe the ſpirit of the world, ruleth in this world, the worldly affaires come thickeſt, our affections in that kinde ſo many and oft; it is come to paſſe, that the Lawyer hath carried away the name of Advocatus from the reſt; and they growne to be the Paracleti of this world, called for even from the Prince to the Peaſant, and conſulted with, none ſo often. The Phyſitian, he hath his time and turne of advocation, to be a Paracletus too; but nothing ſo oft: for Barnabas (which is interpreted the ſonne of conſolation) never, till both Zenas the Lawyer, and Luke the Phyſitian have given us over; never called for, but when it is too late.

Acts 4. 35.

But firſt, from mittam Paracletum, this we have. Mittam, Chriſt will ſend: but Paracletum, if you ſend for Him. Veniet, come He will, but not come, unleſſe called: nor ſent, but ſent for. If we call Him, veniet, He will come: if we ſend for Him, He will ſend Him. That, is our duty; but what is our practice? We miſſe in this firſt, we call not for Him. Wee finde no time for Him, He is faine to call for us, to ring a bell for us, to ſend about to get us; and then are we Advocati, not He. When wee ſend for Him, He is Paracletus: when He, for us, then we are, and not He: (if we be that, if we be Advocati, and not rather avocati; every trifling occaſion being enough, to call us away.) Thus we ſtumble at the very threſhold: and doe we yet mervaile, if Chriſt, ſend Him not, nor He come?

1 Our duty, to call for Him for Comfort.

Men are ſent for, for ſome end: and diverſe are the ends, thereafter as our need is. Wee ſend not for them, onely when wee are in heavineſſe, to comfort us; but when we are in doubt, to reſolve us: which is the ſecond ſignification, and ſo [Paracletus] is turned advocate, or counſellor (1 Ioh. 2. 1.) And the Holy Ghoſt looketh to be ſent for, for both: for counſell, as well as for conſolation: for both; he is good for both. Yea, many are His uſes: and therefore He thinketh much to be ſent for, but for one, as if He were good for nothing elſe. If we be in doubt, He is able to reſolve us: if perplexed, to adviſe and to guide: if we know not how, to frame our petition for us: If we know not, to teach; if we forget, to remember us: And not only one uſe (as we phanſie) if we be out of heart, to comfort us.

[a] Io. 4. 5. [b] Act. 2. 3. [c] Io. 3. 8. [d] Io. 2. 20. [e] Io. 15. 26. [f] Eſay 11. 2.

And, becauſe his uſes be many, His types are ſo. [a] Water ſometimes, ſometimes [b] fire: One while [c] winde, one while [d] oyntment: and according to our ſeverall wants we to ſend to Him, for fire, to warme; for winde, to coole; for water, to clenſe us; for oyle, to ſupple us. And, as His Types, ſo His names: the [e] Spirit of truth, the [f] Spirit of counſell, the Spirit of holineſſe, the Spirit of comfort: And according to His ſeverall faculties, we to invocate (or call for) Him, by that name, that is moſt for our uſe or preſent occaſion. For all theſe, He lookes, we ſhould ſend for Him.

Our error is, as if He were onely for one uſe or office; for comfort alone: ſo, in all others, we let Him alone; and if never in heavines, never looke after Him, or care once to heare of Him. But, He is for advice, and direction alſo. No leſſe Paracletus, a counſellor, than Paracletus, a comforter: He is not ſent by CHRIST, to comfort only. Ye may ſee, by the very next words: the firſt thing He doth, when Hee commeth, is, He ſhall reprove; which is farre from comforting. But ſent Hee is, as well to mediate with us, for GOD: as, with GOD, for us. GODS Paracletus, His Sollicitor, to call on us for our duty; as our Paracletus, or Comforter, to miniſter us comfort, in time of need. Verſe 8.

Our manner is, we love to be left to our ſelves, in our conſultations to adviſe with fleſh and bloud, thence to take our direction, all our life: and, when we muſt part, then ſend for Him, for a little comfort, and there is all the uſe, we have of Him. But, he that will have comfort from Him, muſt alſo take counſell of Him; have uſe of Him as well againſt error and ſinfull life, as againſt heavineſſe of minde. If not, here is your doome: where you have had your counſell, there ſeeke your comfort: he that hath beene your Counſellour, all the time of your life, let him be your Comforter, at the houre of your death. And good reaſon: He will not be Paracletus at halves; to ſtand by at all elſe, and onely to be ſent for in our infirmitie.

Baſe it is, to ſend for Him, never but when in extreme need: but, even otherwiſe extra caſum neceſſitatis, for entertaining of acquaintance and to grow familiar, as we uſe to doe thoſe, we delight in. The word [παράκλητος] giveth as much: He ſhould be neere us, by us, one ordinary; not a ſtranger, to call or ſend for a great way off. It is ſo expedient, that He may know us throughly, and we Him: the beſt and neereſt way to finde ſure comfort, when moſt we ſhall need it. For he that ſhould miniſter it ſoundly indeed, had need be familiarly acquainted with the ſtate of our ſoules, that he may be ready and ripe, then. To goe to a Lawyers reading, and not heare it, ſerves us not for our worldly doubts: nor to heare the Phyſicke Lecture, for the complaints of our bodies. No: we make them Paracletos, we call them to us, we queſtion with them in particular, we have private conference, about our eſtates. Onely, for our ſoules affaires, it is enough to take our directions in open Churches, and there delivered in groſſe: private conference we endure not; a Paracletus there, we need not. One we muſt have, to know throughly the ſtate of our lands or goods: One we muſt have, entirely acquainted with the ſtate of our body: In our ſoules, it holdeth not. I ſay no more: it were good it did. We make him a ſtranger, all our life long; He is Paraclitus (as they were wont to pronounce him;) truly Paraclitus, one whom we declined, and looked over our ſhoulders at: And then, in our extremity, ſodenly He is Paracletus; we ſeeke, and ſend for Him, we would come a little acquainted with Him. But, take we heed of Neſcio vos; It is a true anſwer: We take too little a time, to breed acquaintance in. Neſcio vos (I feare) they finde, that ſo ſeeke Him: Paracletus, they doe not; Paraclitus, rather. Matth. 25. 12.

This

This, of Paracletus. Now, of Mittam, the [1] time and the [2] manner: both are to the purpose. The time, that when He sends, we make readie for Him. The time of the yeare was this time, in the Spring, the faireſt and beſt part of it. The time of the moneth, the third day: (ſo they deduce, from the fifteenth day, the day of the Paſſeover, and ſo fifty dayes, it will ſo fall out by calculation:) that is, the beginning of the moneth. The time of the day, it was before the third houre (that is, nine of the clocke in the morning plainely.) So it was ſtill prime. Theſe teach us, it would be in our prime, the time of health and ſtrength, when we lay the grounds of our comfort; not to tarry, till the froſt and ſnow of our life; till the evill dayes come, and the yeares approach, whereof we ſhall ſay, we have no pleaſure in them. He, in the ſpring: wee in the end of the yeare. He, in the beginning of the moneth: we, in the laſt quarter; nay, even pridiè calendas. He, before nine in the morning: we, not till after nine at night. If we will keepe time with Him, we know what His time is of ſending.

2 His ſending: 1 The Time. Mittam.

Eccleſ. 12.

The manner is beſt: and it is in the body of the word. As the Spirit of truth, by preaching: as the Holy Ghoſt, by prayer; the Paracletus (wee know, what Hee meaneth) per paracleſin, by invitation. As the Dove to baptiſme, the Winde to Prayer (Aperui os & attraxi Spiritum, Pſal. 119. 131.) the tongue, to a ſermon; the Paracletus, to Paracleſis, as it were a refreſhing: (ſo, friends meete and nouriſh love and amitie one with another.) And, even humanum dicere, after naturall men, when our ſpirits are ſpent and we wax faint, to recover them (or never) in the naturall man, it is done, no way more kindly, than by nouriſhment: ſpecially, ſuch as is apt to breed them: as, one kinde is more apt than other. There is a ſpirituall meat, and a ſpirituall drinke (ſaith the Apoſtle:) in which kinde, there is none ſo apt to procreate the Spirit in us, as that fleſh and bloud, which was it ſelfe conceived and procreate by the Spirit, and therefore full of ſpirit and life, to them that partake it. It is ſure; to invite and allure the Spirit to come, there is no more effectuall way; none, whether CHRIST will ſend Him, or whether He will come, more willingly, than to the preſence of the moſt holy Myſteries. And namely, at this feaſt; concerning which, our Saviour Chriſts voice is to ſound in our eares, Si quis ſitiat; veniat ad me: If any thirſt let him come to me and drink: Which he meant and ſpake (ſaith St. Iohn) of the Spirit, which was to be given at that time eſpecially, when He was newly glorified. De meo accipiet (ſaith Chriſt of Him:) and it is no where more truly fulfilled, that he ſhall take of Chriſts, and give it us, than it is done, of that, which is His moſt intrinſecally. That was, this very day; and no better opportunitie, no fitter time, to receive the Spirit, than the day of the Spirit; the day of CHRISTS ſending, and of His comming. When ſhall He be ſent or come; if then, He doe not? But, keeping the time, and obſerving the manner, wee truſt in His promiſe, and call upon Him, that ſo He will ſend Him; and upon the Holy Ghoſt, that ſo Hee will come. And as we be His Paracleti, His gueſts; ſo He will be ours, dwelling with us with His aſſiſtance, and being in us by His graces, to life eternall. Which Almighty GOD grant, &c.

A

()

Acts Chap. XIX. Ver. I, II, III.

And it came to paſſe, &c. That Paul came to Epheſus, and found there, certaine Diſciples.
And ſaid unto them, Have ye received the HOLY GHOST, ſince yee beleeved? And they ſaid unto him, wee have not ſo much as heard, whether there bee an HOLY GHOST.
And Hee ſaid unto them, Vnto what were yee then baptized? And they ſaid, Vnto Johns Baptiſme.

Act. 2 33. The part Narrative.

HEre is a queſtion. Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt? And here is an anſwer to it: Nay not ſo much as heard, whether any Holy Ghoſt or no. There is no fitter time, to aske and reſolve this queſtion of His receiving, than this day, the day, He was received viſibly: nor to amend this anſwer (Not, whether any or no,) than this day, on which Hee declared Himſelfe to the world, when it was both heard and ſeene, that there was an Holy Ghoſt.

The firſt queſtion.

The Narrative is thus, briefly. Saint Paul came to Epheſus, and there he found certaine Diſciples. At the firſt meeting, the very firſt queſtion he askes, is Si recepiſtis, Whether they had received the Holy Ghoſt? Marke it well. It is the firſt point, he thinkes meete to be enquired of, or to informe himſelfe concerning.

The

The Apoſtle (no doubt) hoped for an anſwer affirmative from them : That they had received Him. Theirs is a ſtrange negative : That, not only they had not received Him; Sed neque, But were ſo farre from that, as they had not ſo much, as heard, whether there were any to receive : whether, there were any, at all. Whom they ſhould have received, Him they had not heard of. This was a great rudeneſſe. And yet Diſciples they were, and Diſciples that had beleeved, and beleeved a good while ſince. And they were twelve (it is ſaid at the ſeventh verſe) that is, a full Iurie ; and yet put the Holy Ghoſt upon their Verdict, that, they returne, is an Ignoramus. The anſwer.

The Apoſtle, little looked for ſuch rudeneſſe, at Epheſus, the moſt civill place of all Aſia. This anſwer almoſt poſed him; yet, he gives them not over. Nay, he muſt not leave them thus. Whether one, or no : This anſwer (of force) begets another queſtion, to finde where the error was. Diſciples, they were, and therefore baptized; baptized, and yet had not heard of the Holy Ghoſt? He muſes how, or into what they had beene baptized, and askes them that. They tell him, into Iohn's baptiſme, and further they had not gone. Of Iohns Baptiſme I will not now ſtand to enlarge; This is certaine, a Baptiſme it was, wherein (it ſeemes) there was no mention, nor no hearing of the Holy Ghoſt. The ſecond queſtion. The anſwer

Now by this time, their rudeneſſe, that ſeemed ſtrange at the firſt, is not now ſtrange when the reaſon of it is knowne. And it might ſeeme in ſome ſort to excuſe them, in that, they were but at Iohn's Baptiſme : and ſo it did. But yet, to accuſe them withall, that they were but at Iohn's Baptiſme (for it was now more than twenty yeares ſince Iohn was dead) that, all this while, they were no further; that (as He ſaith to the Hebrewes) conſidering the time, whereas they might have beene Teachers, they had need to be catechiſed, in the very rudiments of Religion. Heb. 5. 11. The error.

Yet * quencheth he not this flax, though it did but ſmoke; beares with them, rates them not, but teacheth them; firſt, that as Iohn was to CHRIST; ſo was Iohns baptiſme to Chriſts baptiſme, in manner of a Parate viam, or introduction, in venturum, to one that was to come, and they, no otherwiſe to conceive of it. The rectifying *Matth 12. 20.

It was Apollo's caſe (in the Chapter before, Verſe 25.) He knew not but Iohns baptiſme neither, at the firſt. And theſe (it may well be) were His Diſciples. But as Aquila, there taught Him : So doth the Apoſtle theſe here, the way of truth more exactly. And ſo, being taught, they were baptized with a baptiſme, where, they both heard of, and received the Holy Ghoſt. Verſe 5. 6.

Thus doth end the Narrative part. And therein, hee gives us an example in himſelfe, of his owne rule to Timothee. If we meet with ſuch, as theſe at Epheſus, raw and evill catechiſed Chriſtians, that we grow not abrupt; but exerciſe our office, in all long ſuffering and doctrine : not in Doctrine alone, but in long ſuffering and doctrine : For without ſuffering, and ſuffering long other whiles, all our doctrine will doe but little good. The Apoſtles patience. 2 Tim. 4. 2.

Out of all this, we gather theſe points. Firſt, the neceſſitie of receiving the Holy Ghoſt : in that, it is his firſt care, his firſt queſtion he askes. Of the other Perſons in the God-head, it is enough we heare of them and beleeve in them : Of the Holy Ghoſt it is not ſo. To heare of Him, or beleeve in Him, will not ſerve; but we are to receive Him too. To know not only Quòd ſit, that He is; but to certifie our ſelves, Quòd inſit, that He is in us : For He ſhall remaine with you and ſhall be in you (it is CHRIST.) Ioh. 47. 17. The part diſpoſitive.

But then, receive we cannot, unleſſe firſt we heare : heare; that there is one to receive, or ever we receive Him. Firſt, notice of His being; and then ſenſe of His receiving. And indeed, the hearing of Him is a way to His receiving : For, though, not every one that heares, receives : yet none receives, but he heares firſt. So, that ground muſt firſt be layd.

And to lay that ground, no better way than the Apoſtle here directs us to, by his ſecond queſtion; get us to our baptiſme. Aske, into what wee were baptized? There we ſhall not faile, but reſolve our ſelves, that one there is, receive Him after, as wee may.

Now, but that the Apoſtle had a better conceit of theſe, here, than there was cauſe, and ſo erred of charitie, ſuppoſing theſe Diſciples better Schollers than they were; Hee would have begun with the latter, and firſt asked them, If ever they heard of Him: and then after; if they had received Him. For, that is firſt in nature, An ſit, then An inſit.

There then let us begin. I am ſorrie and aſhamed, that wee ſhall need deale with An ſit: Yet (I know not how) as theſe daies of ours grow from evill to worſe, and from worſe to worſt of all; it is no more than needs. Not that I doubt of any ſuch, who (as theſe here at Epheſus) have not heard of the HOLY GHOST: For (no doubt) long yer this, His ſound is gone out into all lands: but rather, ſuch other (as Saint Paul found at Epheſus too) I can tell them no better, than hee doth, Beaſts in the ſhape of men. That have heard, and yet take to themſelves, (a Chriſtian libertie (they call it) and that forſooth, humbly, ſimply, and modeſtly; but indeed) an unchriſtian licentiouſneſſe, proudly, lowdly, and malapertly, to call in queſtion what they liſt; and, to make Quære's of that which the Chriſtian world hath long ſince reſolved, and ever ſince beleeved, concerning GOD, CHRIST and the Bleſſed Spirit: no leſſe matters.

Rom. 10. 18.

1 Cor. 13. 30.

The Diviſion.

So then, to theſe two parts, we reduce all: The Hearing of Him firſt: Then [2] The receiving of Him. I. The Hearing: and therein, [1] Where we ſhall heare of Him? and [2] What we ſhall heare of Him? Where we ſhall heare of Him? At our Baptiſme: [2] And What we ſhall heare of Him there: That one there is (at leaſt) and I truſt, ſomewhat elſe beſides.

I.

II. 2. Then, the Receiving of Him. And in it, three points: 1. Firſt, that this queſtion muſt be anſwered too, and ſo we bound to receive him, And that, either affirmativè, or negativè. We have, or we have not. 2. Then, Have we received Him? How to know, if we have. 3. Have we not received Him? How to procure, if we have not. In the former, of Hearing: is matter of faith. In the latter, of Receiving: matter of morall duty. Both, meete to be intreated of, at all times; but at no time ſo fit, and ſo proper, as at this Feaſt.

I. The hearing.

THere is no receiving of Him, that is not. Therefore, no talke of receiving, no place, for the firſt queſtion, Have ye received? till the latter bee firſt reſolved, Is there one to receive? For reſolution whereof, He might have ſent them, to the very beginning of Geneſis, where they ſhould have heard, the Spirit of GOD moved on the face of the waters. Or to the Law; where the ſame Spirit came downe upon the ſeventie Elders. Or, to the Pſalmes; where they ſhould have heard David ſay of Him, Emitte Spiritum & creabuntur, Send forth thy Spirit, and all ſhall be made. And Spiritum Sanctum ne auferas, Take not thy Holy Spirit from me. Or, to the Prophets: The Prophet Eſay: CHRISTS firſt Text; Luke 4. The Spirit of GOD is upon me. The Prophet Ioel: Saint Peters Text this day, I will powre My Spirit upon all fleſh.

Or, if ever they had heard of our SAVIOUR CHRIST, Saint Paul might have ſent them, to His Conception: Where, they ſhould have heard the Angel, ſay, Spiritus Sanctus ſupervenit in te, to the Bleſſed Virgin. To Chriſts baptiſme, where, Hee came upon Chriſt in a viſible ſhape. To his promiſe ſo * often iterate, of Sending them, the Holy Ghoſt. Or, if they had heard of the Apoſtles: Of [b] Chriſts breathing on them, and willing them to receive the Holy Ghoſt. Or but of this day, and in what ſort [c] Hee was viſibly viſibly ſent downe, like firie tongues, upon each of them. Or of their ſolemne meeting and Counſell at Ieruſalem, and Decrees there, the tenor whereof was, [d] Iſeemed good to the Holy Ghoſt, and us. Or but of the ſtrange end, that hapned to Ananias, they could not chooſe, but have heard his offence told Him by St. Peter, He had lyed to the HOLY GHOST: and ſtraight upon it; hee had not lyed to man, but to GOD directly. [d] Act. 15. 28. Act. 5. 3, 4.

All this, he might; yet, this he did not, but takes a plaine courſe, ſends them to their baptiſme, (ſtill ſuppoſing it, to be CHRIST's Baptiſme, they were baptized with, the only true Baptiſme.) And, ſeeing the Apoſtle, upon good advice, tooke that for the beſt way; we cannot follow a better direction: and ſo, let us take it. We meane not (I truſt) to renounce our Baptiſme. By it, we are, that we are. And, at it, we ſhall not faile, but heare, There is a Holy Ghoſt. Expreſſe mention of Him, is directly given in charge, in the ſet forme of Baptiſme, preſcribed by our SAVIOUR: That all ſhould be (as we all are) baptized, in the name of the Father, the Sonne and the Holy Ghoſt. Matth. 28. 19.

1 That one there is.

Yea, I adde further: He could no better referre them, than to baptiſme. For, a ſpeciall prerogative hath the Holy Ghoſt, in our baptiſme, above the other two Perſons. That Laver, is His Laver properly; where, we are not only to be baptized into Him (as into the other two) but alſo even to be baptized with Him: which is proper, to him alone. For, beſides the Water, we are there, to be borne anew of the Holy Ghoſt alſo, elſe is there no entring for us into the kingdome of God. Tit. 3. 5. Ioh. 3. 5.

This for Baptiſme. But let mee alſo tell you a ſaying: It is St. Baſils, and well worth your remembring. Hee beginneth with, In hoc batpizamur, and proceedeth three degrees further, all riſing from thence naturally: they bee but the traine of baptiſme.

1. Firſt. Et quomodo baptizamur, ita & credimus. As we are baptized, ſo we beleeve. As is our baptiſme, ſo is our beleefe. And our beleefe, is there (at our baptiſme) repeated from point to point. A point whereof, is, I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt. And, wee deſire to bee baptized in that faith. There Hee is now againe, at our baptiſme.

Yea, before we come ſo farre: even, at Chriſts conceiving, there we heare of Him firſt, Who was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. So, three ſeveral times, we there heare of Him. [1] Which was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt. [2] I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt, and [3] In the name of the Holy Ghoſt. At our baptiſme, all three. And in the mouth of three witneſſes, is every point ſufficiently eſtabliſhed. 1 Cor. 13. 2.

2. Saint Baſil proceeds. Et quomodo credimus, ita & glorificamus: As from Baptiſme, to Beleefe: So from beleeving, to giving glorie. And there, he flatly avoweth (which all the Chriſtian world knew to be true, nor was there ever Heretike found, ſo bold as to deny it) That the Δοξολογία (as they call it) that is, the uſe of ſaying, Glorie be to the Father, and the Sonne and the Holy Ghoſt; this forme of concluding Pſalmes, and Hymnes, and thankſgivings, was ever received, and retained in the Church, from the beginning; as with us, ſtill it is. So was Baptiſme, ſo was thankes for the baptized partie (the new member of the Church;) ſo, all concluded. So that way, wee heare of Him there, againe.

3. Yet one more, and it is His laſt. Et quomodo glorificamus, ſic & benedicimus. As wee glorifie GOD, ſo we bleſſe men: As we give glorie to Him: ſo we receive bleſſing from Him. How? the forme is often heard, and well knowne, it is the Apoſtles: The grace of Chriſt our Lord, the Love of GOD His Father; Communio, and the fellowſhip of the Holy Ghoſt, to be with us. So, after Baptiſme; So, after Sermon; So, is the congregation ever diſmiſſed. Then, there we glorifie Him. And in Him we there are bleſſed. And ſo, wee heare of Him, once more, quòd ſit, that a Holy Ghoſt there is. 2 Cor. 13. 13.

Vpon the matter: no Baptiſme, no Beleefe, GOD no glorie, men no bleſſing, but ſtill we heare of Him. So as, if any but ſee baptiſme, heare but the Creed, be at the daily

Service,

Service, heare the Church rendring glory to GOD, receiving bleſsing from the Biſhop or Prieſt: by ſome of theſe, or all of theſe, they cannot chooſe but heare of the Holy Ghoſt. There is then no ſaying, for us, Sed neque audivimus: A way with that, And ſay with Saint Baſil, In hoc baptizamur, there we beginne, Et quomodo [1] baptizamur ſic credimus, [2] Et quomodo credimus ſic glorificamus, [3] Et quomodo glorificamus ſic benedicimus. So, we are baptized, in Him; [2] and as we are baptized, ſo we beleeve; and [3] as we beleeve, ſo glorifie we God; and [4] as we glorifie God, ſo bleſſe we men; bleſſe, and are bleſſed. Theſe foure, they are all three, and they are not farre fet, they have no curious ſpeculation in them, they will ſerve for any honeſt or good hearted Chriſtian, to reſt in, and they need goe no further, than In quo ergo baptizati eſtis.

2 That He is GOD.

Thus, we are referred, and we know, where we are ſure to heare of Him. But, if wee ſtay a little upon [In quo baptizati] and looke better into it, this is not all, but we ſhall finde further, not only that ſuch an one there is, but take more perfect notice of Him. And firſt, that He is GOD. And by no other, but by the ſame ſteps we went before.

1 GOD, firſt. For that, we cannot be baptized into any name, but GODS alone. the Apoſtle diſputes it at large, 1 Cor. 1. that it cannot be, that it is not lawfull, to be baptized into St. Peters name, or into his, or into any name elſe, but GODS only. But, in His name, we are baptized: even in the name of the Holy Ghoſt, that, proves Him GOD.

2 GOD, ſecondly. For we beleeve in Him. We there profeſſe it. Et nemini Chriſtianorum unquam dubium fuit, nos in Deum, non in Creaturam, credere (ſaith Athanaſius ad Epiſcopos Afric.) Never any Chriſtian doubted of this, that we beleeve not in any Creature, but in GOD alone. Beleeving then in Him, we acknowledge Him to bee GOD.

3 Eſay. 42. 8. GOD, thirdly. For, we aſcribe to Him glorie. And glorie is proper to GOD onely: So proper, that He ſaith expreſly, Alteri non dabo, He will not part with it, to any other. But wee render Him glory, and With the Father and the Sonne, pariter together, He is worſhipped and glorified: Therefore, GOD with them, even in that reſpect.

4 Laſtly, GOD, from bleſſing alſo: for, that is one of Gods peculiars: To bleſſe in His name: by putting His name, upon children, old and young, and upon the Congregation, to bleſſe them. But, with His name, wee bleſſe, no leſſe, than with the reſt. Therefore, as they, ſo Hee, GOD above all, as to bleſſe, ſo to bee bleſſed for ever.

Num. 6. 27. And upon theſe foure we reſt. Theſe foure, [1] To be baptized into Him, [2] To beleeve in Him, [3] To aſcribe glorie to Him, [4] To bleſſe by Him, or in His name, They are acts, ſuch acts, as cannot be given to any, but to GOD onely; and ſo evidently, wee there heare of Him, that He is GOD alſo. And ſuch are the two acts, in the Creed of Conſtantinople, To be Lord and giver of life, and To ſpeake by the prophets. Such are many other attributes, and workes (that cannot agree to any, but GOD) aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt; which might bee, and which elſewhere have beene alledged: But now we are to keepe us to our Baptiſme, and goe no further.

3 GOD in unitie.

And if we will ſtay yet, but a little, at our Baptiſme; and harken well: as wee heare that He is GOD; ſo ſhall we, that, He is GOD in unitie. For there, we heare but, In nomine, but, of one name. Now, as the Apoſtle reaſoneth (Gal. 3. 16.) Abrahæ dictæ ſunt promiſſiones, & ſemini ejus. Non dicit Seminibus, quaſi in multis; ſed tanquam in uno, Semini ejus. To Abraham and his ſeed, were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, To the ſeeds, as of many; but to his ſeed, as of one. So we, are baptized, Non in nominibus, quaſi multis; ſed, in nomine, quaſi uno: not in the names, as of many; but in the Name, as of one. One name and one nature, or eſſence. Vnum ſumus (ſaith CHRIST) of two of them: Vnum ſunt, ſaith Saint Iohn, of all three. This wee heare there.

Ioh. 10. 30. 1 Ioh. 5. 6.

4 Diſtinct. Vnum ſunt; but not unus. For, as from the name, we reduce the unitie: So, from the number (Three) doe wee, the Trinitie. One in name and nature: yet diſtinct betweene betweene themſelves. Diſtinct in number, as in our baptiſme. The Father, Sonne, Holy Ghoſt. And that number, diſtinct to the ſenſe, as at Chriſts Baptiſme, the Father in the voice, the Sonne in the ſtoud, the Holy Ghoſt in the ſhape of a Dove. And that ſhewed to be, a diſtinction of perſons, in Chriſts promiſe. [1] Ego, the Perſon of Chriſt: [2] Patrem, the Perſon of the Father, [3] and Paracletum, the Perſon of the Holy Ghoſt. The Holy Ghoſt (I ſay) diſtinct from the Father, The Lord and His Spirit hath ſent me, Eſa. 48. 16. From the Sonne Paracletum alium, by alium, the Sonne one, He another. And diſtinct, as a Perſon: For (to omit other perſonall acts, which properly agree to none but a reaſonable nature determined: As [a] To be the Lord, [b] To ſpeake, [c] teach, [d] reprove, comfort, [e] be a witneſſe, [f] place Biſhops, [g] make Decrees in councell:) That which we heare of at our Baptiſme, aſcribed to Him, to conceive the humane nature of Chriſt, is an act ſo perſonall, as, in propriety of ſpeech, can agree to none, or be affirmed of none, but of an intire Perſon. This we heare.

A Perſon then, diſtinct by Himſelfe, yet (as a perſon) not, of or from Himſelfe. And, this wee heare, from the very terme it ſelfe [of Spiritus.] For even as filius alicujus, ſo Spiritus, alicujus, eſt, ab aliquo: proceed from Him, whoſe Sonne, or Spirit they are, So the Sonne of GOD, and Spirit of GOD, doe from GOD: GOD of GOD, either. Eo ipſo then, that He is Spiritus Domini. He proceeds without more adoe.

Proceeds: and from both. [1] from the Father, the Conſtantinopolitan Councell, from the expreſſe words, who proceedeth from the father: [2] From the Sonne; The Councell of Toledo the eight, from the viſible ſigne, where the Sonne breathed on the Apoſtles, and willed them, from Him to receive the Holy Ghoſt. And Non à ſemetipſo loquetur, ſed de meo accipiet, ſheweth fully as much. Briefly: Sent by the Father, Iohn. 14. 26. Filioque, and by the Sonne too. Iohn 15. 26. And ſo, the Spirit of the Father, Matt. 10. 30. Filiique, and by the Sonne too. Gal. 4. 6.

Proceeding from them; and not by way of generation: (That is Chriſts proper; Hee is often termed, the Onely begotten, and ſo, none but Hee) but by way of, Emitte Spiritum, Emiſſion, ſending it forth: that is (out of the very body of the word ſpirit) by ſpiration, or breathing. One breathing, yet from both: even as the breath (which carrieth the name and reſemblance of it) is one, yet from both the noſthrils, in the body naturall.

All theſe are expreſſed, or implied, in our Baptiſme. And now laſtly (to returne home to our purpoſe) proceeds from them, to come to us: is breathed from them, to inſpire us: Sent, by them, to be given us: Per Spiritum ſanctum qui datus eſt nobis, by the Holy Ghoſt which is given us: given to receive, and ſo, to be received of us. Which openeth the way and maketh the paſſage over, to the ſecond queſtion, ſi recepiſtis, Have ye received? And ſo, (as we ſee) the two parts, follow well and kindly, one upon the other. For, this now, is the laſt thing to be heard of Him; that, it is not enough, to heare of Him: but, that we are to receive Him alſo: and to give account to Saint Paul, that we have ſo done.

So then, wee have now cleered the firſt queſtion, at our Baptiſme: and have heard. 1. That ſuch a one there is. 2. And that He is GOD. 3. GOD, in unitie of name. 4. Yet, in number, diſtinct; and diſtinct as a Perſon by Himſelfe. A perſon by Himſelfe, yet not of Himſelfe, but proceeding. 6. Proceeding from both Perſons; that ſtand before Him, the Father and the Sonne. 7. And that breath-wiſe. And ſo, we have done with that. But yet, we have not done, though. For, the other queſtion muſt be anſwered too; no remedie, it imports us. For, as good not heare of Him at all, as heare, and not receive Him.

II.

The ſecond part.

Thither then, I come. Si Recepiſtis? Have ye received the Holy Ghoſt? Wherein theſe three points. 1. That we are liable to this queſtion, and to the affirmative part of it, that we have, and ſo are bound to receive Him: For ſo, ſi, preſuppoſeth. 2. If we ſo have, how to know it. 3. If we have not, how to compaſſe it.

How

1 The neceſſitie.

How much it importeth us, to receive Him, we may eſteeme, by this, that S. Paul makes it, his article of Imprimis, begins with it, at the firſt, as the moſt needfull point.

1 Of receiving

Two things are in it. Firſt, that receive we muſt. Secondly, that it muſt be the Holy Ghoſt, we are to receive.

Receive? What need we receive any Spirit, or receive at all? May we not, out of our ſelves, worke that, will ſerve our turnes? No: For holy we muſt be, if ever we ſhall reſt in His holy Hill: for without holineſſe, none ſhall ever ſee GOD. But holy we cannot bee, by any habit morall, or acquiſite. There is none ſuch in all morall Philoſophie. As, we have our faith, by illumination: ſo, have we our holineſſe, by inſpiration: receive both; both from without.

Heb. 12. 14.

To a babit the Philoſophers came, and ſo Chriſtians may: but that will not ſerve, they are to goe further. Our habits acquiſite will lift us no further, than they did the Heathen men: no further than the place, where they grow, that is, earth and nature. They cannot work beyond their kind (nothing can;) nor riſe higher, than their ſpring. It is not therefore Si habitum acquiſiſtis: but, ſi ſpiritum recepiſtis, we muſt goe by.

2 Of receiving the Holy Ghoſt.

But then, why recepiſtis Spiritum Sanctum, the Holy Ghoſt? No receiving will ſerve, but of Him? The reaſon is, it is nothing here below, that we ſeeke: but, to heaven we aſpire. Then, if to heaven we ſhall, ſomething from heaven, muſt thither exalt us. If, Partakers of the divine nature, we hope to be (as, great and precious promiſes we have that we ſhall be) that can be no otherwiſe, than by receiving one, in whom the divine nature is. He being received, imparts it to us, and ſo makes us conſortes divinæ naturæ; and that is the HOLY GHOST.

1 Pet. 1. 4.

For as an abſolute neceſſitie there is, that we receive the Spirit, elſe can we not live the life of grace; and ſo conſequently, never come to the life of glorie. Recepiſtis Spiritum gives the life naturall. Recepiſtis Spritum Sanctum, gives the life ſpirituall.

1 Cor. 15. 45.

1. There holdeth a correſpondence, betweene the naturall and the Spirituall. The ſame way the world was made, in the beginning, by the Spirit moving upon the waters of the deepe: the very ſame, was the world new made, (the Chriſtian world, or Church) by the ſame Spirit moving on the waters of baptiſme.

2. And looke, how in the firſt Adam, we come to this preſent life, by ſending the breath of life, into our bodies. So, in the ſecond, come we to our hold, in the other life, by ſending the Holy Ghoſt into our ſoules.

3. By that Spirit, which CHRIST was conceived by; by the ſame Spirit the Chriſtian alſo muſt bee. Not to be avoided, abſolutely neceſſary all theſe, it cannot be otherwiſe.

Another neceſſitie of His receiving. For, [a] The houſe will not ſtand emptie long. One Spirit or other, holy, or unholy, will enter and take it up. We ſee, the greateſt part of the world by farre, are entred upon, and held, ſome by the [b] ſpirit of ſlumber; that paſſe their time (as it were in a ſleepe) without any ſenſe of GOD, or religion at all. Others by the [c] ſpirit of godlineſſe; that reele to and fro, and every yeare are of a new religion. Others, by [d] the ſpirit of error; given over to beleeve lies through ſtrong illuſion. And they that ſeeme to know the truth, ſome with the [e] uncleane ſpirit, ſome with [f] the ſpirit of envie, or ſome ſuch (for they are many:) that, a kind of neceſſitie there is to entertaine and receive the good ſpirit; that ſome or other evill ſpirit, from GOD, ſeaze not upon us. From which GOD deliver us.

c Eſay 19. 14.
d 1 Tim. 4. 1.
e Luk. 11. 24.

A third neceſſitie there is, we receive Him: for that, with Him, wee ſhall receive, what ever we want, or need to receive, for our ſoules good. And here, fall in all His Offices. By Him, [g] we are regenerate at the firſt, in our baptiſme. By Him after [h] confirmed, in the impoſition of hands. By Him after [i] renewed to repentance, when we fall away, by a ſecond impoſition of hands. By Him, [k] taught all our life long, that we know not; [l] put in minde of what we forget; [m] ſtirred up in what we are dull; [n] helped in our prayers; [o] releeved in our infirmities, comforted in our heavineſſe: in a word, [p] ſealed to the day of our Redemption, and [q] raiſed up againe in the laſt day. Goe all along, along; even from our Baptiſme, to our very Reſurrection, and we cannot miſſe Him, but receive Him we muſt.

And on the other ſide, Si non recepiſtis, without Him received, receive what we will, nothing will doe us good: Receive the Word, it is but [r] a killing letter, receive Baptiſme, it is but Iohns Baptiſme; but a [ſ] barren element; receive His fleſh, [t] it profiteth nothing; receive CHRIST, it will not doe, for [u] Qui non habet Spiritum CHRISTI, hic non eſt ejus, He that hath not His Spirit is none of His. So, CHRIST renounces him, He hath no part in him. To receive CHRIST, and not the HOLY GHOST, is to no purpoſe. To conclude, if we receive not Him, we be but [x] animales, ſpiritum non habentes, only men of ſoul, having not the Spirit. [y] Et animalis homo, the naturall man that never received the Spirit, neither perceiveth, nor receiveth the things of God, hath nothing to doe with them. So that, Spiritum non habentes, is enough, and there needs no more (but only that) to condemn us. All this, laid together, we ſee, Recepiſtis ſpiritum, is no more than needs; and it muſt needs have an anſwer.

2 If we have received, how to know it.

The next point is, how to certifie our ſelves, whether we have received this Spirit or no. I ſay [1] Whether the Spirit, firſt: [2] And then, whether that Spirit be the Holy Ghoſt, after.

1 Whether received the Spirit

Of the Spirit the ſignes are familiar. For if it be in us, (as the naturall Spirit doth) At the heart it will beat: At the mouth it will breath: At the pulſe it will be felt. Some one of theſe may; but all theſe will not deceive us.

1 The heart.

At the heart we begin; for that is firſt, [a] Dabo vobis cor novum, & ſpiritum novum. A new heart and a new ſpirit we ſhall finde. [b] We ſhall be renewed in the ſpirit of our mind. Sanè novum ſuperveniſſe Spiritum, nova deſideria demonſtrant (ſaith Bernard:) That a new ſpirit is received, no better way, to know, than by new thoughts, and deſires. That he that watches well, the currant of his deſires and thoughts, may know, whether, and what ſpirit it is, he is led by, old or new. Therefore our SAVIOUR CHRIST breathed into them, when he firſt gave them the HOLY GHOST, that they might receive Him, there within, even [c] in viſceribus, in the inward parts. [d] A timore tuo Domine concepimus ſpiritum ſalutis: We ſhall know the Spirit is conceived, by the feare of God in our hearts; it is, as the Syſtole or drawing in to refraine us from evill. And we ſhall know it, by [e] Charitas Dei diffuſa eſt in cordibus noſtris, the love of God there ſhed abroad in our hearts. Which is, as the diaſtole or dilating it out, to all, that good is.

2 The Speech.

But then, this every one may ſay; All is well within: and their word muſt be taken, we cannot gain-ſay them. For no man knowes, in ſo ſaying, whether they ſay true or no. Therefore we goe yet further, and ſay: Idem eſt vitæ & vocis organon, the breath that ſerves us for life, or to live by; the ſame ſerves us alſo for the voice, or to ſpeake by. So, that way ye ſhall know it. For if [f] in ore ipſorum non eſt ſpiritus; no breath be to be perceived in their mouths, if they [g] ſpeake not through their throats, they are but Idols and no better. Will yee ſee it at the Mouth? [h] Credidi, propter quod locutus ſum, ſaid he: And habentes eundem Spiritum, if we have the ſame ſpirit, (ſaith the Apoſtle) we ſhall doe no leſſe. This we know for certaine, that upon this day, the Holy Ghoſt came in the ſhape of tongues, and they are for ſpeech. And this likewiſe, that, upon the receiving the Holy Ghoſt, theſe here (in the Text) and generally all other, ſpeake, and that with new tongues; not ſuch as they ſpake with before. The miracle is ceaſed: but the morall, holdeth ſtill; where the Holy Ghoſt is received, there is ever a change in the dialect, a change from [k] curſed, uncleane, corrupt communication, unto [l] ſuch as becommeth Saints.

3 The Worke.

But then againe, becauſe even birds may be, and are ſometimes taught, to ſpeake, (and that, holy phraſes for a need;) therefore further yet to the pulſe we goe, and touch it. To the hand, to the worke, and enquire of that. The Holy Ghoſt was firſt given and received by the [m] breath inward, for the Heart. Then, by [n] fiery tongues, for the ſpeech. But ever after, and here in this place, the Holy Ghoſt (we know) was given and received, by [o] laying on of hands: and that, to admoniſh us, that by impoſita, and by admota manus, by lifting up, and laying to our hands, wee may know, we have received Him: we have had laying on of hands, if we uſe laying or putting our hands to any good worke.

p Ier. 17.9. As for what is in the heart; [p] Quis cognoſcit illud? who knowes it? not we our q Tit. 1.16. ſelves: our owne hearts, oft deceive us. And there is [q] a verbis confitentur, confeſſe at the mouth, with a facti is negant, deny with the deeds: and that deceives too. But there r 1 Theſſ. 1.3. is [r] opus fidei, the worke of faith, from [ſ] fides quæ operatur, faith that worketh, that is, ſ Gal. 5.6. Saint Pauls faith; that can [t] ſhew it ſelfe by his working, that is, Saint Iames faith: and t Iames. 2.18. there, may well be the Spirit. But without workes, there, it may not be. For without u Iames 2.24. workes, S. Iames is flat, it is but [v] a dead faith, the carcaſſe of faith, and there is no Spirit in it. No Spirit, if no worke. For uſq; adeò proprium eſt, operari Spiritui, ut niſi operetur, nec ſit: ſo kindly it is, for the Spirit to be working, as if it worke not, it is not. There is none, to worke: Spectrum eſt, non Spiritus, a flying ſhadow it is, a Spirit it is not, if work it do not.

And yet I cannot deny, workes there may be and motion, and yet no Spirit: as, in artificiall engines, Watches, and Jackes, and ſuch like. And a certaine artificiall thing there is in religion (we call it Hypocriſie) that by certaine pins and gins, makes ſhew of certaine workes and motions, as if there were Spirit, but ſurely Spirit there is none in them. Vaine men they are, that boaſt of the Spirit without the worke: Hypocrites they are, that counterfeit the worke, without the Spirit. You ſhall eaſily diſcover theſe workes, that they come not from the Spirit, by the two ſignes, in Pſal. 51. נכון and Verſ. 10.12. גריבה [1] conſtant, and [2] free. They that come from cunning, and not from the Spirit, yee ſhall know them by this, they be every foot out; they are not conſtant, they continue not uniforme long, and when the barrell is about, or the plummets downe, they Hoſea 6.4. ſtay. But howſoever long they will not hold, but vaniſh like the cloud, drie away like the dew of the morning, לאנכין no conſtancie.

And ye ſhall know them again, by the other note גריבת. Which makes the difference, betweene the Creatures, and the Spirit. For the Creatures are produced from without: The Spirit doth emanare, proceed from within. So theſe, they have principium motus ab extra, that that makes them go, is ſomething, ſome engine without; they flow not freely, they come not kindly, as from within לאבריכה no naturall motion, Ingenious but not ingenuous. Ingenuitie and conſtancie, the free proceeding, the conſtant continuing of them, will ſoone diſcloſe, whether they come from a Spirit or no; will ſoone ſhew they come from the art of Hypocriſie, not from the Spirit of true pietie.

2 Whether received the Holy Ghoſt. And theſe will ſerve, to know whether from a Spirit. Now, whether that Spirit be Holy or no. For divers times doth the Apoſtle diſtinguiſh, and ſay: We have not received this ſpirit, but that; as Rom. 8.15. 2 Tim. 1.7. and namely, 1 Cor. 2.12. that we have not received the ſpirit of the world, but the holy ſpirit which is of God. This ſame ſpirit of the world, it is ſacer ſpiritus (for there is no touching it) but not ſanctus. Sacer, as he is called ſacra fames: for, ſancta fames he could never have called it. That ſpirit of the world, be it from policy, or be it from Philoſophie, both are res ſacræ (and ſanctæ alſo may be, as they may be uſed) but of themſelves ſecular they are, and from men: Holy,
Act. 2.2. or from heaven they are not. But this Spirit, this Wind muſt blow from heaven, not from our caves here beneath. And ſo you ſhall ſoone diſcerne it. Do but marke the coaſts, whence and whither it bloweth, the motive and the marke, and you ſhall diſtinguiſh it ſtraight. For if, from a ſecular reaſon; if, to an end beneath; virtus ab imo it may be, virtus ab alto it is not.

For example, I doe forbeare to ſinne: what is my motive? Becauſe (as Micah Luk 24.49. Mica 6.16. ſaith) it is againſt Omnes ſtatutes, ſome penall law; I ſhall incurre ſuch a penaltie, bee lyable to ſuch an Action, if I doe not: It is well; but all this, is but the ſpirit of the world: E prætorio, non ſanctuario, bloweth out of Weſtminſter-Hall, not out of the ſanctuarie.

I goe further, to a better ſpirit; Though there were no penall Law, I forbeare to ſinne, becauſe it is a brutiſh thing, and ſo againſt reaſon: and ignominious, and ſo againſt my credit and reputation. Nay then, further yet; becauſe, I ſhall thereby endanger endanger my ſoule, for that it will barre me of Heaven, or be a meanes to bring me to hell (for the Heathen men tooke notice of both theſe places:) all this while, this is no more, than the ſpirit of the Philoſophie ſchooles will teach: no more than might bee taught in the Schoole of Tyrannus, before Saint Paul ever came in it. It bloweth (this winde) out of Ariſtotles Gallery, not out of the Sanctuary yet: E Lycenio, non ſanctuario. But, if with eye to GOD, I forbeare: becauſe in ſo doing, I ſhall offend Him, and do evill, againſt the rule of his Juſtice, the reverence and Majeſtie of His Preſence, the awfull regard of His Power, the kind reſpect of His Bountie and goodneſſe; This now, commeth from the ſanctuary, this winde bloweth from Heaven; this is right ſanctus indeed. C. Verſ. 9.

This is the Line. Againe, looke to the Levell. If it be Demetrius's end, here in the Chapter, Iſthinc eſt acquiſitio nobis, by this we have our advantage. If it bee theirs, paremus nobis nomen, ſo I ſhall make my name famous upon earth, or any of that levell, it is, but of the world: ſacer ſpiritus, not ſanctus. But, if of our well doing, GOD His will be the center, and His glory the circumference: we do it, not that our will, but His be done; not, our name, but his be hallowed: the act is holy, and the ſpirit is of the ſame kind. Otherwiſe, philoſophicall, politicke, morall it may be: theologicall, religious, holy it is not. Our line and our levell, or inducements or impediments to our doings, marke them, what coaſt they come from, and whether they bend, ye ſhall eaſily conclude; as before, whether recepiſtis ſpiritum; ſo here, whether recepiſtis ſanctum or no. Verſe 25 Gen. 11.9.

2 If we have not received, how to procure it.

And thus we know, whether we have received. But, if we have not, how then? How may wee (by the grace of GOD) ſo diſpoſe our ſelves, as we may receive Him. And now wee are come to the dutie of the day: For this, is the day of His receiving.

The wayes are two: 1 One, that we lay no bars to keep Him from us. 2 The other, that we uſe all good meanes to allure Him to us.

1 The removing impediments

First, that we fall not into S. Stephens challenge, that we * reſiſt not the Holy Ghoſt, and His Comming. And reſiſt Him we do, if we lay any impediments in His way; nay, if we remove them not: As the manner is, as they doe, that draw the Curtaines, or open the Caſements, that would take in breath. * Act. 7. 51.

Of theſe, I finde three of note: quit they muſt bee all, or no receiving Him.

1 Pride.

One, and a chiefe one, is Pride. For the HOLY GHOST will not [a] reſt, but upon the lowly, ſaith Eſay: nor GOD, give grace, but to the humble. (ſaith Salomon.) That we therefore pray to Him, that giveth grace to the humble, to give us the grace to be humble, that ſo we may be meet to receive Him. For, at His firſt comming He came as a Dove, and did [c] light upon Him, that was Himſelfe [d] humble and meeke, like a Dove, and willeth us to learne that leſſon of Him, as that which will make us meet to receive the Dove which He received, whoſe qualities are like His, of a meeke and quiet ſpirit; which howſoever the world reckon of it, is with GOD a thing much ſet by.

a Eſay 57.15.
b Prov. 3.34.
c Mat. 3. 16.
d Mat. 11.29.
1 Pet. 3.4.

In the beginning, the ſpirit moved upon the waters and at Baptiſme, it doth ſo: And our SAVIOUR CHRIST ſpeaking of the graces of the ſpirit, doth it, in termes of water: and water (we know) will ever to the loweſt place. Pride then is a barre, and humilitie a diſpoſing meanes, to the prime receiving of the HOLY GHOST. Ioh. 7.39.

2 Carnally.

Another impediment is Carnalitie. For ſpirituall, and carnall, are flat oppoſite. Quod ſanctum eſt, mundum eſt, ever: No holineſſe without cleanneſſe. So that, the uncleane ſpirit muſt be caſt out, yer the HOLY GHOST received. A cleane box it muſt be, that is to hold this Ointment. The Dove lights on no carrion. Into our Bodies, as a Temple. He is to come: as into a ſtewes, he will not. And that which wee ſaid right now, of water, we here repeat againe. The ſpirit in the beginning moved there, and at Baptiſme came thither againe; and his gifts are as ſtreames of water, and water

1 Ioh. 2. 27.
1 Cor. 6. 19.

(we know) is a cleanſer. To keepe our ſelves cleane, is a meanes; to powre our ſelves out into riot and exceſſe, is a bar, keeps Him far away from us.

3 Malice.

But the third is ex totâ ſubſtantia, againſt the HOLY GHOST: and that is, the ſpirit in us, that (as Saint Iames ſaith) luſteth after envie: after envie; or malice, or whatſoever ſavoureth of the gall of bitterneſſe; in which whoſoever are, S. Peter ſaith plainly, they have no part or fellowſhip, either in giving, or receiving of the HOLY GHOST.

Acts 8.23.

The HOLY GHOST, as, in the body, He expreſſeth by the breath, and in that forme given by CHRIST: ſo in the ſoule, by mutuall and reciprocall love, which is (as it were) the lives-breath of the ſoule. So is His Nature; and ſo is His Signe: the Dove brought an Olive branch, and that is the ſigne of love and amitie: and ſo is His Office, to ſhed abroad love in our hearts: And how can that be received, if malice bee not firſt of all voided out? They are as oppoſite; as S. Lukes fire from heaven, and S. Iames fire from hell: one muſt be quenched, or the other will not burne.

2 The uſing the meanes.

Now theſe being removed, 1 Pride, 2 Luſt, and 3 Malice, and ſo a place made; we are to invite the Spirit, by all good meanes he loveth, and as it were to gather winde as much as we can. To that end to get us to the place, and to viſit it oft, where this aire breatheth: and, that is (as we finde, (Numb. XI. XVI.) The doore of the ſanctuary. If any be ſtirring, if any be to be found, there it is. No place on earth which the Holy Spirit more frequenteth, hath duer commerce with, than the Holy places, where the remembrance of His name is put; for thither He will come to us and bleſſe us, with His bleſſing.

Being there, it is but an eaſie leſſon, yet David thinkes meet to teach it us, by his example; Os meum aperui, & Spiritum attraxi, To open our mouth and draw it in. And that opening is by prayer. Zacharie calleth it Spiritum precum; the ſpirit, that is, the active inſpiration or attraction of it, where we expreſſe our deſire to draw him in. Which very attraction or deſire hath a promiſe, by the mouth of our Saviour Chriſt Himſelf; that His heavenly Father will give the Holy Ghoſt πάντων αὐτὸν to them that will make petition, ſeeke and ſue, open their mouth, and pray for it.

a Rom 8.9
c 1 Peter 1.25

Then ſecondly, looke, how the Breath and the Voice in naturalibus goe together; even ſo doe the ſpirit and the Word in the practice of Religion. The [a] HOLY GHOST is Chriſts ſpirit, and [b] Chriſt is the Word. And of that Word, the Word [c] that is preached to us, is an abſtract. There muſt then needs be a neareneſſe, and alliance, between the one and the other. And indeed (but by our default) The Word and the Spirit (ſaith Eſay) ſhall never faile, or ever part; but one be received, when the other is. We have a plaine example of it this day, in S. Peters auditory (Act. 2.) and another, in Cornelius and his familie (Act. 10.) even in the Sermon time, the Holy Ghoſt fell upon them, and they ſo received Him.

Yea, we may ſee it by this, that, in the hearing of the Word, where He is not received, yet He maketh proffers, and worketh ſomwhat onward. Upon Felix, tooke him with a ſhaking, and further would have gone, but that he put it over to a convenient time, which convenient time never came. And upon Agrippa likewiſe, ſomewhat it did move him, and more it would, but that he was content to be a Chriſtian, ἐν ὀλίγῳ, to take his religion, by a litele (as it were upon a knives-point) and was afraid to be a Chriſtian in multo, too much a Chriſtian.

That wee ſee not this effect, that with the Word the Spirit is not received as it would be, the reaſon is, it is no ſooner gotten, than it is loſt. We ſhould finde this effect, if after we had heard the Word, we could get us a little out of the noiſe about us, and withdraw our ſelves ſome whither, where we might be by our ſelves, That when we have heard Him ſpeake to us, we might heare what He would ſpeake in us. When wee have heard the voice before us, wee might heare the other behinde us, hac eſt via. When, the voice that ſoundeth; the other of Iob, vocem audivi in ſilentio: there, heare Him, reprove, teach, comfort us, within. Upon which Texts are grounded the ſoliloquies, the communing with our owne ſpirits, which are much praiſed by the Ancients, to this purpoſe: for, in meditatione exardeſcit ignis, by a little muſing or mediation, the fire would kindle and be kept alive, which otherwiſe will die. And certain it is, that m any ſparkes kindled, for want of this, go out again ſtraight: for, as faſt as it is written in our hearts, it is wiped out againe: as faſt as the ſeed is ſowne, it is picked up by the fowles again, and ſo our receiving is in vain, the Word and the Spirit are ſevered, which elſe would keep altogether.

Laſtly, as the Word and the Spirit; ſo the Fleſh and the Spirit goe together. Not all fleſh, but this fleſh, the fleſh that was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, this is never without the Holy Ghoſt, by whom it was conceived: ſo that, receive one, and receive both. Ever with this blood there runneth ſtill an artery, with plentie of Spirit in it: which maketh, that we eat there eſcam ſpiritualem, a ſpirituall meat, and that in that Cup, we be made drinke of the Spirit. There is not only impoſitio manuum, but after it, poſitio in manus; putting on of the hands, but puting it into our hands. Impoſitio manuum, putting on of hands, in Accepit panem & calicem: And poſitio in manus, putting it into our hands, in Accipite, edite, bibite. And ſo, we in caſe, to receive body, blood, Spirit and all, if our ſelves be not in fault.

3 The Sacrament.

1 Cor. 10. 3. 12, 13.

Now then if we will invite the ſpirit indeed; and if each of theſe, by it ſelfe in ſeverall, be thus effectuall to procure it; put them all, and binde them all together, Accipite verba; take to you words, Hoſees words, words of earneſt invocation. Suſcipite inſitum verbum, receive or take to you the Word (Saint Iames word) graffed into you, by the Office of Preaching. Accipite corpus, accipite ſanguinem; take the holy myſteries of His body and blood, and the ſame, the holy arteries of His bleſſed Spirit. Take all theſe in one, (the attractive of Prayer; the Word, which is ſpirit and life; the bread of life, and the Cup of Salvation:) and is there not great hope, we ſhall anſwer S. Pauls queſtion, as he would have it anſwered, affirmativè? Have ye received? Yes; we have received him. Yes ſure. Then, if ever; thus, if by any way. For on earth, there is no ſurer way, than to joyne all theſe: and He ſo to be received, if at all.

All together joyntly.

Iames 1. 21.

So, we began with hearing outward, and we end with receiving inward. We began with one Sacrament, Baptiſme; we end with the other, the Euchariſt. We began with that, where we heard of him; and we end with this other, where we may and ſhall (I truſt) receive him. And Almighty God grant, wee ſo may receive Him at this good time; as in His good time, we may be received by Him, thither, whence He this day came of purpoſe to bring us, even to the holy places made without hands, which is His heavenly kingdome, with God the Father who prepared it, and God the Son who purchaſed it for us. A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the XXIII. of May, A.D. MDCXIII.
being WHITSVNDAY.

EPHES. Chap. IV. Ver. XXX.

Nolite contriſtari, &c.

And grieve not (or, be not willing to grieve,) the Holy Spirit of God; by whom ye are ſealed unto the day of Redemption.

His Requeſt, or Counſell, or Caution, or Precept (or what ye will call it) of the Apoſtles is ſure very reaſonable: The Holy Ghoſt, by whom we are ſealed to the day of Redemption, that we would not grieve Him.

Not the HOLY GHOST. He is the Spirit of the Great and High God: And ſo, for His Dignities ſake. Not Him againe, as by whoſe means we have our ſignature againſt the great Day of Redemption: And ſo, even for His benefits ſake. Theſe two, [1] for His Greatneſſe, or [2] for His Goodneſſe; Greatneſſe in Himſelf, Goodneſſe to us: For either of theſe, or for both of theſe, we would be ſo reſpective of Him, as not to grieve Him.

Not to grieve Him. He might well, and (as one would think) ſhould rather have ſaid yeeld him all cauſe of joy and contentment: It had been but reaſon, ſo. Now, that, He doth not move: only this; that we would not miniſter unto Him any cauſe of grievance: And what could He ſay leſſe? To ſuch a Perſon, and for ſuch a Benefit, it is but even a ſmall pleaſure. If not rejoyce him, yet Grieve him not. And it is ſo reaſonable, I ſee not how well it can be denied Him.

Now

Now then as we ſee it is but reaſonable (this Requeſt,) So is it exceeding fit for this time. It is for the Holy Ghoſt: And this is the Holy Ghoſt's Feaſt. It mentioneth His Sealing (for a reaſon:) And this is (as I may call it) His firſt Sealing day: this the day, on which the Spirit of GOD firſt ſet His Seale upon the Fathers of our faith, the bleſſed Apoſtles. On which He then did, and on which He ever will, though not in like manner, yet in like effect (it being His owne day) viſit us from on high, if by ſome grievance or other, we diſappoint Him not, and ſo drive Him away.

So, what eaſier requeſt than this, Nolite contriſtari? And what fitter time to move for the Holy Ghoſt, than upon His own Feaſt, and upon His Sealing-day? And this is the Summe.

The parts fall out evidently two, 1 The Party, for whom this Requeſt is preferred: 2 And a Duty, or (it is not worth making a duty) rather a common ordinary Courteſie to be done Him. 1. The Partie, The Holy Spirit of GOD, by whom we are ſealed to the Day of Redemption. 2. The Duty (or what ye will call it) Nolite contriſtari. The Diviſion.

In the Party, two Motives there be: 1 His Perſon, and 2 His Benefit. 1. His Perſon in theſe: The Holy Spirit of GOD. 2. His Benefit in theſe: By whom ye are ſealed to the Day of Redemption. His Perſon ſet forth in the originall, with very great energie: ſuch, as our tongue is not able to expreſſe it fully enough. For it is not Πνεῦμα ἅγιον Θεοῦ, but with greater emphaſis; but three words, and three Articles, every word his ſeverall Article by it ſelfe, τὸ πνεῦμα, τὸ ἅγιον, τοῦ Θεοῦ. The Spirit, not a Spirit; and not Holy, but The Holy; nor of GOD, Θεοῦ; but of ὁ Θεός, The GOD, that is, the onely, living and true GOD. All, The's; never an A among them. I. 1

Then, His Bounty or Benefit vouchſafed us: By whom, we have our ſealing to the Day of Redemption. Wherein, theſe foure points come to be weighed: 1. Of Redemption. Firſt, What and how it is. 2. Then, that it hath a Day; the Day of our Redemption. 3. That, againſt that Day, we are to be Sealed. 4. That, the Holy Ghoſt keepeth that Seale and His office, it is to paſſe it to us. This is the Benefit. 2

Now, either of theſe is a Motive of it ſelfe. 1 His Perſon: Grieve not the Holy Spirit of GOD, and there ſtay: for, that, of it ſelfe, is reaſon enough: 2 Or, leave out His Perſon, ſet that by, and ſay, but even, Him, Who ſeales unto you, ſo great a favour, as to ſave you, at the great Day: Him (be He what He will, GOD or Man, Spirit or fleſh, holy or common) grieve Him not. This is reaſon enough too: Grieve Him not, for His own: If not for His own, yet not, for His Seales ſake.

The Duty followeth. To this Perſon great, and of great bounty beſide (to ſpeak as Naaman's Servants did to Him) Si rem grandem dixiſſet Apoſtolus; if the Apoſtle had enjoyned us ſome great peece of ſervice, we ought not to have thought much of it. How much more then, when he ſaith, but this, Do not grieve Him (and there is all?) which is no poſitive, or actuall peece of ſervice, of paines, or of perill; onely a privative, of diſ-ſervice (as they call it) which is ever as little as can be required: Non contriſtari. II.

Non contriſtari: or at leaſt, Nolite contriſtari; for, there be two degrees: 1. That we doe it not. 2. That willingly we do it not. That we have a will not to doe it. Which reading, offers more grace. For, much depends upon our willingneſſe or not willingneſſe to it. 1 2

In both which, we have 1 firſt to weigh, whether we can grieve Him, or He be grieved: (that ſo we may underſtand the phraſe, and take it right.) 2 Then, how it is, we do it, and what thoſe grievances be; that ſo, we may take notice of them, and be carefull to avoid them.

3 Laſt of all, the fitting it to the Time and ſhewing it ſeaſonable. For, by occaſion of the Perſon, His Feaſt; and by occaſion of the day of Redemption, the Day of Sealing alſo will fall in; and the intended action, with it. Which (as we ſhall ſhew) is it ſelfe a kinde of Signature. Do it not; This time, do it not: It is His owne 3

Feaſt, now; It is His Sealing-Day, this; Now then, Nolite contriſtari. Thus lie the Parts. Of which, that what ſhall be ſpoken, &c.

I. Grieve not.

TWo ſorts of perſons there be, that (if we be well adviſed) we would beloth to grieve: [1] Great Perſons; [2] and ſuch as carry the reputation of being Good. Not Great, in regard of their power: They may do us a diſpleaſure: The motive of feare. Not good, in regard of their bounty: Others are, and we may be, the better for them: the motive of hope. If He be Great; though He Seale us nothing, no wiſdome, to offend Him. If He be to ſeale us a favour (though otherwiſe He be not great) for His favours ſake favour Him ſo much, as grieve Him not. Either of theſe availeable; but where they meet, there is vis unita. Specially, if we add, In quo vos; that our parts be in it; and Signati eſtis, that either He already hath, or is ready to do it for us: The motive of love, and of the greateſt love, the love of our ſelves. Then it comes home indeed. Theſe three meet all in this Partie. 1. He is τὸ πνεῦμα τὸ ἅγιον τοῦ θεοῦ. 2. Sigillum habet. 3. In quo vos.

1 Not the Spirit of GOD.

I begin with Quantus, how great. He is the Spirit of GOD. And were it but the Spirit of man, our own Spirit; Sins of the greater ſize, would be forborne, as for other diverſe, ſo even for this reaſon, that they be gravamina ſpiritus, grievances againſt our own ſpirit; which, every one feeles, whoſe conſcience is not ſeared. And if the Apoſtle had ſaid, Eſchew them, for that they breed ſingultum & ſcrupulum cordis, the up-braiding or yexing of the heart (as [a] Abigail excellently termeth it,) or (as [b] Solomon) vulnus ſpiritus, the wound, or gall of the Spirit; or (as [c] Eſay) compunctionem, the prick or ſting of conſcience; or (as our [d] Saviour Himſelfe) a worme, which once bred, never dies, nor, never leaves gnawing: he had ſaid enough. But this, even the Heathen could have ſaid too.

b Prov. 18. 14.
c Eſay 29. 10.
d Mar. 9. 44.

The Apoſtle doth like an Apoſtle; tels us truly, there is a greater matter longs to it than ſo. There is a farre higher Spirit than ours, than any in man (our Spirit is nothing to it) the Spirit of GOD: they be grievances againſt it.

The Spirit of GOD.
b Eſay 48. 16.

To ſpeak then of the Spirit of GOD: [a] GOD is a Spirit; and GOD hath a Spirit. Hath many, created, in His power, and at His command: but hath one, one above all, uncreated, intimum ſubſtantiæ, of His owne ſubſtance: Knowne ever, by the article τὸ, (as S. Baſil obſerveth) the Spirit, the ſoveraigne Spirit: Styled ever, with this addition, His own Spirit; the Spirit not of any Saint, in concreto, or in abſtracto, but even of GOD Himſelfe.

Iohn 3. 8.

Our Saviour CHRIST teacheth us, to take notice of Him, as we do of the Wind; By His effect. For the wind: it is a body of ayre, but ſo thin and ſubtile, as it is next neighbour to a Spirit. We ſee foule rule here in the world ſometimes, houſes blowne downe, trees blown up by the roots. When we ſee this, we know ſtraight, this cannot be done without ſome power. And that power (we are ſure) cannot ſubſiſt of it ſelfe (it is an accident:) muſt (needs) have his inherence in ſome ſubſtance. That ſubſtance, if it be viſible, we call it a body: if inviſible, a Spirit. So our Saviour tels us, Spiritus eſt qui ſpirat. It is the Wind did this, blew all theſe down.

And even ſo, of the Spirit of GOD, when (as upon this day) they that could ſcarce ſpeak one tongue well; on a ſudden, were able perfectly to ſpeak to every Nation under heaven, every one in his own tongue: this (we know) could not come to paſſe but by ſome power. And ſure we are, that power muſt have for His Subject, ſome ſubſtance: And not any viſible or bodily; Then, ſome ſpirit it muſt be: And no ſpirit in the world could effect this: And ſo, the Spirit of GOD.

But the relation of theſe tongues depends upon S. Lukes credit. There was after, a more ſtrange and famous operation, which in all Stories we finde. The Temples of Idols Idols blown down all the world over: yea the world it ſelf blown quite about, turned up-ſide down (as it were) from Paganiſme, and the worſhip of Heathen gods to the truth of Chriſtian Religion. And that, maugre the ſpirit of the World, which bluſtred, and bent it ſelfe againſt it, totis viribus. This we finde: And for certaine, this work and this power could not come from any other ſpirit, but the Spirit of GOD only. Thus we take notice of Him by His effects: and of His Greatneſſe, by the greatneſſe of His effects.

The Spirit of GOD; and the Holy Spirit: what needs this? To make Him great (as the world goes) what needed Holy? Or, if a title muſt be added, to that end, there were other ſtyles many, in the eye of fleſh, more magnificent and likely to ſhew Him for Great, than this of Holineſſe. The Spirit of Principality, of Courage, Power, Government; diverſe other. And all theſe, are from Him too; He the fountaine of all. So the Apoſtle tels, 1 Cor. 12. And, though the Spirit be all theſe; yet choice is made of none of all theſe, but only of this one [Holy] from among them all, τὸ ἅγιον. And His title is not The High and Mighty: nor, The Great and Glorious: but only, the Holy Spirit. Nor, do the Seraphins and Powers of Heaven cry, Magnus, or Celſus, or Fortis, thrice; but Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus; Holy and thrice Holy, to GOD Himſelfe: making choice (I doubt not) of His Soveraigne Attribute, to laud and magnifie His glorious Name by. Which teacheth us a leſſon (if we would learn it:) That, it is the Attribute in GOD, which of all other, He doth; and which of all other, we ſhould moſt eſteem of. And by vertue of this (if we kept right) Places, and Times, and Perſons, and things ſacred ſhould be in regard accordingly. For this we may be ſure of: were there in GOD's titles, a title of higher account; the Spirit of GOD ſhould have been ſtyled by it. But in GOD, Holy, Holy, is before Lord of Hoſts: His Holineſſe, firſt; His Power, after.

Eſay 6. 3.

Thus, have we two reaſons de non gravando: [1] Firſt, were He but the Holy Spirit, for that, He would be ſpared. For, without all queſtion, He is the more to be ſet by, by reaſon of that Attribute: It is GOD's chief, as ye may ſee, in the High Prieſts forehead; as ye may heare, out of the Angels mouths.

[2] Then againe, that He is GOD's; and not a Spirit, but The Spirit of GOD; we will forbeare Him ſomwhat (I truſt) for His ſake, whoſe He is. Put theſe two together.

And to theſe two for a ſurpluſage joyne that, He is not only Dei, but Deus; Of God, but God alſo: and then, we have our full weight for this part, for His Greatneſſe.

And this we ſhewed, laſt Feaſt. Weare baptized into Him: We believe in Him: We yeeld Him equall glorifying: We bleſſe by Him (or, in His Name) no leſſe than of the other two: So, in the Deity, He is. And a Perſon He is: For, to Seale (which He is ſaid here to doe;) to ſeale, is ever an act perſonall. Thither then, I now come, even from His Greatneſſe to His Goodneſſe.

3 The Holy Spirit of God.

2

The Holy Spirit of God, by whom ſealed.

For He is not great, as the Great CHAN: but, He is Good withall. And great, and good withall, that carries it ever: If, In quo vos come to it, that this goodneſſe reach to us.

And ſure, this Party (His Greatneſſe ſet apart) is, to us, the Authour of many a benefit. No perſon of the three hath ſo many, ſo diverſe denominations as He; And they be all, to ſhew the manifold diverſity of the gifts, He beſtoweth on us. They count them. 1. [a] His מרחפת or agitation, which maketh the vegetable power in the world. 2. His [b] נפש היה Spirit or ſoule of life, in the living Creatures. 3. His [c] נשמת חיים heavenly Spirit of a double life, in mankinde. 4. Then, that in [d] Bezaleel, that gave him excellency of art. 5. That in [e] the LXX. Elders, that gave them excellency of wiſdome to govern. 6. That in [f] Balaam and the Sybils, that gave them the Word of Prophecie, to foretell things contingent. 7. That of the [g] Apoſtles (this day) that gave them skill, to ſpeak all tongues. All theſe are from Him. All theſe he might, but doth not reckon up any of them. And that, becauſe, though they be from the Holy Spirit of GOD, yet not from Him, as Holy; but, as the Spirit of GOD only, without eye or reference to this Attribute [Holy] at all.

But

But from the holy Spirit (or the Spirit, as He is Holy) commeth the gratum faciens, the gift of gifts, the gift of grace, which He beſtoweth on His Saints and ſervants, and maketh them ſuch, by it. We waive all the former, all the gratis data, and take our ſelves onely to this. And here againe, there come in upon us as many more. 1. The grace [a] reproving and checking them within (when they are ready to go aſtray) Spiritus reſtans, the wind againſt them, [b] not ſuffering them to goe into Aſia or Myſia (when they ſhall do no good there) but making them even wind-bound as it were. 2. Spiritus afflans, the wind with them, [c] guiding them, and giving them a good paſſe into all truth. 3. The grace [d] teaching them what they knew not, and calling to their minds, that they did know, and have forgot. (And ſo, Spiritus difflans, blowing away and ſcattering, as it were, the miſts of errour and forgetfulneſſe.) 4. The grace [e] quickning them and ſtirring them up, when they grow dull, and even becalmed. 5. The grace inſpiring, and [f] inditing their requeſts, when they knew not what, or how to pray. 6. The Spirit breathing, and [g] ſhedding abroad His love in their hearts: which makes them [h] goe bound in the ſpirit, and (as it were) with full ſaile to Ieruſalem (when it is for His ſervice.) 7. And laſt, the Spirit [i] ſealing them an aſſurance, of their eſtates to come: which is the moſt ſoveraigne of all the ſeven; as that, which doth ſanctifie (that is) ſever and ſet us apart, from the reſt of the world, and proprios dicare, make us His own peculiar.

i 1 Cor.1.22.

Now, this Beneſit we finde (here) woven and twiſted with another: For, two are mentioned, [1] redeeming, and [2] ſealing. We muſt look to ſuum cuique. Both, are not the HOLY GHOST'S: One belongs to CHRIST. His, the Office to redeem, and that day (the day of Redemption) His. The other, to the Holy Ghoſt. The ſeale is His; and His, the day of ſealing. We are to paſſe both theſe Offices. To be redeemed, queſtionleſſe: But, take this withall; it is not enough, that (to be redeemed) if by this ſeale alſo, it be not paſſed to us.

Of theſe then briefly. 1. Redemption there is. 2. That, hath a day. 3. Againſt that day, we to be ſealed. 4. The Holy Ghoſt hath that ſeale: He is to do it; that Office is His.

CHRIST'S is firſt: we muſt then goe a little from the Holy Ghoſt: we will come to Him againe, ſtraight.

1 Redemption.

Oft we have heard; in Redemption, there is emption (a buying) and Re (that is) backe: a buying back of that, which formerly hath been loſt, or made away.

It is of two ſorts: [1] Reall, and [2] Perſonall. Redemption reall, of our eſtates, lands, or goods: Redemption perſonall, of our owne ſelves, ſoules and bodies. This, in the text, ſeemeth to be perſonall: In quo vos, by whom you; you your ſelves: there is not mention of any poſſeſſions. And ever, of the twaine, this is the greater. You know, who ſaid skin for skin, all that a man hath, to redeem himſelfe. But indeed, upon the matter; this redemption, is of both. For, CHRIST'S redemption, is not of one half; but, a totall entire redemption both of Perſons and Eſtates.

Now, mens perſons come to need redeeming, by Captivity: And in that caſe, there muſt be a ranſome. Mens eſtates, come to need it, upon a ſale out-right: and in that, there needs a new Purchaſe.

We were gone both wayes. Both are in the 7. to the Rom. at the 23. Verſe, There is a law in our members leading us captive: when, either we are taken, and carried away by ſtrong hand, with a tentation: or over-raught by the ſleights of the enemy. At the 14. verſe: there is a ſale, Carnall and ſold under ſin: when, for ſome conſideration, as we think (but many times, ſcarce valuable) we make away our eſtates, by our own voluntary act.

CHRIST redeemes us from both. His Ranſome ye ſhall find, 1 Tim. 2. 6. Ἀντίλυτρον. And His Purchaſe, Chap. 1. 14. Redemptionem περιποιήσεως; that is of Purchaſe, plaine. His purſe went not for either, but His Perſon. His death, as the High Prieſts, freed us from captivity, His bloud, as the bloud of the Covenant was the price, that cleared our eſtate, from all former bargaines and ſales.

This

This Redemption hath a Day. But by this reckoning, that Day ſhould be paſt. The Day of His Paſsion, was the Day of that payment, and that is paſt: How can we be ſealed againſt it, then? But (if yee marke it well) Lightly, there are more dayes, than one, goe to a full Redemption: Two, at leaſt: And, till the ſecond come, the Redemption is not complete. 2 The Day of Redemption.

In the Reall: there is one day of [1] paying the money; another, of [2] putting in poſſeſsion, ever. That (lightly) is not the ſame day; but ſomtimes, a good while after.

In the Perſonall: [1] One day, when concerning a Priſoner, a condemned man, it is graciouſly ſaid by His Majeſty, he ſhall not die. [2] Another, when this is put under Seale, and brought to the priſon, for his releaſe: And poſſibly, a good diſtance, between theſe.

I know, all is counted as good as done, when the money is paid, or the word ſpoken: But, the Priſoner lyeth by it ſtill; and the poſſeſſion is out of our hands, till the ſecond day commeth: So, that is the Day of Redemption conſummate.

And even ſo, ſtands it with us. The Ranſome was paid downe; the ſentence reverſed, the day of His Paſsion. The putting us in poſſeſſion, the perfect ſetting us free; that hath another day, not yet come. For, out of poſſeſſion we are as yet; and, in a kinde of priſon, we are ſtill. The firſt day, the pay-day, is paſt; we hold a memory of it, of all dayes, on Good friday. But Himſelfe tels us, of another day after that (the day of His ſecond appearing) and, when that comes, then He bids us lift up our heads and look up cheerfully; for then our Redemption drawes nigh, is even hard at hand; (that is) our full, perfect, plenary Redemption, indeed. And till that come, for all the firſt fruits of the Spirit, We groane ſtill, as ſubject to vanity and corruption (our priſon-irons, as it were) and all the creatures together with us, do the like. Thus farre Redemption, and the Day of it: And thus farre CHRISTS Office. Luke 21. 28. Rom. 8. 22, 23.

Now betweene theſe two Redemption-dayes (the firſt and the ſecond) commeth in the Seale. And, againſt that ſecond day come (which is in truth, the very Day of full redemption) it will ſtand us in hand, to provide, we be ſealed, and have this mark of ſeparation. It is exceeding materiall. No claime of redemption without it. In vaine ſhall we ſay, we are redeemed; unleſſe, we then have this ſeale to ſhew. Therefore, not to reſt upon Redemption with a blank, or the conceit of that: but know, there is a further matter ſtill (even obſignati eſtis) and look to that. For, when that Day comes, all will go by it. In very deed (upon the point) the Day it ſelfe goes by it: for, if ſealed, then a Day of Redemption: If otherwiſe, then no Day of Redemption, but a Day of utter deſolation. 3 Ye are ſealed againſt that day.

Ye have a type of this, in the Old Teſtament (Ezek. 9.) Six fellowes came forth with axes, to make havock and deſtroy. There goes one before, and makes a Tau in the fore-heads of ſome certaine perſons: they, and none but they, ſpared: the reſt, hewed in peeces every mothers ſonne. Ezek. 9. 4.

The like again, in the New Teſtament (Apoc. 7.) the foure Angels hold the foure winds, ready to deſtroy the earth. But firſt goeth one with a ſeale; and a proclamation there is, to make ſtay, till we have ſealed ſome: and (that done) as for the reſt, deſtroy them and ſpare not. As much to ſay: theſe with the ſeale, are they, to whom the redemption ſhall be applied, and for whom onely, it is availeable. Paſſe over theſe: theſe are mine, I ſee my ſeale upon them. The reſt, neſcio eos; I find not my mark, I know them not. Do with them, what ye will. Revel. 7. 2.

And (becauſe I ſpake of paſsing over) in the Paſſe-over, it was ſo; both acts, there. The Lambe ſlaine, there is Redemption: the poſts ſtroken with Hyſſope dipped in the bloud, there is the ſignature. Anſwerable to theſe two, with us; Redemption by the SONNE of GOD at Eaſter: and the ſealing by the HOLY GHOST at Whitſuntide. Exod. 12. 6, 7.

But, further yet: theſe with the ſeale, not onely ſave them, deſtroy them not: but, but, let them alſo enter into my reſt, my glory, my joy. I did not onely ranſome their perſons; but, I redeemed alſo their eſtates: purchaſed an eſtate of bliſſe, for them, and in their names. This was prepared by the FATHER, redeemed by the SONNE, and now, the conveighance of it ſealed by the HOLY GHOST: Let them poſſeſſe it.

Heb 4.11. Matth. 25.21. Matth. 25.34.

And by this, ye ſee, how great matters both perſonall and reall, depend upon this Seale: how much it importeth us, not to miſſe it. What reckoning we now make of it, how light, it skils not: The day will come, if we had the whole world to give, we would to be found with Seale upon us.

4 By whom ye are ſealed.

This ſeale (which makes up all, and without which nothing is authenticall) is in the diſpenſing and diſpoſing of the Holy Ghoſt. We are therefore of neceſſitie to paſſe His Office alſo: that ſo, all the Trinity may co-operate, and every Perſon have a hand, in the work of our Salvation. Remember, I have told you heretofore, that CHRIST, without the Holy Ghoſt, is as a Deed, without a ſeale; as a Teſtator, without an Executor. It is ſo: For all he hath done; Redemption, or no redemption goeth by this ſeale: all, that CHRIST hath wrought for us; by that, the Holy Spirit doth work in us. And the Apoſtle, as he ſaith here, He the party, by whom ye are ſealed, to the day of redemption: So he might have added, and without whom, ye are left blanck, for the day of deſtruction. For, by and from Him we have it: and by and from any other, we have it not.

And, if it be not to be had, from any other: We may well think it excludeth our ſelves, and our own ſpirit. There were (I wot well) in the heathen, and may be in the Chriſtian, other good morall vertues: But, they will not ſerve, to ſeale us againſt the day, here ſpecified. One may have them all, and be never the nearer, at the day of redemption. That, which is, then, to ſtand us in ſtead (let us not deceive our ſelves) we ſpin it not out of our ſelves, as the Spider doth her web: It is of the nature of an aſpiration, or of an Impreſſion. It is from without; as breathing, and, as ſealing is. And it is the breath of this Spirit (the Spirit of GOD:) and the print of His ſeale, muſt do this. From without, it commeth, from the Spirit of GOD, not our own ſpirit. That we phanſie not, we may have it, ſome other way, from our own ſelves. It is He, that hath made us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Father: It is He, that hath redeemed us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Sonne: and, it is He that hath ſealed us, and not we our ſelves, GOD the Holy Ghoſt: That the whole glory may redound to the bleſſed Trinity, and he, that rejoyceth, may rejoyce in the LORD.

Then to end this point. 1. There is a day in comming. 2. A day of redemption to ſome it is; and may prove ſo, to us. 3. To us it may, if we be found ſealed. 4. Found ſealed we cannot be, but by the Holy Ghoſt's means, we muſt be beholden to Him: He keeps the ſeale: He ſets it to. 5. To Him we ſhall be beholden, and He will ſet it to, if we grieve Him not. Why then, this brings us directly to the duty, Nolite contriſtari, Grieve Him not.

II. The duty. I Grieve not.

This Party, whoſe favour may thus much ſtead us; and that, againſt a time we ſhall ſo much ſtand in need of it; what can we ſay, or doe worthy of Him? We (no doubt) will riſe ſtraight in our magnificall lofty ſtyle, and ſay, What? Why, work Him all poſſible joy and jubilee; and all too little. Sure, it were ſo to be wiſhed. But heare you, Interim, I would (ſaith the Apoſtle) we would but do thus much for Him, as not grieve Him. Even as, in another place touching GOD's Name; we in our riſing veine would ſay, GOD's Name. What, but glorifie it, make it famous, renowned every where? Ye ſay well, ſaith He; In the meane time, I would His Name might not be evill ſpoken of by your meanes, Let your lætificat, and glorificat alone, and but even Nolite contriſtari. The Apoſtle pleads but for that; that will content Him: And I would, He might not faile of that, till the other come.

1 Tim. 6.1.

And

And that (I truſt) He ſhall not faile of, Non contriſtari. We will never ſtand with Him for this. It is but a ſmall matter, this; but even rationabile obſequium, a requeſt of great modeſty; rather a courteſie, than a duty, Not to grieve. Rom.12.1.

Not to grieve? Why reaſon would (ſaith Salomon) we ſhould not grieve any of our neighbours, ſeeing they dwell by us, and do us no hurt. But (as I ſaid) not the great, if there be any wiſdome: nor the good, if there be either grace, or good nature in us. 1 Not any man. Prov.3.29.

Well, howſoever we deale with men, here (high or low, good or otherwiſe) in any wiſe take heed of offering it, to GOD. Why (ſaith Eſay) Is it not enough for you to grieve men, but will ye grieve my GOD alſo? Provoke we Him (ſaith the Apoſtle) Are we ſtronger than He? As if he ſhould ſay, that were extreme folly. 2 Not GOD. Eſay 7.13.

But yet one ſtep further: I ſay, and CHRIST ſaith as much: If God, yet not the Holy Spirit of GOD though; not that Perſon. Sins and grievances againſt the other two, may and ſhall; ſin againſt Him, ſhall never be forgiven. Grieve not Him then, at any hand. 3 Not the Spirit of GOD. Matth.12.32.

But I ask: Can we grieve the Spirit of God, that is, God? Can He be grieved? Indeed, they be two Queſtions: 1 Can we? and 2 can He? I ſhould anſwer ſomewhat ſtrangely (but truly) to ſay, we can, and He cannot. For we may (on our parts) grieve; (that is) do what in us lieth, to grieve Him. And with Him, the endeavour, is all; and to do what we can, habetur pro facto, though the effect follow not. This, we can: So badly demeane our ſelves; as, if it were poſſible by any means in the world, that griefe could be made to fall into the divine Eſſence (let Him look to it) we would do that, ſhould provoke it in Him; that, ſhould even draw it from Him. Let Him thank the high ſuper-eminent perfection of His nature, that is not capable of it: If it were, or any way could be, we would put Him to it. 1 Whether we can grieve.

Now, I finde in the Goſpell (from our SAVIOURS own mouth) he that looketh on a woman with luſt after her, hath (on his part) committed adultery with her: (the woman in the meane while, remaining chaſt, as never once thinking of any ſuch matter.) Then, if the one party may be an Adulterer, and the other (as I may ſay) not adultered: why not, in like ſort, one grieve, and yet the other not grieved? Alwayes, this uſe we may make of it, ad exaggerandam peccati malitiam, to aggravate ſome ſins, and ſhew the heinouſneſſe of ſome ſinners, that do (on their part) all they can, to do it; and that is all one, as if they did it. This is * Tertullian. Mat.5.28. * Contra Marcion. l.2.

But, GOD forbid, it ſhould lie in the power of fleſh, to work any griefe in God: or, that we ſhould once admit this conceipt, the Deitie to be ſubject to this, or the like perturbations, that we be. And yet, both this paſſion of grief, and diverſe other (as, anger, repentance, jealouſie) we read them aſcribed to God in Scripture: And, as aſcribed in one place, ſo denied as flatly in another. One where it is ſaid, It repented God, He had made Saul King: In the ſame place by and by after, The ſtrength of Iſrael is not as man, that He can repent. One, where GOD was touched with griefe of heart: Another, There is with Him the fulneſſe of all joy for ever; which excludeth all griefe quite. How to underſtand this phraſe. 1 Sam.15.11. Gen.6.6. Pſal.16.11.

How is it then? How are we to underſtand this? Thus: That when they are denied; that is to ſet out unto us, the perfect ſteddineſſe of the Nature divine, no wayes obnoxious to theſe our imperfections. And that is the true ſound Divinity.

But, when they are aſcribed, it is for no other end, but even humanum dicere, for our infirmity, to ſpeak to us our own language, and in our own termes; ſo to worke with us the better. Lightly, men do nothing ſo ſeriouſly, as when they do it in paſſion: Nor indeed, any thing throughly at all, or (as we ſay) home, unleſſe it be edged with ſome kind of affection. Conſequently, ſuch is our dull capacity, we never ſufficiently take impreſſion, God will do this, or that to purpoſe; except He be ſo repreſented unto us, as we uſe our ſelves to be, when we go through with a matter. In puniſhing, we pay not home, unleſſe we be angry: When GOD then is to puniſh, He is preſented unto us, as angry, to note to us, He will proceed as effectually, as if He Rom.6.19.

were ſo indeed. We are not carefull enough (we think) of that we love, unleſſe there be with our love, ſome mixture of jealouſie: When GOD then, would ſhew, how chary He is of the entireneſſe of our love towards Him; He is ſaid, to be a jealous GOD. We alter not what once we have ſet down, but when we repent: When GOD then, changeth his courſe formerly held, he is made, as if He did repent (though, ſo to doe, were ever His purpoſe.) And ſo here: we withdraw not our ſelves, from whom we have converſed with before, but upon ſome grievance: When the Spirit of GOD then, withdraweth Himſelfe for a time, and leaves us, He is brought in as grieved. For that if it were otherwiſe delivered, it would not ſo affect us, nor make in us the impreſſion, that this way it doth. So that, Grieve Him not, that is (in direct termes) Give Him not cauſe to do that, which in griefe men uſe to doe, to withdraw Himſelfe, and to forſake you. If ye do, believe this; He will as certainely give you over, as if He were grieved in earneſt. This is from Saint Auguſtine.

How to have uſe of this phraſe.

By this time, we know how to conceive of this phraſe aright. Now, how to have uſe of it. And of this humanum dicit, this uſe we may have. Firſt, upon theſe places, where we thus finde affections attributed to God, Our rule is ever, to reflect the ſame affection upon our ſelves, which is put upon Him; to be jealous over our ſelves, to be angry, or grieved with our ſelves, for that, which is ſaid to anger, or to grieve GOD. And that, upon this Soliloquie with our ſelves, That, how light ſoever we ſeem to make of ſin, yet in that, it is ſaid, thus to grieve GOD's Holy Spirit, it muſt needs be ſome grievous matter certainly. And yet (me thinks) it toucheth not the Spirit of GOD though: He ſhall loſe nothing by it. He needs not to grieve at it. Of the twaine, it ſhould rather ſeem to concern us, we may come ſhort of our Redemption, by the means; and (a worſe matter than that) be caſt into eternall perdition. The loſſe is like to be ours. And is this ſaid to grieve the Holy Spirit of GOD, and ſhall it not grieve us, whom it more neerly concerneth? Shall we be ſaid to grieve Him with it, and not our ſelves be grieved for it. This, or ſome, to like effect.

2 Then, it teacheth us (this phraſe) withall, what in this caſe we are to do, when it happeneth. Sure, even that, which we would do, to one grieved by us (whom we make ſpeciall account of, and would be right loth to loſe his favour:) never to leave, but to ſeek, by all means, to recover him; by ſhewing our ſelves ſorry, and grieved, for grieving of him; by vowing, never to do the like more; by undertaking any thing, that may win him againe. The onely way to remedie it, is, to take us to the ſame affection: As here, that it grieve us to doe any thing, may turne Him to griefe, or, if we have done it, never ceaſe to be grieved with our ſelves, till we have recovered Him; His favour, and His grace againe.

a How we doe grieve Him.

And grieve not.

Now then, were it not well, to take notice of theſe grievances, that we might avoid, not offer them: and ſo fulfill the Apoſtles, Nolite Contriſtari? Divers there be. But one of them, we cannot but take notice of (This verſe is ſo hemmed in with it, on both ſides.) Our verſe begins with [And] which couples it, to the former. And the very ſame that is in the former, is repeated over againe, in the next after. And this it is: To ſet a ſeale upon our lips, from foule language, bitterneſſe, curſing, ſwearing without any ſenſe at all. That theſe, come not out of our mouthes. That we leave theſe in any caſe; and then, followes our verſe, And grieve not the Holy Spirit: as if He pointed us to theſe, and ſaid, Theſe are ſuch, whereby we grieve the Spirit of God, and all good men, that heare them. (And that is one ſpeciall way to grieve the Spirit, to grieve good men, in whom it is.) His very comming (this day) in ſhape of tongues, ſheweth, He would have the print of His ſeale upon that part, upon the tongue: and His fire from heaven, breath; not this fire from hell, thus ſparkle from it. S. Iames makes ſhort work: If any would be holden for religious, and refraine not his tongue from theſe, that mans religion is (to be priſed) as, little worth. This, from [And] the firſt word, the Copulative to the bordering verſe, which I could not avoid.

Iames 3. 6. Iames 1. 26.

But I chooſe rather to hold my ſelfe to the point of ſealing, within the Text; and the grievances againſt it: which I reduce to theſe two: 1 Either, Before when we are not yet ſealed, but are to be; when He offers to doe it: 1 Or, After, when we are already paſt his hand, and his ſeale upon us. There are grievances, both wayes. How in the act of Sealing.

Firſt, the Spirit of God doth come, and offer to ſeale us: our part were to invite Him to come if He did not; but if He come, to be glad of it; but in any wiſe, to bee willing, withall. Otherwiſe, Ipſum nolle, contriſtari eſt. For if we be not willing, but refuſe and ſhift Him off ſtill, is it not juſtum gravamen? But, even as there were, that, when Chriſt ſet His foot on land, and offered to come to them, intreated Him, Hee would be gone againe: So when the Holy Ghoſt makes the like proffer, He hath his Gergeſites too, that can ſpare Him and His ſeale both. Men are (I know not how) even loth and (as it were) afraid; think it a diſgrace to them, many (and, that would be called men of ſpirit) that any ſeale or marke of holineſſe, ſhould bee ſet, or ſeene upon them. Content with a Label, without any ſeale to it, all their life long. And of thoſe Label-Chriſtians, we have meetly good ſtore. As the ſpirit of God, they like Him well enough to have their breath, and life, and moving from Him: yea, arts and tongues too, if He will: But, as the Holy Spirit, not once to be acquainted with Him. And what is this plaine, but their ſpeech, Cauſe the holy one to ceaſe from us? But yet I doe not ſay [not at all:] For, if He will come and ſeale them, ſome quarter of an houre before they die; for that, they will not ſtand with him. But they deſire to weare the Signature of the fleſh, or of the world, of pride, or of luſt, as long as they are able to ſtand on their legs. Animales, all their life: and ſpiritum habentes, at the houre of their death. Clinici Chriſtiani, beddered Chriſtians (as the Primitive Church calleth them) when the fleſh leaves them, let the ſpirit take them and ſeale them: Then the ſeale (and ye will;) but, not before. But, this is an indignitie, and cannot be well taken. He will not endure, thus to be trifled with and ſhifted off, when He would: and if, then He ſeales us not; when we would, we have our mends in our owne hands.

1 Before it. I

Mat. 8. 34.

Iud. 19.

But ſecondly, ſay we be willing He come: Is it not our part againſt He comes, to diſpoſe our ſelves, and be readie wrought, to receive the figure of His ſeale? Then, if either He finde us ſo indurate, in malice and deſire of revenge, or ſinnes of that ſort; that, as good offer him a flint to ſeale, which will take no print: Or, on the other ſide, finde us ſo diſſolved (as it were) and even molten in the ſins of the fleſh, that, as good offer Him a diſh of water to Seale, that will hold no figure: Both come to one: 1 Not to ſuffer Him, to doe it; and 2 not to be in caſe, to receive it: 1 Not diſpoſed to it; Or, 2 indiſpoſed for it. And can he chooſe, but reckon this as a ſecond gravamen, and goe His way, and leave us as He found us?

After it. I

Theſe two, before we be: Two more, when we be ſealed. For, when we have well and orderly received it; then doth it behoove us, carefully to keepe the ſignature from defacing or bruiſing: If we doe not, but carry it ſo looſely, as if we cared not what became of it; and, where we are ſignati to be cloſe and faſt, ſuffer every trifling occaſion to break us up; have our ſouls lie ſo open, as, all manner of thoughts may paſſe and repaſſe through them: Is not this a third? When one ſhall ſee a poore Countrey-man, how ſollicitous he is, if it be but a bond of no great value, to keepe the ſeale faire and whole: But if it be of higher nature, as a Patent, then to have his box, and leaves and wooll, and all care uſed, it take not the leaſt hurt: And on the other ſide, on our parts, how light reckoning wee make of the Holy Ghoſts ſeale; vouchſafe it not that care, doe not ſo much, for it, as he, for his Bond of five Nobles, the matter being of ſuch conſequence: This contempt, muſt it not amount to a grievance? Yes, and that to a grave gravamen, a grievous one. For this is even Margaritas porcis right.

But yet further: If having received this ſeale upon us, we ſo far forget our ſelves as we be brought, to let His æmulus, the fiend, the evill ſpirit (whom Hee can by no meanes endure) even to Super-ſigillare, ſet his marke over it, ſeale upon ſeale; put his print, with his image and Superſcription, above and upon the Holy Ghosts: This is ſo foule a diſgrace, as He can never brooke it. And ſhall we once conceive, but, upon ſo bad uſage as this, He will do, what men grieved uſe to do, ſay preſently, migremus hinc, away, here is no place to ſtay, and ſo leave us, with our new image upon us.

And if ſo, a worſe matter, than all yet. For, He no ſooner gone, but in His place another will come, and, as he hath ſealed us, ſo ſeaze on us: and, not alone neither, but company with Him, Seven more worſe than Himſelfe, and the end of that man, worſe than His beginning, a thouſand-fold. Theſe they be then, theſe foure: Not to offer theſe, is Non contriſtari.

2 Nolite contriſtari.

But then, if our hap be ſo evill, as we do; yet that we remember, Nolite, do it not willingly: Have a will, not to do it. If we fall into any of the former foure, [1] neglect to receive Him, when He commeth: [2] diſpoſe not our ſelves, as we ſhould, againſt He commeth: Happen to [3] bruiſe, or marre our ſeale: Yea [4] admit a ſealing upon it (of the world upon GOD, the fleſh upon the Spirit, prophane upon Holy:) yet let not our will be to it: At leaſt, not our whole will; not our full conſents. Let it but happen per accidens (as we ſay) either ſurpriſed with the violence, or wearied with the importunity of the tentation; or circumvented with the ſleights of the Serpent: but ever carry voluntatem (if it may be;) or els (as in the Schools they call it) velleitatem de non contriſtando. A great matter depends on this: For, wilfully to do it, that is indeed, to grieve; if it be not more, even to work deſpite to the Spirit of Grace.

Heb. 10. 29.

Application to the time.

Now, to draw to an end. This requeſt never comes ſo fit, as on this Day. For there is in the Text, a day of redeeming; and there is by like analogie, a Day of ſealing. As that, CHRIST'S: ſo this, the Holy Ghoſts Day. Now, if the ſealing-day be the Holy Ghoſts; then, reciprocè, the Holy Ghoſts Day, that is the Day of ſealing. And this is the Holy Ghoſts Day. And not onely, for that originally ſo it was; but for that it is to be intended, ever, He will doe His owne chiefe worke, upon His own chief Feaſt; and opus Dei, the dayes work, upon the Day it ſelf. So that, now we are come about, to our firſt grievance, Not to refuſe Him: not at any time; but not, at His own time; not then, when He ſits in His office, and offers to ſet His ſeale on us.

Application to the Sacraments.

And, that, He now doth. For, when we turne our ſelves every way, we finde not (in the Office of the Church) what this Seale ſhould be, but the Sacrament; or what the print of it, but the grace there received, a means to make us, and a pledge, or earneſt to aſſure us, that we are His.

2 Cor. 5.5.

The outward ſeale ſhould be a thing viſible, to be ſhewed: And the Sacrament is the only viſible part of Religion, and nothing ſubject to that ſenſe, but it. This I find, that the Schoole-men, when they numbred ſeven, thoſe ſeven were the ſeven ſeales: So, for ſeales, they have been ever reputed. But what doubt we? One of them, is by the Apoſtle named a ſeale, in expreſſe termes: The ſeale of righteouſneſſe. And, if one, then the other: Both are of like nature. Onely this difference betweene them (for which we have great cauſe, highly to magnifie the goodneſſe of GOD:) That, where the one ſeale, (the ſeale of Baptiſme) can be ſet to but once, and never repeated more; this other ſhould ſupply the defect thereof, as whereby, if we have not preſerved the former figure entire and whole, we might be (as it were) new ſigned over againe. And that, not once alone, and no more; but, that it ſhould be iterable: whereby it commeth to paſſe, that of this ſealing, there be many dayes; many dayes, to ſeale us well, and make us ſure againſt that one Day, the Day of Redemption. GOD therein providing for our frailneſſe. As indeed, without it, a great many of us, I know not how we ſhould have done.

Rom. 4.12.

A ſeale of Redemption.

This then, is the ſeale. I add further, that it may be rightly called, the ſeale of our Redemption, as whereby the means of our Redemption is applied unto us: the Body and the Bloud, one broken, the other ſhed, of Him, whom GOD ſealed to that end, even to redeeme us.

Iohn 6.27.

The print of this ſeale.

And by, and with theſe, there is grace imparted to us; which grace is the very breath of this Holy Spirit, the true and expreſſe Character of His ſeale, to the renewing in us, the the image of GOD, whereunto we are created. And with grace, which ſerveth properly (pro tota ſubſtantia) to and for the whole ſubſtance of the ſoul, the two ſtreams of it, one into the underſtanding part, the other into the ſeat of the affections. Into the underſtanding part, the aſſurance of faith and hope: Into the part affective, the renewing of charity, the oſtenſive part of this ſeale, In quo cognoſcent omnes, by which all men may know, and ſine quo cognoſcet nemo, without it no man, that we are ſealed aright, and are truly His. This grace we are thus to receive there: Onely, that we [a] receive it not in vaine: [b] be not wanting to it, after: [c] neglect it not: [d] Quench it not: [e] fall not from it: but [f] ſtand faſt, and continue in it: Be carefull to [g] ſtirre it up: Yea, [h] to grow and increaſe in it, more and more, even to the conſummation of it, which is glory. Glory, being nothing elſe, but grace conſummate: the figure of this ſtamp, in His full perfection.

Reſolve then, not to ſend Him away (on His own Day) and nothing done; but, to receive His Seale, and to diſpoſe our ſelves, as pliable and fit to receive it. And, that ſhall we but evill do, nay not at all, unleſſe it pleaſe Him, to take us in hand, and to work us ready for it. To pray Him then, ſo to do, to give us hearts of wax, that will receive this impreſſion: And, having received it, to give us carefull minds withall, well to look to it, that it take as little harm, as our infirmity will permit. That ſo, we may keep our ſelves, from this unkind ſin, of grieving Him, that hath been and is ſo good to us. Which, the GOD of mercy grant us, for His Sonne, and by His Spirit, to whom, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREEN-WICH,

On the XII. of June, A.D. MDCXIV.
being WHITSVNDAY.

PSAL. LXVIII. Ver. XVIII.

Aſcendiſti in altum, &c.

Thou art gone up on high; Thou haſt led captivity captive, and received gifts for men: yea, even * the rebellious haſt Thou led, that the LORD GOD might dwell * there.

* O, for thine enemies.
* Or, among them.

THIS is CHRIST (the Prophet here ſpeaketh to.) That He it is, the Apoſtle is our warrant (*Eph.*4.8.) There, he applies it to CHRIST: Thou art gone up (ſaith the Prophet here) in the ſecond perſon: He is gone up (ſaith the Apoſtle there, of Him) in the third.

To CHRIST then: And to CHRIST gone up, or aſcended: and therefore aſcended, they be the laſt words of this Verſe, that GOD, might dwell among us. Which cannot be applied to CHRIST Himſelfe in perſon; for then, He was not to go up on high, from us: but to ſtay here ſtill below with us. Therefore, GOD here, is GOD the HOLY GHOST: who this day, came downe, after CHRIST was gone up, to be not only among us, but even in us, (ſaith our Saviour:) To be in us and abide with us for ever. So, the Text begins, with the aſcending of CHRIST: and ends, with the deſcending of the Holy Ghoſt. And, that was upon upon this day: And ſo, we are come, to CHRISTS hodiè impleta eſt, This day is this Scripture fulfilled; the beſt application of every Text. Luke. 4. 21.

Our bookes tell us, the Scripture will beare foure ſenſes: All foure be in this; and a kinde of aſcent there is in them. The Summe.

First, after the letter, and in due conſequence to the word immediately next before this (the laſt word of the Verſe) which is, Sinai. It is a report of Moſes's aſcending thither. For, he, from the bottome of the red Sea, went up to the top of Sinai, leading with him the people of Iſrael, that long had beene captive to Pharao: and there received gifts, the Law, the Prieſthood (but above all) the Ark of the Covenant, to be the pledge of GODS preſence among them. This is the Literall. 1

This of Moſes, by analogie, doth King David apply to himſelfe. To his going up to Mount Sion, and carrying the Arke up thither. For all agree, this Pſalme was ſet, upon that occaſion. The very beginning of it [Let God ariſe, &c.] ſheweth as much: The acclamation ever to be uſed, at the Arkes removing, as is plaine by Numb. 10. verſ. 35. Now, this was done immediately upon His conqueſt of the Iebuſites: whom a little before he had taken Captives, and made tributaries there. What time alſo, for honour of the ſolemnitie, dona dedit, he dealt bread and wine, to all the people, gift-wiſe (as wee finde 1 Chron. 15.) This is the Analogicall: as Moſes to Sinai, ſo David, to Sion. 2 Sam. 6. 2 Sam. 5. 2 Sam. 6. 19. 1 Chron. 16. 3

From theſe two, we ariſe to the Morall ſenſe: thus. That, as whenſoever GODS people are carried captive, and made thrall to their enemies; as then, GOD ſeemeth to be put downe and lie foiled for a time, that one may well ſay, Exurgat Deus to Him: So, when He takes their cauſe in hand, and workes their deliverance, it may well be ſaid, Aſcendit in altum, He is gone up (as it were) to His high thron, or judgement-ſeat, there to give ſentence for them. Ever, the Churches depreſſing is (as it were) GODS owne humiliation; and their deliverance (after a ſort) His exaltation. For, then He hath the upper hand. And this is the Morall. 3

Now from this we aſcend to the Propheticall ſenſe, to the teſtimony of Ieſus which is the Spirit of all Prophecy. For, if in any Captivity (as of Egypt, of Babylon) GOD be ſaid to bee downe: And, in any ſtrange deliverance (ſuch as thoſe were) to be got up on high: in this of Chriſt, of all other, it is moſt pregnantly verified. That, the higheſt up-going; higher than Sion, or Sinai farre: That, the moſt gracious Triumph, that ever was. When the Principalities and powers, that had carried, not Iſrael, but mankind, all mankind into Captivitie; they as Captives, were led before His Chariot: attended, as it is in the next verſe before, with twenty thouſands of Angels. What time alſo, the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt were ſhed forth plenteouſly upon men; which was, this very day: and God, not by a wooden Ark, but by His owne ſpirit came to dwell among them. 4 Revel. 19. 10. Verſ. 17.

And, in this ſenſe, the true Propheticall meaning of it, doth the Apoſtle deliver it to us, and we, to you. That, GOD, which ever and at all times, doth then, and at that time did moſt ſpecially ſhew the valour of His victorie, and the bountie of His triumph, when He went up on high, &c.

To put that in other order, which is it ſelf, well ordered already, were but to confound it. The order, as it ſtands, is very exact. 1 Chriſts aſcending, firſt: Then, the Manner: 3 And laſt, the end of it. 1 The Aſcending, in theſe: Thou art gone up, &c. 2 The Manner, is triumph-wiſe; and that two wayes: 1 Leading His Captives before Him: 2 Scattering His gifts about Him: 3 And then thirdly, all to the end, that GOD, by His ſpirit (the true Arke of His preſence indeed) might reſt with us for ever. Or, you may (if you pleaſe) of theſe foure, make two moities: and give the two former, to Chriſts aſcending; the two latter, to the Holy Ghoſts deſcending, in dona dedit hominibus; the peculiar of this Day. The Diviſion. I II III

Christs Aſcending: The motion.
Act. 1.9.

THou art gone up, a Motion: and, on high, a Place. Chriſt, in His aſcendent going up; Chriſt, on high, is a good ſight. A better ſight to ſee Him ſo, tanquam aquila in nubibus, than tanquam vermis in pulvere; an Eagle in the cloudes, than a worme in the duſt, as a great while we did. To ſee a cloud to receive him, than a graveſtone to cover Him. Better, leading Captivitie, than Himſelfe led Captive: Better, receiving gifts for men, than receiving wrong from them. Yet, it is ſtrange, S. Paul (Eph. 4.) commenting upon this verſe (whereto we ſhall often have recourſe;) as we are looking at His going up on high, puls us back and tels us of His being here downe below: In that He aſcended, what is it (ſaith He) but that he deſcended firſt? A note, out of ſeaſon, one would thinke. But, he beſt knew, what was proper and pertinent; and that is, that Chriſts going up, it aſcenſus poſt deſcenſum.

1 From whence.

And this, as it is for His glory: (For, when one hath beene downe, then to get up, is twice to get up) Far more, for His glory, than if He never had been down. And, the lower He hath beene downe, the more glorious is His getting up. Bis vincit qui victus vincit; being overcome, to overcome, is twice to overcome: For ſo, he overcomes his overcommers, (and that is a double victorie) As, for His glory; ſo, for our good. For, His being above, before He was below, is nothing to us: But being below firſt, and then, that He went up, that is it we hold by. As the Son of God he came downe: As the ſon of man, he went up. If, as the ſon of man; there is hope, that the ſons of men may doe the like.

But, alwayes remember, there muſt be a deſcent before. Aſcendit Angelus, & factus eſt diabolus: Why? He never deſcended firſt, and therefore is now in the bottome of hell. But, He that firſt deſcended, and aſcended after, is now in the top of heaven. To teach us, this high top muſt have a deepe roote. He that is thus high now, was once low enough. We to be as he was, before we be as he is. Deſcending, by humilitie; condeſcending, by charity. For, he that ſo deſcended with Him, he it is, and none other, that ſhall aſcend up after Him. This is Saint Paul, upon Aſcendiſti, His Motion.

2 The place whither, On high.
2 King. 2.16.

Now, will you heare him upon in altum, on high, the pitch of his motion? On high, is ſomewhat a doubtfull terme: if it be but to ſome high mountaine (as they thought of Elias) it is on high, that. How high then? The Apoſtle takes the true altitude for us. Neither, to Sion, nor to Sinai, ſet one upon the other, and Pelion upon Oſſa too; it is higher yet. So high (ſaith S. Luke) till a cloud came and tooke him out of their ſight. And what became of Him then? That, the Apoſtle ſupplies: He came ὑπεράνω: ὑπὲρ above, ἄνω aloft: ὑπὲρ ὑπερῶν, ὑπὲρ πάντων τῶν ὑπερῶν, above all the heavens, even the very higheſt of them.

Luk. 19.
Epheſ. 4.10

Keeping juſt correſpondence betweene his high, and his low. That, was ad ima terra, to the loweſt parts of the earth, than which none lower, none beneath them. This was ad ſumma Cœli, the higheſt top of the heavens, than which none higher, none above them.

So, Exurgat Deus, the firſt verſe is not enough: that was but from the lower parts of the earth, to the upper parts of it. Aſcendat in altum, Let him goe up on high; ſet up thy ſelfe O Lord above the heavens; there is His right place. And ſo now, He is where He ſhould be. This for in altum.

But, we muſt not ſtand taking altitudes: This is but the gaze of the Aſcenſion. The Angels blamed the Apoſtles; that blame will fall upon us, if we make but a gaze of it. What is there in it, hominibus, for us men?

Acts 1.11

Firſt, is He gone up on high? We may be ſure then, all is done and diſpatched here below. He would not hence re infectâ, till His errand were done, He came for.

All

All is diſpatched: for looke to the Text: He went not up till the battell fought, and the victorie gotten. For the next point is, Captivitie is led captive. So, no more for Him here to doe: Conſummatum eſt. And after it was conſummatum eſt for us, no reaſon but it ſhould be conſummatus ſum with Him alſo. Ioh 19.30. Luk.13 32.

But though all be done here, all is not there; there above, whither He is gone. There is ſomewhat ſtill to bee done for us. Wee have our cauſe there to bee handled, and to be handled againſt a falſe and ſlanderous adverſary (ſo Iob found him.) By meanes of His being there on high, habemus Advocatum, (ſaith Saint Iohn) we have an Advocate, will ſee it take no harme. And what were ſuch an one worth in place where. 2 Iob 1. 10. 1.5. 1 Ioh. 2. 1.

But as our caſe is (for the moſt part) we rather ſtand in need of a good High-Prieſt, to make interceſſion; than of a readie Advocate, to put in a plea for us. And He is there likewiſe to that end: on high within the ſancta ſanctorum, as a faithfull High-Prieſt, for ever to appeare, and to make an attonement with God for our tranſgreſſions. Thus, there, all is well. 3 Heb. 2 17.

But how ſhall we doe here, if He be gon up on high from us? Not a whit worſe: Aſcenſor cæli, auxiliator (ſaith Moſes, Deut. 33. 26.) By being there, He is the better able to helpe us: to helpe us againſt our enemies. For, in that He is on high, He hath the vantage of the high ground; and ſo able to annoy them, to ſtrike them downe, and lay them flat (S. Paul found it:) yea, to raine down fire and brimſtone, ſtorme and tempeſt upon them. Acts. 9. 4. Pſal. 11. 6.

To help us againſt our wants. Wants, both temporall; (for, from on high, he can ſend downe a gracious raine upon his inheritance to refreſh it:) and ſpirituall; for from on high He did ſend down the gifts and the graces of the ſpirit, the dona dedit of this Feaſt, and of this Text, both. Look to the Text. He is ſo gone up, that our enemies are His captives: we ſhall not need to feare, they can goe no further than their chaine. And, though He be gone, dona dedit, He is ready to ſupply us, upon our need, with all gifts requiſite. We ſhall not need to want: for, no good thing will he withhold from them, that have, Aſcenſiones in corde, that have their hearts upon Him and upon His aſcenſion: that lift up their hearts to Him there. 1 Verſe 9. Pſal. 84. 5.

There is yet one, and I keepe that (for it ſhall be the laſt.) In that He is aſcended into heaven, Heaven is to be aſcended to: By the new and living way, that is prepared through the veile of His fleſh, a paſſage there lieth thither. They talke of diſcoveries, and much adoe is made of a new paſſage found out to this or that place: what ſay you to this diſcoverie in altum, this paſſage into the land of the living? Sure, it paſſes all. And this diſcovery is here: and upon this diſcoverie, there is begun a commerce, or trade of entercourſe, betweene heaven and us. The commodities whereof, are theſe gifts: (we ſhall after deale with them) And a kind of agencie: Chriſt being there, for us; and the ſpirit here, for God; either Agent for other. It is the happieſt newes, this, that ever came to mankind. For, hominibus, for mankinde it is, He is gone up: for, that is to be repeated to all three, and every of them ἀναβαινῶ 1 He is gone up on high, for men; 2 Led captivity captive, for men, 2 as well, as received gifts for men. 6 Heb. 10. 20. Pſal. 27. 22.

His going up then, is not all for Himſelfe; ſome part (and that no ſmall) for us. For, thither He is gone, ut præcurſor noſter (Heb. 6.) as our fore-runner or harbenger, Pandens iter ante nos (ſaith the Prophet Mica) To make way before us. To prepare a place, and to hold poſſeſſion of it in our names (ſaith He Himſelfe.) Till (ſay the Angels) as He was ſeene to goe up, ſo ſhall he likewiſe be to come downe againe. Once more to deſcend (it is His laſt:) and upon it, His laſt aſcending into His high Tribunall-ſeate; there, as our favourable Iudge, to give us the Ite benedicti, the immediate warrant for our aſcenſions. And ſo He ſhall take our perſons thither, where He now is in our perſons, that where he is, we may be there alſo. And thus much, for His going up on high. Heb. 6 20. Mica 2. 13. Acts. 1. 11. Mat. 25. 23.

II

Now, the Manner, how He went. Aſcendit Dominus in jubilo, ſaith the XLVII. Pſalme, a proper and peculiar Pſalme for this day. For, this is the fiftieth day, and and fifty is the number of the Iubilee: we muſt looke for a Iubilee ever at Pentecoſt. He went up in Iubilo. Now, to a Iubilee, there goe two acts: 1 The releaſing of Priſoners, one. 2 And the new giving or granting eſtates gratis (dona dedit) the other. And both are here.

In triumph. He went up in triumph, as a Romane victor up to the Capitol; as David, after his conqueſt, up to Sion: ſo He, to the Capitol in Heaven, to the Sion that is above, the high and holy places made without hands. Now, two actus triumphales there were: 1 One, Captives led bound before the Chariot: 2 The other, caſting abroad of new coine, or (as they called them) miſſilia, among the multitude. And theſe two are in this. This the manner of his going up, like the Iewes Iubilee, like the Heathens triumph. 1 Firſt then, of His valour in his victorie, leading his Captivitie, 2 Then, of His bountie in his triumph; diſperſing his gifts.

I Leading captivity captive. Of the firſt. Here is a Captivitie led in Triumph. A triumph is not but after a victory: nor a victory, but upon a battell: and (ever) a battell preſuppoſeth hoſtility; and that, ſome quarrell, whereupon it grew. His Aſcenſion is His triumph; His Reſurrection His victory; His death His battell; His quarrell is about hominibus, about us men, for another captivitie of ours, that had hapned before this.

I aske then, what was this Captivitie here? Of whom? when taken? when led? (For, taken it muſt be, before it can be led in triumph.) Some interpret it by Satan; ſay, it was by him, and the power of darkneſſe. Some other, that it was Adam and all his progenie: and ſo, we are in it too. And both ſay well: they and we were taken together. For, when they were taken Captives, we that then were in their hand and power, as captives to them, were taken together with them. So both were taken; and by CHRIST, both: but not both alike. Both were taken, but not both led. They were taken, and led: we are taken and let goe. And not let goe barely, but rewarded with gifts, as it is in the Verſe. Both theſe are within the compaſſe of this Pſalme.

Col. 2. 15. To begin with this of the Verſe: we find it more particularly ſet down, Col. 2. There, of the Principalities and powers of Hell, it is ſaid, Chriſt ſpoiled them, made a ſhew of them, triumphed over them in His owne perſon.

1 Cor. 15. 54. With theſe He had battell at His death, and then He ſeemed to loſe the field. But, up again He got at His Reſurrection: and then got the day, carried the victorie cleare. For lo, as with a trumpet, the Apoſtle ſoundeth the victory, Abſorpta mors eſt in victoriâ, death is ſwallowed up in victorie.

But what was the quarrell? That, began about us, hominibus: (In every branch, we muſt take in that word.) for no other quarrell had He, but that theſe, whom Hee leades away captive here, had led us captive away before.

Pſal. 138. 8. Eſay 64. 8. 1 Cor. 6. 20. 1 Pet. 1. 15. 19 And the quarrell was juſt: for, we were His: twice His. 1 His once, by creation, the worke of His hands. 2 His againe now, by redemption, the price of His blood. He had no reaſon to loſe that, was His quite. It ſtood not with His honour, to ſee them carried away without all recoverie.

Gen. 3. 6. Rom. 7. 25. 1 Pet. 2. 11. 1 Pet. 2. 19. But how came we captives? Looke to Gen. 3. There ye finde Lex membrorum, (as S. Paul calleth it;) fleſhſly luſts (as S. Peter;) a garriſon that lieth in us, even in our loines, and fight againſt our ſoules. They ſurpriſed Adam (and, of whom one is overcome, his captive he is.) So was he led away captive, and in him all mankinde. The effect whereof we ſee, at CHRISTS comming. The ſpirit of errour had (in a manner) ſealed on all the world. And, if Errour had taken his thouſand, ſinne had his ten thouſand (we may be ſure:) And this was the firſt captivitie, under the power of Satan. For, ſinne and errour are but leaders under him; take to his uſe: and ſo all mankinde held captive of him at his pleaſure. And, O the thraldome and miſery, the poore ſoule is in, that is thus held and hurried under the ſervitude of ſinne and Satan! The Heathens piſtrinum, the Turkie gallies are nothing to it. If any have felt it, Pſal. 126. 4. he can underſtand me, and from the deepe of his heart will crie, Turne our captivitie O Lord.

Will

Will ye then ſee this Captivitie turned away, and thoſe, that tooke us, taken themſelves? Looke to His reſurrection, Agnus occiſus eſt, is true; like a lamb He died; but that was, reſpect had to His Father. To him, he was a Lamb in all meekneſſe, to ſatisfie his juſtice, and to pay him the ranſome for us, and for our enlargement, whoſe priſoners juſtly we were. That paid, and juſtice ſatisfied, the hand-writing of the Law that was againſt us, was delivered him, and he cancelled it. Then had he good right to us. But death, and he that had the power of death, the divell, for all that, would not let him goe, but detained him ſtill wrongfully. With them, the Lamb would do no good: So, he tooke the Lion. Died a Lamb, but roſe a Lion, and tooke on like a Lion indeed; broke up the gates of death, and made the gates of braſſe flie in ſunder: trod on the Serpents head and all to bruiſed it, came upon him, tooke from him his armour wherein he truſted, and divided his ſpoiles. (So it is in the Goſpell: So, in this Pſalme.) Till He had right, He had no might; was a lambe. But, he had no ſooner right, but he made his might appeare; was a Lion: Et vicit Leo de tribu Iuda. His right was ſeene in His death; his might, in his Reſurrection.

Revel. 5. 12. Col. 2. 14. Heb. 2. 14. Luk. 11. 22. Revel. 5. 5.

Ye ſee them taken: Now, will ye ſee them led. Of this victorie, this (here) is the triumph. And, if ye will ſee it more at large, ye may, in the Prophet Hoſee 13. and out of him, in the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15.) death led captive without His ſting: Hell led, as one that had loſt the victorie: The ſtrength of ſinne, (the Law) rent, and faſtened to His croſſe, enſigne-wiſe: The Serpents head bruiſed borne before him in triumph, as was Goliahs head by David returning from the victorie. And, this was his triumph.

Hoſee 13. 1 Cor. 15. 55. 56.

So then, upon the matter, here is a double captivitie, a firſt and a ſecond. 1. A firſt, and in it captivans, they; and captivata, we. 2. A ſecond, and in it captivans, he; and captivata, they. They tooke us, and he tooke them. And this is the Iubilee; that he, that was overcome, did overcome; and they that had overcome, were overcome themſelves. That captivans is become captivata, and captivata, is brought out of Captivitie and ſet at libertie. For, the leading of this Captivitie, was the turning away of ours.

The five Kings, (Gen. XIV.) tooke Sodome, and carried Lot away priſoner: Comes me Abraham upon them, takes the five Kings, and Lot in their hands: So Lot, and they (both) became Abrahams captives. The Amalekites (1 Samuel XXX.) tooke Ziklag, Davids towne, his wives, children, and all his people. David makes after them, takes Amalek, and with them, his owne flocke too: and ſo became maſter of both. So did the Sonne of Abraham, and the Sonne of David, in this captivity, here.

For all the world, as an Engliſh ſhip takes a Turkiſh Gallie, wherein are held many Chriſtian captives at the oare. Both are taken, Turkes, and Chriſtians; both become priſoners to the Engliſh ſhip. The poore ſoules in the gally, when they ſee, the Engliſh ſhip hath got the upper hand, are glad (I dare ſay) ſo to be taken: they know, it will turne to their good, and in the end to their letting go. So was it with us, we were the children of this captivitie. They, to whom we were captives, were taken captive themſelves, and we with them. So, both came into Chriſts hands: They and we, his priſoners both. But with a great difference. For, they are carried in triumph, to their confuſion (as we ſee) and after condemned to perpetuall priſon and torments. And we, by this new captivitie, rid of our old, and reſtored to the libertie of the ſons of God. So that, in very deed, this captivitie fell out to prove our felicitie: we had beene quite undone, utterly periſhed, if we had not had the good hap, thus to become Chriſts priſoners.

Rom. 8. 21.

It is not good (ſimply) to be taken captive: but thus, it is. For, felix captivitas capi in bonum: He is taken in a good houre, that is taken for ſo great a good. A happy captivitie then, may we ſay: indeed, ſo happy, as no man can be happy, if he be not thus taken priſoner by Chriſt. It is the only way to injoy true libertie. And this, for this great captivitie here led.

Other inferior captivities there be, in this life, and thoſe not lightly to be regarded neither:

neither. But, this of Mankind is the maine: the reſt, all derived from this, and but pledges of it. We have lived to ſee, that Aſcenſor Cœli, was Auxiliator noſter, and Ductor Captivitatis noſtræ, even this way.

In LXXXVIII. the invincible Navie had ſwallowed us up quicke, and made full accompt to have led us all into captivitie. We ſaw them led, like a ſort of poore captives round about this Iſle, ſunck and caſt away, the moſt part of them, and the reſt ſent home againe with ſhame. Eight yeares ſince, they that had vowed the ruine of us all; and, if that had beene, the thraldome of this whole land: they were led captives in the literall ſenſe, (we ſaw them) and brought to a wretched end before our eyes. So, He, that here did; ſtill can, and ſtill doth lead captivitie captive for the good of His. Take theſe as remembrances here below; but look up beyond theſe to our great captivam duxiſti here: And make this uſe of both, that we, both theſe waies, being delivered, out of the hands of our enemies, and from the ſlaverie of Satan, might ſerve him, whoſe ſervice is perfect freedome, in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe before him, all the daies of our life.

Luk. 1. 74. 75.

And this for the firſt point of Aſcendit in Iubilo, (a principall part whereof was the releaſing of captives.) And ſo much for the triumph of His victorie: Now for the bountie of His Triumph. In that, His valour; valour in leading captivitie: in this, His magnificence, magnificence in diſtributing gifts.

Scattering His gifts.

Accepit dona. All this while there hath beene nothing but going up: Here now, there is ſomething comming downe, even Love with his handfull of gifts, to beſtow them on us: which is the ſecond part; even His largeſſe or bountie, as it were the running of the Conduits with Wine, or the caſting abroad of His new coine, among the lookers on, on this, the great and laſt day of the Feaſt, the concluſion or ſhutting up of His Triumph. This is the day of dona dedit in kinde, and dona dedit, the high honour of this Feaſt. Alwayes the height of His place, the glory of His triumph, makes Him not forget us, we ſee by this. He ſends theſe for a token, that He is ſtill mindfull of us.

Accepit, Dedit.
* Epeſ. 4. 8.

Foure points there be in it. 1 Received, firſt: 2 Then, gifts: 3 Thirdly, for men: 4 And laſt, an enlargement of this laſt word men; for ſuch men, as of all men, ſeemed leaſt likely to get any of them, Even for His enemies.

Received. The Prophet here ſaith, Dona accepit; the Apoſtle he ſaith, * dona dedit; and both true: Accepit & dedit; for, accepit ut daret: He did give; what Hee received: for, He received to give. So, what He received with one hand, he gave with the other. For, He received not for Himſelfe, but for others; Not, to keep, but, to part with them againe. And part with them he did, witneſſe this day, the day of the giving.

Received, from whom? Whoſoever the party was, He received them from, he ſeemes to ſtand well affected to us. It is the Father. And wee ſee, he ſaid true of him, I goe up to my Father, and to your Father; that is, yours as well as mine. Which appeareth, in his Fatherly goodneſſe, ready to part with them to us. Yet, not immediately to us; but, by him, to us: that, ſeeing by whoſe hands they come, wee might know, know and acknowledge both, for whoſe ſake, both he giveth, and we receive them. We, of him: he, of his Father; but, for us, and for our uſe.

2 Dona.

Received gifts. Alas poore captives! Never thinke of any: Tantùm libera nos is all, they ſay. Free us only, and we deſire no more. This one gift is enough, will richly content them, even the gift of liberty, we even now ſpeake of. Enough for them; but, not enough, for him, The Scripture offereth greater grace. He will let them goe, but not let them goe away emptie: ſend them away rewarded, and not with one gift, but plurally, dona; with many. So many, as in the next next verſe, he ſaith, they be even laden with them. And, not give them againe their former eſtate freely (the Iubilee of the Law;) but, a farre better than that was, even in Heaven, which is farre beyond the Lawes, and is indeed the Iubilee of the Goſpell.

To ſpeake of theſe gifts in particular, one houre-glaſſe will not ſerve, they bee ſo many. To recapitulate Dona in Dono, all in one: It is the gift of gifts, the Gift of the Holy Ghoſt, the proper Gift or Miſsile of this day. O ſi ſcires Donum Dei (ſaith our Saviour of it) if wee but knew this Gift! And God grant, wee may know it (that is) that wee may receive it; for then we ſhall, but otherwiſe we ſhall never know it: For, Nemo ſcit niſi qui acceperit; but he that receiveth it, no man knoweth it. Ioh. 4. 10. Rev. 2. 17.

But, God it is, this Gift. The Text is direct: This giving is, to the end, God may dwell with us. That cannot be, if He that is given, were not God. So then, Man Hee carried up to Heaven: God Hee ſent downe to Earth: Our fleſh is there, with God; His Spirit, here, with us. Felix captivitas, we ſaid before; Felix cambium, may we now ſay: A happie captivitie, that; a bleſſed exchange for us, this.

This is but one: it is expreſſed plurally; Dona, many: There be many in it. It is, as the Arke of the Covenant: the Arke was not emptie, no more is this. The two Tables, that teach the heart; the hidden Manna, that feedeth the ſoule; the Cenſer, that perfumeth all our prayers; the Rod, which makes us doe (as it ſelfe did) of withered and dead, to revive and flouriſh againe. Great varietie of gifts there are in it, and all are feathers of the Dove mentioned in the Pſalme (Ver. 14.) either the ſilver feathers of her wing; or the golden of her neck; For, all are from her. They are reduced all to two: 1 The gifts (1 Cor. 12.) 2 The Fruits (Gal. 5.) The gifts known by the terme gratis data: the fruits pertaining to gratum faciens. But the gratum faciens being to every man for himſelfe: the gratis data, for the benefit of the Church in common. Theſe latter are ever reckoned the proper, and moſt principall dona dedit of this day. And indeed, they are all in all. For, by them are the Siens planted, on which the other (the fruits) doe grow. 1 Cor. 12. 4. Gal. 5. 22.

And ſo it is. For, what were the true and proper gifts this day ſent downe, were they not a few tongues? And thoſe tongues had heads, and thoſe heads belonged to men, and thoſe men were the Apoſtles. Upon the point, theſe gifts, in the end, will fall out to prove men: The gift ever leading us to the Office, and the office to the Perſons, by whom it is borne. Acts 2. 3.

In the place (Epheſ. 4.) where the Apoſtle comments upon this verſe, and upon this word gifts: aske him, what the gifts be? He will tell us, Ipſe dedit quoſdam Apoſtolos, He gave ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts: Theſe were of the gifts. Theſe three now are gone, their date is out. But, in the ſame period, He puts Paſtors and Doctors too; and them we have ſtill, and they are all the remains, that are now left, of the dona dedit of this day. A point, I wiſh to be well thought on: that, for theſe gifts, this Feaſt is holden; that for theſe, we keepe this high Holy-day. Epheſ. 4.

What, and are theſe ſuch goodly gifts? Yea, the Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, we grant: For, we love to build Sepulchers, as well as the Phariſees: They muſt be dead, yer we eſteeme them. O if we had lived in the Apoſtles dayes, we would have made other gates account of them, that we would. We know, how our Fathers then did; wee would even have done the ſame. For thoſe, wee have left, it is daily heard and ſeene, how poore a rate wee ſet on them. This we finde: The Apoſtles themſelves, were faine to magnifie their owne Apoſtleſhip, and to ſay: Well they hoped, the day would come, when their peoples faith were as it ſhould be, that they alſo ſhould be eſteemed according to their meaſure; that is, better than they were. So that, they were undervalued. I will not ſay the ſame of theſe, which are all, that are now left of this dona dedit: that of theſe Holy-day gifts, there is but a working-day accompt. Yet, theſe are they, that daily doe reſcue men and women laden with ſinnes, 2 Cor. 10. 14.

and ſo captives to Satan, from Satans captivitie, and take them priſoners to Chriſt. Theſe they, by whoſe meanes and miniſterie, are wrought in us thoſe impreſſions of grace, which we call the fruits of the Spirit, the price whereof is above all worldly gifts whatſoever. And, if God dwell amongſt us, theſe be they, by whoſe doctrine and exhortation we are edified, (that is) framed and reared up, a meet building for Him.

Acts 20.28 Truly, if we did but ſeriouſly thinke of Ipſe dedit, who gave; of Spiritus Sanctus poſuit, who placed them; Nay, if but of the Feaſt it ſelfe we hold; it would be better than it is, if not for theirs, for the very Feaſts ſake. For, why keepe we it? For theſe dona dedit, plaine. And how prize we them? I liſt not tell, how meanely. This I ſay then: Either eſteeme them otherwiſe, or what doe we keeping it? Put downe the Feaſt, wipe the day of Pentecoſt out of the Kalendar, keepe it no more hardly. Never keep ſo high a feaſt, for ſo low a matter. But, if we will keepe it, make better reckoning of Dona dedit hominibus, than hitherto we have, or preſently we do.

3 Hominibus. Now, the parties for whom all theſe: Hominibus. Aſcendit, duxit, dedit, all for hominibus, for men. For men, He aſcended up on high; For men, He led captivitie; For men, He received theſe gifts. They, the ciſterne into which all theſe three ſtreames doe flow. As God, of God, He received them; that, as Man, to Man, He might deale them. I will tell you S. Pauls note upon this word (and indeed, it is the only cauſe, for which He there bringeth in this verſe:) The number, that it is, hominibus, not homini. To men, among them: To every one, ſome; Not to any one, all. For, no one man is hominibus; and hominibus it is, He deales them to. None, ſo compleat, but he wants ſome: none ſo bare left, that he wants all. A note (if well digeſted) which would cauſe this faſtidious diſdaine to ceaſe, we have one of another. The ſpoiles are divided to them of the houſhold (Verſ. 12.) come not all to one mans hand: They bee Heb. 2.4. μερισμοὶ (Heb. 2.) by proportion and meaſure, part and part. So that, any man, though he want this gift or that; have not all; if he have but ſome to doe good, and doe good with that ſome, need not be diſmayed. He is within the verge of Chriſts bountie, of dona dedit hominibus.

4 Etiam inimicis. The laſt, is the enlargement of His largeſſe of this clauſe in the Grant: for men; Yea, for ſome men, ſome ſpeciall men (may ſome ſay) ſuch as Abraham, and David, Gods friends: but not for His enemies; nor for ſuch, as I. Yes: אעמרים even for His enemies; even for His Rebels (ſo is the nature of the word) even to them, this day, is He willing to part with His gifts. His enemies? why, the devils themſelves are no more, but ſo, but His enemies: what, for them? No: it is hominibus, etiam inimicis; It is not dæmonibus: So, they are out cleare. But, for men, though His enemies, there is hope in this clauſe. And ô the bountifulneſſe of God, that there is hope even for them, that He ſo farre enlargeth the gifts of His feaſt!

Will ye but heare His Commiſſion given about this point? This it is: that re- Luk. 24.47. miſſion of ſinnes (the chiefe gift of all) in His Name, be proclaimed to all Nations. (And, all Nations then (in a manner) were within the Apoſtles Cum inimici eſſemus.) But, that is not it, but the laſt words that follow: that this Proclamation ſhould bee made, beginning at Ieruſalem. At Ieruſalem? why, there all the injuries were done Him, all the indignities offered Him, that could poſſibly be offered Him, that could poſſibly be offered by one enemie to another. Begin there? why the ſtones were yet moiſt with His blood, ſo lately ſhed, ſo few dayes before, as ſcarce drie at the Proclamation-time. Well yet, there begin: this is etiam inimicis indeed. Enough, to ſhew, He would have His enemies ſhould be the better for this day: feſtum charitatis, this right.

And will ye now ſee this put in execution? This very day, ſo ſoone as ever theſe gifts were come, S. Peter thus proclaimes, that Holy and Iuſt One ye have beene the betrayers and murtherers of Him (that is inimicis (trow I) in the higheſt degree.) Well yet, repent and be baptized, and your ſinnes (yea even that ſinne alſo) ſhall be done away, and and ye ſhall receive the gift of the HOLY GHOST. They, that had laid Him full low, paſt ever aſcending (as they thought) even they have their parts in His Aſcenſion. They, that bound him as priſoner, He looſes their captivitie. They, that did damna dare to him, He doth dona dare to them. All to ſhew, Etiam inimicis is no more than the truth: and what would we more? Then let no man deſpaire of his part in theſe gifts, or ſay I am ſhut out of the grant: I have ſo lived, ſo behaved my ſelfe; never dwell with God, I. Why, what art thou? A captive? Nay, art thou an enemie? Why, if de hominibus, etiam inimicis; if a man, though an enemie, this Scripture will reach him, if he put it not from him. The words are ſo plaine: for men, yea though His very enemies.

See then, what difference is betweene the two Feaſts: The Reſurrection (the firſt verſe of the Pſalme) Let God ariſe, and let his enemies be ſcattered, (that is) Inimici dæmones, or men, that put Him from them. But now, at this, Let God ariſe, and let His enemies (that were, and would not be) be gathered, and let thoſe that hate him, (and now hate themſelves for it) fly unto him. It is the Feaſt of Pentecoſt to day. This is the day for etiam inimicis: To day, He hath gifts even for them too. And thus much for the latter part, and ſo, for the whole Triumph. Verſ. 1.

The end now, why all this. Hominibus, for men, that God may dwell among men. GOD, that is the whole Trinitie, by this Perſon of it. Why? dwelt He not among men before? He did. I know not well, whether it may be called dwelling; but ſure never ſo did before, as ſince theſe gifts came from Him. III

The end, that God might dwell among men.

Did not dwell (they call it viſiting) then: went and came, and that was all. But, ſince, He came to ſettle Himſelfe, to take His reſidence; not, to viſit any longer, but even to dwell among them. 1

Dwell, not viſit.

Nor among men, before; but, among ſome men. He was cooped up (as it were) Notus in Judæâ Deus, and there was all. Since, the fulneſſe of the Gentiles is come in; Iaphet into Shems tents: All nations, His neighbours are interreſſed in Him and his Gifts, alike. S. Paul upon this verſe, He aſcended, Vt impleret omnia. Impleret, His: omnia, ours. Filled with His gifts, He: full, all; that is, all the compaſſe of earth full of his fulneſſe. 2

Among men, at large.

Pſal. 76. 1. Gen. 9. 27. Epheſ. 4. 10.

It is for love, even φιλανθρωπία, for His love of men, that makes Him deſire thus to dwell with us. This is evident, by this captivitas ſoluta, and theſe dona diſtributa; by this Captivitie led (that is) by His fighting for it: by theſe gifts given (that is) by his bidding for it; that all this He doth, and all this He gave, and all for no other end but this. So as, quid requirit Dominus? on His part; quid retribuam Domino? on ours; all is but this, ut habitet nobiſcum Deus, that the true Arke of His preſence (his Holy Spirit) may finde a place of reſt with us.

What ſhall we doe then? ſhall we not yeeld to Him thus much, or rather, thus little? If he have a minde to dwell in us, ſhall we refuſe him? It will be for our benefit: we ſhall finde a good neighbour of him. Shall we not then ſay (as they did to the Arke) Ariſe O Lord into thy reſting place. Our duty.

1 Chron. 6. 41

But firſt, two things would be done. 1 The Place would be meet: 2 And the uſage or entertainment according. For the Place, Never look about for a ſoile, where: The place, are we our ſelves. He muſt dwell in us, if ever He dwell among us. In us (I ſay) not beſide us: שכינה is the word, and ſo it ſignifieth, Sic inter nos ut in nobis. To prepare him a place.

And if ſo, then Locus and Locatum would be ſuitable. A Dove He is: He will not come but ad tecta candida, to no foule or ſootie place. Ointment He is: powred He will not be, but into a cleane, and ſweet; not into a ſtinking or lothſome phiall. To hold us to the word: GOD he is; and Holy is his title: So would his place be, an holy place; and, for GOD, a Temple. You know, who ſaith, Templum Dei eſtis vos: Know ye not, ye are the Temples of God, if He dwell in you? 1 Cor. 3. 16.

2 To entertaine Him. Verſe 16.

But it is not the place (though never ſo commodious) makes one ſo willing to dwell, as doth the good uſage, or reſpect of thoſe, in the midſt of whom it is. Here will I dwell for I have a delight (ſaith He.) It would be ſuch, as to delight Him (if it might be:) but ſuch, as at no hand to grieve Him. For then, He is gone againe; Migremus hinc, ſtraight, and we force Him to it. For, who would dwell, where He cannot dwell, but with continuall griefe?

And, what is there, will ſooner grieve Him, and make Him to quit us, than diſcord or diſ-union? Among divided men, or mindes, He will not dwell. Not, but where unitie and love is. In vaine, we talke of the Spirit without theſe. Aarons ointment, and the dew of Hermon (both types of Him) ye know what Pſalme they belong to: It begins with habitare fratres in unum. It is in this Pſalme before (Verſe 9.) where men are of one minde in an houſe, there He delights to be. This very day, they that received Him, were ὁμοθυμαδὸν, with one accord, in one place. That ὁμοθυμαδὸν is the Adverb of the Feaſt. And the Apoſtle, in his commment on this verſe: No better way (ſaith he) to preſerve the unitie of the Spirit (or the Spirit of unitie, chooſe you whether) than in the bond of peace. To ſay truth; who would be hired to dwell in Meſech, where nothing is but continuall jarres and quarrells? Such places, ſuch men, are even as torrida Zona, not habitable by the Spirit, by this Spirit. But for the other ſpirit, the ſpirit of diviſion, they are: Vt habitet dæmon inter eos, a fit place for the Divell, to dwell among ſuch. Thinke of this ſeriouſly, and ſet it downe, that at Salem is his Tabernacle: and Salem is peace, and ſo the Fathers read it, In pace factus eſt locus Ejus. Make Him that place, and he will ſay, here is my reſt, here will I dwell, for I have delight therein.

Eph. 4. 3.
Pſal. 120. 5.

Pſal 76. 2.

We ſaid even now: to dwell among us, He muſt dwell in us: And, in us, He will dwell, if the fruits of His Spirit be found in us. And, of His fruits, the very firſt is Love. And the fruit is, as the tree is. For, He Himſelfe is love, the eſſentiall Love, and Love-knot of the undivided Trinitie.

By the Sacrament.

Now, to work love (the undoubted both ſigne and meanes of His dwelling) what better way, or how ſooner wrought, than by the Sacrament of Love, at the Feaſt of love, upon the Feaſt-day of Love; when Love deſcended with both his hands full of gifts, for very love, to take up His dwelling with us?

You ſhall obſerve: there ever was and will be, a neere alliance, between His dona dedit hominibus, and His dona reliquit hominibus; The Gifts he ſent, and the Gifts he left us. He left us the gifts of his body and blood. His body broken, and full of the characters of love, all over. His blood ſhed, every drop whereof is a great drop of love. To thoſe which were ſent, theſe which were left (love, joy, peace) have a ſpeciall connaturall reference, to breed and to maintain each other. His body, the Spirit of ſtrength; his blood, the Spirit of comfort: Both, the Spirit of Love.

This Spirit (we ſaid) we are to procure, that it may abide with us, and be in us. And what is more intrinſecall in us, abideth ſurer, groweth faſter to us, than what we eat and drinke? Then, if we could get a ſpirituall meat, or get to drinke of the Spirit, there were no way to that. And behold, here they be. For, here is ſpirituall meat, that is, breeding the Spirit; and here we are all made drinke of one Spirit, that there may be but one ſpirit in us. And we are all made one bread, and one body, knead together, and preſſed together into one (as the Symboles are, the bread and the wine;) So many as are partakers of one bread, and one cup, the bread of life, and the cup of bleſſing, the Communion of the Body and blood of Chriſt. And, in figure of this, even King David dealt theſe two (bread and wine) in a kinde of reſemblance to ours, when the Arke was to be brought home, and ſeated among them; the Arke in type. And we to doe the ſame, this day, when the Ark in truth did come, and will come to take up His reſt in us.

1 Chron. 16. 3.

Will ye now heare the end of all? By this meanes God ſhall dwell with us (the perfection of this life:) and He dwelling with us, we ſhall dwell with him (the laſt and higheſt perfection of the life to come. For, with whom God dwelleth here, they ſhall dwell with him there, certainly. Grace He doth give, that hee may dwell with us; and glory he will give, that we may dwell with him. So may he dwell, he with us: ſo may we dwell, we with him, eternally. So, the Text comes about round. It began with an aſcenſion, and it ends with one: began with Chriſts: ends with ours. He aſcended, that God might dwell with us; that God dwelling with us, we might, in the end aſcend and dwell with God. He went up on high, that the Spirit might come downe to us below; and, that comming downe, make us goe the ſame way, and come to the ſame place, that he is. Sent him downe to us, to bring us up to him.

and

Where, we ſhall no leſſe truly than joyfully ſay: This is our reſt for ever. To which reſt, Aſcenſor cœli, Ductor captivitatis, Largitor donorum, he that is gone up to heaven, the Leader of captivitie, the Great Receiver, and Giver of theſe Gifts, vouchſafe to bring us: That, as this Feaſt is the period of all the Feaſts of the yeare; So this Text, and the end of it, to dwell with God, may bee the end of us all: of our deſires, here; of our fruition there. A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREEN-WICH,

On the XXIX. of May, A.D. MDCXV.
being WHITSVNDAY.

LUKE Chap. III. Ver. XXI. XXII.

Now it came to paſſe, when all the people were baptized, and that Jeſus alſo was baptized, and did pray, the heaven was opened:

And the Holy Ghoſt came downe upon him, in a bodily ſhape like a dove, and there was a voice from heaven, ſaying, Thou art my beloved Sonne, in whom I am well pleaſed.

The Feaſt of the Holy Ghoſt.

The comming downe of the Holy Ghoſt upon Chriſt.
Dignius.
Antiquius.

Communius.

THis is the feaſt of the HOLY GHOST. And here have we in the Text, a viſible deſcending of the HOLY GHOST.

Another there was, beſides this, Acts II. But this hath the vantage of it, three wayes: 1 The worthineſſe of the Perſon. Here it deſcends upon CHRIST, who alone is more worth than all thoſe there. 2 The prioritie of Time; This here was firſt, and that other, the HOLY GHOST but at the ſecond hand. 3 The generalitie of the good: That other was proper but to one calling (of the Apoſtles) only. All are not Apoſtles; all are Chriſtians. This of CHRISTS concernes all Chriſtians; and ſo the more generall by farre.

The Feaſt of Baptiſme.

That it is of baptiſme, is no whit impertinent neither; for this is the Feaſt of Baptiſme,

Baptiſme. There were three thouſand, this day baptized by the Apoſtles (the firſt Chriſtians that ever were.) In memory of that Baptiſme, the Church ever after held a ſolemne cuſtome of Baptizing at this Feaſt. And many, all the yeare, reſerved themſelves till then; (thoſe except, whom neceſſity did cauſe to make more haſte.)

The Baptiſm day of the firſt Chriſtians. Acts 2.41.

But, upon the point, both Baptiſmes fell upon this day. That, wherewith the Apoſtles themſelves were baptized, of fire. And that, wherewith they baptized the People, of water. So that, even this way, it is pertinent alſo.

The Baptiſme-day of the Apoſtles. Acts 2.3. 41.

To look into the Text, there is no man but at the firſt bluſh will conceive there is ſome great matter in hand. 1 Firſt, by the opening of heaven: for, that opens not, for a ſmall purpoſe. 2 Then, by the ſolemne preſence of ſo great eſtates at it: for, here is the whole Trinity in perſon. The Son in the water, the Holy Ghoſt in the Dove, the Father in the voice. This was never ſo before, but once: Never but twice, in all; in all the Bible. Once in the Old Teſtament, and once in the New. In the Old, at the creation, the beginning of Geneſis. There finde we GOD, and the Word with GOD creating, and the Spirit of God moving upon the face of the waters. And now here againe, at CHRIST's chriſtening in the new.

CHRISTS baptiſme a high myſtery.
The preſence of the whole Trinity.
1 At the Creation. Gen. 1. 1, 2, 3.
2 At Chriſts Chriſtening. Exod. 5 20.

The faces of the Cherubins are one toward the other: (that is) there is a mutuall correſpondence between theſe two. That was at the creation: this, a creation too; If any be in CHRIST, he is a new creature of this new creation. That was the Geneſis, (that is) the generation of the World: this, the παλιγγενεσία (the Apoſtles word) that is, the regeneration, or ſpirituall new birth, whereby we be borne againe the Sonnes of God. And better not born at all, than not ſo born againe.

That a New Creation. 2 Cor. 5.17.
That, a new generation. Tit. 3. 5.

This then, being every way as great; (indeed, the greater of the twaine) meet it was, they all ſhould preſent themſelves at this, no leſſe than at that; and every one have His part in it (as we ſee, they have.) All (I ſay:) ſeeing the Commiſſion for Baptiſme was to run in all their Names, and it ſelfe ever to be miniſtred accordingly.

The Commiſſion for us. Matth. 28.19.
The execution of it.

To lay forth the members of the diviſion: A double Baptiſme we have here: Double for the Parties, and double for the Parts.

The Diviſion.
1 CHRISTS.
2 The Peoples.

For the Parties; we have here two Parties. Firſt the People. Then CHRIST.

CHRISTS and the Peoples.

For the Parts; we have here two parts. For this firſt (both of CHRIST and the People) was but Iohns Baptiſme, was but Baptiſmus flaminis (as they call it) water-baptiſme. But, there is another part beſides to be had, even Baptiſmus Flaminis, the Baptiſme of the HOLY GHOST.

In water.
In the HOLY GHOST.

That ſecond part is ſet down in a ſequele of foure:

1 For firſt, after Iohns Baptiſme, CHRIST prayes. 2 Then, after His prayer, Heaven opens. 3 After heaven open, the HOLY GHOST deſcends. 4 Laſtly, after His deſcent, comes the voice. And theſe foure make up the other part, and both together a full Baptiſme.

Of theſe then in order. 1. Of the Peoples Baptiſme. 2. Of CHRISTS baptiſm. CHRISTS 1 by water, and then 2 by the HOLY GHOST. In which, the foure: 1 CHRISTS prayer, 2 Heaven open, 3 the Dove, and 4 the Voice.

IT came to paſſe that when, &c. Two Baptiſmes we have here: 1 The Peoples firſt, 2 Then CHRIST'S. How it ſhould come to paſſe, the People ſhould be baptized, we ſee good reaſon: but not how it ſhould come to paſſe, that CHRIST alſo. The People, they came confeſſing their ſinnes; and ſo needed the baptiſme of repentance: ſo was Iohns baptiſme. For, the People not being βαπτιζόμενοι, baptized, but (to uſe the Apoſtles word) βυθιζόμενοι, even ſouſed over head and eares in their ſins, in many fooliſh and noyſome luſts, which drowne men in perdition, Tanquam ſus à volutabro, they had need to be waſhed from the wallow of their ſin, they had long lien in.

Matth. 3. 6. For their ſins. Acts 19. 4. 1 Tim. 6. 9. 2 Pet. 2. 22.

And not onely for their ſinne: even their righteouſneſſe (take it at the beſt) even that, was not ſo cleane, but it needs come to baptiſme: Vtpote ſtillantes quotidiè ſuper telam juſtitiæ, ſaniem concupiſcentiæ (they be Pope Adrians own words:) As dropping every other while, upon the web of thoſe few good workes we doe, ſuch ſtuffe; the Prophet reſembles it to ſo homely a thing, as I liſt not tell you, what it is: but it is pannus menſtruatus, engliſh it who will. Reaſon then, for the People: And not onely for fæx populi, but even flos populi, to be baptized. It might well come to paſſe, that.

For their very righteouſneſſe. In quatuum Sentent. Eſay 64. 6.

The peoples children baptiſme. 1 Pet. 2. 2. Iob 14. 4. Pſal. 51. 5. Ezek. 16. 6. * Iob 14. 5.

Yea reaſon, that even they, who of all the reſt, ſeem leaſt to need it; the Peoples children, ἀρτιγόνητα βρέφη, the poore new-borne babes. For, being conceived of uncleane ſeed (Iob:) and, warmed in a ſinfull wombe (David:) at their birth, polluted no leſſe in ſinne, than in their bloud (Ezekiel;) there is not * Infans unius diei ſuper terram (as the Seventy read it) not a child a day old, but needs baptiſmus lavacri, if it be but for baptiſmus uteri; the baptiſme of the Church, if it be but for the baptiſme it had in the womb. Let the people then be baptized in GOD'S name, good and bad, men and children and all.

II.
CHRIST'S baptiſme.

Sed quid facitis baptizantes Ieſum? (As Bernard askes at His Circumciſion; Quid facitis circumcidentes puerum hunc? What do you circumciſing Him, in whom nothing ſuperfluous? So here) What do you baptizing Him, in whom nothing uncleane? What ſhould He do being baptized? How comes that to paſſe? Goe waſh your ſpotted lambs and ſpare not: this Lamb is immaculate, hath not the leaſt ſpot upon Him. Qui non fecit peccatum (it is Paul.) Qui non novit peccatum (it is Peter:) Neither did, nor knew ſin: He hath none to repent of; what ſhould He doe at the baptiſme of repentance?

It may ſeeme CHRIST was not to be baptized. 1 Pet. 1. 19. 1 Pet. 2. 22. 2 Cor. 5. 21. Acts 19. 4.

One might well ask, Why did not the Baptiſt repell Him finally? Not ſay: I have need to be baptized of thee, (that is) Thou haſt no need to be baptized of me: that was too faint; that was not enough: But, Thou haſt no need to be baptized at all. Yea, one might well ask the water (with the Pſalmiſt;) Why it fled not; and Iordan, Why it was not driven back, at this Baptiſme?

Matth. 3. 14. Pſal. 114. 5.

Yet CHRIST was baptized.

Yet the Verſe is plaine: that, with the People, CHRIST alſo was baptized.

How came this to paſſe? Why baptized? Why with the People?

It may ſeeme of very humility. Iohn 13. 15.

Was it this; though He needed it not, yet for exemplum dedi vobis, He would condeſcend to it, to give all a good example of humility, as He did at His Maundie, when He waſhed His Diſciples feet?

Indeed, I muſt needs ſay, great Humility there was in it; as at His Circumciſion, to take on Him the brand of a Malefactor: ſo here, to ſubmit Himſelfe to the waſhing proper to ſinners only. 2 Then againe, not to take it alone, but to take it at the hands of one ſo far inferiour to Him, as he reckoned not himſelfe worthy to ſtoope and unlooſe His ſhoolatchet. 3 Againe, that not baptized only, but baptized with the People. Not,

Saint

Saint Iohn come and baptize Him, at home; but, with the multitude, the meaneſt of them: they, and He together. And when? Not upon a Day by Himſelfe, but, when they. And where? not in a baſon by Himſelfe, but even in the Common River, with the reſt of the meiny. When, and where, they; Then, and there, He.

This (ſure) was great Humility; and to it we well might, and gladly we would aſcribe it: but that, Himſelf will not let us ſo do. For when the Baptiſt ſtrained courteſie at it, he bade, let be, Thus it behoved, implere omnem juſtitiam. Iuſtitiam (marke that:) No courteſie, but juſtice; He makes a matter of juſtice of it; as if juſtice ſhould not have been done (at leaſt, not all Iuſtice) if He had not been baptized. Not of humility, but of Iuſtice. Matth. 3. 15.

Why, what juſtice had been broken? what piece of it, if He had not? To ſhew you, how this comes to paſſe; we are to conſider CHRIST, as having two capacities (as they terme them.) So are we to conſider Him (the ſecond Adam:) For ſo do we the firſt Adam: as, a perſon of himſelfe; and, as the Author of a Race or Head of a Society. And, even ſo do we, CHRIST: Either as totum integrale, a perſon entire (they call it a body naturall;) or, as pars communitatis (which they call a body politike) in conjunction, and with reference to others: Which others are His Church; which Church is His body. They His body and He their Head (ſo told us often, by the Apoſtle.) And, as by Himſelfe conſidered, He is Vnigenitus, the only begotten, hath never a brother: ſo, as together with the people, He is Primogenitus inter multos, the firſt begotten among many brethren. The Iuſtice in Chriſt two wayes conſidered. 1 Cor. 15. 22. Epheſ. 1. 22, 23; Iohn 3. 16. Rom. 8. 22.

To apply this to our purpoſe. Take CHRIST by Himſelfe, as ſevered from us; and no reaſon in the world, to baptize Him. He needed it not. Needed it not? Nay, take Him ſo; Iordan had more need come to Him, than He to Iordan, to bee cleanſed. Lavit aquas Ipſe, non aquæ Ipſum, the waters were baptized by Him, they baptized Him not: He went into them, Vt aquæ nos purgaturæ prius per Ipſum purgarentur (it is Epiphanius) that they which ſhould cleanſe us, might by Him firſt be cleanſed. It is certaine; ſo, He received no cleanneſſe, no vertue; but vertue He gave, to Iordan, to the waters, to the Sacrament it ſelf. Not as by himſelfe from us. In Anchorate.

But then, take Him the other way, as in conjunction cum populo, they and He one body, and the caſe is altered. For, if He be ſo cum populo, with them, as He be one of them; as He be, a part of a body with them (a principall Part I grant, yet a part though) reaſon would, He doe as they doe, part and part alike. Inaſmuch (ſaith the Apoſtle) as the children were partakers of fleſh and bloud, He alſo tooke part with them. And ſo, inaſmuch as they baptized, He alſo took ſuch part as they, both went to baptiſme together. For (ut pars toti congrua) a kind of juſtice there is in it, they ſhould ſo doe. But as part of one body with us. Heb. 2. 14.

But if we look a little further, then ſhall we finde greater reaſon yet. A part He is; and parts there be, that in ſome caſe undertake for the whole; as the arme, to be let bloud, for all the body. And it came to paſſe, that ſuch a part He was; He undertooke for us. For, in His baptiſme He puts us on; as we put Him on, in ours. Take Him then, not onely as cum populo, but as pro populo; not only, as nobiſcum, but as pro nobis: Put Him in the caſe, the Prophet doth, Poſuit ſuper Ipſum iniquitates omnium noſtrûm, put upon Him the tranſgreſſions of us all: Put Him as the Apoſtle puts Him, Factus eſt peccatum pro nobis, make Him ſin, for us; put all our ſins upon Him; and then, it will come to paſſe, He will need baptizing: He will need that, for me and thee, that for Himſelfe He needed not, and baptiſme in that caſe, may well be miniſtred unto Him. Not onely as part with us, but as for us alſo. Gal. 3. 27. Eph. 5. 6. 2 Cor. 5. 21.

Nay then, as in another caſe the Prophet ſaith, that all Lebanon was little enough to finde wood for a Sacrifice: So may we in this, that all Iordan is little enough to finde water to His baptiſme. A whole River too little, in that caſe. For, being firſt baptized (as I may ſay) in ſo many millions of ſins, of ſo many millions of ſinners (in ſo foule a puddle;) well might He then be baptized, if it were but to waſh away that His former foule baptiſme. Well might it come to paſſe then. To waſh off our ſinnes. Eſay 40. 16.

ſinne? To cleare it ſhortly; the truth is, it could not. It is no [a] water-work, without ſomewhat put to it, to help it ſcoure. But, nothing on Earth: Not, if you put to it [b] Nitre, much Sope, Fullers earth, the herbe borith (ſay the Prophets) all will not doe; it will not off, ſo. Therefore, this of His in Iordan did not, could not doe the feat, otherwiſe, than in the vertue of another to follow. For, after this was paſt, He ſpake of another baptiſme, He was to be baptized with. And that was it indeed: That, the fountaine, that was opened to the houſe of Iſrael, for ſin and for uncleanneſſe: that was baptiſmus ſanguinis. For, without bloud, without the mixture of that, there is no doing away ſin.

But the baptiſm of bloud.

And ſo was He baptized. And He had trinam merſionem: [1] One in Gethſemane, [2] One in Gabbatha, 3 and a third in Golgotha. [a] In Gethſemane, in His ſweat of bloud. [b] In Gabbatha, in the bloud, that came from the ſcourges and thornes: and in [c] Golgotha, that which came from the nailes and the ſpeare. Specially, the ſpeare: There, met the two ſtreames, of [d] water and bloud, the true Iordan, the bath or laver, wherein we are [e] purged from all our ſinnes. No ſin of ſo deep a die, but this will command it, and fetch it out. This in Iordan, here, now, was but an undertaking of that, then; and in vertue of that, doth all our water-baptiſme worke. And therefore, are we baptized into it: not into His water-baptiſme, but into His Croſſe-baptiſme; not into His baptiſme, but into His death. So many as are baptized, are baptized into His death: It is the Apoſtle, Rom. 6.3.

Our duty out of Chriſts baptiſm.

To take our leave of this point. This may be ſaid: If it be Iuſtice, that CHRIST come to baptiſme: much more, that the People. And how then comes it to paſſe, that there is ſuch ſacrilegious pride in ſome of the people, that (as if no ſuch thing were) ſet ſo light by it as they do? and that, not Iohns (as this was;) but CHRISTS own baptiſme? Be ſure of this, if CHRIST did thus, to countenance and credit Iohns baptiſme, becauſe it was the ordinance of GOD: much more his minde is, to give countenance, and to have countenance given, to his own, which is GOD's ordinance, of a farre higher nature.

Chap. 7.30.

And, if the LORD thought not much to come to the baptiſme of his ſervant: He will think much, if the ſervant come not to the baptiſme of his LORD. This of his then is but a leſſon to us, to invite us thereto: and we to take it as the voice, that ſpake to S. Paul (Act. 22.16.) Et nunc quid moraris? Surge, ablue peccata tua: And now, why ſtay you? why protract you the time? Vp, waſh away your ſinnes, with all the ſpeed you may. For, if when the people was baptized, CHRIST was ſo: much more ſtrongly it holds; when CHRIST himſelfe is ſo, that then, the people ſhould and ought to be baptized.

The ſecond part of Chriſts baptiſme.

Chriſts prayer for ſomewhat yet wanting.

1 Iohn 5.6.

Now CHRIST is baptized. And no ſooner is he ſo: but, he fals to his prayers. Indigentia mater orationis (we ſay:) Want begets prayer: Therfore, yet there wants ſomwhat. A part, and that a chief part of baptiſme is ſtill behinde.

For the baptiſm of the Holy Ghoſt.

Deut. 19.15.

There goes more to baptiſme, if it be as it ſhould be, than baptiſmus fluminis: yea (I may boldly ſay) there goes more to it, if it bee as it ſhould, than baptiſmus ſanguinis: Chriſt came in water and bloud, not in water onely, but in water and bloud: that is not enough, except the Spirit alſo beare witneſſe. So baptiſmus Flaminis is to come too. There is to be a Trinity beneath, [1] water, [2] bloud, and 3 the Spirit, to anſwer to that above: but (the Spirit's baptiſme comming too) in the mouth of all three, all is made ſure, all eſtabliſhed throughly. This is it, he prayes for as man.

The baptiſme of bloud we are quit of.

Eſay 63.23.

For, the baptiſme of bloud, that was due to every one of us (and each of us to have been baptized in his own bloud; to have had three ſuch immerſions;) that, hath Chriſt quit us off. When he was asked by the Prophet, How his robes came ſo red? He ſayes, He had been in the wine-preſſe; but, there he had been, and that He had trod alone: Et vir de gentibus non fuit mecum, And not one of the people with him, none but he, there; in that: ſpares us, in that.

But

But the other two parts he ſets down preciſely to Nicodemus (and in him, to us all;) [1] Water, [2] and the Holy Ghoſt: Now, the Holy Ghoſt we yet lack. So doth S. Paul, baptized in the Sea, and in the Cloud: by the Sea, meaning the elementary part, by the Cloud the celeſtiall part of baptiſme. Now, that of the Cloud, we have not yet. So doth S. Peter: the doing away the ſoile of the fleſh (that, Iordan can do) but that, wherewith the conſcience (or ſoule) ſhould be preſented before GOD; that is ſtill wanting. And the baptiſme of the body is but the body of baptiſme; the ſoule of baptiſme is the baptiſme of the ſoule. Of the ſoule, with the bloud of Chriſt, by the hand of the Holy Ghoſt: as, of the body, with water, by the hand of the Baptiſt: without which, it is but a naked, a poore, and a dead element.

But not, either of water, or of the Holy Ghoſt, Iohn 3. 5. 1 Cor. 10. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 21. Gal. 4. 9.

S. Paul tels us (Col. 2.) that beſides the Circumciſion, that was the manufacture, there was another, made without hands: There is ſo, in baptiſme, beſides the hand ſeen, that caſts on the water; the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt is there, working without hands, what here was wrought. Col. 2. 11.

And for this, Chriſt prayes: that then it might, might then, and might ever, be joyned to that of the water. Not in his baptiſme onely, but in the peoples; and (as he afterwards enlarges his prayer) in all others, that ſhould ever after believe in his Name. That, what in his (here) was, in all theirs might be; what in this firſt, in all following; what in Chriſts, in all Chriſtians: Heaven might open, the Holy Ghoſt come downe, the Father be pleaſed to ſay over the ſame words, toties, quoties, ſo oft, as any Chriſtian mans child is brought to his Baptiſme. Chriſt hath prayed, now.

See the force of his prayer. Before it, Heaven was mured up, no Dove to be ſeen, no voice to be heard, Altum ſilentium. But ſtraight upon it (as if they had but waited the laſt word of his prayer) all of them follow immediately.

The opening of heaven.

Heaven opens firſt. For, if when the lower heaven was ſhut up three yeares, Elias was able with his prayer to open it (it is our Saviour, in the next Chapter following) and bring down raine: The prayer of Chriſt (who is more of might, than many ſuch as Elias) ſhall it not be much more of force, to enter the Heavens of heavens, the higheſt of them all, and to bring down thence, the waters above the heavens, even the heavenly graces of the holy Spirit. Chap. 4. 25. Iames 5. 18.

For the bringing down the waters above the heavens. Iohn 7. 39.

For ſo, when our Saviour cried (Iohn 7.) If any be athirſt, let him come to me, and I will give him of the waters of life: This (ſaith S. Iohn) He ſpake of the Spirit. For, the Spirit and his graces are the very ſuperceleſtiall water: one drop whereof, infuſed into the waters of Iordan, will give them an admirable power, to pierce even into the innermoſt parts of the ſoule: and to baptize it; (that is) not onely take out the ſtaines of it, and make it clean; but further, give it a tincture, luſtre, or gloſſe: for, ſo is baptiſme properly, of βάπτω, taken from the Dyers fat, and is a dying or giving a freſh colour, and not a bare waſhing onely. Apoc. 7. 14.

Alwayes, the opening of heaven opens unto us, that no baptiſme without heaven, open: and ſo, that baptiſme is de cœlo, non ab hominibus, from heaven, not of men. So was it here: So is it to be holden for ever. 2. And from heaven: not clanculùm (as Prometheus is ſaid to get his fire) but ἀνεῳγθῶαι, orderly, by a faire doore ſet open; in the view of much people: for, all that were preſent, ſaw the impreſſion in the skie. Which doore was not mured up againe: For, we finde it ſtill open, Apoc. 4. and we finde, that keyes were made, and given of it, after this. 3. And all this; that, there might not onely be a paſſage for theſe down: but for us up. For, heaven gate, ab hoc exemplo, doth ever open at baptiſme; in ſigne, he that new commeth from the Font, hath then right of entrance in thither. Then (I ſay) when by baptiſme he is cleanſed: For before, Nihil inquinatum, Nothing defiled can enter there.

2 To ſhew, baptiſme is from heaven. Chap. 20. 5. By a doore open. Apoc. 4. 1. Mat. 16. 19. To ſhew our right to enter heaven. Apoc. 21. 27.

Out of heaven now open, ſomwhat is ſeen, and ſomwhat heard. [1] Seene: a Dove deſcend; the Apparition. [2] Heard; Tu es filius meus; the voice. Under one, the teſtimony Viſus & Vocis, of hearing and ſight both: that, Sicut audivimus, ſic & vidimus, that, that, as we ſee, we heare, and back againe, as we heare, ſee: which is, as much as can be, to make full faith.

The Apparition.

1. The Apparition. Wherein the points are ſixe: 1. The Holy Ghoſt.] Firſt, that perſon: For, the Perſon, by whom CHRIST was conceived; by the ſame, it was moſt convenient, Chriſtians ſhould alſo be. But to go higher: The Perſon, that was authour of Geneſis the generation, meeteſt to be Author likewiſe of regeneration. The ſame perſon, and in the ſame element: The element, whereof all were made, and wherewith all were deſtroyed after; that, with the ſame, all ſhould be ſaved againe: the water it ſelf, now becomming the Ark; the drowning water, the ſaving Ark, as S. Peter noteth. That, as then by His moving on the waters, he put into them a life and heat to bring forth: ſo now, by his comming down upon them, he ſhould impregnate them to a better birth. That, as his title is, the Lord and giver of life, he might be the Giver of true life (that is) eternall life: whereto this life of ours is but a paſſage or entrie; and not otherwiſe, to be accounted of.

2. The Holy Ghoſt came down:] that is to ſay, in his ſigne or ſymbole, the Dove. Otherwiſe, the ſpirit of God neither goes up, nor comes downe: it is every where; beneath, as well as above: but (by a familiar phraſe in Scripture) what the Dove did, that repreſented him; that, is he ſaid, to do.

2 Came downe.

Pſal. 139. 7.

3. Came downe upon Him:] which is a degree yet further, than in Geneſis. There, he did but move or flutter over the waters (enough, for that effect, then:) here, he commeth nearer, lights and abides upon him: (which argues a greater worke in hand.) And which argues too, a greater familiarity to grow, betweene the Spirit and our nature: For, a bird (we know) is familiar, when it doth ſo; light upon one, and ſtay too. But, all this he doth, not to make him to be ought; but to ſhew him only to be. Vpon us when he comes, it is to conferre ſomthing: Not ſo, upon him: from the firſt minute of his conception, he had the Spirit without meaſure. To conferre nothing; only to declare, that this was He, that to Iohns water-baptiſme, ſhould have power to add the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo make it his own for ever after.

3 Vpon him.

Iohn 3. 34.

4. Upon Him in a bodily ſhape.] For, his comming being to beare witneſſe to Iohn, and to all, that this was he: Convenient it was, he ſhould appeare, and ſo have a bodily ſhape, to come into the face of the Court, and there to be ſeen, and taken notice of, as witneſſes uſe to be. And one end it was, why his baptiſme was ſet, at the time when all the peoples was; that ſo, all the people might ſee, and ſo take notice of the Holy Ghoſt, and indeed of the whole Trinity.

4 In a bodily ſhape.

Iohn 1. 33.

5 What ſhape then? of what creature? All things quick in motion, as Angels, as the Wind (whereto he is elſwhere compared) are ſet forth with wings: the wings of the wind. Of one with wings then, as moſt apt, to expreſſe the ſwiftneſſe of his operation, in all his works; but ſpecially, in this. None of the other kinde of creatures, though never ſo light of foot, can ſufficiently ſet forth the quickneſſe of his working. He goes not; he flies, he: Neſcit tarda molimina; that he doth, he is not long in doing: therefore, in ſpecie volatilis, in the ſhape of a thing flying.

5 In the ſhape of a Fowle.

Exod. 25. 20. Eſay 6. 2. Iohn 3. 8. Pſal. 18. 10.

6. And among thoſe of that kinde, in the ſhape of a Dove, as fitteſt for the purpoſe in hand. Not ſo much, for that it is noted to love the waters well (ſpecially cleare waters, as theſe now be, after Chriſt hath purified them;) That is not all: But indeed, ſpeciall choice is made of it, to ſet forth to us the nature and properties of the Holy Ghoſt: which have many ways reſemblance with thoſe of this creature.

6 In the ſhape of a Dove.

Cant. 5. 12.

And I will not go to Pliny for them, nor to any heathen Writer of them all. For the Word of God, the Word of God hath ſufficient. To that, we will hold us.

There the firſt Dove we finde, is Noah's Dove with the Olive branch in her bill, a ſigne of peace; peace, which is the very firſt fruits of the Spirit. It is Tertullians note, this: That, as after the deluge (the worlds baptiſme, as it were) the firſt meſſenger of peace, was the Dove: So is it here againe juſt; after Chriſts baptiſme, the deluge or drowning of that which indeed drowned the world (that is) of ſinne, the very ſame apparition of the Dove, and with another manner of peace than that; but, with peace, in both.

Gen. 8. 11. Rom. 8. 23. Gal. 5. 22.

2 Next have you Davids Dove, for the colour: Pennæ Columbæ de-argentatæ, with feathers ſilver-white: to note candor columbinus, white as a Dove, not ſpeckled as a bird of divers colours. And (to the ſame effect) Salomons Spouſe, for the eye: three ſeverall times, there ſaid to have, oculus columbarum, eyes ſingle and direct as a Dove; not leering as a Fox, and looking divers waies: Oculos Columbinos, not Vulpinos.

2 Davids dove for the colour. Pſal. 68. 13. Ier. 12. 9. Salomons, for the eye.

3 Then Eſay's Dove, for the voice: Gemebat ut Columba, in patience mourning, not in impatience murmuring or repining: For, carmen amatorium, her voice. And no other voice to be heard, from the firſt Church. Now, they are aſhamed of that voice: it is not gemebant ut columbæ, but rugiebant ut urſi; to groyne they begin like Beares, but not mourne any more live Doves. No ſuch voice to be heard now: that, put to ſilence.

Cant. 1. 14. 4. 1. 5. 12. 3 Eſaies Dove for the voice. Eſay 38. 14. Eſay 59. 11.

4 At laſt our Sauiour Chriſts owne, that is, innocent as Doves: harmeleſſe, both for bill and claw: not bloudy or miſchievous. Who ever heard of a Dove, that drew bloud, or did any miſchiefe to any?

4 Chriſts Dove for bill and claw. Mat. 10. 16.

Now, qualis ſpecies, talis Spiritus, ſuch as the ſhape was, ſuch is the Spirit: and theſe all foure properties of it, in the Holy Ghoſt. 1 He a Spirit, that loves ὁμοθυμαδὸν men of one accord (as was ſeene this day.) 2 Et qui fugit fictum, cannot abide theſe new trickes, meere fictions indeed, feined by feined Chriſtians; partie propoſitions, halfe in the mouth, and halfe in the minde. 3 And when He ſpeaketh, ſpeaketh for us with ſighes not to bee expreſſed, ſuch is His Love, and ſo earneſt. 4 And hurts none: when hee is a Dove (as here:) No not, when hee was fire; but innoxius ignis, even then.

The properties of the Spirit, like. Acts. 2. 1. Sap. 1. 5. Rom. 8. 26. Acts 2. 4.

2 Even as theſe in the Spirit, that came downe: ſo the very ſame, in CHRIST, upon whom He came downe. The Spirit a Dove, and CHRIST a Lambe, like natur'd both; what the one, in the kinde of Beaſts; the other, in the kind of Fowles: that we may ſee, the Holy Ghoſt lighted right. Super quem? upon whom ſhall my Spirit reſt? ſaith GOD in Eſay: and he anſwers, ſuper humilem, On the humble and meeke. Humble and meeke? Why, Diſcite à me, Learne both thoſe of Me (ſaith CHRIST) For I am both, and a Maſter profeſſed in them both. 2 The Spirit of the olive-branch (that is) peace, on Him: For ipſe eſt pax noſtra, He is our peace. 3 The Spirit that loves omni fictione carentes (that is) all that hate æquivocations, on Him: For, never was their guile found in His mouth. 4 And laſtly, the harmeleſſe Spirit, on Him: for, Hee was ſo, too; would not breake a bruiſed reed (Hee) nor quench flaxe, though it did but ſmoke. Doe no hurt at all.

The like properties were in Ghoſt. Iohn. 1. 29. Eſay 57. 17. 66. 2. Mat 11. 29. Ephes. 2. 14. 1 Pet. 2. 22. Mat. 12. 20.

3 Thirdly, what He is in himſelfe: and what He is, on whom He deſcended: that, the very ſame, ſuch for all the world, doth He make His Church, homogenia cum homogeneis, like nature, like properties, per omnia. And, it is not ſo much (al this) to ſhew His nature, as to ſhew His operation: Nor, what he found in CHRIST, as what he workes in Chriſtians: Quâ animâ animet, quos ſpiritus ſpiret, what ſoule Hee puts into them, what manner Spirit he makes them of: That he even endues them, with theſe qualities of the bird, whoſe ſhape he made choice of to preſent himſelfe in. Qua ſpecie, in him: ſhewes quo ſpiritu, in us. To wit, It makes them peaceable, to love ſingleneſſe in meaning, ſpeaking, and dealing, to ſuffer harme, but to doe none.

The like properties to be in Chriſtians. Pſal. 52. 13.

Peace, ſincerity, patience, and innocency, theſe be the ſilver-feathers of this Dove: They be vertues, and (which is more) virtutes baptiſmales, the very vertues of our Baptiſme: No Chriſtian, to be without them: to be found in all, where the humidum radicale of Baptiſme, is not cleane dried up.

The Holy Ghoſt is a Dove, and he makes CHRISTS Spouſe (the Church) a Dove: a terme, ſo oft iterate in the Canticles, and ſo much ſtood on, by S. Auguſtine and the Fathers, as they make no queſtion, no Dove, no church. Yea, let me adde this: S. Peter, when the keyes were promiſed, never but then, but then (I know not how) hee is called by a new name, and never but there, Bar-jona, that is, Filius columbæ. But ſo he muſt be, if ever he will have them. And his Succeſſors, if they claime, by any other fowle; painted keyes they may have, true keyes they have none, For ſure I am, Extra Columbam out of that Church, that is, ſuch and ſo qualified, non eſt columba Chriſts Church a Dove. Cant. 2. 10. 14. 5. 3. 6. 8. Mat. 16. 17.

there is no Holy Ghoſt; and ſo no remiſsion of ſinnes. For they goe together, Receive Ioh. 20.22,23. the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe ſinnes ye remit, they are remitted.

They that make the Church no Dove.

And, what ſhall we ſay then, to them, that will be Chriſtians (that they will) and yet have, nihil Columbæ, nothing in them of the Dove; quit theſe qualities quite, neither bill, nor eye, nor voice, nor colour: what ſhall we ſay? This; that Ieſuits they may be: but Chriſtians (ſure) they be none. No Doves eyes; Foxe-eyed they: Not ſilver-white feathers, but particoloured: No gemitus Columbæ, but rugitus Vrſi: not the bill or foot, of a Dove, but the beake and claws of a Vulture: No Spirit of the Iudic. 9.15. Olive-branch, but the ſpirit of the bramble, from whoſe root went out fire to ſet all the Forreſt on a flame.

A chaſing away of this Dove.

Ye may ſee, what they are, that even ſeeke and doe all, that in them lies, to chaſe away this Dove, the Holy Ghoſt. The dove (they tell us) that was, for the baby-Church; for them, to be humble, and meeke, ſuffer and mourne, like a dove: Now, as if with Montanus, they had yet, Paracletum alium, another Holy Ghoſt to looke for, in another ſhape, of another faſhion quite, with other qualities; they hold, theſe be no qualities for Chriſtians, now: Where indeed (they grant) for the baby-Chriſtians: for the Acts 2.41.46. three thouſand firſt Chriſtians, this day; (poore men) they did all in ſimplicitate Cordis. And ſo, to Plinies time: harmeleſſe people they were (the Chriſtians) as he writes, did no body hurt. And ſo, to Tertullian's, who tells us plainely, what hurt they could have done, and yet would doe none. And ſo, all along the Primitive Churches time, even downe to Gregorie, who in any wiſe, would have no hand, in any mans bloud. But the Date of theſe meeke and patient Chriſtians is worne out; long ſince expired: and now, we muſt have Chriſtians of a new edition, of another, a new faſhion'd Holy Ghoſts making; Gregorie the ſeventh (Saint Gregory the ſeventh forſooth) who indeed, was the firſt, that inſtead of the dove, hatched this new misſhapen Holy Ghoſt, and ſent him into the world.

For, doe they not begin to tell us in good earneſt (and ſpeake it in ſuch aſſemblies and places, as we muſt take it for their Tenet) that they are ſimple men, that thinke, Chriſtians were to continue ſo ſtill: they were to be ſo, but for a time; till their beakes and talons were growne, till their ſtrength was come to them, and they able to make Pſal. 55.6. their party good: and then, this dove here, might take her wings, fly whither ſhee would, and take her eaſe: then, a new Holy Ghoſt to come downe upon them, that would not take it, as the other did: but take armes, depoſe, deprive, blow up: inſtead of an Olive-branch; have a match light, in her beake, or a bloudy knife.

A calling into queſtion of this ſhape of a Dove.

Me thinkes, if this World goe on, it will grow a queſtion problematike, In what ſhape it was moſt convenient, for the Holy Ghoſt to have come downe? Whether as he did, in the meeke ſhape of a dove? Or whether, it had not beene much better, he had come in ſome other ſhape, in the ſhape of the Roman Eagle, or ſome other fierce fowle, de vulturino genere.

Sure, one of the two they muſt doe: either call us downe a new faſhion'd Holy Ghoſt, and inſtitute us a new baptiſme (and if both theſe new; I ſee not, why not a new CHRIST too:) or elſe, make a ſtrange metamorphoſis of the old; clap Him on a crooked beake, and ſticke him full of Eagles feathers, and force Him, to doe contrary to that He was wont, and to that, his nature is.

1 Cor. 12.4. But lying men may change; may, and doe: but the Holy Ghoſt is unus idemque Spiritus (ſaith the Apoſtle) changes not, caſts not his bill, mouts not his feathers: His qualities at the firſt, doe laſt ſtill, and ſtill ſhall laſt to the end, and no other notes of a true Chriſtian, but they.

A renouncing of this baptiſme.

It is rather like to prove true, that Samuel long ſince ſaid, Rebellion is as the ſinne
1 Sam. 15.23. of witchcraft: For Witches (they ſay) begin, are initiated, with renouncing of their baptiſme. And ſure, theſe prick pretily towards it: For, (ſay what they will) they be in the way to it, when they plainly diſclaime, and renounce his qualities, that was the Author of it. For theſe baptiſmall vertues, they, that take them away, doe what in them lyeth, to take away Holy Ghoſt, and baptiſme and all.

I know they will flie to the fire (of this day) and ſay, he came in another ſhape.

True;

True, but for another purpoſe. It was to make Apoſtles, that; not, Chriſtians as this here. Chriſtians are made in a cooler element. And, we have no Apoſtles to make now: GOD ſend us to make good Chriſtians; yeeld no worſe ſoules to GOD, than this Dove here did, ſo many hundred yeares together, till new Ieſuits came up, and old Chriſtians went downe.

But, give them their fire: it will doe them ſmall pleaſure, it will not light them a match, nor give fire to their traine. When it came (that) and did no hurt; It ſate upon them all, but not ſo much as ſingled any one of them. Let them ſhew, this fire, ever blew up any. True, it gave them courage (they needed it, they were to undertake the whole world) but within bounds of modeſty, ſtill (we ought to obey GOD rather than man:) Not in ſaucie and trayterous termes, of old hatts or rotten figs: non eſt vox columbæ hæc; rugitus urſi, rather.

Eſay 59. 11.

In a word, this was none of Elia's fire: and you remember, they that harped upon that ſtring, who ſaid to them, You know not what Spirit you are of; Not, what ſhape appeared at your baptiſme: Not Noahs raven, that delights in dead carcaſes; but his Dove. That ſhape came downe upon Chriſt: the ſame, comes downe upon all that are baptized, with His baptiſme; and are inſpired, with the ſame Spirit, that He was. This for the apparition.

Luke 9. 54. 55.
Gen. 8. 7.

4. The Voice.

Now to the voice. Accedat verbum, ad elementum. The Dove was but a dumbe ſhew, and ſhewes, what is done in us: The Voice, that ſpeakes plainly, and declares, what is done for us, in our baptiſme. The Dove, what the Spirit makes us. The Voice, from whom the Father takes us.

We ſaw CHRISTS humilitie before, in yeelding to be baptized. This heaven oracle here, pronounced of Him, is in a ſort, a reward of his former humilitie. There He was among a rabble of ſinners, even in the midſt of them. One that had ſeene Him ſo, would have taken Him, for none other. This Dove, and this voice from heaven, teſtifying ſo great things of Him (no ſinner, no ſervant, but the very Sonne of GOD, His Love, His Ioy, the In quo, for whom we all fare the better) this ſo honourable an elogie, makes full amends, for that. He loſt nothing by his humilitie. No more did the Baptiſt, by his Non ſum dignus neither. That hand, which hee held not worthy to touch his ſhooe, was dignified, to touch His head, and to powre water on it. Thus they both of them fulfilled righteouſneſſe: and both of them had a glorious reward for it.

1. First the Holy Ghoſts comming, then the voice.

But firſt marke. Till the Spirit is come, the Voice comes not: all depends, on this dayes worke (the Holy Ghoſts comming.) He is the medius terminus: betweene Chriſt in Iordan, and the Father in heaven. He it is, that makes the Fathers ſpeake. Tu (that is) Tu, ſuper quem ſpiritus, Tu es Filius. Thou (that is) Thou, on whom the Spirit in this ſhape comes downe, Thou art my Sonne: that; to goe before. So was it in Geneſis: The Spirit moved upon the face of the waters, and then Et dixit Deus: but, no dixit Deus, before the Spirit be there firſt.

Gen. 1. 3, 4.

2. The Voice, not for Chriſt, but for us.

Then, that non propter Me voxiſta (as Chriſt elſe-where ſaith) This voice came not for Him, but for us. Spoken to Him indeed; but, to Him, not in His owne, but ſuſtaining our perſons. It were fond, to imagine otherwiſe: that this Voice, or any of the reſt, He needed for Himſelfe. Either to have heaven opened to him: it was no time ſhut. Or the HOLY GHOST come downe to him: as GOD, the Holy Ghoſt proceeded from Him; as Man, He proceeded from the Holy Ghoſt, they never parted company. Leaſt of all the Voice, Tu es filius: who knew not that? It was ſaid, and ſung, long before, in the Pſalme, Thou art my Sonne. So, all were for us; Voice, and all. Indeed, His whole baptiſme, is not ſo much His, as ours.

Ioh. 12. 30.
Pſal. 2. 7.

The meaning is, Thou (Chriſt) in their perſons, art this: Thou art; and for thy ſake, all that are in thee, all, that by baptiſme have put thee on, all and every of them, are to me, as thou thy ſelfe art: Filii, dilecti, complacentes.

The meaning of Thou art my Sonne.
Gal. 3. 27.

Will ye ſee what is in them? In Filii firſt.

1. Enemies we were, Rom. V. Now are we no enemies: but in league with Him,

Rom. 5. 10.

Heb.8.9. Ephe.2.12.19. in the new league (or covenant) never to be altered, as the former was. 2 So may we be, and yet ſtrangers ſtill: Nay 2 no ſtrangers, but naturallized now, and of the Commonwealth of Iſrael. 3 And, that may we be too, and yet forreiners though, and no citizens; without the Franchiſe: Yes, 3 now enfranchiſed alſo, and citizens with the Saints. 4 Well, though of the Citie; not of the family though: Yes, 4 Domeſtici DEI, of His very Houſhold, now. 5 Of His Houſhold: ſo we may, and yet be but ſervants there: Nay, 5 no ſervants now, but Sonnes, by vertue of this Tu es Filius. So many degrees doe we paſſe, yer we come to this Filius. Goe forward now. 6 All ſonnes are not beloved, Cham was not; Sonnes and beloved Sonnes, a new degree, a ſixt. 7 And yet againe, all wee love, we take not pleaſure in. Even beloved Sonnes, offend ſometime, and ſo pleaſe not. The Father (in the XV. Chapter after) loved his wild riotous ſonne, but too well; yet, ſmall pleaſure tooke he, in him, or his courſes. But Complacitum eſt (the ſeventh) that makes up all: a ſon, a beloved Sonne, his Fathers delight and joy; there is no degree higher. And ſuch are we, by baptiſme, made to GOD in Chriſt, through the renewing of the Holy Ghoſt.

John.8.35. Gal.5.7. Gen.9.25. Chap. 15.20.

Filij. This is a new Tenour now; the old ſtile is altered. The Voice, that came laſt from heaven before, ran thus; Ego ſum DOMINUS, and that inferres, Tu es Servus (that is the beſt, that can be made of it.) But here now, it is Tu es Filius, and that neceſsarily inferres, Ego ſum Pater: For hæc vox Patrem ſonat, this is a Fathers voice to his Childe. A great Change: Even, from the ſtate of ſervants (as by creation and generation we were; and ſo ſtill, under the law) into the ſtate of Sonnes, as now we are, being new Creatures in Chriſt, regenerate and tranſlated into the ſtate of Grace, wherein we ſtand.

Gal.5.5. 2 Cor.5.17. Rom.5.2.

The riſe from a ſinner to an heire.

And not onely a great Change, but a great Riſe alſo. At the firſt, we were but waſhed from our ſinnes, (there was all:) but here, from a baptized ſinner, to an adopted Sonne, is a great aſcent. He came not downe, ſo low; but we goe up, as high for it. For, if Sonnes, then Heires (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſo goes the tenour in heaven: Heires and joynt heires of heaven, with Chriſt, (that is) for the poſſeſſion and fruit of it, full every way as Himſelfe: and this He brings us to, before He leaves us.

Gal.5.7. Rom.8.17.

Rom.8.15. Gal.5.5.

We ſpeake much of adoption: would you know, when it was, where, and by what words? Why, now; Here it is: Theſe, the very adopting words; by them, the act of adoption, actually executed. This, the very Feaſt of Adoption. A feaſt therefore, to be held in high account with us; as high as we hold this, (to be the adopted children of God.)

In whom I am well pleaſed.

But we muſt remember, not onely that we are, but in quo, all this: to whom we owe it all (that is) to Chriſt (the naturall Son.) In Him it is, and out of Him, it proceeds to come to us.

In whom more than with whom.

The Fathers do ponder this (In quo) to good purpoſe: that is not, Qui placet, Who pleaſes me well, or (which is all one) With whom, I am well pleaſed: (yet ſo He might have ſaid) but In whom. And, that is more, than both. Who pleaſes me, or With whom I am pleaſed, goeth no further than himſelfe, His owne Perſon: But, In whom, (that is) for whoſe ſake, with others. To whom, I beare ſuch favour, as not onely Himſelfe pleaſeth me: but in Him, and for Him, others pleaſe me alſo.

Who, or with whom, His nature. In whom, His end.

Againe: If it had beene, Qui, it had ſhewed, but what, by nature He is: But this In quo, ſheweth to what end, He was ſent; to be, the In quo, to bring all this about; Even, that in Him (the Sonne beloved, and well pleaſing:) we, that neither were ſonnes, but ſervants; (and thoſe but bad ones neither:) Nor beloved, but full unlovely: and in whom no pleaſure at all, diſpleaſure rather: that, in Him we might be received to grace, and made by adoption, what He Himſelfe is.

In whom beſt ſeene by without whom. Ioel 1.18, 1 Sam. 16.14. Mat.25.30.

The In quo, what we are in Him; we beſt conceive, by the ſine quo, what we are without Him. For ſine quo, but that Hee, with the People; none of all theſe, had come to them. Heaven ſhut ſtill: no Dove ſeene: No Tu es Filius ever heard: we had rotted away in our ſinnes without Baptiſme: the evill ſpirit had ſeaſed on us, in ſtead of the Holy Ghoſt: No Sonnes, but caſt out, with the evill ſervant, into utter darkneſſe.

But In quo, GOD ſo highly well pleaſed with Him, as, at the very comtemplation of Him, but turning to Him, and beholding Him, He layes downe all His diſpleaſure, and is pleaſed to accept us, and our poore and weake obedience; and further, to be ſo pleaſed with it, as even to reward it alſo, In quo complacitum eſt. Pſal. 84. 9.

Complacitum eſt; and here Baptiſme leaves us, and would GOD, there we might hold us; and it might never be, but complacitum eſt. But, when we fall into ſinne, ſpecially ſome kinde of ſinne, we put it in hazard: for He is not: He cannot then, be well pleaſed withus. How then? His favour we may not finally loſe; and, to baptiſme we may not come againe. To keepe this Text in life: Complacitum eſt, It hath pleaſed the Holy Ghoſt, as He applied Chriſts bloud to us in baptiſme, one way: ſo out of it, to apply it to us, another way; as it were, in ſupplement of baptiſme. In one verſe, they be both ſent downe, by the Apoſtle, 1 In uno Spiritu baptizati, 2 In uno Spiritu potati. And whom He receiveth ſo to His table, to eat and to drinke with Him, (and every one that is well prepared, He ſo receiveth) with them, He is well pleaſed againe, certainely. On this day of the Spirit, every benefit of the Spirit, is ſet forth and offered us; and we ſhall pleaſe Him well, in making benefit of all. Specially of this, the onely meanes, to renew His complacencie, and to reſtore us thither, where our baptiſme left us. A turning from Baptiſme to the Euchariſt. 1 Cor. 12, 13.

I end; onely this: This voice, it came once more. Two ſeverall times, it came. 1 Once here at His baptiſme: 2 and againe, after, at His transfiguration in the mount: Where He was not onely ſaid to be, but then and there, ſhewed to be, in glory, as the Son of God indeed; His face like the Sunne, His rayment like the lightning. And both of theſe, pertaine to us likewiſe: the firſt is ſpoken of us: when by baptiſme we are received into Him, for the poſſibility and hope, we have of it, thereby: But time will come, when this ſecond ſhall be ſpoken, and verified of us, likewiſe. The ſame voice the ſecond time for us alſo. Matth. 17. 5. Matth. 17. 2.

What time, He ſhall change our vile bodyes, and make them like to His glorious body, as then it was, and as now it is: the heaven ſhall open, and He receive both them, and us, to eternall bliſſe: where we in Him, and He in us, ſhall have a perfect complacency for ever, &c Phil. 3. 21.

IOHN CHAP. XX. VER. XXII.

Hæc cum dixisset, insufflavit; & dixit eis: Accipite SPIRITVM SANCTVM.

And when He had said that, He breathed on them; and said unto them: Receive the HOLY GHOST.

EVER, as upon this day, somewhat we are to speake of the HOLY GHOST, and of His comming. And this also, here, is a comming of the HOLY GHOST. And, not a comming only, but a comming in a Type, or forme, by the sense to be perceived. And so, suits well with the comming of this Day. For, so, this Day He came.

Three such commings there were in all. Once did our Saviour receive the HOLY GHOST, and twice did He give it. Give it on earth in the Text; and after, from heaven, on the day. So, three in all. At CHRISTS baptisme, it came upon him, in the shape of a Dove (Luk. III.) At this Feast, it came upon His Apostles, in the likenesse of tongues of fire (Acts II.) And here now, in this, comes breath-wise; having breath for the Symbolum to represent it. The tongues have beene heard speake: the Dove hath had his flight: And now this, third of breath falleth to be treated of.

Luke. 3. 22. Acts. 2. 3.

It is the middle (this) of the three. That of Baptisme went before it: That serves to make Christians. This of breath comes after it: This serves to make them (as I may say) Christian makers: such, whose ministerie CHRIST would use, to make Christians ſtians: make them, and keepe them: make them ſo, by baptiſme; and keepe them ſo, by the power of the keyes, here given them (in the next words) for the remiſsion of ſinnes. Verſe. 22.

And as it followes well after that of baptiſme; So it goes well before the other of tongues. For, firſt there muſt be breath, before there be tongues, wherewith the ſpeech is to be framed. The tongues but faſhion the breath into certaine ſounds, which without our breath they cannot, and when that failes, their office is at an end. So, firſt breath; then, tongues. And another reaſon yet. It is ſaid in the VII. Chapter, the Spirit was not to be given them till CHRIST was glorified: and glorified He was in part, at His Reſurrection. Then therefore given in part, as here we ſee. But much more glorious, after, by His Aſcenſion: Given therefore then, in full meaſure. Here, but a breath; there, a mighty winde. Here, but afflatus, breathed in; there, effuſus, powred out. The Spirit proceeding gradually. For, by degrees they were brought on, went through them all, all three. Baptized, and ſo made Chriſtians: breathed into, and ſo made what we are; had the tongues ſet on them, and ſo made Apoſtles properly ſo called. Chap. 7. 39.

But three things may be ſaid of this here 2 1: That, of all the three commings (firſt) it is the moſt proper. For, moſt kindly it is for the Spirit, to be inſpired; to come, per modum ſpirationis, in manner of breath: inaſmuch as it hath the name à ſpirando; and is (indeed) it ſelfe, flamen the very breath (as it were) proceeding à Patre filioq;. So, one breath by another.

2 Then, the moſt effectuall it is. For, in both the other (the Dove, and the tongues) the Spirit did but come, but light upon them. In this, it comes (not upon them, but) even into them, intrinſecally. It is inſufflavit, it went into their inward parts; and ſo made them indeed Homines men inſpired by GOD, and that within.

3 And laſt, it is of the greateſt uſe. Both the other were but for once, Baptiſme, but once for every one: the tongues but once, for all. This is toties quoties; ſo oft as we ſinne (and that is oft enough) we need it: looke how oft that, ſo oft have we uſe of this breath here breathed (as the next verſe ſheweth) for peccata remiſeritis, the remiſsion of ſins.

Now, what is here to do, what buſines is in hand, we cannot but know, if ever we have been at the giving of Holy Orders. For, by theſe words are they given, Receive the Holy Ghoſt: whoſe ſins yee remit, &c. Were, to them; and are, to us, even to this day, by theſe and by no other words. Which words, had not the Church of Rome retained in their ordinations, it might well have been doubted (for all their Accipe poteſtatem ſacrificandi pro vivis & mortuis) whether they had any Prieſts at all, or no. But, as GOD would, they retained them, and ſo ſaved themſelves. For, theſe are the very operative words, for the conferring this power, for the performing of this act. The Summe

Which act is here performed, ſomewhat after the manner of a Sacrament. For here is an outward Ceremony (of breathing) inſtar elementi; and here is a Word comming to it, receive ye the Holy Ghoſt. That ſome have therefore yeelded to give that name or title to Holy Orders. As (indeed) the word [Sacrament] hath beene ſometime drawne out wider, and ſo Orders taken in: and other ſome, plucked in narrower, and ſo they left out; as it hath pleaſed both the old and the later Writers. And, if the Grace here given had been gratum faciens (as, in a Sacrament, it ſhould:) and not (as it is) gratis data, but in office or function: And againe, if the outward Ceremony of breathing had not been changed (as it hath plainly) it had been ſomewhat. But, being changed after into laying on of hands, it may well be queſtioned. For we all agree, there is no Sacrament but of CHRISTS owne inſtitution: And that, neither matter nor forme, He hath inſtituted, may be changed.

Yet two parts there be evidently: 1 Inſufflavit; and 2 Dixit: 1 He breathed, and 2 He ſaid, Of theſe two then, firſt joyntly, and then ſeverally. From them joyntly, two points. Of the God-head of our SAVIOUR firſt: and then, of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt from Him. The Diviſion. I.

II. Then ſeverally. Firſt inſufflavit: And in it three points: 1. Of the breath, and, the ſymbolizing of it with the Holy Ghoſt. 2. Secondly, of the parties: [a] He that breathed, Chriſt: [b] They, that breathed into, the Apoſtles. 3. And laſt, of the act it ſelfe: [a] ſufflavit, breathing, [b] inſufflavit, breathing into them. After of dixit, the Word [1]aid: [1] Accipite, of the receiving. [2] Then, of the thing received, which is [a] Spiritum, [b]the Spirit. [b] And not every, or any ſpirit, but Sanctum the Holy Ghoſt. [c] And (becauſe [c]hat may be received many waies) which way of them, it is here received.

I. Of the two parts joyntlyt

WE proceed firſt joyntly out of both, and begin with matter of faith. Two Articles of it: [1] The God-head of CHRIST; [2] the Proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt from the ſecond Perſon.

[1] The God head of Chriſt: Dixit.

The firſt, riſing out of the two maine parts: For, as inſufflavit argues His Manhood: So, dixit doth His God-head; His ſaying, Receive the Holy Ghoſt: For, hæc vox hominem non ſonat: No man, of Himſelfe, can ſo ſay, Verus Homo, qui ſpirare; True Man, by His breathing. Verus Deus, qui Spiritum donare: True GOD, by his bidding them take, and ſo giving them the Holy Ghoſt. To give that gift, to breath ſuch a breath, is beyond the power of men, or Angels: Is more, than any can doe, ſave GOD onely.

For, that We ſay them alſo, in our Ordering; the caſe is farre different. We ſay them not, as in our owne, but as in His Perſon. We bid them, from him receive it; not, from our ſelves. This point will againe fall in afterwards.

[1] The proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt.

Next, we argue for the Holy Ghoſt proceeding from Him; and that evidently. For, as He gave of His breath: ſo did He of the Spirit. The breath, from His Humanity: the Spirit from His Deity. The breath into their bodies: the Spirit, into their ſoules. The outward act teaches viſibly without, what is inviſibly done within,

Thrice was the Holy Ghoſt ſent, and in three formes, [1] of a Dove: [2] of breath: [3] of Cloven Tongues. From the Father, as a Dove; from the Sonne, as breath; From both, as Cloven Tongues. The very cleft ſhewing, they came, from two. At Chriſts Baptiſme, the Father ſent Him from heaven, in ſhape of a Dove. So, from the Father he proceedeth. After (at his riſing here) CHRIST, by a breath, ſends Him into the Apoſtles. So, from the Sonne he proceedeth. After, being received up into the glory of his Father, he, together with the Father, the Father and he both, ſent Him this day downe, in tongues of fire. So, from both, he proceedeth. Proceeding from the Father, totidem verbis (Chap. 15.26.) And proceeding (here) from the Sonne, ad oculum, really. Not, in words only: we may beleeve our eyes: we ſee him ſo to proceed. Enough, to cleare the point, à Patre filioque.

With Reference to quorum remiſeritis.

This proceeding, as it holds each other-where, ſo ſpecially, in this of quorum remiſeritis, the remiſſion of ſinnes, For which, it is here given. For, in that, of all other, the Holy Ghoſt proceeds from CHRIST, moſt properly. For, inaſmuch as the remiſſion of ſinnes came from and by CHRIST, very meet it was, He ſhould have the diſpenſing of His owne benefit, and the Remitter of ſinnes, proceed from Him alſo. One, by the bloud out of His veines; The other, by the Spirit out of His arteries; and He, as bleed the one, ſo breathe the other. He, that ſhould ſeale the acquittance, from Him that laid downe the money. That (howſoever in other reſpects, in this ſure) from Him and none but Him, the Holy Ghoſt to proceed.

Proceed: and proceed by way of Breath, rather than any other way: that, to bee the ceremonie, or ſymbolum, of it.

I pro-

II. Of the parts ſeverally.

I proceed now to the ſecond Combination, of breath, and the HOLY GHOST. It is required in a ſigne, that choice be made of ſuch a one (as neer as may be) as may beſt ſuite and ſerve to expreſſe that, is conferred by it. Now, no earthly thing comes ſo neere, hath ſuch alliance, is ſo like, ſo proper for it, as the breath. I make two ſtands of it: [1] Breath and the Spirit: [2] CHRISTS breath and the Holy Spirit.

1 Of inſufflavit: The breath.

First, breath is aire; and aire, the moſt ſubtile and (as I may ſay) the moſt bodyleſſe body that is; approaching neereſt to the nature of a ſpirit, which is quite devoyd of all corporiety. So, in that, it ſuits well.

1 The Symbolizing of breath with the ſpirit.

But wee wave all, ſave onely the two peculiars of the HOLY GHOST ſet downe in the Nicene Creed. [1] One, the Lord and giver of life; [2] the other, who ſpake by the Prophets.

For firſt, the Spirit giveth life: and breath is the immediate next meanes ſubordinate to the Spirit, for the giving it: for the giving it, and for the keeping it, both Giving; for the firſt, GOD breathed into Adam, ſpiraculum vitæ, and ſtraight factus eſt in animam viventem, he became a living ſoule. Keeping; for, if the breath goe away, away goes the life too: both come, both go together. Gen. 2. 7.

2 Of Chriſts breath with the Holy Ghoſt.

And as the Spirit it is, that quickneth: ſo, it is the Spirit, that ſpeaketh, evidently. Dead men bee dumbe; all. And, the ſame breath, that is organum vitæ, is organum vocis, too. That, we live by, we ſpeake by alſo. For, what is the voice, but verbum ſpiritu veſtitum, the inward word (or concepit) cloathed with breath or aire, and ſo preſented to the ſenſe of hearing? So vehiculum Spiritus it is, in both.

And, as the breath, and the Spirit: So CHRISTS breath, and the Holy Spirit. Accipite Spiritum gives to man the life of nature: Accipite Spiritum Sanctum to the Chriſtian man the life of grace.

And the ſpeech of grace too. For, this breath of CHRIST was it, by which the cloven tongues (after) had their utterance. He ſpake by the Prophets: and the Apoſtles, they were but as Trumpets, or Pneumaticall Wind-inſtruments; they were to be winded. Without breath they could not; no breath on earth able ſo to wind, that their ſound might goe into all lands, bee heard to the uttermoſt parts of the earth. None but CHRISTS, ſo farre; So, that was to be given them. This breath hath in it (you ſee) to make a good Symbole for the Spirit: And CHRISTS breath, for the Holy Spirit. Rom. 10. 18.

It may be, at large, all this: but, how, for the purpoſe, it is here given for (remiſſion of ſinnes?) What hath breath to doe with ſinne? Not nothing For, if you be adviſed, per afflatum ſpiritus nequam it came; by an evill breath: and per ſufflatum Spiritus Sancti, it muſt be had away. The breathing, the peſtilent breath of the Serpent, that blew upon our firſt parents, infected, poyſoned them at the firſt: CHRISTS breath entering, cures it: and (as ever his manner is) by the ſame way it was taken, cures it, breath by breath.

For the better conceiving of the manner, how; Yee may call to minde that the Scriptures ſpeake of ſinne ſometime, as of a froſt: otherwhile, as of a miſt, or fog that men are loſt in, to be diſſolved and ſo blowen away. For, as there be two proceedings in the wind, and according to them, two powers (obſerved by Elihu, Iob 37.) forth of the South, a wind to melt and diſſolve: out of the North, a wind to diſpell aud drive away. And, as in the wind of our breath, there is flatus, a blaſt, which is a colour, and which blowes away: and halitus, a breath, that is warme, and by the temperate, moiſt heat, diſſolves: Anſwerable to theſe, there is in this breath of CHRIST, a double power conferred; and both, for the remiſsion of ſinnes: and that, in two ſenſes, ſet downe by Saint Iohn: [1] The one of Ne peccetis, aſtringent, to keepe men from ſin, and ſo remeſsio peccandi: [2] The other Siquis autem peccaverit: but if any doe ſinne, to looſe men from it, and ſo remiſsio peccati. Shewing them the way, and ayding them with the meanes to cleere their conſcience of it (being done;) remitting that is paſt, making the more remiſſe, that is to come: As it were to reſolve the froſt firſt, and Eſay. 44. 22. Iob 37. 9. 1 Ioh. 2. 1.

turne it into a vapour: and, after it is ſo, then to blow it away.

1 And, other reaſons there be aſſigned (why thus, in breath) apt and good: 1 One, to ſhew the abſolute neceſſity, the great need we have, of this Power; how evill we may be without it: As evill as we can be without our breath, ſo evill can we be without a meanes for the remiſsion of our ſinnes; ὃ μᾶλλον πνέομεν ἢ ἀέρα. It is Saint Baſil. The Chriſtian man he lives not by the aire that he breathes, more than he doth by it. Our Pſal. 63. 3. owne breath not more needfull, than this breath of Chriſts: His loving kindneſſe in it, better than the life it ſelfe, and we no longer to draw our breath, than to give Him thankes for it. This for the neceſſity.

2 A ſecond, to ſhew the quality; which is milde, of the ſame temper, the breath is. No ſpiritus procellæ (which ſome would think perhaps, more meet) to carry all before it. They know not the Holy Ghoſt, that ſo thinke: they remember not the Dove. Violence, in his worke, He could never skill of; His courſe had ever been otherwiſe. And, not his onely, but theirs, whom he proceeds from.

1 Kings. 19. 11, 12. Let them but goe to Elias's viſion, and informe themſelves of this point. There came firſt a boiſterous whirle-wind (ſuch an one, as they wiſh for) but no GOD there. After it, a ratling earth-quake: And after it, crackling flaſhes of fire: GOD was in none of them all. Then came a ſoft ſtill voice: There comes GOD. GOD was in it; and, by it, you may know where to finde Him.

Pſal 72. 6. And as GOD, ſo CHRIST: How comes he? He ſhall come downe like the dew in a fleece of wooll; and that is ſcarce to be heard. He, He ſhall not roare nor cry, Eſay. 42. 2. nor his voice be heard out into the ſtreet. How unlike them, and their Novices, that will needs beare his Name.

And how the Holy Ghoſt comes here, we ſee. None of all the three perſons, but in gentle milde manner.

It is againſt them (this) that take delight in theſe bluſtering Spirits, and thinke them the onely men; cannot skill of another. No river they, but the great Euphra-
Eſay. 8. 6. tes, that runnes with a huge noyſe. The waters of Silo, run too ſoft for them. Well, the waters of Silo (though) the Prophets commend to us: and to them Chriſt ſends us, and it is they, when all is done, whoſe ſtreames ſhall make glad the City of GOD.
Pſal. 64. 4. This is ſure, no ſpirituall grace is ever ſo truly wrought by theſe ſpirits, that take ſo on, till they be out of breath. The aire they beat, the heart they pierce not. The quiet calme Eccl. 7. 8. breath ſhall doe it to better purpoſe, than theſe that crackle like thornes under a pot. This breath will thither, to the heart directly: and ſinne, never ſo kindly diſſolved, as Iob 4. 16. by audivi vocem in ſilentio (that way.) Tell me not of the mighty winde and the fire; that, was for Apoſtles. We are none; three degrees lower. And that wind they uſed very ſeldome (though:) once or twice perhaps: but, this they uſed continually. I report me to their Acts, and to their Epiſtles. For, the wind comes but at times; but, the breath is continually at all times. And this is ſure, when the mighty wind and the fire came, it may be, Saint Peter uſed it once or twice, and Saint Paul as oft: but, this of the breath, they uſed more, nay moſt of all, and by it did more good, than by the other.

For as for this, let it not trouble you, that it is but breath; and breath, but aire, and ſo (one would thinke) too feeble; (As indeed what feebler thing is there in man, than it?) the more feeble, the more fit to manifeſt His ſtrength by. For, as weake in appearance as it is, by it were great things brought to paſſe, By this puffe of breath, was the world blowne round about. About came the Philoſophers, the Orators, the Emperors. Away went the miſt of errour, downe went the Idols, and their Temples, before it.

2 Of the Party. 1 From whom: CHRIST. Which gives us a good paſſage from the Breath to the Breather, Him that is the Nominative caſe to inſufflavit. For, we are not to looke to the breath altogether, but ſomewhat too, from whoſe mouth it comes, whoſe breath it is. And Chriſts it is. He it is, that gives the vigour and vertue to it. The touch of His finger, the breath of His mouth, vertue goes from it, ſinne cannot ſtand before it, it ſends it going, blowes it away like a little duſt.

Take

Take this with you too. It is not Christs breath, any breath of his, but his breath now, after his rising, and so His immortall breath. A mortall he had, which he breathed out, quando emisit Spiritum, when He gave up the Ghost upon the Crosse. All the while he was mortall, he held his breath. Till it was more than so, he breathed it not; till it had in it, the vigour and power of immortality: which neither sin can endure, but scatters straight; nor the man of sinne, for he also shall be consumed with the breath of His mouth. Otherwise, unlesse it be this of Christs, there is nothing in our breath to worke this effect: not in any mans, to thaw a frost, or to scatter a mist. The soyle of sinne is so baked on men, they so hard frozen in the dreggs of it, our winde cannot dissolve it. Heare the Prophet, after he had been long blowing at the sins of the people: The bellowes (saith he) are burnt, the iron of them consumed, the Founder melts in vaine; for all his blowing, the drosse will not away (Ier.6.29.) But I (saith God) let me take it in hand, let me but blow with my winde, and I scatter thy transgressions as a mist, and make thy sinnes like a morning cloud to vanish away. Turne we then to him, whose divine power, whose immortall breath can doe it: doe it by himselfe, and if by himselfe, by others also, into whom he will inspire it; whom in that regard, the Prophet calleth Gods mouth, to separate the precious from the vile.

Christ after His resurrection. Mat.27.50. 2 Thess 2.8. Ier.15.19.

Which being of his breath immortall, doth further shew, both that there is nothing in this power, but pertaines rather to a better life, than to this mortall of ours (even to that, which is the life of the world to come:) and that it shall never die (this power) but hold, as long as there is any sinne to be forgiven. Had it beene his mortall breath, we might have feared the failing, now shall it never faile, so long as there is any, to open his mouth to receive it. It is His immortall breath.

This for the Partie from whom. Now for the in eos, those into whom it came. Much bound we are to our Blessed Saviour, for thus sending; and to the Holy Ghost for being thus sent, for seeing us furnished, with a power, we so much stand in need of. For, sinning as we doe, and even running our selves out of breath in it, and the wages of that being eternall death: what case were we in, but for this breath? I see not how we should doe without it. To say therefore with them in the Gospell, Benedictus Deus qui dedit talem potestatem, Blessed bee God for sending such a power, for sending it at all.

2 The Parties to whom. Rom.6.23. Mat.9.8.

But then secondly, qui dedit talem potestatem hominibus, that he gave it to men, For, as the Sonne of man, he gave it; and as man, to men he gave it; To the Sons of men upon earth, that we need not send up and downe, and cast, Who shall goe up to heaven for us and fetch it thence. That if an Angell should come to us, as to Cornelius there did, he hath not this power to impart, he can but bid us send to Ioppa for Peter: He hath it, men have it, Angels have it not.

1 To men. Rom.10.6. Acts 10.32.

In eos, is more yet: to men, and to such men, such simple men (for so they were God wot) a full infit and indisposed matter to receive it. Idiots (it is Saint Lukes word) men utterly unlearned: And of no spirit or courage at all (the breath but of a Damosell, quailed the best of them.) Probatur Deus per Apostolos (say the Schoolemen) if there were nothing else, his very Apostles were enough to prove him to be God, For O Lord our Saviour, how excellent is thy name in all the world! Thou, that out of the mouthes of those that were little better than babes, hast ordained thy praise, and stilled thine enemies, and put them all to silence.

2 In eos, to simple men. Acts.4.13. Psal.8.12.

But, there is a worse matter than that. Not onely Simple; but (which is further off yet) sinfull men they were. Take their owne confessions. Saint Peters: Goe forth from me ô Lord, for I am a sinfull man. Saint Pauls: Sinners, whereof I am the chiefest. S. Iames. In many things we offend all; put himselfe in the number of them that offended many times. Saint Iohns: If we (I for one) say we have no sinne (what then, we are proud, there is no humility? No; but) we are liars, and there is no truth in us. Even, to such, to sinners, this power given to forgive sinnes: to them, that for sinne, were in feare themselves to be condemned.

3 To sinfull men. Luke 5.8. 1 Tim.1.5. Iames 3.2. 1 Iohn 1.8.

Nay (which is not lightly to be passed by) all this done, even at the very time, when when they were ſcarce crept out of their ſinne, but three daies before committed, in ſo wretchedly forſaking Him: and ſome more than ſo, and after would ſcarce beleeve, He was riſen, when they ſaw Him: and even then, did he thus breath on them, and made them, that he did. Now bleſsed be GOD, that at all gave ſuch power to men, to ſuch men, ſuch ſimple, ſuch ſinfull men, inſufflavit in eos. To ſecure us, be the men what they will, that have received it, No ſinne of man. ſhall make the power of GOD of none effect. This, for in eos.

3 Of the Act. a Sufflavit.

To the Act now, It is firſt ſufflavit, breathed; and that was, to keepe correſpondence with His Father at the firſt. By breathing into Adam, the Father gave the ſoule; the author of the life naturall: Ad idem exemplum, the Sonne (here) by breathing gives the Holy Ghoſt, the Author of the life ſpirituall, the ſame paſſage; and the ſame ceremony held by both.

b Inſufflavit.

But inſufflavit is more; breathed in it, into them. This (in) ſhewes, it pertaines within, to the inward parts, to the very conſcience, this act. His breath goeth (ſaith Salomon) ad interiora ventris, and his word with it (ſaith the Apoſtle) through, to the diviſion of the ſoule and Spirit: Thither goeth this breath: and thither, is further than man can goe. For, howſoever the acts and exerciſes of outward Iuriſdiction may be diſpoſable, and are diſpoſed by humane authority: yet, this not ſo, of forum internum. Somewhat there is ſtill that comes from CHRIST, and none but CHRIST; ſomewhat, that as it comes higher, ſo it goes deeper, than any earthly power whatſoever. This inward inſpiring, brings us to CHRIST's Deitie againe. The Kings of the Nations, ſend they can, and give power they can, but aſpire they cannot. Array whom they will (as Aſſuerus) with rich attire; arme them at all points, induere, in that ſenſe; but not endue the ſoule with gifts and graces within, not arme their mindes with valour and vertue; at leaſtwiſe, not with virtus ex alto: Onely GOD, whom He cals, he gives the inward talents to; and CHRIST, whom he ſends, he ſends his Spirit into. This argueth GOD plainely, and ſo CHRIST to be GOD,

Pro. 18. 8. Heb. 4. 12.

Ephes. 4. 3.

Alwaies this inſufflavit ſhewes, as wherewith he would doe it (the Spirit;) ſo, what it is he would worke, worke upon, and renew. For, if we be renewed in the Spirit of our mindes, the whole man will be ſo, ſtraight upon it. There is no indication to that: for, the change of the whole man is a certaine ſigne, the Spirit is come into us. As of Saul, it is writen, when the Spirit came into him, he was changed into quite another man; no more the ſame Saul, he was before: A new, another Saul then. Which holds, not onely in particular men, but even in the whole world. For, when this breath came into it, in interiora, it was caſt in a new mold preſently, and did even wonder at it ſelfe, how it was become Chriſtian. For, the outward rigourous meanes of fire, impriſonment, of the whip, of the terrour of the Magiſtrates ſword: Pilates, Have not I power to crucifie thee, and power to looſe thee? Theſe daunt men, make, them aſtoniſhed, make metum peccati, feare to commit the outward act of ſin. But, odium oportet peccandi, non metum facias, if ſinne ſhall ever truly be left it muſt come of hatred, not of feare. So, it goes away indeed. And there it is, ſinne muſt be met with; if ever it ſhall rightly be put away, the Spirit to be ſearched, and inward hearty compunction wrought there. And that is, by this breath of Chriſt, piercing thither or not at all. So much for the [in.]

Iohn 19. 2.

Et dixit.

And now to, & dixit. The words bee three, the points according, three, too. 1 Accipite, it is to be received: 2 Spiritum, a Spirit it is, that is to be received: 3 Sanctum, and that Spirit is the Holy Ghoſt. 4 Whereto we adde, the Holy Ghoſt after what manner; for there be more than one.

1 Accipite.

Accipite, agrees well with breath. For, that is received, we open our mouthes and draw it in; our Syſtole, to meet with His Diaſtole.

For

For this Accipite: it is certaine, that at the breathing of this breath the Spirit was given. He gave them what He bade them take; he mocked them not. They received the Holy Ghost then, and (if ye will) really. Yet was nor the ſubſtance of His breath tranſubſtantiate into that of the Holy Ghost: None hath ever imagined that: yet ſaid He truly, Accipite Spiritum, and no leſſe truly in another place, Accipite Corpus. Truly ſaid by Him, and received by them, in both. And no more need, the bread ſhould be changed into His body, in that; than, His breath into the Holy Ghost in this: No, though it be a Sacrament (for, with them both are ſo) yet, as all confeſſe, both truly ſaid, truly given, and truly received, and in the ſame ſenſe; without any difference at all. This for them.

For us, Accipite ſheweth firſt, it comes from without; it growes not within us; a breath inſpired, not a vapour aſcending; not educta è, but inducta in. It is not meditati ſumus ſicut aranea, we ſpin it not out of our ſelves, as the Spider doth her web. It is not concipite, but accipite: Receive it we do; Conceive it we do not. It were too fond to conceive (ſeeing our breath is made of ayre, and that is without us) that the Spirit ſhould be made of any thing that is within us. 1 Accipite, not concipite. Pſal. 90. 9.

We ſay againe: it is accipite, not aſſumite. Aſſumit, qui nemine dante accipit, He aſſumes, that takes that, is not given. But, nemo aſſumit honorem hunc, This honour no man takes unto him, or upon him, till it be given him. As, quod accipitur non habetur, in the laſt; So, quod accipitur, datur, in this. And both theſe are againſt the Voluntaries of our Age, with their taken-on callings. That have no mitto vos; unſent, ſet out of themſelves. No accipite, no receiving; take it up of their own accords, make themſelves what they are: Sprinkle their owne heads with water; lay their owne hands on their owne heads; and ſo take that to them, which none ever gave them. They be hypoſtles; (So doth S. Paul well term them as it were the mock-Apoſtles.) And the term comes home to them, for υἱοὶ ὑποστολῆς they be Filii ſubtractionis right: work all to ſubtraction, to withdraw poore ſoules, to make them forſake the fellowſhip (as even then, the manner was.) This brand hath the Apoſtle ſet on them, that we might know them and avoid them. 2 Accipite, not aſſumite. Heb. 5. 4. Heb. 10. 39.

We may be ſure, Christ could have given the Spirit without any ceremony; held His breath, and yet ſent the Spirit into them without any more adoe: He would not: An outward ceremony He would add; for, an outward calling He would have. For, if nothing outward had been in His, we ſhould have had nothing but Enthuſiaſts (as them we have notwithſtanding:) But then we ſhould have had no rule with them: All by divine revelation: Into that they reſolve. For, ſending, breathing, laying on of hands have they none. But if they be of Christ, ſome muſt ſay mitto vos; ſent by ſome; not run of their own heads. Some ſay accipite, receive it, from ſome; not finde it about themſelves; have an outward calling, and an outward Accipite, a teſtimony of it. This for accipite.

Spiritum. A Spirit it is, that is to be received, and much is ſaid in this word (Spirit) it ſtands as oppoſed to many. 1 The ſpirit and fleſh (Christ, Ioh. 6.) 2 The Spirit and the Letter. (S. Paul, 2 Cor. 3.) 3 The Spirit and the Soule (S. Iude.) 4 The Spirit and the minde (Eph. 4.) 5 The Spirit and a habit. 6 The Spirit and a Sprite, Spiritus and ſpectrum. 7 The Spirit and Hero's Pneumatica, that is ſome artificiall motion or peece of work with gins within it. To all theſe, a Spiritum. The Spirit. Ioh. 6. 63. 2 Cor. 3. 6. Iude 19. Eph. 4. 23.

1. Not the fleſh (ſaith our Saviour:) and if not the fleſh, not any humour, for they are of the fleſh: Neither they, nor their revelations profit ought to this worke. 1 Not the fleſh

2. Not the Letter (ſaith S. Paul:) not the husk or chaffe: we have too much of them every day. Quid paleæ ad triticum? they rather take away life than give it: A handfull of good graine were better than ten load of ſuch ſtuffe. 2 Not the letter. Ier. 22. 28.

3. Nor animales Spiritum non habentes (ſaith Iude) men that have ſoules only; and they 3 Not the ſoule.

they ſerve them, but as ſalt to keep them, that they rot not. They to have no part or fellowſhip in this buſineſſe; meere naturall men; no ſpirit in them at all. Somewhat there is to be in us, more than a naturall ſoule: ψυχὴ is one thing: ψυχικὸς is another. Some inſpiring needs; ſomwhat of Accipite.

4 Not the minde.

4 Nay, ſaith S. Paul, Be ye renewed in the ſpirit of your mindes. For, the minde is not all: Nor men to think ſo, if they once have got true poſitions, true Maximes in their minde, then all is well. If the Spirit be not alſo renewed, it is nothing.

5 Not an habit.

5 The Spirit, not an habite gotten with practice, and loſt againe with diſ-uſe (as are the Arts and morall vertues) againſt the Philoſophers. For, though this be vertue, yet it is not virtus ex alto (this.) No habituall, but a ſpirituall vertue this.

6 Not a Sprite.

6 Spiritus, non ſpectrum: for that is a flying ſhadow void of action; doth nothing. But the Spirit, the firſt thing we read of it, it did hover and hatch, and make fruitfull the waters, and fit to bring forth ſomething of ſubſtance.

Gen. 1. 2.

7 Not Hero's Pneumatica.

7 And laſt (which is by writers thought to be chiefly intended) CHRISTS Spirit, not Hero's Pneumatica; not with ſome ſpring or device, though within, yet from without; artificiall, not naturall: but the very principium motus to be within. Of our ſelves, to move: not wrought to it, by any gin, or vice, or skrew made by art: Elſe, wee ſhall move but while wee are wound up, for a certaine till the plummets be at the ground, and then our motion will ceaſe ſtraight. All which (but theſe laſt ſpecially) are againſt the automata, the ſpectra, the puppets of religion, Hypocrites. With ſome ſpring within, their eyes are made to rowle, and their lips to wag, and their breſt to give a ſob: all is but Hero's Pneumatica, a vizor, not a very face; an outward ſhew of godlineſſe, but no inward power of it at all. It is not Accipite Spiritum.

2 Tim. 3. 5.

b Spiritum Sanctum.

Thirdly, I ſay it would be known further, what ſpirit: For, Accipite it may be; ſomewhat they may have taken; it may be, a ſpirit. But, whatſoever it is, it is not yet home, unleſſe ſanctum come too. Sanctum it would be, if it be right. To be a man of ſpirit (as we call them, that be active and ſtirring in the world) will not ſerve here, if that be all. I have formerly told you, there is a ſpiritum without ſanctum; ſpirit and holy are two things. Two other ſpirits there be beſides: and they well accepted of, and in great requeſt. [1] One which S. Peter cals the private ſpirit: [2] The other, that S. Paul cals the ſpirit of the world: Which two will conſort well together, for their own turnes, and for ſome worldly end: but neither of them with this. For, they are oppoſed to the Holy Ghoſt both.

3 Pet. 1. 20.
2 Cor. 2. 12.

1 Not Spiritum ſuum.

The private ſpirit firſt. And are there not in the world ſomewhere, ſome ſuch as will receive none, admit of at no hand no other Holy Ghoſt but their owne ghoſt, and the idoll of their owne conceipt, the viſion of their owne heads, the motions of their owne ſpirits; and if you hit not on that, that is there in their hearts, reject it, be it what it will: that makes their breaſts the Sanctuary; that (in effect) ſay with the old Donatiſts, Quod volumus ſanctum eſt, That they will have holy, is holy, and nothing elſe? Men (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of them) cauſeleſſe puft up with their fleſhly minde? His word is to be marked: φυσίωσις, there; φύσιοις, here: inflati, they; afflati, theſe: They puffed up, theſe inſpired. If it make to ſwell, then is it but wind; the Spirit doth it not; inſpirat, non inflat. The word is inſufflavit: there is in ſufflavit, a [ſub] that beareth downward, and carries not up. So Spiritum ſanctum, is not ſpiritum ſuum.

2 Not Spiritum mundi.

Nor ſpiritus mundi is not Spiritus CHRISTI. Els doth Saint Paul wrong to oppoſe them. It is too ſure, ſuch a ſpirit there is as the ſpirit of the world: and that the greateſt part of the world live and breathe, and move by it; and that it doth well ſometimes, but without any reference to GOD, or CHRIST, or HOLY GHOST. For, even the acts they do of Religion, are out of worldly reaſons and reſpects: Herods reaſon, Videns quia placeret populo, ſaw, the world would that way: Demetrius's reaſon,

Acts 12. 3. 19. 27.

ſon, Periclitatur portio noſtra, It may prove dangerous to their worldly eſtate: The Sichemites: Oh ſet forward that point of Divinity; for then, all they have is ours. See we not, whence this wind blowes, from what ſpirit this breath comes? from Spiritus mundi, plainly. And I know not how, but as if Christs mouth were ſtopped, and His breath like to faile Him, the world begins to fare, as if they had got a new mouth, to draw breath from; to governe the Church, as if Spiritus Prætorii would doe things, better than Spiritus Sanctuarii, and mans law become the beſt meanes to teach the feare of God, and to guide Religion by. In vaine then is all this act of Chriſts; He might have kept his breath to himſelfe. But, it will not ſo be. When all is done, the Spirit muſt come from the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt from Christs mouth, that muſt do this, govern the Church. Thither we muſt for Sanctum; even to the Sanctuary, and to no other place. Gen. 34. 23.

And, a certaine note it is (this) to diſcerne the Holy Spirit of God, from the ſpirit of what you will. From Christ it comes, if it bee true: Hee breaths it. It cannot but be true, if it come from him, for he is the Truth. And as the Truth, ſo the Wiſdome of God: that, if it ſavour of falſhood, or folly, it came not from him; he breathed it not. But, his Breath ſhall not faile; ſhall ever be able to ſerve his Church, without all the ἰδία ἐπίλυσις, of the private Spirit, and without all the additaments of ſpiritus mundi. And if we gape after them, we make this Accipite more than needs: And if we do ſo, I know not what ſhall become of us. Iohn 14. 6. 1 Cor. 1. 5.

But, the Holy Ghoſt may bee received more wayes than one. Hee hath many Spiramina: Πολυτρόπως, in many manners, he comes: And multiformis gratia, he comes with. He and they carry the name of their cauſe: and to receive them is to receive the Spirit. There is a gratum faciens; the ſaving grace of the Spirit, for one to ſave himſelfe by, received by each, without reſpect to others: and there is a gratis data (what ever become of us) ſerving to ſave others by, without reſpect to our ſelves. And there is χάρις διακονίας, the Grace of a holy calling: For it is a grace, to be a conduit of grace any way. All theſe; and all from one and the ſame Spirit. Which way it is received. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 2 Cor. 8. 4.

That, was here conferred, was not the ſaving grace of inward Sanctimonie: they were not breat hed on, to that end. The Church to this day, gives this ſtill in her Ordinations, but the ſaving grace the Church cannot give: none but God can give that. Nor, the gratis data it is not. That came by the tongues, both the gift of ſpeaking diverſe languages, and the gift of σωφρονεῖν, ſpeaking wiſely, and to the purpoſe: And (we know) none is either the holier, or the learneder, by his Ordination.

Yet, a grace it is. For, the very office it ſelfe is a grace: Mihi data eſt hæc gratia (ſaith the Apoſtle in more places than one; and ſpeakes of his Office and nothing elſe.) The Apoſtle-ſhip was a grace, yet no ſaving grace. Els, ſhould Iudas have been ſaved. Clearely then, it is the grace of their Calling (this) whereby they were ſacred, and made perſons publike, and their acts authenticall; and they enabled to do ſomewhat about the remiſſion of ſinnes, that is not (of like availe) done by others, though perhaps more learned and vertuous than they, in that they have not the like mitto vos, nor the ſame Accipite that theſe have. To ſpeak with the leaſt: As the act of one that is a publike Notary, is of more validity, than of another that is none, though (it may be) he writes a much fairer hand. And this (loe) was the grace here, by breathing conferred to them: of Spiritum, a Spirituall; of Sanctum, an holy Calling: and derived from them to us, and from us to others, to the worlds end. Eph. 2 7, &c.

But take heed, we ſucke no errour out of this word Holy; No more than we doe out of the word Annointed. When time was, it was ſhewed, the annointing was no inward holineſſe, or ability to governe by, but the right of ruling onely. So, here, it is no internall quality infuſed, but the grace onely of their ſpirituall and ſacred function. Good it were, and much to be wiſhed, they were holy and learned all; but if they be not, their Office holds good though. He that is a ſinner himſelf, may remit ſins for all that, and ſave others he may, though himſelfe be not ſaved. For, it was not propter ſe, he received this power, to abſolve himſelf; but (as the next word is) quorumcunque, any others whoſoever.

Some adoe we have to pluck this out: but out it muſt. For, an errour it is, an old worne errour of the Donatiſts: and but new dreſſed over by ſome fanaticall ſpirits, in our dayes, that teach in corners. One, that is not himſelf inwardly holy, cannot be the meanes of holineſſe to another. And where they dare too, that: One, that is not in ſtate of grace, can have no right to any poſſeſſion or place. For, they of right belong to none, but to the true children of GOD: that is, to none but to themſelves.

Fond ignorant men! For, hath not the Church long ſince defined it poſitively, that the Baptiſme, Peter gave, was no better than that which Iudas: and exemplified it, that a ſeale of iron will give as perfect a ſtampe, as one of gold? That as the Carpenters that built the Arke, wherein Noah was ſaved, were themſelves drowned in the Flood: that as the water of baptiſme, that ſends the child to Heaven, is it ſelfe caſt downe the kennell: Semblably is it with theſe: And they that by the Word, the Sacraments, the Keyes, are unto other the conduits of grace, to make them fructifie in all good workes; may well ſo be, though themſelves remaine unfruitfull, as doe the pipes of wood or lead, that by tranſmitting the water, make the garden to beare both herbes and flowers, though themſelves never beare any. And let that content us, that what is here received, for us it is received, that what is given them, is given them for us; and is given us, by them. Sever the Office, from the men: leave the men to GOD, to whom they ſtand or fall: let the Ordinance of GOD ſtand faſt. This breath, though not into them for themſelves, yet goeth into and through every act of their Office or miniſtery, and by them conveigheth His ſaving grace into us all.

But leſt we grow diſcontent, that ſome doe receive it, and that we all doe not ſo (For, this being the Feaſt of the Holy Ghoſt, and of receiving it, it may grieve any of us, to goe his way and not receive it:) I will ſhew, it is not ſo. For, though as this breath, we cannot all; and, as the fiery Tongues, much leſſe: (Theſe are but for ſome ſet perſons:) yet will I ſhew you a way, how to ſay Accipite Spiritum to all, and how all may receive it.

Matth. 26. 26. And that is by accipite corpus meum. For, Accipite corpus, upon the matter, is Accipite Spiritum, inaſmuch as they two never part, not poſſible to ſever them one minute. Thus, when or to whom we ſay Accipite Corpus, we may ſafely ſay with the ſame breath, Accipite Spiritum; and as truly every way. For, that Body is never without this Spirit; he that receives the one, receives the other; he that, the body, together with it, the Spirit alſo.

And receiving it thus, it is to better purpoſe than here in the Text it is. Better (I ſay) for us. For, in the Text it is received, for the good of others; whereas (here) we ſhall receive it, for our owne good. Now, whether is the better, remiſſion of ſinnes, to be able to remit to others, or to have our owne remitted? To have our own; no doubt. And that is here to be had. To the ſtabliſhing of our hearts with grace, to the cleanſing and quieting our conſciences. Which ſpirituall grace we receive in this ſpirituall food, and are made to 1 Cor. 10. 4. Iohn 15. 5. drinke (I will not ſay of the ſpirituall Rocke, but) of the ſpirituall Vine that followeth us, which Vine is CHRIST. To that then let us apply our ſelves. Both are received, both are holy, both co-operate to the remiſſion of ſinnes. The body:
Matth. 26. 28. (Matthew 26.) The Spirit here evidently. And there is no better way of celebrating the Feaſt of the receiving the HOLY GHOST, than ſo to doe, with receiving the ſame body that came of it at His birth, and that came from it now at His riſing againe.

And

And ſo receiving it, He that breathed, and He that was breathed, both of them vouchſafe to breathe into thoſe holy Myſteries a divine power and vertue;
And make them to us the bread of life, and the Cup of Salvation.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE,

At Haly-Rud Houſe, in Edenburgh, on the VIII. of Iune, A. D. MDCXVII. being WHITSUNDAY.

LUKE, Chap. IV. Verſ. XVIII, XIX.

SPIRITUS DOMINI ſuper Me, &c.

The SPIRIT of the LORD is upon Me, becauſe He hath anointed Me, that I ſhould preach the Goſpell to the poore: He hath ſent Me, that I ſhould heale the broken-hearted, that I ſhould preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of ſight to the blinde, and that I ſhould ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed.

And, that I ſhould preach the acceptable yeare of the LORD.

WE are fallen here upon CHRISTS firſt Sermon, preached at Nazareth: and upon his very Text. This I have read you, was his Text, taken out of the Prophet Eſay 61. Chapter, Verſe 1. There was no feare, CHRIST would have ranged farre from his matter, if he had taken none; yet, he took a Text, to teach us thereby, to do the like. To keepe us within; not to flie out, or preach much, either without, or beſides the book.

And he tooke his Text for the Day, as is plaine, by his application (verſe 21.) This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in your eares. This Day this Scripture. Our Maſters Scripture was for the Day: So would ours be.

For

For the day: and for the preſent occaſion. For, among the Writers, it is generally received, that when our Saviour made this Sermon: that yeare, it was with the Iewes, the yeare of Iubilee. And that therefore, He told them, It was fulfilled in their eares, they might heare the trumpets ſound to it. If it were ſo; this Text of the acceptable yeare, was as oppoſite, as could be choſen. That (it ſeemes) He turned the booke purpoſely to find it: Out of it, to ſpeake to them of the true Iubilee.

And if it were ſo (the yeare of Iubilee) it was the laſt, that ever they held. For, before fifty yeares came about againe, they were ſwept away: Temple, Sacrifice, Iubilee, People, and all. The Iubilees of the Law then failing, being come to their period, comes Chriſt with His; with a new Iubilee of the Goſpell, the true one (as, whereof thoſe of theirs were but ſhadowes only:) which Iubilee of the Goſpell, was the acceptable yeare, which Eſay heare meant.

Will ye then give mee leave now, to ſay of this Text of our Saviours, The Scripture ſuits well with this day: is fulfilled in it three wayes? In the 1 comming of the Spirit: 2 the end for which; To ſend to proclaime: 3 the matter which; to proclaime a Iubilee: 4 And a fourth, I will adde, of a preſent occaſion, as fit every way. The Summe.

First, it is of the comming of the Spirit. And, this day, the Spirit came. And the comming of the Spirit, in the Text here upon Chriſt, was the cauſe of the comming of the Spirit, this day, upon the Apoſtles. From this comming upon Him, came the comming upon them: Super Petrum, ſuper Iacobum, ſuper all the reſt; upon them, and upon us all, from this ſuper me. All our anointings are but drops from His anointing: All our miſſions, and commiſſions, but quils (as we ſay) out of this Commiſſion (here) miſit Me. Sicut miſit Me, Ego mitto vos: He ſent Me; As He ſent Me, I ſend you. By that, and by no other Commiſſion, did they or doe we, or ſhall ever any come. 1 Ioh. 20. 1.

That firſt, and this ſecond: the Miſit, and the Ad. Why came the Spirit on Chriſt? To ſend Him: ſend Him, to what? Ad evangelizandum. And why came the Spirit on the twelve, this day, but for the very ſame end? And it came therefore, for the purpoſe, in the ſhape of tongues. It is the office of the tongue, to be a trumpet to proclaime. It ſerves for no other end. 2

To proclaime, what? the acceptable yeare of the Lord, that is, the Iubilee. Now fifty is the number of the Iubilee; which number agreeth well with this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. What the one, in yeares; the other, in dayes. So that, this is the Iubilee (as it were) of the yeare (or the yearely memory of the yeare of iubilee) that, the Pentecoſt of yeares; this, the iubilee of dayes. Theſe three for the Day. 3

And may we not adde a fourth, from the preſent occaſion? I take it, we may; and that not unfit neither, as peculiar to this very Yeare, rather than to any other. There falleth out (lightly) but one jubilee in a mans age. 1 And this preſent yeare is (yet) the jubilee-yeare of Your Majeſties life and Reigne. 2 And this day is the jubilee-day of that yeare. 3 And yet further, if we take not jubilee, for the time, but for the joy, (for the word jubilee is taken, as for the time of the joy, ſo for the joy of the time;) and ſo referre it to the late great joy and jubilee, at your Majeſties receiving hither to Your Nazareth (the countrey where you were brought up) which then was fulfilled in your eares: Our eares (I am ſure) were filled full with it. So that firſt and laſt the text ſuites with the day, and both ſuit well, with the preſent occaſion. 4

To returne to our Saviour: Who ſtanding now with His loynes girt, ready to go about the errand, He came for; (as the manner is) He was firſt to read His Commiſſion. This it is (the words, I have read) drawne and ready penned for Him, long before, by the Prophet Eſay here, who had the honour to be the Regiſter of this, and diverſe other inſtruments, touching Chriſts Nature, Perſon, and Offices. And, upon the reading of this, He entered in His office.

II. You may plainly know, it was his Inauguration (this,) or firſt entring on His Office, by the proclamation following, of opening the Goale, and letting the Priſoners goe free: So is (ever) the faſhion of Princes, to make the joy generall, of their comming to their kingdomes; to releaſe thoſe, that ſtand committed; to grant free and generall pardons to all, that will ſue for them; to be at the charge of miſſilia, certain new peeces of coine, to be caſt abroad among the people.

Accordingly, were there this day of the Spirits comming, by one Sermon of Act. 7. 52. S. Peters three thouſand ſet at liberty, that had been captives before, under Satan. A largeſſe of new tongues (as it were miſſilia) caſt downe from heaven. A generall pardon proclaimed, even for them that had beene the betrayers, and murtherers of the Son of God, if they would come in. That it was indeed a right day of Iubilee. And this, is the Summe of all.

The Diviſion. The parts as they lye, are theſe: 1 Firſt, of the Spirits being on Chriſt: 2 Annointing Him: 3 Sending Him. Theſe three.

I. II 2 Then, whereto He was ſo annointed and ſent; to preach the Goſpell, or glad tidings (glad tidings or Goſpell, both are one:) and that even to the poore.

III 3 Thirdly, whereof the tydings is: of an excellent Phyſitian: a Phyſitian of the heart, one that can cure a broken heart.

IV. 4 Of theſe hearts. 1 How they came broken firſt, and there are three wayes here ſet downe. 1 By being Captives: 2 by being in a darke dungeon, where their ſight was even taken from them: 3 by being there in irons, ſo as they were even bruiſed with them. Three, able (I thinke) to breake any mans heart alive.

2 Then, how they came cured. And that is by good newes. Two proclamations, (for κηρυξαι to proclaime, is twice repeated.) 1 One containing a particular remedy of thoſe three ſeverall maladies: 1 Of a partie, one with a Ranſome, or redemption for the captives: 2 with an engine, or toole to knock off their irons: 3 with the keyes of the priſon, to let them out. And this to begin with. 2 Then (to conclude with) a ſecond Proclamation, that makes up all; of a yeare of Iubilee; and ſo, of reſtitution of them to their former forfeited eſtates, by GODS accepting them to favour, this acceptable time.

This, is the Summe of Chriſts Commiſſion here read. And indeed, a briefe of His Offices all three. 1 In preaching the glad newes of the Goſpell, of His Prophecy: 2 In granting pardon, and enlarging priſoners, of His Kingdome. 3 In proclaiming a Iubilee, of His Prieſt-hood (for, that, the peculiar of the Prieſts Office.) So, all are in, that pertaine to Chriſt. And all, that, to Ieſus too: Who ſheweth Himſelfe Ieſus, in nothing ſo much, as in being the Phyſitian of a broken contrite heart.

Of the Spirits being on Chriſt.

WE cannot better begin, than with the Bleſſed Trinity. In the three firſt words, the three Perſons reaſonable cleare. 1 The Spirit, 2 He, whoſe the ſpirit (Domini:) 3 on whom the Spirit, ſuper Me.

The Spirit, that is, the Holy Ghoſt. He, whoſe the ſpirit, God the Father. He, on whom the ſpirit, our Saviour Chriſt. He, the ſuper quem (here.)

Theſe three diſtinct: 1 the ſpirit, from the 2 Lord, whoſe the ſpirit is: 1 the ſpirit, that was upon, 3 from Him, it was upon. Yet, all three in one joynt concurrence, to one and the ſame worke, , the jubilee of the Goſpell.

Vpon Me, is Chriſts Perſon. But, His perſon onely according to one of His Natures; His humane. The ſpirit was not upon Him, but as He was man. Theſe three, 1 To be ſent, 2 to be annointed, 3 to have a ſuper eum, ſavour of inferiority (all) to the Sender, Anointer, ſuperiour. And ſo (indeed) for us, He became lower than, in Himſelf Himſelfe, was. In the ſimilitude of ſinfull fleſh, had a ſpirit, to anoint Him In formâ ſervi had a LORD, to ſend Him about the meſſage here. Rom.8.3. Phil.1.7.

But, that CHRIST ſuffer not in His honour, we ſupply: that the Spirit, who is here ſaid to be Spiritus Domini, is elſe-where ſaid to be Spiritus Chriſti ([a] Rom. 8.) [b] The ſpirit of the Father (*Matth.*10.) And the ſpirit, of the [c] Sonne, both (Gal. 4.) The ſpirit that ſent Him here, ſent by Him elſe-where, [d] Whom I will ſend (Ioh. 15.) This ſets Him upright againe. As the one ſhewes Him to be Man; ſo the other, to be God. And, as God, He hath no ſuperiour: No Lord, to owne Him: No ſpirit, to anoint Him.

a Rom.8.9. b Mat.10.20. c Gal.4.6. d Ioh 16.

And (if I miſtake not) a kind of inckling of thus much, is even in the very words. The word [LORD] in Eſay, is Plurall; and ſo, more perſons than one, whoſe the ſpirit is, and from whom He proceeds. And if you would know how many; In Eſay the words be two: ſo not a ſingle proceeding, from one: but, a double, from two, as the word is double. S. Baſil ſaith it ſhort, ὡς θεὸς, χορηγεῖ· ὡς ἄνθρωπος, λήψεται: As GOD, He ſends it; as Man, He receives it. Vpon Him, as Man; from Him, as God.

Of Him then, as Man, three things here are ſaid, the ſpirit [1] was upon Him: [2] annointed Him, [3] ſent Him. But it is ſaid: the ſpirit is upon Me, becauſe He hath anointed me: So as, the anointing is ſet, as the ἔνεκεν, or cauſe, why He was upon Him. And then, that, (His annointing) as the cauſe, is firſt in nature. But it cannot be conceived, but the ſpirit muſt be alſo upon him, to annoint Him, the ſpirit is the Vnction: the ſpirit then was upon Him, two ſeverall times, for two ſeverall ends. [1] To anoint Him: And, after He was anointed, to ſend Him, the ſecond. Of this annointing we are to touch, [1] when it was: [2] with what it was: [3] and how it comes to be termed annointing. 2 His anointing.

When was He thus annointed? Not now, or here, firſt: but long before; even from the very time of His conceiving. When the Word became fleſh, the fleſh, with the Word and (by meanes of it) with the whole Deitie, was annointed all over; and by vertue thereof, filled with the fulneſſe of all grace. For, this we are to hold: that Chriſt was ever Chriſt (that is) ever anointed, from the very firſt inſtant of all; He was never unanointed, not one moment. 1 When was it. Ioh.1.14.

Anointed with what? I have already told you, with the Deitie, by vertue of the Perſonall union of the ſecond Perſon of the Deitie. Why then is the Holy Ghoſt called the Vnction? Why is Chriſt expreſly ſaid to be anointed with the Holy Ghoſt? Why not, with the Father as well? 2 With what.

Why not: To retaine to each Perſon, His owne peculiar, His proper act, in this common worke of them all: or (as the Hebrewes ſpeake) to keepe every word upon his right wheele.

Father, is a terme of nature. So, to the Father we aſcribe, what the Son hath by nature. For, that He is the Son, is of nature, not of grace.

But, that the Man-hood is taken into GOD, that was not of nature, but of grace. And, what is of grace, is ever properly aſcribed to the Spirit. There are diverſities of graces, all from the ſame ſpirit. And the proceeding of grace from it, not as by nature, but Vbi vult, blowes where it liſts freely. All then, of grace, proceeding from the ſpirit: Accordingly, the Conception of Chriſts fleſh, and the ſending it with the fulneſſe of grace (or anointing it) is aſcribed to the Spirit. 1 Cor. 12.4. Ioh.3.8.

But, this enduing with grace, how comes it to be called annointing? For nothing, but for the reſemblance it hath, with an ointment. An ointment is a compoſition (we know:) the ingredients of it, oile and ſweet odours. By vertue of the oile, it ſokes even into the bones (ſaith the Pſalme:) but, it workes upon the joynts and ſinewes, ſenſibly; make them ſupple and lithe, and ſo the more freſh and active to beſtirre themſelves. By vertue of the ſweet odours mixt with it, it workes upon the ſpirits and ſenſes; cheeres him and makes him glad, that is anointed with it. And not him alone, but all that are about and neare him, qui in odore unguentorum, that take delight in 3 How called annointing. Pſal.109.18. Pſal.45.8. Cant.1.3.

in his company, to goe and to run with him, and all for the fragrant sweet sent they feele to come from him.

Of which two, the oyle represents the vertue of the power of the Spirit, piercing thorow (but gently) like Oyle. The Odours, the sweet comfort of the graces, that proceed from the HOLY GHOST. Nothing, more like. And this for Hit: Annointing.

3 His sending.

Now the same spirit, that was thus upon Him, at His Conception, to annoint Him; was even now upon Him againe, to manifest, and to send Him. When? At His Baptisme (a little before.) Not secretly, as then at His conception, but in a visible shape upon Him, before a great concourse of people: (to shew: there ought to be an outward Calling:) what time, the Dove laid that, which in it, is answerable to our hands, upon Him.

Luk. 3. 22.

Not, to endue Him with ought: (that was done before, long:) but, to manifest to all, this was He; this the Partie, before annointed, and now sent, that they might take heed to Him. It was the Holy Ghosts first Epiphanie (this:) He was never seene before: But, Christs second Epiphanie. The other, at His birth, or comming into the world: This now, at His calling, or sending into the world. That first, To enable him, to his Office: This, to designe him to it. By that, furnished for it: by this sent, severed, and set about the worke, He came for.

But, before we come to the worke, let us first reflect a little upon these: they serve our turne; are for our direction. These (both) were done to Christ, to the end He might teach the Church, that the same were to be on them, who in Christs stead are employed in the same businesse, ad Evangelizandum. The Holy Ghost, to be upon them; upon them, to anoint them, and to send them, both: but, first to anoint; then, to send them. To be, and in this order to be. Unlesse they be first annointed, not to be sent; and, though never so annointed, not to start out of themselvs, but to stay till they be sent.

The spirit to bee upon them; the same, that upon Christ, though not in the same, but in a broad and a large difference or degree of being. Vpon Him without measure; Not so, on us: but, on some, lesse (the measure of the Hin;) on some, more (the measure of the Epha:) but every one, his Gomer at least. Some Feathers of the Dove (as it were) though not the Dove it selfe; not the whole spirit entire, as upon Him.

On His head, the whole box of ointment was broken, which from Him ran down upon the Apostles, somewhat more fresh and full; and (ever) the further the thinner, as the nature of things liquid is: but, some small streames trickle downe even to us, and to our times still.

This on-being, shewes it selfe first, in that which stands first (the Annointing.

I shall not need tell you, the spirit comes not upon us now, at our conception in the wombe, to anoint us there. No: wee behoove to light our lamps oft, and to spend much oyle at our studies, yer we can attaine it. This way, come wee to our anointing, now, by bookes: This Booke chiefly; but, in a good part also, by the bookes of the Ancient Fathers, and Lights of the Church, in whom the sent of this ointment was fresh, and the temper true; on whose writings it lyeth thick, and we thence strike it off, and gather it safely.

You will marke: the anointing is set, for the cause; the spirit is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me. Then, sublatâ causâ, and à sensu contrario, the spirit is not upon me, because He hath not annointed Me. Againe, because he hath anointed Me, he hath sent me. And then it followes, because He hath not anointed Me, He hath not sent me. No speaking of the spirits on-being; no talke of sent by Him, without it. Where bee they then, that say; the lesse anointing, the more of the spirit? Indeed, the more blinde, the more bold; and so, the fitter to goe on some other errand (perhaps) but not this.

No

No no: the Spirit makes none of theſe drie miſſions; ſends none of theſe ſame inuncti, ſuch as have never a feather of the Doves wing, not any ſparke of the fire of this day, not ſo much as a drop of this ointment. You ſhall ſmell them ſtraight, that have it; the Myrrhe, Aloes, and Caſsia will make you glad. And you ſhall even as ſoone finde the others. Either they want odor: Annointed, I cannot ſay, but beſmeered with ſome unctious ſtuffe (go to, be it oile:) that gives a glibneſſe to the tongue to talke much and long, but no more ſent in it, than in a drie ſtick; no odours in it at all. Either odours they want (I ſay:) or, their odours are not laid in oile. For, if in oile; you ſhall not ſwell them ſo for a few ſet ſermons; if they be annointed, not perfumed or waſhed (for, ſuch Divines we have.) If it be ſome ſweet water, out of a caſting bottle, the ſent will away ſoone; water-colours, or water-odours will not laſt. But, if laid in oile throughly, they will: feare them not. To them that are ſtuffed (I know) all is one: they that have their ſenſes about them, will ſoone put a difference. Pſal. 45. 8.

But what? If He be annointed, then turne Him off hardly with no more adoe, without ſtay for any ſending at all? Nay, we ſee here, only annointing ſerved not Chriſt Himſelfe: He was ſent, and outwardly ſent beſides. Meſſias he was, in regard of his annointing: Shilo, He was too, in regard of his ſending. If you love your eyes, waſh them in the water of Shilo, that is by interpretation, Sent. Or (to ſpeake in the ſtile of the Text) as he was Chriſt for his annointing; So was he an Apoſtle, for His ſending, So is he called (Heb. 3.) the Apoſtle of our profeſſion, with plaine reference to ἀπόστολον here, the word in the Text. Ioh. 9. 7. Heb. 3. 1.

Vnction then is to goe before, but not to goe alone; miſſion is to follow: and no man, though never ſo peruncti eo ipſo, to ſtirre niſi qui vocatus erit ſicut Aaron, Vnleſſe he be called as was Aaron; unleſſe hee bee ſent as Chriſt here was: for feare of Currebant & non mittebam eos, in the Prophet; Or of, How ſhall they unleſſe they be ſent, in the Apoſtle. For his life, hee knew not (if neither Aaron, nor CHRIST) how any might ſtep up, without calling, ſending, ordaining, laying on of hands: all are one. Heb. 5. 4. Ier. 23. 21. Rom. 10. 15.

And marke well this, that the Holy Ghoſt came upon Chriſt alike for both: that there is the Holy Ghoſt no leſſe in this ſending, than in the annointing. The very calling it ſelfe, is a grace expreſly ſo called, Rom. 12. Epheſ. 3. and in divers places elſe. Every grace is of the Holy Ghoſt; and goeth ever, and is termed by the name of the Holy Ghoſt uſually. And in this ſenſe, the Holy Ghoſt is given and received in holy Orders, and we doe well avow that, we ſay, Receive the Holy Ghoſt. Rom. 12. 5. Epheſ. 3. 7.

But, we have not all, when we have both theſe; for, ſhall we ſo dwell upon anointing and ſending, as we paſſe by the ſuper me, the firſt of all the three, and (ſure) not the laſt to be looked after. A plaine note it is, but not without uſe, this ſituation of the Spirit; that he is ſuper. For, if he be ſuper; we be ſub. That we be carefull then to preſerve him in his ſuper, to keepe him in his due place (that is) above. In ſigne whereof, the Dove hovered aloft over Chriſt, and came downe upon him: And in ſigne thereof, wee ſubmit our heads, in annointing to have the oile powred upon; we ſubmit our heads in ordaining, to have hands laid upon them. So, ſubmit we doe in ſigne that ſubmit we muſt: That, not only miſſion, but ſubmiſſion is a ſigne of one truly called, to this buſineſſe. Somewhat of the Dove there muſt be (needs:) meekneſſe, humbleneſſe of minde.

But lightly you ſhall find it, that thoſe that be neq; uncti neque loti, neither anointed nor ſcarce well waſhed; the leſſe ointment, the worſe ſending, the farther from this ſubmiſſive humble minde. That above? Nay, any above? Nay, they inferiour to none. That above, and they under? Nay under no Spirit: no ſuper, they. Of all Prepoſitions, they endure not that, not ſuper: all equall, all even at leaſt. Their ſpirit not ſubject to the ſpirit of the Prophets, nor of the Apoſtles neither (if they were now alive:) but beare themſelves ſo high, doe tam altum ſpirare, as if this Spirit were there underling, and their ghoſt above the Holy Ghoſt. There may be a ſprite in them, there is no Spirit upon them, that indure no ſuper, none above them. So, now wee have all, wee ſhould: Vnction, out of Vnxit; miſsion, out of miſit; ſubmiſsion, out of Super me.

Forward

II. The end whereto.

Forward now. Vpon me. How know we that? Becauſe He hath annointed me: Annointed, to what end? To ſend: Send, whereto? That followes now. Both whereto, and whom to. [1] Whereto? To bring good tydings: [2] Whom to? To the poore.

1 To bring good tydings

1 Whereto? If the ſpirit ſend Chriſt, Hee will ſend Him with the beſt ſending: and the beſt ſending, is to be ſent with a meſſage of good newes: the beſt, and the beſt welcome. We all ſtrive to beare them; we all love to have them brought. The Goſpell is nothing elſe, but a meſſage of good tydings. And Chriſt, as in regard of His ſending, an Apoſtle, the Arch-Apoſtle; So, in regard of that He is ſent with, an Evangeliſt, the Arch-Evangeliſt. Chriſt is to annoint; this, is a kind of annointing: and no Ointment ſo precious, no Oile ſo ſupple, no Odor ſo pleaſing, as the knowledge of it; called therefore by the Apoſtle, Odor vitæ, the Savour of life vnto life, in them that receive it.

2 Cor. 2. 16.

2 To the poore.

2 Send with this, and to whom? To the poore. You may know, it is the ſpirit of God by this. That ſpirit it is: and they that annointed with it, take care of the poore. The ſpirit of the world, and they that annointed with it, take little heed to evangelize any ſuch, any poore ſoules. But in the tydings of the Goſpell, they are not left out: taken in by name (we ſee.) In ſending thoſe tydings, there is none excluded. No reſpect of perſons with God: None of Nations; to every Nation, Gentile and Iew: None of Conditions; to every condition, poore and rich. To them, that of all other are the leaſt likely. They are not troubled with much worldly good newes: Seldome come there any Poſts to them with ſuch. But the good newes of the Goſpell, reacheth even to the meaneſt. And reaching to them, it muſt needs be generall (this newes:) If to them, that of all other leaſt likely, then certainly, to all. Etiam pauperibus is (as if Hee had ſaid) even to poore and all, by way of extent, ampliando. But, no wayes to ingroſſe it, or appropriate it to them only. The tydings of the Goſpell are as well for a [a] Lydia the purple-ſeller; as for [b] Simon the tanner: For the [c] Areopagite, the Iudge at Athens, as for the [d] Iaylour at Philippos: for the [e] Elect Lady, as for widow [f] Dorcas: [g] For the Lord Treaſurer of Æthiopia, as for the [h] Begger at the beautifull gate of the Temple: [i] for the houſhold of Cæſar, as for the [k] houſhold of Stephanas; yea and (if he will) for [l] King Agrippa too.

As indeed, I know none ſo rich, but needs theſe tydings: all to feele the want of them in their ſpirits: No Dices quia dives ſum; as few ſparks of a Phariſee as may be, in them, that will be intereſſed in it.

Revel. 3. 17.

III The tydings of a Phyſitian for broken hearts.

Well, we ſee to whom: what may theſe newes be? Newes of a new Phyſitian, Καρδιατρος, Medicus cordis, one that can give Phyſick to heale a broken heart. And newes of ſuch an one, is good newes indeed. They that can cure parts leſſe principall, broken armes or legs, or limbes out of joynt, are much made of, and ſent for far and neare: What ſay you to one, that is good at a broken heart? make that whole, ſet that in joynt againe, if it happen to be out? So they underſtood it plainly, by their ſpeech to him after, Medice cura teipſum.

Verſe 23.

The heart (ſure) is the part of all other, we would moſt gladly have well. Give me any griefe to the griefe of the heart (ſaith one that knew what he ſaid:) Omni cuſtodiâ cuſtodi cor (ſaith Salomon) keepe thy heart above all: if that be downe, all is downe: looke to that in any wiſe. Now, it is moſt proper for the Spirit to deale with that part: it is the fountaine of the ſpirits of life, and whither (indeed) none can come, but the ſpirit, to do any cure to purpoſe: that, if Chriſt, if the ſpirit take it not in hand, all cures elſe are but palliative; they may drive it away for a while, it will come againe worſe than ever. Now then, to Medice cura (as Chriſt after ſaith) to this new cure.

Eccluſ. 15. 17.

In

In every cure our rule, is firſt to looke to de cauſis morborum, how the heart can be broken: then after, de methodo medendi, the way here to helpe it.

IV. Of the heart. 1 How they came broken.

How comes the heart broken? The common hammer that breakes them, is ſome bodily or worldly croſſe, ſuch as we commonly call heart-breakings. There be here in the Text, three ſtrokes of this hammer, able (I thinke) to breake any heart in the world.

1 Captivitie. They be captives firſt: and captives and caitives, in our ſpeech ſound much upon one. It is (ſure) a condition able to make any man hang up his Harpe, and ſit weeping by the waters of Babylon. There, is one ſtroke. 1 By being captives. Pſal. 137. 2.

2 There followes another worſe yet. For, in Babylon though they were captives, yet went they abroad, had their libertie. Theſe here are in Priſon: And in ſome blinde hole there, as it might be in the dungeon, where they ſee nothing. That (I take it) is meant by blinde here in the text: Blind, for want of light; not for want of ſight, though thoſe both come to one, are convertible. They that be blinde, ſay they are darke: and they that be in the darke, for the time are deprived of ſight, have no manner uſe of it at all, no more than a blinde man. Now, they that row in the Galleyes, yet this comfort they have, they ſee the light: and if a man ſee nothing elſe, the light of it ſelfe is comfortable. And a great ſtroke of the hammer it is, not to have ſo much as that poore comfort left them. 2 In a dark dungeon. Eccleſ. 11. 7.

3 But yet are not we at the worſt; One ſtroke more. For, one may be in the dungeon and yet have his limmes at large, his hands and feet at libertie. But ſo have not thoſe in the text, but are in irons; and thoſe ſo heavie and ſo pinching, as they are even τιθραυσμένοι, bruiſed and hurt with them. See now their caſe. 1 Captives; and not only that, but 2 in priſon. In priſon, not above, but in the dungeon, the deepeſt, darkeſt, the blindeſt hole there; no light, no ſight at all: 3 And, in the hole, with as many irons upon them, that they are even bruiſed and ſore with them. And tell me now, if theſe three together be not enough to breake Manaſſes, or any mans heart, and to make him have cor contritum indeed. 3 And bruiſed with irons there.

They be: but what is this to us? This is no mans caſe here. No more was it any of theirs, that were at Chriſts Sermon: yet Chriſt ſpake to the purpoſe, we may be ſure. We may not then take it literally, as meant by the body: Chriſt, meant no ſuch captivitie, dungeon or irons. That He meant not ſuch, is plaine. He ſaith, He was ſent to free captives, to open priſons: But, Hee never ſet any captive free, in His life, nor opened any goale, (in that ſenſe) to let any priſoner forth. Another ſenſe then, we are to ſeeke. Remember ye not, we began with the Spirit? the buſineſſe, the Spirit comes about, is ſpirituall, not ſecular. So, all theſe ſpiritually to be underſtood. As (indeed) they are all three appliable to the caſe of the Spirit; and a plaine deſcription of all our ſtates, out of Chriſt, and before He take us in hand.

1 There is captivitie there, wherein men are held in ſlavery under ſinne and Sathan, worſe than that we now ſpeake of. Saint Paul knew it: ſpeakes of it, Rom. 7. and when he hath ſo, crieth out, Wretched man that I am, who ſhall rid me of it! Verily, there is no Turke ſo hurries men, puts them to ſo baſe ſervices, as ſinne doth her captives: Give me one that hath beene in her captivitie, and is got out of it, & ſcit quod dico, he can tell, it is true I ſay. Rom. 7. 24.

2 There is a priſon too: not Manaſſes priſon. But aske David, who never came in any goale; what he meant, when he ſaid, I am ſo faſt in priſon, as I know not how to get out. And that you may know what priſon that was, he cries, O bring my ſoule out of priſon! A priſon there is then, of the ſoule no leſſe than of the body. In which priſon were ſome of thoſe that Chriſt preached here to: S. Matthew ſaith, they ſate in darkneſſe and in the ſhadow of death, even as men in the dungeon doe. Pſal. 88. 8. Pſal. 142. 7. Mat. 4. 16. Prov. 5. 22. Acts 8. 23.

There are chaines too, that is alſo the ſinners caſe, He is even tied with chaines of his owne ſinnes (ſaith Salomon) with the bonds of iniquitie (Saint Peter) which bands

Pſal.106.16. are they, David thanks GOD for breaking in ſunder. There need no other bonds, we will ſay, if once we come to feele them. The gals, that ſinne makes in the conſcience, are Pſal 105.18. the entering of the iron into our ſoule.

But you will ſay, we feele not theſe neither, no more than the former. No do? Take this for a rule: If CHRIST heale them, that be broken-hearted; broken-hearted we behove to be, yer He can heale us. He is medicus cordis indeed; but it is cordis contriti. It is a condition ever annexed (this) to make us the more capable; and likewiſe a diſpoſition it is, to make us the more curable. That ſame pauperibus (before) and this contritis now, they limit Chriſt's cure; his cure, and his Commiſſion both: and unleſſe they be, or untill they be, this Scripture is not, nor cannot be fulfilled in us. In our eares, it may be; but in our hearts, never.

That, as ſuch as come to be healed by his Majeſtie, are firſt ſearched, and after either put by, or admitted as cauſe is: ſo there would be a Scrutinie of ſuch, as make Pſal.119.70. toward CHRIST. What, are you poore? poore in ſpirit? (for the purſe it skils not:) No, but dicis quia dives, in good caſe: CHRIST is not for you then; He is ſent to the poore. What, is your heart broken? No, but heart-whole, a heart as brawne: then are you not for this cure. In all Chriſts diſpenſatory, there is not a medicine, for ſuch a heart; a heart like brawne (that is) hard and un-yeelding.

CHRIST Himſelfe ſeemes to give this Item, when He applies it after: Many Verſ.25. Widowes, Many Lepers (ſaith He:) and ſo many ſinners: Elias ſent to none; but the poore Widow of Sarepta; Eliſæus healed none, but only Naaman, after his ſpirit came downe, was broken. No more doth Chriſt, but ſuch as are of a contrite heart.

Verily, the caſe as before we ſet it downe, is the ſinners caſe; feele he it, feele he it not. But if any be ſo benummed, as he is not ſenſible of this; ſo blinde, as dungeon or no dungeon, all is one to him; if any have this Scirrhum cordis, that makes him paſt feeling, it is no good ſigne: but it may be, our houre is not yet come, our cure is yet
Prov.7.22. behind, But, if it ſhould ſo continue, and never be otherwiſe, then were it a very evill ſigne. For what is ſuch a ones caſe, but (as Salomon ſaith) as the Oxe that is led to the ſlaughter without any ſenſe, or the foole that goes laughing when he is carried to be well whipped? What caſe more pitifull?

You will ſay: we have no hammer, no worldly Croſſe to breake our hearts. It may be. That, is Manaſſes hammer, the common hammer (indeed:) but, that is not King Davids hammer, which I rather commend to you; the right hammer to doe the feate, to worke contrition in kinde. The right, is the ſight of our owne ſins. And, I will ſay this for it: that I never in my life ſaw any man brought ſo low with any worldly calamitie, as I have, with this ſight. And theſe, I ſpeake of, were not of the common ſort, but men of ſpirit and valour, that durſt have looked death in the face. Yet when GOD opened their eyes, to ſee this ſight; their hearts were broken, yea, even ground to powder with it; contrite indeed.

And this is ſure; if a man be not humbled with the ſight of his ſins, It is not all the croſſes or loſſes in the world will humble him aright.

This is the right. And without any worldly croſſe, this we might have, if we loved not ſo to abſent our ſelves from our ſelves, to be even fugitivi cordis, to run away from our owne hearts; be ever abroad, never within: if we would but ſometimes
Eſay 46.8. redire ad cor; returne home thither, and deſcend into our ſelves; ſadly and ſeriouſly to bethinke us of them, and the danger we are in, by them; this might be had: And this would be had, if it might be. If not, in default of this (no remedy) the common hammer muſt come; and God ſend us Manaſſes hammer, to breake it; ſome bodily ſickneſſe, ſome worldly affliction, to ſend us home into our ſelves. But ſure the Angell muſt Ioh.5.4. come downe and the water be ſtirred; elſe we may preach long enough to uncontrite hearts, but no good will be done, till then.

I have beene too long in the Cauſe: but, the knowledge of the Cauſe, in every diſeaſe, we reckon halfe the cure. To the healing, now.

The

The word for heale, in Esay (where this Text is) signifies to binde up. The cure begins with ligature, the most proper cure, for fractures, or ought that is broken. Nay, in wounds and all, as appeareth by the Samaritan. The fluxe is so stayed, which if it continue running on us still, in vaine talke we of any healing. It is not begun till that stay and run no longer. The sin that Christ cures, He bindes up, He stayes (to begin with.) If He cover sin it is with a plaister. He covers and cures together, both under one. Luk.10.34.

This word [broken hearted] the Hebrewes take not, as we doe; we, broken for sin; they, broken of, or from sin. And we have the same phrase with us; To breake one of the evill fashions, or inclinations, he hath beene given to. So, to breake the heart. And so must it be broken, or ever it be whole. Both senses: either of them doth well; but both together best of all.

2 How they are cured.

This done, now to the healing part. The Heathen observed long since: ψυχῆς νοσήσας ἰατρὸν λόγοι, the soules cure is by words: and the Angell saith to Cornelius, of S. Peter, He shall speake to thee words, by which thou and thy houshold shall be saved. Act 10.6.

By good tydings.

And by no words sooner, than by the sound of good tydings. Good newes, is good physicke sure (such the disease may be:) and a good message, a good medicine. There is power in it both wayes. Good newes, hath healed; evill newes hath killed many. The good newes of Ioseph's welfare, we see, how it even revived old Iacob: And, the evill of the Arke of God taken, it cost Eli his life. Nothing workes upon the heart more forcibly, either way. Gen.45.27. 1 Sam.4.18.

Proclaimed.

What are these newes, and first how come they? By κηρύξαι they come: no secret whispered newes from man to man, in a corner: No flying newes. They be proclaimed, these; so authenticall. Proclaimed: And so they had need, for if our sins once appeare in their right forme, there is evill newes certainly: let the Divell alone with that, to proclaime them, to preach damnation to us. Contraria curantur Contrariis, we had need have some good proclaimed, to cure those of his.

Two Proclamations here are, one in the neck of another. Of which the former, in the three branches of it, applieth in particular, a remedie to the three former maladies; Is the topique medicine (as it were:) the later is the panacea, makes them all perfectly whole and sound.

1 The first Proclamation.

The first Proclamation. To the Captive first, that there is one at hand with a ransome, to redeeme him. This will make him a whole man.

2 To them in the dungeon; of one to draw them forth thence, and make them ἀναβλέψαι, see the light againe.

3 To them in chaines; of one to strike off their bolts and loose them, to open the prison-doore, and let them goe: ἀποστεῖλαι, to make Apostles of them, and send them abroad into the wide word. It is the fruit of Christs ἀποσταλκε, this ἀποστεῖλαι; Christs Apostleship was, and is, to make such Apostles.

Now, this is nothing but the very summe of the Gospell: 1 Of one comming with a ransome in one hand, to lay downe for us the price of our redemption from Sathans captivitie: 2 And with the keyes of hell and death in the other. Keyes of two sorts: 3 One, to undoe their fetters and loose them; the other, to open the dungeon and prison-doore (both the dungeon of despaire, and the prison of the Law) and let them out of both. There can be no better newes, nor kindlier physicke in the world, 1 than word of redemption to captives: 2 than to see the light againe, to them in the Limbo: 3 than of enlargement, to them in bands: but specially, than of a dismission, from prison, dungeon, irons and all. And this is proclaimed here, and published by Christ in his Sermon at Nazareth: and was after performed and accomplished by him, at his Passion in Ierusalem. Revel.1.18.

2 The second Proclamation.

This is good newes indeed: but here comes better. It is seconded with another Proclamation, that makes up all. For in very deed; they that by the first proclamation tion were ſo releaſed, for all that; and after all that, what were they, but a ſort of poore ſnakes, turned out of the Gaole, but have nothing to take to? Comming thither, they were turned out of all that ever they had. That, their caſe, though it bee leſſe miſerable, yet is miſerable ſtill: the languor morbi ſtill hangs upon them.

We lacke ſome reſtaurative for that. Here comes (now) phyſick, to cure that and make them perfectly well. A ſecond κηρύξαι that they ſhall be reſtored, to all that ever they had. How ſo? For harke: here is the acceptable yeare; that is, a jubilee proclaimed. And then, even of courſe they are (by force of the jubilee) ſo to be. The nature of the jubilee was ſo, you know. Then not only all bond ſet free; all priſons (for debt) ſet open; but beſide, all were reſtored then, to their former mort-gaged, forfeited, or any wayes aliened eſtates, in as ample manner, as ever they had, or held them at any time before.

A reſtitution in integrum; a re-inveſting them in what they were borne to or were any wayes poſſeſſed of: that, if they had ſold themſelves out of all, and lay in execution for huge ſummes (as it might be ten thouſand talents,) then, all was quit; they came to all againe; in as good caſe, as ever they were in all their lives. There can be no more joyfull newes, no more cordiall phyſicke, than this. The yeare of Iubilee? why, that time, ſo acceptable, ſo joyfull, as it hath even given a denomination to joy it ſelfe. The height of joy is jubilee; the higheſt terme to expreſſe it, is jubilate; that goes beyond all the words of joy whatſoever.

And this comes well now: for, the jubilee of the Law drawing to an end, and this very yeare being now the laſt, Chriſts jubilee, (the jubilee of the Goſpell) came fitly to ſucceed. Wherein, the primitive eſtate, we had in Paradiſe, we are re-ſeiſed of anew. Not the ſame, in ſpecie, but as good, nay better, For, if for the terreſtriall Paradiſe by the flood deſtroyed, we have a celeſtiall, we have our owne again, (I trow) with advantage.

A yeare it is called (to keepe the terme ſtill on foote, that formerly it went by.) Onely this difference: the yeare (there) was a definite time; but here, a definite is put for an indefinite. This yeare is more than twelve moneths. In this acceptable yeare. the Zodiaque goes never about. On this day of Salvation, the Sunne never goes downe. For in this, the jubilee of the Goſpell paſſeth that of the Law: that, held but for a yeare, and no longer: But, this is continuall, laſts ſtill. Which is plaine: in that, divers
2 Cor. 6. 2. yeares after this of Chriſts, the Apoſtle ſpeakes of it, as ſtill in eſſe: Even then, makes this proclamation ſtill, Behold this is the day, Behold, now is the acceptable time. Whereby we are given to underſtand, that Chriſts jubilee, though it began, when Chriſt firſt
Revel. 4. 6. preached this Sermon, yet it ended not with the end of that yeare (as did Aarons) but was Evangelium æternum: As alſo perpetui jubilæi; Everlaſting good newes of a perpetuall jubilee, that doth laſt, and ſhall laſt, as long as the Goſpell ſhall be preAct. 3. 21. ched, by Himſelfe, or others ſent by Him to the end of the world, the time of reſtoring all things.

It is called acceptable, by the terme of the benefit, that hapned on it, which was, our acceptation. For then, we and all mankinde were made (not δεκτοὶ, that is, acceptable, but as the word is) δεχθεὶ, that is, actually accepted, or received by God. Out of whoſe preſence we were before caſt. And being by him ſo received, we did our ſelvs Ephes. 1. 4. receive againe, the earneſt of our inheritance, from which by meanes of the tranſgreſſion we were before fallen.

There is much in this term [accepting.] For, when is one ſaid to be accepted? Not, when his ranſome is paid, or the priſon ſet open; not when he is pardoned his fault, or reconciled, or become friends: but when he is received with armes ſpread, as was
Luk. 15. 20. 22 the loſt child in the Goſpell; ad ſtolam primam (as the terme is, out of that place.) Three degrees there are in it; 1 Accepted to pardon, that is συγχώρησιν: 2 Accepted to reconciliation, that is καταλλαγὴν: and further, 3 Accepted to repropitiation, that is ἱλασμὸν, to as good 2 Sam. 13. 39. 14. 23. grace and favour as ever, even in the very fulneſſe of it. They ſhew it, by three diſtinct degrees in Abſaloms receiving: 1 Pardoned he was, while he was yet in Geſhur: 2 Reconciled, when he had leave to come home to his owne houſe: 3 Repropitiate, when he

he was admitted to the Kings preſence and kiſſed him. That made up all, then he had all againe. And that is our very caſe.

Nay indeed, that is not all. It is more than ſo: Δεκτὸς (here) is in the Text of Eſay רעין: and that imparts more. For, that word, is ever turned by εὐδοκία, and that is Chriſts own acceptation (in whom I am well pleaſed) and the very terme of it. And he that is ſo accepted, I know not what he would have more. Mat. 17. 5.

This is the benefit that fell at this time: and for this, that fell on the time, the time it ſelfe, it fell on, is, and cannot be but acceptable; even eo nomine, that at ſuch a time, ſuch a benefit hapned to us. And in this reſpect it ever hath, and ever ſhall be an acceptable welcome time, this; and holden as a high Feaſt: like as the benefit is high, that befell us on it. Feſtum, a feaſt, for the pardon: Feſtum duplex, for the reconciliation: Feſtum magis duplex, for the being perfectly accepted to the favour of God, and by it reaccepting againe our prime eſtate.

Nay (laſt) it is called not onely Annus acceptus, but Annus Domini acceptus, or acceptus Domino: not only, the acceptable yeare; but, of the Lord, or to the Lord; (for ſo the Hebrew reads it, with the ſigne of the Dative; as if to GOD Himſelfe it were ſo.) And, to Him, ſo it is; and to His holy Angels in heaven, ſo it is. For, if the receiving any one contrite ſinner, by repentance, be matter of joy, to the whole Court of Heaven; if the receiving of but one; what ſhall we thinke of the generall receiving of the whole maſſe, which this day was effected? Luk. 15. 10.

Now, if to heaven, if to God Himſelfe it be ſo; To earth, to us, ſhall it not bee much more, whom much more it concerneth (I am ſure?) God getteth nothing by it; we doe: He is not the better for it, we are: Ever, the receiver, then the giver. The giver, more glory; but the receiver, more joy. That if it be the joy of heaven, it cannot be but the Iubilee of the earth; Even of the whole earth: Iubilate Deo omnis terra. Pſal. 66. 1.

The jubilee (ever) it began with no other ſound, but even of a Cornet, made of the hornes of a Ram. Of which hornes they give no other reaſon, but that it was ſo, in reference to the hornes of that Ram, that in the thicket was caught by the hornes, and ſacrificed in Iſaacs ſtead, even as Chriſt was, in ours. To ſhew, that all our jubilee hath relation to that ſpeciall ſacrifice, ſo plainely prefiguring that of Chriſts. Which feaſt of jubilee began ever, after the High Prieſt had offered his ſacrifice, and had beene in the Sancta Sanctorum. As this jubilee of Chriſt alſo tooke place, from His entring into the holy places made without hands, after His propitiatory Sacrifice offered up for the quicke and the dead, and for all yet unborne, at Eaſter. And, it was the tenth day, that: and this (now) is the tenth day ſince. Levit. 25. 9. Ioſ. 6. 4. Gen. 22. 13. Heb. 9. 11.

The memoriall, or myſterie of which ſacrifie of Chriſts, in our ſtead, is ever Caput letitia, the top of our mirth, and the initiation of the joy of our jubilee. Like as accipiam calicem ſalutaris, our taking the cup of Salvation, is the memoriall of our being accepted, or received and taken againe to Salvation. Wherewith let us alſo crowne this jubilee of ours. That ſo all the benefits of it, may take hold of us: ſpecially the red-integration of the favour of God, and the aſſurance or pledge of our reſtitution to thoſe joyes, and that jubilee, that only can give content to all our deſires when the time ſhall come of the reſtoring of all things. Pſal. 116. 13.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT GREEN-WICH, On the XXIV. of May, A.D. MDCXVIII. being WHITSVNDAY.

ACTS Chap. II.

Sed hoc eſt, quod dictum eſt, &c.

Verſ. 16. But this is that, which was ſpoken by the Prophet Ioel.

17. And it ſhall be in the laſt dayes (ſaith God) I will powre out of my Spirit upon all fleſh, and your ſons and your daughters ſhall propheſie, and your young men ſhall ſee viſions, and your old men ſhall dreame dreames.

18 And on my ſervants, and on mine hand-maides, I will powre out of my Spirit, and they ſhall propheſie.

19 And I will ſhew wonders in heaven above, and tokens in the earth beneath, blood, and fire, and the vapour of ſmoke.

20 The Sun ſhall be turned into darkneſſe, and the Moone into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come.

21 And it ſhall be, that whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved.

THeſe words may well ſerve for a Sermon, this day: they were a part of a Sermon, preached as this day. The firſt Whitſon-ſermon, that ever was: the firſt Whitſunday, that ever was. S. Peter preached it. And this was his Text, out of the ſecond Chap. of the Prophet Ioel. As Chriſt, the laſt yeare, out of Eſay: ſo Peter, this, out of Ioel. Both tooke Texts: both, for the day, and for the preſent occaſion.

The occaſion of this here, was a lewd ſurmiſe given out by ſome, touching the gift of tongues, this day ſent from heaven.

It ſhall be my firſt note. That looke, how ſoone GOD from heaven had ſent His fiery tongues upon His Apoſtles; the Divell from hell preſently ſent for his fiery tongues, and put them in the mouthes of his Apoſtles, to diſgrace and ſcoffe at thoſe of Gods ſending.

Ye

Ye may heare them ſpeak (at the thirteenth verſe:) Well fare this ſame good new wine; theſe good fellowes have been at it, and now they can ſpeak nothing but outlandiſh: ſome little broken Greek or Latine they had, and now out it comes.

Thus, that which was indeed grande miraculum, they turned into grande ludibrium. Of the great Myſtery of this day, they made a meere mockerie. Thoſe, that were baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, they traduced, as if they had ſouſed themſelves in new wine. Here is the Holy Ghoſts welcome into the world. This uſe doth the Devill make of ſome mens wits and tongues, to powre contempt on that, which God powreth forth, all that ever they can; even to work deſpite to the Spirit of Grace. Matth. 3. 11. Heb. 10. 29.

Being to make an apologie for himſelfe, and the reſt, (and indeed, for the Holy Ghoſt) S. Peter firſt prayes audience (at the 14. verſe.) Then tels them ſoberly, they miſſe the matter quite (at the 15.) It was too early day, to faſten any ſuch ſuſpition, upon any ſuch men as they were (to be gone, before nine in the morning.) But, this he ſtands not on, as not worth the anſwering. The Summ.

Here (at this Verſe) he tels them, it was no liquour, this ſpecially, no ſuch as they ſurmiſed. If it were any, if they would needs have it one, it was the Prophet Ioels, and none other, Somthing powred on, nothing powred in. Nothing, but the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt. This is it that was ſpoken by the Prophet Ioel.

So, habemus firmiorem ſermonem propheticum: and this, which ſeemed to happen thus on the ſudden, it was long ſince foretold; and alledges for it this text of the Prophet, that ſuch a thing there ſhould come to paſſe, an effuſion of the Spirit, and that a ſtrange one. And this they would find it to be; this Prophecie (of the Spirit powred) this day fulfilled in their eares. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

Of which Text, the ſpeciall points be two: 1 Of the Spirits powring: 2 Of the end whereto. The Diviſion.

The firſt I reduce to theſe foure. 1 The Thing: 2 the Act: 3 the Party by whom: 4 the Parties upon whom. 1 De Spiritu meo, is the thing. 2 Effundam, the act. 3 Dicit Dominus, the party by whom. 4 Super omnem carnem, the parties upon whom it is powred. I.

Then the end whereto. And in that foure more. The laſt end of all in the laſt word of all, ſalvabitur. That is the very end: and a bleſſed end, if by any means we may attaine to it. Then are there three other conducting to this. Two maine ones; and one acceſſorie, but yet as neceſſary as the other. 2 Cloſe to it, in the end, there is calling on the Name of the Lord: He that calleth on the Name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved. 3 And fartheſt from it at the beginning, there is prophetabunt, to call upon us to that end: And my ſervants ſhall prophecie. 4 And, betweene both theſe, there is a Memorandum of the Great Day of the Lord. Which is not from the matter neither, nor more than needs. For then (at that day) we ſhall ſtand more in need of ſaving: if we periſh then, we periſh for ever. And the mention and memory of that Day, will make us not deſpiſe prophecying, nor forget invocation; but be both more attentive in hearing of prophecie, and more devout in calling on the Name of the Lord. So, it may well goe for a third conducting meanes to our ſalvation. II.

Now, to bring this to the Day. This (it is ſaid) ſhall be in the laſt dayes. Which with S. Peter here; and with S. Paul (Heb. 1. 1.) yea and with the Rabbins themſelves, are the dayes of the Meſſiah. So, of our Meſſiah CHRIST (to us) and of none other. Of whoſe dayes, this is the very laſt. For, having done His errand, He was to go up againe, and to ſend His Spirit downe, to doe His, another while: which is the worke of this day. As His firſt then, the taking of our fleſh, ſo His laſt, the giving of his Spirit: the giving it abundantly, which is the effundam here.

It remaineth, that we pray to Him, who thus, of His Spirit powred forth this day, that He would vouchſafe on the ſame day to powre of it on us here: that we may ſo hold this Feaſt (the memory of it) and ſo heare the words of this Prophecie, as may be to his good acceptance, and our owne ſaving in the great Day, the Day of the Lord.

I. Of the Spirit powring. De Spiritu.

OF the thing powred firſt. De ſpiritu meo, the Spirit of GOD. Firſt of Him, to give Him the honour of His own Day.

The Spirit, is of Himſelfe Author of life, and here is brought in, as Author of Prophecie. They both are in the Nicene Creed; [1] the Lord, and Giver of life, [2] and who ſpake by the Prophets. Life and ſpeech have but one inſtrument, the ſpirit or breath both. Of it, theſe foure.

1 Prophecie can come from no nature but rationall: The Spirit then, is natura rationalis. And determinate it is, diſtinct plainely here two wayes: [1] The Spirit, from Him whoſe the Spirit is; Him that ſayes, de Spiritu meo. [2] That which is powred, from Him, that powreth it; Fuſus à Fuſore. Being then natura rationalis determinata, He is a Perſon (for a perſon is ſo defined.)

2 Secondly, effuſion is a plaine proceeding of that, which is powred: as ſpiration is ſo too, in the very body of the word ſpirit. So, a Perſon proceeding.

3 Thirdly, being a Perſon, and yet being powred out, He behoves to be God. No Perſon, Angell, or Spirit, can be powred out, can be ſo participate. Not at all: but not upon all fleſh, not dilated ſo farre. GOD onely can be that. So, the Perſon, the proceeding, the Deity of the Holy Ghoſt (all) in theſe words. And not a word of all this mine: but thus deduced, by S. Ambroſe, and before, by Dydimus Alexandrinus, S. Hieromes Maſter.

4 But fourthly, you will mark: It is not my Spirit, but of my Spirit. The whole Spirit, fleſh could not hold: not all fleſh. And parts it hath none. 1. Underſtand then, of my Spirit, that is, of the gifts and graces of the Spirit. Beames of this light: ſtreames of this powring. Otherwhere, others: here, the gift of prophecy and tongues.

Luke 4.18. The Text of the laſt yeare.

2 Which de Spiritu is alſo ſaid, to keep the difference between CHRIST and us. Vpon him the Spirit was: The Spirit of God upon Me, laſt yeare. Upon us, not the Spirit: but, de Spiritu, of my Spirit onely, this yeare.

2 The Act, Effundam.

The next is the act, effundam: In it foure more: [1] The quality, in that it is compared to a thing liquid, fuſill, powred out. This ſeems not proper. Powring is, as it had been water; He came in fire. It would have been kindled, rather than powred. True, but S. Peter in proper terms makes his anſwer referre to their ſlander: and that was, that it was nothing but new wine, a liquor. Their objection being in a thing liquid, his anſwer behoved to be accordingly. And well it might, ſo: CHRIST had ſo expreſſed it: both lately in His promiſe, Ye ſhall be baptized with the Holy Ghoſt within few dayes: And formerly, under the termes of waters of life (Iohn 7.) where S. Iohns expoſition is, This he ſpake of the Spirit. Not (then) given, but to be given, ſtraight upon CHRISTS glorifying, which is now this very day. The Holy Ghoſt then, is not all fire.

Cap. 1. 5.

Iohn 7. 39.

And this quality fals well with the two graces, of [1] prophecie, and [2] invocation, here given. [1] Prophecie: Moſes (the great Prophet) likened it to the dew falling upon the herbs, or the raine powred on the graſſe (Deut. 32.) And that likening is ſo uſuall, as [מוֹרֶה Moreh] the word in Hebrew for raine, is ſo for a Preacher too; that it poſeth the Tranſlators, which way to turne it: and even in that very Chapter of Ioel, whence this Text is taken.

Deut. 32. 2.

[2] And, invocation is ſo too; a powring out of prayer, and of the very heart in prayer.

Verſe 23.

3 And the third of the latter day may be taken in too. Then there ſhall be a powring forth alſo of all the phials of the wrath of GOD.

2 The quality then firſt: the quantity, no leſſe. For, powring is a ſigne of plenty:

effundam,

Effundam, not aſpergam (the firſt prerogative of this day.) For, the Spirit had beene given before this time: but never with ſuch a largeſſe, ſprinkled, but not powred. Never till now, in that bounty, that now. This was reſerved for Chriſt. For, when there was copioſa ſanguinis effuſio on His part, there was likewiſe to be copioſa Flaminis effuſio, on the Holy Ghoſts. He, as liberall of His grace, as Chriſt of his blood. That there might be to us copioſa redemptio, between them both, it is effundam copioſè in both. Pſal.103.7.

3 Effundam tels us further, the Spirit came not of himſelfe: nor till He was thus powred out. It is no effluet, but effundam. Sic oportet implere, that ſo, order might be kept, in Him (in the very Spirit) and we by Him taught to keepe it. Not to ſtart out, till we be ſent; nor to goe on our owne heads, but to ſtay till we be called. Not to leake out, or to run over; but to ſtay till we be powred out in like ſort. Seeing CHRIST would not go unſent, Miſit me, laſt yeare: Nor the HOLY GHOST run un-powred, this yeare: it may well become us to keepe in, till we be powred and ſent any yeare. And yet, the Spirit is no leſſe ready to run, than GOD is to powre it. One of theſe is no barre to the other. Ecce ego, mitte me. Ecce ego, Behold I am ready (ſaith Eſay;) and yet, mitte me, Send me, for all that. Effluence, and Effuſion; Influence, and infuſion will ſtand together well enough. Luke 22.37. Eſay 6.8.

4 Laſtly, effundam is not, as the running of a ſpout. To powre, is the voluntary act of a voluntary Agent, who hath the veſſell in his hand, and may powre little, or much; and may chuſe whether He will powre out any at all, or no. As ſhut the heaven from raining: So, refraine the Spirit from falling on us.

2 And when He powres, He ſtrikes not out the head of the veſſell, and lets all go: but moderates His powring, and diſpenſes His gifts. Powres not all, upon every one, nay, not upon any one, all: but upon ſome in this manner, upon ſome in that: Not to each, the ſame. And to whom the ſame, not in the ſame meaſure though: but, to ſome, five, to ſome, two, to ſome but one talent. The Text is plaine for this. There are diverſe aſſignations in it: 1 To diverſe parties; ſonnes, ſervants, old men, and young men: 2 Of diverſe gifts; propheſies, viſions, and dreames. 3 And them, of diverſe degrees: one clearer than the other; the viſion, than the dreame. Singulis prout vult, at the Powrers diſcretion, to each as pleaſeth Him beſt. 1 Cor.12. Matth.25.15. 1 Cor.12.11.

3 The Party powring. Dicit Dominus.

The Party powring is Dicit Dominus, the Lord that ſaid. But, Dixit Dominus Domino meo: The Lord ſaid to my Lord: Which of theſe? The later (Domino meo) My Lord, Davids Lord, and ours Dominum noſtrum, in our Creed (that is) CHRIST. How appeares that? directly at the thirty third verſe after, He being now exalted by the right hand of God, and having received the promiſe of the HOLY GHOST from the Father, he hath powred out this that ye now ſee and heare. CHRIST then. And not the Father? Yes, he too: For, of Him, Chriſt is ſaid to receive it. Not onely Dixit Dominus Domino meo; but, dedit Dominus Domino meo. And ſo, as in the nineteenth of Geneſis, pluit Dominus à Domino: From the Lord, the Lord powred it. And but one effundam, with but one effuſion both; as with one ſpiration, He came from both. Both, with one effuſion powre Him: Both, with one ſpiration breath Him. It is expreſſely ſo ſet down, Revelation Chap.22. The fountaine of the water of life iſſued from the ſeat of God and of the Lambe. So have you here the whole Trinity: 1 Quis, 2 Quid, 3 à Quo; the Father, by the Sonne, or the Sonne from the Father, powring out the Holy Ghoſt. Pſal.110.1. Gen.19.24. Rev.22.1.

2 And may we not alſo finde the two natures of Chriſt here? Effundam is fundam ex. I will powre out: Out of what? what the ciſterne into which it firſt comes, and out of which it is after derived to us? That, is the fleſh or humane nature of Chriſt: On which it was powred at his conception, fully to endow it; For in Him the fulneſſe of the Godhead dwelleth bodily (mark that, bodily.) And it was given to him without meaſure, and of all his fulneſſe we all receive. From this Ciſterne, this day, iſſued the Spirit, by ſo many quils, or pipes (as it were) as there are ſeverall diviſions, of the graces of the Holy Ghoſt. And ſo now we have both à Quo, and ex Quo. The Divinity, Col.2.9. John 1.16.

into this Humanity, powring the Spirit, which from His flesh, was powred downe, this day, super omnem carnem, upon all flesh. Which fitly brings in the next, Super omnem carnem.

4 The parties upon whom. Super omnem carnem. 1 Cor 9.9. Iohn 1.14.

On whom this powring is (which is the last point:) Super omnem carnem. In which there are three points, as the words are three: 1 Carnem first (that is) men. For doth GOD take care for Oxen (saith the Apostle) or for any flesh, but ours? No, not for any flesh; but the flesh which the Word did take. And, for that He doth.

But, we are Spirit too, as well as flesh: and, in reason, Spirit on Spirit, were more kindly. There is nearer alliance between them.

Yet you shall finde the other part (flesh) is still chosen.

1 Super carnem. Esay 40.6.

1 First, to magnifie His mercy the more, that part is singled out, that seemeth further removed; nay, that is indeed quite opposite to the Spirit of GOD here powred out. For, what is flesh? It is proclaimed (40. of Esay) It is grasse. And not gramen, but fœnum, that is grasse withering, and fit for the Sithe. Is that the worst? I would it were: But cave peccati, sinfull flesh sets it further off, yet. Upon sinfull flesh He should have powred somwhat else, than His Spirit.

So, two oppositions: 1 Flesh and Spirit absolutely in themselves. 2 Then, sinfull flesh, and the Holy Spirit. All which commends His love the more, thus to combine things so much opposite. This first.

Hos. 2.15.

And withall (that, which right now I touched) to shew the introduction to this conjunction of these so farre in opposition either to other, even Verbum caro factum, that made this symbolisme. By which, a gate of hope was opened to us (by His incarnation) in spem, of our inspiration, which this day came in rem. For, His flesh exalted to the right hand of God, remembred us, that were flesh of his flesh, and derived down this fountaine of living water to it, saliens in vitam æternam; springing, and raising us with it, whence it came (for water will ever rise as high as the place from whence it came) that is, up to heaven, up to eternall life.

Verse 33. Iohn 4.14.

2 Super, upon it. Upon it, is without, on the outside of it. Had not fundam in, been better than fundam super: Into them, than upon them? Not a whit?

Indeed, both wayes, I find the Spirit given. At CHRIST'S baptism, the Dove came upon him. At His resurrection, insufflavit, He breathed into them. And so hath He parted His Sacraments: Baptisme is effundam super, upon us, from without: the Holy Eucharist, that is comedite; that goeth in. Upon the matter, both come to one. If it be powred on, it sokes in, pierces to the very centre of the soule (as, in Baptisme, sin is washed thence, by it.) If it be breathed in, it is no sooner at the heart, but it works forth, out it comes againe: Out at the nosthrils in breath; out at the wrest in the beating of the pulse. So, both (in effect) are one.

1 But it is Super here, for these reasons: First, that we may know, the graces of the Spirit, they are ἔξωθεν, from without. In us, that is, in our flesh, they grow not: neither they nor any good thing, else. And not onely ἔξωθεν, from without; but S. Iames his ἄνωθεν too, from above, from the Father of lights. Both these are in super: and but for these we might fall into a phansie, they grew within us, and sprung from us, which (GOD knoweth) they do not.

Iames 1.17.

2 Another reason is, for that [upon] is the Preposition proper to initiation, into any new office. So is the manner, by some such outward ceremonie upon, to initiate. By annointing, or powring oyle upon. By induing [induemini] putting some robe or other ensigne upon. By imposition or laying hands, upon. All upon. Baptisme (which is the Sacrament of our initiation) is therefore so done. So, the Dove came upon CHRIST. The tongues (here) upon these, to enter them, either, into their new offices.

Verse 3.

A third (last but not least) to enure them to this Preposition super, which many can but evill brooke. No super, no superiority they; all even, all equall; fellowes and fellowes. The right hands of fellowship, if you will; but not so much, as imposition of hands, super. For, if super, then sub followes: if upon, then we under; if above, then

Gal. 2.9.

we beneath. But no ſub with ſome: ſubmit neither head, nor ſpirit to any. Yet, ſuper Me, ſaid CHRIST laſt yeare: and it may become any that became Him: it may well become ſuper carnem. Super then muſt ſtand, and be ſtood upon: Confuſion will come, if it be not.

Super carnem, ſuper omnem carnem. Vpon fleſh, and upon all fleſh. Not, ſome one: not Iewes fleſh alone: In regard of whom, this omnem is here ſpecially put in. For, they had in a manner ingroſſed the Spirit before, by a non taliter omni. And yet, upon them too; for, upon their ſonnes and their daughters (as it followeth:) but upon them, now, no more than upon any other. This is a ſecond prerogative of this Day. The firſt, effundam, that is. 1 Before, ſparingly ſprinkled; now, plentifully powred. 2 Now again, ſuper omnem: Before, upon but ſome; now indifferently, upon all.

2 Super omnem carnem. Pſal. 147. 20.

For ſo, when we ſay all, we mean, none is excluded, but now may have it. He hath put no difference betweene them and us (ſaith Saint Peter.) Non eſt diſtinctio (ſaith Saint Paul.) The partition is throwne downe now. Go but to the letter of the Text, All fleſh. 1 No Sex barren; upon ſonnes and upon daughters: ſo either Sex. 2 No age: upon young men and upon old: The one, viſions; the other, dreames. 3 No condition: on ſervants, as well as ſonnes; on handmaids, no leſſe than daughters. 4 No Nation: for (if ye mark) the Spirit is powred twice: upon their ſonnes, in this; and againe, upon His ſervants, in the next verſe. His ſervants, whether they be their ſonnes or not; whoſe ſonnes ſoever they be: though the ſonnes of them, that are (perhaps) ſtrangers to the firſt covenant. (And yet, even then, GOD had ever his ſervants, as well, out of that Nation, as in it.)

Acts 15. 9. Rom. 10. 12. Eph. 2. 14.

Verſe 18.

Now, in ſigne that thus [upon all fleſh,] they heard them ſpeak the tongues of all fleſh, even of every Nation under heaven. That, where before, a few in Iurie; now many, all the world over: No longer now, Notus in Iudæa Deus; His way ſhould be known upon earth, his ſaving health among all Nations.

Acts 2. 5. Pſal. 76. 1. 67. 2.

Yet not promiſcuè though, without all manner limitation. No: the Text limits it. I muſt againe put you in minde, of the two powrings mentioned in it. One, the ſuper omnem carnem, in this the 15. verſe; The other, the ſecond, ſuper ſervos meos, in the next (the 18.) And ſuper ſervos meos is the qualifying, of ſuper omnem carnem. Vpon all fleſh (that is) all ſuch as will be my ſervants; as will give in their names to that end; as will call upon me: Quicunque invocaverit, ſo concludes Ioel. As will believe and be baptized, ſo concludes S. Peter, here, his Sermon. This gives them the capacity, makes them veſſels meet to receive this effuſion. By which, all Turks, Iewes, Infidels, are out of the omnem: and counterfeit Chriſtians, too; that profeſſe to ſerve Him, but all the world ſees whom they ſerve. And by this, much fleſh is cut off from omnem carnem. But ſo with this qualifying, upon all. For, any other, I know not. And this for the powring.

II.

The end whereto. Salvabitur,

And now, Vtquid effuſio hæc? To what end, all this? For it is not to be imagined this powring was caſuall, as the turning over of a tub: nor, that the Spirit did run waſte: then it were, utquid perditio hæc? An end it had. And that followes now: And your ſonnes, &c. The Spirit is given to many ends; many middle, but one laſt; and that laſt is in the laſt word, ſalvabitur, the end then of this powring, is the ſalvation of mankinde. Mankinde was upon the point to periſh, and the Spirit was powred, as a precious balme or water, to recover and to ſave it. So, the end of all is (and mark it well) that the ſpirit way ſave the fleſh, by the ſpiritualizing it. Not the fleſh deſtroy the Spirit, by carnalizing it. Not the fleſh weigh downe the ſpirit, to earth, hither: but the ſpirit lift up the fleſh, thither to heaven, whence it came.

To this laſt, here are three middle conducing ends more. 1 Prophecie firſt: 2 Invocation laſt: both which are well here repreſented; three wayes: 1 In the tongues (the ſymbole of the HOLY GHOST, this day:) The one, Prophecie, being Gods tongue to us: the other, Invocation, being our tongue to GOD. 2 In the Spirit (both being acts of the Spirit, or breath:) Prophecie breathes it into us: Prayer breathes it out againe.

Meanes to that end.
1 Prophecie.
2 Prayer.

3 In

3 In the powring: Both powrings (after a ſort:) that, which Prophecy doth infuſe, powre in at the eare; Invocation doth refundere, or powre forth back againe in prayer, out of the heart.

And beſide theſe two, a third there is, which is wedged in betweene them both, as ſtirring us, firſt and laſt both to heare Prophecie more attentively, and to practiſe invocation more devoutly (which I wiſh may never depart out of our minds) the memory of the later day.

3 Memory of the later day.

Thus they ſtand, ſubordinate. That men may be ſaved, they are to call upon the Name of the Lord (that at leaſt.) That they may ſo call to purpoſe, they are to be called on to it, and directed in it, by & Prophetabunt. And that they might perform this, to all fleſh, they were to ſpeak with the tongues of all fleſh; which was the gift (here) of this day (without juſt cauſe ſcoffed at.) But, tongues are but as the caſk, wherein Prophecie (as the liquor) is contained: I will ſet by the empty caſke, and deale with Prophetabunt, the liquor in it only.

1 Prophetabunt. Prov. 29 28. Eſay 32. 14, 15.

Prophecie ſtands firſt in the Text, Without which (ſaith Salomon) the people muſt needs periſh. That ſaying (of the Prophet Eſay) is much uſed by the Fathers; Tenebræ & palpatio, donec effunderetur ſuper nos ſpiritus de excelſo. All is dark: men do but grope, till the Spirit be powred on us from above, to give us light, by this gift of Prophecie.

This terme is kept by Ioel, as well when he ſpeaks of GOD's ſervants (that is) of us, as when of them and their ſonnes: And ever after, in the New Teſtament, it is retained ſtill as an uſuall terme, by the Apoſtle, to the Corinthians, Epheſians, Theſſalonians, all his Epiſtles through.

But not in the ſenſe of foretelling things to come. For, ſo can it be verified onely upon Agabus, S. Philips daughters, and upon S. Iohn: which are too few, for ſo great an effuſion, as this. That (indeed) was the chief ſenſe of it, in the Old Teſtament: And well, while CHRIST was yet to come. CHRIST He was the ſtop of all Propheticall predictions. Then, it had his place, that. But now, and ever ſince Chriſt is come, it hath in a manner left that ſenſe (at leaſt, in a great part) and is not ſo taken in the New.

The ſenſe, it is there taken in (to expound this place of Peter, by another of Paul, citing this very ſame Text of the Prophet, Rom. 10.) is & prophetabunt (here) by quomodo prædicabunt there, propheſying (that is preaching.) Whereby, after a new manner, we do propheſie (as it were) the meaning of ancient Prophecies: not make any new, but interpret the old, well; take off the veile of Moſes face. Finde CHRIST, finde the Myſteries of the Goſpell, under the types of the Law; apply the old prophecies, ſo as it may appeare, the ſpirit of prophecie is the teſtimony of JESUS: And, he the beſt Prophet now, that can do this, beſt.

Exod. 34. 33. 2 Cor. 3. 13. Revel. 19. 10.

This ſenſe, we prove by theſe in the Text. The Spirit was powred on them, and they did propheſie. What did they? How propheſied S. Peter? He foretold nothing: All he did, was, he applied this place of the Prophet, to this Feaſt. And a little beneath, the paſſage of the 16. Pſalme to Chriſts reſurrection. And, after that, the place of another Pſalme to His aſcenſion.

Verſe 31. Pſal. 16. 10. Verſe 34. Pſal. 110. 1. Verſe 11.

And the reſt (on whom it was powred, too) how propheſied they? All (we read) they did, was loquebantur Magnalia Dei, they uttered forth the wonderfull things of God, but foretold not any thing, that we finde. So as, to propheſie (now) is to ſearch out, and diſcloſe the hidden things of the Oracles of GOD, and not to tell before-hand, what ſhall after come to paſſe.

But, what ſay you to Viſions and dreames here? Little: they pertaine not to us. The Text ſaith it not. You remember the two powrings: 1 One upon their ſonnes: 2 The other upon his ſervants. This later, is it by which we come in. We are not of their ſonnes; we claime not by that, GOD make us His ſervants; for, by that word, we hold.

Now, in this latter powring, on his ſervants (which only concerns us) viſions and dreames are left out quite. If any pretend them now, we ſay with Ieremie (Cap. 23.

Verſe

Ver. 28.) Let a dreame goe for a dreame, and let my word (ſaith the Lord) be ſpoken as my word: Quid palea ad triticum, What mingle you chaffe and wheate? We are to lay no point of religion upon them, now: Prophecie, preaching is it, we to hold our ſelves unto now. As for viſions and dreames, tranſeant; let them goe.

But then, for prophecy in this ſenſe of opening or interpreting Scriptures; is the ſpirit powred upon all fleſh, ſo? Is this of Ioel a proclamation for libertie of preaching; that all, young and old, men-ſervants and maide-ſervants, may fall to it? Nay: the ſhee-ſex, Saint Paul tooke order, for that betimes; cut them off, with his Nolo mulieres. But what for the reſt? may they? For, to this ſenſe hath this Scripture beene wreſted by the Enthuſiaſts of former ages; and ſtill is, by the Anabaptiſts now. And by miſtaking of it, way given to a foule errour, as if all were let looſe, all might claime, and take upon them (forſooth) to propheſie. 1 Cor. 14.34.

Nothing elſe this, but a malicious device of the divell, to powre contempt upon this gift. For (indeed) bring it to this once, and what was this day falſly ſurmiſed, will then be juſtly affirmed, muſto pleni (or cerebro vacui, whether you will; but muſto pleni) drunken Prophets then, indeed: howbeit not with wine (as Eſay ſaith) but with another as headie a humour, and that doth intoxicate the brain as much as any muſte or new wine: Even of ſelfe conceited ignorance, whereof the world growes too full. But it was no part of Ioels meaning, nor Saint Peters neither, to give way to this phrenſie. Eſay. 1. 21.

No? is it not plaine? the Spirit is powred upon all fleſh. True, but not upon all, to propheſie though. The Text warrants no ſuch thing. In the one place it is: And your ſonnes ſhall: In the other, And my ſervants ſhall: But, neither is it, all their ſonnes: nor all his ſervants ſhall. Neither (indeed) can it be. There muſt be ſome ſonnes, and ſome ſervants, to propheſie to: to whom theſe Prophets may bee ſent: to whom this propheſie may come. All fleſh may not be cut out into tongues; ſome left for eares: ſome auditors needs. Elſe a Cyclopian Church will grow upon us, where all were ſpeakers, no body heard another. Ἀκέφαλοι ἔθνη ἔθνη.

How then, ſhall the ſpirit be powred upon all fleſh? well enough. The Spirit of propheſie, is not all Gods ſpirit; He hath more beſide. If the ſpirit or grace of propheſie upon ſome: the ſpirit of grace and prayer (in Zacharie) upon the reſt. So, betweene them both, the ſpirit will be upon all fleſh, and the propoſition hold true: Prophetabunt muſt not make us forget invocaverit. All the ſpirit goes not away in propheſying; ſome left for that too: and there is the Quicunque (Quicunque invocaverit) and no where elſe. Zach. 12. 10.

But if Saint Peter will not ſerve, Saint Paul ſhall: He is plaine, Ye may all propheſie one by one: What, the skippers of Holland and all? I trow not. But (all) there, is plaine. All, that is, all that be Prophets. And, I wiſh, with all my heart (as did Moſes) that all Gods people were Prophets: but till they be ſo, I wiſh they may not propheſie; no more would Moſes neither. Now, in the ſame Epiſtle, S. Paul holds it for a great abſurditie, to hold, all are Prophets. With a kinde of indignation he takes it, What are all Prophets? No more than all Apoſtles; as much t'one as t'other. Then, if all be not Prophets; all may not Propheſie (ſure.) For, with the Apoſtle in the ſame place, the operation (that is, the act of propheſying) the adminiſtration (that is, the office or calling) and the grace (that is, the enabling gift) theſe three, are ever to goe together. No act in the Church lawfully done, without them all. Then the Apoſtles [you all may] is, all you may that have the gift. 1 Cor. 14. 31. Num. 11. 29. 1 Cor. 12. 29.

And not, you that have it neither (the gift) unleſſe you have the calling too: For, as God ſent gifts, ſo He gave men alſo, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets. Men for gifts; as well, as gifts for men. Miſit, in Chriſt, as well as unxit (laſt yeare.) And, in His ſervants, vocavit, as well as Talenta dedit. Not to be parted, theſe. 1 Cor. 12. 28. Mat. 25. 14.

I conclude then. Et prophetabunt: but ſuch as have been at the doore of the Tabernacle, as have beene the ſons of the Prophets, men ſet apart for that end. And yet even they alſo, ſo, as they take not themſelves at liberty, to propheſie whatſoever takes them in the tongue; the dreames of their owne heads, or the viſions of their owne hearts;

but remember their ſuper, and know, there be ſpirits alſo, to whom their ſpirits be ſub-
1 Cor. 14.32. ject. So much for the ſeventeenth and eighteenth Verſes.

The meane between both. The latter day.

But how now come we thus ſuddenly, to the ſignes of the latter day, and to the day it ſelfe? For they follow cloſe (you ſee.) It is ſomewhat ſtrange, that from Et prophetabunt, He is ſtraight at Doomes-day, without more adoe.

The reaſons which I finde, the Fathers render of it, are theſe: Firſt, the cloſe joyning of them, is to meet with another dreame that hath troubled the Church, much. And that is, that it may be, there will be another powring yet, after this, and more Prophets riſe ſtill. Every otherwhile, ſome ſuch upſtart ſpirits there are, would faine make us ſo believe. Here is a diſcharge for them.

No (ſaith Ioel) look for no more ſuch dayes as this, after this: Therefore to this day, he joynes immediately; from this day, He goes preſently to the latter day, (as if He ſaid, you have all you ſhall have.) When this powring hath run ſo farre as it will, then commeth the end; when this is done, the world is done; no new ſpirit, no new effuſion; this is the laſt. From CHRIST departure, till His return againe; from this day of Pentecoſt (a great day and a notable) till the laſt great and notable day of all; between theſe two dayes, no more ſuch Day. Therefore, in the beginning of the Text, He called them the laſt dayes, becauſe no dayes to come after them. No powring to be looked for from this firſt day, of thoſe laſt. No other but this, till dies noviſſimus noviſſimorum, the very laſt day of all; till He powre downe fire to conſume all fleſh, that, by the fire this day kindled by theſe fiery tongues, ſhall not be brought to know Him, and call upon His Name.

A ſecond is, being to ſpeak by and by of ſalvabitur, that we ſhould be ſaved, He would let us ſee, what it is we ſhould be ſaved from. That helpeth much, to make us eſteem of our ſaving. Saved then from what? From bloud, and fire, and the ſmolder of ſmoke; that is, from the heavy ſignes here: And from that (which is after theſe, and beyond all theſe farre) the Great and terrible day of the Lord. This ſight of unde, from whence, will make us apprize our ſaving at a higher rate, and thinke it worth our care, then, in that day to be ſaved.

And laſt, it is ſet here, per modum ſtimuli, to quicken us, Vt ſcientes terrorem hunc,
2 Cor. 5.11. ſaith S. Paul, that entering into a ſad and ſober conſideration of it, and the terrour of it, we might ſtirre up our ſelves by it, to prepare for it. And ſet it is between both, to diſpoſe us the better to both. To that which is paſt (& prophetabunt) to awake our attention to that: and to that which followes (invocaverit) to kindle our devotion in that; and ſo by both, to make ſure our ſalvation.

The day of the Lord, the Prophet cals it (Dies Domini;) as it were oppoſing it, to dies ſervi, to our dayes here. As if he ſaid, Theſe are your dayes, and you uſe them (indeed) as if they were your owne. You powre out your ſelves into all riot; and know no other powring out but that: you ſee not any great uſe of propheſying; think it might well enough be ſpared: you ſpeak your pleaſures of it, and ſay, muſto pleni, or to like effect, when you liſt; Theſe are your dayes. But, know this, when yours are done, GOD hath His day too, and His day will come at laſt; and it will come terribly when it comes.

Ier. 5.31. When that day comes, how then? Quid fiet in noviſſimo, the Prophets ordinary queſtion; What will ye doe at the laſt, How will you be ſaved, in die illo, in that Day?

We ſpeake ſometime of great dayes here: alas, ſmall in reſpect of this. There is matter of feare ſometime in theſe of ours: Nothing to the terrour of this. Great it is, and notable, as much for the feare, as for any thing elſe in it. This, a terrible one indeed, & quis poteſt ſuſtinere? who can abide it? ſaith Ioel in this very chapter. Looke to it then. On whom He powreth not His Spirit here, on them He will powre ſomewhat elſe there, even the Phials of His wrath: poſſibly before, ſome; but then all, certainly.

And that you may not onely heare of this day, but ſee ſomewhat to put you in minde minde of it, Ecce Signa: terrible ſignes ſhall come upon earth, ſword and fire: from the ſword powring out of bloud; from fire, a choaking vapour of ſmoke, or (as the Hebrew is) a pillar of ſmoke: which then doth palmizare, goeth up ſtraight like a pillar or a palme-tree, when the fire increaſeth more and more: for when it abateth, it boweth the head and decayeth; which this ſhall never do.

Nay further, wonders in heaven. For theſe tongues of heaven thus deſpiſed, heaven ſhall ſhew it ſelfe diſpleaſed, too; the lights of heaven (as it were) for a time put out, for contempt of the heavenly light, this day kindled. The Sun darke, as if he hid his face: the Moone red as blood, as if ſhe bluſhed, at our great want of regard, in this, a point ſo neerly concerning us.

For (indeed) theſe Eclipſes, though they have their cauſes in nature, as the raine-bow alſo hath: Yet, what hinders, but as the rainbow, ſo they may be ſignes too, and have their meaning in Scripture, aſſigned; and even this meaning here. This I ſee, that all fleſh are ſmitten with a kinde of horrour and heavineſſe, when they happen to fall out: as if they portended ſomewhat, as if that they portended, were not good: for dies atri, they have been and are reckoned, all the world over. Mat. 24. 8.

But theſe are but the beginnings of evils, ſcarce the dawning of that day: But, when the day it ſelfe commeth, the great day, then it will powre downe, and who (ſaith Ioel) may abide it? A faire Item for them, that deſpiſe Prophecies; and ſo doing, make void the Counſell of GOD, againſt their own ſoules.

I have much marvailed, why on this Sunday (Whit-ſunday, as we call it) the day of the White Sun, the Prophet ſhould preſent the Black Sun thus, unto us. But the Prophet did nothing, but as inſpired by the HOLY GHOST: which makes me think, he thought the fire of that day, would make the fire of this burne the clearer: and, that powring down make this powring paſſe the readier: that he thought that day, a good meditation for this, and for ſuch I commend it to you, and ſo leave it: And come to Invocaverit, the only means left us now, to eſcape it.

I dare not end with Prophetabunt, or with this; I dare not omit, but joyne invocaverit to them. For what? From Prophetabunt, come we to Salvabitur ſtraight, without any medium between? No, we muſt take Invocaverit in our way; no paſſing to ſalvation, but by and through it. For what, is the powring of the ſpirit, to end in preaching; and preaching to end in it ſelf (as it doth with us; a circle of preaching and in effect nothing elſe) but powre in propheſying enough, and then all is ſafe? No: there is another yet, as needfull, nay more needfull to be called on (as the current of our Age runs) and that is, Calling on the Name of the Lord. 3 Quicunque invocaverit.

This, it grieveth me to ſee, how light it is ſet; nay, to ſee how buſie the devill hath beene, to powre contempt on it, to bring it in diſgrace with diſgracefull termes: to make nothing of Divine Service, as if it might be well ſpared, and invocaverit (here) be ſtricken out.

But mark this Text well, and this invocation we make ſo ſlight account of, ſticks cloſe, is ſo locked faſt to Salvabitur: cloſer and faſter, than we are aware of.

Two errors there be, and I wiſh them reformed: One, as if propheſying were all we had to doe; we might diſpenſe with invocation, let it goe, leave it to the Queere. That is an errour: Propheſying is not all; Invocaverit is to come in too: we to joyne them, and joyntly to obſerve them, to make a conſcience of both: It is the Oratory of prayer powred out of our hearts, ſhall ſave us; no leſſe than the Oratory of preaching, powred in at our eares. 1

The other is, of them that do not wholly reject it, yet ſo depreſſe it, as if in compariſon of propheſying, it were little worth. Yet (we ſee) by the frame of this Text, it is the higher end: the calling on us by prophecie, is but that we ſhould call on the Name of the LORD. All propheſying, all preaching, is but to this end. And indeed Prophecie is but gratia gratis data: and (ever) gratis data is for gratum faciens; a part and a ſpeciall part whereof is invocation. There is then, as a conſcience to be made of both; ſo a like conſcience to be made of both: not to ſet up the one, and magnifie it, 2 and to turn our back on the other, and vilifie it. For, howſoever we give good words of invocation; yet what our conceipt is, our deeds ſhew.

I love not to daſh one religious duty againſt another; or (as it were) to ſend challenges between them. But, as much as the Text ſaith, ſo much may I ſay: and that is, that it hath three ſpeciall prerogatives, by this verſe of the Prophet.

Firſt, it is effundam (ours) properly; and effundam ſpiritum meum, the powring out of our ſpirit (to anſwer that of GOD's Spirit in the Text.) Prophetabunt is not ours, none of our act, but the act of another. The ſtreame of our times tends all to this. To make religion nothing, but an auricular profeſſion, a matter of eaſe, a meere ſedentary thing: and our ſelves, meerely paſsive in it; ſit ſtill, and heare a Sermon, and two Anthems, and be ſaved: as if, by the act of the Queere, or of the Preacher, we ſhould ſo be (for, theſe be their acts) and we doe nothing our ſelves, but ſit and ſuffer: without ſo much as any thing done by us, any effundam on our parts at all; not ſo much as this, of calling on the Name of the Lord.

2 The ſecond: This hath the quicunque. We would faine have it, quicunque prophetiam audiverit, he that heares ſo many Sermons a weeke, cannot chooſe but be ſaved: But it will not be. No: here ſtand we preaching, and hearing Sermons; and neither they that heare propheſying, nay, nor they that propheſie themſelves, can make a quicunque of either. Witneſſe, Domine, in nomine tuo prophetavimus, and LORD thou haſt preached in our ſtreets, and yet it would do them no good: Neſcio vos, was their anſwer for all that.

Mat. 7. 22. Luke 13. 26.

And yet how faine would ſome be a propheſying? It would not ſave them, though they were: and is it not a prepoſterous deſire? we love to meddle with that pertaines not to us, and will do us no good: that, which is our duty, and would doe us good, that care we not for.

Tongues were given for prophecie. True: but, no quicunque there, for all that: but to whom none are given to propheſie, to them yet are there given to invocate. And there comes it in, the quicunque lies there: De Spiritu meo ſuper omnem carnem, here it comes in; at invocation, not at the other. Let it ſuffice; It is not quicunque prophetaverit here, Quicunque invocaverit it is. The Prophet ſaith it, the Apoſtles ſay it both, πᾶς ὃς ἐαν: Peter, here; Paul, Rom. 10. 13.

Laſt, this is ſure; invocaverit is ἐχόμενον σωτηρίας, it ſtands neareſt, it joynes cloſeſt to ſalvabitur: Both one breath, one ſentence: the words touch, there is nothing between them. Salvabitur is not joyned hard to prophetabunt; it is removed farther off. To Invocaverit it is; a degree nearer at leaſt. Nay, the very next of all.

The Text ſhewes this (in a ſort) but the thing it ſelf more: for when all comes to all, when we are even at laſt caſt, ſalvabitur or no ſalvabitur, then, as if there were ſome ſpeciall vertue in invocaverit, we are called upon, to uſe a few words or ſignes to this end, and ſo ſent out of the world with invocaverit in our mouthes. Dying, we call upon men for it; living, we ſuffer them to neglect it. It was not for nothing, it ſtands ſo cloſe, it even touches ſalvation: It is (we ſee) the very immediate act next before it.

And yet I would not leave you in any errour concerning it: To end this point; ſhall invocaverit ſerve then? needs there nothing but it? no faith, no life? S. Paul anſwers this home: He is direct (Rom. 10.) How can they call upon him unleſſe they believe? So, invocation preſuppoſeth faith. And as peremptory he is, 2 Tim. 2. Let every one that calleth on (Nay, that but nameth) the name of the Lord, depart from iniquity: ſo, it preſuppoſeth life too. For, if we incline to wickedneſſe in our hearts, God will not heare us. No invocation (that) not truly ſo called; a provocation rather. But put theſe two, faith and recedit ab iniquitate to it, and ſo, who ſo calleth upon him, I will put him in good Sureties, one Prophet, and two Apoſtles, both to aſſure him, he ſhall be ſaved.

Rom. 10. 14. 2 Tim. 2. 19. Pſal. 66. 18.

4 Salvabitur. And that is it, we all deſire, to be ſaved. Saved, indefinitely. Apply it to any dangers, not in the Day of the Lord onely, but even in this our Day: For, ſome terrible dayes dayes we have even here. I will ſet you of one; The ſignes here tell down; bring it to my mind: A day we were ſaved from (the Day of the Powder-treaſon) which may ſeeme here in a ſort to be deſcribed, bloud and fire, and the vapour of ſmoke: a terrible day ſure, but nothing to the Day of the Lord.

From that we were ſaved: but we all ſtand in danger, we all need ſaving, from this. When this day comes, another manner of fire, another manner of ſmoke. That fire never burnt; that ſmoke never roſe: but, this fire ſhall burne and never be quenched; this ſmoke ſhall not vaniſh, but aſcend for ever. I ſay no more, but, in that, in this, in all, Qui invocaverit, ſalvus erit: Invocation rightly uſed is the way to be ſafe. Revel. 19. 3.

This then I commend to you. And of all invocations, that which King David doth commend moſt, and betake himſelfe to, as the moſt effectuall and ſureſt of all: and that is, Accipiam calicem ſalutaris, & nomen Domini invocabo: To call on His Name, with the cup of ſalvation taken in our hands. No invocation, to that. That, I may be bold to add (which is all that can be added) Quicunque calicem ſalutaris accipiens, nomen Domini invocaverit, ſalvus erit. Another effundam yet, this. Pſal. 116. 13.

Why, what vertue is there in the taking it, to helpe invocation? A double. For 1 whether we reſpect our ſinnes; they have a voice, a cry, an aſcending cry, in Scripture aſſigned them. They invocate too, they call for ſomwhat; even for ſome feareſull judgement to be powred down on us: and I doubt, our own voices are not ſtrong enough, to be heard above theirs.

But bloud, that alſo hath a voice: ſpecially innocent bloud, the bloud of Abel, that cries lowd in GOD's eares: but nothing ſo loud as the bloud whereof this cup of Bleſſing is the communion; the voice of it will be heard above all: the cry of it will drown any cry elſe. And, as it cries higher: ſo it differs in this, that it cries in a farre other key; for far better things than that of Abel: not for revenge, but for remiſſion of ſinnes; for that, whereof it is it ſelf the price and purchaſe, for our ſalvation in that great and terrible day of the Lord, when nothing elſe will ſave us, and when it will moſt import us; when if we had the whole world to give, we would give it for theſe foure ſyllables, ſalvabitur, ſhall be ſaved. Heb. 12. 24.

But it was not ſo much for ſin, David took this cup; as to yeeld God thanks for 2 all His benefits. In that caſe alſo, there is ſpeciall uſe of it: and both fit us. As the former, of drowning of our ſins cry; ſo this alſo. For, to this end, are we here now met to render publikely and in ſolemne manner, our thankſgiving, for His great favour this day vouchſafed us, in powring out His Spirit; and with it, His ſaving health upon all fleſh, all that call upon Him: then, to take place, when we ſhall have ſpeciall uſe of it, in the Great Day, the Day of the Lord. And very agreeable it is, per hunc ſanguinem, pro hoc Spiritu, for the powring out of this his Spirit; to render Him thanks with the blood, that was powred out to procure it [And this is our laſt effundam, and a reall effundam too:] For this effuſion, of both, the one and of the other, and for the hope of our ſalvation, the work both of the one, and of the other.

To the finall attainment whereof, by His holy word of Prophecie, by calling on His Name, by this Sacrament of His bloud powred out, and of His Spirit powred out with it, He bring us, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE, AT GREENWICH, On the XVI. of May, A.D. M. DC. XIX. being WHITSUNDAY.

ACST Chap. X. Ver. XXXIV, XXXV.

Aperiens autem Petrus os ſuum, dixit: In veritate comperi, quia non eſt perſonarum acceptor Deus:
Sed, in omni gente, qui timet Eum, & operatur juſtitiam, acceptus eſt Illi.

Then Peter opened his mouth, and ſaid: Of a truth I perceive, that God is no accepter of perſons.
But in every Nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteouſneſſe, is accepted with Him.

Forget not, that we celebrate, to day, the comming of the Holy Ghoſt: and I goe not from it. You ſhall find in the next Chapter, at the fifteenth, that, to this Text, belongeth a Comming of the Holy Ghoſt.

For, at the uttering of theſe very words, as S. Peter began to ſpeake them, the Holy Ghoſt fell upon all that heard them. It (is indeed) the ſecond ſolemne comming of the Holy Ghoſt. That, in the ſecond Chapter, was the firſt; and this, the ſecond that ever was.

Of which twaine, this is the Comming that comes home to us: and that, two wayes: 1 One, in reſpect of the Parties, on whom: 2 The other, in reſpect of the Time, when. The Parties: For, thoſe, whom the Holy Ghoſt came on before, were Gentiles indeed, but yet Proſelytes, that is, halfe Iewes: Out of every Nation under heaven; but that came to Ieruſalem to worſhip: And the ſame was the caſe of the Eunuch in the eight Chapter, and not a right Gen- Acts 2. 4.

tile among them. But here now, are a ſort of very Gentiles indeed, in puris naturalibus, ſuch as we and our Fathers were: No Proſelytes, ever. This Centurion, the Act. 8. 17. Anteſignanus, the ſtandard-bearer to us, and to all that were meere Heathen men indeed, and this comming, our comming properly. Never, in kinde; never, to very Gentiles indeed, till now.

It is well ſorted (you ſee:) On the Iewes and Proſelytes, at Ieruſalem, their City: Verſ. 1. On the Gentiles, at Cæſarea, Cæſars City, and of the Cities in Paleſtine, fitting the Gentiles beſt.

1 Well obſerved it is about the calling of the Gentiles, That that, in the old, and Ion. 1. 3. Verſe 5. this, in the new Teſtament, they came (both) from one place; from Ioppe, both. Thence, looſed Ionas to Ninive: Thence, ſet out Peter to Cæſarea.

2 Secondly: that, Cæſarea is the Ninive (as it were) of the New Teſtament. Ni- Eſay. 36. 13. nive, was the Citie of the great King of the Gentiles, at that time: Cæſarea Cæſars City, Luk. 2. 1. as great a King over the Gentiles, at this; from whom went a commandement, that the whole world ſhould be taxed.

3 Thirdly: that, was performed, by Ionas; this by Bar-jonas: So, is S. Peter cal- Mat. 16. 17, 13 led by our Saviour, when he made his confeſſion, that CHRIST was the Son of GOD: And that was at Cæſarea. Where, what he confeſſed, then, he comes to preach; Acts 11. 18. now. That of Ionas, an Omen (as it were) of this (here) of Saint Peter. Ionas and Bar-jonas from Ioppe they went both: Both from one place; both to one end; both, to convert the Gentiles; to ſhew, that GOD had given them alſo repentance to life.

Alway, this, the better. For Ionas at Ninive, he ends with Ninive ſhall be deſtroy- Ionas 3. 4. ed. Bar-jonas, at Cæſarea, with Acceptus eſt illi: that, the end of the Text. Or, if you Verſ. 43. 2. will goe to the end of the Sermon, the end is, ſhall obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes, as good as it, every way.

2 So the Parties fit well: The Time, as well. The Holy Ghoſt here came upon them, as they were at a Sermon, even as we now are. Peter opened his mouth; they ſtood attentive; the HOLY GHOST came downe. That, to bee here, is a diſpoſition to receive the HOLY GHOST. And, it may pleaſe GOD, the like may befall us, being occupied now, as they then were.

The Summe. Of that Sermon, theſe are the firſt words. Of which words, what can be ſaid more to their praiſe, than that which the Angell ſaith of them, the next Chapter at the fourteenth verſe: That Peter being ſent for, ſhould at his comming, ſpeake words to Cornelius, by which both he, and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved. Thoſe words, the Angell there ſpake of, that Peter ſhould ſpeake, are theſe, I have read: GOD of His goodneſſe ſend them the ſame effect.

In veritate comperi, ſhewes, they are a compertum eſt; and that, is authenticall with a Teſte: So is this Teſte Cornelio & totâ familiâ, witneſſe he and his whole family and friends. Such are moſt praiſed; for they are animatæ exemplo, have a ſoule put into them by an example. Specially, when they be ſo reduced to a ſingular, as that ſingular afterward is reduced to a generall: Both which are in this. Beſt preaching of a Text, when the Commentarie ſtands before it; as here: For, what is in the Text propounded, was fulfilled in the auditorie, yer they went.

As fulfilled in them in particular, ſo extended to all in generall: for it hath an omni gente put to it: that, nothing was done to him there, but the ſame ſhall be done to any other. Any, of any nation, that ſhall be found in like ſort diſpoſed, as (we find) he was: that is, whoſe prayers and almes ſhall come up into remembrance before God. God ſhall not be wanting to them, but provide them of further meanes requiſite to their ſalvation.

It is a thing well befitting the providence of God; all His creatures, when he hath made them, to ſee them provided of ſuch things, as are needfull for them. As Hee Pſal. 147. 9. doth (ſaith the Pſalme) for the young ravens; (ſaith the Goſpell) for the poore ſparrowes Mat. 10. 29. valued, two of them, at a farthing: Naturas rerum minimarum non deſtituit DEUS, the the ſmalleſt things that be, he leaves them not deſtitute.

If not them, His halfe-farthing creatures, much leſſe men (as Hee is pleaſed to ſpeake with the leaſt) more worth than many ſparrowes. So, God argues with Ionas; if he made ſuch adoe for his gourd, which ſprung up in one night, and withered in another, ſhould not God ſpare Ninive, wherein there was ſo many thouſands, that knew not their right hand from their left, Gentiles though they were. Ion. 4. 10. 11.

And, if his care extend to all men, and He make His raine to fall, and His Sun to ſhine upon the evill and unkinde, ſhall He not bring the raine of his Word, (as Moſes cals it, Devt. 32.) to fall on them, and make His Sun of righteouſneſſe (as Malachi cals it) to ariſe upon them that feare him? A view whereof we may take in this familie here: even of the Sun of righteouſneſſe, the White Sun, riſing upon one that feared God, with all his houſhold, gave much almes and prayed to God daily. Mat. 5. 45. Deut. 32. 2. Mal. 4. 2.

Written by him, this: but not written for him only, that it was Whit-ſunday with him; but for us alſo, to whom it ſhall likewiſe be, if we be de gente Cornelià, expreſſe and follow him in that, which was accepted of in Him.

Two points we have to proceed on: 1 The firſt, here is a point newly perceived by S. Peter. 2 The ſecond, What that was. A point newly perceived, in theſe, 1 In veritate comperi, of a truth I perceive. 2 What the point was in theſe, that in every Nation, &c. The Diviſion.

I. In that Saint Peter ſaith, Truly I now perceive, as if before he had not, (as indeed he had not: For, he was in the minde before, that but in unâ gente; but now he perceives, that in omni gente is the truer tenet:) That, even to Saint Peter, there were ſome things incomperta, ſomething not perceived at firſt, that came to bee perceived after.

II. Then, an inſtance: What that was. And it was, about GOD'S accepting, Both wayes: Privativè, what God accepts not; Poſitivè, what He accepts. Accepts not perſons, that is once: But accepts of ſuch as feare him, and worke righteouſneſſe of what Nation ſoever (be he an Italian;) of what condition ſoever (be he a Centurion;) All is one.

Of which two, the one [feare] is an affection within, of the heart. The other [worketh righteouſneſſe] is an action without, of the hand. Cornelius's heart and Cornelius's hand: theſe they be. Whence we ſhall learne three points more: 1 One, how wee may be accepted to God, if we be, as Cornelius here was; and I would, wee ſo were: 2 The other, that, when all is done, all is but accepting though. Except He could, to our feare and workes both, and ſo, is not bound; but accept He will though, of His grace and goodneſſe, and (as it followes immediately the next verſe) for His words ſake which he ſent, preaching peace, by Ieſus, who is Lord over all.

III. The laſt, whereunto accepted: and that (as appeareth in the XLVII. verſe) was to the Sacrament, and by it, to the remiſſion of ſins, and to the receiving the Holy Ghoſt in a more ample meaſure. Opus diei, the proper of this Day.

I.

A point newly perceived. Comperi. Mat. 16. 18. Luk. 22. 32. Iohn 21. 16.

OF a truth I perceive. He that ſaith, Of a truth I perceive now, in effect (as it were) ſaith before, He did not ſo. For, I perceive now, is the ſpeech of one that is come to perceiving of that, which before he perceived not.

On this we pitch firſt. That ſo great an Apoſtle, for all Tu es Petrus, and Rogavi pro te, and Paſce oves meas, doth ingenuouſly confeſſe, that (now) he had found that, which till now he had not. For, ſince the beginning of the Chapter, he had not. So that all his comperi's were not yet come in. By like, his chaire was not yet made, or he had not yet taken hanſell of it. But how it comes to paſſe after, at Rome, I know not:

Chap.11.2. not: at Cæsarea, we see, it was not so. And they, that in the next Chapter, called him coram, to answer this Sermon: Sure they seeme (as then) not to have beene fully perswaded, that S. Peter could perceive all things, and not misse in any.

Iob.12.2. Iob, though in misery, yet in scorne saith to some in his time, Indeed you, you are the only men, you perceive all. Moses did not so: there was a case, wherein he was nescien-
Num.15.34. ens quid de eo facere deberet, Moses knew not what he should do, *Num.*15. There was a case, whereof Elisha was faine to say, Et Dominus non nunciavit mihi, God had not
2 King.4 27. shewed it him (2 *Reg.*4.) But when God did, might not Moses and he both have said, as Peter doth here, Of a truth, before, I did not, but now I doe perceive? Yea, but this is Old Testament.

Iob.11.49. And, was it not in the New? There, Caiaphas he saith, Tush, you perceive nothing: He perceived all. But Cephas he saith, he perceived not all: For, here he now saith, he perceiveth something, and all his comperi's came not at once. So saith Peter; and 1 Cor.13.9. so Paul, All our knowledge is in part, and so is all our propheſying too, and put himself in the number.

Of a truth then we perceive, S. Peter comes nothing neere his Succeſſour (that would be.) He perceives all that is to be perceived: at once: can have nothing added to his knowledge, from the first instant, he is set downe in Cathedrâ; can have no new comperi, his comperi's come in all together; gets Caiaphas's knowledge by sitting in Cephas's chaire.

(They begin to scorne this themselves, now, and pray him to get a good Generall Councell about him, and he shall perceive things never the worse.)

But, it is not this only, they differ in: In something beside. For, Peter took Cor-
Vers.26. nelius up from the ground; His Successor let Cornelius's Lord and Master, lye still hardly. Not a Captaine of Cæsarea, he; but even Cæsar himself. Of a truth we may perceive nothing like Cephas in this neither.

Ioh.4.25. The woman at the well-side, said, the Messias when he comes he will tell us all. Yet, Ioh.13.7. when he came, he told them not all at once. Even to Tu es Petrus, He said Tu nescis
Ioh.16.12. modò, scies autem post hæc; and of those Post hæc's, this here was one. As they should bee able to beare (for, all, they were not then able:) And as it should be for them; for, it Act.1.7. was not for them to know all, not the times and the seasons, and such other things as the Father had put in his owne power.

I speake it for this, that even some, that are farre enough from Rome, yet with their new perspective, they thinke, they perceive all. GODS secret decrees, the number and order of them cleerely; are indeed too bold, and too busie with them. Luther said well, that every one of us hath by nature a Pope in his belliе, and thinkes he perceives great matters. Even they, that beleeve it not of Rome, are easily brought to believe it of themselves. And out they come with their Comperi's, with their great confidence propound them. But, Comperi is one thing: in veritate comperi, another comperi, they may say, and that may be doubted of: but, in veritate comperi, that is it.

We may take up the Text a point further. In veritate comperi will beare two senses. 1 One, I perceive that, I did not, before: 2 The other, I perceive that, the contrary whereof, I did conceive before. Not to perceive is but to be ignorant: But Saint Peter, in this, had not only beene ignorant, but had positively held the quite contrary; ad oppositum, Quòd non ex omni gente at any hand. At the fourteenth verse before, for the Iewish meats (we see) he contests with God: Not I Lord; No heathenish meat; I never eat any. And at the twenty eight, no lesse unlawfull to eat with Heathen men.

Ignorance is but privative: this, is positive, and so, an error. An error in the great Mysterie of godlinesse a part whereof was preached unto the Gentiles; that they also had their part in Christ. And, this is not his errour alone: The Apostles and Brethren seeme to have beene in the same; they convented him for his new Comperi, and hee was faine to answer for it. That for the time, generally it was (this error;) and (for ought we know) Saint Stephen, that was stoned before this, departed the world, in the opinion of In unâ, not omni gente: for, then (sure) this truth was not perceived, not received publikely.

Then

Then is not every errour repugnant to Gods election. Why every errour, more than every ſinne? God is able to pardon and not to impute errour in opinion, as well as errour in practice; and Nonne errant omnes qui operantur malum (ſaith Salomon) Doe not all erre that doe evill? yes ſure. Did not the High Prieſt offer, as well for the errors, as for the tranſgreſſions of the people? And is not Chriſt made to us, by God, Wiſdome againſt the one, as well as righteouſneſſe againſt the other? It was Saint Peters caſe here. Prov. 14. 22. Levit. 5. 15. 1 Cor. 1 30.

This only we are to looke to; that with Saint Peter, we be not wilfull, if there come a cleare comperi: but as ready to relent in the one, as to repent of theother. That, when we be ſhewed our errour, we open our eyes to perceive it; and when we perceive it with Saint Peter here, we open our mouths to confeſſe it. And that we doe it with an open mouth, and not betweene the teeth, but acknowledge it plainly, it was otherwiſe than we thought. I verily thought (ſaith Saint Paul) I ought to doe, that which now, all the world ſhould not make me to doe. This is Saint Pauls. I now comprehend, or rather am comprehended (for καταλαμβάνομαι will beare both) of which before I could not. This is S. Peters retractation. Conclude then, if we happen to be in ſome points otherwiſe minded, God will bring us to the knowledge, even of them. Only in thoſe whereto we are come, and whereof we are agreed on all ſides, that we proceed by one rule, make a conſcience of the practice of ſuch truths, as we agree of, and thoſe we doe not, ſhall ſoone be revealed unto us, and we ſhall ſay even of them; In veritate comperi. Act. 26. 9. Phil. 3. 12.

II

What that Point is Privative.

1 God is no accepter of perſons.

What is meant by perſons

What was this, that Saint Peter formerly had not, but now did perceive? That God is no accepter of perſons. Let us take with us, what is meant by Perſons. For, he that feareth God is a perſon; Cornelius was a perſon; ſo were all the perſons in his houſhold. The word in all the three tongues, is taken as we take it, when we ſet perſonall againſt Reall, oppoſe the cauſe to the perſon: under it comprehending whatſoever is beſide the matter or cauſe. The Greeke and Hebrew properly ſignifie the face; that (we know) ſhewes it ſelfe firſt, and if it ſhew it ſelfe well, is muta commendatio, carries us, though it ſay never a word; as in Eliab, the goodlineſſe of his perſon moved even Samuel. Under the face then, we underſtand, (as I may ſay, and as we uſe to call it in apparell) the facing: under the perſon, all by-reſpects that doe perſonate, attire or mask any, to make him perſonable; ſuch as are the Countrey, Condition, Birth, Riches, Honour and the like. And this perſon thus taken, of a truth we daily perceive, that in omni gente men accept of this, and in a manner, of nothing elſe but this: all goes by it. Well, with God, it is otherwiſe, and with men it ſhould be: God accepts them not, nor of any men, for them. This is the comperi. 1 Sam. 16. 6.

And is this it? Why, this was no newes. Was Peter ignorant of this? It is not poſſible; I will never believe, but he had read the five bookes of Moſes: why there it is expreſly ſet downe (Deut. 10.) totidem verbis. VVhy, by the very light of nature Elihu ſaw it, and ſet it down too, Iob 34. No not the perſon of Princes. In Samuels choiſe of David, there it is, 1 Sam. 16. And King Iehoſaphat gave it in his charge, 2 Chron. 19. and in other places beſide: and how could he but know this? Deut. 10. 17. Iob 34 19. 1 Sam. 16 7. Chron. 19. 7.

You will ſay: S. Peter knew it before; but not with a comperi, as now he doth. And (indeed) many things we know, by book, by ſpeculation (as we ſay) and in groſſe, which when wee come to the particular experience of, we uſe to ſay, yea, I know it indeed, as if we had not knowne it, at leaſt not ſo knowne it before. The experimentall knowledge, is the true comperi in veritate, when all is done. VVas this it?

No: for, had he not experience of this, and lay away his book? Have not all experience daily? That God, in dealing his gifts of nature: outward, Beautie, Stature, Strength, Activeneſſe: inward, VVit to apprehend, Memory to retaine, Judgement to diſcerne, Speech to deliver: that He puts no difference, but without all reſpect of perſons, beſtowes them on the childe of the meane, as ſoone, as of the mighty? So is it in wealth and worldly preferment, He lifts the poore out of the duſt. Nay (you will beare Pſal. 113. 7.

beate with it, it is the Holy Ghosts owne terme) the dunghill to set him with Princes. So is it, in His judgements; which light as heavie, yea more heavie other while, on the great, than on the small; and shew that that way and every way, there is with him no respect of persons. And, no man hath better experience of this, than he that spake it, than Peter himselfe, that without any respect, of a poore Fisher-man, was accepted to be an Apostle, the chiefe of the Apostles. S. Paul saith well: What they were in times past, it makes no matter, God accepts no mans person, This they are now.

Gal. 2. 2. Gal. 2 6.

What shall we say then? That, though he could not but know the generall truth of this; yet was he once of the minde, that this generall truth might admit of some exceptions; one at the least. Not, of persons, true: but Nations are not Persons; it held not in them. Of one Nation, God accepted before others, and that Nation was the Iewes. You only have I knowne of all the Nations of the earth (saith God in Amos.) And Non taliter fecit omni Nationi: which non taliter, they tooke to be of the nature of an entaile, to Abrahams seed; that God was tied to them, and so to accept of In unâ gente, before and more than of all the rest.

Amos 3. 2. Psal. 148. 20.

This had runne in Saint Peters head, and more than his. But now, here comes a new Comperi: He perceives, he was wrong: And if you aske, how he perceived it? By relation of Cornelius's vision of the Angell; and by conferring it with his own. He saw, his vision was now come to passe: Moses's uncleane birds and beasts are become cleane all; all, to be eaten, now: and the Gentiles whom he held for no lesse uncleane, to bee eaten with, and to bee gone in unto. All in one great sheet; omni gente and all. That the Nation also comes to be understood under the word person, no lesse than the rest; and none to be respected or accepted of God, for being in one corner of the sheet, (that is, of one countrey) more than of another; that in CHRIST, neither Iew nor Gentile; all is one: and the black [a] Æthiopian, or the [b] white Italian, [c] the Areopagite in his long robe; or the Centurion in his short mantle or military habit; all conditions, all Nations, are in all persons. God hath shut up all in unbeliefe, that he might have mercy upon all. And good reason for it, if it be but that of the Apostles owne framing (Gal. 5. 17.) If the Law which came foure hundred yeares after, could not disannull the covenant made with Abraham so long before; by the same, nay, by a better consequence, neither could the covenant with Abraham make the promise of God of none effect; the promise, that was made in Paradise, more than foure times foure hundred yeares before that of Abrahams, to the woman, and to her whole seed.

a Acts 8. 27. b Vers 2. c Act. 17. 34. Rom. 11. 32.

The vision, S. Peter saw; was at Ioppe: he was gone as farre from Iewrie, as there was any land; hard to the Sea-side, to the very parting place, where they looſed usually, when they went to the lands of the Gentiles. Ionas looſed thence. And, in a Tanners house it was: That, as to Simon the Tanner it was all one, he made leather indifferently, of the Badger, as well as of the sheep skin; as the skins were to Simon the Tanner, so the meat should be to Simon the Apostle. And it was a linnen sheet; which very linnen shewed, they were all cleane: For, in linnen the Iewes wrapped the first-borne of their cleane beasts, if any hapned to die before they came to be offered, and so buried it: but, at no hand, any uncleane beasts ever in linnen. But now, in linnen, all: that, if one cleane, all: And so, no Person, Calling, Countrey excepted to, or accepted of, more than another.

5 Positive: Whom God accepteth, In every Nation he that feareth, &c.

Well then, no person. But, we like not this destructive Divinitie, that tels us what He doth not, and tels us not, what He doth accept. If not the person, nor the persons Nation, What? Accepts He nothing? Yes: In every Nation, if any person there be that feareth God and worketh righteousnesse; He that brings these with him, is (to God) a person acceptable; Such, He will not let lye, but take them up, and lay them up, where ever he findes them.

Eccl. 12. 13.

Salomon, in effect, said as much long before, at the end of his long Sermon, the booke of the Preacher. Will ye (saith he) heare the Summe of all Sermons? Feare God (there is hee that feares Him) and keepe His Commandements (that is, he that works righteousnesse) righteouſneſſe) hoc eſt totum hominis (read ſome) there is all man hath, that God will accept of; Or Hoc eſt omnis homo (read other, and inferre, Si hoc eſt omnis homo, manifeſtum, quòd ſine hoc nihil eſt omnis homo:) This, is man, all that he is; For, what-ſoever beſides this, he is, is as if it were not: This is all things, for without this, with all his perſon and perſonableneſſe, he is nothing in Gods ſight. This preached Salomon, at Hieruſalem, to the Iew; and this, Peter, at Cæſarea, to the Gentiles: Hoc eſt omnis homo, this is all for men, ſaith Salomon; Omni gente, for every Nation, ſaith Peter.

That feareth God, and worketh righteouſneſſe: Both theſe, and not the one without the other. Neither feare, which is dull and workes not; for, of ſuch He accepts not: Nor workes, if they come not from within, from our hearts, from His true feare in our hearts, but be perſonate only, as were thoſe of the Phariſee. We begin then there, within: For, any thing that is perſonate in Religion, and proceeds not from thence (μάϱφωσις, S. Pauls mask or vizor of godlineſſe, S. Peters ἐπικάλυμμα, cloke of Chriſtian liberty) God pluckes them off: He is ſo farre from accepting them, as he caſts them from Him, He cannot abide them. Feareth and worketh jointly. 2 Tim. 3. 5. 1 Pet. 2. 16.

I forgot to tell you, why not the perſon: God Himſelfe tels Samuel, that He lookes not as man lookes; Man lookes upon the outſide, the face and the facing; God lookes to that which is fartheſt from the perſon; to that which is within, at the center (that is) the heart. The inwards were Gods part, in every ſacrifice, reſerved ever to Him alone. By reſerving them, he ſhewes what it is, He chiefly accepts of. We muſt then look to that, firſt. He firſt looks at the heart, and in the heart, to the affection; (for, the heart is the ſeate of affections:) and of all affections, that of feare; and, of all feares, to the feare of God. 1 Sam. 16. 2.

Of God; why, how comes God to be feared? Feare is not, but of ſome evill; and, evill, in God, there is none. Not, for any evill in Him; but for ſome evill; we may expect from him, if wee feare not to offend Him, by doing that which is evill in His ſight. Which puniſhment yet, is not evill of it ſelfe; for puniſhment, is the work of juſtice: but, we call it, as we feele it, malum pœnæ: And, it we feare; and Him, for it; or any that can inflict it.

Power and Iuſtice are of themſelves, fearefull: Power, to all men; Iuſtice, to evill men. But, Iuſtice armed with power, that, keepes all in aw. Now, in God, there is power: Gods power is manifeſt even to Heathen men. It is a part of the γνωστὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, that which may be known of God (His Power) and goe no further but to the work of Creation, ſaith the Apoſtle (Rom. 1. 20.) Every man feares the mighty: for, what Hee will doe, wee know not; what He can do, we know, and that ever preſents it ſelfe firſt.

And, in God, there is Iuſtice, and the voice of juſtice, If thou doe evill, feare. Which Iuſtice of God, is manifeſt likewiſe without Scriptures, by the Law written in our hearts, the hearts even of the Heathen themſelves, ſaith the ſame Apoſtle (Rom. 2. 15.) wherby they are either a law to themſelves (the better ſort of them, Cornelius, here) or, if not, their owne thoughts accuſe them for it, and their conſciences beare witneſſe againſt them, and at a Seſſions holden in their hearts, they condemne themſelves. Which Seſſions is a forerunner of the great generall Seſſions that is to enſue. Rom. 13. 4.

Scientes igitur terrorem hunc (ſaith S. Paul ſtill, 2 Cor. 5.) Knowing then this fearefull judgement, we perſwade men, and men are perſwaded, either to eſchew evill yet undone, or to leave it if it be done, that it be not found in our hands, not taken about us. 2 Cor. 5. 11.

This feare, to ſuffer evill for ſin (malum pœnæ) makes men feare to doe the evill of ſin (malum culpæ:) what they feare to ſuffer for, they feare to doe. Keepes them from doing evill at all, makes them avoid it: or keepes them from doing evill ſtill, makes them forſake it. It prevailed not only with Iob in the old; but with the Ninivites: It prevailed not only with Cornelius, in the New, but even with Felix; made him tremble, though it had not his fall work, for he was not ſo happy, as to heare Paul out, but put it off till another time, which time never came. Ion. 3. 5. Act. 24. 26.

Feare, firſt. He that feareth Him.

Firſt feare: and why feare, firſt? Becauſe it is firſt. It is called (and truly, for ſo truly truly it is) the beginning of our wiſedome, when we beginne to be truly wiſe. In

Gen. 3.10. Adam, it was ſo. The firſt paſſion we read of, that was raiſed in him, that wrought upon him after his fall was, I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid. There began his Wiſedome, in his feare. There began he to play the wiſe-man, and to forethinke him of his folly committed. Feare is φιμὸς φύσεως (as it is well called) of the nature of a bridle to our nature, to hold us in to refraine from evill, if it may be: if not, to check us and turne us about, and make us turne from it. Therefore, Feare GOD, Prov. 3. 7. and depart from evill (lightly) goe together, as the cauſe, and the effect; you ſhall ſeldome finde them parted. So then, becauſe it is firſt, it is to ſtand firſt, and firſt to be regarded.

Another reaſon, is becauſe it is moſt generall. For, it goes through all, heathen and all. It goes to omni gente; For, in omni gente, there is qui timet. For, that they have ſo much faith, as to feare, appeares by the Ninivites plainly. Nay, it goes not onely to omni gente, but even to omni animante too, to beaſts and all; yea to the dul-
Num. 22. 23. leſt beaſt of all, to Balaam's beaſt: he could not get her (ſmite her, ſpurre her, do what he could to her) to run upon the point of the Angels ſword: that they are in worſe caſe than beaſts that are void of it. So, firſt it riſeth of all, and furtheſt it reacheth of all.

And, this feare, I would not have men think meanly of it. It is (we ſee) the be-

Eſay 11. 2. the Alpha and Omega, firſt and laſt, beginning and end. Firſt and laſt (I am ſure) there is ſovereigne uſe of it.

Nor regard them not, that ſay, it pertaines not to the New Teſtament; phanſying to themſelves, nothing muſt be done, but out of pure love. For, even there it abideth, and two ſovereigne uſes there are ſtill of it, thoſe two which before we named; [a] One, to begin; [b] the other, to preſerve.

1 To begin: We ſet it here as an introduction, as the dawning is to the day. For Mal. 4. 2. on them, that are in this dawning, that feare His name, on them ſhall the Sun of righteouſneſſe ariſe. It is Malachi ſaith it: it is Cornelius here ſheweth it. As the baſe Court, to the Temple: Not into the Temple at firſt ſtep; but, come through the Court firſt. As the needle, to the thred (it is S. Auguſtine:) that, firſt enters, and drawes after it the thred; and that ſewes all faſt together.

Where, there happens a ſtrange effect, that, not to feare, the next way is to feare. The kind work of feare, is to make us ceaſe from ſin. Ceaſing from ſin brings with it a good life; a good life, that ever carries with it a good conſcience; and a good conſcience caſts out feare. So that, upon the matter, the way, not to feare, is to feare: and, that GOD, that brings light out of darkneſſe, and glory out of humility, He it is, that alſo brings confidence out of feare.

2 This, for the introduction. And ever after, when faith is entred and all, it is a ſovereigne meanes to preſerve them alſo. There is (as I have told you) a compoſition in the ſoule, much after that of the body. The heart, in the body, is ſo full of heat, it would ſtifle it ſelfe and us ſoone, were it not, GOD hath provided the lungs, to give it coole ayre, to keep it from ſtifling. Semblably in the ſoule, faith is full of Spirit, ready enough of it ſelfe to take an unkind heat, ſave that feare is by GOD ordained, to coole it and keep it in temper, to awake our care ſtill, and ſee, it ſleepe not in ſecurity. It

c Rom. 11. 20.

And

And theſe would marre all, for the humble feare of God: by that all is kept right.

Wherefore, when the Goſpell was at the higheſt, worke out your ſalvation with feare and trembling (ſaith S. Paul:) Paſſe the time of your dwelling here in feare (ſaith S. Peter.) Yea, our Saviour Himſelfe (as noteth S. Auguſtine) when he had taken away one feare, Ne timete, Feare not them that can kill the body, and when they have done that, have done all, and can doe no more; in place of that feare, puts another, But feare Him, that when he hath ſlaine the body, can caſt ſoule and it into hell fire: and when He had ſo ſaid once, comes over againe with it to ſtrike it home, Etiam dico vobis; Yea, I ſay unto you, feare Him.

Phil.2.12. 1 Pet.1.17. Mat.10.28.

So then, this of feare, is not c*Moſes*'s ſong only, it is the ſong of Moſes and the Lamb both. Made of the harmonie of the t'one, as well as t'other. A ſpeciall ſtraine, in that *ſong of Moſes and the Lamb, Apoc.*15. you ſhall finde this: Who will not feare thee ô Lord? He that will not, may ſibi canere, make himſelfe muſicke; he is out of their queer, yea the Lambs queer; indeed, out of both.

Apoc.15.4.

This have I a little ſtood on; for that, me thinks, the world begins to grow from feare too faſt: we ſtrive to blow this Spirit quite away; for feare of carnificina conſcientiæ, we ſeek to benumme it, and to make it paſt feeling. For theſe cauſes, feare is, with GOD a thing acceptable, we heare: And, that the Holy Ghoſt came down, where this feare was, we ſee. So it is, S. Peter affirmes it, For certaine, of a truth: So it is, S. Peter proteſts it. Let no man beguile you, to make you thinke otherwiſe: No, no; but Fac, fac vel timore pœnæ, ſi nondum poteſt, amore juſtitiæ: Do it man, I tell thee, do it, though it be for feare of puniſhment, if you cannot yet get your ſelfe to doe it for love of righteouſneſſe. One will bring on the other, A timore Domini concepimus Spiritum ſalutis: (It is Eſai.) By it, we ſhall conceive that, which ſhall ſave us. Theſe very words ſhall ſave us, ſaid the Angell, and ſo they did: Here, in Cornelius, we have a faire preſident for it. And ſo, now I come to the other.

For, I aske, Is GOD all for within: accepts He of nothing without? Yes, that He doth. Of a good righteous worke too, if it proceed, from His feare in our hearts. Feare is not all then: No, for it is but the beginning (as we have heard;) God will have us begin, but not end there. We have begun with qui timet eam; we muſt end with & operatur juſtitiam, and then comes acceptus eſt illi, and not before. For, neither feare, if it be feare alone; nor faith, if it be faith alone, is accepted of him; but timet and operatur (here) with Peter and fides quæ operatur (there with Paul:) feare and faith (both) that worketh, and; none elſe. If it be true feare, if ſuch as God will accept, it is not timor piger, a dull lazie feare: His feare that feared his Lord and went and digged his talent into the ground, did nothing with it; Away with his feare and him into utter darkneſſe. God will have his talent turned, have it above ground. He will not have His religion inviſible within. No; ſhew me thy faith (ſaith S. Iames;) thy feare (ſaith S. Peter here) by ſome workes of righteouſneſſe: Elſe, talke not of it. He will have it made appeare, that men may ſee it, and glorifie him for it, that hath ſuch good and faithfull ſervants.

But workes withall: And worketh righteouſneſſe.

Gal.5.6. Mat.25.18.3 Iam.2.18.

And they obſerve, that it is not [that doth] but [that worketh righteouſneſſe;] Not facit, but operatur. And, what manner of worke? Saint Peter's word is ἐργαζόμενον here: and for ἐργαζόμενον, ἔργον will not ſerve; it muſt be ἐργασία, which is a plaine trade. Diſcite bene agere (ſaith Eſai) learne it, as one would learne an handicraft, to live by: Learne it, and be occupied in it; make an ἐργασία, that is, even an occupation of it. CHRISTS owne occupation, who (as Saint Peter tels us ſtraight after) pertranſiit bene faciendo, Went up and downe, went about doing good, practiſing it, and nothing elſe: for, that is ἐργάζεσθαι.

Eſay 1.17. Ver.38.

Worketh righteouſneſſe. This righteouſneſſe; to know what it is (beſide the common duties of our calling, either as Chriſtians in generall; or particular, as every mans vocation lyes) we cannot better informe our ſelves of it, than from this partie, hee ſpeakes of (from Cornelius) and what the workes were, he did. And they are ſet down at the ſecond verſe: where, after Saint Luke had ſaid, he feared God, to ſhew his works of righteouſneſſe he addes, [1] he gave much almes, and [2] prayed to God continually; and at the 30. verſe, that he was found [3] faſting at the ninth houre (that is) three, at after-noon. In theſe three, [1] Almes, [2] Prayer, and [3] Faſting, ſtood his workes of righteouſneſſe: In theſe three; for beſides theſe we finde not any other. They be the ſame, and in the ſame order, as they were figured in the three Oblations of the Magi, firſt fruites of the Gentiles, there in the Goſpell, as the Fathers allot them: [1] Gold, that is, for Almes; [2] Incenſe, that is Prayer; and [3] Myrrhe, bitter myrrhe, for Workes of Mortification, as Faſting and ſuch like; as bitter to the fleſh, as myrrhe to the taſte: both bitter, but, wholeſome, both. But (without all figure) they are the ſame three, and ſtand juſt in the ſame order, that here they doe, where our Saviour teacheth them literally, and

Of Gods acceptation. He, &c. is accepted.

And now, of Gods acceptation. Accepting is but a queint terme borrowed from the Latine. It is no more than receiving or taking. [1] Firſt then, cleere it is, Hee will take them; but, where they be to take: But where they are not, take them He cannot. In vaine ſhall we looke for acceptation of that, which is not. We are then to ſee, there be ſome given; ſome, for Him to take. Take us He cannot, if there be not Cornelius's hand to take us by: Come up in remembrance they cannot, if none were done to remember: For, memoria eſt præteritorum, and all ours are yet to come (I feare) in phantaſiâ rather than in memoriâ. Our almes, alas they are ſhrunke up pitifully: Prayer, ſwallowed up with hearing Lectures: and for the third, feaſt (if you will) continually; but, faſt, as little as may be; and, of moſt I might ſay, not at all. The want of theſe, the bane of our Age. He ſtretcheth out his hand to receive almes; he boweth downe His eare to receive Prayer; He beholdeth with His eyes, to take us faſting: There is none to give them, and ſo He cannot receive them. But, by this acceptus eſt (here) we ſee, how we might be accepti.

It is beſide the Text; yet if ye aske, Here is feare, and here are workes, where is
Heb. 11. 6. faith all this while, without which it is impoſſible to pleaſe God, or to be accepted of Him? Had he no faith? Yes, hee would not have ſpent his goods, or chaſtened his body, Rom 10. without ſome faith: at leaſt, call upon GOD hee could not, on whom hee believed not.

Therefore he believed, ſure: The Gentiles Creed at leaſt, That a GOD there is; that ſought he will be; that, He will not faile them that ſeeke him, but both regard and reward them.

The Ninivites Creed at leaſt: in whoſe feare, there was faith and hope too: Quis ſcit, Who can tell, whether GOD may not turne and ſpare, and accept of a poore Gentile? There is nothing knowne to the contrary, and there be preſidents for it.

And ſo he turned, and ſet himſelf to ſeek God, by the three ways we remembred.
Pſal 9. 10. And thou Lord never faileſt them that ſeeke Thee, but accepteſt them, not according to that they have not; but according to that they have, though it be but a willing minde, they 2 Cor. 8. 12. have. God forbid, but concupiſcence ſhould be of equall power to good, that it is to evill. If you will reach it further, to faith in Chriſt: living in garriſon among the Iewes, he could not chooſe but have heard ſomewhat of Him, to move him, to throw himſelfe downe before Him, and He tooke him up, Acceptus eſt illi.

Eſay 42. 3. The flaxe did but ſmoke, Chriſt quenched it not. Crackes there were in the reed, but He brake it not though; but kindled the one, and bound up the other: and in that little ſtrength he had, tooke him, as He found him; and tooke order, thus to bring him neerer the wayes of his ſalvation.

But

But now leſt one error beget another, and the laſt prove worſe than the firſt, take this with you. When all is ſaid that can be ſaid, all is but accepting for all this. That he was and we ſhall be accepted, that gives us ſome heart: And, that is but accepted, that takes away all ſelfe-conceit of our ſelves. For, I know not how, if we be but accepted, we take upon us ſtraight, and fall into a phanſie, that well worthy we were, or els we ſhould not. Altum ſapere comes, and we ſwell ſtraight; inſomuch as we cannot bee gotten to accept of this acceptus eſt, to accept of any acceptation, but grow to a higher ſtraine of merit and condignitie, and I wot not what. To pricke this bladder, all is ſhut up with this δεκτὸς. Out of which word, we are to take notice of this: it is neither our feare, nor our workes; all is but Gods gratious acceptation. And, but accepted.

And, it is not, as they well obſerve, δεκτέος, but δεκτός: not δεκτέος, acceptandus, is to be accepted of Him; as if God could neither will nor chooſe: No, it is δεκτὸς only, that is, but acceptabilis, at moſt, but a capacitie that He may be; layes no neceſsitie, that He muſt be accepted.

The Schoolemen expreſſe it well, at times, By, non deerit Deus, God will not bee wanting to ſuch, will accept them: But, non tenetur Deus, He is not ſo bound, but, if He would, He might refuſe; and that He doth not, it is but of His meere goodneſſe: All are but accepted.

The Fathers, thus; (I name S. Auguſtine for the Latine:) Hoc habet, non pondus humani meriti, ſed ordo conſilii divini: That thus it is, it is no weight or worth of mans merit; it is but the very order and courſe of Gods dealing: His favourable dealing, that and nothing elſe, that there is any accepting at all. The Greeke Fathers, thus; (I name Chryſoſtome for them:) It is καταξίωσις, not ἀξία, (that is) dignatio, not dignitas: dignatio Acceptantis, not dignitas operantis. Digni habebuntur, ſaith the Goſpell, and the Epiſtle both; the Goſpell, Luk. 20. the Epiſtle, 2 Theſ. 1. God accounts them worthy, and His ſo counting makes them worthy: makes them ſo, for ſo they are not of themſelves, or without it; but, by it, ſo they are. His taking our workes of righteouſneſſe well in worth, is their worth. Luk. 20. 35. 2 Theſ. 1. 5.

There was another Centurion (beſide this in the Apoſtle) the Centurion in the Goſpell; the Elders of the Iewes were at dignus eſt, about him; dignified him highly: but, hee indignified himſelfe as faſt, was at his non ſum dignus twice, neither worthy that Christ ſhould come to him, nor that hee to Christ. And even thus it was ever with all from the beginning: Iob (another timens Deum, his like was not upon earth, yet thus, he) Etſi juſtus fuero non levabo caput, All were he juſt, he would downe with his creſt for all that; and what? Et deprecabor judicem meum, and plead nothing, ſtand upon no termes, but deale only by way of ſupplication; and that is the ſafeſt way. And why ſo? For Verebar omnia opera mea (ſaith he) hee durſt not truſt any of them. And why not? For the continuall dropping of our corruption, upon the webb of our well-doing, ſtaines it ſo, as if he would ſtand ſtreining them, he that now doth accept them, might juſtly except to them, for many exceptions there lye againſt them. He that takes them might let them lie, as not worth the taking up; For, if he ſhould ranſack them they would ſcarce prove worth the taking up; but yet take them up hee doth, and reward them; Both, for the praiſe of the glory of his grace: To the glory of the praiſe of which grace be all this ſpoken. Luk. 7. 4. & Verſ. 6. Iob 1. 3. 10. 15. 9. 15. 9. 28. Epheſ. 1. 6.

All which tends to this (for our work is this, our labour this, this is all in all, to get men to do well, and yet not weene well of their well-doing:) To joyne firſt timet and operatur, to feare and yet to doe good; and when we have done good, yet to feare, with Iob, for Davids reaſon, cognoſcimus imperfectum noſtrum. Then to joyne againe Operatur, and acceptus eſt. For, that is it if we could hit on it: we cannot; but, that is it, though. For thinke you, we can get men to this? No: doe we evill, we will not know it, we excuſe, we leſſen it. Do we well, we know it ſtraight; Nay we over-know and over-priſe it. No remedie, merit it muſt be, and hire it muſt be: Reward, we cannot skill of; Acceptus eſt is nothing, Accepted will not ſerve: we will know, how we ſhall be accepted, of merit or of grace. Fond men! ſo we be accepted, though of grace, are we not well? What desire we more, but to be taken and not refused? The Law that saith: Say not, it is for my righteousnesse: The Prophets say, it is not for your sakes: The Apostle saith, if you seeke to establish your owne righteousnesse, you are gone. Yea, Christ Himselfe saith, if you talke much of it (with the Pharisee) Lord this I am; and this I doe, there is not the poorest Publican that goes by the way, but he shall be justified before you. And therefore be entreated, I pray you, to accept of acceptus est: that sets all safe; that, brings all to God, and there leaves it.

Deut. 9.4. Ezek. 36.22. Rom. 10.3. Luk 8. 11.14.

For, if this fearer, this worker be accepted and not in himself, in whom then? who is it? The Apostle tels us directly, He hath made us accepted in his beloved, His beloved son: So Paul. And S. Peter immediately in the very next words (that follow upon these) you know the word, the word of the Word, that was in the beginning and made all, and that in the fulnesse of time was sent and healed all; Misit Verbum & sanavit eos. In Him and through Him all are accepted that have had, or shall have the honour and happinesse ever so to be. In whom then, we are accepted, we see.

Ephes. 1.6. Psal. 107.20.

To what end accepted.

Now lastly, to what; and so an end. That being so accepted or received (whether you will, both are one) you may receive, what? plaine it is, it followes, the Sacrament. But they to receive the first Sacrament, that of Baptisme; for they were yet in their Paganisme, un-baptized. But they that are Christians already, and past the first, there remaineth for them to receive, none but the second. And that then, is it. And, that, bound they are to receive. For, though by speciall priviledge some are asperſi Spiritu quos aqua mystica non tetigit, sprinkled with the Holy Ghost, before they had the sprinkling of water; of which number was Cornelius, and these in the Text: though, while they were at the Sermon, the Holy Ghost came upon them; yet, to the Sacrament they came though, we see. That, was to them, and is, to us all, the seale of Gods acceptation. That first, was theirs; but the chiefe and last, is this of ours.

For, this is indeed the true receiving, when one is received to the table, to eat and drink, to take his repast there: yea ad accipiendum in quo acceptus est, to take, and to take into Him, that body, by the oblation whereof, we are all sanctified, and that blood in which, we have all remission of sinnes. In that, ended they: in this, let us end.

And this accepting we desire of God: and desiring it in an acceptable time, He will heare us; and, this is that acceptable time. For, if the yeare of Pentecost, the fiftieth yeare, were the acceptable yeare, as Luk. 4.21. then, the day of Pentecost the fiftieth day, this day, is the acceptable day for the same reason. Truly acceptable, as the day, whereon the Holy Ghost was first received; and whereon we may receive him now againe: Whereon, acceptus est is fulfilled both wayes: we, of Him received to grace; and He of us, His flesh and blood, and with them, His spirit. He receiveth us to grace; and we receive of Him grace, and with it, the influence of His Holy Spirit, which shall still follow us, and never leave us, till we be accepti indeed, that is, received up to Him, in His kingdome of glory. Whither, blessed are they that shall be received.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL,

On the IV. of June, A.D. M DC XX. being WHITSUNDAY.

I. JOHN, Chap. V. Ver. VI.

Hic eſt, qui venit per aquam & ſanguinem, IESUS CHRISTUS: non in aqua ſolum, ſed in aqua & ſanguine. Et Spiritus eſt, qui teſtificatur, quoniam Spiritus eſt veritas.

This is that IESUS CHRIST, that came by water and bloud: not by water onely, but by water and bloud. And it is the Spirit that beareth witneſſe; for, the Spirit is truth.

THIS is JESUS CHRIST; and it is the Spirit. So, the verſe (you ſee) linketh CHRIST and the Spirit together; is a paſſage, from the one to the other. Linketh them, and ſo (conſequently) linketh this Feaſt of the Spirit preſent, with thoſe of CHRIST that are gone before; and under one, ſheweth the convenience of having the Spirit, an article in our Creed; and of having this day, a feaſt, in our Calendar.

For, though CHRIST have done all, that He had to doe; all is not done, that is to doe, till the Spirit come too. We have nothing to ſhew; we want our teſte; a ſpeciall part of our evidence is lacking: that when all is done, if this be not; nothing is done. Christ without water, water without blood; His water and blood; and Hee, without the Spirit, availe us nothing. The spirit we are to have: and, this day we have it: and, for the having it this day, we keepe a Feast. As those hitherto, for Christ, complementum legis; so this, for the Holy Ghost, complementum Evangelii, which was not complete, donec complerentur dies Pentecostes, till the dayes of Pentecost were fulfilled: till this day was come and gone.

Saint Iohn is every where all for love. Here, in this Chapter (I know not how) he is hit upon faith. Which, with him, is rare: so, the more to be made of. Specially in this age, wherein it is grown the vertue of chiefe request. And indeed Ἡ χαλεπὴ πίστις ἔστιν, ἐναντίστις ἡ, an excellent vertue is faith, if it be faith. For, as there is (saith S. Paul)
1 Tim. 6. 20. γνώσεως ψευδωνύμου, a knowledge falsly so called, so is there a faith: for faith is it selfe but a kinde of knowledge.

How shall we then make faith, of our faith? Of it selfe, it is but a bare act (faith) a thing indifferent: the vertue, and the value of it is, from the object it believeth in; if that be right, all is right. And, that is right, if it have for this object, not Iesus Christ barely; but (as S. Iohn speaketh) That Iesus Christ. That Iesus Christ, is somewhat a strange speech, as if there were another. Is there so? Yes, (2 Cor. 11. 5.) yee have alium Iesum, and (Gal. 1. 7.) aliud Evangelium; Not that, but, another Iesus: Not this, but, another Gospell.

And as, not that, but another Iesus; So Christ Himselfe tels us, you shall have, not that, but another Christ. Another, nay many other: yet there is but one true, Mat. 24. 24. Lo here is Christ, lo there He is. Goe into the desart there you shall have Him: Get you to such a conventicle, and there you shall not misse of Him. Goe but to one Citie, I could name, you shall have Christs enough; and scarce a true one, among them all.

Ier. 15. 19. Well then, what shall we doe, to sever the pretious from the vile, That Iesus Christ, from others; set the Hic est ille, upon the right Christ? This (saith S. Iohn:) These two wayes: 1 That Iesus Christ, that comes in water and blood joyntly; not, in either alone, Hic est ille: If, but in one, he is another Iesus. 2 That Iesus that hath the Spirit to beare him witnesse, is the true; this Witnesse if He want, Hic non est ille. Under one, we shall learne Christ aright. For, as one may learn a false Christ, so may he be the true Christ falsly. You have not so learned Christ, saith the Apostle (Ephes. 4. 20.) that is, not amisse, you have not; meaning, some other had. And, as learne Christ aright, so learne to doe the Spirit his right: not to shoot him off, but know, hee is to have a chiefe Holy day, in our Fasti, as He hath a part, and a principall part, in the Teste of whosoever shall be saved.

The Summe. The Summe is, three Items wee have: 1. That wee take not Pseudo-Christum pro Christo: the false Christ for the true; that is, one that comes in His name, but is not He.

2 Neither, when we have the true one, that we take not Semi-Christum pro Christo,: a moity or part of Christ, for the whole.

3 When we have the whole, that we take Him not, without His Teste (and that is the Spirit:) For, as good not take Him at all.

The Division. Three parts I would lay forth: 1 There is Christs part. 2 There is the Spirits part. 3 There is the Sacraments part.

I. Christs part, His double comming, in 1 water, and 2 blood. In it, these: 1 That Christ was so to come. 2 That Christ did so come. 3 Not only did, but doth so come daily to us. 4 As He comes to us in both, so we to come to Him for both; and (ever) to take heed of the errour, of either alone, of turning non solum, into solum.

II. Then the Spirits part. 1 Of His witnesse. Of the truth of it. 1. Of His witnesse, 1 That a witnesse there is to be. 2 That a witnesse there is. 3 Nay, not one, but three. 4 Of which, the Spirit is one and the chiefe witnesse: His witnesse to 1 Iesus, 2 Christ that came came; 3 to the water, to the 4 blood, He came in. This, of His witneſſe. Then, of the Truth of it; and withall, how to diſcerne the Spirit, that is, the Truth.

And laſt, the reverſall to this. That, as not theſe, without the Spirit; So, not the Spirit, without theſe (that is) not without the Sacraments, which are the monuments and pledges of theſe. And ſo, that we endeavour, that the Spirit on this day (the day of the Spirit) may come to us, and give His witneſſe, that Christ is come to us, and come to us in them; in them both; to our comfort both here, and eternally. III

THus it is written, and thus it behoved, that He that was to come, Ieſus the Saviour of the world, when He came, ſhould come in water and blood. His name was ſo called (Ieſus) ſaith the Angell, to ſhew He ſhould ſave His people from their ſinnes, To ſave us from them, by taking them away: For, Hic eſt omnis fructus (ſaith Eſai, and it is a ground with us,) All the fruit we have, is the taking away of our ſin. Take that away, the reſt will follow of it ſelfe: that (indeed) is all in all. I Chriſts Part: 1 That He was to come in water and blood. Mat. 1. 21. Eſay 27. 9.

To take away ſinne, two things are to be taken away. For, in ſinne, are theſe two: 1 Reatus, and 2 Macula (as all Divines agree) the guilt, and the ſoyle or ſpot. The guilt to which Puniſhment is due: The ſpot, whereby we grow loathſome in Gods eyes, and even in mens, too. For, even before them, Shame and Reproach follow ſin. Take theſe two away, and ſinne is gone. And there is no people, under heaven, but have ſenſe of theſe two; and no religion is, or ever was, but laboured to remove them both.

To take away ſoyle, water is moſt fit: To take away guilt, blood. No puniſhment, for any guilt, goes further than blood. Therefore had the heathen their luſtrations, for the ſoyle; which were ever by water (---donec me flumine vivo Abluero;) and their expiations, for the guilt, by ſhedding of blood ever (ſanguine placâſtis;) without which they held no remiſſion of ſins.

The Jewes they likewiſe had their ſprinkling water for the uncleanneſſe: had their ſlaine ſacrifice, the blood whereof done on their poſts, the deſtroyer paſſed by them, the guilt by it being firſt taken away. Num. 8. 7. Exod. 12. 22.

But the Prophet tels us, No water (no, not ſnow-water, and put to it nitre and borith and fullers ſope, never ſo much) can enter into the ſoule, and take away the ſteines of it. Ier. 2. 22.

And the Apoſtle he tels us; It was impoſſible, the blood of bulls and goates ſhould ſatisfie for the ſins of men. The water had not the vertue to get out thoſe ſpots: nor the blood, the value, to make ſatisfaction to God, for mans treſpaſſe. Heb. 10. 4.

Donec venit qui venturus erat, Till He came that was to come; Shilo, with a blood, and a water, which (becauſe it was the blood and water of the Sonne of God; and ſo of God) by his divine power, infuſed into both, gave the water ſuch a piercing force, and gave the blood ſo ineſtimable high a value, as was able to work both: to put an end to that which never the waſhings, nor offerings of nature, or of the Law could ridde us of. Thus in water and blood was He to come, that was to take ſin away. Gen. 49. 10.

Thus was He to come, and thus did He come: did come diverſe wayes. In blood, the blood of His Circumciſion; In water, the water of His Baptiſme. Began ſo, and ſo ended: In water, the water of His ſtrong crying and teares, whereby He made ſupplication to God for us; in blood, the blood of His paſſion, the blood of Gethſemane, His bloody ſweat; the blood of Gabbatha, of the ſcourges and thornes; the blood of Golgotha, of His hands and feet digged. Thus came He. 2 That He did ſo come. Mat. 26. 36. Ioh. 19. 13. 17.

Yet is it none of theſe, Saint Iohn pointeth to: (theſe were at ſeverall times:) but, he points to His comming in both together at once. This place of the Epiſtle, referrs to that place of the Goſpell, where at once, with one blow, His ſide being opened, there came forth blood and water, both. Blood, Sanguis Teſtamenti ſaith Zach. 9. the Blood of His Teſtament, whereby He ſet His guilty priſoners free. Water (ſaith the ſame Zacharie 13.) fons Domui Iſrael; a fountaine which he opened to the houſe of Iſrael, for ſin, and for uncleanneſſe. The one, blood, the λύτρον, the ranſome or price of the taking away the guilt; the other, water, the λουτρόν, laver of our new birth, from our originall corruption.

Hæc ſunt Eccleſiæ gemina ſacramenta (ſaith Auguſtine.) Theſe are (not two of the Sacraments: ſo there might be more, but) the twin-ſacraments of the Church. So, but two of that kinde; two famous memorials left us; in Baptiſme, of the water; in the Cup, of the New Teſtament, of the blood, He then came in.

3 That he comes ſo ſtill.

Thus did CHRIST come: did and doth ſtill. For the word is not ἐληλυθώς, referring to the time paſt, but ἐλθών, which reſpecteth even the preſent alſo. Came not once but ſtill and ever commeth ſo. The water ſtill runnes; for He opened a fountaine never to be drawne dry; And His maſſa ſanguinis is not ſpent neither; For, it is ſanguis æterni fœderis, and ſo æternus: of the everlaſting Covenant; and ſo, it ſelfe laſting for ever.

Heb.13.20.

And that, this His comming to us, he meanes, the order ſheweth. For, when it came from him, it came in another order; blood came firſt, and then water: ſee the Goſpell. But here in the Epiſtle, when He comes to us; water is firſt, and then blood. Blood and water, the order quoad ſe: Water and Blood, quoad nos. Ever to us, in water firſt.

Ioh.19.34.

But what meanes this, not in water only, but in water and blood? To ſay [in water and blood] was plaine enough one would thinke. Our rule is in Logicke, Non ſufficit alterum, oportet utrunque fieri in copulativis. Our rule in Divinitie, What God hath joyned let no man preſume to ſever. Yet, when He had ſaid, in water and blood, He comes over with them againe, with his non in aquâ ſolum, Not in water only, but in water and blood. What meanes this, but to make it yet more plaine, that there might be no miſtaking, no ſlipping of the collar; that one of them will not ſerve our turne; but, as once Hee came, ſo ſtill and ever we is to come in them both.

Mat.29.6.

4 That we are to come to Him for both.

And as He to come to us, ſo we to come to Him. He to us in both, we to Him for both. He not to us, in either alone; we not to Him, for either alone. For, if for either alone, we make ſuperfluous His comming in the other; we queſtion His wiſedome, as if He came in more than needed, as if any thing He came in might well enough be ſpared. No, we need both, we have uſe of both, and ſo to come to Him for them both.

Apoc.2.24.

Among the profunda Satanæ, this was one; when he could not κωλῦσαι keep Him out: by a new ſtratageme, he ſought λύσαι τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ſolvere Ieſum (as the Fathers read the verſe of the Chapter next before) that is, to take Him in peeces. When he could not prevaile in ſetting up a falſe; he ſet ſome on work, to take in ſunder the true.

Was it not thus? Did they not ſolvere diſſolve, take in ſunder His Natures: made Him come as only man; as Samoſatenus: made Him come as only God, as Sabellius? Diſſolved they not His perſon; made Him come in two, as Neſtorius? And is not this (here) a plaine diſſolving alſo? He comming intirely in both, to take Him by halves, take of Him what they liſt, what they thinke will ſerve their turnes, and leave the other and let it lye? So take pars pro toto, a peece of Ieſus for the whole, as if they meant to be ſaved by Synecdoche.

Which very taking Him in peeces, makes him, that hee is not the true. For if the comming in both twaine, make Him Hic eſt ille; the taking away of either, turnes Him into alium Ieſum; and ſo, Hic non eſt ille. This you may call Ieſus Chriſt, but this is not that Ieſus Chriſt, Saint Iohn his ὑγιαίνοντες taught us. There was a ſort of Heretikes, in the Primitive Church, were ſo all for water, cared ſo little for His comming in blood, as they miniſtered the Communion in nothing but water, and are therefore called Hydropocaſtatæ, or Aquarii. There were others: But it were a world to rake up old errours: what need we? Have we not now, that frame to themſelves a Chriſt without water, or a Chriſt without blood, and ſo ſeeme to hold

aqua ſola, or ſolus ſanguis, againſt Saint Iohns, non in ſolâ (ſtat.)

See you ſome, that powre out themſelves into all riot, and follow uncleanneſſe even with greedineſſe? Christ in water would do well for ſuch; and they care leaſt for it; by their good will would have none come upon them; would not be cleane, would be as they are, as ſwine in their wallow all their life long. No water, they; but bloud, aſmuch as you will. Frame to themſelves a Christ without water, all in bloud. 1 Eph 4.19.

This is that Christ, that commeth: How comes He? what brings He? Comes He in bloud, brings He good ſtore of that, that we may ſtrike off the guilt of our old ſcore? He is welcome comming ſo. But He comes with water too. Nay, they can ſpare that (with the Gergeſites, to pray Him to be gone, to depart from their coaſts) they love bloud without water, are all for comfort (as they call it) nothing for cleanneſſe of life. In ſolo ſanguine, theſe. Matth 8.34.

See you ſome other (not many, but ſome) carefull to their weake power, to containe themſelves, yet through humane frailty overtaken otherwhile: Christ in bloud comes for theſe, for theſe in ſpeciall, and alas they dare not come neare it (not His bloud) as utterly unworthy of it. Theſe are but few, in compariſon of thoſe other, the ſoli-ſanguines. Yet, ſome ſuch there are, and for them hath S. Iohn directed the letter of this Text in this order which it ſtands; that Christ came not in water alone, but came in bloud, too. 2

Timorous trembling conſciences think, they have never water enough: if they find about them any unclean thing, they are quite caſt down, utterly dejected ſtraight: as if that Christ were Iohn Baptiſt, that came in water alone: nay, were turned into Moſes, that had his name of being taken out of the water; as if He came all in water, nay were all water, had not a drop of bloud in Him. Theſe ſeem to hold in aqua ſola; whereas Christ hath both water and bloud, of each alike much, no leſſe of the one, than of the other: Came in bloud, and came in it for them, and to them doth moſt readily apply it, that make moſt ſpare of it.

But, the greater number by farre, are thoſe, in the other extreme, that are nothing timorous, farre enough from that; diſſolute, and care not how many foule blotches they have, ſo they may have the guilt and puniſhment taken away: heare, there is remiſſion of ſinnes in His bloud; ſo lie at His veines continually like horſe-leeches, ſo as if it were poſſible, they would not leave a drop of bloud in Him. As for his water, they have no uſe of it, nor deſire not to have any, let that run waſt; are all for bloud, would not care, if all the water were dreined from Him, nay if (as the waters of Ægypt) all His were turned into bloud. Forgiven, that they would be; Cleane they care not to be: aſmuch bloud, as little water as you will. Both theſe would be looked to, but this later more, as the predominant errour of our age, wherein the water is even at the low-water-marke. Now, for theſe, we turne the non ſolùm (as by good warrant we may) both wayes; It is equally true, Not in bloud alone (heare you) but in bloud and water. Will you have no water? then muſt you have no Christ: For Christ came in water. And further we add, that as in water and bloud both, ſo in water firſt (for ſo it lieth in the Text) and that which ſtands firſt, we to paſſe thorough firſt; water, quoad nos, is the firſt before bloud: There to begin in God's name. Take that with you too.

They then, that have learned Christ aright are to come to Him for both. With the woman of Samaria, Lord give us of this water: with them of Capernaum, Lord, give us of this bread, of this Cup of the New Teſtament in Thy bloud. To come to Him for bloud, for the forgiveneſſe of our ſinnes through faith in His bloud. To come to Him for water aſwell, for the taking out of the ſteines. Yea (even as Eſay ſaid) Haurietis aquas cum gaudio de fontibus Salvatoris, even with joy to draw waters from the fountaines of our Saviour: with more joy ſo draw water, than to draw bloud from Him. Ioh. 4.15. 6.34. 1 Cor. 11.25. Eſay 12.3.

But (indeed) to look well into the matter, they cannot be ſeparate; they are mixt; either is in other. There is a mixture of the bloud in the water; there is ſo, of the water in in the blood: we can miniſter no water without blood: nor blood, without water. In baptiſme we are waſhed with water: That water is not without blood. The blood ſerves inſtead of nitre. He hath waſhed us from our ſinnes in His blood (Apoc. 1. 5.) (waſhed.) They made their robes white in the blood of the Lambe (Apoc. 7.14.) No waſhing, no whiting, by water, without blood. And, in the Euchariſt, we are made drinke of the blood of the New Teſtament: but, in that blood, there is water: for the blood of CHRIST purifieth us from our ſinnes. Now, to purifie, is a vertue properly belonging to water, which yet is in the blood: and purifying referres to ſpots, not to guilt, properly. So, either is in other; Therefore, the conceit of ſeparation, let it alone for ever.

1 Ioh. 1. 7.

To take heed then of dreining Chriſts water from His blood; or abſtracting His blood from His water; of bringing in the Reſtringent (ſola) into either. Every one of us, for his owne part, thus to doe. But howſoever men frame phanſies to themſelves (as frame they will. do what we can) that our doctrine be looked to; we are not to teach Ieſus Chriſt, but That Ieſus Chriſt, that thus came in both. That our Divinitie then, on the one ſide, be not wateriſh, without all heart or comfort; preſenting Chriſt in water only, to make feare, where none is. Nor, on the other, that we frame not our ſelves a ſanguine Divinitie, void of feare quite, and bring in Chriſt all in blood, blood and nothing elſe; with little water, or none at all; for feare of Ex nimiâ ſpe deſperatio.

Gal. 3. 8. Act. 15. 9. Rom. 8. 20. 1 Ioh. 3. 3.

Faith, as it juſtifieth (ſaith S. Paul;) there is blood: So it purifieth the heart (ſaith S. Peter;) there is water. Hope, as it ſaveth (ſaith S. Paul;) blood: So it cleanſeth (ſaith S. John;) water. In vaine we flatter our ſelves, if they doe the one and not the other. Doe we make grace of none effect? that, we may not (Gal. 2. ult.) Doe we make the Law of none effect, by faith? that, we may not neither (Rom. 3. 10.) not, this day ſpecially, the Feaſt of the Law, and Spirit, both: but rather eſtabliſh it. Beſt, if it could be ſet right, the Song of Moſes and of the Lambe: it is the harmonie of heaven. If we teach Ne peccatis (water;) To teach alſo (blood) ſiquis autem peccaverit (with S. Iohn.) If we ſay ſalvus factus es (blood;) to ſay Noli amplius peccare (water) withall, with Chriſt Himſelfe.

Apoc. 15. 4. Rom. 15. 34. 1 Ioh. 2. 1. Ioh. 5. 14.

This is that Ieſus Chriſt, and the true doctrine of Him: neither diluta, and ſo evill for the heart; nor tentans caput, and ſo fuming up to the head: neither Scammoniate, tormenting the conſcience: nor yet Opiate, ſtupifying it, and making it ſenſeleſſe. And ſo much, for Chriſts double comming.

II The Spirits part.

Well, when Chriſt is come, and thus come, may we be gone, have we done? Done! we are yet in the midſt of the verſe; before we make an end of it, it muſt be Whitſontide. The ſpirit is to come too. So, a new qui venit; that comes in both thoſe, and comes in the ſpirit, beſides. And a new non ſolum; not in water and blood only, but in the ſpirit withall.

Ioh 19. 30.

Not, that Chriſt ſaid not truly, Conſummatum eſt, that Hee hath not done all. Yes, to doe that was to be done, CHRIST was enough; needs no ſupply; The ſpirit comes not, to doe; comes but to teſtifie. That, inter alia, is one of His Offices.

1 His Witneſſe.

a A witneſſe there is to be.

And a Witneſſe is requiſite. There is no matter of weight with us, if it be ſped authentically (eſpecially a Teſtament) but it is with a Teſte. And GOD doth none of His great workes but ſo: of which, this Comming is one, even the greateſt of all. Neither of His Teſtaments, without one. As GOD in nature left not Himſelfe without witneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle) So neither Chriſt, in grace. As then, in the Old Teſtament, Ad Legem & Teſtimonium (ſaith Eſay 8.) So, in the New, Ad Evangelium & Teſtimonium, to the Goſpell, to Chriſt and the teſtimonie, cals S. Iohn here. CHRIST alſo to have his Teſte: We to call for it; and if it be called for of us, to be able to ſhew it.

Act. 14. 17. Eſay 8. 26.

A wit-

A witneſſe there needeth then, and a witneſſe there is. One, nay three. In ore duorum; that is, in every matter nothing without two at leaſt. But in this, ſo many, ſo high a matter, God would enlarge the number; have it in ore trium, have it full; no fewer than three: three, to His part; three, to ours.

b A witneſſe there is? Nay, three. Deut. 17. 6.

At the ordering of it in heaven, three there were, the 1 Father, the 2 Word, and 3 the Spirit: that the whole Trinity might be equally intereſſed in the accompliſhment of the worke of our Salvation, and it paſſe through all their hands. And at the ſpeeding it in earth, three more: 1 The Spirit, and 2 Water, and 3 Bloud to anſwer them, that all might go by a Trinity, that Holy, Holy, Holy, might be thrice repeated. The truth herein anſwereth to the type. For under the Law, nothing was held perfectly hallowed, till it paſſed three, the 1 cleanſing water, firſt; the 2 ſprinkling of bloud, ſecond; 3 and laſt, that the holy oyle were upon it too (the holy oyle, the Holy Ghoſts type:) but when any thing annointed with all three, then had it His perfect halydome; then it was holy indeed. And even ſo paſſe we through three hands all. 1 Gods, as men: Water notes the Creation: the heavens are of water, and if they, the reſt. Gods, as men; 2 Chriſts, as Chriſtian men, Bloud notes the redemption: 3 And the Spirit as ſpirituall men, which pertaines to all. If any be ſpirituall, he knowes this: and you that be ſpirituall doe this (ſaith the Apoſtle.) For, Chriſtians that be animales ſpiritum non habentes, S. Iude tels us, there is no great reckoning to be made of them.

Gal. 6. 1. Iude 19.

To let the other go. The Spirit is a witneſſe, to Jesus Christ, that came in water and bloud: Witneſſe, to Jesus Christ, that came: witneſſe, to His water and bloud, He came in. In a witneſſe it is required, he be Teſtis idoneus: will you ſee, quàm idoneus, how apt, how every way agreeing? The Spirit and Ieſus agree: Ieſus was conceived by the Spirit. The Spirit and Chriſt agree: in the word Chriſt, is the Spirit; For [Christ] is annointed. Annointed with what? with the Holy Ghoſt, the true unction, and the truth of all unctions whatſoever. The Spirit and water agree: the Spirit moved on the face of the waters. The Spirit and bloud agree: The Spirit of life is in the bloud; the veſſels of it, the arteries, run along with the texture of the veines, all the body over.

c The Spirit a witneſſe.
1 To Ieſus Chriſt that came.
2 To the water and bloud, He came in.
Geneſis 1. 2.
Lev. 19. 11.

To His comming, this Spirit agreeth alſo. When He came, as Ieſus, the Spirit conceived Him. When He came, as Christ, the Spirit annointed Him. When He came, in water, at His Baptiſme, the Spirit was there: came downe in the ſhape of a Dove, reſted, abode on Him. When He came, in bloud, at His Paſſion, there too: It was the eternall Spirit of God, by which He offered Himſelfe without ſpot unto God (Heb. 9. 4.) So, the moſt fit that can be, to beare witneſſe to all; Præſens interfuit, & vidit & audivit, was preſent, heard, and ſaw, was acquainted with all that paſſed: none can ſpeak to the point ſo well as He.

To His comming.
Iohn 1. 32.

The Spirit is a witneſſe, is true every way: But, why is it ſaid, It is the Spirit that beareth witneſſe, ſeeing they both (water and bloud) beare it too; it is water, it is bloud that beare witneſſe alſo. They (indeed) are witneſſes: but, it is the Spirit, He it is that is the principall witneſſe, and principally to be regarded, before the reſt. Here, He comes in laſt; but He is (indeed) firſt; and ſo as firſt, is placed at the eight verſe, where they are orderly reckoned up. And good reaſon. He is one of the three, both above in heaven, and beneath in earth: third, there above: firſt, here beneath: a witneſſe, in both Courts; admitted ad jus teſtis in both, for His ſpeciall credit in both: the medius terminus (as it were) betweene heaven and earth, between God and man.

The Spirit the chiefe witneſſe.

Beſides it is ſaid, It is He, He it is that beareth witneſſe. For, it is neither of the other, will do us any good without Him: the whole weight lieth upon him. Not the water without the Spirit, it is but nudum & egenum elementum. Not the bloud without the Spirit, no more than the fleſh without the Spirit, non prodeſt quicquam (as ſaid He, whoſe the fleſh and bloud was, Christ Himſelfe.)

Gal. 4. 9. Iohn 6. 63. Acts 18. 13. Mat. 26.

Will you ſee a proofe without it, Christ came to Simon Magus in water, he was baptized: Christ came to Iudas, in bloud, he was a communicant: but Spirit there came none to teſtifie: they were both never the better. The better? nay, the worſe: Simon periſhed in the gall of bitterneſſe; Iudas bibit mortem de fonte vitæ,

Acts 8. 23.

1 Cor. 10. 16. from the cup of bleſsing drank down his own bane. All, for want of Et ſpiritus eſt. So is it with the word, and with any means elſe.

Iohn 4. 14. Iohn 6. 17. But let the teſtimonie of the Spirit come, the water becomes a Well, ſpringing up to eternity; the fleſh and bloud, meat that periſheth not, but endureth to life everlaſting.

And even in nature we ſee this: Water, if it be not aqua viva, have not a ſpirit to move it, and make it run, it ſtands and putrifies: and bloud, if no ſpirit in it; it congeales and growes corrupt and foule, as the bloud of a dead man. The ſpirit helpeth this, and upon good reaſon doth it. For, CHRIST being conceived by the Spirit, it was moſt meet, all of Chriſt ſhould be conceived the ſame way. That which conceived Him, ſhould impregnate his water, ſhould animate His bloud, ſhould give the vivificat, the life and vigour, to them both. It is the Spirit then, that giveth the witneſſe.

2 The truth of His witneſſe. Iohn 14. 6. Now, in a Witneſſe, above all it is required, he be true: the Spirit is ſo true, as He is the truth it ſelfe. The Spirit, the truth? Why CHRIST ſaith of Himſelfe, I am the truth. All the better: for, Verum vero conſonat, one truth will well ſort with, will uphold, will make proofe one of another, as theſe two do prove either other reciprocally. The Spirit, CHRISTS proofe: CHRIST, the Spirits, CHRIST, the Spirits: 1 Iohn 4. 3. Every ſpirit that confeſſeth not CHRIST, is not the true Spirit. The Spirit CHRISTS: CHRIST, if He have not the Teſte of the Spirit, is not the true CHRIST. Alwayes, the Truth is the beſt witneſſe. And, if He be the Truth, on His teſte, you may beare your ſelfe. Not ſo, on water, or bloud: without Him, they may well deceive us, and be falſa and fallacia, as wanting the Truth, if He, if the Spirit be wanting.

That truth to be knowne. It will then much concerne us, to be ſure, the Spirit, on whoſe teſtimonie we are thus wholly to relie, that that ſpirit be the truth. And, it is the maine point of all, to be able to diſcerne the Spirit, that is the truth: becauſe, as there is a Spirit of truth, ſo

1 Iohn 4. 6. 2 Cor. 11. 4. is there a ſpirit or errour abroad in the world; yea, many ſuch ſpirits: and the Apoſtle who tels us of alium Ieſum, in the ſame verſe tels us of alium ſpiritum too. We be then to trie, which ſpirit is the truth; that ſo the ſpirit on whoſe witneſſe we reſt our ſelves, be the truth. How take we notice of the ſpirit? How knew they the Angell was come downe into the poole of Bethesda, but by the ſtirring and moving of the

By His ſpirituall motions. Iohn 5. 8. water? So by ſtirring up in us ſpirituall motions, holy purpoſes and deſires, is the Spirits comming knowne. Specially, if they doe not vaniſh againe. For if they doe, then was it ſome other flatuous matter, which will quiver in the veines, (and unskilfull people call it the life-bloud;) but the Spirit it was not. The Spirits motion, the pulſe, is not for a while, and then ceaſeth; but is perpetuall, holds as long as life holds, though intermittent ſomtime, for ſome little ſpace.

By newneſſe of life. Yet hold we it not ſafe, to lay overmuch weight upon good motions, which may come of diverſe cauſes, and of which (good motions) there are as many in hell, as in heaven. The ſureſt way is to lay it on that, our SAVIOUR and His Apoſtles ſo often Iohn 6. 63. 2 Cor. 3. 6. lay it, that is, on Spiritus vivificat. The life is ever the beſt indicant ſigne of the Spirit. Novum ſupervenisſe ſpiritum, nova vitæ ratio demonſtrat, that a new Spirit is come, a new courſe of life is the beſt demonſtration.

The notes of that life. Iohn 3. 8. 2 Tim. 4. 1. 1 Cor. 12. 11. 1 Breath. Now, life is beſt knowne by vitall actions. Three the Scripture counteth: 1 Spiritus ubi vult ſpirat, by breath: 2 Spiritus manifeſtè loquitur, by ſpeech: 3 Omnia hæc operatur unus idemq; ſpiritus, by the worke: (theſe three.)

1 The neareſt and moſt proper note of the Spirit is ſpiration, or breathing. In breathing there is a double act: 1 there is a Syſtole, a drawing in of the ayre (and that is cold) agreeth with Chriſt in water: there comes a coole breath ever from the water. 2 And there is a Diaſtole, a ſending forth of the breath; and that (we know) is warme, and agreeth with Chriſt in blood. For, blood is it, that ſendeth a warme vapour into all the limmes,

Agreeable to theſe two, have you the two Spirits, which upon the matter, are but the two acts of one and the ſame Spirit: 1 Inſpired, the Spirit of feare, Eſa. 11. 2. The feare of GOD. 2 Out-breathed, the ſpirit of faith, 2 Cor. 4. 12. Faith in Chriſt. Feare comes in water: ſo ſaith Salomon, the Feare of GOD is fons vitæ, the well-ſpring of life (Pro.14.27.) that is water. Faith comes in bloud; per fidem in ſanguinem Ipſius (Romans 3.15.) through faith in His bloud. So, is every one that is borne of the Spirit. And to blow out faith ſtill, and never draw in feare, is ſuſpicious, is not ſafe. The true ſpiration, the breathing aright, conſiſting of theſe two, is a ſigne of the right Spirit.

The next ſigne in the ſame verſe too: And you heare the noiſe of it. For, ſo the Apoſtle ſaith, the Spirit ſpeaks evidently: that is, His noiſe and ſpeech is evidently to be diſtinguiſhed, from thoſe of other ſpirits. His comming in tongues this day, ſheweth no leſſe. Which ſigne of ſpeech doth beſt and moſt properly ſort here, with a witneſſe. For, a witneſſe, what he hath to teſtifie, ſpeaks it out vocally.

Iohn 3.8.

What noiſe then is heard from us? What breathe we? What ſpeakes the Spirit manifeſtly from our mouthes? If curſing, and bitterneſſe, and many a foule oath, if this noiſe be heard from us: If we breath minas & cades, bluſter out threatning and ſlaying (that noiſe:) If σαπρὸς λόγος, rotten, corrupt, obſcene communication come out of our mouthes; we are of Galilee, and our very ſpeech bewrayeth us. This, is not the breath of the Spirit; this, He ſpeaks not: evidently He ſpeakes it not. It is not the tongue of heaven, this: Not ſicut dedit Spiritus eloqui, no utterance of the Spirits giving. Some of Christ's water would do well, to waſh theſe out of our mouthes. The ſpeech ſounding of the Spirit, is a ſigne of the true Spirit.

Acts 9.1.
Epheſ.4.29.
Mar.14.70.
Acts 2.4.

The laſt (but the ſureſt of all) omnia hæc operatur ſpiritus. And the worke is as clearely to be diſtinguiſhed, as the ſpeech. Each Spirit hath his proper work, and is knowne by it. No man ever ſaw the works of the Divell come from the Spirit of God. Be not deceived, the works of uncleanneſſe come from no Spirit, but the uncleane ſpirit. The works of Cain, from the ſpirit of envy: The workes of Demas, from the ſpirit of the world. All the groſſe errours of our life from the ſpirit of error. But this, this is the Spirit of Truth: And the breath, the ſpeech, the operations of Him, beare witneſſe, that He is ſo. Now, if He will depoſe, that the water and bloud, Christ came in, Hee came in, for us; and wee our parts in them: in them, and in them both: and ſo depoſing, if we feele His breath, heare His ſpeech, ſee His workes according, we may receive His witneſſe then: For, His witneſſe is true.

Action.
1 Cor. 12.11.
Mat.12.43.
Iames 4.5.
1 Cor.12.3.

Now, that upon this day, the day of the Spirit, the Spirit may come and beare this witneſſe, to Chriſts water and bloud; there is to be water and bloud, for the Spirit to beare witneſſe to. So was there (ever) as this day, in the Church of Chriſt. Water: a ſolemne Baptiſme in memory of the firſt three thouſand, this day, baptized by Saint Peter. And bloud: never a more frequent Euchariſt, than at Pentecoſt, in honour of this Spirit, to which S. Paul made ſuch haſte with his almes and offerings. Witneſſe the great works done by Pentecoſtall oblations: which very oblations remaine in ſome Churches to this day.

So are we now come to the Reverſall, to the laſt non ſolum; and here it is. Not in the Spirit alone, but in water and bloud, reciprocè. As not theſe, without the Spirit: ſo neither the Spirit without theſe, that is, without the Sacrament, wherein theſe be. So have we a perfect circle now. Neither in water, without bloud; nor in bloud without water; nor in them alone without the Spirit; nor in the Spirit alone, without them.

III.
The Reverſall.

This day, Christ comes to us in bloud, in the Sacrament of it (ſo.) But (as we ſaid before) either is in other: Bloud is not miniſtred, but there is an ingredient of the purifying vertue of water withall in it: So, He comes in water, too. Yea, comes in water firſt; ſo lie they in the Text: water to goe before, with us. So did it, at the very inſtitution it ſelfe, of this Sacrament. The pitcher of water, and he that carried it, was not in vaine given for a ſigne: went not before them, that were ſent to make ready for it, for nothing.

Mar.14.13.

It had a meaning, that water; and it had an uſe. Their feet were waſhed with it, & their feet being cleane, they were cleane every whit. Many make ready for it, that ſee neither

For, to come, and not with that purpoſe, better not come at all. To finde a feeling of this purpoſe before, and to mark well the ſucceſſe and effect, that doth follow after. For, if it faile us continually, Chriſt did not come. For, when He comes, though it be in bloud, yet He comes with water at the ſame time. Ever, in both: never, in one alone.

His bloud is not onely drinke, to nouriſh; but medicine, to purge. To nouriſh the new man, which is faint and weak (GOD wot;) but to take downe the old, which is rank

Which if we finde it doth, Chriſt is come to us, as He is to come. And the Spirit is come, and puts His teſte. And if we have His Teſte, we may goe our way in peace; we have kept a right Feaſt to Him, and to the memory of His comming.

A SER

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAJESTIE, AT GREENWICH,

On the XX. of May, A.D. MDCXXI. being WHITSUNDAY.

JAM. Chap. I. Ver. XVI, XVII.

Nolite itaque errare fratres mei dilectiſsimi:
Omne datum optimum, & omne donum perfectum deſurſum eſt, deſcendens à PATRE luminum, apud quem non eſt tranſmutatio, nec viciſsitudinis obumbratio.

Erre not my deare brethren.
Every good thing, and every perfect gift is from above, and commeth downe from the FATHER of lights, with whom is no variableneſſe, neither ſhadowing by turning.

AND, if every good giving, and every perfect gift, what giving ſo good, or what gift ſo perfect, as the gift of gifts, this dayes gift, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt? There are in it, all the points in the Text. It is from above; It deſcended viſibly this day: and from the Father of lights; ſo many tongues, ſo many lights; which kindled ſuch a light in the world on this day, as to this day is not put out, nor ſhall ever be, to the worlds end.

Firſt, the HOLY GHOST is oft ſtiled by this very name or title, of the gift of God. If ye knew the gift of God (ſaith our Saviour) to the woman at the wels ſide. What gift was that? It is plaine there, the water of life. That water was the Spirit: This He ſpake of the Spirit (ſaith S. Iohn, who knew his minde beſt) as then, not yet given; but ſince (as upon this day) ſent into the world. Iohn 4.10. Iohn 7.39.

Secondly, This gift is both good and perfect: ſo good: as it is de bonis optimum, of all goods the beſt: and of all perfects, the moſt abſolutely perfect: the gift of perfection, or perfection of all the gifts of God. What ſhould I ſay? Not to be valued (ſaith S. Peter) not to be uttered (ſaith S. Paul) as if all the tongues that were on earth before, and all that came downe this day, were little enough, or indeed were not enough, nor able any way to utter or expreſſe it.

Act. 8 20.
2 Cor. 9. 5.

Thirdly, nay it is not one gift among many (how complete ſoever) but it is many in one, ſo many tongues, ſo many gifts; as, ſo many grapes, in a cluſter; ſo many grains, in a Pomegranate. In this one gift, are all the reſt. Aſcending up on high, dona dedit, He gave gifts: all theſe dona were in hoc dono; all thoſe gifts in this gift; every one of them folded up as it were incluſivè. The Father, the fountaine; the Son, the Ciſterne; the Holy Ghoſt, the Conduit-pipe, or pipes rather (for they are many) by and through which, they are derived downe to us.

Pſal. 68. 18.

Fourthly, and laſtly, not only in Him, and by Him, but from Him too. For He is the gift and giver both. There is great variety of gifts (ſaith S. Paul) but it is one and the ſame Spirit, that maketh diſtribution of them to every man ſeverally, even as Himſelfe pleaſeth. Both the thing given, and the Partie that giveth it, all derived to us from Him, wrought in us by Him, and by us to be referred to Him.

1 Cor. 12. 4.

At the time of any of Gods gifts ſent us by Him, to ſpeake of Scriptures of this nature, cannot ſeeme unſeaſonable: but, of all other, at the time of this gift, moſt properly. Dona dedit hominibus: what day was that? even this very day. Dies donorum hic; ſo many tongues, ſo many gifts. This day (I ſay) whereto Donum Dei, and Donum Dei fall together ſo happily. We have brought it to the day.

The Summe.

It will not be amiſſe to touch the end a little, which the Apoſtle aimeth at in thoſe words. It is the old, it is the new Commandement, Mandatum vetus & novum, to make us love God. The point whereto the Law and the Prophets drive; yea, the Goſpell and the Apoſtles, and all. We cannot love Him well, whom we thinke not well of. We cannot thinke well of him whom we thinke, evill comes from. Then, to thinke ſo well of GOD, as not to thinke any evill: not any evill; no, but inſtead thereof, all good commeth to us, from Him. So thinking, we cannot chooſe but wee muſt love Him.

1 Ioh. 27.

And to this end (at the thirteenth verſe before) S. Iames had told us plaine, God is not the author of evill: Not tempted Himſelfe, nor tempting any to it. As at that verſe, not the Author of evill: So at this, the Author of all, and every good. Men, when their braines are turned with diving into Gods ſecrets, may conceipt as they pleaſe: but, when all is ſaid that can be, No man can ever entirely love him, whom he thinks ſo evill of, as to be the Author of all evill. We are (with S. Iames) to teach, and you to believe that, will procure you to love God the better; not that, will alien your mindes, or make you love him the worſe. That therefore, S. Iames denyes peremptorily: No evill, nemo dicat, Let no man ſpeake it, let it not once be ſpoken. But let this be hardly, That all the good we have or hope for, deſcends downe from Him. And that S Iames (here) affirmes as earneſtly: Erre not my deare brethren. It is to erre, to thinke otherwiſe: for that abſolutely, Every good giving, and againe over, Every perfect gift, there is not one of them all, but from Him they come. And ſo, we in all duty to love Him, from whom all manner good proceedeth. This is His end, Love; and that fals fit and is proper to this Feaſt, the Feaſt of Love. For, Love is the proper effect of the Spirit (Per charitatem Spiritus;) the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghoſt, this day given unto us.

Rom. 15. 30.

The Diviſion

The verſe, to the Chapter, is a cleare and a ſtrict propoſition, but hath in it the force or energie, to make a complete argument. For, if all good from God, then no evill. S. Iames layes it for a ground: Salt or bitter water, and ſweet cannot iſſue both from one fountaine; Nor the workes of darkneſſe, from the Father of lights, never.

Iames 3. 11.

But

But we take it only as a propoſition, with a little Item, at the end of it. If we aske queſtions of Art concerning it, Quæ, Quanta, Qualis? Quæ? It is Categoricall: Quanta? It is univerſall? Qualis? Firſt, it is affirmative: then, true; [erre not] goes before it. So true, as to thinke the contrary is a flat errour.

The rules of Logike divides a propoſition to our hands, into the forepart (in Schooles, they call it Subjectum:) and into the after-part, which they call prædicatum. 1. The Subjectum here is Omne datum, &c.. The prædicatum, deſurſum eſt, &c. The Subject is double, 1 Datum bonum, and 2 Donum perfectum, with an univerſall note to either: Every good, and every perfect, to be ſure, to take in all, to leave out none. 2. The prædicatum, that ſtands of three points: 1 Whence: 2 How: and 3 From whom; from the Father of lights. I,

Then comes the Item (I told you of) proviſionally, to meet with an objection, a thought that might riſe in our hearts peradventure: That is, it may be, as the lights of the world, or the children, have their variations, their changes, ſo the Father alſo may have them. But that he puts us out of doubt of too, with as peremptory a negative: Be it with the lights as it will; with the Father of lights, with God, there is no variation, no change; No not ſo much as a ſhadow of them. In effect, as if he ſhould ſay: from the Father of lights, which is unchangeable; or from the unchangeable Father of lights: and ſo it ſhall be meere affirmative; but that, there is Major vis in negatione, Deny all is ſtronger. II,

And all theſe he brings in, with a Nolite errare: and that not without juſt cauſe. For, about this verſe and the points in it, there are no leſſe than ſeven ſundry errours. I ſhall note you them as I goe, that you may avoid them. Together with ſuch matter of duty as ſhall incidently fall in from each. Specially, touching the gift of the day, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

I.

TO take the propoſition in ſunder. The ſubject firſt: and that is double; 1 Datum, and 2 Donum: and either of them his proper Epithet; 1 Good, and perfect. Jointly, of both together firſt: after, ſeverally of either part.

I. Of the propoſition. 1 The Subject. therof double 1 Datum, and 2 Donum.

I Of Datum, and Donum joyntly

Datum, and Donum, they both come of Do; Given they are both. Where (firſt) becauſe it is the Feaſt of Tongues, to ſet our tongue right. For, the world and the Holy Ghoſt ſpeake not one language: Not with one tongue both. There ſhould not elſe have needed any to have beene ſent downe. The world talkes of all, as had: the Holy Ghoſt, as given. Looke to the Habendum (ſaith the world) the having: that is the Spirit of the Worlds. Religion; looke to Donum and Datum, the giving: that is His. The Heathen cals His vertue ἕξις a habit; that, comes of habendo. The Chriſtian (by Saint Iames here) δόσις, δώρημα, datum and donum; all which come of Dando. Thus doth the Holy Ghoſt frame our tongues to ſpeake, if we will ſpeake with the tongues of this day. They that doe not, they are of Galilee, and their ſpeech bewrayeth them ſtraight.

Will you heare one of them? You know who ſaid, Soule thou haſt enough (haſt) and you know who ſpake otherwiſe, quid habes quod non accepiſti? What but that you have received? Receiving and giving (you know) are relatives; which, the other little thought of. You may know each, by their dialect. Luk. 12. 19. 1 Cor. 4. 7.

From the beginning: Eſau he ſaid, Habeo bona plurima frater mi, I have goods enough: that is his phraſe of ſpeech; that, the language of Edom. What ſaith Iacob at the ſame time? Eſau asking him, what were all the droves hee met, They be (ſaith he) the good things that God hath given me. Have (ſaith Eſau) Given me (ſaith Iacob.) Nonne habeo? Have not I power to crucifie thee, and have not I power to deliver thee? You may know it, it is Pilates voice. But our Saviour He tels him: Gen. 33. 9. Gen. 33. 6. Ioh. 19. 10.

Iohn 19.11. Non haberes poteſtatem; Power ſhould he have had none, if it had not been given him, and given him from above: S. Iames his very phraſe (here) from CHRIST's own mouth. So muſt we ſpeak, if we will ſpeak as CHRIST ſpake.

The I. Error. This then is the firſt errour. To have our minde run, and our ſpeech run, all upon having. Men are all for having, think and ſpeake of what they have; without mention or whence, or how, or from whom they might receive it, or that it is given them at all. Nolite errare, Be not deceived; for, all that you have, is datum or donum, all; and they both are of free gift; given, all. Thus the tongue that ſate this day on Saint Iame's head, taught him to call them. Thus farre joyntly; now ſeverally.

Of each ſeverally. For there is a cleft in theſe tongues. The cleft is Datum and Donum. Would not wrap them all up in one word, but expreſſes them in two. Somwhat there is, in that.

1 Datum. We may not admit of any idle Tautologies in Scripture. Two ſeverall ſorts then they be (theſe two) not oppoſite, but differing onely in degree, as more and leſſe. Every gift is a giving: Not every giving, a gift: Every perfect, good; not every good, perfect. We are not to think, either all our ſinnes, or all our gifts to be of one ſize. S. Matthewes talent is more than S. Lukes pound; Caſars penny, than the Widowes two mites, yet good money all, in their ſeverall values. Of theſe two, 1 Datum, and 2 Donum; 1 Bonum, and 2 Perfectum; one is greater or leſſe than another.

1 Datum. He begins with the leſſe, Datum. Weigh the word, it is but a Participle: they, have tenſes, and tenſes, time. So, that is onely temporall.

2 Donum. But Donum imports no time: ſo, a more ſet terme; hath more ſubſtance in it, is fixed or permanent. One (as it were) for terme of yeares: The other, of the nature of a perpetuity. A Datum, that which is ſtill in giving; that, periſhes with the uſe, as

Iob 1.21; do things tranſitory; and be of that ſort, that Iob ſpake, GOD hath given, and GOD

Luke 10.42. hath taken away. Donum is not ſo, but of that ſort, that CHRIST ſpeaks, in Maries choice, ſo given, as it ſhould never be taken from her. So, one referres to the things which are ſeene, which are temporall: the other, to the things not ſeene, that are eternall. One, to the body, and to this world: the other to the ſoule rather, and the life of the world to come.

1 Bonum. We ſhall diſcerne it the more clearely, if we weigh the two Adjectives, 1 Good,

1 Tim.1.8. and 2 perfect: they differ. Every good is not perfect. We know, the Law is good (ſaith Heb 7.19. the Apoſtle:) but we know withall, the Law bringeth nothing to perfection; ſo, not perfect. Nature (quà natura) is good, yet unperfect: and the Law, in the rigour of it, not poſſible; through the imperfection of it. Nature is not, the Law is not taken away; good both: but grace is added to both, to perfect both: which needed not, if

Iohn 3.17. either were perfect. This worlds good; ſo doth S. Iohn call our wealth. Nay, bread, Mat.7.9, 10. fiſh, and egges, we give our children, our SAVIOUR Himſelfe calleth good gifts. But what are theſe? not worthy to be named, if you ſpeak of Donum Dei æternum, and the perfections there.

2 Perfectum. Before I was aware, I have told you, what is perfect, the glory, the joyes, the crowne

1 Cor.13.10. of heaven. For, when that perfect is come, all this unperfect ſhall be done away. But S. Iames ſeems not to ſpeak of that: he ſpeaks in the preſent, and of the preſent, what now is, what perfect in this life. And this (lo) brings us to donum diei, the gift of the Holy Ghoſt. For, to be partakers of the Divine nature, is all the perfection, we can here attaine. No higher, here. Now, to be made partakers of the Spirit, is to be made par-

2 Pet.1.4. takers of the Divine nature. That is this dayes work. Partakers of the Spirit, we are, by receiving grace; which is nothing elſe but the breath of the Holy Ghoſt, the Spirit of grace, grace into the entire ſubſtance of the ſoule, dividing it ſelfe into two ſtreames: 1 One goes to the underſtanding, the gift of faith; 2 The other to the will, the gift of

Col.3.14. charity, the very bond of perfection. The tongues, to teach us knowledge; the fire, to kindle our affections. The ſtate of grace is the perfection of this life, to grow ſtill from grace to grace, to profit in it. As to goe on ſtill forward, is the perfection of a traveller,

Luke 13.22. to draw ſtill nearer and nearer to his journeyes end. To worke to day and to morrow,

as Christ ſaid, and the third day to be perfect, perfectly perfect.

Now, as we are to follow the beſt gifts (it is S. Pauls counſell) the beſt, the moſt perfect: ſo are we to take notice too of the good, though not all out ſo perfect, as S. Iames adviſeth us: knowing this, that be it giving, or be it gift; be it good, or be it perfect, He puts an Omne to both; comes over twiſe, 1 Every good; 2 Every perfect: both we receive, both are given us. Set downe that. There was among the Heathen, one that went for wiſe, that ſaid, To become rich, he would pray and ſacrifice to Hercules; but to be vertuous or wiſe, he would doe neither, neither to Hercules, nor to any God of them all; he would be beholden for that, to none but himſelfe. Looke in this cleft, he tooke to himſelfe the more, left God the leſſe. This was a groſſe errour: ſo groſſe I will not bid you take heed of it. But there be, that will not ſtand with God for the greater: but for the leſſe, that they may be bold with, and take thoſe to themſelves. This is an errour too: Erre not this. No: datum hath his omne, as well as donum; the good no leſſe than the perfect; given both, one as well as the other. S. Paul puts us to it with Quid habes? that is, nihil habes: What have you? that is, you have nothing, but you have received it, but hath beene given you, λῆψις and δόσις are relations, one conferres the other.

1 Cor. 12.31. Omne datum, as well as omne Bonum.

The 2. Errour.

1 Cor. 4.7.

Away then with this ſecond errour. He that made the Elephant, made the Ant; He, that the Eagle, the flie: He that, the moſt glorious Angell in Heaven, the pooreſt worme that creepes on the earth. So, He that will give us the kingdome of heaven, He it is, that gives us every peece of bread and meat, and puts us to acknowledge it: in one and the ſame prayer making us to ſue, for regnum tuum, and for panem noſtrum. Be not deceived to thinke otherwiſe. And heare you, you are to begin with datum, Not to diſpiſe the day of ſmall things: It is the Prophets counſell: to learne to ſee God in them. Cæſars Image, not only in his coine of Gold, but even upon the poore penny. See God in ſmall, or you ſhall never ſee him in great; in good, or never in perfect. This for the ſubject. There is a cleft: all are not of one ſort: ſome leſſe, ſome greater: Greater or leſſe, both are given. Not leſſe had, and great given, but given both. And every one of both kindes, of the one kinde as well as of the other.

Zech. 4.10. Mat. 25.21.

We have talked long of good; * Who will ſhew us any good, there be many that will ſay, nay there is not any but will ſay. That will ſaint Iames here. And firſt to ſhew us, turnes our eye to the right place, whence it comes. That is ἄνωθεν from above. There are two in this ἄνωθεν: 1 θεν from, 2 and ἄνω, above. From: that is: from ſome where elſe, not from our ſelves: From without; and not out of us, from within. Aliunde ἔξωθεν: and that aliunde is from ἄνω above, not from κάτω, thoſe lower parts upon the earth.

2
The Predicatum.
1 Whence they come
De ſurſum.
* Pſal. 4.6.

Erre not then, either of theſe two wayes: 1. Firſt, not to reflect upon our ſelvs, to look like ſwannes into our own boſomes. It growes not there, out of your ſelves: It is the gift of God (ſaith S. Paul) The very giving gives as much. Of our owne wee have it not.

The 3. and 4. Errours.

Ephes. 2.8.

2. If we looke forth, let it not be about us, either on the right hand, or on the left, or any place here below. Looke up: turne your eye thither. It is an influence; it is no vapour; an inſpiration, no exhalation: thence it comes, hence it riſes not: our ſpirit luſts after envie, and worſe matter (Iames 4. 4.) Why ſhould thoughts ariſe in your hearts (ſaith Chriſt?) If they ariſe, they are not good; if they be good, then they come downe from above. Saint Iohn Baptiſt is direct: A man can receive nothing, unleſſe it be given him; and given him from above. And, of all other, not the gift of this Day: The Dove, the tongues came from on high both. From our ſelves, is one errour: from any other beneath here, is another. Erre not then, the place is deſurſum, without and above us.

Luk. 24.38.

Ioh. 3.27.

Next, the manner, how; that it deſcends: for, even that word wants not his force. Deſcending is a voluntary motion: it concludes the will and the purpoſe of him, that ſo deſcends. It is no caſualtie; it fals not downe by chance: It comes downe, becauſe it ſo will; a will it hath: Et ubi vult ſpirat, it blowes not, but where it will: and it diſtributes

2 How they come. Deſcendere.

Ioh. 3.8.

butes to every one (the Spirit) but prout vult, as it pleaſeth Himſelfe, not otherwiſe.

And this you may obſerve: the Scripture maketh choiſe (ever) of words ſounding this way. He gives it, he caſts it not about, at all adventure. He opens His hand, it runnes not through His fingers. Sinum habet facilem, non perforatum: His boſome is open enough, yet hath no hole in it, to drop through againſt His will. He ſent his Word (it came not by hap,) that is, Chriſt. And I will ſend you another Comforter, that is, the Holy Ghoſt. Nor He neither. Of His owne will He begat us: they bee the words that follow.

Act. 10. 36. Ioh 15. 26. Verſe 10.

The V. Errour It is the fift error, to aſcribe to fortune either datum or donum. Erre not then: as the place is from above, ſo the manner, deſcendens, not decidens; they come, they are not let fall.

1 From whom A patre luminum. Whence, we ſee, and how: Now, from whom. The party in a word is GOD. He had ſaid as much before (Verſe 5.) If any lacke wiſdome, let him aske it of God; How comes He (here) to uſe this ſomewhat unuſuall terme, the Father of lights? It had beene (to our thinking) more proper to have ſaid, from GOD the Author of all good things. No; there is reaſon for it. For ſay; they are, they came downe from above: when we caſt up our eyes thither, we can ſee no further, our ſight can reach no higher than the lights; than the lights there above. And ſo, ſome you have, that hold, they come from them, de luminibus, from the lights: that ſuch a conjunction or aſpect of them, ſuch a conſtellation, or horoſcope, ſuch a poſition of ſuch and ſuch Planets, produce very much good. This is in Aſtrologie, but not in Theologie. Μὴ πλανᾶσθε (of which word come the Planets) ſaith S. Iames, Wander not after the wandering ſtars: de luminibus, is not it; de Patre luminum is the right. So, the Father of lights was purpoſely choſen, to draw us from the lights. That, not they, they are not (not the children;) The Father, he it is, from whom they come, The lights: No, them He made to doe ſervice. Nay, the Angels above them, He made to be miniſtring ſpirits for our good. Bee not deceived, with this neither: To lift up our eyes to the hoſt of heaven, and no further, but beyond them, to the Father of them all, and then you are where you ſhould be.

Why luminum of light.

Heb. 1. 14. The VI. Errour

This may be one reaſon. But further if you ask, why not rather of all good, as He began; why is He gone from that terme, to this of light? The anſwer is eaſie. If wee ſpeake of gifts, light it is princeps donorum Dei, the firſt gift GOD beſtowed upon the world, and ſo will fit well. If of good, the firſt thing of which it is ſaid, vidit Deus quod bona, was light: and ſo fit, that way too. If you ſpeake of perfect; ſo perfect it is, as it is deſired for it ſelfe, we take comfort in ſeeing it, we delight to ſee it, though we ſee nothing by it, nothing but the light it ſelfe (obſerved by Salomon, Eccleſ. 11. 5.)

Gen. 1. 3. 4.

Ioh 3. 21. Mat. 5. 15. And for good: ſuch is the neareneſſe of affinitie, ſuch (I may ſay) the con-naturality betweene light and good, as they would not be one without the other. All that good is, loves the light, would come to the light, would be made manifeſt, deſires no buſhell to hide it, but a candleſticke, to ſhew it forth to all the world. That they might be ſearched with lanthornes; to have the ſecrets, the hidden corners of their hearts looked into, that the Father of lights would grant them ſo to be.

Ioh. 1. 9. For perfect: ſo perfect a thing is the light, as God Himſelfe is ſaid to be light: 1 Ioh. 1. 5. His Son our Saviour, to be light of lights, the true light that lightneth every one that commeth into the world. His Spirit, light; ſo is our Collect: God which as upon this day haſt taught the hearts of thy faithfull people, by ſending to them the light of thy Holy Spirit. The Angels that be good, be Angels of light. Yea whatſoever here on earth is perfect: the King is called, the light of Iſrael; The Apoſtles called, Luces mundi; and the Saints of God, where ever they be in the world, ſhine as lights in it. That upon the matter, Father of good, and Father of light, is all one.

2 Sam. 21. 17. Mat. 5. 14.

Why luminum, not luminis. Pater luminis would have ſerved, if we reſpect but this; but the nature. What ſay you to the number? It is luminum: why, of lights in the plurall? That is, to give light to what we ſaid before, of the diverſe degrees of the givings, and of the gifts of God. In the firmament, there is one light of the Sunne, another of the Moone, and yet another of the ſtarres: and, in the ſtarres, one differeth from another in glory. Good every one, though not ſo perfect, one as another. He that made the bright ſunne in all his glory, Hee made the dimmeſt ſtarre; all alike from Him; He like the Father of all. 1 Cor. 15. 40.

Beſides, He ſets them downe in the plurall [lights] for that the oppoſite (tenebræ) is a plurall word (and indeed hath no ſingular) for, they are many, and ſo need many lights to match them. There is the ſenſes outward darkneſſe, there is the darkneſſe of the inward man; both the darkneſſe of the underſtanding by ignorance and errour, and the darkneſſe of the will and heart by hatred and malice, 1 Iohn 2. 9. There is the darkneſſe of adverſity in this world, the hither darkneſſe; there is ſome little light in it: And there is the blackneſſe of darkneſſe, the utter darkneſſe of the world to come, no manner light at all. Nothing to be ſeene; but, to be heard; nor to be heard, but weeping and wailing and gnaſhing of teeth. Iude 13. Mat. 8. 12.

To match theſe ſo many darkneſſes there behoved to be as many lights; and ſo, Pater luminum comes in, not luminis. As, to match the many miſeries of our nature, there were as many mercies requiſite; and ſo he, Pater miſericordiarum, not miſericordiæ (with the Apoſtle) of many, not of one alone. VVe need the number, as well as the thing; to have a multitude, a pluralitie of mercies, to have plenteous redemption, to have χάριν πολυποίκιλον, great variety of grace, and that over-abundant grace, that we might reſt aſſured, there is enough and enough, in the Father of lights, to maſter and to overmatch any darkneſſe of the Prince of darkneſſe, what or how many ſoever. 2 Cor. 1. 3. Pſal. 130. 7. 1 Pet. 4. 10. 1 Tim. 1. 14.

Shall I ſhew you theſe lights? Not the viſible, of the Sun, Moone, and Starres, or fire or candle; I paſſe them. Beſides them there is two in us; 1 The light of Nature, for rebelling againſt which, all that are without CHRIST ſuffer condemnation. Salomon cals it the candle of the Lord ſearching even the very bowels (Proverbs 20) which though it be dimme and not perfect, yet good it is: though lame, yet (as Mephiboſheth) it is Regia proles, of the blood royall. 2. There is the light of GOD's Law: Lex, Lux (ſaith Salomon) totidem verbis, Proverbs 6. and his Father, a lanthorne to his feet. Nay, in the nineteenth Pſalme what he ſaith at the fourth verſe, of the ſun at the eight he ſaith the ſame, of the Law of God; lights, both. 3. The light of prophecy, as of a candle that ſhineth in a darke place. 4. There is the wonderfull light of his Goſpell (So Saint Peter cals it:) the proper light of this day. The tongues that deſcended, ſo many tongues, ſo many lights; For, the tongue is a light, and brings to light what was before hid in the heart. 5. And, from theſe other, is the inward light of grace; whereby, God which commanded the light to ſhine out of darkneſſe, He it is that ſhineth in our hearts; by the inward annointing (which is the oile of this lampe) the light of his holy Spirit, chaſing away the darkneſſe both of our hearts and mindes. 6. There is the light of comfort of his holy Spirit, a light ſowen for the righteous here in this life. And 7. there is the light of glory, which they ſhall reape, the light where God dwelleth, and where wee ſhall dwell with Him: Even the inheritance of the Saints in light, when the righteous ſhall ſhine as the Sunne in the kingdome of their Father, the Father of lights. Moſes Candleſticke with ſeven ſtalkes and lights in each of them. Of all which ſeven lights GOD is the Father, acknowledges them all for His children, and to His children will vouchſafe them all in their order. 1 Iohn 1. 9. Prov. 20. 27. Prov. 6. 23. Pſal. 119. 105. 2 Pet. 1. 19. 1 Pet. 2. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 6. Col. 1. 12. Mat. 13. 43. Exod. 25. 32.

Now this only remaineth, why he is not called the Author, but the Father of theſe? In this is the manner of their deſcending. And that is, for that, they proceed from Him per modum naturæ, as the child from the Father; per modum emanationis, as the beames from the Sun. So both Father and light, ſhew the manner of their comming. Proper and naturall for Him it is to give good. Good things come from Him as kindely, as doe they: therefore ſaid to be, not the Author, the Lord and giver, but even the very Father of them. It is againſt his nature to doe otherwiſe; to procreate or ſend forth ought, but good: His very loines, his bowels are all goodneſſe. Father of darkneſſe Hee cannot bee, being Father of lights, nor of ought that is evill. For they two (darke and evill) are as neere of kin, as light and good. This is the meſ- 3. Why Pater, not Autor.

ſage (ſaith Saint Iohn) that we heard of him, and that we declare to you, that GOD
1 Ioh. 1.5. is light and in him is no darkneſſe at all. Neither in Him, nor from Him: nemo dicat, let never any ſay it; Let it never ſinke into you: Tempted he is not with evill, Verſe 13. Tempt he doth not to evill. Aſcribe it not to Pater luminum, but to Princeps tenebrarum; to the Prince of darkneſſe, not to the Father of lights. But aſcribe all good, from Epheſ. 6.12. the ſmalleſt ſparke to the greateſt beame, from the leaſt good giving to the beſt and moſt perfect gift of all, to Him, to the Father of lights. So wee ſee, 1 why light; 2 why lights; 3 why the Father of lights. So much for the Prædicate and whole Propoſition.

II. The Item. The VII. error

And all this may be: and yet all this being (it ſeemes) ſome reply may be made and ſtand with the Apoſtles terme of lights well enough. That, what befals the lights the children, may alſo befall the Father of them. The great and moſt perfect light in this world, is the Sunne in the firmament; and two things evidently befall him, the two in the Text: Παραλλαγὴ variation He admits, declines, and goes downe and leave us in the darke; that is His parallaxe, in His motion from Eaſt to Weſt. And, turning He admits; turnes backe, goes from us, and leaves us to long winter nights; that is His Τροπὴ; in His motion from North to South. One of theſe he doth every day: the other every yeare. Succeſſively removing from one hemiſphere to the other; when it is light there, it is darke here. Succeſſively turning from one Tropike to another; when the dayes be long there, they be ſhort here. And, if we ſhall ſay any thing of the ſhadow here, that way wee looſe Him too in part, by interpoſing of the cloudes, when the day is over-caſt. So, the night is His parallaxe: the winter His Τροπὴ; darke weather His ſhadow at leaſt. Shadowes doe but take Him away in part, that is not good. But darkneſſe takes Him away cleane; that, is perfectly evill.

That it may be even ſo with the Father of lights, as with this it is. Good and evill come from Him alternis vicibus, by turne; and as darkneſſe and light ſucceſſively, from them. That it may fare with Him as with the Heathen Iupiter: who had (ſay they) in his Entrie, two great fats, both full, one of good, the other of evill; and that he ſerved them out into the world, both of the good and of the evill as he ſaw cauſe; but commonly for one of good, two of evill at leaſt.

It was more than requiſite, he ſhould cleare this objection. So doth he; denieth Iob 14.6. both (all three if you will.) That though of man it be truly ſaid by Iob, He never continues in one ſtay: though the lights of Heaven have their parallaxes: yea, the Angels
Iob 4.18. of heaven; He found not ſtedfaſtneſſe in them: Yet, for God, He is ſubject to none of Exod. 3.14. them. He is Ego ſum, qui ſum: that is (ſaith Malachi) Ego Deus & non mutor. Wee
Mal. 3.6. are not what we were a while ſince, nor what we ſhall be; a while after, ſcarce what we are: for every moment makes us varie. With GOD, it is nothing ſo. He is that He is, He is and changeth not. He changes not His tenor, He changes not His tenſe;
Ioh. 8.58. keepes not our Grammar rules, hath one by Himſelf: Not, before Abraham was, I was; but, before Abraham was, I am.

Yet are there varyings and changes, it cannot be denied. We ſee them daily. True,
Ier. 2.17. but the point is per quem, on whom to lay them. Not on GOD. Seemes there any receſſe? It is we forſake Him, not he us. It is the ſhip that moves, though they that be in it thinke the land goes from them, not they from it. Seemes there any variation, as that of the night? It is umbra terræ makes it; the light makes it not. Is there any thing reſembling a ſhadow? A vapour riſes from us, makes the cloud; which is as a pent-houſe betweene, and takes Him from our ſight. That vapour is our luſt: There, is the apud quem. Is any tempted? it is his owne luſt doth it; that, entiſes him to ſin, that brings us to the ſhadow of death. It is not God. No more than He can be tempted, no more Pſal. 39.6. can He tempt any. If we finde any change, the apud is with us, not Him; we change, He is unchanged. Man walkes in a vaine ſhadow: His wayes are the truth. He cannot deny Himſelfe.

Either

Every evill, the more perfectly evill it is, the more it is from below: Either riſes from the ſteame of our nature corrupted; or (yet lower,) aſcends as a groſſe ſmoke, from the bottomleſſe pit, from the Prince of darkneſſe, as full of varying and turning into all ſhapes and ſhadowes, as God is far from both, who is uniforme and conſtant in all His courſes.

Shall we now caſt up all into one ſumme, the errours by them, and the verities by themſelves, and oppoſe each to each? The firſt errour: to be all for having; never ſpeak of it. The veritie: that all is giving, or gifts, to be for it. The ſecond errour: to thinke, great matters only are given, the meaner we have of our ſelves. The veritie: perfect, as well as good; and good as perfect, they bee given both. The third errour: to think, they are from us, not elſewhere from others. The veritie: they are ἔξωθεν, they grow not in us, we ſpin them not, out of our ſelves. The fourth errour: they be from below; we gather them here. The veritie: they bee from ἄνωθεν, that is above, not here beneath. The fifth errour; to thinke that from thence they fall promiſcuè, catch who catch may, hap-hazard. The veritie: they fall not by chance; they deſcend by providence, and that regularly. The ſixt errour; they deſcend then from the ſtarres or planets. The veritie: not from them, or either of them, but from the Father of them. The ſeventh and laſt errour: to thinke, that by turnes, he ſends one while good, otherwhile bad, and ſo varies and changes. The veritie; He doth neither. The lights may varie; He is invariable: they may change, He is unchangeable: conſtant alwayes, and like Himſelfe. Now our leſſons from theſe.

1 And is it thus? And are they given? Then, quid gloriaris? let us have no boaſting. Are they given, why forget you the giver? Let Him be had in memorie, He is worthy ſo to be had. 2. Be the giving, as well as the gift; and the good, as the perfect, of gift, both? Then acknowledge it in both, take the one as the pledge, make the one as a ſtep to the other. 3. Are they from ſomewhere elſe, not from our ſelves? Learne then to ſay, and to ſay with feeling, Non nobis Domine, quia non à nobis. 4. Are they from on high? Looke not downe to the ground then, as ſwine to the acornes, they finde lying there, and never once up to the tree they came from. Look up: the very frame of our body gives that way. It is natures check to us, to have our head beare upward, and our heart grovell below. 5. Doe they deſcend? Aſcribe them then to purpoſe, not to time or chance. No Table to fortune (ſaith the Prophet.) 6. Are they from the Father of lights? Then never goe to the children: A ſignis cæli nolite timere: Neither feare nor hope for any thing from any light of them all. 7. Are His gifts without repentance? Varies he not? Whom He loves, doth Hee love to the end? Let our ſervice be ſo too, not wavering. O that we changed from Him, no more than He from us! Not from the light of grace, to the ſhadow of ſinne, as wee doe full often.

The Dutie.

Eſay 65. 11. Ier. 10. 2.

Rom. 11. 29. Ioh. 13. 1.

But above all, that which is ex tota ſubſtantia, that if we finde any want of any giving or gift, good or perfect, this Text gives us light whither to looke, to whom to repaire for them: To the Father of lights. And even ſo let us doe. Ad Patrem luminum, cum primo lumine. Let the light every day, ſo ſoone as wee ſee it, put us in minde to get us to the Father of lights. Aſcendat oratio, deſcendet miſeratio, let our prayer goe up to Him, that His grace may come downe to us: ſo to lighten us in our wayes and workes, that we may in the end, come to dwell with Him, in the light which is φῶς ἀΐδιον, light whereof there is no even-tide, the Sunne whereof never ſets, nor knowes tropike, the only thing we miſſe, and wiſh for in our lights here, primum & ante omnia.

But, if we ſue for any, chiefely for the beſt, the moſt perfect gift of all, which this day deſcended and was given. This day was, and any day may be, but chiefly this day will be given to any that will deſire, as our Saviour promiſeth (Luke 11.) and will be as good as His word.

Luk. 11. 13. Iam. 4. 5.

Within us there is no Spirit but our owne, and that luſts after envie, and other things as bad: from beneath it cannot be had: It is donum cæleste, Simon, if he would give never ſo largely for it, cannot obtaine it. It deſcended ad oculum this day, it was ſeene to deſcend, and ſo will.

Which deſcents from on high, from the Father of lights (there in the tongues of light, light on us to give us knowledge, a gift proportioned to light: and to give us comfort, a gift proportioned to light. By faith, to lighten, By grace to ſtabliſh our hearts.

I Cor. Chap. XII.

Diviſiones vero gratiarum, &c.

Ver. 4. *Now there are * Diverſities of Gifts, but the ſame* Spirit. * Or Diviſions.

5 And there are diverſities of adminiſtrations, but the ſame Lord.

6 And there are diverſities of operations, but God is the ſame, which worketh all in all.

7 But the manifeſtation of the Spirit is given to every man, to profit withall.

TEXT read at this Feaſt, of the Churches owne choice: who (I will ever preſume) beſt knoweth, what Text will beſt fit every Feaſt; and ſo this. It begins (you ſee) and it ends in the Spirit, whoſe proper Feaſt this is. The Spirit is in the firſt verſe; and againe the Spirit is in the laſt: firſt, and laſt, here we finde him.

And if we will looke well into it, we ſhall (in effect) find that, which happened this Day, though in other termes. Here have you in this Text, gifts, as it might be the tongues, which came from Heaven this Day: For, what were thoſe tongues but gifts? And here have you againe diviſions, as it might bee clefts, in the tongues: For what is to cleave, but to divide? And, if you lacke fire:

here have you in the laſt verſe, manifeſtation, which is by light. For, the uſe of light, is to make manifeſt. So have you the Holy Ghoſt in cloven tongues of fire, in ſome more generall termes: the gifts, the tongues, the diviſion, the cleft; the manifeſtation, the fire. Thoſe gifts, firſt divided, then made manifeſt, and that by the Spirit, amounting to the ſubſtance of the Feaſt: that there can bee no queſtion, but the Text ſuits to the time, fully.

The Summe. The Uſe we have of the whole Text, is; that in all humble thankfulneſſe, we are to acknowledge the great goodneſſe of the whole Deitie entire, and of every perſon in it; So ſeriouſly taking to heart the Churches (that is, all our) good, as (we ſee) they doe in a ſort meet here, and aſſemble themſelves, all three, each for his part to contribute, one, gifts; another, callings; a third, works. And then commit over the manifeſtation of all to the Spirit, ad utilitatem, to the profit (that is) to the generall good of the Church, in whoſe good, is the good of us all.

Now albeit, to authorize and to countenance the Feaſt the more, the whole three Perſons doe here preſent themſelves, in a joynt concurrence to this worke of diſtribution; yet, (you ſee) the Holy Ghoſt hath here a double part, and in that reſpect a prerogative above the other twaine. For, the Spirit is in, at both. In, at the diviſion; and ſo are the reſt. And againe, in, at the manifeſtation; ſo are none of the reſt. But, Hee there; and He alone. For, the tongues are His; and they are too manifeſt: So to him alone we owe the manifeſting. So, His, and ſo His the honour of the day, which is Feſtum linguarum, the Feaſt of tongues, or (if you will ſo call it) the Feaſt of manifeſtation. In very deed, the Holy Ghoſts Epiphanie; allowing, as Chriſt, one, ſo Him another.

The Summe of all, is: That Chriſts errand being done, and he gone up on high, the Spirit this day, viſibly came downe, for Him and in His name and ſtead, to take the charge, and to eſtabliſh an order in the Church: which order or eſtabliſhment is here ſet downe. And think not, it holds in the Church alone, but that in it is repreſented unto us a true patterne or mould of every other well compoſed Governement. For, happie is the governement, where the Holy Ghoſt beſtoweth the gifts, Chriſt appoints the places, and God effecteth the worke, workes all in all.

And as Rectum is index ſui & obliqui, A ſtreight rule will diſcever as well what is crooked, as what is ſtreight, both: So under one have we here, as the lively image of a well ordered Societie (for the preſerving of theſe three aright, makes all well;) So withal the manifold obliquities and exorbitances in the Church, in the common-wealth every where; which ariſe from the errours about theſe three, 1 the gifts not regarded, 2 the places not well filled, 3 the works not work-man like performed. The not looking to of which three, hath brought, and is like more and more, to bring all out of courſe.

The Diviſion The Text (if ever any) is truly tripartite, as ſtanding evidently of three parts: every one of the three; being a kinde of Trinitie. A Trinitie 1 Perſonall, 2 Reall, and 3 Actuall.

I. 1 Perſonall, theſe three; 1 the ſame Spirit, 2 the ſame Lord, 3 The ſame God.

II. 2 Reall, theſe three: 1 Gifts, 2 adminiſtrations, or offices, 3 operations, or workes.

III. 3 Actuall, theſe three; 1 Dividing, 2 manifeſting, 3 and profiting. Three diviſions from three, for three. The three reall, they be the ground of all, the 1 gifts 2 offices, and 3 workes: The three perſonall; 1 The Spirit, 2 Lord, and 3 God, are but from whence thoſe come. The three Actuall, are but whither they will: 1 Divided; 2 So divided, as made manifeſt; 3 So made manifeſt, as not only 1 to make a ſhew, but 2 to ſome end; 3 That end to be, not συμφορὰ, the hurt or trouble; but σύμφερον, 3 The good, not private, of our ſelvs; but common, of all the whole bodie of the Church.

First,

FIrſt, and before all things, we find here, and finding we adore the holy bleſſed and glorious Trinitie: the Spirit in plaine termes, the other two in no leſſe plain, if we looke to but the VI. verſe of the V. Chapter before, where the Apoſtle ſaith: To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and wee of Him; and one Lord Ieſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by Him. So, by God, is intended the Father, the firſt Perſon: by Lord, the Sonne, the ſecond: by the Spirit, the third, the uſuall terme or title of the Holy Ghoſt, all the Bible through. Theſe three, as in Trinitie of Perſons here diſtinct; So, in Vnitie of Eſſence, one and the ſame. For though to each of theſe three, there is allowed a [the ſame;] yet come to the Deitie, and they are not three [the ſames] but one the [the ſame;] one, and the ſame God-head, to be bleſſed for ever.

I. The Trinitie perſonall.

1 Once before, are theſe three known thus ſolemnly to have met; at the creating of the world. 2 Once againe, at the Baptiſme of Chriſt, the new creating it. 3 And here now the third time, at the Baptiſme of the Church, with the Holy Ghoſt. Where, as the manner is at all baptiſmes, each beſtoweth a ſeverall gift, or largeſſe, on the partie baptized (that is) on the Church; for whom, and for whoſe good, all this dividing and all this manifeſting is. Nay, for whom and for whoſe good, the world it ſelfe was created, Chriſt Himſelfe baptized, and the Holy Ghoſt, this Day viſibly ſent downe.

The Trinitie perſonall I deale with firſt, that we may know, where and from whom, all the reſt iſſue and proceed. All errours are tolerable, ſave two; about Alpha, the firſt letter, and Omega the laſt; about primum principium, and ultimus finis; the firſt beginning, whence all flow, and the laſt end, whereto all tend. We erre againſt the firſt, when we derive things amiſſe: we erre againſt the ſecond, when we referre them amiſſe: Divide them right, and referre them right, and all is right. And the right deriving is (as here) to bring all from the bleſſed Trinitie.

From this Trinitie perſonall, comes there here another (as I may call it) a Trinitie reall, of 1 gifts, 2 adminiſtrations, and 3 operations. I will tell you, what is meant by each. 1. By gifts, is meant the inward indowing, enabling, qualifying, whereby one, for his skill, is meet and ſufficient for ought. A particular whereof to the number of nine, is ſet downe, at the VIII, IX, and X. Verſes after. 2 By adminiſtrations, is meant the outward calling, place, function, or office, whereby one is authoriſed lawfully to deale with ought. Of theſe likewiſe you have a liſt to the number of eight at the XXVIII. verſe after. 3. By operations, is meant the effect, or worke done, wrought, or executed by the former two (the skill of the gift, and the power of the calling:) But, theſe are infinite (workes:) no ſetting downe of them; onely ſo to be ranged, as every calling to know his owne proper worke, and ſo to deale with it.

So have you three quotients from three Diviſors: 1 gifts, 2 offices, 3 workes, from the 1 Father, 2 Sonne, and 3 Holy Ghoſt, referendo ſingula ſingulis. 1 Gifts, they from the Spirit: 2 Offices, they from Chriſt, the Lord: 3 Works, they from God the Father. The Spirit, He gives wherewith: Chriſt, He appoints wherein: the Father, He workes where-about. The Spirit gives all to all: Chriſt, He appoints all for all: God the Father workes all in all.

You are not (here) to thinke theſe three ſo limited, as that all and every of them, every of the three, come not from all and every Perſon of the Trinitie. They come, all, from all. Our rule is the workes of the Trinitie (all, ſave thoſe that reflect upon and betweene themſelves inwardly) all outward, to any without them, are never divided. What one doth, all doe.

To make it plaine in theſe. Gifts here are aſcribed to the Spirit: But S. Iames ſaith, Every one of them come from above from the Father: and S. Paul, he ſaith, Chriſt, when He aſcended up on high, he gave gifts unto men. So, the gifts come from the other two Perſons, no leſſe than from the Spirit. Offices are here aſſigned unto the Lord (that is) Chriſt: yet, by and by (at the XXVIII. verſe) it is ſaid of God the Father, that He ordained Apoſtles, and ſo goes on there, with other Offices of the Church. And in Acts 20. 28. of the Holy Ghoſt it is ſaid, Poſuit vos Epiſcopos, that he placed them Biſhops: and they are chiefe Offices. So that, Offices are from the other two, as well as from Chriſt. Workes, they are here appropriate to GOD (that is) the Father: yet in Iohn V. with one breath Chriſt ſaith, My Father worketh hitherto, and ſo doe I worke as well as He: and in this Chapter, ſtraight after (at the eleventh verſe following) thus we read, All theſe things worketh one and the ſame Spirit. So, workes as they are from the Father, ſo are they from the other two. And ſo all and every of the three Perſons, equally intereſſed, in all and every of the three

Ioh. 5. 17.

How is it then? How come they thus to be ſorted? Sure, rather in a kind of apt congruitie than otherwiſe; only in a fit and convenient reference to the peculiar, and (if I may ſo call it) the perſonall attributes, which moſt properly ſuits with each Perſon whence they flow; As thus. The Spirit is the eſſentiall love of the Father, and the Sonne. Love then is his perſonall property: and love is bounteous; and from bountie come gifts. So, the gifts, they, from the Spirit. Chriſt, Hee is the eſſentiall Wiſdome of the Father: and Sapientis eſt ordinare; that, is Wiſdomes Office ſaith the Philoſopher: So, the ordering of Places, or Offices fals to Him. GOD, we call Him the Father Almightie; which ſheweth, Might or power is His proper Attribute; and power it is, that worketh: So, the worke is His peculiar. And thus come they, thus ſorted. And ſo well we may repaire to each ſeverally for his ſeveral: Yet, with no excluſive to the reſt; but to all, for all joyntly, for all that. This needs not trouble any.

No more needs their order in ſtanding: The Holy Ghoſt, firſt; and the Father laſt; otherwiſe than in Baptiſme, or in the Doxologie. The workes appropriate to the Father, though they be in execution laſt; yet are they in intention firſt. It is (as in a ſolemne traine) noviſſimi primi, the laſt goe firſt, and primi noviſſimi, the firſt come laſt: and yet are firſt in order, though laſt in place. It is ſure, the worke is the end of both the reſt, and of all. Vnumquodque propter operationem ſuam: Every thing, bee it what it will, gift or place, is and hath his being for the worke it hath to doe. So, the worke is the chiefe of the three, and He the chiefe, whoſe the worke is, let His ſtanding be where it will.

The Trinitie Reall.

To the doing whereof, there be required three things. And where there be more than one required, our books teach us, ever to conſider them, firſt conjunctim, joyntly, altogether; then ſeriatim, each in order, as they ſtand; and laſtly, ſeorſim, every one aſunder by it ſelfe.

Of them joyntly.

Ioyntly then. To the doing of ought there is requiſite, 1 habilitie of the partie, 2 authority for the partie, 3 and diligence in the partie. 1 Meet and ſufficient men; 2 they, orderly called, and placed; 3 diligent and painefull at their buſineſſe. To ſupply theſe, here are, 1 A gift wherewith, 2 a place wherein, 3 a work whereabout to imploy both: and none to take on him the worke, except firſt in a calling; nor to take on him a calling, except he firſt have a gift meet for it. The Spirit is free of His gifts; by which, abilitie: Chriſt, He invites us to ſome calling; wherein, authority: God, He cals upon us to be at worke; wherein, diligence is to be ſhewed.

Our duty it ſhall be to come, to be at theſe three doles, or diviſions; to have our ſhare in them. Out of the firſt: 1 Every one to get himſelfe furniſhed with ſome gift. 2 Out of the ſecond: to ſee himſelfe beſtowed in ſome calling. 3 Out of the third:

third: having both theſe, to apply himſelfe to ſome worke; and namely, that worke, that belongs to his calling. In a word; every one to finde himſelfe with a gift, in a calling, about a worke. Not having the gift, not to affect or enter the calling; nor having the calling, not to venture upon the work.

By all meanes we are to avoid to fruſtrate this meeting of the Trinity. To doe them this honour, to think all the three abſolutely needfull, and not any of the three more than needs. The Wiſedome of GOD, as it is never wanting in any thing that needs, ſo neither is it laviſh in any thing more than needs. And indeed, to hold any of the three ſuperfluous, is (in effect) to call in queſtion, whether ſome perſon in the Trinity be not ſuperfluous; namely, that perſon, whoſe diviſion we ſeeme to ſet ſo light by. All three then are to be had: We cannot miſſe any of them. If we miſſe the gift, all will be done unskilfully: if the calling, all diſorderly: if the worke, all unprofitably, and to no purpoſe. Then, not to leave out, or to leape over the gift; that is a contempt of the Spirit: Nor the calling; that is a treſpaſſe againſt CHRIST: Nor the worke, that is an affront to GOD Himſelfe. So much for conjunctim: now for ſeriatim.

2 Of them ſeriatim, in their order.

All to be had, and in this order to be had, as here they ſtand marſhalled. The gift firſt; then the calling to authorize; then, the work to make up all. But the gift, before the calling; and the calling, after the gift: the gift and calling both, before we be allowed to take any work in hand. The number not abated, the order not inverted. Neither the calling, before the gift; nor the worke, before the calling and gift both be had. But every and each, in his order, and turne. This order kept, the Church will flouriſh, the Common-Wealth proſper, and all the world be the better. We have done with conjunctim, and ſeriatim; and now we fall to ſeorſim, to the ſeverall diviſions. And firſt, to the Spirits, (that is) the gifts, and the nature of them.

3 Of each ſeverally.

1 χαεῖσματα. The Gifts.

The word is χαεῖσματα. It is a word of the Chriſtian ſtyle; you ſhall not read it in any Heathen Authour. We turne it, Gifts. Gifts is ſomewhat too ſhort: χάεισμα is more than a gift. But firſt, a gift it is. It is not enough with us Chriſtians, that a thing be had: with the Heathen man, it is: he cares for no more: he cals it ἕξις. Sure he is, he hath it; and that is all he lookes after: The Chriſtian adds further, how he hath it: hath it not of himſelfe, ſpinnes not his threed as the Spider doth, out of himſelfe; but hath it of another, and hath it of gift. It is given him: Vnicuique datur (it is the 11. verſe) To every one is given. So, in ſtead of Ariſtotles word, ἕξις, habite, he puts Saint Iames's word, δώσις or δώρημα: it is a gift, with him. Iames 1. 17.

Free gift.

And how a gift? Not do, ut des; give him as good a thing for it, and ſo was well worthy of it. No, but of free gift. And ſo S. Iames his word δώρημα, which is no more but a gift, he adds S. Pauls here, χάεισμα, wherein there is χάεις, (that is) grace, and ſo a grace-gift, or gift of grace. This word, the pride of our nature digeſts not well: φύσις, and φυσίωσις touch neare: Nature is eaſily puft or blowne up: but, χάεισμα hath a prick in it for the bladder of our pride: as if either of our ſelves we had it, and received it not; or received it, but it was becauſe we earn'd it. No: it is gratis acceptiſtis on our part: and gratis data, on His: freely given of Him, freely received by us; and that is χάεισμα right. Mat. 10. 8.

Given by the Spirit.

Freely given by Him; Who is that? The Spirit. The naturall man feeles, he hath a ſoule; and that is all the Spirit he takes notice of, and is therefore called animalis homo (that is) nothing but ſoule: that, is all his Spirit. The Chriſtian takes notice of another Spirit, that is not his owne; (that is) GOD's Spirit, the Holy Ghoſt: and that he is beholden to Him, who is one and the ſame Spirit. Elſe, ſo many men, ſo many ſpirits. But this is but one and the ſame Spirit. Iude 11. Verſe 11.

Which one, and the ſame Spirit makes alſo againſt Paganiſme. For, they had nine Muſes, and three Graces, and (I wot not how many) Gods and Goddeſſes beſides. We goe but to one. All ours come from one, from the ſame Spirit. All our multitude is from Vnity. All our diverſity is from identity. All our diviſions from integrity; from one and the ſame entire Spirit. A free gift from the free Spirit; a gift of grace from the Spirit of grace. So, from GOD, not from our ſelves: for CHRIST, not for our ſelves: by the Spirit, not by either our nature, or induſtry, not alone: For, without the Spirit, all our nature and induſtry will vaniſh, and nought come of them.

Thus it ſtands. The Heathen man thanks his own wit and ſtudy, for his learning; and we ſeclude them not: But, this we ſay: When all is done with all our parts naturall, and all our acts habituall, if the Holy Ghoſt come not with His graces ſpirituall, no
1 Cor. 14.1. good will come of them. Therefore we to ſeek after ſpirituall gifts, and ζηλοῦτε (it Zech. 12.10. is the Apoſtles word) zealouſly to ſeek them. For, though the Spirit give, yet we muſt ſue and pray for them. Zecharie makes but one Spirit of theſe two, 1 Grace, and 2 Prayer. Prayer, as the breathing out: Grace, as the drawing in: Both make but one breathing. To pray, then: and (more than to pray) to ſtirre them up; the word is ἀναζωπυρεῖν, to blow them, and make them burne, as is uſed to be done to fire; and as is to be done to the fiery tongues of this day: Els you will have but a blaze of them; and all elſe, but cinders, cold and comfortleſſe geere (God knowes.) But ſo all are to be ſuiters, and to labour, to have a part in this dealing.

By way of Diviſion. From the Spirit then they come: but by way of diviſion. Not, ſo as ſome, all; ſome, never a whit; but by way of diviſion. The nature whereof is, neither all gifts, Verſe 7. to one; nor one gift, to all: But (as it followes) ἑκάστῳ, unicuique, to each ſome: neither donum hominibus, one gift to all men: nor dona homini, all gifts to one man: but dona hominibus, gifts to men: Every one his part of the divident; For, ſuch is the law of dividing.

1 In Kind. Which diviſion is of two ſorts: 1 either of the thing it ſelfe in kind, 2 or of the meaſure. 1. The kind; which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of in the ſeventh Chapter, and ſeventh verſe; To every one is given his ſpeciall, and proper gift; to one in this kinde, to another in that. GOD ſo tempering, as the naturall body, that in it, the eye ſhould not have the gift to go, but to ſee; and the foot not to ſee, but to go: And as the great body of the 1 King. 5.8. 11. world; In it, Hirams countrey ſhould yeeld excellent timber and ſtone, and Salomons Countrey, good wheat and oyle, which is the ground of all commerce: So, the ſpirituall body; that in it, Paul ſhould be deepe learned, Apollo ſhould be of better ſpeech: one need another; one ſupply the need of another; ones abundance, the others want.

2 In meaſure. But diviſion is not of the kind only, but of the meaſure alſo. Diverſe meaſures there be in one and the ſame kind. Every one (ſaith the Apoſtle, Epheſ. 4.7.) according (not Mat. 25.15. Luke 19.13. to the gift, but) to the meaſure of the gift of CHRIST. For, to ſome gave He talents (ſaith S. Matthew;) To ſome, but pounds (ſaith S. Luke:) Great odds. And of either, to one gave He five, to another three, to a third but one: in a different degree ſenſibly. To each, his portion in a proportion: His Ghomer the law cals it; the Goſpell, his dimenſum. And remember this well. For, not only the kind will come to be conſidered, but the meaſure too, when we come to ſee, who be in, and who be out at the Spirits diviſion. And ſo much for the Spirit.

2 The Places or calling. If we have done with the gifts, we come to the places: For where the Spirit ends, CHRIST begins. So as, if no gift; ſtay here and go no further; never meddle with the calling, or work. But what if we have a gift; may we not fall to work ſtraight? No but a calling is firſt to be had, yer we put forth our hand to it. Which nemo ſibi ſumit, niſi qui vocatus, No man, to take on him, unleſſe he be called: Though a gift then, though a good gift, not (eo ipſo) to think himſelfe ſufficiently warranted to fall a working. There goes more to it, than ſo. We muſt paſſe CHRISTS hands too, and Heb. 5.4. not leape over His head. For, after the Holy Ghoſt hath done with us, CHRIST will appoint every one of us his calling.

Which are divided for order 1 Cor. 14.40. Of which diviſion the ground is, that every man is not, hand over head, confuſedly to meddle with every matter; but all is to be done κατὰ τάξιν, orderly. Each to know his owne. The very word [diviſion] implieth order. Where we read diviſions, ſome ſome read diverſities. But it is not ſo well (that.) Things, that are diverſe, may lie together confuſedly on heapes: But each muſt be ſorted to his ſeverall ranke and place; els are they not divided. So as, diviſion is the better reading: and diviſion is for order.

And order is a thing ſo highly pleaſing to GOD, as the three Perſons in Trinity (we ſee) have put themſelves in order, to ſhew how well they love it. And order is a thing ſo nearely concerning us, as break order once, and break both your ſtaves (ſaith GOD in Zacharie) both that of Beauty, and that of Bonds. The ſtaffe of Beauty: For, no εὐπρεπείαν, no manner of decencie or comelineſſe without it; but all out of faſhion. The ſtaffe of Bonds: For, no στήριγμα, no kinde of ſteadineſſe or conſtancie, but all looſe without it. All fals backe to the firſt Tohu, and Bohu. For, all is Tohu (empty, and voyd) if the Spirit fill not with His gifts: And all is Bohu (a diſordered rude Chaos of confuſion) if Chriſt order it not by His Places and Callings. Every body fals to be doing with every thing, and ſo nothing done: nothing well done, I am ſure. Every man therefore, what ever his gift be, to ſtay till he have his place and ſtanding by Chriſt aſſigned him. It is judged needfull (this) even in ſecular matters. Write one never ſo faire a hand, if he have not the calling of a publike Notarie, his writing is not authenticall. Be one never ſo deep a Lawyer, if he have not the place of a Iudge, he can give no definitive ſentence. No remedy then: there muſt be diviſion of places, of adminiſtration, no leſſe than of gifts.

Gen. 1. 2. תהו בהו

Will you know what thoſe places be? Eight of them are reckoned up at the 28. Verſe. Not to trouble you with thoſe that were erected, as needfull at firſt, but were not to endure but for a time: thoſe that were to endure, are reduced to three, and ſtand together: 1 Teachers, 2 Helpers, 3 Governours. A threefold diviſion, taught even the heathen by the light of nature, in their Religion. They had them all three in their: 1 Ἱεροφάντας, their Teachers; 2 Ἱεροδούλους, their Helpers; 3 Ἱερομνήμονας, their Governours. The very ſame preſcribed by GOD to His people: 1 their Teachers, the Prieſts: 2 their Helpers, the Levites: 3 their Governours, the Sonnes of Aaron, called, Neſiim, as true and proper Hebrew for Prelates, as Prælati is Latine. The ſame is knowne in the Church of Chriſt through all antiquity: 1 Presbyteri, to teach: Diaconi, to help: 3 Epiſcopi, to governe: And never any other.

What the places be.

All theſe three here go under the name of Διάκονοι, the proper terme of the loweſt of the three. We turne it Adminiſtration: It is (indeed) miniſterie or ſervice; and that on foot, and through the duſt: For, ſo is the nature of the word. An ill word for pride; who had rather heare of words ſounding of dominion, than of ſervice; ſpecially this ſervice: For, it is but the order of Deaconſhip; and pride would be at leaſt more than a Deacon. Yet, ſo we are all ſtiled here, and no other name for any. The very higheſt are but ſo. The King himſelfe, twice made a Deacon (Rom. 13.) Gods Deacon: no other title. The beſt King that was (David) is ſaid but to have ſerved his time, Act. 13. Served, that was all. The glorious lights of heaven are ſaid (Deut. 4.) to be created in miniſterium, but for our ſervice. The Angels of heaven are but miniſtring ſpirits, Heb. 1. Nay Chriſt Himſelfe is ſtiled no otherwiſe (Rom. 15.) but that He was a Miniſter of the Circumciſion. He that is LORD of all, and gives all the offices, cals His own but ſo.

Rom. 13. 4. Acts 13. 36. Deut. 4. 10. Heb. 1. 14. Rom. 15. 8.

Theſe places, we ſaid before, are divided for order. Now I add further; they are divided, not ſcattered, or let fall: For, that is caſuall. Dividing is not ſo: but (as it is in the 11. ver.) pront vult, a voluntary act. He that diſtributes, knowes what, and to whom He doth it. Places therefore are to be divided by knowledge: not ſcattered or ſcambled for, by hap and hazard. The Wind is to blow no man to preferment (Pſal. 75.) It is the LORD, that is to diſpoſe of them.

Divided they be; not ſcattered.

And how to diſpoſe or divide them? According to the former diviſions of the Spirit. That theſe ſhould firſt take place: the ſecond depend upon thoſe firſt: none taken to the ſecond, till he have paſt the firſt. For, Chriſts Places, are for the Holy Ghoſts Gifts. Without inſpiring with the grace, no aſpiring to the place there ſhould bee. The Holy Ghoſt is by His gifts, to point out thoſe, that ſhould be taken into theſe adminiſtrations.

Ioh. 10. 7. the Holy Ghoſt commends. Chriſt is the doore: of which doore the Holy Ghoſt is the Porter. No man paſſeth through the doore, but whom the Porter openeth to. No man to Chriſt, but by and through the Holy Ghoſt: nor to the calling, but by and through the gift. They that come not that way (by the doore) get in by ſome other backe way; per pſeudothyrum, by ſome falſe poſterne: That marres all. This, is the true or-

Each one to have a calling. What is then to be done, that Chriſt be not neglected, and his call? That every one betake himſelfe to ſome calling, or other. In the Miniſterie, all: All Miniſters; Miniſters, either of the Church, or of the State and Common-wealth: But all Miniſters. According to his gift. To be in ſome Calling: but withall, to have a gift meet for that calling. But if not at the firſt dole (the Spirits) not at the ſecond (Chriſts:) no gift there, no place here. Can
1 Cor. 14. 38. any man deviſe to ſpeake with more reaſon, than doth the Apoſtle (in the 14. Chapter following) If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant; (that is) hold himſelfe for ſuch, and not take on him the place or worke of the skilfull. It is againſt Gods will, if he doe. Have you refuſed to gaine knowledge? then have I refuſed you for being any Prieſt
Hoſea 4. 6. of mine. It is GOD Himſelfe in Hoſea 4. Have you not uſed the meanes? Have you miſpent the time when you ſhould have laboured for the gift? Chriſt hath no place for you. Whom the Spirit furniſhed with gifts, for them it is Chriſt provideth places: for them, and none elſe.

In Kinde. 1. And yet not every place for every gift, neither: But to have a calling proper to his gift. Proper to it for the kinde; not to bee miſ-ſorted into a place no wayes meet: his gift lying one way, his place another. But put the right gift in the right place.

In Meaſure. 2 Proper for the kinde, and proper for the meaſure alſo. For, as there be meaſures in gifts; ſo there be degrees in places, to anſwer them. And one is not to thruſt himſelf into a place diſproportioned to the portion of his gifts (the Apoſtle cals it ὑπερεκτείνειν: Ἐκτείνειν, is to extend, to ſtretch himſelfe to the full of his meaſure: ὑπερεκτείνειν, is to 1 Cor. 10. 14. ſtretch himſelfe beyond it; to enter himſelf far beyond his ſcantling:) But if a meane gift, a meane calling to content him. Durus ſermo; for there is none ſo meane in gift, that he undervalues his gift, for any place, yea even of the beſt worth. You may ſee theſe two: (1 the kinde, and 2 the degree:) the kinde, in Vzziah: He had no calling
2 Chro. 26. 16 to his worke of incenſe, of burning incenſe; not at all. What became of him? You may reade in his forehead. The degree, in Vzzah: he had a calling; was of the Tribe: went
2 Sam. 6. 7. only beyond his degree; preſſed to touch the Arke, which was more than a Levite might doe, and was ſtrucken dead for it by God. God no leſſe angry with him, that went beyond the degree of his calling, than with Vzziah that had no kind of calling at all. None that is in therefore, to over-reach or preſume above his degree, but to keep him within compaſſe.

Now the gifts bee dealt, and the places fild: the Spirits gifts put into Chriſts, (that is) into right places. Now fall we to the third, to Gods diviſion, to ſet them to worke, Every thing (we ſaid) hath his being, for the worke it is to doe. Gifts, calling and all for the worke. For, if the worke follow not, the gift is idle; you may caſt it away; the calling is idle, you may caſt it off. A vacation it might bee; a vocation

it is not. The gift is for the calling: the gift and calling (both) are for the worke.

And will you obſerve the proceeding here of the Spirit firſt? The Spirit is neereſt reſembled to breath: Spiro, whence it comes, is to breathe. Breath (you know) is in the noſthrils: they be two; through, and from them both, the Spirit proceeds. To anſwer theſe, God the Father, Christ the Lord, are two; from them both, by way of ſpiration, comes the Spirit, the ſacred Breath of them both.

Now then ſecondly, as the Father doth beget the Sonne, and from them both proceeds the Holy Spirit; So, the gift to beget the calling (of right ſo it ſhould) and they both to produce the Worke. And as no man comes to Christ, but by the Holy Ghoſt: So, no man to the calling, but by the gift. And as no man comes to the Father, but by Chriſt: ſo no man to the worke, but by the calling.

Not to the worke. The very word worke (ἔργον) at once condemnes three, ἀεργον, παρεργον, περεργον. Ἀεργον firſt. Such as are idle bodies; do no worke at all: ſpend their dayes in vanity; conſume whole yeares, in doing juſt nothing. This (of workes) is God's diviſion: who is not (Himſelfe;) would not have us, idle. Vſque operatur, ſtill He workes; ſtill He would have us ſo to doe. Not as Ionas: get us a gourd, and ſit under it, and ſee what will become of Ninive; but ſtirre not a foot to helpe it. Not to lie ſouking in the broth (as Ezekiel ſaid of the great men in his dayes:) The Citie is the cauldron, the wealth is the broth, and in the broth they lie ſoaking, and all is well. Saint Paul cals them the Lolligoes of the land. His word is καταναρκᾶν; The ſix dayes, and the ſeventh, to them both alike; Holy-day Chriſtians. The Poet ſaid, Ἀεργοις αἰὲν ἑορτη: Every day is Holy day with idle people. Out of this diviſion, out of operations, they.

3 The worke. ἔργον.
1 Not ἀεργόν.
Iohn 5.17.
Ion. 4.6.
2 Cor. 11.9.

The next ſort, they will not be idle; but it were as good they were. They will be doing, but it is παρεργον all they doe: Nothing to any purpoſe; from and beſide it quite. Opus quo nihil opus, ſome needleſſe worke; quæ nihil attinet, as good let alone: leaving undone, that they ſhould and are to doe, and catching at ſomewhat elſe, and mightily buſying themſelves about that; and all to no end. Anni eorum meditati ſunt ſicut aranea, ſaith the Pſalme: Very buſie they be; but it is about weaving cobwebs: no body ſhall weare them, or be the warmer for them: to no profit in the world.

Pſal. 90. 10.

And as theſe deale with quæ nihil attinet; So the laſt (περεργον) with thoſe, quæ nihil ad eos attinet, that concerne not them at all. That will be doing, but it is with that, they have nothing to do. There are diviſions of workes, and they work out of their diviſion: love to be buſie; to be dealing with any bodies worke, ſave their own. Which is lightly the buſie-bodies occupation, condemned by the Apoſtle, not in men only (2 Theſſ. 3.) but even in the other ſex, too (1 Tim. 5.) For they alſo will be medling: πολυπραγμων is of both genders.

Not περεργόν.
2 Theſſ. 3. 11.
1 Tim. 5. 13.

I told you before, the callings were founded upon order, and to keep them, ſo have their ὁροθεσίας, limits; or bounds. And they do all ἀτάκτως περιπατεῖν, walk out of order, diſorderly break the pales, and over they go; that leaving their own, become (as S. Peters word is) ἀλλοτριεπισκοποὶ, Biſhops of other mens Diœceſes: Do no good in their own, ſpend their time in finding fault with others. A thing not to be indured in any body. Take the naturall body for example, wherein the Spirit, bloud, choler, and other humours are to keepe and containe themſelves, to hold every one in his owne proper veſſell: as, bloud in the veines; choler in the gall: And if once they be out of them, the bloud out of the veine makes an Apoſtume; the choler out of the gall makes a Iaundiſe all over the body. Believe it, this is an evill ſickneſſe under the Sun, that the diviſion of works is not kept more ſtrictly. They are divided according to the callings: Every worke is not for every calling. For then what needs any dividing? But as the calling is, ſo are the workes to be: every one to intend his owne, wherein (it is preſumed) his skill lies; and not to buſie himſelfe with others: For, that is περεργον. And theſe are the three errours about operations.

1 Pet. 4. 15.

It

It will not be amiſſe, if we look yet a little further into this word. For, it is ἐνέργημα, which is more than ἔργον. For ἐνέργημα, is not every worke: it is an in-wrought worke. A worke wrought by us ſo, as in us alſo. And both, it may be. For ἐνέργεια and συνεργεία take not away, one the other. So then by our ſelves, as by ſome other beſide our ſelves; and that is GOD, who is ſaid here to work all in all.

All in all. If we take it at the uttermoſt extent, it will reach, then we muſt be well aware to ſever the defect, or deformity of the worke from the worke it ſelfe; as, well we may. Moving is the worke, halting is the deformity. Moving, that comes from the ſoule, is wrought by it: halting (the deformity) not from the ſoule, whence the moving comes; but that is cauſed by the crookedneſſe of the leg. So is the evill of the worke: The defect, from us; the work, from GOD, and that His.

But of all our good, all our well-wrought workes, of them, we ſay not onely, Sine Me nihil poteſtis facere, We can doe none of them without Him: But further, we ſay with the Prophet, Domine, omnia opera noſtra operatus es in nobis: In them, He doth not only co-operate with us from without; but, even from within (as I may ſay) in-operate them in us; ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν, working in you. Then, if there goe another Workeman to them beſides our ſelves, we are not to take them wholly to our ſelves. But, if that other Workeman be GOD; we will allow Him for the principall Workeman, at the leaſt. That, upon the whole matter, if our ability be but of gift; if our calling, be but a ſervice; if our very worke, but ἐνέργημα, a thing wrought in us; cecidit Babylon, pride fals to the ground: theſe three have laid it flat.

Iohn 15.5. Eſay 26.12. Heb. 13.21.

But beſides this, there are three points more in ἐνέργημα. I will touch them firſt.

1. In us they are ſaid to be wrought; to ſhew, our works ſhould not be skrewed from us; wound out of us with ſome wrinch from without, without which nothing would come from us by our will, if we could otherwiſe chooſe: Ἐξεργάσματα, theſe properly. But ἐνεργήματα, from within: hath the principium motus, there, and thence: And ſo, are naturall and kindly works.

2 Next; from within: To ſhew, they are not taken-on-works, done in hypocriſie: So the outſide faire, what is within, it skils not. But, that there be truth in the inward parts; that there it be wrought, and that thence it come.

3 And laſt, if it be an ἐνέργημα, it hath an energie (that is) a workmanſhip, ſuch as that the gift appeares in it. For energie implies, it is not done utcunque, but workmanlike done. Els there is an aërgie, but no energie in it. And even the very word [of diviſion] comes to as much. Dividing implies skill to hit the joynt, right: For, that, is to divide. To cut at venture, quite beſide the joynt, it skils not where, through skin and bones and all; that, is to chop and mangle, and not to divide. Diviſion hath art, ever. And this for GOD's diviſion, the diviſion of works. And ſo now you have all three.

We have ſet downe the order. Will you now reflect upon it a little, and ſee the variation of the compaſſe, and ſee how theſe diviſions are all put out of order; and who be in, and who be out at every one of them? Firſt, whereas the gift and the calling are (and ſo are to be) Relatives, neither without the other; There are men of no gifts (to ſpeak of) that may ſeeme to have come too late, or to have beene away quite, at the firſt of the Spirits dealing: No ſhare they have of it; yet what do they? Fairely ſtride over the gifts; never care for them; and ſtep into the calling over the gifts, and ſo over the Holy Ghoſts head. Where they ſhould begin with the gift, the firſt thing they begin with, is to get them a good place. Let the gift come after, if it will: or if it do not, it skils not greatly. They are well: they lie ſoaking in the broth, in the meane time. This neglect of the gift, in effect is a plaine contempt of the Spirit, as there were no great need of the Holy Ghoſt.

Thus it ſhould be: As one ſpeeds at the firſt diviſion, ſo he ſhould at the ſecond. If no grace from the Spirit; no place with CHRIST. If ſome one, but a meane one, let his place be according. He with the two mites, not in the place of him with the five talents: (or as one well expreſt it) not little-learned Aurelius, Biſhop of great Carthage, and great-learned S. Auguſtine, Biſhop of little Hippo. This is a treſpaſſe ſure, againſt the firſt diviſion: which reſpecteth not onely the gifts in ſpecie, but in meaſure too. Proportion the places, to the proportion of the gifts: which proportion (we know) is both wayes broken, whether a low gift have a high place, or a rich gift be let lie in a poore place, contrary to the minde of Christ, who would have the degree of the place, as neare as could be, to the meaſure of the gift.

There ſhould be but one God. In the Text, there is no more. But here is another. The Apoſtle cals him the God of this world: who hath his ἐνεργουμένους, who works too: and his works tend to deface, and damnifie the Church, all he may. 2 Cor. 4. 4.

Nor, there is but one Lord here, to divide places. But by a jure patronatus, other Lords there are, that make diviſions, and ſubdiviſions of them: Of whom the poore ſubdivided places may ſay (with Eſay) O Lord, other Lords beſides thee had the diſpoſing of us. Eſay 26. 13.

So, there is but one Spirit. But, another ſpirit there is abroad in the world. He that carried Christ up to the top of the mountaine, and talkt of Tibi dabo, as if he had gifts too. Mat. 4. 9.

I ſhall be ſorrie to make any other diviſion of gifts, than thoſe of the Holy Ghoſt. But, made it muſt be, which the world hath made, and makes daily; and makes more accompt of them, than of theſe here in the Text. And indeed, ſuch accompt, as the Holy Ghoſt may ſit ſtill, and keep his gifts undivided well enough. The other Spirit divides other manner gifts, than the Holy Ghoſt hath any. The gifts of the Holy Ghoſt are dona pectoris, came out of the breaſt: You would thinke, the others come out of the breaſt too; but they come but out of the boſome. And in ſpeculation we ſay, the Holy Ghoſts gifts are farre above theſe; but, in practice, they are daily found to be fat above them in power. For, the Wiſe-man ſaith, Dilatant viam hominis, theſe gifts have a power to make a way through never ſo thick a preaſe; power, to make any doore flie open afore them. They ſpeake of graces: They make any, that come with them, more gracious, than theſe of S. Paul. Nay, they will diſgrace them, and marre their faſhion quite. Prov. 18. 16.

But then thoſe gifts hold not of this Feaſt, not of Penteceſt, but hold of the Feaſt of Simon and Iude, they. The Church hath joyned theſe two Saints, in one Feaſt: And the Divell (in many things elſe, God's Ape) hath made a like joyning of his too, in imitation of the true. His Simon, is Simon Magus, not Simon Zelotes; and Iude, Iudas Iſcariot, not Iudas the brother of Iames; no kinne to him. Simon, he came off roundly, προσήνεγκε χρήματα, offered frankly, would come to the price. And Iudas, he would know what they would give, how thankfull they would be; and it was done, and there goeth a bargaine. Theſe two are like enough to agree. And thus is the Holy Ghoſt defeated: bought out, He and His gifts by Simon ſtill. And thus is Christ betrayed in His places, and that, by Iudas ſtill. This wicked fraternity of Simon and Iude, are the bane of the Church, unto this day. Iudas, that ſold Christ, like enough to make ſale of Christ's places. Simon, that would buy the Holy Ghoſt, (had He beene to be ſold) as like to buy out the Holy Ghoſts gifts, as the Holy Ghoſt Himſelfe. And this fault in the firſt concoction, is never after amended in the ſecond. For, with ſuch as theſe God will never co-operate: never comes there any fruit of ſuch. Enough, if any thing were enough. But thus Christ's places go againſt Christ's will. Acts 8. 18. Mat. 26. 15.

Thus have ye a calling without a gift. What ſay you now to a gift without a calling? Thoſe, are not for the Holy Ghoſt: Theſe care as little for Christ. Some ſuch there are; no man muſt ſay, but gifts they have, ſuch as they be: but they care not greatly for troubling themſelves with any calling. They are even as well without. Hop up and downe as Graſhoppers, hither and thither, but place they will have none; yet their fingers itch, and they cannot hold them; doing they muſt be: and if they have got but the fag end of a gift, have at the worke; be doing they will, of their owne heads (uncal'd by any ſo, that have right to call:) And for default of others, even 2 make no more adoe, but call themſelves: lay their owne hands upon their owne heads; utterly againſt CHRIST's minde, and rule. And ſo over CHRIST's head they come, from the gift to the worke, without any calling at all.

3 Well in theſe two they have ſomwhat yet: Either a calling without a gift, or a gift without a calling. What ſay you to them, that have neither; but fetch their run for all that, and leap quite over gift and calling, Chriſt and the Holy Ghoſt (both) and chop into the work at the firſt daſh? That put themſelves into buſineſſes, which they have neither fitneſſe for, nor calling to? Yet no man can keep them, but meddle they will, and in Church-matters ſpecially: there, ſooneſt of all: And print us Catechiſmes, and compoſe us Treatiſes; ſet out prayers and new Pſalmes, as if every forreiner were free, and might ſet up with us. Good Lord, what the poore Church ſuffers in this kinde!

4 Yet have you a fourth, no leſſe ill than any of theſe. And theſe be ſuch as have gifts and calling both, it cannot be denied; yet fall ſhort at the worke: Worke not at all. Wrap up their talent: fold it up fairely in a napkin, and lay it by them. Let their calling lie fallow: get them into Ionas gourd, and ſit gazing there; or into Ezekiels caldron, and lie ſoaking there. Worke who will, and worke GOD in whom He will; in them He ſhall work nothing: Nothing (ſo) to any publike good. Theſe have great accompt to make to GOD, for thus treading under their foot His diviſion. Nay, to all three: to Chriſt alſo, for the contempt of His calling; and to the Holy Ghoſt too, for burying his gifts.

Ezek. 11.3.

So have you [1] a calling and no gift; [2] a gift, and no calling; [3] neither gift, nor calling, but work for all that; [4] both gift, and calling, and no work not for all that. All awry; all in obliquity, for want of obſerving the order here eſtabliſhed. Theſe obliquities to avoid.

III. The Trinity actuall.

It is the will of GOD, that this Trinity Reall ſhould meet, and grow into Vnity as the perſonall it ſelfe doth: that ſo this here, on earth beneath, may grow, and be conformed to that there, in heaven above. The former three diviſions, in the former three Verſes, all meet in the Vnity, and manifeſtation, in this fourth Verſe: which is the Spirits unity. And ſo come we now about to the Spirit againe. For, all this dividing is not enough: But when the doles and diviſions of all three is done, then begins the Spirit anew. For, theſe muſt not be concealed, but be all manifeſted. And that muſt be by the tongues of this day. Which is it, that giveth the Holy Ghoſt a more ſpeciall intereſt than the reſt, and makes the Feaſt to be His. For hitherto, they had as good a part as He.

2 Manifeſting.

If you mark it, dividing and giving is a kind of inſpiring, or breathing in; uttering and manifeſting, a kinde of breathing out againe of that was inſpired. And theſe two are two naturall and kindly acts of the Spirit in us, by breathing in, to receive; by breathing out, to utter it out, or manifeſt it.

And it hath good coherence, and followes upon the work well (this manifeſtation.) For, every mans work is to make him manifeſt. No better way to take true notice of any, than by it. It is not Loquere; it is Operare, ut te videam. Chriſt ſaith not auribus or ſermonibus; but operibus credite (that is) oculis credite. For, works be manifeſt, and may be ſeene.

It followes well likewiſe upon diviſion. For, 1. Firſt, diviſion doth make manifeſt. Things that are propounded in groſſe, eo ipſo are obſcure; and are therefore divided, that they may more diſtinctly, and plainly appeare. 2. And ſecond, manifeſtation it ſelf is nothing but dividing. For, what is divided unto us by the three Perſons, it is required, that we ſhould divide unto others; and our dividing it among others, is that, which here is called manifeſting. That which we receive, when we make manifeſt, we are ſaid to divide, and to diſtribute that which came unto us from the former three diviſions.

1 Pet. 4. 10.

But this is ſure without manifeſting, all diviſions availe nothing, all the πολυποικιλος χαρις, δεις, all the manifold variety of the graces are to no purpoſe, no more than a treaſure divided into never ſo many bags, if it be hidden and not manifeſt, is to any profit, or any the better for it. Nay it holds in all three. 1. In the gifts. We are not to rake them up, but to ſtirre them up, and make them burne. 2. In the calling. We are not to be aſhamed of it, but to profeſſe it manifeſtly, as he did, Non me pudet Evangelii. Rom. 1. 16. 3. In the work. We are not to worke inward, in a back-roome; but to open our ſhop, ſet out our wares and utter them. Divided and not manifeſted (that is) the tongues are cloven, but they have no fire; nothing to give light by. And light it is that maketh manifeſt. Which light is not to be hid under a buſhell, but to be ſet upon a candleſtick; Matth. 5. 15. or (as this Feaſt gives) not to be kept in the ſhadow, but brought out into the Sun; the bright and White Sun of this Day.

Manifeſted then. And why? For μάτην πρός τι, nothing is to be done in vaine: but in vaine, if to no end. To ſome end then. For μάτην πρός τι: and πρός is here in the Text. It fals not into a wiſe man (much leſſe, into the onely wiſe God) to keep all this dividing and manifeſting, and all to no end. To know that end then, that we run not in vaine, labour not in vaine, have not the gifts, take not on us the calling, doe not the works in vaine, receive not the grace of God in vaine; nay, receive not your owne ſoules in vaine. 2 Cor. 6. 1. Els, we fall upon the other capitall errour, about Omega, about our ultimus finis. To know our part then. For, Ignoranti quem portum petat, nullus ſecundus eſt ventus, He that knowes not whither he is bound, no wind in the skie is good for him. To know our end then, whither to referre all. The gift is for the calling, and they both for the worke, and they all three are for manifeſtation.

3 Profiting.

But then take heed of making manifeſtation, the end of it ſelfe, and goe no further. There are that make that their end; that doe it, φιλοτιμούμενοι (the Apoſtles word) to make a faire ſhew, to ſpread their feathers is all the uſe ſome have of their diviſion. Christs kindred would have made it Christs end, and ſhouldred him forward to it: If you can do, as they ſay you can doe, then get you up to Hieruſalem, ſeeke to manifeſt your ſelfe there, that you may be known for ſuch: Win credit, and become famous. But Christ came to another end. And the Chriſtians rule is, Nothing for vaine-glory, either by provoking, or by emulation. It is but Omicron, this: it is not Omega. Iohn 7. 3.

Wherefore then are we to manifeſt? Πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον: here is our part; this is our end, to profit withall. Whether Paul, Apollo, or Cephas; whether gifts, places, or works, all are for this. This, is the end of all.

Farre they are from this end, that have uſe of all three. But πρὸς συμφοράν, not συμφέρον (that is) not to do good, but to do a ſhrewd turne withall, now and then. Nay, that will not ſticke to boaſt (one there was that did ſo; of whom the Pſalme, Quid gloriaris? was made) how they are able to do one a diſpleaſure by their place, and pay him home, if need be. As if officium came of officiendo, of ſtanding in another mans light, of doing other men hurt. Otherwiſe (I truſt) themſelves take no hurt by their Offices. But take this for a rule, the Apoſtle gives it two ſeverall times: There is no power given to any to deſtruction, or to do harme; for edification it is, all that is; to do good with, and therein to be made manifeſt. We may not hatch cockatrice eggs to do miſchiefe unto any, as they do to ſuch as eat them. Pſal. 52. 1. 2 Cor. 10. 8. 2 Cor. 13. 10. Eſay 59. 5.

But all πρὸς τὸ συμφέρον. It is a compound word, and we will take it in peeces. Firſt, φέρον, which is to 1 bring, to 2 bring in, to 3 bring forth, to 4 bring with. To bring in, what? What profit is there (ſaith the Pſalme?) To bring in ſome profit. To bring forth, what? What fruit had you (ſaith the Apoſtle?) To bring forth ſome fruit. To bring with it, what? That I may receive mine owne with advantage (ſaith he that gave the Talents:) To bring with it ſome advantage. Away withall (ſaith Elihu in Iob) of which it may be ſaid, it did me no good, no good came of it. Theſe ſame vana & non profutura, away with them (ſaith Samuel) never looke after them. But what ſaith God by His Prophet? Ego ſum Deus tuus docens te utilia: He teacheth us nothing, but that which will doe us good. And what by the Apoſtle? Theſe things are good and profitable for men, when he was in the Theme of good works. For, Pſal. 30. 9. Rom. 6. 21. Luke 19. 23. Iob 33. 27. לא שוה לי 1 Sam. 12. 21. Eſay 48. 17. Tit 3. 8.

as we are forbidden to hatch cockatrice eggs, things that will doe harme: ſo are we Eſay 59.5. alſo in the ſame place, to weave ſpiders webs, things very finely ſpun, but for no bodies wearing; none the better for them. Our ἐνεργήματα muſt be εὐεργήματα, works tending to profit with, els are they not the right works.

Prov.30.15. But φέρειν is not enough; to bring in. Bring in, Bring in, cries the horſleeches two daughters, till their skin crack: But it is onely for themſelves; and that is not the right. For, it is not ſingulare commodum (this profit) our owne private gaine. Here is yet another part. Here is σὺν (that is) con, which ever argues a community; a profit redounding to more than our ſelves. For, συμφέρον properly is collatitium, where there be a great many; bring every one his ſtock, and lay them together, and make a common bank for them all. Juſt as do the members in the naturall body. Every one conferres his ſeverall gift, office and work, to the generall benefit of the whole. Even as they did in the Law. Some offered gold; and others ſilk; others, linnen; and ſome, goats haire; and all to the furniture of the Tabernacle. And ſemblably we to lay together all the graces, places, worth, that we have, and to imploy them to the advancement of the common faith, and to the ſetting forward of the common Salvation.

For, the common Salvation is the profit here meant. The Apoſtle himſelfe ſaith it
1 Cor.1.33. plainly; not ſeeking mine owne profit or benefit, but the profit of many. And how? that they may have lands or leaſes? No: But that they may be ſaved. Which is the true profit, redounding of all theſe; and which in the end will prove the beſt profit: which Mat.16.26. if any attaine not, What will it profit him, if he win the whole world? To which port we be all bound: to which port, GOD ſend us.

And into this, as into the maine Ciſterne, do all theſe diviſions, manifeſtations and all run and empty themſelves. All gifts, offices, works are for this. Yea the bleſſed Trinity it ſelfe, in their dividing, do all aime at this. And, this attained, all will be to Pax in terris, the quiet and peaceable ordering of things here on earth; and to Gloria in excelſis, the high pleaſure of Almighty GOD.

So come we about, and return againe to the firſt point, we began with (that is) to the bleſſed Trinity. From them are theſe: and if from them, for them; if from their grace, for their glory: the glory of them that gave, ordered, and wrought: Gave the gifts to us; ordered the places for us; wrought the works in us. If we, the profit; they, the praiſe: the rather, for that even that praiſe ſhall redound to our profit alſo: the higheſt profit of all, the gaining of our ſoules, and the gaining of them a reſt in the heavenly kingdome, with all the three Perſons.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT RUMSEY, ON THE V. OF AVGVST, A. D. M.DC.VII.

II Sam. Chap. XVIII. Ver. XXXII.

Cui reſpondens Cushi, &c.

And Cushi anſwered, The enemies of my Lord the King, and all that riſe againſt Thee, to doe thee hurt, bee as that young man is.

THat young man was Abſalom: And hee was now hanging upon an Oke, with three darts through him. Like him doth Cuſhi wiſh, al may be, that do as he did (that is) be the Kings enemies, and riſe up againſt him. For I finde in the Text a dangerous treaſon plotted againſt King David: plotted, but defeated; and Abſalom the Author of it, brought to a wretched end. Good newes thereof brought by Cuſhi that ſaw it. And that good news here concluded with this wiſh, That all the Kings enemies may ſpeed no better, no otherwiſe than he ſped. For all the world, like glad tydings doth this day affoord us, in a like memorable example of Gods juſt proceeding, againſt a couple of like treacherous wretches. A barbarous and bloody treaſon they imagined againſt our Soveraigne. God brought their miſchiefe upon their owne heads, Et facti ſunt ſicut Abſalom. And we are here now to renew with joy, the memorie of theſe glad tydings dings; and withall, to pray Cushi's prayer, and all to say Amen to it, That the like end may ever come to the like attempts. Last yeare we changed but one word; David into Iames: we change no more now, but the number; one into two. The enemies of my Lord, be as that young man, saith Cushi. Say we; The enemies of our Lord, be as those two young men were; those two brethren in mischiefe: I will not do them that honour, to name them; no more than Cushi did him here.

Gen. 49 5.

The words we reade, as a prayer; they may also be read as a prophecie: Either, Let them be, or, They shall be as that young man is (for, the verbe is the future tense.) They have no other way, in Hebrew, to expresse their Optative but so: that hard it is, many times to say whether it be a prayer or a prediction, that so runnes in the future, and, for ought I know, it must be left to the discretion of the Translator, to take which he will, since it may be both. As, Psal. 21. either the King shall rejoyce, by way of foretelling: or, Let the King rejoyce by way of wishing. The sure way is, to take it both wayes: so, we shall be sure not to misse Cushi's meaning. And so will we doe (for so we may doe) even take it both wayes, for it is both: both a good prayer, and a true prophecy. And prayer and prophecy sort well together: Ὁ τις βούλεται τοῦτο καὶ οἴεται (saith the Philosopher:) Affectiones facile factum opiniones (saith the Schoole-man.) Our wishes we would alwayes have ominous, and our prayer turne into the nature of a prediction; what we pray for rightly, we would gladly perswade our selves shall be certainly.

The Division I. Of this Propheticall prayer then. [1] As a prayer, first, [2] then, as a Prophecy. Prayer is of two sorts: [1] for, or [2] against. As, [1] for good: so, [2] against evill; both, things and persons. This is against, a kinde of prayer; indeed, an imprecation. Two things give forth themselves in the prayer: [1] The parties, against whom it is: [2] and the wish it selfe, what it is. The parties are [1] first the Kings enemies: [2] then, those that rise up against him (that is) the Kings rebels. Two divers kindes: neither superfluous.

Verse 10. For, there be no tautologies in Scripture: no doubling the point there, but with some advantage ever.

The wish is, that they may be as Absalom. And two things are in that wish (if wee marke them well:) [1] Be, as he; (that is) not perish only (that is not all) [2] but perish, and so perish as he did. How was that? Vidi Absalom pendentem, and so hanging yet alive, thrust through with three darts. As he, in his end: as he, in the manner of his end. That the heads that contrive, may hang as high as his: and the hearts that effect, be thrust through as his was: thrice through, though once would serve.

II. And when we have done with it, as a prayer, then will we begin with it, as a prophecie. That, so he wished: and that as he wished, so he foretold: and as he foretold, so it came to passe. All that rose after, fell as fast as they rose: Et facti sunt sicut puer iste.

III. Last of all, that this prayer or prophecy, is not pent or shut up in Davids dayes: not to end, with him. It reacheth unto these of ours: hath his force and vigour still; hath and shall have, unto the worlds end. God heard him praying, and inspired him prophesying. As it came to passe in Absalom, so did it in those that rose after him: that rose against David, that rose against many other since David, and namely, against ours. So it hath beene hitherto: and so ever may it be. Cushi not only a Priest, to pray that so they be; but a Prophet, to foretell, that so they shall be.

Viam

Fiant ſicut Abſalom, is a prayer (and which more is) an imprecation. Before we pray it, it will not be amiſſe, to enquire whether we may lawfully pray any ſuch or no. I move it, becauſe of ſome ſo tender hearted men, that they can by no meanes brooke or endure any imprecation; to wiſh any ſo evill, as to pray they may come to an evill end. It is nothing fitting (as well ſaith S. Iames) that with the tongue we ſhould bleſſe God, and with the ſame, wiſh evill to man. It is Balaams office, Veni & maledic; and who would ſucceed him in his office? It is Shimeis practice; and who would be like him? And this is Cuſhis prayer; like himſelf: Some would have him an Æthiopian; but, ſome black ſwart fellow, as his name giveth.

1 Of the Text as a prayer againſt or curſing.

Iames 3.9. Num.22.6. Chap.16.13.

Againe, theſe were Iewes all; we are Chriſtians: we have a charge given us, by S. Paul not to do it: not to them, that doe us hurt; Bleſſe them that perſecute you; bleſſe (I ſay) and curſe not. We have a patterne ſet us, by S Peter; of Him, qui cum maledicereturr, non, &c. that wiſhed not their evill, that both wiſhed, and did him all the evill they could, both in deed and in word.

Rom.12.14. 1 Pet.2.23.

And this I know: yet is not all this ſo peremptorie, but that, notwithſtanding even all this againſt ſome, in ſome caſes, ſuch prayer hath beene, and may be uſed. May be? nay, ought to be other while. For, ſuch may the perſons be, as Saint Peter calleth ſome, maledictionis filii: and their facts ſo execrable, as God himſelfe commanded Moſes, to goe up into the Mount Ebal, and there, againſt twelve ſundry ſorts of ſuch, pronounce maledictus. Even as we ſee, the Serpents ſin was ſo exorbitant, as it drew a maledictus, even from Gods owne bleſſed mouth. It is not good then to be nice or tender in this point; nor I would not wiſh men to be more tender or pitifull, than God: whoſe doing of it ſheweth us it ought to be done. For to begin with the laſt (of Chriſtians;) Hee that gave us the charge (S. Paul) for all his charge given, we know what he did to Elymas. And he that ſet us the patterne (S. Peter) for all his patterne ſet, we know he uſed it againſt Simon Magus. And for the other: it is not Balaam only, but even Moſes, as mild a man, as ever the earth bare, you may read, that he came to it though, Numbers 16. Neither was it Shemei only, but David too (though a gracious and gentle Prince, may Shemei well ſay: yet) what a Pſalme of imprecations hath he penned! I meane the CIX. Pſalme. It was thought by our Fathers, that there was not a more heavie or bitter curſe could be wiſhed to any, than to ſay Deus laudum upon him, which is the beginning of that Pſalme. Neither was it Cuſhi with his ſwart colour only, but an Angell as bright as the Sunne, even the Angell of the Lord, that curſeth (himſelf) and giveth an expreſſe warrant to curſe the inhabitants of Meroz. But what ſpeake we of Saints, or Angels? Chriſt Himſelfe doth it in the Goſpell, as appeareth by his many Væ's Yea, God Himſelfe (we ſee) Gen. 3. againſt the Serpent and his whole brood. What the Saints, Angels, God Himſelfe have done, may be done, I truſt. It may be done then, licet; and ought to be done ſometimes, oportet; and in this very caſe, it ought and muſt; a neceſſitie lyeth upon us, we cannot chooſe but doe it. For pray we muſt for the Kings ſafety; Cuſhi, and all good ſubjects; but, for his ſafety we cannot pray, but we muſt (withall) for the overthrow of his under-miners. Pro includeth Contra; if for him, then againſt his foes. If wiſh him to riſe, and ſtand upright, then, them to fall and become his foot-ſtoole. So that (if all be well weighed) it is not voluntary; it is even wrung from us.

2 Pet.2.14. Deut.27.13. Gen.3.14. Acts 13.10. Act. 8.20. Num.12.5. 16.15. Iudg.5.23. Luk.11.43. Gen.3.14. Pſal.110.1.

And that indeed is the only caveat, that it be not voluntarie: that we be drawn to it hardly, and uſe it not, upon every ſlight, and trifling occaſion, againſt every thing that croſſeth our humour; but when the foulnes of the fact ſeems to exact it: and that caveat is not amiſſe. I like well of the Hebrew proverb: (Gariſim is the mount where they bleſſed; Ebal, where they gave the curſe:) they ſay, We muſt creepe into Ebal, and leap into Garizim (that is) be ſwift to one and ſlow to the other. We are then not to forſweare going into mount Ebal utterly; but to be well adviſed, yer we goe into it. To Numb. 22. do it, but not to doe it, where God bleſſeth: which Balaam was ſtill itching to do. The cauſe it is, which maketh the curſe fall; otherwiſe, if it be cauſeleſſe, it will not light but flie over as a bird. Therefore, to know well, both men and matter, againſt whom we let it flye. And we cannot better know them, than if we take our light from God: if we doe it, but where, and when, and for what God doth it, we need not be ſcrupulous: never feare to follow, where he goeth before us. And, by the grace of God, we will be well ware, not to wiſh ought to any, in this point, but ſuch, as ſhall have warrant even from Gods owne mouth.

The parties curſed.

The ſpeciall point of advice thus being, to know the parties well, againſt whom we ſend it forth, it will concerne us (and our next point it muſt be) to take perfect notice of theſe men. They offer themſelves to us, in two termes: 1 The enemies of the King; 2 They that riſe againſt him: joyned here, and as here, ſo in ſundry other places, Pſal. 3. 1. Pſal. 59. 1. Pſal. 44. 5.

1 The enemies of the King. Pſal. 55. 12.

The word Enemie is by David himſelfe, gloſſed * Pſal. 55. It was not an enemie did it to me (meaning, a known, open, profeſſed enemie;) for then (ſaith he) I could have beene provided for him: ſo may we take it.

2 Thoſe that riſe againſt him.

The other of riſing againſt, the phraſe is firſt uſed of Cain (and lightly, the firſt phraſe is the key of the reſt) when Abel and he were in the field together walking, it
Gen. 4. 8. is ſaid, Cain roſe up againſt him, and knocked him on the head: So is meant of ſuch as keepe their malice ſecret, to doe one a miſchiefe ſuddenly. And the next time it is
Num. 16. 2. uſed, is of Core, and his Complices: of them, it is ſaid (Num. 16.) They roſe up againſt Moſes. In the former of Cain, it is treacherie: in this latter of Core, it is plaine Rebellion. In a word: all that riſe againſt, are enemies; but not backward. For, enemies may be ſuch, as ſtand on even ground; as one King, or State, with another, Riſing, in proprietie of ſpeech, is of ſuch, as are of inferiour place, and yet lift themſelves up againſt their lawfull Superiours. In the end, both prove enemies, and doe the part of enemies: but, the former hath many times no bond of allegiance; the latter ever have.

1 Pet. 4. 12. We may not ξενίζεσθαι (to uſe S. Peters owne phraſe) think it ſtrange; that both theſe ſorts, Kings have them; yea though they be good Kings (as was David) yet
Pſal. 3. 1. that they have them. Heare David himſelfe ſpeake: How are mine enemies increaſed! many are they that riſe againſt me. Neither the place of a King, nor the vertue of a good King, could quit him, but he had both. He had enemies: Iſhboſheth, Hanun, Hadadeſer, the States of the Philiſtins. He had thoſe that roſe againſt him: Abſalom, Achitophel, Amaſa, here: Sheba, Adonia, Ioab, afterward; he had both. And let us not ξενίζεσθαι, think this ſtrange, ſince Chriſt Himſelfe; yea, ſince God Himſelfe hath Pſal. 92. 9. them too. For, lo thine enemies O Lord, lo, thine enemies, and thoſe that riſe up againſt thee (it is the XCII. Pſalm.) That we may ceaſe to marvell, that Kings have them; or thinke it is, becauſe it is not as it ſhould be. Be they never ſo, as they ſhould; be they 1 Sam. 13. 14. as David; according to Gods owne heart; nay, be they as Chriſt, as God Himſelfe; both theſe they ſhall have. Let not this make us ſtumble, but that we may goe forward.

Of theſe two then, if we ſhall fit our ſelves to the preſent, wee ſhall not need to ſpeake of the one ſort, of enemies. The King hath none: No King, nor State, profeſſe themſelves for ſuch; nor never may do. The latter it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſtay a little, and looke better on, who they be, This dayes perill was; all his perill, both in Auguſt, and November, is from them, that (like Cain) riſe up againſt him. A King by Prov. 30. 27. nature is Rex Alkum, ſaith Salomon, Prov. XXX. One, againſt whom there is no riſing:
Heb. 13. 17. אלקום So God would have it. Subjects (ſaith the Apoſtle) to lye downe before them: riſing up againſt, is cleane contrary to that; and ſo, contrary to Gods will: He would have no riſing. The thought to riſe (voluerunt inſurgere in Regem) is ſaid of Bigthan and Thares, two of Ahaſhuerus chamber (marke that voluerunt inſurgere) was enough, to attaint them: the riſing but of the will, to bring them to the gallowes. Nor the tongue is not to riſe, or lift up it ſelfe: Core did but gainesay; his tongue was but up, and he, and all that took his part, periſhed in their gainesaying, the gainesaying of Core. But chiefely none, either (with Iudas) to lift up his heele, to betray; or (with Cain) to lift up the hand, to doe violence. No partie, no part of any partie, to riſe against the King. Yet, riſe they will, and doe: both the thought ſwell; and exurgent è vobis (ſaith the Apoſtle) perversè loquentes, yea, and perversa facientes; lewd ſpeech uſed, and worſe than ſpeech, preſumptuous deeds too. Eſter. 2. 21. Iud. 11. Ioh 13. 18. Gen. 3. Act. 20. 10.

Thares

Now of theſe, that thus riſe, two ſorts there be: For, either they riſe againſt the very ſtate it ſelfe of Kings; the very authority, they exerciſe (that is) would have no Kings at all; ſaying with them, Quis eſt Dominus noſter, who is Lord over us (as much to ſay, as by their good will, none:) Or ſuch, as only riſe againſt their perſons, as he in the 20. Chapter, that ſaid, We have no part in David; and they in the Goſpell, that ſay, Nolumus hunc, We will not have this man. Rule, they would not have quite taken away, but not this perſon, to rule over them. Pſal. 12. 4. Chap. 20. 1. Luk. 19. 14.

Of the firſt ſort of theſe riſers, are the Anabaptiſts of our age; by whom, all ſecular juriſdiction is denied. No Law-makers they, but the Evangeliſts: No courts, but Presbyteries: no puniſhments, but Church-Cenſures. Theſe, riſe againſt the very eſtate of Kings: and that ſhould they find and feele, if they were once grown enough to make a partie.

A ſecond ſort there be, that are but buſtling themſelves to riſe; not yet riſen; at leaſt, not to this ſtep: but in a forwardneſſe they be; proffer at it, that, they doe. They that ſeeke to bring paritie, not into the common-wealth by no meanes; but only into the Church. All Pariſhes alike, every one abſolute, entire of it ſelfe. No dependencie, or ſuperioritie, or ſubordination. But this once being had, doe we not know their ſecond poſition? Have they not broached it long ſince? The Church is the houſe; the Common-wealth, but the hangings. The hangings muſt be made fit to the houſe, that is, the Common-wealth faſhioned to the Church: not the houſe to the hangings: No, take heed of that. And when they were taken with it, and charged with it, how ſlightly in their anſwer do they ſlip it over? Theſe, when they are got thus far may riſe one ſtep higher: and as Aaron, now muſt not; ſo (perhaps) neither muſt Moſes, then, exalt himſelfe above the Congregation, ſeeing that All Gods people are holy no leſſe than he. Num. 16. 3

Theſe two riſe againſt their States. Againſt their perſons, two other ſorts of perſons, both diſcontented. [1] But the one was, of ambition: as Abſalom here, that thought it was wonderfull great pitie, that al cauſes were not brought before him, conſidering how able a man he was for it, and the King being negligent in looking to his ſubjects griefe. But, when he ſpread a tent aloft, and did you know what, not to be told, and that in the ſight of all Iſrael; Sure, he that could commit that villanous act, in the eyes of all Iſrael. He that could charge Huſhai, as with a foule fault, for forſaking his friend, himſelfe; then being in armour againſt his owne father, was not ſo very fit a man to doe juſtice. No matter: ſo he took himſelf; that was enough, to riſe. [2] The other, out of revenge: the caſe of Bigthan and Thares (and of our two, as is thought.) They were angry at ſomewhat, it is not ſaid what, nor it skils not what, but, voluerunt inſurgere, riſe they would for it (that they would.) Theſe did not wiſh government quite taken away: only the Kings perſon they heaved at; Him, for ſome purpoſe, they muſt have needs out of the way. Chap. 15. 2. Chap. 16. 22. Chap. 16. 17. Eſter. 2. 21.

By this time we know the parties reaſonable well. Bee theſe they whom God, Angels, and Saints, hold for execrable? They, whom Cuſhi may pray againſt, and we with him? Theſe be they. It was Core, one of the crue, againſt whom Moſes prayed, they might be viſited with a ſtrange viſitation, and not dye the common death of other men. No more he did. It was Achitophel, another of them, againſt whom David penned the Pſalme of bitter imprecations. They of Meroz, whom the Angell giveth warrant, and charge both, to curſe; wherefore was it? Becauſe they came not to Numb. 16. 29.

helpe the LORD, that is, Debora, the Lords Lievtenant, againſt the forces of Madian. If to be curſed, becauſe they laid not their hand to help Him; much more (I trow) if they would ſeek to lay their hands on him, to miſchiefe and make him away. It was Iudas, hee was one of theſe againſt whom CHRIST cryed Va per quem. and it was the ſerpent, whom God curſed: and why, what was his fault? What, but that hee ſought to withdraw our parents from due ſubjection; to riſe againſt God, to bee Gods themſelves, and never acknowledge him, or any, for their ſuperiour. Theſe be they (certainly) againſt whom (God, Angels, and Saints approving it) we may ſay Cuſhi his prayer, every ſyllable of it. May? nay, ought; are even bound to it. Yet to give full ſatisfaction; that there be no ſtriving, but that all may ſay Amen to it, it ſhall not be amiſſe, if I may with your good favour, lay before you ſome reaſons, and thoſe ſo enforcing, that we ſhall hold our ſelves ſo bound, as that we cannot avoid, but yeeld to it. I care not much, if I keepe the number of Abſaloms darts: they are three.

Mat.14.21. Gen.3.14.

The reaſons of this curſing.

I Becauſe the enemies of God. Iud.5.31.

First, I hold it for cleere, if we knew any were Gods enemie, we would none of us make any queſtion, but ſay (with Cuſhi, we need not, it is ſet down to our hands) So periſh all thine enemies O Lord. So, how? Even as Siſera: little difference in effect, betweene him and Abſalom. Siſera periſhed with a naile driven into his head. Abſalom, with a dart thruſt through his heart. To the enemies of GOD, you ſee, we have warrant. But, they that riſe againſt the King, are GODS enemies: for, GOD and the King are ſo in a league, ſuch a knot, ſo ſtraight betweene them, as one cannot be enemie to the one, but he muſt be to the other. This is the knot. They are, by God, of or from God, for or inſtead of God. Moſes rod, Gods: Gideons ſword, Gods; Davids throne, Gods. In His place, they ſit; His Perſon they repreſent: they are taken into the fellowſhip of the ſame name; Ego dixi, hee hath ſaid it, and wee may be bould to ſay it, after him; They are Gods: and what, would wee more? Then muſt their enemies be Gods enemies. Let their enemies know then, they have to deale with God, not with them; it is His cauſe, rather than theirs: they; but His agents. It ſtandeth Him in hand; it toucheth him, in honour. Hee can no leſſe, than maintaine them, than hold their enemies, for his owne. Saint Paul is plaine, He that reſiſteth them, reſiſteth God: hee that, the regall power, the divine ordinance.

Rom.13.2.

The enditement was rightly framed (in judgement of all Writers) though it were miſ-applied, Naboth maledixit Deo & Regi; Naboth did neither, therefore it was evill applied; But, if he had done the one, he had done the other: and ſo it was truly framed. Even as he in the new Teſtament framed his confeſſion aright, I have ſinned againſt heaven, and againſt thee. For no man can treſpaſſe againſt a lawfull ſuperiour, but withall he muſt doe it againſt heaven firſt; and ſo he muſt confeſſe, if ever he have his pardon for it.

Luk.15.18.

But there is no more pregnant reaſon to prove, Gods enemies they be, theſe that riſe againſt Kings, than this; ye ſhall obſerve ſtill they are called the ſons of Belial, Belial Gods profeſſed enemie. Sheba is ſo called in expreſſe termes, in the next Chapter ſave one, that roſe up againſt David. And indeed, what was the drift of the firſt tentation, but only to have made Adam and Eve the adopted children of Belial, that is, to be under no yoke? not Gods; much leſſe, mans; to brooke no ſuperiour. They are all his, by adoption, that carrie ſuch minds. It cannot otherwiſe be. And if it were the Spirit of God, that fell on Amaſa when he ſaid, Thine are we O David, and on thy ſide thou ſon of Iſhai: what ſpirit could it be but of Belial, or whoſe ſon Sheba but his that cryed, We have no part in David, nor any portion in the ſon of Iſhai? if it were the finger of God that touched their hearts that went after Saul, their lawfull Liege Lord: whoſe claw muſt it be, the print whereof was in theirs, who roſe and went againſt him? Whoſe but Belials? Et quæ conventio Chriſti & Belial? Chriſt and Belial ſo out, ſo at odds, that no hope of ever agreeing them: Now then being the ſons of Belial; and they, and Belial their father, Gods enemies, make we any doubt, but we may ſay after the Holy Ghoſt, So periſh all thine enemies O Lord.

This

The one might be enough. But there were three darts in Abſaloms heart, one would have ſerved the turne; ſo, this one would ſuffice, but I will caſt yet a ſecond, and third at them, If then ſecondly, we knew any that were not only Hoſtis Dei, but hoſtis humani generis, would we yet doubt to pray, He might be as Abſalom? I truſt not: eſpecially, ſeeing wee ſhould therein but follow Gods owne example. Hee curſeth the Serpent, even for this cauſe, that he was enemie to the woman, and all her ſeed, and ſought the utter ruine of both. Thoſe that are ſuch, well may all men pray againſt them; for at all mens hands they well deſerve it. Now thus reaſoneth Saint Paul. Rulers not only come from GOD, but they come from him in particular; Tibi in bonum, for thy good, whoſoever thou art: Thy good, thou Nobleman, thou Gentle-man, thou Church-man, thou Merchant, thou Husband-man, thou Tradeſman: Thy good: (that is) for our good they come, and are ſent for all our good; for the generall good of us all. Us all: nay, even of all mankinde. Mankinde ſhould be as a Foreſt (ſaith Moſes) the ſtrong beaſts would devoure the weake; as a Fiſh-poole (ſaith Abakuk) the great fiſh devoure the ſmall, were it not for theſe. Without theſe mankinde would not continue. They then, that are enemies to them, mankindes enemies: and ſo, of the ſerpents ſeed certainly, to bee curſed with the ſerpents curſe; conteratur caput eorum.

2 The enemies of mankind.

Now then of this great Monarchie of Mankind, of the whole world, the ſeverall Monarchies of the world are eminent parts. What the eſtate of Kings is, in the whole; that is the perſon of every particular Prince, in his ſeverall ſoveraignty: David, in his of Iurie: Ours, in his of Great Britaine: the health and ſafety of the Kingdome, faſt linked with the Kings health and ſafety. The head of the Tribes (ſo is David called;) The light of Iſrael; Tu paſces, the Shepheard of the flocke; The Corner-ſtone of the building. I will content me with theſe. If the Head be deadly hurt, I would faine know, what ſhall become of the body? If the light be put out, is ought but darkneſſe to be looked for in Iſrael? Smite the Shepheard, muſt not the flock bee in perill? If the Corner-ſtone be ſhaken, will not both the wals feele a wrack? Verily, all our weale and woe dependeth on their well-fare, or decay. Therefore bleſſe wee them, and they that bleſſe them, be bleſſed: and they that ſet themſelves againſt them, accurſed even with the capitall curſe, the ſerpents, all our enemie; as the firſt of all; ſo the chiefe of all; as from Gods owne mouth.

To theſe two I add yet one more, and that by good warrant, both of the Old and New Teſtament; let them be confounded and turned backward (ſaith the Prophet) ſo many as have evill will at Sion; Vtinam abſcindantur (ſaith the Apoſtle) qui vos conturbant. Againſt them well may we pray, that maligne the peace and proſperitie of the Church: in which and for which we and all the world to pray; as that, for which, all, world and all was made, and is ſtill upholden: for, were the Church once gathered, the world diſſolves ſtraight. God is too high (as for any our good, ſo) for any our evill or enmitie to come neere him. He reckoneth of no enemies but His Churches. They, that perſecute her, perſecute him; they that touch her touch the apple of His eye. Now they that are enemies to David, are enemies to Sion: ſo neere neighbour-hood betweene David and Sion, the King and the Church, as there is between his Palace and the Temple, both ſtand upon two tops of one and the ſame hill. The King is Nutricius Eccleſiæ: If enemies to the Nurſe, then to the Child; it cannot otherwiſe be. Experience teacheth it daily, when the child hath a good nurſe, to take ſuch a one away, is but to expoſe the Child, to the evident danger of ſterving or pining away. I know not, men may entertaine what ſpeculations they will; but (ſure) in praxi, how much the Churches welfare hath gone by the good and bleſſed inclination of Kings, it is but too plaine. Socrates long ſince truly obſerved it in the beginning of the fifth booke of his ſtorie. Conſider me in the Common-wealth of the Iewes, theſe foure Kings immediately ſucceeding each the other; Iotham, Abaz, Ezekia, and Manaſſes: Conſider theſe foure Emperours in the Primitive Church, likewiſe in ſucceſſion; Conſtantine, Conſtantius, Iulian, and Iovinian: Conſider me here at home, the foure laſt Princes before his Majeſtie, and the waxing and waning; the alteration and alternation of religion, under them; forward and backward, backward and forward againe: and tell me, whether the King and the Church, have not reference, as I ſaid; and whether the Church have any greater enemies than ſuch as alien the minds of Kings, and make them heavie friends to their welfare and weldoing. Of ſuch then, ſafely may we ſay, Be they confounded, Be they, as the graſſe upon the houſe top, which withereth before hey-time (that is) let them come to untimely ends; let them be as Abſalom; or (as another Pſalme wiſheth ſuch kinde of people) like them that periſhed at Endor, and became like dung upon the earth. So then being [1] Gods enemies, [2] mankindes, and the [3] Churches; againſt the enemies of any one of theſe, the prayer were warrantable: how much more againſt them, that are enemies to all three? One naile ſerved Siſera, in his head: ſo would one ſpeare Abſalom in his heart, but he had three: not without a meaning. A morall alluſion they make of it: three were the faults he made: three the parties he highly offended, [1] God, [2] the State, [3] the Church. Enemie to all three: for every one, a dart. Each, deadly alone; but he had them all, to ſhew, he deſerved them all: and ſo they doe, that ſin Abſaloms ſin. The prayer (ſure) is good: Cuſhi prayed well: are all bound to ſay Amen to it.

II. Of the Text, as a prophecy.

But beſides that it is a prayer, Let them be: it is a prophecy too, They ſhall be. The tenor of the prayer we have heard: Let us ſee the ſucceſſe of the prophecie, what became of it; whether Cuſhi were a true Prophet, or no. So true, as from Moſes to Malachie, never any of the Prophets more true, in his foretelling, than he in this. All the enemies, all that roſe up againſt him, erant ſicut, were even ſo indeed.

Pitie it is, but that a good prayer ſhould be heard, and (as we ſaid) turne into the nature of a prophecy. They were three good prayers, we heard; there is none of all the three, but hath a Prophecy (that ſo it ſhould be) anſwering to the prayer, that ſo it might be. Againſt Gods enemies: the prayer, So periſh, &c. The prophecy, For Lo thine enemies O Lord, Lo thine enemies ſhall periſh; as if he ſaw it with his eyes, called others to ſee it with him; pointed at it with his finger, Lo, twice, once, and againe; (one Lo, not ſerve) ſo ſure he is that ſo it ſhall be. [2] Againſt the enemies of mankinde: The wiſh, Curſed be thou above every beaſt of the earth, the prophecie followeth in the neck of it, Ipſe conteret caput, One there is, ſhall bruiſe his head all to peeces. [3] Againſt the maligners of Sion: Let them be confounded, &c. That is the prayer: The Kingdome or Nation, that ſhall maligne Sion ſhall periſh, and utterly be deſtroyed; there is the prophecy. Now, that that is propheticall, in each of thoſe, is no leſſe verified in the Kings enemies, in whom they all meet.

Gen. 3. 14.15.

Pſal. 129.5.

Doe but, after this prophecy, enquire what became of them: aske but the queſtion. The King doth (here); in the forepart of the verſe: Is Abſalom ſafe, how doth he? He doth, as he deſerveth to doe. Ask, how the reſt, that after roſe againſt him: within a Chapter after, Sheba riſeth; how did he? Before the end of the Chapter, his head came over the wall. After him, Adonia was up and ſpake even broadly, Regnabo: What became of him? His end in blood. And (that which is ſtrange) with him roſe Ioab: he that took off Shebas head; he that threw theſe darts; and he that was the true man here, How ſped he? He was even drawn from the Altar (that, is no ſanctuary for traitors) and executed by Benaia. Could not take heed by Abſaloms example, but came to Abſaloms end. They all that ſought, that roſe to pluck him downe, whom God had exalted, they were ſlaine, all the ſort of them; were all, as a tottering wall, or as a broken hedge, which every man runnes over.

Chap. 20.22. 1 King. 1.3. 2.25. 1 Kings. 2.34. Pſal. 62.3.

But this judgement of God, was in none more conſpicuous, than Abſalom. A ſtreight charge was given by the King himſelfe, to have him ſaved: It would not ſerve, he was ſlaine for all that. And ſlaine by Ioab: one, before, that had highly favoured him, and beene a ſpeciall meanes to reſtore him to grace; even, by him, was he ſlaine notwithſtanding the Kings charge; and then ſlaine, when he made full account of the victory. For elſe he would have beene better horſed. Hee was on his Mule, now he never doubted the event, and yet was ſlaine. Sure Gods hand was in it, to rid the world of a traitour.

Chap. 18.9.

Neither

Neither was this a peculiar prophecy to King David alone. The prayer is ſaid, and the prophecy taketh hold of other, as well before, as ſince. Aske of Core, hee roſe againſt Moſes: How ſped he? He went to hell quick for it. Aske of Baana and Rechab that roſe againſt their Lord: Looke over the poole of Hebron; there, ſtand their quarters on poles. Aske of Bigthan and Thares, what of them? Fairely hanged at the Court-Gate. Time will not ſerve, to enquire of all. The ſhort is: all that were as Abſalom, came to his end. Some hanged, and their heart opened being yet alive (So was Abſalom:) and their bowels pluckt out, to make them like Iudas. Some their heads ſtrucken off, ſo was Sheba. Some quartered, and their hands feet and head ſet up on poles, that the Ravens might pluck out their eyes, as Baana and Rechab; that, upon them might come, all the puniſhments due to them, that riſe with Abſalom. For, all the puniſhments of traitours, as now they are in uſe with us, may ſeeme to have beene collected and drawne together, from thoſe ſeverall examples, that ſtand in the booke of God.

III. The prophecy perpetuall.

Num. 16. 23. 2 Sam 4 12. Eſter. 2. 23. Act. 1. 18. 2 Sam. 20. 2 Sam. 4. 12.

All to ſhew, that a King is Alkum, no riſing againſt him: Or, if any riſe, hee had better ſit ſtill. For, no ſooner riſe they up, but our Prophet ſtraight crieth: Riſe up, riſe up, and put on ſtrength, thou arme of the Lord, riſe up as in old time, in the generations of the world. Art not thou the ſame that didſt ſmite Abſalom by Ioab; and art not thou the ſame that didſt ſmite Ioab by Benaia.? That ſetteſt thy ſelfe ſtill to bring them downe, that riſe up againſt Alkum, againſt whom there is no riſing?

Prov. 30. 31. אלקום Eſay 51. 9.

For, Kings being from God (ſaith Gamaliel) we cannot ſet our ſelves againſt them, but we muſt be found (even) θεομαχοι to fight againſt God. Being ordained of GOD (ſaith Gamaliel his Scholler, S. Paul) to reſiſt them, is to reſiſt the ordinance of God; and as good put our ſelvs in the face of all the Ordinance in the Tower of London, as withſtand Gods ordinance. None might better ſay it, than he: it was told him from Heaven, when he was about ſuch another buſineſſe; perſecuting Chriſt in His Church (and Chriſt is perſecuted in His chiefe members, as well as His inferiour) he was told plainly, in ſo doing, he did but kick againſt the prick, His heeles might ake and run of blood, the prick not remove, but ſtand where it did ſtill. Therefore, as here Cuſhi, in the Old, ſo S. Paul, in the New, falleth to prophecy; they that reſiſt ſhall receive to themſelves damnation, is S. Pauls prophecy. And, a true prophecy, even as was Moſes of Core: That they ſhould not die the death of other men, but be viſited with ſome ſtrange extraordinary viſitation; but have their end in blood. All, as Cuſhi prayed they might, and propheſied they ſhould. And his prayer was heard, his prophecy came to paſſe, not a word of either fell to the ground.

Act. 5. 39. Rom. 13. 2. Act. 9. 5. 1 Rom. 13. 1. Numb. 16. 29.

Having now dealt with it as a prayer firſt; and then, as a prophecy; let us now ſee how it ſuiteth with the buſineſſe in hand, and whether the force and vigour of theſe have reached to us and our times.

And reacheth to our times.

It was with God no new thing (this) to reward ſuch as riſe up againſt Kings. Of that which is with him no new, but old (as old as David; nay, as Moſes) He giveth us new examples, every otherwhile, to ſhew, his eare is ſtill open to this prayer; and that His arme is ſtretched out to reach them ſtill. Yea, I dare be bold to ſay, there is no one of his promiſes hath ſo many ſeales hanging at it, by way of confirmation of it, as this hath: No one, ſo many judgements, upon record, as it. In every ſtory of every land, there is ſtill ſtanding ſome Gibbet or other, and their quarters hanging on it there ſtill, to put us in minde of the truth of Cuſhi's prophecy.

This very day yeeldeth us one of freſh memorie (but ſeven yeares ſince) wherein in our Soveraigne, God hath given a memorable example, of the hearing Cuſhies prayer, and the accompliſhing his prediction, not in one, but in a couple of Abſaloms. A couple of Abſaloms, I may well terme them; in many other points like him, but namely in theſe two: 1 Like, in their riſing: and 1 like in their fall. For, that Abſalom was a ſonne, and theſe but ſubjects, it altereth not the caſe much: Sonnes and ſubjects are both under one commandement, as Pater and Rex, both in one name [Abimelech] the name of the first Kings of Canaan. If under one, then under one curse: If they doe but speake evill, under Moses curse, in mount Ebal; if but looke upon them with a scornefull eye, under Salomons curse, that the Ravens pick those eyes out: The same, against a father, to reach much more to Abiam, Pater populi. (So did Salomon name his nephew;) Abiam, a father of Iuda; even as Debora, was a mother in Israel. In a word: what Noah might wish to a bad sonne (Cham;) and Elisha wish to a bad servant (Gehezi;) no cause in the world, but Cushi might wish the same to a bad subject. All is one case. This then breeds no unlikelinesse; and in all the rest, exceeding like.

Deut. 27. 15. Prov. 30. 17. 1 King. 15. 1. אבים Iudg. 5. 7. Gen 9. 25. 2 King. 5. 27.

1 As that young man (to keepe the words of the Text.) For, those were young men, too. Their yeares, not many. Not many: nay, so few, so greene, as it may well seem strange, that there could such inveterate malice and mischiefe be hatched, in so young yeares. As he, in that (first.)

2 As in yeares, so in malice; bloody-minded both. Said not Absalom to his Assasines, When I give you a signe, see you smite, kill him, feare not, have not I commanded you? Said not they the same to him, whom to that end, they had armed, and placed to do that wicked act? In that like, second.

2 Sam. 13. 28.

3 As in this malicious bloody mind; so in raking it up, and keeping it close, diverse years together. Not only (as Absalom in this) to say neither good nor bad: but in this too; to intreat the King, and all his companie to their house; to entertaine and feast him, and besides promise, and pretend, I know not what, and all to cover and conceal their divellish intent. In this like, thirdly: this young man, and these.

4 And not in this kinde only of outward dissembling; but in a worse kinde of religious hypocrisie. He made a religious vow; it lay on his conscience, he could not bee quiet, till he had got leave to goe pay it, and then, even then, went hee about all his villanie. And was it not so here? He, so holy; as to a Sermon he must needs; to Gods word; no remedie, he might not be from it in any wise: and that, when he trusted, the deadly blow should have beene given. In this, like.

2 Sam. 15. 8.

5 And yet fifthly, the same man, like Absalom, when he was in Gessur. Absalom in Gessur, and this in Italy, as devout at his Masses then, as he was here zealous for his exercise of the Word. Alike at both, as they served his turne. Like in this too.

6 And, last of all, in this too: that for all this goodly maske of religion, when he saw his treachery was discovered, as Absalom blew his trumpet, so he was content to uncase himselfe, and to rush forth and appeare for such as he was. In which act, he perished, as Absalom: got in his heart, that Absalom got in his: only that was a dart, and this was a dagger.

7 For (sure) being thus like in their conditions, and in so many circumstances besides, pitie but they should be like in their ends too: And they were. And, that so they were, is the matter of the publike gratulation of this day, of the day of the week all the yeare long; of this, the day it selfe, specially above all: that the prayer and prophecy of Cushi tooke place; his prayer heard, his prophecy fulfilled, no lesse in these young men, than in that; no lesse in the enemies of our King Iames, than in his Lord King David.

In the treasons, little difference or none: in the deliverie, some difference; but, all for the better. For first, in farre greater perill was his Majestie, far greater than ever was David. 1. David was but pursued: but he was even caught, and within (I know not how many) lockes and doores. 2. David was all the while without the reach of any blow: how neere the blow was to his brest, it is able to make any man chill, but to thinke. 3. David had his Worthies still about him: The King was in torcular i solus, in the very presse alone, & vir de gentibus, and not one of his people to stand by or assist him. 4. That David was delivered, it must be ascribed to the providence of God; but, in that it was a fought field, his armie must take part of the praise. It was another manner of providence, that was shewed here; of a more neare regard, of a more strange operation. I dare confidently affirme it (I may well well I am ſure:) Gods hand was much more eminent in this, than in that: praiſed be his name for it. 5. And laſt of all, David (here) heard of his delivery by Cuſhi. Ours ſaw it himſelf: and yet (I cannot tell well, what to ſay) the danger was ſo great, and the feare muſt needs be accordingly, whether it had not beene to be wiſhed, that ſome Cuſhi had rather brought tydings of it, than he ſeene it himſelf. But ſince it pleaſed God, ſo from Heaven to ſhew Himſelfe in it (if ever He did, in any) and though with ſuch feare, yet without any harme, dulcis laborum præteritorum memoria.

David heard his; Segnius irritant: Ours ſaw his, oculis ſubjecta fidelibus; the impreſſion of joy was the greater, and did worke both the ſtronger and the longer. The ſtronger, in a votive thankſgiving then undertaken: The longer, in the continuall renewing it, not only from yeare to yeare, but from week to weeke all the yeare long.

And what ſhall we ſay then? What but as Ahimaaz before at the 28. Ver. Bleſſed be the Lord his God that hath this day given ſentence for him, upon thoſe, that roſe up againſt him. And then ſecondly, with Cuſhi, So be it to all the reſt, as it was with theſe. Though it be to goe into mount Ebal, let us not feare, God goeth before us, and ſaith it before us; let us not make danger, to goe after, and to ſay after him. 1 They bee His enemies, ſo proved: ſay we boldly, So periſh all thine enemies O Lord. 2 They bee enemies to mankinde, in being enemies to them, by whom order and peace is kept in mankind, and without whom there would in mankind be nought but confuſion: The Serpents curſe be upon them, and let their heads be trod to peeces. 3 They by Sions malignant enemies: let them be as graſſe upon the houſe top, as thoſe that periſhed at Endor, and became dung for the earth. Let them be as ſtubble ſcattered, as wax melted, as ſmoke driven, no man can tell whither. Let them periſh; periſh, as Siſera, and Oreb, as Abſalom. Iaels hammer, on their heads; Gideons axe, on their necks; Ioabs dart, in their hearts. One, nay three: one, for the enemies of God: another, for the enemies of mankind, a third, for the enemies of Sion. Let Cuſhi be both Prieſt and Prophet; this his prayer never returne emptie, this his Prophecy never want ſucceſſe. And Let the King ever rejoyce in thy ſtrength (O Lord) Let him be exceeding glad of thy ſalvation. Ever thruſt thou back his enemies, and tread them downe that riſe up againſt him. Let their ſwords goe thorow their owne hearts, and their miſchiefe light upon their own heads. Let His eare ſtill heare His deſire upon His enemies, and His eye ſtill ſee the fall of the wicked that riſe up againſt Him. Be he as David; we, as Cuſhi: they, as Abſalom. God by whom this prayer was allowed, receive and grant it: God by whom this prophecy was inſpired, make it good, and fulfill it, as this day, ſo for ever: Even for ever and ever for his Chriſts ſake. Pſal. 121.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT HOLDENBIE, ON THE V. OF AVGVST, A. D. M.DC. VII.

I SAM. Chap. XXVI. Ver. VIII. IX

Dixitque Abiſhai ad David, &c.

Then ſaid Abiſhai to David: God hath cloſed thine enemie into thine hand this day: now therefore, I pray thee let me ſmite him once with a ſpeare to the earth, and I will not ſmite him againe.
And David ſaid to Abiſhai, Deſtroy him not: For who can lay his hand on the Lords Annointed, and be guiltleſſe.

Here is ſome-body here in the Text, in danger to be deſtroyed; and the partie is the Lords Annointed, King Saul. The matter is come to hard hold: Deſtroy him, and deſtroy him not. Abiſhai would have it done: David at no hand; he cries Ne perdas. But the end was, Saul was ſaved. Thus lyeth the caſe here in the Text.

And was not the very ſame the caſe of this day? There was ſome body in as great danger to be deſtroyed, this day. It was Chriſtus Domini, Gods Annointed here before us. The caſe was come to the very ſame plunge: Perdas; ne perdas; a King, or no King. Some were of Abiſhais minde: GOD was faine to ſupply Davids; there was none elſe. But bleſſed bee GOD, all ended in Ne perdas. And againe, bleſſed bee GOD who then alſo verified the latter part of the verſe, that None ſhall ſeeke to lay hands on the Lords Annointed; but they ſhall be found, and handled, as guiltie perſons. For, ſo they were; and their blood was upon their owne heads. Both caſes ſuiting ſo well, this Text might well ſerve for this day.

on

There is, in the former verſe, a motion made by Abiſhai for a blow at Saul, thus: See, &c. There be three perillous motives in it: 1 Inimicum, He is your enemy; 2 Concluſit; here is an opportunitie; 3 ſine me, the act ſhall not be yours, let me alone, I will take it upon me. The Diviſion I.

There is in the latter, Davids utter diſlike of the motion, thus: Deſtroy not, &c. Wherein, firſt there is a double charge to the contrary: 1 One ad oculum; Deſtroy him not: 2 The other riſing out of the reaſon, yet plaine enough. He had ſaid, Deſtroy him not: Not that; Quis enim miſit manum? for a leſſe matter than that, you may not doe, not lay your hands, not ſo much: which is (as it were) a ſurcharge to the former; or (if I may ſo ſay) a ſecond edition of Ne perdas. No talke of deſtroying: ſo far from that, as no ſtirring the hand toward it. II.

1. Then upon this double charge, followeth a double reaſon; two retentives (as it were) againſt the firſt motion. 2 He is the Lords Annointed: that, may ſtay you, if you bee a good ſubject.

2 Be you good ſubject or no, if that will not, this muſt; You ſhall not be guiltleſſe. If not guiltleſſe, then guilty: and what becomes of them that be guilty, we al know. That is, do it not: if you do, it will bring you to guiltie, or not guiltie: if you lay your hand, you ſhall hold up your hand for it: it is as much as your life is worth.

3 Thirdly, it is not indeed, Non eris inſons. For if it had beene ſo, it might have beene thought to have reached to Abiſhai, to his particular, and no further. But he choſe rather to utter it by Quis? For, by asking Quis? Who ſhall? He plainely implieth, Ne quis unquam, that none ever may: Not he, not Abiſhai; nay, not any. So, there is a double charge: 1 Deſtroy not, 2 lay not your hand. A double retentive: 1 He is Gods Annointed; 2 You ſhall not be guiltleſſe: 3 and a Quis upon all, to binde all, and to ſhew, the charge is generall without exception.

1 In all which, there is a protection for Saul the firſt King, and all after him, not only from perditio, deſtroying, giving of the blow; but from miſſio manus, ſtirring of the hand.

2 There is a neck-verſe for Abiſhai, and all undertakers in that kind; they are all caſt, they are all found guiltie, yet they come to the barre; they are attainted, every one.

3 There is an Euge for David: who ſheweth himſelfe through all. 1 In his charge (deſtroy not) a good ſubject: 2 In his reaſon (He is Gods Annointed) a good Divine: 3 in his ſentence (Non eris inſons) a good Iudge: 4 in his challenge (Quis mittet? a ſtout champion, to any that ſhall maintaine the contrary.

4 But for that, beſides this reaſon in the Text (of inimicum tuum,) there have beene other reaſons framed in our dayes to the ſame end; and all of them in Saul, the partie in the Text: we will make them in too, to rule this caſe once for all. For Sauls caſe will be found to have in it, all that can be alledged, why any King ſhould be, if any King might be touched. All (I ſay) will be found in him: But, he for all them, may not be touched: therefore none may.

5 And this done, we will come (as the duty of the day requireth) to lay theſe caſes, caſe to caſe; ours of the day, to this in the Text. Where we ſhall ſee, that wee have as great cauſe; nay, of the twaine, the greater cauſe of gratulation, for the happie Ne perdas of this day.

I. Abiſhai's Motion.

THis is Abiſhai's motion. There be three motives in it: 1 the partie is your enemie. 2 God hath ſent you opportunitie. 3 I will take it upon me. Enmitie makes us willing to take revenge: opportunitie, able; and if another will doe the act, the rather for that; for then we ſhall beare no blame: Three ſhrewd motives, where they meet: and here they meet all in one. Let us weigh them: which I doe the more willingly, becauſe all three meet alſo in this dayes attempt. 1 Enmitie, that was the colour, an old wrong; ſo, there were in both, the ſame pretence. 2 And the ſame advantage in both. For, the King was ſhut up indeed, and that literally. 3 And he that was at Church, he ſhould not have done it, not he. Abiſhai ſhould have done it, he in the chamber. Of theſe motives then.

1 The firſt motive. Inimicum tuum 1 A deadly enemie. Chap. 18. 15. Chap. 18. 11. 19. 20.

He is an enemie. But not every enemie is to be deſtroyed, but they that would deſtroy us. All enmitie is not deadly fewd: Sauls was; nothing would ſerve him but Davids life; and many wayes he ſought indirectly. 1 By matching him with his owne daughter, and laying on him, for a dowrie, ſo many fore-skins of the Philiſtims, ſo he might fall by their hands. 2 That would not doe: he went to it directly; 1 at three ſeverall times caſt his javelin at him, to have nailed him to the wall. 2 When he eſcaped him ſo: then gave he expreſſe charge openly to all men to kill him, where ever they met him. 3 When that would not be, ſent to his houſe for him, when word came, he was ſicke in his bed, bad bring him bed and all, that he might ſee him ſlaine in his owne preſence. Was there ever the like? who would not have beene quit of ſuch an enemie?

Chap. 19. 1. 19. 15.

2 An enemie Without cauſe. Pſal. 7. 3.

It may be, there was cauſe why: and then it holds not. Nay, no cauſe. To God he proteſts, Saul without any cauſe, was his enemie. For, no cauſe he gave him to bee his enemie; he never hurt him: But great cauſe to have been his good Lord, he had many wayes done him good ſervice. Not to ſpeake of his Harpe (wherewith hee had rid him of many a furious fit of melancholy, or a worſe matter:) with his ſling, it cannot be denyed, he did him, and the whole Realme good ſervice, in the overthrow of Golias, and tooke away the rebuke from Iſrael, Yea many times after, put his ſoule in his hands (as Ionathan pleaded for him) that is, ventered his life to do him ſervice in his warres, and ever with good ſucceſſe; and yet for all this ſought his life. And who would ſave the life of ſuch an enemie?

Chap. 16. 23. Chap. 17. 49. Chap. 19. 5.

3 An enemy not to be won as out of envie. Chap. 18. 6.

Yes, there may be hope to winne an enemie, and in that caſe he would not be deſtroyed. Nay, no hope of ever winning Saul. He was an enemie out of envie, and they will never be wonne more. From the time, the fond women made that fooliſh rime of a thouſand and ten thouſand hee could never abide to looke right on him. Envie was the matter; that, is the dangerous enmitie, that never will be pacified. Well ſaith Salomon, Anger is fierce, and hatred is cruell, but who ſhall ſtand before envie? As who ſhould ſay there be meanes, to ſatisfie both thoſe: But the enemie from envie, no appeaſing him, no hope ever to do it. If ought would, when he ſaved his life at the cave, and ſhewed by cutting a ſhred from his mantle, hee might have gone further if hee would; Saul himſelfe confeſt, it was a great favour: yet that would not winne him; he ſought his life ſtill: And even after this here, yet he ſought it ſtill. There was no hope to appeaſe him. And who then would not make ſure of ſuch an enemie? Verily if any enmitie might have ſerved, here it was.

Prov. 27. 4. Chap. 24. 18. 20.

But there is yet a worſe enmitie than all theſe. Saul was not only an enemy to David; but Sauls life, an enemie to Davids riſing. David was, in reverſion (wee know:) So, Saul ſtood in his way. There was not onely the ſting of revenge; but the edge of ambition, to helpe this motion forward. It was but occidamus eum; here he

he is, kill him and the inheritance is ours, all is ours. Any other enemies ſpare, and ſpare not; but, theſe that ſtand in our light, away with them. It made Abimelech not to ſpare his owne brethren; nor Abſalom, his Father; nor Athalia, her children. Sure, he that weighs it well, that at one blow he might have rid himſelfe of ſuch an enemy, and withall have gained the crowne, will wonder, he let not the blow proceed. Now, lay them together: [1] An enemie, ſuch an one, ſo deadly; [2] ſo without cauſe; [3] ſo without all hope of appeaſing, [4] ſuch a ſtop to his fortunes: who would have ſtayed Abiſhai's hand.

Iud. 9. 5.
2 King. 11. 1.

This is enough to give his appetite an edge: but, we lack opportunity to do it; and want of opportunity ſaves many an enemies life. Men muſt deale wiſely, and forbeare, till they finde him handſomely, at ſome good advantage. Nay, it is now growne to be good Divinity, rebus ſic ſtantibus, to be as gentle as David; and Ne perdas is good doctrine. But, as ſoone as time ſerves and ſtrength, if we get him once within locks, penned up, and in our power, then doe as we ſee cauſe, deſtroy him and ſpare not. So that, upon concluſit eum ever ſtayeth our concluſion. Why here now, concluſit eum. It was night: Saul lay all wearie aſleepe, in a dead ſleep, he and all about him. David and Abiſhai came and went; ſaid what they would; took what they would; none waked or knew of it. It might have beene done ſafely, there was none to reſiſt them: and been carried cloſely, none to deſcrie them. An opportunity it was, and a faire one.

The II. Motive.
Concluſit Deus

1 It was night, a faire opportunity.

And (as it might ſeem) of GOD's owne ſending. It was perillouſly put in (that) of Abiſhai, Concluſit Deus; that it was GODS doing, ſure: it was the ſleep of GOD was fallen on them: none awake; all aſleepe; watch and all. They might ſtay all the dayes of their life, and GOD never ſend the like againe. What now?

2 Of Gods ſending (as it might ſeem)

Though David wanted no courage to be revenged on an enemy, nor wiſedome to diſcerne this opportunity; yet, for his reputation, he muſt not ſoile his hands: but poſſibly, if ſome other would take it upon him, he would not be much againſt it. Why, it was undertaken by Abiſhai, that too: he ſhall goe his way, and doe nothing to it: Sine me, you ſhall beare no blame, let that be upon me; you ſhall go to Church and ſing Pſalmes, and heare the Sermon, and never appeare in it. What now? I know not what can be required more. Thus you ſee the motives: Now, what ſaith David?

3
Sine Me.

Nay firſt, what ſaith Saul? Can we have a better Judge than him in this caſe? Et inimici noſtri ſint judices, an enemy to be Judge in his own cauſe? If you will know, what he ſaith; He it is, that (in the XXIV. Chapter, XX.) ſaith thus. Who ſhall finde his enemie at ſuch an advantage, and let him goe free: As much to ſay, Not any; Sure, not he. But if he, or many another had found David, as David did him, in the Cave, he would have cut his skirts ſo cloſe, as he would have made him have bled in the reines of his back; or if he had taken him (as he did Saul here) aſleepe, he would have ſet him out of that ſleepe into another, a perpetuall ſleepe, and made him ſure enough for ever waking more. This is Sauls doome, from his own mouth. And indeed, hæc eſt via hominis, with fleſh and bloud theſe motives would have wrought. They did not with David: what ſaith he? theſe motives move him not.

II.
Davids diſlike

For all this, all this notwithſtanding, Ne perdas, ſaith he. And firſt, mark; he denieth none of his three motives, [1] that Saul was his enemy; [2] or that the time ſerved fitly; [3] or that the colour was good: but, granting all theſe, for all our enmity, for all this opportunity, for all your colourable offer to ſave mine honeſty; for all this, Deſtroy him not.

1
The firſt charge: Ne perdas.

Secondly, Marke, it is not negando, a bare deniall, Non eſt faciendum: but, with an imperative, with authority, Ne feceris; ſtraightly charging and commanding him not to be ſo hardy, as to do it. Et eſt efficatior vetandi ratio quàm negandi; by Ne, than by Non: The imperative negative is moſt effectuall.

And thirdly that this is not the firſt time: once before, he had done the like: and Iteratio præſupponit deliberationem. And indeed, there is a myſtery in this ſame [Sine me] of Abiſhai. They had had him once before at like advantage, in the Cave; (and will you but obſerve, how it went then; it is well worthy your obſerving.) Then they were at David, to have done it himſelfe, Deſtroy Him you: What was his anſwer? Who I? GOD forbid, never move it, I will never doe it. Now then, here at this, Abiſhai, knowing by the former, it was in vaine to move him to doe it, he offers to be the doer: It ſhall be none of your act; Sine me: What anſwer now? No, nor you; See you doe it not. Perdas (ſaith Abiſhai) before: Non perdam, ſaith David, Perdam (ſaith Abiſhai) now: Ne perdas, ſaith David. So, he will neither doe it himſelfe, nor ſuffer it to be done. The ſhort is: Neither waking, as at firſt; nor ſleeping, as now: neither by day, as in that; nor by night, as in this: neither by himſelfe, nor by other, will David indure to doe it, or to have it done. But, in the one and the other, firſt and laſt, ſtill and ever, Ne perdas (ſaith David:) Saul muſt not be deſtroyed.

4. Yea, ſo far was he after this, from forethinking this ſpeech, or wiſhing it unſaid, that he pleaſed himſelfe in this Ne perdas ſo, that not content to have ſaid it, he made a Pſalme of it, to ſing himſelfe, and all Iſrael with him; and by ſinging it, to ſing their duty in this point, into all their mindes and memories. A ſigne, the words were good, he would beſtow a dittie and tune upon them, as if he glorified in them. Yea, to make them the more memorable, that they might never be loſt, he hath framed diverſe other Pſalmes to the ſame tune. You may turn to the 58.59.75. You ſhall finde all their titles, to the tune of Ne perdas; that ſo, all that then were, and all that were to come might know, how good a ſpeech he took it to be; how meet to be ſaid, and ſung, of all ages.

5 And what would ye more? Not theſe two only, ſaid, and ſung; but in the verſe following, takes his oath, and ſweares to it: As the Lord liveth (ſaith he) GODS hand may, but mine ſhall never be upon him: and his day may come; but, not a day ſooner for me. So, that, he ſaid no more in this; than he meant to ſweare to.

2 The Reaſon, or 11. charge. Ne mannm mittas.

But now to come to looke into the reaſon: we ſhall finde, he goeth further than ſo, than Not deſtroying. For being to give a reaſon of Ne perdas, keeping the rule, he ſhould now have gone on with it, as he begun, and ſaid, Quis enim perdidit? For who ever deſtroyed a King? He doth not ſo: That (as it ſeemeth) would not ſerve his turn: he changeth his verb now, and ſaith, Quis enim manum miſit? Who hath but put forth his hand? As if he had given too much ſcope, in ſaying no more, but deſtroy not. Indeed, it was well ſpied; it muſt be ſtopped, before it come to deſtroying, if it be come to the deed once, we are all undone; Ne perdas is not enough. Much miſchiefe may be; at leaſt much feare, and fright (as this day there was) and yet, no deſtruction.

To make ſure work then, ſo farre is he from perdas, as he will not allow manum mittas. By which denying the latter, the former is put paſt all doubt. If the hand be ſtayed, no blow can be given: if order be taken for one, the other will follow of it ſelfe. You may not deſtroy; for, you may not ſtirre your hand, is a good conſequent.

And ſure, GODS care, in this point, is worthy all obſervation; it deſcendeth to ſuch minutes: here in this place we have two reſtraints together, [1] Deſtroy not; [2] and (which is more) lay no hand. In another place, he goeth yet further, Touch not mine Annointed; there needs no hand to that, the finger will ſerve. And yet further in another place, Ne ſurgas, Riſe not out of your place; or (as the Pſalme expreſſeth it) lift not up your heele: (that is) ſtirre not hand nor foot, to any ſuch end. Men may ſtirre their foot, and not riſe; and riſe, and not touch; and touch, but Pſal. 105.15. Prov. 30. 31.

lay no hands; and lay the hands on, and not destroy. But, GOD's meaning is from the first to the last, to restraine all: To have all so farre from destroying, as not to lay your hand; nay, not touch with your finger; nay, not so much as rise, or stirre the foot: but keep every joynt quiet, from any the least quetching in this matter of Ne perdas. To go about to do it, is as much as to do it.

We heare this charge: but all this while we see not the Retentive, that holds him so, that all Abishais motives could not move him. He tels us now, what it was: CHRISTUS DOMINI. In which word, is the solution of Abishais argument, thus. That his military Maxime (destroying an enemy) which he and many one else in the world take to be universall, is not so. It admits exceptions divers; but among the rest, and above the rest, this; if the party be CHRISTUS DOMINI, it holds not. There is more retentive force in CHRISTUS DOMINI, to keepe him alive; than there is motive in Inimicus tuus, to destroy him. This is his answer. And it is under one, both a solution of Abishais argument; and a new one propounded by David, to conclude his part, thus. The LORDS Annointed is not to be touched: (GODS owne expresse words, Touch not mine Annointed:) But Saul, what termes soever he stand in of amity or enmity, GODS Annointed he is: Therefore, no touching him. And I observe this, that he maketh choice of CHRISTUS DOMINI, for his medius terminus, rather than Dominus Rex, or any other; rather of GODS Annointed, than of his Liege-Lord the King. (Yet there is force in them too; but nothing such, as in this.) To the Sanctuarie he goeth, as to the surest place, and from thence fetcheth this terme of the Lords Annointed, and so makes the matter surer, as he thinketh. For, when all is done, from that place it commeth, that maketh both their Callings, and Persons sacred, and holy: therefore, not without sacriledge to be violated; nay, not to be touched. For, such is the nature of holy things, not to be touched; I say, not by any enemy; no, not in warre. For, so we see, David is displeased with the Philistims, for so dealing with Saul, as if he had not beene Annointed with oyle; as who say, it was their duties to have spared him, even in that respect.

I
The first Retentive: Christum Domini.

Agg. 2. 13.
2 Sam. 1. 21.

And sure a high terme it is, and not sleightly to be passed over. In another place he calleth them GOD's; here, CHRISTUS DOMINI: So, they participate with the name of GOD, and with the name of CHRIST, Annointed; and if they be Annointed, it is with the HOLY GHOST and power from above. Which all shew a neare alliance between GOD and them, between Christ and them, the Holy Ghost and them, so as, they are not to be harmed the least way, if GOD, or Christ, or the Holy Ghost can keep them from it.

Acts 10. 38.

And this Retentive is strong enough, where there is any sense of Religion. But, it is to be doubted, Abishai, and some besides him, have no great feeling that way, and so not capable of this. What care they for Samuel or his horne of oyle? It must not come out of the Sanctuary, it must come from the Barre and the Bench, that must prevaile with them. Tell them of Non eris insons, Guilty or not Guilty, and then you say somthing. We said before, there is no more effectuall way to deny, than to forbid; and, it is true, Nec efficacior vetandi ratio, quàm pœnâ propositâ, No way of more force to forbid, than set a penalty on it: specially, the great penalty of all, death. And yet, death a Souldier careth not so much for neither, except it be mors sontica, a malefactors death, and the chiefe malefactors, the traitors death, to be drawne and dragged from his place, as [a] Ioab; hanged, as [b] Bigthan; His bowels pulled out, (to suit him to [c] Iudas, whose gushed out of themselves;) To have his heart opened, yet being alive, as [d] Absalom; His head chopped off, as [e] Sheba; and it and his quarters hanged up, as [f] Baana, and Rechabs were: To have [g] their lands and lively-hoods seazed on, and given to strangers; [h] Their issue miserable for their sakes: [i] To be damnate memoriæ, their name, and memory as a curse: (which three are set downe in the hundreth and ninth Psalme, the Psalme against treacherie.) Tell Abishai of this, and this may perhaps stay him.

And

And to ſay truth, this was no more than needfull; without it, all that was ſaid, might have been thought to have had but rationem conſilii & non præcepti; to have been ſpoken by way of good honeſt adviſe, but to have beene no penall or capitall law. Gently ſaid of David, Ne perdas; And well done of Abiſhai, to forbeare; but, no neceſſity in it. Therefore he tels them, Theſe words [Ne perdas] are a binding precept: and that ſo, as if they be tranſgreſſed, they will beare an action; yea, an enditement; that who ſo breaketh them, Non erit inſons. And Non erit inſons are judiciall words, and this they import; That, not only they may be arraigned; but, that no Queſt can acquit them, or finde them not guilty: that by no Booke, they can; that by this book, they cannot be ſaved. But, if they ſtretch forth their hands againſt the Lords Annointed, their necks muſt ſtretch for it; and being found guilty, they muſt be dealt with as thoſe that are ſo found; and upon them muſt come all that is written in this book, which yer-while we recounted.

And yet, Non erit inſons goeth further. For, ſuppoſe ſome of them ſhould happen not to be brought to the barre, it ſhall not ſerve; for all that, Non erit inſons, ſtill GOD will not hold them guiltleſſe; He will not ſo leave them; but (rather than there ſhould not be holden) hold an Aſſize Himſelfe, and bring them to the end of guilty perſons, all the ſort of them. Heaven ſhall do it by lightning [a] (as Pſal. 144.) or the earth do it by ſwallowing up (as [b] Core;) or their owne friend ſhall do it (as [c] Ioab;) or their owne beaſt (as [d] Abſalom;) or their owne ſelves hang themſelves (as [e] Achitophel;) or burne themſelves (as [f] Zimri.) If they will not ſay Ne perdas to Chriſtus Domini, Chriſtus Domini ſhall ſay perdas to them, and ſend them all to their owne place, the pit of perdition, ſo many as will not ſay Ne perdas, to the Lords Annointed. It was not for nought, that David ſaid to him (2 Sam. 1.) How waſt thou not afraid to do it? There is (ſure) matter of feare in it, every way, to ſtay them: feare of GOD, in Chriſtus Domini, to move David, feare of the Gallowes, in Non eris inſons, to move Abiſhai.

3 Abiſhais own confeſſion. Verſe 9.

But upon all this, would it not do well, if we had Abiſhais owne confeſſion given in evidence againſt himſelfe? That (I ſuppoſe) would take up the matter quite. We have it, 2 Sam. 16. There, in a caſe onely of looſeneſſe in the tongue, where Shemei let go certaine railing ſpeeches againſt David, could Abiſhai ſay, What ſhall this foule-mouthed curre thus be ſuffered to ſpeak againſt the Lords Annointed? and no remedy, he would needs have gone and fetched his tongue and head and all. Yea, after this returne in peace, when King David had, upon Shemeis ſubmiſſion, given him his pardon, Abiſhai pleaded hard, to have it called back, and would needs have him die for it; and well worthy he was. And all was but for miſit linguam: and Abiſhai himſelf is here laying hands, violent hands, on the Lords Annointed; a worſe matter by farre. So that upon the matter, Abiſhai is judged out of his own mouth, and David juſtified by him, in his Non eris inſons. There are your two Retentives: [1] the firſt for good ſubjects; [2] the latter for whomſoever.

3 The generality of the charge. Quis erit inſons?

Now, leſt any might conceive, this is but a caſe of inſtance; holds in this particular, but extends not to all; ſome body, in ſome caſe, may doe it for all this, therefore is it, he carrieth it along through all, with his Quis? to tell us, his meaning is, That not onely Abiſhai, but that Ne quis perdat, Ne quis manum mittat; that, none at all deſtroy, none lay hands at all: that his Ne is generall without exception of any.

And in this, even his manner of denying, his figura dictionis, the tenor of his ſpeech is ſuch, as I dare make a note of it. There be diverſe wayes of denying, one more full and forcible than another: but of all, the way by interrogative, is holden the fulleſt, and moſt of force. To have ſaid, None did ever attempt it, which was not guilty; this had been a deniall, but a calme one. But to ſay: Who ever went about it, but he was found guilty? there is more life and vigour in it, by a great deale. Indeed, of all Negatives, the ſtrongeſt, the moſt peremptory, is by Quis? For it is not a bare Negative; but a Negative with a challenge: ſending a challenge to any, if he can for his life, to ſhew one, that was holden innocent in that caſe. They call it the triumphant Negative; as bearing it ſelfe confident, that none can riſe up againſt it: Who? (that is) ſhew, if ever any ſuch had peace, if ever any were reputed innocent; As much to ſay as, never was there any, never. If there were, name him, bring him forth; but that you cannot: therefore Quis fuit inſons? maketh the caſe cleare, and paſt all queſtion. So you ſee, David told us of Chriſtus Domini, as it were in his Ephod, as a Prophet: Then went he into his long robe, and told us Non erit inſons, as a Iudge: And now he is in his armour, as a Challenger, with Quis unquam? to challenge any, that holdeth the contrary.

And his challenge will be taken; and there be, that hold the contrary, in our age; and that dare ſtep forth, and make a queſtion of it for all this: or rather, make no queſtion at all of it, but can tell David, both who may lay his hand on, to deſtroy GODS Annointed; and who ſhall acquit, abſolve, and make them innocent, that ſo doe.

Who ſhall? Quis? marrie quiſquis, any whoſoever, being warranted. And who ſhall warrant him? That ſhall the High Prieſt, by his laſt cenſure.

Theſe fellowes would not ſtick to tell Abiſhai, a cleane contrary tale to that of Davids deſtroy not, ſaith he. Go to, ſay David what he will, or what he can; we ſay, deſtroy him: what, if he be? Yea, though he be the Lords Annointed. You ſhall be guilty then certainly, ſaith David. What ſay they? Say they thus: You ſhall not be guilty, you may do it, we will Abſolve you? (that were too much:) No; but you ſhall merit by it; you ought to doe it: we will Saint you for ſo doing. This is not matter of talk; we know it hath been done.

Quis, who? A Iacobine lay his hand: Yea, hand and knife, and thruſt it into the body of GODS Annointed: Yea, annointed with the oyle that came downe from heaven (as they tell us) ſent purpoſely to annoint the French Kings and make them GODS Annointed κατ' ἐξοχὴν. What, and not guilty? Not guilty: yea, and hardly ſcaped from being a Saint, if the Cardinals faith had failed as well as the Popes did; and if they had not kept S. Peters Succeſſor from erring. Be not we fallen into ſtrange times, wherein David muſt be driven to recant, and Abiſhai prove the Prophet? and in which (as if there were no ſuch verſe as this, in the Bible) the illuſion of errour is growne ſo ſtrong with ſome, as they will rather them ſelves be deſtroyed, than ſay, the Lords Annointed is not to be deſtroyed.

Sauls caſe a ruling caſe for Ne perdas.

I will do them no wrong: They will ſay, this Text is enough to condemne this dayes attempt, it commeth full home to that caſe. It was upon Inimicum tuum: in which caſe of private revenge, themſelves hold it cleare, quòd non, as well as we. But when they diſpenſe with Ne perdas, it is upon other grounds: upon miſgovernment, or (to ſpeak as they do) tyrannie; upon uſurping power in matters Eccleſiaſticall: upon bloudy perſecution, and that of GOD's Prieſts; and theſe are not in the Text. Yes they are in him in the Text, concerning whom this Ne perdas was given, every one: and yet Ne perdas ſtands for all that. And this I ſay, howſoever Abiſhai did look upon Saul, but with a ſouldiers eye, and ſaw nothing in him but an enemy, to move him, to deſtroy him; if ſome of theſe quick and ſharp-ſighted Abiſhai's had had the looking into him, they would have ſpied in him other manner of matter, to have reſolved him meet to be made away: they would have found him, not Davids enemy onely, but an enemy to GOD, and all goodneſſe; and returne him culpable of all thoſe faults, which they uſe to inſiſt on, when they write their bookes to that end.

And I verily think, GOD in this firſt example, of his firſt King over his owne people, hath purpoſely ſuffered them all to fall out, and to be found in him; even all that ſhould fall out in any King after him, to inforce their poſition: that ſo we might finde them anſwered to our hands.

Notwithſtanding his Miſgovernment and tyranny.

To touch them in order. They would eaſily have quarrelled at Sauls miſgovernment. Not at the firſt: he then, was a milde, and a gracious Prince. Never came there there from any Princes mouth, a more princely ſpeech, than the firſt ſpeech, he is recorded to have ſpoken, Quid populo quòd flet? What ayles the people to complaine? A ſpeech worthy everlaſting memory, ſo they complaine not without cauſe. But within a while, he grew ſo ſterne and fierce, as no man might ſpeake to him. Upon every light occaſion, nay upon no occaſion at all, his Iavelin, went ſtraight to naile men to the wall: Not David onely, but Ionathan his Sonne and Heire apparent, and no cauſe why. In the XIII. Chapter it is ſaid, Saul had then beene King a yeare, and reigned two yeares in Iſrael: yet it is well knowne, his reigne was forty yeares: Their owne Writers reſolve it, thus: how long ſoever he reigned, he was a King but two yeares. All the time after, he was ſomewhat els, or ſomwhat more than a King. And they let not to tell what; applying to Saul that of the Pſalme, Tyrants that have not God before their eyes, ſeeke after my ſoule. And that: Vnder thy wings ſhall be my refuge, till this tyrannie be overpaſt. Yet for all this tyrannie, Ne perdas, ſaith David.

2 Vſurping the Prieſts office.

Yet for all this he fell not into the ſin of all ſins, which they ſtand ſo much on, Vſurping power in things ſpirituall. Yes, and that would they have found too. Why? did he call himſelfe Head of the Church? Indeed no: Samuel did that for him; He it was, that ſaid: When thou wert little in thine owne eyes, the Lord made thee Head of the Tribes of Iſrael (of which, the Tribe of Levi was one:) for that, Samuel muſt anſwer. But Saul went further a great deale; yea, further than Oza: For he took upon him to ſacrifice in perſon himſelfe; to offer burnt offerings, upon the very Altar, the higheſt part of all the Prieſts Office: that is, uſurped further than ever did any. And all this David knew, yet it kept him from ſaying, Ne perdas.

Chap. 15. 17.

Chap. 13. 19.

3 Shedding the Prieſts bloud.

They never had done with perſecuting and ſhedding Prieſts bloud: was Sauls finger in that too? In that, he paſſed. He put the High Prieſt himſelfe and LXXXIV. more, all in one day, to the ſword: and all but upon the ſingle accuſation, but of Doeg, all proteſting their innocency, in the fact, and all, loyalty to him: and all but for a dozen of bread given to David. This could not but grieve David exceedingly: it was for his ſake; yet he ſaith, Ne perdas though, for all that.

Chap. 22. 18.

4 Being poſſeſſed with an evill ſpirit.

And one caſe more I give in for advantage. It is well known, he was a Demoniack, one actually poſſeſſed with an evill ſpirit; which is a caſe beyond all other caſes: Yet deſtroy him not Abiſhai, though. So that, if Abiſhai, in ſtead of inimicum tuum, had ſaid, GOD hath ſhut up 1 this Tyrant, 2 this Vſurper, 3 this Perſecutor, 4 this Poſſeſſed party, this what you will; David would have ſaid no other than he did, Ne perdas, ſtill. I would faine know, which of all their deſtructive caſes is here wanting: They be all here; all, in Saul; all in him, at the time of this motion: yet, all alter not the caſe: David ſaith ſtill, as he ſaid. If then all be in Saul, all incident, all eminent in him; nay if his caſe be beyond all; ſaid it muſt be, that David here ſaith. Though he be any of theſe, though he be all theſe, deſtroy him not; or deſtroy him and be deſtroyed, deſtroy him, and be the child of perdition.

Chap. 16. 14.

5 There was an High Prieſt Abiathar.

I would be loth to deceive you: There may ſeeme yet to want one thing. Here was no High Prieſt to excommunicate him, or give warrant to doe it: yes, that there was too. For Abiathar ſcaped that great maſſacre of Prieſts by Saul: and now, he was lawfull High Prieſt. Now he fled to David thence, and brought the Ephod with him. So as by good hap the High Prieſt was with David now in the Campe, and the Ephod too. There wanted no juſt cauſe (you ſee) to proceed againſt Saul. There wanted no lawfull authority; the High Prieſt we have. There wanted no good will in Abiathar, ye may be ſure, his father and brethren having been murthered by Saul. So here was all, or might have been, for a word ſpeaking. All would not ſerve; David is ſtill where he was; ſaith ſtill, Ne perdas; knew no ſuch power in the High Prieſts cenſure, was not willing to abuſe it: cannot ſee Quis, any perſon to do it; nor any cauſe, for which it is to be done. Enough to make a ruled caſe of it for ever. That Abiſhai may not do it, nor Abiathar give warrant to it. His charge is honeſt, Ne perdas: His reaſon good, Chriſtus Domini: His ſentence juſt, Non erit inſons: His challenge unanſwerable, Quis mittet manum?

Chap. 22. laſt.

And

And, this being cleared, come we now to the principall cauſe of our coming. Which is, in this publike manner, to render our yearely ſolemne thanks to Chriſtus Dominus, for the deliverance of our Chriſtus Domini, this day (a deliverance like this in the Text;) even for His Ne perdas, at Perth. For it, and for both points in it. 1 That His Annointed was not deſtroyed. 2 That they, that put forth their hand to do it, carried it not away, but found the reward due to guilty perſons. The two caſes, 1 this in the Text: 2 and that of this day: are both like in the maine: if in circumſtances, diſlike; this of ours hath the advantage. The fact more foule, the deliverance more famous. The Text and Day compared.

To ſpeak then of malitia diei hujus, the malicious practice of this day. Had the King been an enemy; yea, ſuch an enemy as Saul, it had been no warrant. But, he was no enemy: No, but many wayes, a gracious Prince to them both. I know, pretence there was, of a wrong. Say it had been one; what was done, was done by others, in the Kings minority. And though done by others, yet juſtly done: and no wrong was it at all, but wrongfully ſo called.

Secondly, the King was ſhut up, it is true; but not as in the Text, by GOD; but by wicked men, who found him not caſually (as Saul was) but trained him guilefully to the place, and there ſhut him up treacherouſly. It was not ſudden, it was a long plot: the malice, the more; the fact, the fouler. And there he was concluſus & derelictus both; ſhut up by Abiſhai, forſaken of David.

Thirdly, and it was not night, nor the King aſleepe, that he might have paſſed away without any fright or terrour. No: it was Dæmon meridianus, this, a noone-day devill: He was broad awake, and the feare of death (worſe than death it ſelf) I know not how oft and many times, before his eyes. Pſal. 91. 6.

Fourthly: And as beyond it in theſe; ſo, in the Principall beyond it too. Both of them lift up: Abiſhai, his ſpeare; this, his dagger, to have given the fatall blow. Abiſhai, but once: This, twice. And certainly, nearer it came the King, than David would ſuffer it to come to Saul: So, the danger nearer, and the delivery greater. And yet, there was a Ne perdas in this too; and that a ſtrange one: Not by David, no: Judge, if it may not ſeeme a miracle, that GOD then ſhewed. When there was none to ſay deſtroy not, elſe; GOD opened, his mouth that was there ſet, himſelfe to be the deſtroyer, to ſay once aud againe, ô deſtroy him not, deſtroy not the King. The voice was Davids; the hands, Abiſhai's. It cals to my minde, what long ſince I read in Herodotus: that at the taking of Sardi, when one ran at Cræſus the King, to have ſlaine him, that a little boy borne dumbe, that had never ſpoken word in all his life, with the fright and horrour of the ſight, his tongue looſed, and he broke forth and cried, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, &c. O Man deſtroy not the King, and ſo ſaved his life. So writeth he, as of a wonder: and ſee, if this were not like it. But ſo we ſee, if there were no body elſe to ſay it, they that are born dumb ſhall ſay it; yea, the deſtroyer himſelfe ſhall ſay it, rather than Ne perdas ſhall not be ſaid. This would not ſerve (though it did to Abiſhai;) but they were worſe than Abiſhai, that were here. That GOD therefore might have the honour of the day, he paſſed over to the latter part of the verſe; and when there was none elſe to doe it, he took the matter into his own hands; himſelfe held the aſſiſe, found him guilty, gave order for his execution, ſent up one to doe it; and one, that formerly had been his ſpeciall friend, and (if I be not deceived) ſworne brother, as Ioab, to bring Abſalom to his end; that deſtroyed him, for not hearing deſtroy not.

And yet the goodneſſe of GOD ſtayed not here, neither; but, where in the Text, in Sauls caſe, there was but one blow, one danger, one deliverie: In this, there were no leſſe than three, one after another. Firſt came Abiſhai; he and his armed man: GOD delivered him. Then came the other, the Maſter of the miſchiefe, then bewrayed, and (as one bewrayed) deſperately ſet: GOD againe delivered him. Then laſt of all (and that was worſt of all) came the popular tumult, whoſe rage knowes no reaſon, who, as they *Num.*16. called Core and Dathan, the people of the Lord: ſo theſe (little better:) and even then alſo did GOD by his mighty providence turne away the deſtruction. This in the Text was ſoone done; a few words, and away: This of the day, it was long firſt, and much adoe, yer it was done: the longer, and the more, the more is GOD to be magnified for it.

And when all was done there, he that was ſaved was but Saul: but here (envy flatters not, but) if envy it ſelfe ſhould ſpeake, it would ſay, Major Saule hîc, a greater than Saul any: (For, the territory of the leaſt of your kingdomes was greater than that of his:) And Melior Saule hîc, a better than Saul was here ſaved; better, without all compariſon. So, the beginning was (as they made account) Concluſit Deus inimicum noſtrum: The end was, as it proved, Concluſit Deus inimicos Domini Regis, GOD made a concluſion of their wicked premiſſes and their wretched perſons all at once. So, the concluſion was Ne perdas to the King, and Non inſons to the children of perdition.

Now, to that GOD, that when You were ſhut up, forſooke You not, but delivered You à malitia diei hujus, & à Damone meridiano; that in the depth of all your danger, when there was no tongue on earth could ſay Ne perdas, ſaid it from heaven, and ſaid it thrice over: for that his three-fold delivery, render we three-fold thanks and praiſe; thrice bleſſed be His holy Name for it. And He grant, that this leſſon of Davids may take deep root in all our hearts, that there may never be a Quis in Iſrael to lift up his hand, to the like action; all may be quit, none found guilty ever of ſo foule a crime. None, on Abiſhai's ſide, to make any ſuch motion; all of Davids minde, to miſlike it, to ſay Ne perdas: Ne perdas, though it be Saul. But, for David, Ne perdas is not enough. To Him, and ſuch as He is, let us with one voice crie Hoſanna; not onely, not deſtroy, but Hoſanna, LORD ſave, LORD proſper, LORD add dayes to his dayes, that his yeares may be as many ages. And as this day thou didſt, ſo ſtill and ſtill prepare thy loving mercy and truth, that they may preſerve Him, even for ever and ever.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT HOLDENBIE, ON THE V. OF AVGVST, Anno Dom. MDCX.

I. CHRON. Chap. XVI. Ver. XXII.

Nolite tangere Christos meos.

Touch not mine Anointed.

HERE is a ſpeech: but we know not Whoſe, nor to Whom, nor yet (well) concerning whom: onely concerning certaine Perſons, whom the Speaker (whoſoever He is) calleth His anointed. It behoveth us, to know theſe three, who they be.

The perſon, whoſe the ſpeech is, Perſona loquens, He that ſaith Meos, Him we finde at the fourteenth Verſe. Ipſe eſt Dominus Deus noſter, He is the Lord our GOD: GOD it is, that ſpeaketh here; He, that challengeth them for His, by calling them, Mine. 1

The perſons to whom: in the verſe before, Non reliquit hominem, He leaveth not a man. So, it is, to all in generall: but ſpecially to ſome, more quick of touch than the reſt, whoſe fingers are never well, till ſome way or other, they be touching, whom GOD would not have touched. 2

The perſons, concerning whom (whom, He ſtileth, His Anointed) will fall out to prove, the Princes of the earth. We muſt not ſay it, but prove it (ſay it now, prove it anon.) 3

Now, as if ſome body were about to offer them ſome wrong; here commeth a voice from heaven, ſtaying their hands, and ſaying, See you touch them not. Quos Deus unxit, homo nè tangat. Whom GOD hath anointed, let no man preſume to touch.

Of which, it may well be ſaid, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith to us, every day, Hodiè ſi vocem:

To day, if ye will heare His voice, harden not your hearts, and ye may: For, as this day (now ten yeares) from the ſame Perſon, and the ſame place, a like voice there came, concerning His Anointed, in whoſe preſence we ſtand. That GOD would not have His Anointed touched, this Text is a witneſſe, and this Day is a witneſſe: The Text, dixit; the Day, factum eſt.

Referred unto the Text next before, 1 Sam. 26.9.

Touching the ſame point, when time was, in this place you heard, Ne perdas: you ſhall heare it againe now, but, from an higher perſon, under a ſtraighter charge, and with a larger compaſſe.

I The perſon higher: for, that was David: Sed ecce major Davide hîc, but behold, a greater than David is here. This, is no voice on earth (neither of Prophet nor Apoſtle) we now heare: Audivi vocem de cælo, We heare a voice from heaven: And thence, neither of Saint nor Angel, but of GOD Himſelf. To ſhew His care of them (His Anointed) He would have none give the charge about them, but Himſelf; Himſelfe in perſon, Non alienæ vocis organo, ſed oraculo ſuæ; from none other, but from His own mouth.

2 The charge ſtricter: for, there it was, deſtroy not, the worſt that could be: Here it is, Touch not, the leaſt that may be; and ſo, even that way, amended much.

3 The compaſſe larger: That, was to Abiſhai, but one man; and it was, concerning Saul, one King onely; and therefore it was in the ſingular, Ne perdas: This is, Nolite, and Chriſtos: the number altered, of a larger extent farre, even to All men, concerning all His Anointed. Nolite, in the plurall, that is, None of you: Chriſtos in the plurall, that is, None of them. Them, not touched, not Any of them; You, not touch, not Any of you. Non reliquit hominem: He leaveth not a man, but forbiddeth All. Now out of this plurall, you may deduce any ſingular; out of Chriſtos, any King: Out of Nolite, any party: Out of Tangere, any hurt: and ſo, not any man, to do any hurt, to any His Anointed.

This Text, the firſt and great Commandement concerning this point.

A Commandement it is, and I may ſafely ſay, Primum & magnum mandatum, The firſt and great Commandement, touching the ſafeguard of Princes.

The firſt: For (as the verſes before ſhew) it was the firſt given, in this kinde, and that before all other, in the Patriarchs time, long before Moſes, under the Law of Nature.

The greateſt, not onely becauſe it is of the greateſt in heaven, and concerning the greateſt in earth: but for that it is the originall maine precept, touching Princes and their ſafety, or (as the phraſe is) the fundamentall Law, upon the which all the reſt are grounded, unto the which all the reſt reduced, and from the which all the reſt derived. Davids deſtroy not, is but an abſtract of this touch not. Ask him what Text He had for his Ne perdas: hither he muſt come, this muſt be it, and none other. This nolite tangere is the maine wing of protection: Ne perdas, or any other particular, is but a feather of it.

The Diviſion

To ſee the parts of it. A Precept it is, and negative; and the negative precept is of the nature of a fence, and the fence leadeth us to the thing fenced. Firſt of all then, we take it in ſunder, in the midſt: meos, whoſe the fence is; and then nolite tangere, as it were a circle or fence round about them.

I. Chriſtos meos hath in it two things: Not only the parties, whom they ſhould not; but the reaſon why they ſhould not touch them. Not touch? Whom not touch? His Anointed. And why not touch? Even becauſe, His Anointed.

In Chriſtos meos taken together, are the parties non tangendæ: Againe, in Chriſtos meos taken in ſunder and weighed apart, are two reaſons couched, de non tangendo.

Why not touched? firſt, they be His: and ſecondly, what of His? His Anointed. Theſe two, be two ſeverall: His Anointed, is more than His: for, all that be His, be not Anointed.

1. His

1 His alone, were enough; that they be His, they pertaine to Him, and ſo, He to ſee them ſafe.

2 But then beſides, they be the very choice and chiefe of His, His Anointed, and ſo, a more ſpeciall care of them, than the reſt.

3 And then (from the nature of the word) not onely His Anointed, Vncti Ejus: but Chriſti Ejus, His Chriſts, which is the Higheſt degree of His Anointed: for higher than that, ye cannot go.

And laſt, what that is, that maketh them thus, His Anointed: to know whether they may be ſtripped of it, or no.

Then come we to the Circle or Fence, and that we may divide too: for, Nolite tangere, is a double fence; 1 from the act, 2 and from the will. Touch not (ſo we read) where the touch, the act, is forbidden. Nolite tangere (ſo read the Fathers) where the will to touch is forbidden likewiſe. Nolite, that is, Have ye not the will, not ſo much as an inclination to do it. So, both the act and will of touching is reſtrained: the act, in tangere; the will, in Nolite. II. 1 2

In the former, we are to take the extent, of Tangere, and Chriſtos: 1. To what matters Tangere will reach: 2. In how many points, to Chriſtos. And in the latter, to what perſons, in Nolite.

And ſo, ſee we the ſumme of the Text, which is ſufficient enough to keep Kings from touching, if it ſelfe might be kept untouched: but as the times are, the Text it ſelfe is touched, there needs a ſecond nolite tangere for it. To that end then, to ſee the Text ſafe and well kept, the three perſons in it, all to joyne together: Kings, touching whom; and Subjects, to whom; and GOD Himſelfe, by whom it is given in charge. And if the two former do their parts, GOD will not faile in His.

Let me add one thing more. That this Text, beſides that it is a Commandement, it is alſo a Thankſgiving; but both have but one errand, the Kings ſafety.

A Commandement it is from GOD: the very ſtile, the mood (nolite) giveth it for no leſſe.

And a Thankſgiving it is to GOD; for it is a verſe of a Pſalme, of a Hallelujа-Pſalme, of the firſt Hallelujа-Pſalme: (there be twenty of them in all, this is the firſt of them all.)

A Commandement it is; for it is proclaimed with ſound of Trumpet, and that by Benaiah and his company: And a Thankſgiving it is; for it is ſung with ſolemne muſick by Aſaph, and the Queere, at the ſixth and ſeventh verſes before. It is both, and both wayes we to have uſe of it.

Firſt, as of a Commandement from GOD, to teach us this duty towards GOD's Anointed. I truſt, we will performe better duties to them than this: but, whatſoever we do beſides, what good we do them, ne noceat, not to touch them, to do them no hurt.

And, never ſo much need of this doctrine, as now, when by a late heavie accident, we ſee, wretches there are, dare attempt it: And other (and they the more wretches of the twaine) that did dare to avow it: Did dare (I ſay;) for, now they would ſeem to diſavow it; but ſo poorely, and faintly, as all they ſay, may hold, and yet another like act be done to morrow.

And then ſecondly, as a Thankſgiving to GOD, who hath ſet the print of this commandement, upon this day; in cutting ſhort this day two wicked Imps, that went about to breake it, by touching, and more than touching, the LORDS Anointed.

And never were we ſo much bound to doe it, as this yeare: For that, this yeare, upon this freſh occaſion, truly we may ſay, He hath dealt thus with us, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not ſo dealt with all Nations, nor hath every King found Him ſo gracious. Others, have not in theirs; I ſpeak it with compaſſion: we have in ours; I ſpeak it to our comfort, and to praiſe of GOD. Both theſe wayes. Pſal. 147. 20.

Christos Meos.

Christos meos, who they be.

AN honourable Title to begin with: and begin with it we muſt: the very Gram-mar-Rules lead us to it. Anointed, is but an Adjective, we are to ſeeke the Subſtantive for it. But beſides, we are to finde who they be, whom we are not to touch, leſt we touch them unawares. And as well, that we may know the right, and doe them their right; as that we may diſcern them from the wrong: for, wrong there be, that call themſelves Chriſtos Domini, whom the HOLY GHOST never chriſtned by that name.

Matke 13.21. As, of CHRIST Himſelfe, many come and ſay, Ecce, hîc eſt CHRISTUS, ecce illic: Here is CHRIST, and there is CHRIST, and deceive many: So, of theſe Chriſts here likewiſe; See, here is Chriſtus Domini, and there he is, and no ſuch matter. Our firſt point then is to know, who they be.

Patriarchs, Chriſti Domini. Theſe in the Text here, were the Patriarchs, it cannot be denied. They be ſet downe by their names, Abraham, Iſaac, Iacob, touching whom, primâ intentione, this charge is given, that they be not touched.

And let not this ſeeme ſtrange: For in the firſt world, the Patriarchs were principall perſons, and (as I may ſafely ſay) Princes in their generations, and for ſuch, holden and reputed by thoſe, with whom they lived. I may ſafely ſay it: for of Abra-

Gen. 23.6. ham it is in expreſſe termes ſaid by the Hethites, Audi Domine, Princeps Dei es inter nos, Thou art a Prince of God (that is, a mighty Prince) here among us: As indeed, a Prince he ſhewed himſelf, when he gave battell and overthrow to foure Kings at once.

Gen. 26.16. Of Iſaac no leſſe may be ſaid, who grew ſo mighty, as the King of Paleſtine was glad to intreat him to remove further off, and not dwell ſo neare him: and then, to goe after him in perſon, and ſue to him, there might be a league of amity between them.

Verſe 28. Gen. 48.22. And the like of Iacob, who by his ſword and bow, conquered from the Amorite (the mightieſt of all the nations in Canaan) that countrey, which by will he gave to Ioſeph for his poſſeſſion. It was neare to Sichar, well knowne; you have mention of it, Iohn 4. 5.

Great men they were certainly, greater than moſt conceive: but be their greatneſſe what it will, this is ſure, they were all the Rulers the people of GOD then had, and beſides them, Rulers had they none. And that is it we ſeeke; Pater was in them, and ἀρχὴ too, father-hood and government: and theſe two made them Patri-

In Pſal. 140. archs, & Vnctos ante unctionem (ſaith S. Auguſtine) Anointed before there was any materiall Anointing at all.

Princes, Chriſti Domini. In them then this terme began, and in them it held ſo long, as they had the government in them. But Patriarchs were not alwaies to governe GODS people; but Kings, in ages following, were to ſucceed in their places. And ſo did ſucceed them; ſucceed them in the word Pater, and in the word ἀρχὴ both, both in the right of their father-hood, and the rule of their government, as Fathers of their Countries, and Governours of their Common-wealths. Where the Patriarchall rule expired, the Regall was to take place, being both one in effect. For, Abraham the Patriarch is termed a Prince, (Gen. 23.6.) and to make even, David the Prince is termed a Patriarch; Let me ſpeake boldly unto you of the Patriarch David, ſaith S. Peter (Act. 2.29.) So that two things we gaine here: 1. That jus Regium commeth out of jus Patrium, the King's right from the Father's, and both hold by one Commandement. Then 2. That this text bindeth, as a Law of Nature, being given for ſuch, to the old world, long before the Law came in any Tables.

Now, that as in other things, ſo in this term of Chriſti Domini, Kings do ſucceed the the Patriarchs we have (first) our warrant from the Holy Ghoſt, applying this terme here, after, to [a] Saul, to [b] David, to [c] Salomon, to [d] Ezekias, to [e] Ioſias, to [f] Cyrus: Kings all. Secondly, from the Councels. The third generall Councell at Epheſus; the great Councell of Toledo, the fourth; the great Weſterne Councell at Franckford. Thirdly, from the conſent of Fathers. To diſpatch them at once, ſo ſaith the Councel of Franckford, B. Hieronymus & cæteri S. Scripturæ tractatores, &c. S. Hierom and the reſt of the Writers on Scripture (all) underſtand it not of others, but of Kings: Yea, laſtly from their owne Writers, Cajetan, and Genebrard, who themſelves ſo apply it, upon this very place.

Nay, Kings, they will grant (they can neither will nor chooſe:) But then, they would hemme in others likewiſe, to enter-common in the title; as the Pope, as the Cardinals, and as any elſe, ſave them that be indeed. But that they muſt do then with out booke: For in this book warrant have they none. For, this terme [Chriſti Domini] here, originally aſcribed to the Patriarchs, is ever afterward, without variation, continually appropriate to Kings, and to Kings only all the Bible through. The queſtion is, whether we will ſpeake, as the Holy Ghoſt doth, or no? If we will, then upon a juſt ſurveigh taken of all the places, where the word Chriſtus Domini is to be found in Scripture, three and thirtie they be in number. Of which one onely is in the New, and that is of our SAVIOUR Himſelfe: the reſt, all in the Old. Foure times by God, mine Annointed; Six times to God, thine Anointed: Ten times of God, His Annointed: Twelve times in termes terminant, Gods Anointed: Of which, twice it is ſaid of the Patriarchs; Here, and in the CV. Pſalme (which two places are indeed but one.) All the reſt are ſaid either of Chriſt, or of Kings, all: and never applyed to any other, but to them only. And here we joyne iſſue: if to any other the Scripture apply Chriſtus Domini, wee yeeld: if to none but them, we carrie it. For, what reaſon have we, if the Scripture appropriate it to them and none but them, to take it from them, and give it to others, to whom the Holy Ghoſt never gave it.

Princes only in Scripture have the title of Chriſti Domini.

Luc. 2.26.

Verſe 15.

Though other perſons anointed, yet none called the Lords Anointed.

Yet have I no meaning to deny, but that others, not only perſons, but (if they will) even things too, were anointed under the Law. Perſons, as Prieſts and Prophets: Things, as the Tabernacle, and all the veſſels of it, even to the very fire-forks, aſhpans, and ſnuffers. But though they were ſo, yet none of the things, nay, nor any of the perſons, have ever the name given them, of Chriſtus Domini. No Prophet, of all the fellowſhip of the Prophets; no Prieſt, no not the High Prieſt himſelfe, ever ſo called. It may be anointed, but not the Lords Anointed: it may be Vncti, but not Chriſti: or, in a corner of one chapter of the Maccabees [Chriſti] once, but not with his full Chriſtendome, not Chriſti Domini. Still they fall ſhort: and Chriſtus Domini followes the King and him only.

Yea, this ye ſhall obſerve in their owne old Tranſlator: that the ſame word in Hebrew and Greeke, when he ſpeaketh of the Prieſt he ever turneth it Vnctus; when of the King, Chriſtus ever: as if of purpoſe he meant by this word, to make a partition betweene them. Any will thinke, there was ſurely meant them ſome ſpeciall prerogative more than the reſt: that from the reſt it is given them, and ever to them, and to none of the reſt.

We may well conclude this point then, with the Apoſtle: They are made ſo much the more excellent than the reſt, by how much they have obtained a more excellent name than the reſt. For unto which of all the reſt at any time ſaid he, Thou art mine Anointed? Enough to ſettle this terme upon Kings. The Holy Ghoſt attributes it to them, and none but them. We to underſtand it of them, and none but them. It is, and ſo let it be, their owne due ſtile, their proper denomination. Touch not mine Anointed: Who be they? If we goe by the booke, Princes: Why then, Touch not Princes.

Heb. 1.4, 5.

Meos the claime whose they be.

Chriſtos meos, who they be, we ſee. But in theſe words (we ſaid) there are not only the parties, whom they ſhould not; but the reaſon, why they ſhould not touch them. And not one reaſon, but two at the leaſt. Now then let us take the words in ſunder, and weigh either by it ſelfe, ſeing either word is a reaſon, de non tangendo. Firſt, whoſe they be, His meos. Then what of his: his Anointed. And his Anointed is Chriſti ejus: Which (it may be) will amount to two reaſons more. Meos is his claime: Chriſtos, his character, or ſpeciall marke.

Lay no title to them.

Meos, His claime: which word is not ſlightly to be paſſed by. It is to the purpoſe. To claime is to touch. He that ſaith meos; He that claimes them, toucheth them: toucheth their free-hold (as we ſay.) He that ſaith, touch them not; ſaith claime them not. Some queſtion there is growen, whoſe they be. Two claimes there are put in, and laid to them, beſides. Meos, ſaith the Pope; and meos, ſay ſome for the People; but neither ſay true: God, Hee ſaith Chriſtos meos, and hee only hath the right ſo to ſay.

1 Meos the Popes claime.

Meos, ſaith the Pope. For he, or ſome by his commiſſion, uſed to anoint the Emperours, and becauſe he was maſter of the ceremony, he would be maſter of the ſubſtance too: and his they were. The Pope, he was Gods; and they were his anointed, and of him had their dependance, and he to depoſe them and to diſpoſe of them, and to do with his owne what he liſt. And this claime is not yet given over. For, he that ſhall marke the Popes faintneſſe, when ſome Kings are ſought to be touched, nay are touched indeed, out of his meos; will eaſily think, he is well enough content they be touched, though they be Gods Anointed, if they be not his too, Touch not his: Not his, as for others it skilleth not, touch them, who will.

But this claime by the ceremonie is cleane marred, by this Text: for when theſe words (here) were ſpoken, there was no ſuch ceremony inſtituted, it was Non ens, no ſuch thing in rerum naturâ. That came not up, till Moſes: Now theſe here in the Text, were in their graves long before Moſes was borne. No meos then; no claime by the ceremonie.

2 Eſay 45. 1.

And after it came up, no Prieſt went out of Iury to Perſia to carry the ceremony to Cyrus: yet of him, ſaith Eſay, Hæc dicit Dominus, Cyro Chriſto meo, Thus ſaith the Lord, to Cyrus mine Anointed, and yet never came there any oyle upon his head. So that even after it was taken up, yet the ceremonie and the claime by it, would not hold. The truth is, the ceremonie doth not any thing; only declareth, what is done. The partie was before, as much as he is after it: only by it is declared to be, that he was before, and that which he ſhould have beene ſtill, though he had never ſo beene declared. The truth may and doth ſubſiſt, as with the ceremonie, ſo without it. It may be retained, as with ſome it is, and with us it is: and it may be ſpared, as it is with others: Spared, or retained, all is one; no claime groweth that way.

But laſt of all, where it was uſed, as by Samuel to Saul, by Sadoc to Salomon: yet they claimed nothing in the parties they anointed, but called them ſtill GODS, and never their owne anointed. They knew no claime lay by it; Nay, if it had beene a Sacrament, as it was but a ceremonie: hee that miniſtreth the Sacrament, hath no intereſt in the partie by it, but GOD alone; and then much leſſe hee, that performeth but a ceremonie, is to plead any Meos. So that every way, this claime vaniſheth, of Chriſti Pontificis.

Meos the peoples claime. Bellarmine.

Now then a ſecond claime, another Meos, hath of late begun to be buzzed of, as if they were Chriſti populi, and held of them. And whatſoever the matter is, the Cardinall himſelfe waxeth very earneſt for it; (I thinke, becauſe he ſeeth the Popes arme groweth ſhort; and loth he is, but that there ſhould be ſtill ſome hands to touch them;) he will not ſo much, as give God leave to appoint Saul or David of himſelf, but he taketh upon him, to ſuſpend them both, untill the people with their ſuffrage come in, and ratifie GODS doing.

But this claime likewiſe falleth to the ground, even by this verſe: then muſt we go mend our Text here. For if ſo: God was properly to have ſaid, Nolite tangere Chriſtos veſtros, Touch not your anointed; for to the people, He ſpeaketh. Of all others, Meos cannot be theirs, unleſſe we will gloſſe it thus, Meos (id eſt) non meos; Mine (that is) none of mine, but your own. And then ſure, He ſhould have done them ſome wrong, to have forbid them to touch that, which was their own. The Pope ſaith, He can make Chriſtum Dominum, Chriſt the Lord Himſelfe: if he could ſo doe indeed, it were not altogether unlike, he might make Chriſtum Domini. But God help, if the people fall to make Gods, or make Chriſts, if they ſhall take Gods verſe from Him, and ſay, Nos diximus, Dii eſtis, We have ſaid, ye are Gods: yea, and Chriſts too, and change it, Thou ſhouldeſt have no power, unleſſe it were, data deſuper, Given from above, ſaith he; They unleſſe it were data de ſubter, unleſſe it were given you hence from beneath: then; muſt we goe change all our Texts that ſound that way. Enough to let you ſee, they both claime that is none of theirs, but Gods. Pſal. 82. 6. Ioh. 19. 11.

To give in evidence now, for Gods right; That His meos is the only true claime, that His only they be. Three times over it is told us by Daniel in one Chapter, that the Kingdomes be Gods, and that He giveth them, to whom he will, as having the ſole propertie of them. And it is ſaid there that this is Sententia Vigilum, & Sermo Sanctorum. And, if it be Sententia Vigilum, they are ſcarce well awake, that think otherwiſe; And if it be Sermo Sanctorum, they talke prophanely, that ſpeake otherwiſe. And this verily was the divinitie of the Primitive Church concerning Kings, which of all, had leaſt cauſe to favour them. Cujus juſſu naſcuntur homines, ejus juſſu conſtituuntur Principes; By whoſe appointment they be borne men (and that is, neither by peoples nor by Popes) by His appointment, and no other are they made Princes, ſaith old Irenæus. Inde illis poteſtas, unde ſpiritus; Thence have they their power, whence they have their breath, ſaith Tertullian: And that is from neither (I am ſure) but from God alone. 3 Meos, Gods claime. Chap. 4 14. Verſ. 22. Verſ. 29. Ver. 34. Lib. 5. Apolog. p. 6. 5.

His they be: for His their Crowne, Diadema Regis in manu Dei, Eſay LXII. And as if he ſaw a hand come from heaven with a Crowne in it, ſo ſpeaketh he in the XXI. Pſalme. Tu poſuiſti, Thou haſt ſet a crowne of pure gold upon his head. His, their Scepter, or rod: Virga Die in manibus Ejus, Gods rod in his hand, Exod. XVII. of Moſes. His their throne: Sedebat Salomon in throno Dei, Salomon ſate upon Gods throne, 1 Chron. 29. Nay, long before; in the law of Nature, ſaith Iob, Reges in ſolio collocat in perpetuum: He takes them by the hand, and placeth them in the throne, and that in perpetuum, there to ſit, in themſelves, and their ſucceſſion for ever. His, their Annointing; Oleo ſancto Meo, with mine holy oyle: The Anointing His, therefore the Anointed. And if all theſe, their Crowne, their Scepter, their Throne, their Anointing His; then His they be, Chriſti Domini. And of Chriſti Domini, we ſhall ſhew twelve faire evidences in expreſſe termes, Gods Anointed. And ten more we ſhall bring forth, with an Ejus, a plaine reference to Him, His Anointed. Chriſti Pontificis, Samuels or Sadoc's Anointed: Chriſti populi, Iuda's or Iſraels Anointed, non legitur, we ſhall not finde. His they bee then. Verſ. 3. Verſ. 4. Verſ. 9. Verſ. 21. Iob 36 7. Pſal. 89. 21.

Now infer. His: therefore hand off, what have you to doe with that, is none of yours? what to claime or to touch, that is His? Nolite tangere meos. This only, and no more but this, in very equitie were enough, Touch not mine. This, for meos: Now to Vnctos.

His then: but not as all are by a generall tenure: but His, as His Anointed, by a more ſpeciall and peculiar kinde of intereſt. His anointed, is more then His, for all His are not anointed: for if all were anointed, there ſhould be none left to touch them: we might ſtrike out this verſe, the charge were in vaine, there were none to receive it. If all be Vncti, where ſhould be Tangentes? We muſt then needs leave a difference betweene Chriſtiani and Chriſti. For holding all that are Chriſtians, all Gods people anointed and holy alike; it will follow, why ſhould Moſes then, or any take upon him to be their Superiour? And ſo we fall into the old contradiction of Core: which is all one with the new paritie and confuſion of the Anabaptiſts, or thoſe that pricke faſt towards them. Anointed, Vncti. Num. 16. 3. Iude 11.

But the very Ceremony it ſelfe ſerveth to ſhew, ſomewhat is added to them, by which which they be His, after a more peculiar manner than the reſt, to whom that is not added. Oyle it ſelfe deſigneth Soveraigntie: powre together water, wine, vineger, what liquor you will, oyle will be uppermoſt: And that is added by their anointing. Beſides then this generall claime Mine, here is his ſpeciall ſignature, anointed, whereby they are ſevered from the reſt. His hand hath touched them with his anointing, that no other hand might touch them. Things anointed of our ſelves we forbeare to touch: but ſpecially, if the anointing have the nature of a marke, that we wrong it not: And this hath ſo, theſe are ſo marked, that we might forbeare them. And yet more ſpecially, if we have a Caveat, not to doe it, as here we have. Nolite tangere unctos, Touch not them that I have anointed.

Anointed, yet not Vncti, but Chriſti, which is more.

This were all, if it were but, anointed: but, there is yet a further matter than all this. For it is not Vnctos, but Chriſtos meos: We read it, Mine anointed, In the Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine, it is more full. In Hebrew, my Meßiah's; in Greeke and Latine, Chriſtos meos, that is, my Chriſts, which is far more forcible. Somewhat (we may bee ſure) was in it, that all the old Writers uniformely forbore to turne it Vnctos, which is enough for Anointed, and all have agreed to turne it Chriſtos, that is, Chriſts, which is a great deale more. It ſeemes they meant not to take a graine from this charge, but to give it his full weight. And it cannot but weigh much with all that ſhall weigh this one point well, that Princes are taken into the ſocietie of Gods Name, in the Pſalme before; and here now, into the ſocietie of Chriſts name, in this; and ſo made Synonymi, both with God, and with Chriſt: Specially ſince God Himſelfe it is, that ſo ſtileth them; for He flatters not (we are ſure.) God himſelfe is a King, King of all the earth, and Chriſt is his heire of all, as appeareth by his many Crownes on his head, Apoc. 19.22. Thoſe whom GOD and CHRIST vouchſafe to take into the charge of any their Kingdomes, them they vouchſafe their owne names of GOD and of CHRIST. They two, the firſt Kings, to theſe other the after-Kings ruling under them, and in their names.

Pſal. 82.6.

Anointed, not with every ointment, but with holy, and ſo Sacri. * Pſal. 89.51.

A third graduall reaſon then there riſeth here. All anointed are not Chriſti: for all anointing is not Chriſme. Chriſme is not every common; but an holy anointing, a ſacred ſignature. * Oleo Sancto meo, with mine holy oyle have I anointed them. Meo, to make them His: Sancto, to make them ſacred. He might have taken this oyle out of the Apothecaries ſhop, or the Merchants ware-houſe: he did not, but from the Sanctuarie it ſelf, to ſhew their calling is ſacred, ſacred as any, even the beſt of them all. From whence the Prieſts have theirs, thence and from no other place the King hath his; from the Sanctuary, both. The anointing is one and the ſame. All, to ſhew, that ſacred is the Office whereunto they deſigned, ſacred the power wherewith they endued, ſacred the perſons whereto it applyed. And for ſuch were they held, all the Primitive Church thorow. Their Writ, Sacri apices: Their Word, Divalis juſſio: their preſence Sacra veſtigia: (the uſuall ſtile of the Councels, when they ſpeake of them.) And when they ceaſed to know themſelves for His (that here ſaith meos) and to hold of Him, then loſt they their holineſſe: He that took from them the one, tooke to Himſelf the other. Now then, will ye infer? Holy they be, their anointing hallowed: therfore Nolite tangere ſacros, Touch not mine holy ones. No more touch Moſes, than the holy Mount, which neither man nor beaſt might touch upon paine of death. No more touch David, than the holy Arke, It is not good touching of holy things. In the 13. Chapter before, Vzza ſo found it.

Exod. 19.12. Heb. 12.20. Verſ. 10.

Anointed, not with everyholy oyle, but with a ſpeciall above the reſt, and ſo Chriſti. Pſal. 45.8.

And yet ſtill me thinks we fall ſhort: for it is not Sanctos neither, it is more than Sanctos, it is Chriſtos: in which word, there is more than in Commune Sanctorum. Omnes Sancti non ſunt Chriſti, at Reges Chriſti. Wee cannot ſay of all Saints they bee Chriſts, of Kings we may. Verily, every degree of holineſſe, will not make a Synonymy with CHRIST. He was anointed, ſaith the Pſalme, Oleo exultationis ſupra ſocios, with an holy oyle, or chriſme above his fellowes. To hold this name then of Chriſtos Domini, it is not every ordinary holineſſe will ſerve, but a ſpeciall and extraordinary degree of it above the reſt, which they are to participate, and ſo doe, from Chriſt whoſe Name they beare, eminent above others that carry not that name; as if they did in ſome ſome kinde of meaſure partake Chriſma Chriſti, even ſuch a Chryſme as wherewith Chriſt is anointed. And the inference of this point, and the meaning of this ſtile of dii and Chriſti is, as if He would have us, with a kind of analogie, as carefull in a manner to forbeare touching them, as we would be to touch God, or the Son of God, Chriſt Himſelfe. It is not then Meos, nor unctos Meos, nor Sanctos Meos only; but it is Chriſtos Meos, mine, and that Annointed, Annointed with holy Oyle: So Anointed, and with Oyle ſo holy, as it raiſeth them to the honour of the denomination of the Holy of Holies, Chriſt Himſelfe. Theſe foure degrees, and from them theſe foure ſeverall reaſons, are in Chriſtos meos.

What this Anointing is.

One thing more of Chriſtos Meos: For I ſhould doe you wrong certainly, if I ſhould ſlip by it, and not tell you what this Annointing is, and leave a point looſe, that needeth moſt of all to be touched. Upon miſconceiving of this point, ſome have fallen into a phanſie, His Anointed, may forfeit their tenure, and ſo ceaſe to be His, and their anointing drie up, or be wiped off, and ſo Kings be un-Chriſted, ceaſe to be Chriſti Domini, and then, who that will, may touch them.

They that have beene ſcribling about Kings matters of late, and touching them with their pens, have been foulymiſtaken in this poin:. Becauſe, anointing, in Scripture, doth otherwhile betoken ſome Spirituall grace; they pitch upon that, upon that taking of the word: and then, anointing it muſt needs be ſome grace; ſome gratia gratum faciens, making them religious and good Catholikes; or ſome gratia gratis data, making them able or apt for to governe. So that, if he will not heare a Maſſe, no Catholike, no Anointed. If after he is anointed, he grow defective (to ſpeake their owne language,) prove a Tyrant, fall to favour Hereticks; his anointing may be wiped off, or ſcraped off; and then, you may write a book De juſta abdicatione, make a holy league, touch him, or blow him up as ye liſt. This hath coſt Chriſtendome deare: It is a dangerous ſore, a Noli me tangere; take heed of it, touch it not.

It is no ſpirituall grace.

Before I tell you what it is, I may ſafely tell you, that this it is not. It is not Religion, nor vertue, nor any ſpirituall grace, this Royall anointing. Chriſtos Domini is ſaid not only of Ioſias, a King truly Religious, by Ieremy; but of Cyrus a meere Heathen, by Eſay: not only of David a good King, but of Saul a Tyrant, even then when he was at the worſt. Religion then is not it, for then Cyrus had not been; nor vertue is not it (eſpecially the vertue of clemencie) for then Saul had not beene Gods Anointed. If it were Religion, if that made Kings; then had there been of old no Kings, but thoſe of Iuda: and now, no Kings but thoſe that be Chriſten. But by Cyrus's caſe we ſee, one may by Chriſtus Domini, and yet no Chriſtian.

Among Chriſten, if the Orthodox truth were it: Conſtantius, Valens, Valentinian the younger, Anaſtaſius, Iuſtinian, Heraclius, I know not how many, had beene no Emperours: yet alſo acknowledged by the Chriſtians of their times.

Then, if Religion make them not, Hereſie will not unmake them. What ſpeak I of Hereſie? Harder is the caſe of Apoſtacie, yea hardeſt of all: yet, when Iulian from a Chriſtian fell away to be a flat Pagan, his anointing held, no Chriſtian ever ſought, no Biſhop ever taught to touch him. And it was not quia deerant vires, that there hand was too ſhort, it is well knowne, far the greater part of his Army were Chriſtians, and could have done it, as appeared inſtantly upon his death, by their acclamations to Iovian his Succeſſor, Chriſtiani ſumus.

Will ye ſee it in the Patriarchs? Theſe in the Pſalme here, were holy and good men. But twelve Patriarchs there were preſently after, of whom, Simeon and Levi, were two very Tyrants; Reuben, ſcarce honeſt; nor Iuda, no better than he ſhould; Iſſachar, by his bleſſing, ſhould ſeeme none of the wiſeſt (as it might be Roboam:) yet were they numbred with the twelve, and were Patriarchs ſtill, no leſſe than the other.

Gen. 49. 5. 6. 7. and 35. 22. and 38. 16. and 49. 14.

And after the Patriarchs, Saul the firſt King (that there might be no miſtaking) with his anointing, there came no grace to him. The Spirit of GOD came indeed upon him, but he was anointed, and gone from Samuel firſt: And the ſame Spirit as it came, ſo it went, and left him afterward: and GODS Annointed hee was, before it came, came, and Gods Anointed he remained after it was gone againe, and that no leſſe than before, and is ſo termed by David ten times at the leaſt.

It is jus regnandi.

Vnxit in Regem, Royall unction gives no grace, but a juſt title only, in Regem, to be King: that is all, and no more. It is the adminiſtration to governe, not the gift to governe well: the right of ruling, not the ruling right. It includes nothing but a due title, it excludes nothing but uſurpation. Who is anointed? On whom the right reſts. Who is inunctus? He that hath it not. Suppoſe Nimrod, who cared for no
Gen. 10. 9. anointing, thruſt himſelfe in, and by violence uſurped the throne: came in rather like one ſteeped in vineger, than annointed with oyle; rather as a Ranger over a Forreſt, than a Father over a Family. He was no anointed, nor any that ſo commeth in. But on the other ſide, David, or he that firſt beginneth a Royall race, is as the head; on him is that right of ruling firſt ſhed; from him it runs downe to the next, and ſo ſtill, even Iob 36. 7. to the loweſt borders of the lawfull iſſue. Remember Iob, Regis in ſolio collocat in perpetuum. It is for ever. Gods claime never forfeits: His character never to be wiped out, or ſcraped out, nor Kings loſe their right, no more than Patriarchs did their fatherhood.

Not, but that it were to be wiſhed, both anointings might goe together, and that there might goe, as there doth, a fragrant odour from the precious ointment which is ſhed upon them, at their Crowning: ſo a like ſent from their vertues, and they no leſſe venerable for their qualities, than for their callings; and happie the people qui Cant. 1. 4. currunt in odore unguentorum Principis ſui, that can trace their Prince by ſuch a ſavour. This we are to wiſh for, and pray for daily, and uſe all good meanes it may be. But if it be not, ever hold this, Allegiance is not due to him, becauſe he is vertuous, religious, or wiſe; but becauſe he is Chriſtus Domini. Let this be ſtill in your mind; God ſaith not, Touch him not, Hee is a good Catholike; or, indued with this virtue, or that: Touch him not, he deſerveth well, or at the leaſt doth no harme. No, theſe would faile, He ſaw; or be ſaid to faile though they failed not: Wee ſhould never then have done, never have beene quiet. But, this he ſaith, He is mine Anointed. Marke that well, God giveth no other reaſon here, nor David after, in as evill a Prince as might be. That is the true reaſon then; and we to reſt in it, and let other phanſies go.

Tangere the act forbidden.

Now, by whoſe appointment they be ſet, by His Commandement they be fenced: Fenced from touching; and that is the lighteſt and leaſt; conſequently, from whatſoever is greater or worſe. What talke you of Non occides, or Ne perdas? I tell you, Ne tangas, Touch them not.

Yet, are we not ſo ſillily to underſtand it, as if one might not touch them at all, not for their good: For how can they be anointed, but they muſt be touched? No, the verſe before telleth us, it is for their hurt this touch is forbidden. Non permiſit nocere, He ſuffereth no man to doe them hurt; to that end ſaying, Touch them not. Yea, the very word it ſelfe, without any gloſſe, giveth as much, which is נגע properly plaga, and that is tactus noxius, a hurtfull touch, that leaveth a marke behinde it, Qui tangit, & angit, as the verſe is. For, it is good ye underſtand, this phraſe is taken from the Divell: and good reaſon: for whoſe-ſoever the fingers be, his the touch is, when Iob 1. 11. and 2. 5. Gods Anointed are touched. He calleth it but touching Iob; but touching, when he did him all the miſchiefe he could deviſe. And his nature, and the nature of hurtful things is well ſet out by it. Few things are ſo good, ut in tranſitu proſint, as they only touch, and do good: evill is far more operative, if it but touch and away, if it but blow, or breath upon any, it is found to do miſchiefe enough.

The extent of Tangere: how many waies touch.

To ſpeak then of this touching, and the extent of it. Where the Scripture diſtinguiſheth not, neither do we: but let the word have his full latitude. Nolite tangere is generall, no kinde is limited; then not to touch any manner of way.

1 There is none ſo ſimple, as to imagine there is no touch, but that with the fingers end, immediate. The mediate, with a knife, or with a Piſtoll, that is a touch: if we touch that, whereby they are touched, it is all one.

Againe,

Againe, be the touch ſo as we feele it, or be it by meanes unſenſible, as of poyſon, or ſorcery, it is a touch ſtill, and theſe no leſſe guilty: No leſſe? Nay a great deale more, as the more dangerous of the twaine. One ſhall be touched and know not how, when, or by whom. Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly, ſaith the Law. His neighbour? much more his Prince, betweene which too there is as great a diſtance, as betweene non occides, and non tanges. In a word, as it is the lighteſt, ſo it is the largeſt terme He could chooſe. For, non eſt actio niſi per contactum (ſaith the Philoſopher) Nothing can be done, but a touch there is, ſome touch, ſuperficiall or vertuall, immediate, or mediate, cominus or eminus, open or privie, and all come under tangere. For it is no Nolite ſic tangere, touch not this way or that: but nolite tangere, touch not any way at all; let nothing be done at all, to doe them hurt. Deut. 27. 24.

2 And is there no touch, but that of the violent hand? The virulent tongue, doth not that touch too? and the peſtilent pen as ill as both? Venite percutiamus eum linguâ, ſay they in Ieremie, Come let us ſmite him with the tongue. If ſmite him, then touch him (I am ſure.) There is (ſaith Salomon) that ſpeaketh (and is not there alſo, that writeth?) words, like the piercing of a ſword. Et qui, quos Deos ungit, eos pungit, commeth not hee within the compaſſe of this charge? Yes, they be Sathans weapons, both tongues and pennes; have their points and their edges: their points, and pricke like a ſword; their edges, and cut like a razor; both touch, and with the worſt touch that is, tactus dolore cordis; therefore the worſt becauſe of the beſt part. Theſe, it is GODS meaning to reſtraine: you may ſee it by the verſe before: Non dimiſit hominem calumniari, ſaying, nolite tangere. So that even calumnia is a touch. You may ſee it exemplarily in the Patriarchs: One of Gods nolite tangere's was touching Laban to Iacob, and this it was: Vide nequid loquare durius: See you give him no ill language, no foule words, for they touch too: Touch him not ſo. As well to Shemei's tongue, as to Iacobs hand, is this nolite tangere ſpoken. Ier. 18. 18. Prov. 12. 18. Gen. 31. 24.

3 Is this all? What ſay you to the touch with the foot? the foot of pride upon the neckes or Crownes of Emperours (though no cricke or bodily paine enſued?) Will not Nolite tangere, reach to Nolite calcare? Yes certainly; This Nolite tangere, was a ſtronger Text againſt it, than Super Aſpidem, & Baſiliſcum, was a Text for it.

4 Yea, I goe further: by an undecent and over-familiar touch, void of the reverence that is due to them, læditur pietas, duty taketh hurt, and wrong is offered to his Anointed. Mary Magdalen was not about to have done our Saviour any harme, when after his reſurrection ſhe offered to touch him; only becauſe ſhe did it as to one mortall (where the caſe was altered now) and not with the high reverence pertaining to His glorified eſtate, ſhe heard, and heard juſtly noli me tangere. The touch which any way impeacheth the high honour of their Anointing, nolite tangere takes hold of that too.

1 The extent of Chriſtos, how many wayes they touched.

Touch them not; not them. And when we ſay, not them, meane we their perſons only, and not their States? Are not they touched, when thoſe are wronged? They that touch their Crowne and dignitie, their Regalia, ſhall wee ſay they touch them not? Yes, no leſſe; nay rather, more. For then the Annointed are properly touched, when their Anointing is, and that is their State and Crowne, as deare every way, and as precious to them, as their life. Indeed touch one, and touch both. If their State hold not holy, no more will their perſons. It hath ever beene found if their Crowne once goe, their life tarrieth not long after. And even in this point alſo, it may ſafely be ſaid, that the looſe and licentious touching their State, with Mary Magdalens touch, without the regard due to it, as if it were a light matter, that might be lifted with every finger, falleth within the reach of this nolite. I liſt not dilate it, it would be looked to. Theſe light and looſe touchings, are but the beginnings of greater evils.

2 Againe, not them. Sathans motion was twofold: 1 One, that he might touch that was Iobs: 2 The other, that touch himſelfe: and in either of theſe, hee reckoned that hee ſhould touch him home. They are touched, when that is touched, that is theirs. It was ſo here directly. Pharaoh, one of them, to whom originally, nay the very firſt of all, to whom this Nolite was ſpoken, touched not Abraham himſelfe; it was Sara was wronged: In Sara was Abraham touched. So God eſteemed it, and gave his firſt Nolite tangere in that point. So, even unto her wrong, doth this touch extend, take in her too, as being the one halfe, yea, one and the ſame perſon with the Lords Anointed.

3 Not them. One more yet: For two kinds of Anointed, I find in Scripture: Sauls and Davids: the one in eſſe, the other in fore: one in being, the other to be. If David had beene touched (Saul yet living) though but Annointed to ſucceed, I make no doubt this Commandement had beene broken: For we are bound by it, to preſerve the Annointing, not only upon the head, but even in the ſtreames running downe from it: that with a King Himſelfe, the whole race Royall is folded up in this word; every one of them in their order, that not one of them is to be touched neither.

Nolite the will forbidden. This bar then, is ſet to the touch every way, and to the touch of them, and every of theirs, every way. But there is a further matter yet. For (if we marke it well) it is not, Ne tangite, but Nolite tangere: Nolite (that is) have not ſo much as the will, once to goe about it: So that, not only tactus, the touch is forbidden, but voluntas tangendi, the very will to doe it: For that will is tactus animæ, the ſoules touch, the ſoule can touch no way but that. And Gods meaning is abſolute: neither body nor ſoul ſhould touch; neither the body by deed, nor the ſoul by will.

And Nolite ſtandeth firſt, beginneth the Text: for, indeed, with that, is the right beginning. The Devill toucheth the will, before the hand ever touch Gods Anointed: Hee doth mittere in cor, put a will in the heart, before any doe mittere manum, put forth their hand to doe it. Therefore, even velle tangere was to be made a crime, and Verſ. 21. that a capitall crime. And ſo it is: for, in the attaindar of the two Eunuchs (Eſth. 2.) there was no more in the inditement, but voluerunt, they would have done it, they would have touched Ahaſuerus: that being proved, was enough; they dyed, and died juſtly for the will, though no touch followed. Pitie it ſhould be otherwiſe. He toucheth not alwayes, that hath a will to touch; hath a will to touch the throat, toucheth but a tooth. what though? To breake Nolite, voluit is enough; and voluit, he would have touched, at another place.

They that laid the Powder ready, and lighted the match, it was but voluerunt, (as God would) it touched not any: but righteous and juſt was their execution. To teach them, or others by them, Ne tangite is not it: Nolite tangere is the charge: and, if you breake Nolite only, it is enough, though Tangere and it, never hap to meet.

The extent of Nolite, to whom it reacheth. Of which nolite, I hold it very pertinent to touch the extent alſo (as I did even now of tangere, the touch it ſelfe) and of the perſons, to whow it may reach; that wee may ſee it, it is true in the verſe before, non reliquit hominem, he leaves not out a man, hee exempts not any from it. I will not once ſpeake of Subjects, no queſtion of them: o-
1 ver whom they are Anointed, them it toucheth neereſt, and bindeth them faſt. But this, I ſay, that even forreiners, borne out of their Allegiance, are within it, The
2 Amalakite was a ſtranger, none of Sauls Leiges, borne out of his dominions; yet died
1 Sam. 1. 9. 23. for ſaying, he had touched Saul: And that ſheweth, that even Aliens here ſortiuntur forum ratione delicti, and that they are intended, within this nolite.

3 Yea, even ſuch Aliens as are in open hoſtilitie, even at that time, they are in Camp and are in Armes againſt a King, they are barred by this nolite, and are to ſpare him. So
2 Sam. 1. 21. ſaith David in his mourning-ſong for Sauls death: He blames there the Philiſtims, as if they had done more than they might, in ſo touching Saul, conſidering he was a King with holy oyle anointed, as if they ought even in that reſpect, to have ſpared him. So that this nolite is a Law, of Nations, making their perſons ſo ſacred, as even in battell they are to be forborne, and their lives ſaved.

Yea, if we looke to the words next before, it is given even to Kings, this Touch not. The parties were Pharaoh King of Egypt, and the two Abimelechs Kings of Gerar, and even they in particular charged, not to touch (for Pharaoh did touch:) not to will to touch (for Abimelech went no further.) Kings not to touch them, none but God to touch them: As if it were another Law of Nations, not one King to touch another; but by vertue of this Nolite, each to ſpare, and to ſave the others life.

And the difference in Religion maketh here no let: for; theſe being Ægyptians and Philiſtims, to whom it was given; there can be no greater difference, than between them and the Patriarchs in the worſhip of God: for all that not to touch them though. Which is ad erubiſcentiam noſtram, to our ſhame, that Heathen men and Idolaters, were kept from it by this charge, and now (I will not ſay) Chriſtians, but holy Religious men, Friers, and Prieſts, yea and Martyrs forſooth, will not be held in by it, but they will be touching. 1 Cor. 6. 4.

And laſt of all this reſtraint of will and deed, it is not in the ſingular, Noli, to this or that priyate man; it is in the plurall, Nolite, and ſo reacheth to whole multitudes. Nolite, will ſerve even people and Countries, to reſtraine them alſo. I wonder at it; It is Gods manner to give his precepts in the ſingular: Witneſſe the whole Law, and all the ten Commandements in it. How happeneth it, the number is here changed? Some what there is in that. He ſaw multitudes might aſſay it, as well as ſingle men, and take libertie to themſelves, thinking to be priviledged by their number. To make ſure, he putteth it in a number that incloſeth them too. For, be they many, or be they few, Nolite will take them in, all. So, neither Subject, nor Alien, nor Enemie, nor King, nor People, nor one Religion nor other, nor one, nor many; Non reliquit hominem, None left, none exempt, not any to touch them, not any to will to touch them. For, with Nolite, God toucheth the heart: and ſo many as God toucheth their hearts, will have idem velle, & nolle, make His will, their will, and will obey it. This is the ſumme of the charge; here is the double Fence I ſpoke of. Touch not, By which He raiſeth (as it were) an high wall about them, that none may reach over to them. And then, with Nolite, diggeth deep, even in profundum cordis, the very depth of the heart; caſteth a trench there: and ſo they be double fenced. Or you may (if you will) call them the Cherubins two wings ſpred over His Annointed, to protect them: Touch not, one wing; Nolite, the other; reaching as the Cherubims wings did, from one wall to the other, covering them from all, and none may come any way to doe them hurt. And by this we ſee the full of this Text. We ſee it, but we are to feele it alſo; and ſee whether the Text be whole, whether it be well kept, and have taken no hurt. 6

The charge is ſhort, ye ſee; an Hemiſtichion, but halfe a verſe; Touch not mine Annointed; foure words only, and but ſix ſyllables. One would think, it might well bee carried away, and well be kept. But, as ſhort as it is, we ſee it is not though; For, the very Text is touched and broken. And, I ſpeak not of inferiour touchings, that every tongue is walking, and every pen buſie to touch them and their rights, which they are to have, and their duties, which they are to doe; And if they do not, then I know not what, nor themſelves neither. This is too much, but I would it were but this. How this text is obſerved.

Hands have been buſie of late, and that in another more dangerous manner. Two fearefull examples we have, in two great Kings. One, no very long time ſince; the other very lately made away: not ſo far from us, but that they may, and (I truſt) do touch us. What ſhall I ſay; I would this were the worſt.

Yea, I would this were the worſt: For, this hath happened in former times too. This Pſalme, he that indited and ſet it (David) hee living; Iſhboſheth his neighbour King was ſlaine upon his bed. The like hath happened then: broken it hath been, in former ages. But then upon revenge, or ambition, or hope of reward, or ſome other ſiniſter reſpect: never upon conſcience and Religion, till now. Nolite tangere, was ſtill good divinitie, till now. The Text it ſelfe never touched, never taken by the throat before, and the contradictory of it given in charge, [Touched they may be, touch them notwithſtanding:] never bookes written, to make men willing to Gods Nolite before. Baanah, he upon hope of reward, ſlew Iſhboſheth: Bigthan upon revenge, would have done the like to his Liege-Lord. Zimry, upon ambition ſlew his Maſter. But Religion came never forth with a Knife in her hand, till now: a Kings life was never a ſacrifice to expiate ſin, before. The Text it ſelfe touched, and a Nolite given to it.

1 And will yee but conſider the great odds betwixt thoſe touchers, and theſe of late? They, ever, yer they went about it caſt how to eſcape; and when they had done it fled and hid themſelves, as guilty to themſelves of evill they had done: theſe ſtirre
2 not an inch, as if they had done that they might well ſtand to. Thoſe formerly grew ever contrite at their end, deteſting the act, and crying God mercie: theſe now re-
3 joyce in it, as if by it they had done God a peece of good ſervice. Then yet it was
1 ever a crime, and a grievous crime, and they that did it, were generally upon the firſt

2 tate dignum judicantibus, and think them worthy immortalitie, for their worthy act.
Pag. 60. Yea, write they not further? Præclarè cum rebus humanis ageretur, ſi multi; It were a merrie world, if there would many ſo exerciſe their fingers, to keepe them in ure.
3 And to Kings themſelves (GODS Anointed) dare they not ſay? This is ſalutaris
Pag. 61. cogitatio, an wholeſome meditation for them next the heart, to thinke ſe eâ conditione vivere, they live in that caſe or condition, ut non ſolùm jure, that they may not only be ſlaine lawfully, ſed cum laude & gloriâ perimi poſſunt; but to the praiſe and glory of them that ſhall doe it. How now! What is become of our Text? Of nolite tangere with theſe? Are we not fallen into ſtrange times, that men dare thus print and publiſh, yea, even prædicare peccatum ſuum, preach and proclaime their ſins, even theſe ſinfull, and ſhamefull poſitions, to the eyes and eares of the whole world? Whereby, Gods Anointed are endangered, mens ſoules are poyſoned, Chriſtian Religion is blaſphemed, as a murtherer of her owne Kings, God in his Charge is openly contradicted, and men made believe, they ſhall goe to heaven, for breaking Gods Commandements.

The cenſure upon Mariana idle.

But now, we have all great cauſe to rejoyce: The book is condemned, if we may believe it. Whether condemned or no, that we know not: this is too ſure, eleven yeares agoe, ſet out it was, and that authorized, and ſo went eight whole yeares, by their own confeſſion, and even the whole eleven, for ought that we know. How went it forth ſo allowed at the firſt? How went it ſo long uncontroled; without an Index expurgatorius at leaſt?

But now lately we have newes, that ſome few yeares ſince, it was cenſured in a privie Provinciall Councell. But, that was as ſtrange a Cenſure, as ever was heard of, a Cenſure ſub ſilentio, kept cloſe, and none knew of it but themſelvs: faſt or looſe; Cenſure, or no Cenſure, as they pleaſed. If any ſuch cenſure were, why made they it not as publike as their approbation? The approbation the world ſeeth: their Cenſure we but heare of, and peradventure it is but a tale, neither. Why came it never to light, till the deed was done; and it was too late? Why heard we not Iacobs voice, till we had felt Eſaus hands? But this is all they have to ſay for themſelves: after ſo great a loſſe, this we muſt be faine to take for paiment.

But, I aske, is it condemned? Indeed no, but the matter ſo faintly carried, as all they ſay ſtanding for good, he that will give the like attempt againe, may. For, what ſay they? An Vſurper may be depoſed, ſo they all agree. And is it not in the power of Rome, to make an Vſurper when it will? If he have no right, he is an Vſurper: If he be lawfully depoſed, his right is gone: If he but favour Hereticks; nay, though he favour them not, the Pope may depoſe him, Non hoc tempore, ſed cùm judicabit expedire: and that done, he hath no right, then is he an Vſurper, and ye may touch him, or doe with him what ye will.

What ſay they then further? A private man may not doe it, by his owne authority. Not by his owne, but may be by ſome other? Belike, ſome other then there is, wherby he may. Authority then there is, and it may be given, and when it is given him, he may doe it. And ſo we are where we were before. And this is their condemning: indeed the condemnation of the world; if they love darkneſſe ſo well, as to be deluded by it.

Firſt,

First, they will doe it: will doe it? Have done it, touched, touched in the higheſt degree, againſt Tangere. It may be againſt their wills; nay voluntarie, have done it wittingly and willingly, againſt Nolite. But it may be repent themſelves; Nor that: For they give a charge againſt this charge, willing men, and making men willing, to doe flat againſt it, to touch, exen the Text, and breake it, and ſpare not: by holding, They may be touched for all it.

The Text it ſelfe to be preſerved and kept untouch

What is then to be done of us? The more buſie they, to ſuggeſt the Divells motion, Mitte manum & tange; the more earneſt wee, to call on Gods charge here, Nolite tangere Chriſtos ejus. The more reſolute they, to be touching; the more carefull wee, to looke to their fingers. The more they endeavour to breake downe this double fence; the more we to labour to ſtrengthen it. How will that be? Our ſelves not to touch them? I will not ſpeake of that for ſhame. I truſt, God hath ſo touched all our hearts, as wee deteſt the leaſt thought that way. Never was any, truly partaker of the inward Anointing of a Chriſtian man, but hee was ever faſt and firme to the royall Anointing. That we will doe: and that is not all; (I truſt) wee will doe more than ſo, even provide a nolite tangere for the Text too, keepe that from touching, and that will keepe Gods Anointed untouched: Keepe one, keepe both.

By the three perſons in the Text.

Three perſons there be in the Text: 1. Gods Anointed themſelves, touching whom it is given. 2. We all, non reliquit hominem, not leaving a man of us out, to whom it is given 3. And he that ſaith Meos, God that giveth it. The two firſt, to doe their parts towards it, we to looke to ours; and God will come in at His turne, and not faile with His part, we may be ſure.

1 God's Anointed.

Let me begin with Chriſtos Domini, whom it toucheth: that they would be touched with it, and not lay themſelves open to this touch, nor careleſly goe where they may be within the reach, or fall into ſuch fingers, as tickle to be touching them: Not to put it upon, what ſhall be, ſhall be. Non eſt bonæ, & ſolidæ fidei, ſic omnia ad voluntatem Dei referre, & ita adulari, ad unumquemque dicendo, Nihil fieri ſine juſſione Ejus, ut non intelligamus aliquid eſſe in nobis ipſis. It is Tertullian: and moſt true it is, that it is neither good nor ſound Divinitie, in theſe caſes, to put all upon the will of God, every one to flatter himſelfe or others, ſaying; Nothing can be done without Gods will, but to conveigh aright, and that therewithall there is ſomewhat that belongs to our part. Therefore ſubordinately to ſerve Gods providence, with our owne circumſpect foreſight and care, knowing, that His providence doth not alwayes worke by miracle: This day it did: every day it will not doe ſo. That He gives his Angels charge over them that tempt him not, that doe not mittere ſe deorſum, caſt themſelves wilfully into danger. That Baltazers daies were numbred, when he forgat his dutie, not before. That he hath indeed promiſed to ſave his Anointed: but he promiſed S. Paul alſo his life, and all theirs with him in the ſhip, and that by an Angell: for all that, Paul would not let the Mariners goe away with the boat, but cut the rope, and ſaid, If theſe tarrie not in the ſhip, we cannot be ſaved, for all the Angels promiſe. Let His Anointed ſay and do the like: keep your Mariners about you in the name of God, keepe your ſelves with that ſtate and guard, that is meet for the Majeſtie of Princes: and think God ſaith to you, Chriſti mei, nolite tangi, be you willing to keepe your ſelves from being touched, and I for my part, will not be behinde.

Pſal. 91. 11. Mat. 4. 6. Dan. 5. 26. Pſal. 20. 6. Act. 27. 30. 31.

This way only is now left them. Another way there was, that Gods Anointed, might not bee touched; to ſet liſts about them, as about the holy Mount, that is, Lawes; whereby (that deſperate wretches might not touch Gods Anointed) Gods Annointed might touch them firſt. I finde Abimelech made a Law to ſtrengthen this Law of God, made a liſt about this very Nolite, a Law upon paine of Morte morietur. And this was wont to keep them from approaching. But, if that which ſhould give ſtrength to the Law, and make it a Law to the conſcience, Divinitie, if that be corrupted, if it be a matter of the will, as appeareth by Nolite, and the will be made wilfull (an horrible ſin, being now become an heroicall and holy act:), theſe liſts will not hold them, the Law commeth too late. For if men grow wilfull

Exod. 19. 12.

Gen. 26. 11.

it is well knowne, Vita aliena Dominus eſt, quiſquis contemptor eſt ſuæ. And who would not be Contemptor ſuæ, if he may be ſure to be Comprehenſor æternæ? Then do but once perſwade them, that for their touching they ſhall ſtraight goe to heaven, and no Anointed ſhall ever ſtand before them. Nolite is gone then: take order for tangere how we can.

2 The Subject.

Our part then is (and to us it is ſpoken, and to us properly doth nolite belong.) Every man in his place to doe his beſt. They that are His Prieſts, by bowing their knees daily, and lifting up their hands to God: They that in the place of Counſell, by all the wayes of wiſdome: They that in the ſeate of juſtice, by juſt and due execution: All, by all the meanes they can, --. hanc talem terris avertere peſtem, to deviſe and procure (if it may be) ne velint, that evill diſpoſed hands would not: but howſoever, ne poſſint, that they may not be able (if they would) to touch his Annointed. It muſt be in part, by carrying a continuall eye, and keeping a continuall watch over them; or a ſhorter way, by removing them far enough off, that are in any likelihood to doe it: and thoſe be ſuch, as hold, Gods Anointed be tangibiles, and may be; nay in ſome caſe, be tangendi, and ought to be touched.

Num. 16. 21. 24.

God himſelfe in Cores caſe and Dathans (who went about to touch Moſes and Aaron, not in their perſons, but eſtates only) ſheweth us the beſt way: He gave order that a generall nolite tangere went out againſt them and theirs, that no man ſhould come neere them, but all ſhun them and their company, as having them in a generall deteſtation. Gods courſe would be followed; that ſeeing their conſciences are ſeared, and they feare not Gods voice here from heaven, they might feel the full diſcoverie, of his vengeance upon earth, and might aſſure themſelves, upon the leaſt meaſure of but a will to touch, but a will to do that execrable Act, to incurre an univerſall deteſtation, to have all riſe againſt them, to have all the hatred of the earth powred upon them and theirs, to be the out-caſts of the common-wealth, and the Maranath's of the Church; yea, they and their names for ever to be an abhorring to all fleſh. Nothing in this kinde is too much: this way, if no way elſe to keepe them from it: which is leſſe than they ſhould ſuffer, but all that we can doe.

3 God Himſelfe will joyne with them.

The beſt is, if we faile not in our duty; though neither we, nor the Anointed, can take perfect order againſt them, the Anointer can; can, and will, as this day He did. And the rather, He will doe it in the time to come, if we turne to him, to thanke him for that is paſt. To Him then let us turne, that he may take the matter into his owne hand. If his nolite tangere will not prevaile, his nolo tangi, will: and if He ſay, Nolo tangi, have they never ſo bent a will, doe what they can, they ſhall not (for their lives) be able to doe them hurt.

Two points there be in this Charge, both expreſſed in the verſe next before, non permiſit, He ſuffered none to attempt it; Sed corripuit, but them that did, He put them to rebuke. Put to rebuke, we turne Corripuit; it is properly to take up ſhort, and that is, by a touch, or rather by a twich. And ſo he hath ever done, and ſo he will ever doe: Tangentes tangentur, or rather tangentes corripientur, if they touch, they ſhall be twitched, bee taken ſhort, and cut ſhort for it (all the ſort of them.) Have beene (I am ſure.)

By Corripuit.

I begin with Corripuit: for that never faileth: for ſure, God will not ſuffer His Annointed; nor Chriſt, His Synonymo's, thoſe of His name, to be touched for nought: if not His name it ſelfe to be taken, neither thoſe that beare it to be touched in vaine. And there is nothing more kindly, than for them that will be touching, to be touched themſelves, and to be touched home, in the ſame kinde, themſelves thought to have touched others. You may ſee it in the firſt, in Pharaoh, the very firſt that touched the Patriarch Abraham. It is ſaid, God touched him for it (and it is the very ſame word which God uſeth here in willing not to touch:) God touched him and touched him, tactibus maximis,

Gen. 12. 17.

with many a grievous touch: we reade, plagued him with many plagues. And indeed He toucheth them ſo, that He plagueth them that have beene buſie in this kind. Grievous are the touches they are touched with here on earth; of pincers red-hot, and boiling Leade: but, who knoweth the touches of the place, whether (being unrepentant) they they muſt needs go? which, beſides that they are maximi (in another manner of degree than theſe here) are aterni withall, and not ended in an houre or two, as theſe are. Tactibus maximis tangentur, they ſhall be touched indeed throughly, as the firſt was.

And look, as He began in the Patriarchs, ſo hath he ever held on in His Anointed, the Kings that enſued. The firſt that ever touched his Kings, Baana and Rechab, were touched for it: and cut ſhorter; both by the hands, wherewith they touched, and the feet, wherewith they went about it. Ask the reſt, if it were good touching. Shemei touched, but with the tongue; his neck was touched with the ſword. Bigthan and Tharez ſaid nothing, did nothing, but onely with their will: their necks were touched with the halter, tactibus maximis, the greateſt touch or twitch that is here. And ſo (to make ſhort) were all the reſt, even to thoſe two that were this day put to a foule rebuke, and cut ſhort in their going about it. Beſides the Cherubims wings then, to protect Kings, here you have, in corripuit, the blade of a ſword ſhaken, to keep the way to them.

1 Reg. 2. 46. Eſter 2. 23.

But what comfort is it, if corripuit come to the malefactor, if he be cut ſhort, and if the King miſcarrie withall? Baana and Rechab, they that killed Iſhboſheth, were cut ſhort, ſhorter by the heads; but Iſhboſheth he died for it. I confeſſe, there is ſmall comfort in corripuit, unleſſe Non permiſit nocere, goe withall; in ſhortning them, without ſaving His Annointed. And that is our comfort, the comfort of this day, which we meet to give thanks for, that both theſe went together, Non permiſit nocere, and corripuit, both.

By Non permiſit.

You know, at the beginning I told you, beſides that it is a Commandement, it is alſo a Thankſgiving. It is ſo, in that it is a verſe of a Pſalme of Halleluja, the firſt Pſalme of Halleluja, of all the twenty.

The thanſgiving.

Now in that He hath placed this duty, and ſet it in a Pſalme, His will is, men ſhould come to it with pleaſure, cheerfully, and as it were ſinging. When we ſpeak of it, we do it ſpeculatively; when we ſing it, that would be with affection.

1 Pſal. 119. 54.

In that it is in the firſt Halleluja of all, it ſheweth (as I think) that GOD's Annointed are the perſons, which (ſaith the Apoſtle) Ante omnia, before all, we are to pray for: which (ſaith the Prophet here) before all, we are to praiſe God for; for them, and their keeping out of evill hands. Their ſafety we are to put in our firſt Halleluja.

2 1 Tim. 2. 1.

This Halleluja is a Pſalme purpoſely for the bringing home of the Arke. And that ſheweth, His Arke, and His Annointed are allied, and that no ſooner is the Arke well come home, but this Commandement goeth forth ſtraight from it, firſt of all, before all other: That all may know, what account they were to make of this duty; how high regard to have His Annointed in, in that the Arks welfare and theirs, are ſo inſeparably knit together. And indeed, experience hath taught it, The well ſetting of the Ark, dependeth much upon the ſafety of the Prince.

3 Verſe 1.

Now this Pſalme, as it was ſung with all the muſick could be invented, of wind, of hand, and of voice, to ſhew, the preſervation of Kings is a benefit extraordinary, that requireth ſo ſolemne a thankſgiving.

4 Verſe 5. 42.

So beſides, it is ordered every day after, to be ſung jugiter coram Arca (that is) to be the ordinary Anthemne of their daily ſervice: to ſhew, it is a duty perpetuall, that needs ſo daily a remembrance, to wit, the care of their preſervation.

5 Verſe 37.

For laſt of all, that all the praiſe and thanks here in the Pſalm, are for this Nolite, that all the Pſalme was ſet to come to this verſe; it is plaine. There be ninety two verſes more in the Pſalme it ſelfe (it is the CV. Pſalme.) But aſſoone as ever they once come to this verſe, all the reſt, all the verſes following, are cut off; they go no further in the Pſalm, than till they come to it; and then break off all thoſe behind, and ſtraight goe to another Pſalme: (for, this is all of the CV. and the next verſe is the firſt of the XCVI. Pſalme.) So that, this verſe plainly was the end and up-ſhot of all the Pſalme beſides.

Of this Verſe then, of His Nolite tangere, and of His Noli tangi, beſides of a famous non permiſit nocere in this kind, this day is a memoriall to us, and to all our poſterity, even to the children yet unborne: In GODS Annointed, not touched I cannot ſay, for touched he was, and more than touched: But, in the touch, there is no great matter (we ſaid) but for the hurt; ſo that in the end, not hurt, is as good, as not touched. As good, nay better, for a Halleluja. For to be touched, as he was, and to take no hurt, is a greater delivery farre, than at all not to be touched. To go through the Red Sea, and not wet a threed: To have been in the fornace, and no ſent of the fire; that, is the miracle. So, to have been touched, and taken by the throat (that the marke was to be ſeene, many dayes after;) To be thruſt at, and throwne downe, as He was, and yet no harme (Hîc eſt potentia) Here was the power, and here was the mercy of God; Here it was certainly, and that ſo ſenſibly, ye might even touch it.

1 And here Halleluja firſt: and we to praiſe Him, that when Nolite tangere would not ſerve in word, made Non permiſit nocere, to ſerve indeed: Came forth, firſt, with Non permiſit nocere, as with His ſhield, and ſo ſhielded him, that he ſuffered him not to take any hurt at all; Annointed the ſhield, made it ſlippery, their hands ſlid off, their touch did him no harme. Non permiſit was as His ſhield, that He brought forth to ſave

2 him. But beſides it, He brought forth His ſword too, and cut them ſhort: Corripuit eos, was His ſword, touched them with it, and twitched them for touching His Anointed, touched them with Pharaoh's tactus maximi, that the marks of it will be ſeen upon them and theirs, for ever.

3 For either of theſe ſeverally, a ſeverall Halleluja: but eſpecially, for not ſevering them, but letting them meet and go together; Eripuit, and corripuit, both joyntly arme in arme. Not either alone, this or that. Not permiſit nocere, ſed corripuit, ſuffered them to do hurt, but rebuked them: No, but Non permiſit, & corripuit both, ſuffered them not to doe any hurt; and rebuked them, and cut them ſhort too beſides.

And this happy conjunction of theſe both, is it, which maketh the ſpeciall increaſe of our thanks this yeare, more than the laſt, or any before. For that, ſince, and very lately, GOD, that ſuffered not Him, hath ſuffered ſome other King, to be touched, as farre as his life. True: He that did that execrable act, Corripuit eum, GOD touched him, touched him as he did the Mountaines, Tange montes, & fumigabunt, touched Pſal. 144. 5. him, till he ſmoaked againe. What of that? In the meane time a great Prince is fallen. But permiſit nocere, He ſuffered the King to take hurt: And as for non permiſit nocere, GOD did not Him that favour.

I Not him, but Ours he did: And did it, for the manner, not without miracle, if we compare the caſes. For, He was then ſitting in the midſt of diverſe his Nobles. No likelihood, that any would come neare him, to offer but to touch Him: If he did, there was odds, there would have been many a non permiſit, he ſhould never have been ſuffered to do it. One man, for all that, one, and no more, did it; Diverſe were neare him; None of them, All of them kept him not from his harme. But Ours, was all alone, ſhut up, and ſo left as one forſaken; not many, nay not any, no helpe at all, neare him. And not one alone, and no more, but three there were to touch him: yet even then, even in that caſe, God non permiſit nocere, ſuffered not, not any of them, nor all of them, to touch him, ſo as they did him any hurt.

And even in the manner of the Non permiſit, God ſhewed himſelfe more than marvellous: for, it was not, God only ſuffered him not to be hurt; but miraculouſly he made, that of them, that came to break His Nolite, even of them, one, that was ſet, that was ready armed to have touched, and to have hurt him, he, even that party, Non permiſit, would not, did not ſuffer the other to do him any hurt; ſed corripuit, but rebuked him, gave the Noli tangere to the other, ſpake this very Text, and ſtayed his hand, that would have done it. This was a Non permiſit indeed; worth a Halleluja, and after it, came there at the leaſt three other Non permiſit's more. But I have preſumed too much already: I will not enter into them, but end.

The

The more they were, the more are we bound to magnifie GOD, and to bleſſe His holy name; yearely, yea weekly, yea daily to ſing our Hallelujа of praiſe, and thanks to him for this dayes Non permiſit, and for this dayes corripuit, for them both. That, what He ſpeaks in this Text, He made good upon this day: Shewed, He would not have His Annointed touched: Shewed, He was diſpleaſed with them, that did touch him: kept Him without hurt, and cut them ſhort: ſhortened their armes, they could doe Him no harme, ſhortened their lives for attempting to do it: ſcattered them firſt, in the imaginations of their hearts; and then after, made them periſh in that their wicked enterpriſe: and hath made this Nolite, this precept, to us, Præceptum cantabile, a Precept Pſalme-wiſe, that we may ſing it to Him. There is another, in another place, of another dittie and tune, wherein he takes up a dolefull complaint, thus: But thou haſt caſt off thine Annointed, and art diſpleaſed with him. The dayes of his life haſt thou ſhortened, and caſt his Crowne downe to the ground. With them indeed it is, Præceptum flebile, but with us, Cantabile. Praiſe we Him for it. Pſal. 119. 54. Pſal. 89. 38. 44. 45.

And withall, pray we alſo, that as this day He did not, nor hitherto He hath not; ſo henceforth Malignus nè tangat eum, the malignant wicked one may never touch Him: never may any have the will; or if have the will, never have the power to doe Him hurt: Suffer Him not to be touched, or, if ſuffer him to be touched, ſuffer not their touch to do him any harme, no more than this day it did: Make all Nolentes, with his Nolite; if not, come with His Non permiſit, that he may ever be ſafe; and ſtraight after, with his corripuit, that they may ever be taken ſhort, that offer it. This day He ſuffered them not: nor let Him ever ſuffer any. This day he cut thoſe ſhort; ſo may He ever doe them all: And ever make this Statute, our Song, all the dayes of our Pilgrimage. This is now the tenth yeare, and ſo theſe the Decennalia of it: That as this day it is, ſo it may ſtill be celebrated, from ten yeares to ten yeares, many ten yeares more. 1 Ioh. 5. 18.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE,

At BURLEIGH neere OKEHAM,
ON THE V. OF AVGVST,
Anno Dom. MDCXIV.

PSALME LXXXIX.

Verſe 20. I have found David My ſervant: with My holy oyle have I annointed him.

21. My hand ſhall hold him faſt (or ſtabliſh him:) and Mine arme ſhall ſtrengthen him.

22. The enemie ſhall not be able to doe him violence: the Son of wickedneſſe ſhall not hurt him.

23. But, I will ſmite downe his foes before his face: and plague them that hate him.

WE have found here a Text, wherein (we ſee) God found David: and wherein, David found GOD. GOD, found David His ſervant: and David found GOD, his good and gracious LORD: firſt, to Annoint him, then to deliver him: So to deliver him, as his enemies did him no hurt: Nay ſo, that the hurt came to themſelves; And they (as we read) were ſmitten downe before him.

And do not this text and this day ſomewhat reſemble one another? To my thinking they do. For, who is there that hearing in the Pſalme this, that violence was offered to David by a ſonne of wickedneſſe; but withall, he ſhall think of the wicked attempt of this Day. Who, that (for all that) that) they did David no harme: but your Majesties like deliverie, will come into his mind? Who, that Davids enemies were smitten downe: but it will lead him straight to the very same end of Yours. And who can doubt, that it was the same hand and arme, and of the same God in both? And that He, that did the one, did the other?

King David, He is in Scriptures, not persona Regis only, the person of a King; but Persona Regum, a person representing all Kings to come after him; such specially, as with David, serve and worship GOD in truth. We do safely therefore, what is said to him, apply to them all, since he is the type of them all.

But most safely, to such a King (if any such be) where there is a correspondence of like events between David and him: that, what was Covenanted to the one, is performed to the other. For there GOD Himself is our warrant, and even points us so to apply it.

As here now; I find a prophecie, or a promise. A prophecie of Ethan (his is the Psalme) or a promise of GOD. And I find this prophecie fulfilled: and this promise made good to your Majesty. What promised to David, made good to You; and made good this Day: What is said in the Text, done on the Day. What doubt we then to apply it to the present? And, since it fell on this day, what better day than this, for me to treat, or You to heare, or for us all to thank GOD for it?

The Summe. The Text hath the name, from the first word of it, I have found. A finding it is.

Two wayes, may a thing be found: One, when a thing is found at first, and never was before: Another, when it is afterward lost, and found againe: Both here; David is twice found.

Found first, and annointed at the first verse. Found again, and delivered, at the third.

Psal. 78. 71. GOD found him first among his ewes, tooke him thence, annointed him, and of a Shepheard made him a King. And being a King, found him after among his enemies, in danger to lose both crowne and life: and so, being as good as lost, found him againe. It is hard to say, whether of these, is the greater: We will not strive, both are in the Text. And either hath his day (I sought but for one day, but I found two) and both for our turne.

According to which (somwhat strangely, but for our purpose, fitly) I may divide it into the XXIV, or XXV. of July, the day of your first finding for your Annointing or Coronation; and the V. of August, the day of your latter finding, for Your deliverance or preservation.

The Verses are foure: the points in them, eight (two in each) of which eight, some be past, some to come in the text: (All past with you.) Past two, 1 Inveni, 2 Vnxi, the finding, the annointing. To come, all the other six; all in the future, shall or will. Two shall's, 1 My hand shall, 2 My arme shall. Two shall not's, 1 The enemy shall not, 2 The sonne of wickednesse shall not. Two will's, 1 I will smite, 2 I will plague. And all six comprised in a League or Covenant, which GOD is pleased to make with David, upon his annointing: and are as so many clauses or articles of it.

Which league is made, pro & contra. Pro, with and for David, in the second: And Contra, against his enemies, in the two last. And that, both defensive, in the third: and offensive, in the fourth. So, a perfect League.

The Division We shall pursue it thus. 1. Of his finding, first. 2. Then of his annointing. 3. Thirdly, of GODS covenant-making with him. 4. And to this of the covenant-making, we will add a fourth of the covenant-keeping. Which, is indeed out of the text, but not out of the day though. And, we preach on the day, as well as on the text. Which keeping of the covenant, I hold to be a part full as necessarie, though it be without, as the making of it, though it be within the text. That then, be our fourth, and this our order.

The

THE first word, is I, that is GOD. He, is the ſpeaker, and beſpeaker: the finder and the anointer: the faſt-holder, and the ſtrengthner: the reſcuer and the revenger of David, and in him (as the type) of all Kings. Not one of theſe, but is within the very letter of the Text. For, this firſt perſon [I,] goeth clean through to the end, and (as it were) ingroſſeth them all to himſelfe. Of the finding firſt. I. I (that is) God

The points in it are foure. 1. The Perſon firſt, GOD it is that found. 2. Then the manner, Inveni; found by ſeeking. 3. Thirdly, the cauſe why he found David: for He found him Servum Meum. All theſe three are inventio. 4. And, having found him laſtly, He proclaimes it here, cries ἵνρκα, I have found (that is) Inventi prædicatio.

All Kings, are found by God: But in David, there is ſomewhat ſingular. He was not a King only, but a King (as we may ſay) of the firſt head. For, before he was found, he was a private man: God found him, and annointed him (that is) of a private perſon, made Him a King. His ſeed alſo, were to ſucceed him, by vertue of the entaile, Verſe 4. But, he was the firſt King of his race: as in every race of Kings, there was ſuch an one, that at firſt was found out. In him, in ſuch an one, finding is moſt needfull: In them that ſucceed, there ſhall need no ſuch ſeeking, they are found to his hand; Onely anoint them, and no more adoe. God found David.

This then, we finde firſt; that Kings were of Gods finding at the firſt. God (we ſee) takes it to Himſelf, I have found. They are then, no humane invention, deviſed or taken up by man: but found by God. They came not out of mans braine: but ex cerebro Iovis, inventum Dei, of Gods finding forth. I

As of His finding, in this verſe: ſo of His exalting, in the very next before. I have exalted one, one choſen out of the people. Look you, there comes two at once; exalted and choſen. Neither choſen, nor exalted by the people; but by GOD, out of the people. Not they, out of themſelves: but GOD, out of them. Marke that point well.

As, for his finding in this, and exalting in that: ſo (within a verſe or two following) of his adopting too. There, God ſaith; He (that is) the King ſhall call me, Thou art my Father. Where we ſee, whereto he was choſen; whither exalted: even, to be the Sonne of God. And not every ſonne neither: but His heire, His eldeſt. For, ſo it followeth, I will make him my firſt-borne. So Filius Dei he is, primogenitus Dei: And what would we more? Then is not David, filius populi, God forbid. Never father him upon them. No adoptive; no foundling of theirs. His finding, chooſing, exalting, adopting, God takes them all, to Himſelf.

Shall I let you ſee it ad oculum, this; that it was none, but God? Not the people (no colour for them.) Full little knew they, or any of them; not the Elders of Bethlehem: Nor did ever imagine any ſuch thing in hand, when Samuel went about it, when David was firſt found. 1 Sam. 16.4.

Nay, nor the Saints found him not neither, till God (as it is in the verſe next before) ſpake to them in a viſion, and told them of it. Verſe 19.

Nay, not he, of whom there is moſt likely-hood, the Prophet himſelfe (Samuel) he found him not, he could not finde him, till God did it for him, and ſaid to him, This is he. All this is, 1 Sam. 16. Thus, God, in David, would let us ſee at firſt, that it was He that found Kings, and none but he. If Samuel the Prophet had beene let alone, it had not beene King David, but King Eliab: he would have found him. If Abiathar the High Prieſt had had his will, it had not beene King Salomon, but King Adonijah, it is well knowne. So then, neither People, nor Saints; nor Prophet nor Prieſt; but God it was, of Himſelfe and by Himſelfe. He to have the honour of this invention, 1 Sam. 16.6. 1 Reg. 1.7.

And if Kings be the invention of GOD, then are not their inventions of GOD, (theſe I mean that have been broched of late) that finde Kings, or found Kings upon any but GOD: that make Prophet, Prieſt, or People, King-finders, or King-founders, or aſcribe this invention to any, but to him in the Text. This for the perſon, I have found.

2 Found Him inveni.

How found (the ſecond) by hap? No, it is inveni: in that word is the manner of it. Every tongue hath a proper word to ſever things ſought and ſo found; from things found without ſeeking: you know--Tu non inventa, reperta es. David then, was not; Kings are not reperti, hit upon at adventure, or ſtumbled on by chance: they are not ἔ τυχέντων. No, they are inventi: firſt ſought, and ſo found upon ſearch. Will ye heare it totidem verbis: Quæſivi mihi hominem, ſaith God of David, I have ſought me out a man, 1 *Sam.*23.14.

Not, that any is hid from Him, that He need ſeeke Him; It is but in our owne phraſe to expreſſe to our capacities, how GOD ſtood affected to the having of Kings. So ſet to have them, that rather than not have them, He would doe as we doe, even take the paines to ſeek them out. Now, the endeavour to ſeeke, is from no velleity, no faint will; No, it is from a deſire that faine would finde. And that deſire, is from no meane conceit (if it come, ſo it is; if not, no great matter;) but from ſome ſpeciall good conceit, we have of that, we ſeek for, that we hold it worth the time we ſpend, worth the labour we beſtow about it. All is, but to ſhew us the worth of this invention. For it is no meane thing (we may be ſure) that God will ſeeke. Seeking them, He ſhewes, He holds them for ſuch, as He would not be without them Himſelfe; He would not have His people in any wiſe, be without them. And that He would not have them thought as good loſt as found, but eſteemed for ſuch by us, as if we had them not, we would (by His example) ſet our ſelves to ſeeke them ſeriouſly, and never leave, till we have found them. This for the manner.

3 Found him his ſervant.

But then thirdly; ſeeking, why found He David, rather than any other? We finde the reaſon of that, in Servum meum, becauſe He found him His ſervant. For a ſervant He ſought, to whom He might commit the higheſt point of His ſervice, the care of His people. And He found him ſo zealous for His flocke, to keep them from being a prey to ſtrange beaſts, as He thought him meet, to be made of Paſtor ovium, Paſtor hominum. He found him ſo devout at his ſervice, that He ſet him in ſuch a place, as if he were the Servant of GOD he might make ten thouſand more beſide himſelf.

Theſe two words then, we may not ſlip over; the claime of the Covenant (after) lyeth by them. And if the Covenant hath not beene kept with any, it hath been for default of this, that he hath found him; him, but not him, His Servant.

Yea, if any King be found by GOD before he doe, or by courſe of nature can doe him any ſervice (ſuppoſe in his cradle;) yet even to ſuch a one, is not this word, without fruict. It hath his uſe (this) not only in making them to be found, but in keeping them from being loſt. For the ſame, that was the way to be found at firſt: the very ſame, is the way not to be loſt ever after. And it concernes David or any, as nearely, not to be loſt againe, as it doth at firſt to be found.

Now, if David look well to theſe two words, and loſe them not, God will not loſe him (he may be ſure) but be at hand ſtill ready to defend him. Unleſſe David loſe them; he cannot loſe GOD: and unleſſe he loſe GOD, he cannot be loſt. David ever loſt them, before his enemies could doe him any harme. All Balaam's curſing will doe him no hurt; nothing but his wicked counſaile, to unmake him his ſervant, and ſo to loſe GOD, and ſo to be loſt of GOD, and ſo to be loſt, utterly loſt. Lay up this then; The way to ſervari à Deo, is to ſervire Deo. And lay it up well; it is the only Article of Covenant on David's part: Upon theſe two words depends all that followes (upon Servum meum:) If they be ſure, all is ſure. And this for inventio.

Num. 31.16.

God tels it, I have found.

But, I find here, inventi prædicatio beſides. To find is one thing, to cry εὕρηκα, inveni, I have

I have found another. One may finde, and keep his own counſaile: (ſo men do for the moſt part.) But God here proclaimes His finding; tels all, He hath found. And none do ſo, but ſuch as are ſurpriſed with joy: as the partie in the Canticles, Inveni quem quæſivit anima mea, I have found whom my ſoule ſought, and I would the world knew it, I am not a little glad of it. Commonly, where there is care in ſeeking, as before, there is joy in finding. Joy then: and it is not joy alone (for, one may gaudere in ſinu, keep his joy to himſelfe) but gaudium cum gloria, this. For, he not onely joyes in his invention, but glories in it, and even boaſts of it, that doth inventum prædicare. The word (which he uſeth) εὕρηκα is made famous by Archimedes, who in a great paſſion between glorying and rejoycing, firſt cried it, when he had found the ſecret of King Hiero's Crowne. But no leſſe famous by Saint Andrew, Ioh. 1.41. Who, upon the finding of CHRIST, came running to his brother Saint Peter, with Archimedes's cry, We have found Him (the Meſsias) we have found Him. Meſsias in Hebrew is nothing elſe but annointed: and, we ſhall ſee David annointed ſtraight. And ſure, next to the joy of Chriſt (Chriſtus Dominus) we may place the joy of Chriſtus Domini; and take up, our next εὕρηκα for him. God's word will well become us, to uſe.

And to whom is this? To his Saints: to them, he tels it (looke the laſt verſe before:) As if they, had their part in this finding, ſo invites he them, to the fellowſhip of the ſame joy. Tels them, that ſuch a one He had found; and for them, and for their good He had found him. They, to reape ſpeciall benefit by it, by this finding; therefore, they to take ſpeciall notice of it, they ſpecially to rejoyce with him for it. Ioy to His Saints by it.

And what ſhould I ſay, but as this Pſalm ſaith a little before, Beatus populus qui ſcit jubilationem, Bleſſed are the people that can skill of this joy, that can skill of their owne good: What it is to have a King, a King found to their hand, but ſpecially a King, that is God's ſervant. Verily, if God's Ioy be our joy: it is to be with us, as with God it was; this εὕρηκα the εὕρηκα of joy. And truly, all this Text, both that which is paſt (his care in ſeeking, and his joy in finding) and that which followeth, his honour in annointing, his mercy in making this Covenant, his truth in keeping it: His reſcuing them, from; his revenging them, upon their Enemies: All is, but to ſhew us how much He doth, and (if we will do, as He doth) how much we are to doe, even to ſet by, even to joy, and glory with Him, in Inveni Davidem Servum Meum. And this for his finding. Now no more adoe, but proceed to his annointing. I Ioy of the finding. Verſ. 15.

To what end then, found? To annoint. Very many are found, very few ſo found, ſcarce one of many millions. But they, that are ſo found, are eo ipſo the greateſt perſons; and of the higheſt Calling upon earth. So much is there, in this word annointing. And this alſo, God takes to Himſelfe: unxi, no leſſe, than the former, inveni. Finds, and annoints both. Found to Annoint. God the Annointer.

And both the Act His, and the oyle His. Vnxi, I did it; and oleo meo, My oyle it was I did it with. So finds Kings, and finds oyle, and finds fingers, and all. Nothing goeth to them, but it is God's. The oyle is God's.

It ſeemeth otherwiſe. Samuel could not finde him indeed: but we finde, he did annoint him, though. He did ſo, but not as of himſelfe: what he did, in the Perſon of God he did it. And the Law is, what one doth by another, not, that other, but himſelfe is ſaid to do it, to be the Authour of the deed. For this muſt ſtand true, that God here ſaith Himſelfe, That whoſe fingers ſoever were uſed, GOD it was that annointed him. And annointed him with oyle, holy oyle, His holy oyle. 1 Sam. 16.13.

Oyle: We can never find Kings in Scripture, but ſtill we find this word with them. We find them in oyle, and oyle is for continuance. The colours of the Crowne are not water-colours, to fade by and by; they be laid in oyle, to laſt and to hold out all weathers. So, in oyle, not in water. I With oyle.

And in oyle, not in wine. For though the Samaritan have both, and there is uſe of both, in time and place: Yet here, onely with oyle. There is no acrimonie, nothing corroſive, in it: it is gentle, ſmooth, and ſuppling. All to teach them, a prime quality of their calling, to put in oyle enough; to cheriſh that vertue, that the ſtreames of it may be ſeene, and the ſent of it may be felt of all. For, that will make David to be David: that is (as his name is) truly beloved.

Luke 10.34.

2 With holy oyle

Oyle, and holy oyle. Holy, not onely to make their Perſons ſacred, and ſo free from touch or violating (all agree of that:) but even their Calling ſo, alſo. For, holy unction, holy function.

Now, this holy oyle troubles the Ieſuite ſhrewdly, and all thoſe, that ſeek to unhallow the Calling of Kings. For, if the holy oyle be upon them, why ſhould they be ſequeſtred quite, from holy things, more than the other two, that have but the ſame oyle? Indeed (as they ſay) if they were but to deale with common matters, common oyle would have ſerved well enough (and ſo, they would faine have it;) but this place choaks them: This holy oyle here. And their Calling, by vertue of this, being holy, what ſhould let them, in their kinde to deale with thoſe, either perſons or matters, that are but as the oyle is, wherewith they are annointed? How fond is it, to imagine them to be annointed with holy oyle, to deale only in unholy matters, and not to meddle with any thing that holy is!

3 With His holy oyle.

Holy oyle, and His holy oyle. For, His holy, is more than holy. His, is another manner oyle, than the materiall, in the Prophet's horne, or in the Prieſt's phiall. His drops immediately from the true Olive, the Holy Ghoſt (He the true Olive, as Chriſt the true Vine.) Samuels, is but a ceremony: this, the ſubſtance of the annointing. It is, in this, as in Baptiſm: there, Iohn with water; Chriſt with the Holy Ghoſt: And, that is the ſoul of Baptiſm. So here, Samuel ſheds on the oyle of the Tabernacle, God He adds his from heaven; the ſame, and no other than Chriſt was annointed with: that oyle is it: that, the annointing indeed. He indeed above his fellowes, for He had the Spirit above meaſure: But He ſo above them, as He with them, and they with Him, with His, with the ſame annointing; both.

Pſal. 45.8. Ioh. 3.34.

2 Ioy of the annointing. Pſal. 45.8.

And, it is not from the purpoſe, that His oyle, is by the Pſalme called the oyle of gladneſſe: That; as we are glad even now, for his finding: ſo, may we alſo now, for his annointing. And by and by, glad againe, for his delivering. And ſo, glad in him, God make us, for them all. It is a day of Joy: I would not omit any thing, that might tend to it. And this for the firſt verſe, finding and annointing, and (if ye will) for the twenty nineth of Iuly. Now to the ſecond verſe.

Verſ. 21. The League.

Having annointed him, the firſt thing He doth, is to enter a league with him. And, we are glad of that. For, having found him now, we would be glad to keepe him. And, there is no ſurer way for that, than to joyne him in a league, with the mightieſt King (by farre) of the whole world, the King of Kings, God Himſelfe.

And, God Himſelf is willing with it, offers it. And ſure He hath reaſon ſo to do. Seeing He hath found him, He will not ſee him loſt. David ſerves him, He will ſervare ſervum. He annointed him, and made him holy, He will not ſee him uſed prophanely. But, the eye that found him, ſhall watch over him: the hand that annointed him ſhalbe at hand, to defend him.

It is a League or Covenant.

So hitherto, GOD found David, Now, David finds GOD, willing to undertake his quarrell: and even to covenant with him, ſo to do. For, it is not a bare promiſe, this: it is a Covenant, and ſo termed expreſly, at the 3. and 28. verſes. And that, a Covenant ſolemnly ſworne, bound with an oath, at the 4. 35. And here now manus mea cum eo, He giveth him his hand upon it. His covenant, His oath, and His hand, what can there be more? This Covenant is made as ſure, as can be; and as ſurely kept, we ſhall ſee anon.

manus

The firſt Article of this Covenant, the article of Inprimis, is that His hand ſhall hold him faſt, or eſtabliſh: the ſecond, that His arme ſhall ſtrengthen him: (that is) covenants for the continuall preſence, and aſſiſtance of his power, ever to joyne with him, and ſtill to be ayding to him. The firſt and ſecond articles of the covenant Pro, for David

This power of it ſelf is but one, as God is one: but is ſet down thus, here and elſwhere, in two words, the hand and the arme, the mighty hand and the out-ſtretched arm, to ſet forth two degrees of it. Both great, but one greater. That of the hand, is great; as we read, 13. verſe before, yet but ordinary. That of the arme, is greater, and commeth forth, but upon extraordinary occaſion: Every thing we put not to the armes end. Gods hand, Gods arme.

Not, that theſe degrees of difference are in the power it ſelfe, which is entire, quoad ſe; but onely, to proportion it, and make it anſwerable to our perils: which are not alwayes alike, but leſſe or more, at one time than another: and ſo ſeeme to us, to require a degree of power, according. For the leſſe, the hand ſeems enough: but for the more, the arme; a greater degree of power, as our perill is greater.

No day goeth over our head, but the horſe we ride on, the ſtaires we go up and downe by, the very meat we eat, we are in danger, leſt it go the wrong way. For, theſe, for every dayes dangers, we cannot miſſe the hand; and the hand is enough, if it do but hold us faſt.

But this day, the fifth of Auguſt, and ſuch another, the fifth of November, the caſe is altered: then, Riſe up, riſe up thou arme of the Lord, riſe up and ſtretch out thy ſelfe: another manner of jeopardie, then. So, in a word, the hand for all the yeare: the arme for the fifth of Auguſt. Now there is no jeopardie ſo great, but the arme, if it ſtretch it ſelfe out, will ſerve to preſerve us. And this arme is ever ſtretched out, when GOD vouchſafeth ſome ſtrange miraculous deliverance: as this day He did. For this, was Dies brachii: on it, the arme of the Lord was revealed. Eſa. 51. 9. Eſa. 53. 1.

Both theſe: and either hath his proper attribute: the hand, to eſtabliſh, and the arme, to ſtrengthen.

To eſtabliſh: that is, to make ſteady, that he ſtand faſt, and be not moved. It is ἰσχὺς the paſſive power, to reſiſt: ſuch, as of the anvile, or of the rock. Hand to ſtabliſh him.

To ſtrengthen: (that is) when we are further to encounter our perill actively, and are too weak for it; for, that giveth δύναμις the active power, that ſtrikes them downe: as the ſword, or halberd in the hand of the mighty. Arme to ſtrengthen.

Both theſe: and both neceſſary, for the performance of this league: Which is, both defenſive in the next verſe, to keep them, that they take no hurt: and offenſive, in the laſt verſe, to pay their enemies their due, and to ſtrike them downe.

This then is the ſumme of the two firſt articles. The hand ſhall never be off him, but on him all the yeare long, for every dayes danger. But, if further need be, if ſome very great hazard, if the fifth of Auguſt, then out comes the arme. But ſo, as both; both hand and arme and every ſinew in them, are ready ſtill, and at hand as occaſion ſhall be, to ſtabliſh or ſtrengthen him. This, for the ſecond verſe, the league: And all this is for him: Pro.

Why, what needs all this? this holding, this fortifying? Is there any harme toward? I cannot tell: it was ſomwhat a ſuſpicious word (in the verſe paſt) of holding him and holding him faſt; as if there were ſome ſhoving at him. The Greek is more full, συναντιλάβηται. For, in that word, there is ἀντὶ God holds him: and then ἀντιλαμβάνει, as it were, another plucks at him: and then συναντιλαμβάνεται, God holds him harder or faſter than before. This was but ſuſpicious. But here now, it is paſt all ſuſpicion: for here, are a couple, making toward him (1 the enemie, and 2 the ſonne of wickedneſſe:) It is to be The third and fourth articles Contra, againſt Davids foes: Defenſive.

doubted, for no good. Here is now the fifth of Auguſt: Here comes GODS ſecond finding him. For in his enemies hand now he is, get out how he can.

The Devils finding or invention.

I told you before, that Kings were GODS invention: here now comes the Devils invention. For, as GOD findes Kings, ſo the Devill findes Traitors. God findes David, the Devill findes Abſalom: God, your Majeſtie; the Devill, thoſe of this day.

And (as evill ever is more fertile) for one King, there are two, in the Text: and there were two, on the day: and I would to God, two were all. But this is to be counted of, Satan the Arch-enemie (ſo ſignifies his name) will be ſure to find Kings, enemies. The father of wickedneſſe, will finde his whelpes ready ever for ſo wicked an enterpriſe.

And now, theſe are they, contra quos, whom againſt this league is made: For by vertue of the league, God and David, they have friends and enemies in common. Enemie to one (the King;) and enemie to both (God and the King.) 1. Of the parties firſt. 2. Then of their attempt. 3. And laſt of their ſucceſſe.

I
The Parties: The enemy. The ſonne of wickedneſſe. Son exegeticè. Prov. 31. 3.

The parties. Two titles they have in the Text, 1 the enemie, 2 the ſonne of wickedneſſe. Exegeticè ſome take them, both for one: and then the later gloſſeth the former: and then the meaning is, that Davids enemies are all of them the ſonnes of wickedneſſe. And indeed ſuch they were, and none but ſuch. For God forbid any good man ſhould be Davids enemie. In this ſenſe it is true. For, all of them Qui vias dant ad perdendos Reges, but much more, qui vias docent; that would have them loſt, whom God even now with ſuch joy found; that ſeek to deface Gods invention: You may boldly pronounce of them, they be the ſonnes of wickedneſſe all: as flat againſt God, as perdere is againſt invenire, perdition againſt invention; and their will, againſt his will. For His will is, Quos Deus invenit, homo ne perdat: and Quos Deus invenit, homo perdat, ſay they. And this, if both be for one.

The enemy, the ſonne of wickedneſſe, two diſtinct. Verſe 12.

But if (as the words give, and the beſt Writers take them) they ſtand for a paire, for two diſtinct: then, by the enemy, is meant he that is ſo profeſſed: Plaine, by the LV. Pſalme, It was not an open enemie: where the word is the ſame, that here (that is) ſuch an one as Golias was. But by the ſonne of wickedneſſe, is meant, the cloſe hollow Traytor, ſuch as was his wicked ſonne.

They be the ſonnes of wickedneſſe.

And it is good, they know their pedigree theſe fellowes, of what linage they are. That is, wickedneſſes owne ſonnes: as if the other, the enemy, were but allyed to it, in ſome degree; but theſe, the true of-ſpring, the lively image of the Devill. For, if they be the ſonnes, and he the Father, they be as neere of bloud, as may be. So, they ſee their true deſcent, ſonnes of wickedneſſe.

What wickedneſſe it is. John 15. 25. Pſal. 109. 5.

And it is worth the while to know, of what wickedneſſe. Evill it is, to be wicked upon what pretence ſoever: But, oderunt me gratis, is worſe; for that is of meere malignity. But mala pro bonis, is worſt of all. And ſuch are theſe, ſuch their wickedneſſe. Sonnes of עִוְלָה: which עִוְלָה the Hebrewes tell us, is properly the naughtineſſe of ſome evill natur'd children, that bite the nipple, which giveth them milke. That is עִוְלָה right: (the worſt and moſt wicked wickedneſſe of all others.) To bite and ſuck, both at once. But ſuch there are, the better they be dealt with, the worſe ſtill, ye ſhall finde them.

The Sonne of wickedneſſe the more dangerous

Now of the twaine theſe are farre the more dangerous: as you may ſee by the very courſe or ſtanding of them in the Text. For referendo ſingula ſingulis (as we uſe to doe:) the hand before (as the former there) properly referres to the enemy (as the former here:) but the arme, the later there, that referres to the ſonnes of wickedneſſe, even by the courſe of the two verſes. As if, for the enemie, the hand were ſufficient: but for theſe, arme and all, were little enough.

2 Sam. 21. 16.

And ſure, ye ſhall obſerve, that David, that the ſonne of David, CHRIST; that Chriſtus Dominus, and Chriſtus Domini both, hath ever been moſt in danger of this kinde of cattell. David, he was once in danger, and never but once, by Iſhbenob, an open enemy. But his great dangers, were by theſe here, the ſonnes of wickedneſſe, his wicked ſonne Abſalom, his wicked Counſellor Achitophel. And indeed all his great, were by this ſecond ſort.

And

And our Saviour Chriſt His furious enemies, they that would have throwne him headlong downe the hill, they that would have ſtoned him, they did him no hurt: but, that falſe harlot Iudas, that ſonne of wickedneſſe, hee did. And I pray to God, hee may; and I beſeech David heartilie, Hee would take this to heart, and take heed of theſe. The danger of theſe, the ſonnes of wickedneſſe, it was the danger of this day. Luk. 4. 29. Ioh. 8. 59. 10 3

Will ye now ſee their proceedings and practices? They be in theſe three words; 1 Violence, 2 Wickedneſſe, 3 Hurt. Violence they meane, that is their end, and with wickedneſſe they cover it (that is) with one wicked pretence or other, the better to make the way, to doe the hurt they intend. Alas, nothing but a vow at Hebron (ſaid wicked Abſalom) when he vowed indeed, to deprive King David, both of his Kingdome and life. Not loſe the Sermon for any good (ſaith he of this day;) when he had in his heart violence and hurt; no leſſe hurt, than the loſſe of your Majeſties life. This is the way of them all: Violence wrapped about, with a vow, or a Sermon, or I wot not what; that before it be ſeen, it may do the miſchiefe, that is meant. This holy wickednesſe, is ſimply the worſt of all. O Lord, what dangers are they in, that are in this caſe! How neere being loſt! Now, the ſucceſſe. 2 Their attempt, Violence. Wickedneſſe, hurt.

For, at the name of Violence, at but the mention of hurt, every good heart is moved, and come running in about David, to ſee if any hurt. But there is no hurt done (God be bleſſed) None done: what ſoever meant, none is done. And, he fals (if you marke:) No violence; nay, not ſo much, as the leaſt hurt. For they be two, theſe, violence and hurt: and hurt, is the more larger. Any violence done? Nay, none: Any hurt at all? Nor that neither. Neither? all is ſafe then. 3 Their ſucceſſe, No violence, No hurt.

Where ye ſee, the firſt uſe of this hand and arme; to repell and keepe backe violence: to beare off the blow that ſhould do them hurt. This is the defenſive part. And it is much to their comfort that this hand ſo holds them, and this arme is ſo over them, as it is ſtill betweene them and their harmes: as it lights on Gods arme and hand, and muſt hurt them, before it come at David. But them, it cannot hurt, neither violent wickedneſſe, nor wicked violence prevaile againſt them; And ſo be they ſafe, from both. And no way to prevaile againſt Kings, but to bind this hand firſt, and pinion this arme. Otherwiſe, evill men there may be, and evill meaning; but no evill ſucceſſe, for all that.

But, I would pray you, to take good heed, to the Tenor of this Covenant. No promiſe is here made, but that ſuch he ſhall have: and ſhall have of both ſorts, open and ſecret: open, to offer violence; ſecret, privily to ſeek his hurt. No, though he be David (that is) lovely, or as lovely, as ever was he, yet he ſhall have thoſe that hate him; hate him gratis, hate him though favours done them; though they lie in his lap, and are fed with his milk, yet bite him for al that. No part of the covenant this, but ſuch he ſhall have, but ſuch there ſhall be. 1 Not, there ſhal be no enemies, No ſonne of wickedneſſe.

Nor no promiſe neither, but as they ſhall be, ſo they ſhall be doing (as we ſay:) not ſit idle, but be plotting and practiſing, ever and anon. It is but, non proficient (ſo read the Fathers this verſe) the Covenant in the Text: it is not non facient. No, facient, facient quod ſuum eſt iniquitatis filii, (ſaith S. Auguſtine well;) the ſons of wickedneſſe ſhall be doing, and doe their kind, that is wickedly; Entend Violence, pretend ſome wicked wile or other. No part of the Covenant, but ſuch there ſhall be: Nor no part of the Covenant, but thus they ſhall do. Let it not ſeeme ſtrange: look for it. 2 Not, they ſhall not be doing.

But this the Covenant, and this is all. The former part, be they ſhal, and be doing they ſhall, ſed non proficient in eo, they ſhall doe no good on him (in their ſenſe) that is, no evill (in ours.) 3 But they ſhall not doe it., Non proficient in eo.

And very fit is the word non proficient; that is, though they goe to Schoole all their dayes about it, yet ſhall they prove but non proficients, and never proceed ſo far, as to do it. So in the latter part, non apponent nocere; Not non proponent. Not, ſhall not have the purpoſe; but, ſhall not have their purpoſe. Not, ſhall not have the will; but, ſhall not have the power to doe hurt. Proffer they ſhall, but not profit. Deviſe, but what they deviſe, not to be able to performe: Imagine, but be ſcattered in the imaginations of Non apponent nocere. Pſal 21. 12. Luk. 1. 51.

their hearts. So that, come when they will come, they come a verse too late: David is provided of an hand and arme (in the verse before) that will see him take no hurt: that will be hurt themselves, rather than he take any: that will so fence him, as neither furie shall be able to do him any violence, by force; nor wickednesse to do him any hurt, by fraud. Neere lost, as good as lost, he may be: but quite lost he shall not be, God shall find him againe. And so to the last verse.

Vers. 23. The fifth and sixth Articles Contra. Against his enemies Offensive. I will smite downe.

Very well then, David is escaped from their violence and hurt, but shall they escape so? No: there is a further matter in it. All this, is but the defensive part: But the league (we find) was not only so, but offensive too; as well to offend and annoy them, as to defend and rescue him. And here now is the active power, we spake of before, of the strengthening of the arme. That, there is not only work for the hand to stay him, or hold out a shield, to beare off, that so no hurt to him; but for the arme also, to draw out a sword and lay on, that so all the hurt shall come to themselves. And so their imaginations not only scattered, but returned upon their owne heads. For, violence they intended, and were brought themselves to a violent end. Hurt they meant, and they are hurt themselves, and that, incurably, smitten down and perish.

Psal. 7. 16.

1 Yea, though no harme done, yet smite down.

2 Sam. 20. 21. Psal. 41. 9. Ester 1. 21, 22.

Three points I touch only, What? smite them downe and no harme done? Yea, no matter for that; downe with them, though. To lift up an hand, or an heele here, is enough. To offer violence, but to intend hurt, here enough. That there was none done, thanks be to God and the good hand that held them: Bigthan and his fellow, hang them up though. Not, quia nocuerunt, No: upon no other inditement, but quia voluerunt, they would have done the King hurt, though they did him none. That is enough, smite them downe.

2 Yea, at the first smite downe.

1 Sam. 21. 8.

Againe: what? at the very first, smite them downe? Yea, these, at the very first. With others, he proceeds not so roundly: smites them first before he smite them down; smites them a blow with the hand, in mercy; before he smite them down with the deadly blow of his arme, in rigour. But these, down with them, at the very first. Wot you why? Abisai he desired, he might have but one blow, at the King, he would never desire a second. Pay him, with his owne money: let him have but one blow, but the first, and no more.

3 How smite downe.

And what blow is it? to astonish him or to fell him, for the time? No: it is ἐκκόψω, say the Seventie. The nature of which word is, not to fell the stem or the trunke of the tree, but to hew in sunder the very roots, that it never grow againe: So to smite them downe, as they never rise more. I will smite downe.

And plague them.

And as if this were not enough, he followes them yet further. Before, he fell: No violence: nay, not any the least hurt: Here, he rises, smite them, nay, plague them, that is, smite them down with the plague, which is yet more fearefull. And it is truly turned, for מגפה is properly, the stroke of the plague.

Plague them in this life.

The plague in Gods account. Num. 16. 24. 26.

The plague is a death that we would not die of to choose; if smitten down, not smitten down, with that axe. Not, because it is deadly for the most part, and past recovery: (that is not it:) But, because they that be so smitten, there goeth from them, a pestilent noisome vapour, that makes all shun them, or, (as the Seventies word is) ἐκπίονται, runne away, yea fly away from them. And even so, from these, there goeth a sent, as from a plague-sore (you will beare with it, it is the HOLY GHOSTS owne terme) that taints their blood, corrupts their name, makes them and their memorie odious, yea, even an abhorring to all flesh. Say, what they will; this is the plague of plagues when all is done. And, it is GODS owne will, GOD Himselfe would have us, so reckon of them. Of Coreh (the first wee reade of in this kinde) GOD calls to Moses, Charge the people all, that they get them from about them. And Moses hee cries, Away, away from their Tents, touch not any thing that is theirs: as if hee should say, they have the plague, it is infectious. So, GOD would have us thinke of them: And so (I pray GOD) all may take warning from him, him, and ſo think of them, and ſhun them as perſons contagious, that have ſores running on them.

Now, this is but their plague on earth (to bee plagued in their end, their blood, their name;) but all this is nothing to their plagues in Hell: whither certainly they go, ſo many as in flagranti crimine, in the very act of treachery, are taken away. No man ſhall need to wiſh them, more hurt: They periſh and come to a fearefull end. It is truly ſaid by them, I will plague them. Plague them in the other life. Pſal. 73. 19.

Yet one more, that makes up all. For (if ye marke) the perſon is changed. The laſt verſe, it was, they ſhall do no violence, they ſhall do no hurt: Conſequently, he ſhould have gone on, they ſhall be ſmitten, they ſhall be plagued: that had been enough. It is not ſo, but in the firſt perſon, I will ſmite, I will plague: as if, God himſelfe would bee the doer of it, and do it even αὐτοχεὶς propriis manibus, with his owne hands. And ſurely, ſo ſenſible hath beene the demonſtration of the hand of his power, in the fall of theſe; that (to hold us to the terme of plague) Gods tokens have beene ſeene upon them: as if He had ſent his hand from on high, to plague them indeed. Upon theſe, this day; upon others ſince theſe, God hath from heaven, ſhewed, how much theſe attempts diſpleaſe him, by making even the prints of his hands, to be ſeen upon the attempters; that men have beene even forced to acknowledge, it was no humane or earthly, but ſome ſupernaturall divine power, that brought it to paſſe; And that, though other hands were in, yet God it was that ſtroock the ſtroke. This is the end, that in the end, ſhall come to all theſe from the Lord, ſo many as have any hand in the hurt of the Lords Anointed. He that is the founder of Kings, will be the Confounder of all Conſpirators. Carrie it as cloſely as they can, His hand ſhall find them out; find them out and ſmite them, ſmite them and plague them, plague them here, and for ever. This is the Covenant here made with David, in the name of Kings.

1 (That is) God himſelfe will smite. He will plague. Pſal. 144 7

And (I promiſe you) this is, a faire Covenant, and a full: but, might we ſee ſome proofe of it, how it was kept? For that, is Sal fœderis, the proofe, the keeping of it. For, many faire Covenants here in the World, take wind, for want of this ſalt of the Covenant (the true keeping.) Application to His Majeſtie.

Of David, there is no doubt, it was kept with him, but the time will not ſerve. And this time requireth rather, to ſhew the proofe of the preſents in your Majeſtie. That, this whole Text, (mutato nomine) hath been kept with you, from point to point: and the faithfull mercies of David (as Eſay cals them) as faithfull to you, as ever they were to him. Of that, then. Eſay 5. 3.

I find then, both theſe dayes, and on them, both theſe waies, you were found by God; found, the twentie ninth of Iulie, and anointed; found, the fifth of Auguſt, and delivered.

1 The twentie ninth of July Found in the Cradle and anointed.

Found firſt: and that, ſooner a great deale then David: for in your cradle: There He found you, and anointed you. David was come to yeares of diſcretion firſt, to do Him ſervice: But you, by his preventing grace found, before you were, or could be in caſe to doe him any. An antecedence even in this.

2 The twentie ninth of July, and the twenty fifth both twiſe anointed. 2 Sam. 2. 4. 5. 3

Nay He found you twiſe, to anoint you. Once, before you did, or could ſerve him: and after you could, and did, once more. Found you, the twentie ninth of July and the twentie fifth both. David was twiſe anointed too; but hee, but of two pieces of one Kingdome: but you, of two entire Kingdomes, or (indeed) of three, the leaſt of them greater than that of his, when both pieces were together. So an anointing alſo, more then he.

3 Found in the womb, and delivered, before ever anointed.

Some difference I find, but with vantage ſtill, on your ſide. For, in the Text David is firſt anointed, and after delivered. But you, were delivered, before ever anointed. For, before Hee found you in your cradle, there to anoint you; Hee found you in the womb (before ever you came into the world) there to deliver you: Even there, His hand was over you, that, even there, a Son of wickedneſſe did you no hurt. This is more, then is in the Text; more, then ever David could ſing of.

4 Delivered before anointed: Delivered againe the fifth of Auguſt.

But He not only thus delivered you before your birth, and ſo before your anointing: but, after it alſo, no leſſe: Witneſſe this fifth day of this moneth. So, were you you delivered first, and then annointed; and then, delivered againe from this day, and from being loſt on it. And thus far the Text.

5 And intea the ſe cond time 25. of Iuly, and Delivered after it 5. of November.

But then, were you anointed againe after that, and delivered againe after that, from a fifth day too, though of another moneth. For, either of your anointings, have had a famous deliverie, to ſecond it. So we double the point here. A deliverance in the womb, an annointing after that deliverance; A deliverance after that annointing; And then, an annointing againe; And then, a deliverance againe, upon that. So upon the matter, foure findings, with you; Twiſe to annoint, and twiſe to deliver: beyond David, beyond the Text here. So the Text, kept with you, over and over againe.

Application to the fifth of Auguſt, the day it ſelfe.

But to let the reſt goe and to hold us to this day. This day, if daies could ſpeake, (and dayes can ſpeake, ſaith the nineteenth Pſalme) would certifie that this covenant was kept with you, in every clauſe of the ſix, on this your finding-day.

Then found and ſound by God.

For, your finding-day well may it be called; well may it be ſaid, you were found on it, and found by God on it. Found, for ſure you were loſt: And found by God; for men had loſt you. They that gladly would, knew not how to find you, or get to you. Great odds then, but you had beene quite loſt. It was God that found you then, and made you to be found of them, not by any skill of their owne, or by any direction, but His. By hap, it might ſeeme: but your ſelfe doe, and we all acknowledge the hand of God in it. His providence, that ſo guided them; His doing it was, and they did it: So that God it was, that found you then, or we had not now found you here. It may then truly be called your finding-daie; and God truly ſay, the ſecond time, ευρηκα, I have found. Of it then, of this day.

1 No enemy profeſſed, but two Sons of wickedneſſe for it.

We ſhall faile a little, in the firſt point. Here is an enemie profeſſed: And you had not then, you never had any, profeſſed. To make amends for that, there is but one ſon of wickedneſſe in the Text: You found not one but two; and they found you.

2 A Son of wickedneſſe he was

Sons of wickedneſſe, well might they be called. For, if no Religion, taking Religion upon it, be wickedneſſe (as it is double wickedneſſe) a ſon of wickedneſſe he was. If witch-craft be wickedneſſe (as it is wickedneſſe in the higheſt degree) he was a Son of it, it was found about him. If to doe evill gratis; to do evill for good, be wickedneſſe (and it is the wretchedeſt wickedneſſe that can be) you had done them many favours; and, to bite the breſt then, that had given them milk, theſe are they in the Text right, קיזה בני if ever, there were any.

3 Meant violence wickedly covered it. How neere the doing it.

Theſe then, violence they intended, and with wickedneſſe they covered it. Wickedly they entiſed you and drew you along, till they had you faſt ſhut up: And then violent hands they laid on you (the marks were to be ſeene many a day after.) And were you not then, within the compaſſe of the Text, of violence and hurt, that is, of hurt by violence? Yes, ſo neere you was the hurt, that the hurtfull point touched your naked breſt. Was David ever ſo neere? Never: He was indeed hard beſtead and forced to fly, but he never came in their hands; you did: Hee never was under lock; you were: He never had the daggers point at his heart; you had: And when you had, all the world then certainly, would have given you loſt.

4 Yet did it not. Non proficient. Non apponent.

Did they you any harme for all this? Not any (to ſpeak of.) We may take up that before, Fuerunt & fecerunt, ſed non perfecerunt; ſo far from that, as non profecerunt. Such here were, and doing they were, but it would not do; for it was not done (the violence they intended.) Propoſuerunt nocere, ſed non appoſuerunt; a purpoſe they had, an offer they made, that was all; further they went not: You were not loſt, we finde you here now, and we find you ſerving God, ſafe and well (thanks be to the great finder of Kings) as ever you were.

5 The cauſe they did it not. The hand and arme of God to ſtabliſh you. The defenſive part of the Covenant.

What was it then, that it came ſo neere you, and yet did you no hurt? It was the good hand of God, His holy arme that was upon you, held you, held you faſt: you faſt, from taking hurt; and them faſt, from doing any.

Can any doubt that it was the hand of God? He that ſtood there armed for that end, when he was ſo ſtrucken ſuddenly, as he had neither heart nor hand to do that he came for; was it not the hand of God, that ſo ſtruck him?

When

When his hand held the others hand, that was ready to give the deadly blow, ut non apponeret nocere (they be the very words of the Text:) And was it not the hand in the Text then? 2

That You were ſo eſtabliſhed, as to reſiſt; that You were ſo ſtrengthened, as to prevaile (the two effects, ſet downe in the verſe both:) and yet was it not the hand there ſpecified? 3

The Popular tumult that roſe after this, enraged by odious ſurmiſes, was it not GODS hand that layd the raging of the waves then, that ſtayed the madneſſe of the People. 4 Pſal. 65 7.

When the violence was over, the hurt was not: The lewd tongue of Shemei doth hurt, no leſſe than the ſword of Abiſai. It would not be believed, that all this was true, there were that ſlandereth the footſteps of his Anointed (Davids caſe in the end of this Pſalme:) was it not God then, that ſo touched the heart of him, that was eſcaped unknowne, that he had not the power, to be true to himſelfe, to keepe it in, but was even driven by remorſe, to bewray himſelfe (though with evident hazard of his own life) was not this digitus Dei? 5 Verſ. 51.

And ſince that, by a further ſtrange diſcovery, hath he not ſet your innocency in the ſight of the Sun? that now the mouth of all wickedneſſe is ſtopped, ſo that neither Abiſai's ſword, not Shemei's tongue now, can doe you any hurt? And was not the hand and arme of God in this? Yes, the whole arme, and every joynt; the whole hand, and all the fingers of it. Yet lack we the laſt verſe. Pſal. 63. 11.

Here was the hand with the ſheild: but where was the arme with the ſword? Here too; and it ſmit them, ſmit them downe, downe it ſmit them both, both in the very place where they deſigned your hurt, and in the very wickedneſſe of the act: both were ſmitten downe ſtarke dead, and there ſtarke dead you ſaw them both lie before you (as the verſe is) before your face. Non proficerunt: Nay, defecerunt, & in ipſo ſcelere perierunt: their ſword went through their owne heart and their blood was upon their owne heads. God found you then, and you found Him, certainly. O, let him ever finde you His ſervant, whom you then, found your ſo gracious good Lord. 6 The hand and arme to ſmite them: the offenſive part of the Covenant. To ſmite them downe before your face. Pſal. 37. 15. 1 Reg. 2. 32.

But they muſt be plagued too (to make the Text up full.) So were they: For, as if they had beene ſmitten with ſome peſtilent foule diſeaſe; ſo, from them, from their mention, there goeth an odious ſent, odious, and abhorred of all: Yea, the very houſe, as if the plague of leaproſie had been in it, razed downe: and, that there might no infection come from this plague of theirs, their very name put out, from under heaven. 7 To plague them.

And, all this, ſo done, and with ſuch circumſtances, as all that heare it, muſt acknowledge, it was Gods doing, and that from heaven came the hand that did it; Factum eſt, & à Domino factum eſt, both. This done by God himſelfe. Pſal. 64 9. Pſal. 118. 23.

And ſo, you are found: and they (as the children of perdition ſhould bee) are loſt. Here are you: And where are they? gone to their owne place, to Iudas their brother. And (as is moſt kindly) the ſonnes, to the Father of wickedneſſe; there to bee plauged with him, for ever. The ſame way, may they all go; and to the ſame place, may they all come: all, that ſhall ever once offer, to doe the like. Thus, to the very laſt ſyllable, of the laſt verſe, is this Text found true in you: and this covenant made good to you. All the ſix points of it, all of them in futuro, in the Text; ſhall and ſhall be, Comes me the day, and puts them all in præterito to you, changeth ſhall and be, into was and did. That, thus we read it now; His hand did hold you faſt, His arme did ſtrengthen you: the enemie was not able to doe you any violence, no more was the ſon of wickedneſſe to hurt you. But he did ſmite downe your foes, and did plague them that hated you. So, the Covenant was fully kept with you, and ſealed, even with the blood of them, that brake it. Act. 1. 25.

And now, let all them, that tooke any joy in the firſt finding and annointing, here renew their joy afreſh, for this ſecond, when you were thus in a manner loſt, and found againe. When it was juſt, as in the Goſpell, Periit & inventa eſt. And if hee in the Goſpell for his ſheep; and ſhe, for her groat, called all their friends together, and cryed, Congratulamini mihi: how much greater a congratulamini belongs to this? Where 3 Joy for your deliverung. Luk. 15. 6. 9.

nor a groat, but he that is the Image and ſuperſcription of all our groats, yea, all our coin, ſilver, and gold, is found againe.

To finde ſome praiſes of God for this finding

And what? ſhall this be all? No I truſt: having thus, at the hands of God, found the faithfull mercies of David; we will ſtay a little, and look out ſome of the faithfull prayers of David, to render him, for this, for ſuch a finding. Let us doe ſo I pray you.

The firſt verſe of the Pſalme, Cantabo. Pſal.145.9.

And we ſhall not need to goe farre, not any further than our owne Pſalme, and but even to the very firſt words of it, Miſericordias Domini in æternum cantabo. Upon another, no leſſe worthy deliverance, I well remember, you then tooke up the like, Miſericordiæ Domini ſuper omnia opera ejus. Very fitly that, but this agrees rather with us now; For it is the beginning of the Pſalme, whereof the Text is a part: Made, as it were, the Anthem for this Sermon.

Mercy in making this Covenant.

Will ye ſee it agrees? There was mercie, in making this Covenant, there was truth, in keeping it. See then, how aptly he hath ſet it: My ſong ſhall be alwayes of the mercies of the Lord (that made it;) with my mouth will I be ſhewing his truth (that kept it) from one generation to another. And ſhall not we ſing of his mercie? And ſhall not we ſet forth His truth? Sing of his mercie that made this Covenant: ſhew forth his truth, that made it good, every article; and ſuffered not one word of it, to fall to the ground?

Truth in keeping it.

The ſecond verſe of the Pſalme, Ego dixi.

But, if we cannot well ſing it, for lack of a Queere: He hath taken order for that too. For the very next, the ſecond verſe of the Pſalme, that he begins with, Ego dixi, I have ſaid: that if we cannot ſing it, we may yet ſay it. And it is but the ſame over againe: I have ſaid, mercy ſhall be ſet up for ever: Thy truth ſhalt thou ſtabliſh in the heavens. What truth? It followeth in the third verſe, this truth of his Covenant, to David. To ſing that, and to ſay this: to make our ſongs, on this ground; and our ſermons, on this theame. He hath ſaid it, to ſet up His mercie: He hath done it, to exalt his truth.

To doe it in æternum: ſpecially this day. Luk.19.19.

Ever to doe this, In æternum: In æternum is the word of the verſe (if our dulneſſe could endure it) all the dayes of the yeare. But, of all the dayes in the yeare, this day not to faile of it. Hodiè ſalus facta eſt domui huic, Nay, regno huic, Nay Regnis his: This day then, not to faile of it. For, having found this mercie, and felt this truth, this day; ſhall we not, at the leaſt, this day, thanke Him for this day? ſhall the Sun of this day ariſe, and goe downe upon us, and not ſee us together, to render him praiſe, for this ſo loving mercie, for this ſo faithfull a truth? Shall he finde hand and arme, to ſuccour and to ſave us, and ſhall not we finde mouth and lips, to bleſſe and magnifie Him for it? God forbid.

Application to us.

Let us then, ſing that: My ſong ſhall be alwayes of the mercies of the Lord (record it, at leaſt) Or for default of it, ſay this: I have ſaid, mercie ſhall be ſet up for ever, thy truth ſhalt thou eſtabliſh in the heavens. Be they never ſo falſe upon Earth, thou in heaven ſhalt ſtabliſh it. Say it, per modum concionis; ſo we have: Say it then, per modum orationis; ſo let us doe, and ſo an end.

By way of preaching.

By way of prayer.

Even ſo Lord ſo let it be, Set up this thy mercy for ever, for ever ſtabliſh the truth of this thy covenant, with thy Servant our Soveraigne, that it never faile Him, as not this day, ſo not at any other time. Let thine hand be ſtill upon Him, and thine arme about him for ever, betweene him and his harmes. Violence and hurt, never come neer him: The ſonnes of wickedneſſe, be even far from Him. Let them be non proficients, all the ſort of them, that ſtudie or practiſe this wicked leſſon. Never loſe thou him, or ſuffer him to be loſt: Ever finde him (good Lord) to ſuccour and ſave him; and let thy right hand find out his enemies to ſmite and plague them: with the ſame blowes, thou didſt ſmite; and with the ſame plagues, thou didſt powre on theſe, of this day. The deſtiny of this day, come on them all.

And, for Him, let his anointing ſtill be freſh on him, and his crowne ſtill flouriſh on his his head. Let him, all the day walke in the light of thy cotntenance, and at night, reſt under the covering of his wings. This day, as once it did, and as ever ſince it hath, So let it, long and many yeares, riſe proſperous and happie to him. This day, and all dayes. That he, that we all may may ſing thy mercie, and ſet forth thy truth, all the dayes of our life. Heare us, O Lord, and grant it for thy Sons ſake, our Saviour, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE,

In the Cathedrall Church of Salisbury,

ON THE V. OF AVGVST,

Anno Dom. MDCXV.

PSALME XXI. VERS. I, II, III, IV.

The King ſhall rejoyce in thy ſtrength, O Lord: Exceeding glad ſhall he be of thy ſalvation.

Thou haſt granted him his hearts deſire: And haſt not denied him the requeſt of his lips. Selah.

Thou haſt prevented him with the bleſsings of goodneſſe: and haſt ſet a Crowne of pure gold upon his head.

He asked life of Thee, and Thou gaveſt him a long life: Even for ever and ever.

UPon a day of joy, here is a Text of joy. Upon a day of joy for the King, a Text, of a King in joy. For ſo, we ſee, there is in the Text, a King: and hee joyfull and glad. Glad, firſt, for ſtrength ſhewed by God in ſaving him: Glad againe, for goodneſſe ſhewed by God, in ſatisfying (yea more than ſatisfying) preventing his deſires; and that in the matter of his Crowne, and of his life both.

This King, was King David (no doubt) The very Title of the Pſalme ſheweth as much: and the Son of Syrach (of whom, I reckon as well or better, than of any Commentary) theſe very words (here) hee applyes to King David, Chap. 47. verſ. 7.

Originally

Originally then, he: but neither ſolely, nor wholely he. His meaning was not, to make this ſaving, his owne caſe, alone; Nor to engroſſe this joy, all, to himſelfe: ye may ſee it, by the very ſetting it downe. It is not (as, of himſelfe) I will rejoyce: But (as of a third perſon) The King, ſhall: The King, indefinitely. So, entailing it, rather to His Office, than to his Perſon: and leaving it at large, applyable to any other, a King; as well as himſelfe.

To any other King (I ſay.) Specially any other ſuch King, that ſhould be as ſtrangely ſaved by Gods ſtrength; as fairely, bleſſed by his goodneſſe, as ever was he. That ſhould find the like favour that he did: and bee vouchſafed the like gracious deliverance, that, he was. Any ſuch King in ſuch wiſe ſaved, to be equally interreſſed in this joy with him: And to have this Pſalme, ſerve for a Sermon, or for an Anthem, no leſſe than he.

And, by this, wee hope in God, this rejoycing here, ſhall not be ſhut up, againſt us. 2 Cor. 11.10. For, that, which is here left indefinite, we ſuppoſe, we can definitely apply, to a King (in whoſe preſence we ſtand) To whom, the ſame ſtrength, and the ſame goodneſſe, and of the ſame Lord, have ſhewed forth themſelves, in ſaving him, ſaving both his Crowne and life, no leſſe than Davids.

This, comes well to the Text. But what doth this concerne us now, more than any other time? Yes; for, here comes the day, and claimes a propertie, in it: How that? Remember ye, how the Apoſtle (when he cited the place out of Eſay, I have heard thee in an accepted time, in the day of ſalvation, I have helped thee) Behold, (ſaith he) now is the accepted time: Behold this is the day of ſalvation. The ſame (for all the world) ſaith this day? The King ſhall be glad of thy ſalvation: Ecce hodie, dies ſalutis hujus. Behold, this is the day of that ſalvation. For, ſo it is, indeed. The very ſalvation-day, it ſelfe (this.) 2 Cor. 6. 2. Eſay 40. 8.

For, this day, was his life ſought, and he ſet on, to have been ſhamefully made away: and this very day, ſaved he was; and in virtute, mightily ſaved; and in virtute Dei, by the mighty hand and helpe, even of God Himſelfe.

Since then, this bleſſing fell upon this day, If we will take a time (And a time we will take to rejoyce and to give God thanks for it) that, which the day pleads for, is moſt reaſonable; that you will take this day, rather than another: For, if hodie, dies ſalutis; If, to day, the day of ſalvation; No reaſon in the world, but to day the day of rejoycing for it.

But I will forbeare, to take any notice, or to mention any but David, at the firſt going over: The Text (that) requireth a ſurvey of courſe (firſt) and ſhall have it. But then, if the day ſhall pray a review after, I ſee not how in right, we can deny it.

Be theſe then the two parts: The Survey, and the Review. And in either of theſe two principall points preſent themſelves. The Diviſion I.

1. The joy, 2. And the ground or cauſes of it. The joy, in the front of the Text; And the cauſes, in the ſequele of it. II.

The cauſes are, as the number of the verſes; foure: 1 The ſaving of the King, by the ſtrength of God. 2 The ſatisfying, yea, the preventing his deſire, by the goodneſſe of God. 3 The ſetting on his crowne, by the hand of God, Tu poſuiſti. 4 The prolonging his life, by the gift of God. Theſe foure.

Now, every of theſe (the joy and the cauſes, and indeed the whole Text) ſeemes to ſtand upon Triplicities. In the laſt verſe of the Pſalm, God is ſaid to exalt his ſtrength. His ſtrength in exaltation, makes the joy in triplicitie.

The triplicitie of joy (firſt.) The King 1 ſhall rejoyce, 2 ſhall be glad, 3 exceeding glad ſhall he be. 1 Lætabitur, 2 exultabit, 3 vehementer.

The like, in all the cauſes: Why glad? (firſt) for, the King 1 was ſaved, 2 ſaved by God, 3 by thy ſtrength (O Lord.) 1 Salute, 2 virtute, and 3 Tuâ Domine.

Upon this, of ſtrength; followeth a new triplicitie of goodneſſe. Therein, 1 the deſire of his heart, 2 the requeſt of his lips: And beſides them, 3 the bleſſings of goodneſſe. Of theſe three, the firſt, granted; the ſecond, not denyed; and prevented, with the third.

Of [1] which bleſsings, there are two ſet downe in particular: [1] His Crowne: and [2] His life.

His Crowne: and the triplicitie of it. [1] Corona, [2] Coronatio, and [3] Coronans: the [1] Crowne, [2] the Coronation, or ſetting it on by another: [3] And that, other, God: None, but he, Tu poſuiſti.

His life: and there another (the laſt) triplicitie. [1] Life, [2] long life, and [3] life in ſeculum, & in ſeculum ſeculi. Long life in this world, Life for ever in the World to come.

And for this ſtrength, in thus ſaving; and this goodneſſe, in thus ſatisfying his deſire, in the ſafety both of his Crown, and his life; is all this Lætabitur, and exultabit: All this joy and jubilee of the Text.

This Survey done, the day will further pray a Review: truſting, it will fall out (all this) to prove the caſe of the day juſt. That all theſe cauſes, will coincidere into it. [1] Salutem miſit, [2] Deſiderium conceſsit, [3] Coronam poſuit, and [4] Vitam dedit: And if theſe; then the joy too (without faile.)

And that, two wayes: Upon two powers, that be in the word (ſhall.) [1] Shall, the Bond, de præſenti: binding us, to accommodate our ſelves, to the preſent occaſion: to this joyfull ſeaſon of Gods ſending: And then (ſhall) the Tenſe, which is not the preſent, but the future: And ſo (ſhall) not only, for this preſent day; but ſhall, ſtill; ſtill ſhall, for many dayes, of many Auguſts, in many yeares more; the ſame lætabitur, the ſame exultabit, ſtill. So we all wiſh, it may.

I
The ſurvey.

Domine lætabitur. We begin with joy. Auſpicatum principium, a faire front (onward) a luckie beginning.

I
The joy.

In joy: and that not ſingle, but three in one, a triplicitie of it. We will but touch at it, now: We ſhall come to it again, yer we end. Begin, and end, with joy, to day: So may we begin, and ſo end ever.

In this triplicitie, two words there be, to expreſſe this joy: [1] lætabitur, and [2] exultabit: and one to give it the ſize, or meaſure, [3] vehementer.

1 Lætabitur. שמחה

The two former ([1] lætabitur, and [2] exultabit) are as it were the body and ſoule of joy. The firſt (lætabitur), the ſoule. For, the nature of that word, and the uſe, noteth joy, within: joy of the boſome (ſay the Heathen;) joy of the Spirit (the Scripture) And my Spirit hath rejoyced. There, in the Spirit, is the fountaine of true joy. If there it bee not, how well ſoever the countenance counterfeit it, it is but counterfeit, for all that. And no joy right, if we cannot ſay the two firſt words [Domine lætabitur] to God; and we cannot ſay them, to Him, if there it be not, within.

Luk. 1, 47.

2 Exultabit.

There then, to begin; but not there to end. Lætabitur is not all, Exultabit is called for too, which is nothing but an out-let or overflowing of the inward joy, into the outward man; of the heart into the fleſh: My heart and my fleſh, ſhall rejoyce. Not one, without the other. Joy to be ſeene and read in the fore-head (the joy of the countenance) To ſound forth, and be heard, from the lips (the voice of joy and gladneſſe.) This, doth exultabit add. There, is the bodie and ſoule of joy, now.

Pſal. 84. 2. Verſ. 6. Pſal. 118. 15.

3. Vehementer. מה מאד

But it is not every meane degree, will content in theſe. Not any [glad] but exceeding glad. The Hebrew is, O quàm! O Lord, how wonderfull is thy name! ſaith the 8. Pſalm verſ. 1. So here, O Lord, how joyfull and glad ſhall he be! The meaning is; ſo very glad, as he cannot well tell, how to expreſſe it. Elſe, asking the queſtion, why doth he not anſwer it? But that, hee cannot. But that he hath never a Tam, for this quàm: But is even faine to leave it, to be conceived, by us. So do we; but σφοδρὰ vehementer, exceeding it muſt be. So ſay the tranſlations, all.

Thus

Thus have you a briefe of the triplicitie of joy. 1 Joy within, 2 Iubilee without, 3 both mensura a supereffluente.

And (which is somewhat strange) these, not only permitted, but even injoyned; given in charge: shall rejoyce, shall be glad; a necessitie laid on him: but, a blessed necessity, to be bound to that, our nature and we (in all our libertie) so well love and like of. Luk. 6 38.

2 The causes of it.

And now, to the causes. For, exceeding joy, without a cause somewhat suitable, is but exceeding folly; but as the crackling of thornes under a pot: great noise, but no great cause (for, all is but a whin-bush.)‖ If there be an exceeding in the joy, there would be an exalting in the strength: If excesse in that, no defect in the ground. We take measure still, of one of these by the other. Eccles 7.8.

Have we then a good ground? That have we: foure (for failing) every of them suitable, in each respect. For, a triplicitie in either of them.

The cause. 1 Salvation, or being saved, Salus.

The ground of all (the first) is, Salvation or being saved: and that, is ground sufficient. For who doth not rejoyce, is not glad, exceeding glad, that is so, saved? But specially (which was Davids case here) saved, from a sudden and a secret mischiefe, imagined against him. There is no joy (when all is done) to the joy of one, so saved. Be it, who it will; even unus de minimis hiis: any, any one of the meanest.

Salus Regia.

But, the person addes a great weight to the joy; that, it is Rex in salute: Salus Regia, a Salvation Royall; for the saving of a King. For he (by the Scriptures owne valuation) is set at ten thousand. There be ten thousand salvations in one, when a King is saved. That, as Rex is the person, above all: So Salus Regis, is the Soveraigne Salvation, of all. 2 Sam. 18. 3.

2 Saving by strength.

Saved, then. And secondly how? In virtute: Saved by strength. For, though it be good being saved, by what meanes we can; Yet if we might be at our choice, we had rather have it by meanes of strength, rather so, than by craft, or by running away. For, that is not in virtute. Salus in virtute, is ever, the best saving. And a King (if he have his right) would be saved, no other way: Not by flight, or by slight; but in virtute, Rex.

So have you two, Virtus and Salus, strength and salvation: Note them well: for not virtus without salus; nor salus without virtus, neither without other is full: nor both, without Tua Domine.

Virtus in salute.

In virtute, is well: so it have in salute after it. For, no not in strength is there matter of joy (every way considered.) No, not in Gods strength: No joy in virtute Dei, if it have not an in salute, behind it. They, in the latter part of the Psalme found Gods strength, but smally to their joy. This makes it up: that it is not only, virtus, strength: but virtus ad salutem, strength to save. Strength, not, as to the Kings enemies, to smite them downe, and plague them: But, strength, as to David himselfe, to save and deliver him. Strength is indifferent, to both: but in salute following it, determines it to the joyfull side. Vers. 8. Psal. 89 23.

Salus in virtute.

Now then, turne it the other way. For, as in virtute, if it end with in salute, is just cause of joy; So (vice versâ) in salute, if it goe with an in virtute, makes the joy yet more joyfull. I meane, that as it is virtus in salute, strength to save, might to deliver; So, it is salus in virtute, a strong salvation, a mighty deliverance. No petie, common one; but a strong, and mighty one. This reciprocation sets it higher yet: that, not only strength set forth; but strength to save, protect, and preserve: Nor that neither, quovis modo; but mighty to save, strongly to protect, and strangely to preserve: So as the Salvation may justly be said, Tua Domine, Gods owne saving. Psal. 68. 28.

3 By Gods strength, Tua Domine.

For, yet we are not where we would be. It is much to the matter of joy, whose the strength is, from whom the salvation, who the partie. For, not undecunque, or abs quovis, yeelds full joy: not by every one (hand over head.) The better the partie per quem, the more the joy still. The Salvation is made the more precious, by the Author of it. That as it is ſalus Regia, on his part that receives it: So it is ſalus Divina, on his that gives it, that is Tua Domine.

But to this [Domine] there belongs two Tua's. To virtute and ſalute, either of them, a Tua; virtute tua and ſalute tua: and this doubling of the point, we ſhall find concernes the joy much.

1 Virtute tua, not aliena. Ionas 4.10. For, that it may not be, as Ionas's joy in his Gourd, up in one night, downe in another (that is) vaniſhing and unſure; but ſound and permanent; it is beſt, our Hoſannah be in the higheſt: beſt, that the Hypoſtaſis or ſubſtance of this our rejoycing, bee in the Pſal. 20.7.8. ſtrength of the Lord. Not in chariots and horſes; wee ſee what became of them (the Pſalme before.) Hii ceciderunt, Downe they went, and downe went their joy with them. That, was in virtute alienâ.

Nor ſua. * Pſal. 44.6. 2 Sam. 24.10. Nor, in * his owne bow, or ſword, or number of his people (that, proved not well neither;) that, was in virtute ſua: In virtuta tua (we ſhall find) is the ſafer.

Ionas. 4.7. Not, but that, in theſe humane ſtrengths, we may rejoyce in ſome ſort, with ſome caution: but that, they be all ſubject to the worme. Ionas Gourd was (mortall and mutable all;) not ſo ſoone had, but as ſoone loſt, and ſooner, a great deale: there is no hold of them, quotidie diffluunt, we find it, daily.

Pſal. 36.7. Therefore, well-fare in virtute Domini, the might of the Almighty. In it, there is the ſound joy. O, it is good rejoycing in the ſtrength of the arme, that ſhall never wither or wax weake: and in the ſhadow of theſe wings, that ſhall never caſt their feathers; in Heb. 13.8. Him, that is not there yeſterday, and here to day; but the ſame yeſterday, and to day, and for ever. For, as he is, ſo ſhall the joy be. In virtute tua, then: And ſalute tua too.

2 Salute tua. Nay, virtus tua, but ſalus ſua; the power, that may be Gods; but the ſalvation, that is the Kings (one would thinke.) And, ſo it is: But he rejoyces not, in it, as it is ſalus ſua (at leaſt, not ſo much) as, that it is ſalus tua, Gods; of and from God, who wrought it, and brought it to paſſe. Nay even in ſalute tua (it ſelfe;) not ſo much in ſalute, as in tua; in the gift, as in the partie that gave it. So doth no worldly man: he goes no further, than in ſalute (that he hath it, and ſafe he is;) cares for no Pſal. 68.28. more; for no tua, he. But Davids joy, and the joy of the godly, is not ſo much, that he is ſaved, or had ſtrength ſo to be; as, that it was God, ſent forth his ſtrength, ſo to Luk. 1.47. ſave him, Nay, nothing ſo much in ſalute as in tua; in the ſalvation, as in God, his Saviour.

And, why ſo joyfull, for this tua Domine, more than the reſt? I ſhall tell you why, For this is the very exaltation, the higheſt point of the whole triplicitie.

There was none of the Emperours (upon ſuch an eſcape as this) but he tooke to himſelfe preſently, as an high honour, the title of Θεοφύλακτος, Preſerved by God; and uſed it ever after, as an addition to his Stile, as glorious, as Alamannicus, or Parthicus, or any title of them all.

A King thus ſaved by God, is more, than a King: (I meane) more than another King, not ſo reſpected, by God. More, I ſay, than another: 1. More to be ſet by, in the ſight of his owne people: tanquam ſpeculum propitii Numinis, as a mirrour of Gods Verſ. 5. favour; when they ſee him, thus taken into Gods ſpeciall protection. The very next words are, His honour, is great, in this ſalvation.

2 As, of his owne people: So more eſteemed of his neighbours; when they Pſal. 20.8. ſee, their owne, thruſt in with knives, and ſo caſt downe and fall; but him, after hee was caſt downe, to riſe, and ſtand upright: Hii ceciderunt, helps it much.

3 And laſtly, more feared of his enemies; when they ſee, the eye of Gods providence, the ſhadow of his wings, the ſtrength of his arme, ſtill over him; ſtill, ſet to ſave him, and doe him good; they will bee afraid to plot ought againſth im, when they ſee it is in vaine, God ſtill defeats them and up holds him ſtill: when they ſee, tua Domine in great letters, upon him.

And now, are we come, to the ſpring-head, to caput lætitiæ; Tua, Tua, Domine. And when we have brought our joy up thither; up, to him: we turne it looſe, let it exceed then: No where elſe; but, in Him, let it. If it bee gaudete in Domino, Nay then, then, Iterum dico gaudete (ſaith the Apoſtle) Then, to it, againe and againe; double it and treble it, and ſpare not. Good leave have you. Phil 4.4.

Now then: for this ſalus Regia and ſalus Divina (both) joyne the triplicities; ſee, if they ſuit not, this and the firſt (of joy.) In virtute, Gods ſtrength, the very promiſe, and hope of it, yeelds joy within; there is lætabitur. But, made apparent in ſalute, is further matter of exultabit (without.) But, Tua, Tua, Domine, to that, belongs ô quàm! there is, his place: O, how greatly, ſhall David rejoyce within, triumph without, in the Lord; being ſaved by Him, ſo mightily, and ſo marvellouſly ſaved by Him! Theſe two triplicities, are in the firſt verſe (both.)

There is new joy, in the ſecond verſe, upon a new ground (the goodneſſe of God.) And ſtrength, and goodneſſe do well together; neither without other ſaveth. Strength alone, could well; but will not, till goodneſſe come to it. Both, did it, here: For, in this verſe, ſaved by ſtrength: and in the ſeventh verſe, In the mercy of the moſt High he did not miſcarrie. By ſtrength; that, by no arme of fleſh: By mercy; that, by no merit of his owne. The II. cauſe. In ſatisfying the deſire. 1 Of his heart. 2 Of his lips.

But, His goodneſſe is over all His works, over ſtrength and all. For, it ſheweth it ſelfe, not in ſaving only (which is a matter of neceſsity;) but over and beſides that, in ſatisfying his deſires (and that is matter of meere bounty.) Pſal. 145 9.

And indeed, no way doth His goodneſſe ſo ſhew it ſelfe, as in ſending us our deſires. Nor nothing, is ſo properly, the name of joy, as the deſire ſent. The denying of our deſire; nay, the but delaying it, is an abatement to our joy: But the deſire accompliſhed, that, is the Tree of life (ſaith Salomon:) And the Tree of life, was in the midſt of the Garden; the very center of Paradiſe, and all the joyes there. The ſatisfying his deſire. Prov. 13.12. Gen. 2.9.

To ſatisfie, is one thing: and to ſatisfie by prevention, another. Betweene them two, they make up a new triplicity. For the former, of ſatisfying the deſire, is ſet downe; either, as conceived in the heart (Deſiderium cordis;) or, as expreſſed with the lips (Prolatio labiorum.) It is much, to ſatisfie theſe two; His goodneſſe, gives ſatisfaction both to the one, and to the other: ſatisfaction, to the heart, by granting the deſire; ſatisfaction, to the lips, by not denying the requeſt. And upon theſe two (in the verſe) there is a Sela. For theſe two (one would thinke) were able to content any.

But, this Sela, is no Sela to GOD. He hath a Sela, or an Ela above this Sela. He hath, not onely a ſatisfying, but a ſatisfying by prevention: not expecting either, but preventing both: granting that, which neither the lips ever mentioned, nor the heart once imagined: never came out of the mouth, nay, never came into the minde. And this, is the prævenisti of His goodneſſe.

As for the heart and the lips, we will not be curious, nor ſtand ſcanning their order, which ſhould ſtand firſt, the heart, or the lips. I know, though the tongue be the pen of never ſo ready a writer, the heart can endite faſter, by much. But what skils it which is firſt? Both together (I am ſure) can deſire more, than either alone; and He will ſatisfie them both. Pſal. 45.1.

Satisfie the lips: Petite & dabitur, Speake and ſpeed. Satisfie the heart: Ave & habe, wiſh and have. Not onely, open thy mouth: but enlarge thy heart, never ſo wide, and He will fill it. This, is able, to ſatisfie David (I think) and to make him ſing Sela, which is their διαψαλμα. Mat. 7.7. Pſal. 81.10.

This, may ſatisfie David. But this fatisfies not God, in His goodneſſe to David: No ſatis, with Him, but ſatis ſupérque. And indeed, both theſe (make the beſt of them you can) are ſtill, but a poſt-veniſti, the heart and the lips goe before, and Gods goodneſſe comes after. Nay, till His goodneſſe get before; till it be, a prævenisti; it ſatisfies Him not. And, that is; not when He ſtayes for us, till we come to Him with our petitions; Nor till He meet us; He with his mercy, us with our prayers: But, when He prevents us, before we ſtirre a foot: and heares us, not when, but antequàm, before we requeſt; and anſwers us, not while, but yer even we deſire: opening, ſending 3 In preventing both, with His goodneſſe. Eſay 30.18. Eſay 65.24. Mat. 7.7.

ding and giving; before we ſeeke, knocke, or aske: that (lo) is the prævenisti; that, the bleſsing of goodneſſe indeed.

The bleſsing of goodneſſe.

The bleſsing of goodneſſe: And as to ſatisfie, is one thing (quovis modo;) To do it by prevention, another: So, to prevent with goodneſſe, is one; and with the bleſsing of goodneſſe, another. For, that is (as the fat of the ſacrifice) the beſt, the moſt chiefe, the moſt choice, the moſt bleſſed part of it; bleſſed it ſelfe, and making David bleſſed, to whom He vouchſafes it.

Not, but that the other (the granting, the not denying) are good bleſsings, and very good: but in them, though there be the goodneſſe of GOD, yet not it alone; there is ſomewhat of David too, his devotion (at leaſt) in making his requeſt. But in this, GODS goodneſſe, is all alone; David doth nothing, neither ſpeake, nor think. That he never asked, never thought to aske, before any, without any asking, he is prevented with, by this bleſſed goodneſſe: and without any cauſe elſe. The Fathers read it, benedictio dulcedinis, and well: For, while we ſtand waiting for the poſtveniſti, our eyes faile many times, our heart pants, we flote betweene hope and feare: And this reliſhes not well with us, it is a little bitter. In prævenisti there is none of theſe. And the cutting off of theſe, makes it benedictio dulcedinis indeed, as having none of that unpleaſant mixture with it. This is benedicta bonitas.

But (all this while) we ſee not, what need of this preventing? It is more than needs, ſure. The other two, the not denying, but granting, might ſerve our turnes well enough. Yes, there is more than need of it, in the matter of ſaving, many times. The danger comes upon us, and ſurprizes us ſo, of a ſudden, as we have no time, to gather our ſelves together; the heart no ſpace to think, nor the lips leiſure, to frame a requeſt. Both faile us.

And this holds chiefly, in ſecret plots and practices. No man ſuſpects; or miſdoubts them: No man prepares for them: Unawares on a ſudden, they break out, and even oppreſſe us, ſo as they prevent lips and heart, and all. Such was the danger, in the Pſalme: Such, the danger of the day. In theſe, if it ſhould be put to a poſtveniſti, we were gone. A prevention muſt be. In theſe preventing dangers then, is the time; there, is the place, of this preventing goodneſſe of God. Who ſeeing, what David would do, if he were not taken ſhort: ſupplieth (of His bleſſed goodneſſe) that defect, and before either of both, relieves and ſaves him. This is the bleſſed goodneſſe, and Bleſſed be GOD for this goodneſſe, above all: We all at ſomtimes or other, fare the better for it.

Will ye ſee now, how theſe three come againe exactly to that of the joy? The inward deſire of the heart, for that granted; lætabitur, the inward joy of the heart: The outward requeſt of the lips, for that not denied; exultabit, the outward voice of gladneſſe. But thou haſt prevented them both (both mentall and vocall petitions) without ſuit at all: O how glad ſhall David be, for the other twaine, but for this third eſpecially! For, this is the goodneſſe, ô quàm! This exceeds all.

The ſpecialities of that goodneſſe.
1 In his crowne
2 In his life.

Well: but all this while, we walk but in generalities: might we ſee ſome ſpeciality of this bleſsing of goodneſſe thus preventing him? Yes, we may. There follow more; but here in the Text, are two particulars, both matter of GODS prevention, both matter of his deſire. For, what would a King deſire to have ſaved, or wherein to be bleſſed, but in 1 his crowne, and 2 his life? And here, they be both. And in either of both, a ſeverall ſort of preventing: Granted, and not asked at all (as in his crowne:) more granted, than asked (as in his life.)

1 His crowne firſt.

But firſt: will ye mark, that here, Corona prævenit vitam, the Crowne takes the place of his life, hath the precedencie of it: that his deſire, is carried ſtraight, to his Crowne firſt, before to his life, as to the bleſsing (of the twaine) more to be deſired. Thus we finde them: and we may not ſtirre them, they are of the Holy Ghoſts own marſhalling. Thus ſets He them downe, as if His will were, they ſhould ſo be apprized: the Crowne before life.

Marke well: Poſuit coronam, and then vitam petiit: with his crowne on; ſo, he deſires life. But Coronam depoſuit, take away his Crowne, and then vitam non petiit, he will not aske life; he will not thinke it worth the asking. If he would aske it, it would not be given him: He, that takes away his crowne, will have his life not long after. Fond to imagine otherwiſe: and it is the pooreſt comfort and conceipt, that ever was; to tell them, their Crowne they muſt part with, but be of good cheer; their lives ſhall be ſaved, that they ſhall. No: vivis & regnas, take regnas and take vivis too; both, or neither here.

This is the Crowne. And this crowne in David was a præveniſti, cleere: a poſuit without any petiit. For when he followed † his ewes great with young, litle dreamt he of any Crowne. It never came into his lips, it never entred into his heart, his ſoule (as himſelfe ſaith) was weaned from any ſuch matters, from ſo much as once phancying them: The Crowne was in him a meere prevention.

2 That crowne a præveniſti in David.

Pſal. 131. 2.

Nay, two Crownes (we read) he came to. Firſt Sauls Crowne, the Amalekite brought him that, and his bracelets. To ſhew, it was a preveniſti meerely: Not ſo much as an Iſraelite, brought it. That was ſet on, firſt. Some thirty yeares after, we finde he came to another Crowne; the King of Ammons Crowne, at the winning of Rabba, a more maſsie Crowne, finer gold, richer ſtones in it, than his firſt. That was ſet on too. This here in the verſe, was the ſecond (ſay all the Interpreters:) and this a præveniſti likewiſe. If you will but remember what caſe he ſtood in, to God-ward, at the comming of this ſecond crown (it was preſently upon the matter of Vrias and Bathſabe) you will ſay, he was rather in caſe of Miſerere mei Deus, than of ought elſe: that God crowned him then, in mercie and loving kindneſſe. At this ſecond crowne, it was veniam petiit, and nothing elſe.

And his ſecond crown.

2 Sam. 1. 10.

2 Sam. 12. 30.

Pſal. 51. 1.

Pſal. 103. 4.

And at his firſt Crowne it was vitam petiit and nothing elſe. All he askt then, was his life: it followes ſtraight next verſe. And ſure, time was in the daies of his predeceſſor; when partly by Sauls owne jealouſie; but much more, by the wicked ſuggeſtions of Doeg, and ſuch like, he needed to aske it. There was often (to uſe his owne words) but a ſtep, betweene him and death. He asked life, then; and ſo that might have beene aſſured him, would have ſtrained his prayer no further.

1 Sam. 20. 3.

We muſt thinke, when he was couped up, one while in ſuch a Cave; another in ſuch a Wood; put to flye for his life, to Moab, to Gath (I wote not whither.) in danger ſtill to bee made away, by one treacherie or another: when, he received every houre the ſentence of death, in himſelfe; all his minde ran upon vitam petiit then: then, this crowne, or the gold of it, or the fineneſſe of the allay, never troubled his head, ye may be ſure: life he asked then, and more he asked not, and well had beene him, if he might have had but ſecuritie of that; I ſay, ſecuritie of his life, and let the Crowne goe.

1 Cor. 1. 9.

Behold then, the bleſſed goodneſſe of God, that gave him both. Both, that he asked, life (we come to it, by and by) and the crowne, and another crowne too beſides, that he asked not. Satisfied him, in that: prevented him, in this: Nay, prevented him, in both; as ye ſhall ſee ſtraight.

3 The crowne ſet on by God.

But, yer I paſſe to that; here is a point or two about crownes, I thinke good not to paſſe. 1 The firſt is, againſt uſurpers of the Crowne, Nemine ponente, niſi ſe ipſo; God not ſetting it on, none ſetting it on but themſelves: That, not ipſe ſibi, ſed Deus ipſi; Not ipſe poſuit ſuper caput ſuum, but Deus ſuper caput ipſius. 2 The ſecond, is againſt Vſurpers of a power, to take off that, they never ſet on (deponendi, quod non poſuit) and thereby intruding upon, Tu poſuiſti.

1 Firſt (the crowne) he raught not at it, caught it not, and clapt it on himſelfe; it was brought him, he came orderly to it; it was ſet on, not by himſelfe, but by another. And, that other, was the right Setter, Tu poſuiſti, God. Who will never ſet it on a wrong; never, but on the right head, if it be of His ſetting: and if it be not of His ſetting, it will never proſper, never flouriſh (be ſure.) Tua Domine, here too; the crowne is in Gods hand, ſaith Eſay; and his hand ſets it on Davids, ſets it on all their heads, that lawfully weare it. It made the Emperours to ſtampe their coyne, with an hand comming out of the clouds, holding a crowne and putting it on their their heads: and accordingly, to ſtile themſelves, Θεοστεφεῖς, à Deo coronatos, crowned by God: as well they might (this, Tu poſuiſti, here, is their warrant.)

And the depoſing.

2. Secondly, againſt uſurping of a power, to depoſe. God alone, is in the poſuiſti, at the ſetting it on. None but He, there: God hath ſet it on. Now what God hath ſet on, let not any preſume, to take off. Not any, but he that ſet it on. What, by Him alone done, by him alone, to be undone. The law is; Ad quem inſtitutio, &c. To whom the Inſtitution belongs, to Him and none other the deſtitution. To whom the impoſing, to Him and none other, the depoſing: none to interpoſe himſelf in that buſineſſe, but He.

And now, there comes a Tu interpoſuiſti; and He, will have to do with that, this Tu poſuiſti, put on. Hath not poteſtatem ponendi (he confeſſes, and all the world knowes) and yet would have poteſtatem tollendi, to take up that, he laid not downe. But, if no Ponent, no Deponent. If none but God, at the Poſuiſti, at the ſetting it on; none, but He then, at the depoſuiſti, at the taking it off. The Crowne, the Coronation, the Coronant (all three) bleſſings of His goodneſſe: but the laſt, the chiefeſt (the Tua Domine and à Te) the Tenure of it of Him, and Him only.

Now then, to joyne theſe three, to the firſt three. Allow the crowne a lætabitur, and to the Coronation, or ſetting it on, an exultabit: but ô quàm! is for Tu poſuiſti (the Coronant.) To whom, they owe it; of whom, they hold it, without any Tu interpoſuiſti, at all: And now, to his life.

Gods goodneſſe in granting him: 1 Life.

For, what is coronam poſuit, without vitam dedit; a crowne, without life to weare it? Here is that then: and that, in a new triplicity, 1 life it ſelfe, 2 a long life, and 3 a life for ever.

Vitam dedit, but Vitam petiit firſt.

Vitam petiit. It is not, his firſt vitam petiit, this (we ſpake of even now, in Sauls time:) it was, after his ſecond crowne was ſet on; as is evident, by thus ſtanding, after it. And this vitam petiit, bodes no good matter. For by petiit, it ſhould ſeem (by all likelihoods) he was in caſe, to ask it, and ſo in hazard to loſe it; it, and crowne, and all (a worſe matter, than any yet.) It was not for nothing (the laſt verſe, before this Text) they crie, O Lord ſave the King; by like, the King was in ſome danger, of periſhing. And ſo he was, as appeareth by the Sequele of the Pſalme, and that, by a Mezimma, a ſecret miſchiefe, imagined againſt him: were it, that of Abſolom, or ſome other like exigent. But hard beſtead he was, when it touched his life.

Verſe 11. מזמה

Pſal. 119. 175. 2 Sam. 16. 11.

In that ſtraight, here was the ſumme of the deſire of his heart, of the requeſt of his lips: O let my ſoule live, O let the ſoule of thy ſervant, be precious in thy ſight.

And now, upon this Petiit, as upon a ground, followes ſtraight vitam dedit. And herein, firſt appeared the goodneſſe of God, in granting his deſire, in not denying his requeſt: Vitam petiit, and Vitam dedit; life he asked, and life he had: No ſooner asked, but obtained. This was ſatisfying.

2 A long life.

But then, he ſtayed not there; but prevented him further: gave it him, with advantage, with that he asked not. Life He gave him, ſo farre his petition, ſo farre no prevention: but He gave him, long, too; long was not in the petition, and ſo a meere prevention (the ſecond kinde of preventing, that before we ſpake of,) Life, was in the requeſt, long was not; He gave it him, with long too, Dies ſuper dies Regis adjiciendo, Adding dayes to the Kings dayes, till it was length of dayes (that is) a long life, and a long reigne both. Which very point of (long) makes, that this Text will not fall in fit with every King, unleſſe he have lived and reigned, as long (Davids time, that is, forty yeares:) for, ſo he muſt, yer dediſti longam, can be ſaid or ſung of him.

Pſal. 61. 6.

3 A life for ever.

But yet, here he ſtayes not, neither: but heaps upon him more ſtill, and goes on to vitam in ſeculum ſeculi. For (to ſay truth) what is long life, yea, never ſo long, if it be not Saint Hieroms long, Nihil longum quod finem habet. If ye ſpeake of long, that is truly long, that ſhall laſt for ever, that never ſhall have end. Our long, is but a ſhort long; which goes, but by compariſon, of a ſhorter. Elſe, what is it, to live out the full compaſſe of mans uttermoſt age, if hee live not ſo, in this life, as after this, he may live for ever? The meaning is: what is long life, without it be, be, a religious life; without it be, with the true feare and worſhip of GOD: which only hath the promiſe of in ſæculum ſæculi: without which, a ſhort life is better than a long life; and no life at all (but an untimely death) better than both. Otherwiſe, the Heathen have hit upon coronam poſuit, and vitam dedit; yea, and longam too: they be but lætitia Gentium, theſe. But the life for ever, that is a Non omnibus datum; they among the Heathen never had it: that, is lætificans Davidis; that, the bleſſing of bleſſings; the tranſcendent bleſſing of all, to have the end of this life the beginning of another life, that never ſhall have end: and that by the true ſervice of GOD, in His Sanctuary. Mat. 19. 11.

Reckon this then, inſtar omnium, even worth all, and the very conſummatum eſt, the higheſt perfection, GOD can beſtow on David, That God gave him, to bring back the Arke, to pitch a Tabernacle for it, to lay up and leave a great maſſe of treaſure for the building it a Temple, himſelfe devoutly to worſhip, and to make lawes and ſet orders for a more ſolemne and ſeemly worſhip of God, than he found: He ſaid himſelfe, this was the joyfulleſt day, he ſaw in all his life; that one day worth a thouſand. And for this his care of the Sanctuary, came this help to him, out of the Sanctuarie (ſee the ſecond Verſe of the Pſalme before) that ſaved him, ſaved him both his crowne and life: and that after received him to everlaſting Tabernacles, to a crowne and life, that ſhall endure for ever. And further than this, we cannot goe. 1 Chron. 13: 15. 28. 24. 25. 26. Pſal. 84. 10. Luke 16. 9.

So have we the particular of that was ſued for and granted: and of that was granted and not ſued for, by the ſpeciall priviledge of Gods preventing goodneſſe. Himſelfe ſaved, his deſire ſatisfied, his crowne faſt, his life aſſured, here and for ever.

And judge now, whether David had good cauſe to rejoyce or not. And whether, we may not here againe (for a farewell) once more, over with our firſt triplicity of joy againe. Lætabitur to go to vitam (if you will;) and (if need be) exultabit to longam: But ô quàm, to be reſerved, for in ſæculum ſæculi. There it is in kind. So it was never, before. There it is ô quàm! indeed. For there is a crowne, life, and joy that exceed all that we can deſire; and there he ſhall receive them, and ſay ô quàm! indeed.

II.

The Review or Application to His Majeſty.

And what ſhall we ſay now of all this? Truly no more, than muſt needs be ſaid: No more, than the Text it ſelfe drawes from us. Here is, a faire Major (layed forth to our hands.) A King, that hath in this manner, found the ſtrength of GOD, ſhew forth it ſelfe in his ſaving: and felt the goodneſſe of GOD, in thus preventing his deſires, touching both his crowne and his life: Any ſuch King may (for he hath good cauſe;) Nay ſhall and ought (for he is bound) to be exceeding, both joyfull and glad. The HOLY GHOST gives His word; ſayes, he ſhall ſo be.

If this be King David, He: If any other, He too. King David's we have ſurveyed (as the time would give us leave.) Shall we now pray a Review, to ſee, if any other may be found beſides, as deepe in the cauſes, as he. For, if as deepe in the cauſes, as deepe in the effect: If the ſame in virtute, and the ſame in ſalute, the ſame lætabitur (all will grant.)

And here now, chooſe, whether we will refraine our lips; and keepe backe GODS mercy and truth from the great Congregation. If we would ſo, and hold our peace, the day, even this fifth of Auguſt would not: but would (as the Pſalme ſaith) eructare verbum, break forth and tell us, that ſuch a King there is, and who it is. That if there be, or ever there were a Prince upon earth, that found and felt this virtutem and ſalutem Dei, the mighty hand and helpe of GOD, in ſaving him, ſaving him miraculouſly; Verily, this day ſaith (not as Nathan, Tu es homo, but) Tu es Rex, You are that King, certainly; even in all theſe foure, in the Text, from point to point. Pſal. 40. 9, 10. Pſal. 19. 2. 2 Sam. 12. 7.

I

In his ſaving. Verſ. 7. Verſ. 8. Verſ. 11. מומרי

For your ſaving firſt. This day, you were like to miſcarry: in danger to periſh, to loſe your life, and (that which to you is dearer than your life) your crowne, by ſome that hated you, and had contrived a Mezimma, a dangerous practice and plot, againſt them both. You, being then and there, over-ſet with ſtrength, came this virtus Dei: You then then being upon the point to perish, came this salus Dei, and saved You strangely. There is the first verse.

2 In the satisfying his desires. Esay 38. 14. Mat. 14. 30.

For your desire satisfying. In that distresse, I doubt not, but You might and did lift up Your soule to GOD, in some short Hosanna, that of Hezekias, Domine vim patior, Lord I am oppressed, succour thou me: Or, that of the Apostle sinking, Helpe Lord, I perish. If you did so, He granted your desire, He denied not your request: set a Sela then. But if being surprised with the extreme suddennesse of the assault, you did not, you could not doe it: Then did He more, even prevent you, with His goodnesse: His sweetest, His blessedest goodnesse of all.

זמומים Ver. 8. Ver. 12. 9. 9. 10.

And besides your saving (which you had reason to desire) that which you never would have desired, I dare say; that gave He You too. Exalted His strength, that You might, Your triplicity. And those same Zamzummims, the contrivers of the mischiefe, His hand found them, and they found it, He set His strings full against the face of them: destroyed them in His wrath, even in the very place: hath cast them into the fierie furnace (where even now they frie:) rooted out their fruit from the earth, and their name from among the children of men. All these, are word for word, every of them in the sequele of this very Psalme. All this, He did: You desired not all this, not their eternall destruction (I know;) yet even with this also, He prevented You.

3 In the setting on his crowne.

For your crowne: this is sure, if ever any were prevented with a crowne, he was, that was so, in his cradle; had it set on his head there: when he was not, as a weaned child (morally;) No, nor a weaned child (literally;) but indeed a child, not yet weaned (not so much;) had neither lips to speake, nor heart then, to desire any such thing: he was prevented sure.

4 In giving and prolonging his life.

Further yet: if any found favour in setting on his crowne, yea crowne upon crown: and saving upon saving: After his first crowne, in danger to miscarrie, and even thrown downe (as upon this day:) And after his second, in danger againe to miscarrie, and to be blowne up (upon another day) and saved in both: He was fairly blessed by His goodnesse (say I.) Which very saving (upon the matter) was a second crowning: even a new setting on that, that was sliding off. So that, Tu posuisti the second time, may truly be affirmed of this day.

And, what should I say? If any, that his crown saved, and his life saved (under one;) Saved and prolonged both; so that now these fifteen yeares together, you have held this day with joy: and (which is worth all the rest) besides length of this life, blessed with Gods holy truth, the pledge of everlasting life, the best of his blessings: Such an one, this Text doth warrant us to say, hath cause; great cause, exceeding great cause his soule to magnifie the Lord, and his spirit to rejoyce in God his Saviour. Such an one, to performe all the three (here specified:) so many triplicities of favour would have more than a single rejoycing.

Luke 1. 46.

And shall not I add this? As to rejoyce in God, so to seek and set himselfe, to devise and do somwhat, for which God may rejoyce in him: Somwhat for the Sanctuary, from thence came his helpe, and from no other place: Somwhat I say, that this joy may be matuall, as of you in God, so of God in You againe.

Sure, there is a bond, an obligation to it, in Lætabitur; the King shall rejoyce, shall be glad, shall do it, shall not be dispensed with, not to do it: Shall not please God, if he doe it not.

Our duty.

But, where are we all this while? excluded from this rejoycing? The King shall (it is said) what, and none but he? None is mentioned, but he: We would not let him (I dare say) do it alone; there be many thousands of us, that would not stand by looking on, if we had any warrant to rejoyce too. Give me leave then, to look out a warrant for us: we would be loth to sit out, and to lose our part in this Joy.

This

This Pſalme, and the Pſalme next before it, are two ſiſter-Pſalmes. That, a prayer for the Kings ſafety; the laſt words of it are, Lord ſave the King: Why, the King is ſaved, they have that they prayed for; and ſhall not then their Hoſanna reſolve into a Halleluja? Their carefull Hoſanna, into a joyfull Halleluja? Yes, and ſo it doth, in this. For, as the laſt words of that Pſalme are, Lord ſave the King: ſo the laſt of this, So ſhall we ſing; ſing for very joy of it.

They promiſed as much, there (in that Pſalme) to rejoyce at the 5. Verſe. We will rejoyce in Thy Salvation. Lætabitur Rex, here it is: Lætabimur nos, there. They promiſe it there: and they will be as good as their word; and ſo they are: For even in this Pſalme, Lætabitur Rex is the firſt verſe; Cantabimus nos is the laſt: That, if he rejoyce, at the firſt: wee come in, at the laſt. If his at the beginning, ours at the end.

We have no part in David, is the voice of a rebell. All good ſubjects have a part, have an inheritance in him, or (as the new taken up terme is) a birthright in him; and in him, before his Law. 2 Sam. 20. 1. 1 Reg. 12. 16.

In the 2 Sam. 19. 43. They fall there to ſhare the King among them (the Tribes) and to reckon up, what part and portion, each hath in him. Have they a part and portion in him? Why then, in his grief, and in his joy. And if they in theirs: we in ours. So that (to uſe the Apoſtles phraſe) If he be ſorry, who can make us glad? and if he be glad (to uſe the Apoſtles phraſe againe) he may truly ſay (and ſo may every good King, of his people) This truſt have I in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all. Thus come we to have our part in his joy. And if (as it is well noted) Iuda is in David, the very name of the one (with a very ſmall tranſpoſing) in the others name: if Iuda, in David; then Iuda's joy, in Davids: That if it be true, lætabitur David; it will alſo be, lætabitur Iuda, & exultabit Iſrael, Iuda will rejoyce, and Iſrael be right glad. Looke ye, there is now a warrant, there is Scripture for it. 2 Cor. 2. 2. 2 Cor. 2. 3. Pſal. 53. 6.

Now then, if we have Scripture for our rejoycing, let us do it: and do it thoroughly; even, by and through all this tripartite joy. 1

Begin with lætabitur: Rejoyce in the ſpirit within. A good ſigne we do ſo: if we can but ſay the two firſt words here [Domine lætabitur] unto GOD. The whole Text is a ſpeech directed to GOD: He, made witneſſe of our joy. Therfore ſee it be hearty and true: there is no halting with him; ſee it be ſo, or tell not Him, it is ſo: He will finde you ſtraight, and give you your portion with hypocrites, if you ſay to Him, Lord thou knoweſt thus I am, and yet thus you are not. Mat. 24. 51.

In very truth, the Pſalme ſeemes to be penned for the nonce, that no diſſembler might ſay it. He, to whom it is to be ſaid, is not man, but GOD: and He, can tell whether we ſpeak as we think, or not.

But all true hearts will ſay it, and ſay it with confidence, and what even to GOD Himſelfe, that knowes the ground of the heart: Lord, thou knoweſt, what is within me, thou knoweſt that I am truly joyfull, even there within.

There within, we muſt have it firſt: but there within, we muſt not keepe it; nay, there within, it will not be kept, if there be this ſpirit and life of inward joy, in it. Out it will, with an exultemus: And, even ſo GOD would have it. No concealed joy, no Apocrypha to day. All the ſeven ſeales of it opened. Shine out, as a beame; flow forth as a ſtreame, into a viſible and audible exultation: ſhew it ſelfe as Gods joy doth (in the 6. Verſe) in the joy of the countenance. That if any tell you, he is glad within (that he is) and hath the clouds in his forehead; if it will not ſerve: you may aske him, but where is your exultabit? We muſt ſee, you are ſo. There is ſome leven of malignity within, if there be not the voice of joy and gladneſſe, that it may be heard to the eare; if there be not the habit, geſture, and other ſignes of it, to be ſeene to the eye: that it may give evidence, to both ſenſes. 2 Apoc 5. 5. 1 Cor. 5. 8. Pſal. 118 15.

Both theſe: and both, in no ſcant meaſure; no pinching to day: but good meaſure, running over; exceeding is the word of the verſe. Exceed firſt, in this leaſt, and loweſt of all; in the low voice of joy and gladneſſe, in theſe Panegyricks of praiſe, and joyfull acclamations. But, exceed me them: how? by cantabimus, the hymnes 3 Luc. 6. 38.

and muſick of the Church (that is lowder) and to helpe them to exceed, all the Organs and other Inſtruments of the Queer below. But exceed we them, too: How? with the bells, the Inſtruments of the Steeple above: and with the ſound of the Trumpets, that wilbe heard further off. And yet exceed them too: How? With a peale of Ordinance (if it be to be had) that wilbe heard, fartheſt of all.

Exceeding is the word in the Text. Exceeding to be, in and through all; that our Hoſanna may be in the Higheſt to day. And ſo for the other ſenſes: in ſhewes, and Triumphs, Feaſts, and Fires, and other ſignes of Jubilee; whatſoever we uſe, when we uſe to exceed in gladneſſe; when we would ſhew, we exceed in it: that ſo, ô quàm! may be ſaid of it, it doth ſo exceed. All are but due, to this deliverance, to thus many triplicities in it.

We to exceed: for God Himſelfe (we ſee) exceeds here. His ordinary is, but to give leave, or (at moſt) to call us, to rejoyce. But here, He doth not give leave, or call us to it, with a jubilate; Nay, ſhall (here) is more, than a jubilate: that but exhorts; this binds us: ſhalbe glad; that is, neither will nor chooſe, but be ſo. Yea He makes us, ſpeak to Him, Domine; and makes us promiſe Him, we will ſo: and having promiſed, looks we ſhould make it good. GOD injoynes it: And if GOD injoyne it, the Day doth moſt juſtly, intercedere, even plead for it, that if ever we will do it, we would now doe it, on the ſalvation-day it ſelf. And never may he ſee day of joy, that joyeth not in this day: nor have cauſe of gladneſſe, that for this cauſe, is not glad. And this, for ſhalbe glad; and for the bond, de præſenti, that is in (ſhall.)

But beſides it, there is a tenſe, de futuro, in (ſhall) too. We may not loſe it, for Ioh 15.12. feare of tolletur à vobis. But, admoniſhed by that Tenſe, bethink our ſelves, how to draw it further than the preſent tenſe, even into the future (ſtill ſhall.)

Lætetur, or lætabitur Rex; the Hebrew will beare both. But ours, and ſo all tranſlations chooſe lætabitur rather. Not lætetur: that, is not ſo well; for, that is true, if it be done now, and but now; for the preſent, for this once: Lætabitur, is better; for there, the doing it, is in the future ſtill, ſtill to come; ſtill more joy behinde.

For [the King ſhall rejoyce] of this day, wilbe over ſoon at night. What, ſhall we end our rejoycing then, with this day? No (I truſt.) But by vertue of this (ſhall) ſhall rejoyce next yeare againe; and when that is come, ſhall the yeare following; and ſo Heb.3.13. then againe, the yeare after that: and ſo from yeare to yeare, donec cognominetur (ſhall) ſo long as it is called (ſhall;) ſo long as we look into our bookes, and finde, ſhall rejoyce, there. So long, and no longer.

Now, that the joy may ſo continue, the cauſes muſt continue too, there is no remedie. It is they, muſt keep our lætabitur, ſtill alive: The cauſes were, ſalutem miſit, deſiderium prævenit, coronam poſuit, vitam dedit. To performe our vowes then (Vota publica, I truſt) to deſire, that this chaine of cauſes, may keepe whole ſtill, and not a link of it be broken, or loſt: that they may paſſe into the future, all: ſtill ſalutem mittet, deſiderium præveniet, coronam ponet, and vitam dedit.

I will not go through them all: only touch the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and Pro.14.30. 16.24. the laſt: and ſo I have done. Lætabitur, and vitam dabit ſtill.

Lætabitur, joy firſt: if it be but for vitam dedit. For, joy is a prolonger of life, dulcedo carnis & ſanitas oſſium (as Salomon calleth it:) And even for that cauſe, we begin with it. But (to ſay truth) leave out lætabitur, and what is there wiſh-worthy? Truly, without it, neither ſaving, nor crowne, nor life, worth the wiſhing. For who would be ſaved to live ſtill in ſorrow? And the crowne it ſelfe it is not corona deſiderii, if it be not corona gaudii. Yea, and who would wiſh life, but to take ſome joy and comfort
Gen. 3.8. 10. in it? I will ſay more: let one be in Paradiſe, as Adam was; Even there, when Adam had loſt his joy, Paradiſe it ſelfe, was no Paradiſe: as good in a drie deſart, as in it: without joy, Paradiſe it ſelfe is not worth wiſhing. Ioy is all in all. Let that then be Pſal. 45.7. Pſal. 132.18. caput voti: that the oyle of gladneſſe, may run downe through them all, and over them all, make His ſaving precious to Him; His crowne flouriſh; His life, vitam vitalem, and worth the deſiring. That, joy may be the unity, of this Trinity, [1] ſalutis, [2] coronæ, [3] vitæ.

But

But then, laſt, becauſe all foure of them hold upon life; to the end, they may hold, that that may hold; hold, and hold long. Some thinke, it is long enough already (and ſo long may they thinke.) I know not what to think: For (I cannot tell how) long and ſhort, are ſaid but comparativè: that ſo, a life may be long, and not long, diverſly compared. To ſtand rating it, as the Law doth, ſeven yeares to a life; ſo, ſeven lives already: ſo compared, it is (in a ſenſe) long. But, we will none of that. Nor as compared with the Princes round about Him: For he hath ſtood them all, and longer than any of them all: and hath had the honour long, to be Primogenitus inter Reges Terræ, GODS firſt borne now of all the Kings of the Earth: and long may He have it. Long, if thus. But then againe; not long, if compared with the deſires of our hearts, with the requeſts of our lips: Not long, is compared with that, that may be: and whatſoever may be in this kinde, we wiſh, it might be: even as long, as nature poſſibly can draw it out. Let this then, be our Omega, our ſumma voti; and that in no other words, than the uſuall words, of the old Councels, to the Emperours or Kings, then preſent among them. Pſal. 89. 27.

IACOBO REGI, à DEO coronato, à DEO cuſtodito, Vitam longam, Annos multos.

TO KING IAMES, crowned by GOD, preſerved by GOD, Many dayes, long life. So long, till He change it, for a longer: till there come eternall ſalvation, an immortall crowne, life in ſæculum ſæculi, nay in ſæcula ſæculorum, and make all conſummate. And ſo I end.

But before I end, in any wiſe let us not be ſo raviſhed, with our lætabitur, but that we remember, Tua Domine withall. He, that ſent this ſalvation, fulfilled this deſire, the Setter on of theſe Crownes, the Giver of this life. So rejoyce, as in every of them, our joy come up to Him. So take calicem ſalutis (as we terme it, I pray GOD, we ſo terme it, and ſo take it aright:) but, aright we ſhall do both, if we forget not to call upon His Name, even the Name of the LORD. That He, which ſaved to day, may ſo ſave ever: that fulfilled his deſire, may keep it ſtill full: that He that ſet on His crownes, may hold them on, hold them on faſt: and laſt of all, add to the crowne, life; and to life long; and to long, for ever and ever. Pſal. 116. 13.

And even ſo, conclude we, as the Pſalme doth: addreſſing our ſpeech to heaven. Be thou exalted O Lord, in Thine owne ſtrength: Thou wert ſo, this day: Be ſo ſtill, againe and againe. So ſhall we ſing and praiſe Thee for it. We now do ſo, for this dayes ſalvation, and all the joyfull triplicities of it: So may we ſtill: So may we long: So may we ever.

And (Good Lord) exalt Thou this thy ſtrength, and treble theſe thy triplicities to us; that we may for theſe thy exaltations and triplicities, double and treble our thankes and praiſe to Thee: As this day, ſo all the dayes of our life. And this with one heart and voice, beſeech we Thee, to grant, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE,

At BURLEIGH neere OKEHAM,
On the Fifth of AUGUST, Anno Dom. M. DC. XVI.

ESTHER, Chap. II.

Eo igitur tempore, &c.

Verſ. 21. In thoſe dayes, when Mardochai ſate in the Kings gate, two of the Kings Eunuches (Bigthan and Tereſh) were wroth, and ſought to lay hands on the King Ahaſhueroſh.

22. And the thing was knowen to Mardochai, and he told it unto Queene Eſther, and Eſther certified the King thereof, in Mardochai's name; and when inquiſition was made, it was found ſo, therefore they were both hanged on a tree: And it was written in the book of the Chronicles before the King.

IN thoſe dayes; So begins the Text: In theſe dayes; ſo may we beginne. Nay, come yet nearer, on this very day. For, on this very day there fell out that, hath made, either beginning may well ſerve: In thoſe dayes, or In theſe dayes. In diebus illis, we read there was a King, and hee in danger: in danger to have hands laid on him; and that by two; two of his owne people: for no cauſe, but that they were angry; and it appeares not why. And, the iſſue was, the King delivered; and they that ſought his, brought to a wretched end.

As we have read, ſo have we ſeene in diebus hiis. One of the ſame condition, a King too; and in the very ſame danger of hands layd laid on him, and by the ſame number, two: and of his owne Subjects and Servants; and for no cauſe, but they were angry; and for no cauſe, that neither. And the iſſue here againe, the King preſerved, and they alſo came both (as theſe here did) though not the ſame, yet to a farre more fearfull end.

I ſpeak, before underſtanding hearers: and (I know) there was not any but upon the reading of the Text, his conceipt did lead him preſently, who was meant by King Ahaſhuerus, and withall did even thinke of the Bigthan and Tharez of this day. And ſo made the compariſon, with your own ſelves, before I could make it.

We ſhall gaine, this yeare, by this Text, ſomwhat onward more, than the former we did. Till now, we have beene all in Divinity; that, a heinons ſinne it is, there (this attempting on Princes:) But now ſhall we goe to the Common Law, what it is there. For, here is an Aſſize brought againſt two, and the matter enquired, and a verdict found, and they had ſentence and were executed: For what? Even for Voluerunt inſurgere, as the Fathers read it, or (as we) Quæſiverunt mittere manum; for but ſeeking, for but having a will, to lay hands on the King. The Summe.

And that, not the Iewes law. There, we were, in the years paſt: now, we are not in Iewrie, where GOD was knowne; we turne us to the Gentiles; we are in Perſia now. And this we do, by the Prophets warrant: Get you (ſaith he) to the Iles of Kittin and behold, ſend to Kedar and enquire, if there were any ſuch thing ſought there and were not condemned. For if there, Ad erubeſcentiam veſtram dico, I ſpeak it to your ſhame, that would be held the People of GOD, if any ſuch thing ſhould be found with you. They are worſe than Pagans, that ſo ſeek; we will empanell no Chriſtian, a queſt of heathen men ſhall ſerve to attaint them. Pſal. 76. 1. Ier. 2. 10. 1 Cor. 5. 6.

This is no law of the braine; it is written: Twice written, [1] written down, firſt in the Chronicles of Perſia, by direction from the King. [2] After, written out of them, and enrolled here in this place, by direction from God. Enrolled I ſay, and properly: For, this of Eſther is not called a book, as others are (not the book) but, the Roll of Eſther. Originally it was but Perſian law (this:) and it had not been much, if that had been all; but, by vertue of this enrollement, it is made the law of GOD alſo. That, from henceforth, it is cleare at both Lawes, the Law of the Iewes, and the law of the Gentiles; the law of man, and the law of GOD; that all ſeekings of like nature are made criminall, and capitall, and the ſentence of ſuſpenſi ſunt, upon them, holy, and juſt, and good.

Laſtly, written law and old law. For, of this (whether Divinity or Law) this we may ſafely ſay; It is no new Portugall Divinity, this almoſt three yeare old, taken up in diebus hiis. Nor no new Law of heri and nudiuſtertius: nay, not of Edward the third then, Et à Principio non fuit ſic. No: it is old this, in diebus illis; in thoſe dayes. And thoſe dayes are as old, as the Second Monarchie, the famous Monarchie of Perſia: the reports of which Nation are more ancient, than any ſave thoſe of the Iewes: no book, but the Bible, ſo ancient as they. Mat. 19. 8.

And this me thinks is not amiſſe, when we can bring this book to juſtifie the juſtice, or any way to give ſtrength, to the law of the land. It is pitie, but it ſhould be ſo; either ſupport other mutually, facultas Iuris, and facultas Theologiæ. As here now, we have the Roll of Eſther, and in it a Report of Bigthans caſe, long before there were any Year-books or Reports at the Law. We are willing to bring forth this Roll of ours (which, till an ancienter can be ſhewed, muſt be the leading caſe, to make Voluerunt, treaſon) to ſhew the Countrey Law, in this, to be no other, than GODS is: that it is no otherwiſe, at the one, than at the other: treaſon, by Law; treaſon, by Divinity, by both.

Well may we talke of Law, the Law of the Land; but when all is done, never do men reſt, with that quiet and full contentment, as when they ſee, it is warrantable by the Word of GOD; hath the ground there: as this hath the ground there. Every word here, hath in it, his warrant: Quæſtum eſt, for the tryall; Inventum, for the verdict; Suſpenſi ſunt, for the execution.

The Diviſion The maine points are (as the verſes are) two: 1 the Kings danger, in the former, the verſe of danger; 2 the Kings delivery, in the latter, the verſe of delivery.

I. In either, the means of either. His danger: 1 Of what, 2 by whom, 3 what moving them.

1 Of what? Of having hands laid. 2. By whom? by Bigthan and Tharez. 3. What moving? Nothing, but angry they were.

II. His deliverie, 1 by what meanes, 2 of whom, 3 and how. 1. By what meanes? by notice taken and given of it. 2. By whom? by Mardochæus? 3. How? even caſually, as he was ſitting in the gate.

But, the Kings delivery, it is not meet it ſhould go alone: It is therefore attended with their ruine, that ſought his.

That, is (as it were) the traine borne up after it.

His danger by Bigthan and Tharez. In them two things, 1 what they ſought, and 2 what they found.

1 What ſought they? To lay hands on the King: What found they? One laid hands on them for it; appenſus eſt uterque eorum in patibulo.

2 His delivery by Mardochæus. In him, two more: 1 His notice taken, by caſuall over-hearing them, ſitting as he ſate. 2 His notice given, by his faithfull diſcovery of the whole to the Queene; and to the King, by her meanes.

Then ſhould follow the legall proceeding, but I will ſpend no time in it. It is all out of our caſe this day. Our Bigthan and Tharez had no enquirie: No Iurie went on them, they were not executed in forme of law. No further goeth our caſe, than the Kings danger, his delivery, and the cutting off thoſe, that ſought his life; and no further will we follow it; Not that.

III. But this we will, the ſolemne ſetting downe and recording all this, 1 in the Kings Chronicle, as a memorable accident: 2 in GODS Roll, as a famous caſe: 1 Of the treaſon of the two, to their eternall infamie: 2 Of Mardochæus's good ſervice, to his everlaſting praiſe: 3 Of the Kings happy delivery, to the univerſall joy of all his Subjects.

And there, come we in. For, we may not, nor we will not forget in diebus hiis. And I ſhall make it appeare (I truſt) that, whether we take the Kings, or the parties; the danger ſought, or the delivery found; diebus hiis, will match and over-match diebus illis, in all points. And ſo, the joy of this day (our joy) to doe the joy of them accordingly.

I.

The Kings Danger.

Chap. 3.

1 Of hands laying on him.

IT is a delivery, they and we celebrate: No delivery, but from a danger precedent, ſo was there here. The King in danger evidently. And he no ſooner out of danger of theſe two, in this Chapter; But, the Queene in danger of Haman, in the next. So, the eſtate of Princes is not exempt from danger.

And of no ſmall danger neither; no leſſe matter, than having hands laid on them, that is, even of being made away. This King here (ſaith the Apocryphall booke of Eſther, ſaith Ioſephus, ſay the beſt Writers) was Artaxerxes ſurnamed Long-hand. If he: his Father was ſlaine by Artabanus. The Father was, and the Son (we ſee) was ſought to be; neare it, ſcaped it narrowly.

2 By his owne.

And by whom this? neither by enemy, nor by ſtranger, but by his owne. Of his owne Subjects, of his owne houſhold, of his owne chamber, and the chiefe of his chamber then, too.

3 Because they were angry.

And why? for no evill of his. He was, for his morall parts (as all write of him) a good a good Prince. That would not ſerve: his life was ſought, though. And no cauſe, but they were wroth; and no cauſe appeareth. All which ſheweth Princes; that, for all their might and greatneſſe, for all their innocencie and goodneſſe, for all the favours they vouchſafe others, it is not in them, their ſafetie conſiſts. It is in the mercie of the moſt High they doe not miſcarie: His hand, that holds them faſt; His arme, that ſtrengthens them, that the enemie is not able to doe them violence, nor the Sonne of wickedneſſe to hurt them. To looke up to Him, to hold good termes with Him, who in all their danger either by Mardochai (as in the Text:) or without Mardochai (as in the day) can worke their deliverance. Pſal 21.7. Pſal. 89.21. 22. 23.

Deliverance from danger: Danger whereof? Deliverie, where-from? Executed wherefore? All lead us to the fact next; which indeed ſeemes no fact, for nothing was done, ſought only to have beene. The Danger. 1. The laying hands on any, a ſin.

To lay hands is one thing: To but ſeeke to lay, is another. To lay hands is, of it ſelf (I know) a thing indifferent, therefore as the hand is. It may be a helping hand as God is, and then mitte manum (ſaith the Pſalme) lay it and ſpare not. But if it bee Satans mitte manum, upon Iob, to doe miſchiefe; then ſtay it, lay it not. And ſuch were theſe hands here; For, it is ſaid, they were angry and ſought to lay hands. Angry hands, it is well knowne, are hurting hands. Either Iereboams, lay hands on him, to ſurpriſe his perſon; or Herods lay hands on Peter, to doe by him as he did by Iames, to murder and to make him away. Pſal. 144.7. Iob 1.11. 1 King 13.4. Act. 12.3.

So to lay, is a ſinne certainely, be it on never ſo meane a Perſon. But, in Regem, is a Sin of ſinnes. For, the ſin (we know) is ſtill by ſo much the more grievous, by how much the partie is the more eminent, againſt whom it is. Now, there is not on earth a perſon more eminent, nay, ſo eminent as the King. A Deo primus (ſaith Tertullian) poſt Deum ſecundus: Count not God, he is the very firſt; Count God, and hee is ſecond. None ſo high as he; and ſo no ſin ſo high as it. To lay hands on him? it is too ranck that; away with it. Specially on the King.

But that is not the caſe. It is not miſerunt here: none were Laid. No matter for that, it is mittere quaſiverunt, and that is enough. To lay, and to ſeek to lay, though one bee worſe, both be naught, even miſſio, and quæſitio both. The ſeeking to lay hands, is a ſinne.

Seeking is a plowing for ſin, and that is ſin (ſaith Iob;) It is a hatching of a cockatrice-egge, and that (ſaith Eſay) is poiſon, no leſſe than that, comes of it. Iob 4.8. Eſay 59. 5.

Sin to lay, ſin to ſeek to lay. As to lay though you hurt not; ſo to ſeek to lay, though you lay not. Ever, in what degree ſoever, Aſſuerus danger, is Bigthans ſin: the Kings danger, their ſinne that ſeek it.

But if that be all (ſinne;) we ſhall doe well enough. What care men for ſinne, if there be no action at the Common Law for it? None but Weſtminſter hall ſins doe men care for. God ſaw it would come to this; men learne no more dutie, than penall Statutes did teach them; He tooke order therefore, to bring it within them too. We ſay further then, by vertue of this Text, beſides that it is a grievous ſinne, prejudiciall to the ſtate of the ſoule, it is an heinous crime, a capitall crime, amounting to ſuſpenſi ſunt, as much as their neck is worth to ſeeke this. It will beare, not an action only, but an enditement of life and death. A Capitall ſin

But it muſt be in Regem then, againſt Him: Againſt others, it is not ſo. This, is a prerogative royall. And, as many other waies, ſo hereby appeareth, what a King is. That whereas, in other mens caſes, as touching the law of life and death, to ſeek to lay, and to lay, are much different: in the Kings caſe, they be all one. Quæſiverunt, if it bee no more but ſo, the Law in that caſe to any other, is (I take it) favourable; and for a bare purpoſe, if no hurt enſue, no man ſhall ſuffer death. Not ſo, with the King; voluerunt, againſt him, is death, if it may be diſcovered; and quæſiverunt, if he but ſeek, though he find it not. If upon the King

This helpes us to underſtand the Text, Ego dixi, dii eſtis. Dii, for other cauſes; and this for one, that they participate this divine priviledge; that, as againſt GOD, ſo againſt them, the heart is enough. Quæſiverunt, the ſeeking, whether they finde or not. Voluerunt, the will, whether the deed follow or not. Thou ſhalt not ſpeake evill of Pſal. 82.6. Eccleſ. 10.20.

the King : how ? not with thy lipps ? No, not in thy ſecret thoughts, ſaith the Preacher. If not, ſpeake evill in heart ; doe evill in heart, much leſſe.

Two Commandements (when time was) we ſaid, there were in Nolite tangere, Pſal.105.15. [1] Touch not, the act : [2] Have not the will to touch, the intent. Two caſes there be upon theſe two : [1] Baana and Rechabs, that did lay hands upon King Iſhboſheth (2 Sam. 4.) [2] And Bigthan and Tharez caſe here, that did but ſeeke it to King Aſſuerus. Both guiltie, both ſuffered. Yea, Baana and Rechab, hang them, and well worthy ; they murthered the King : But Bigthan and Tharez ? Nay, and them too ; hang them, though they found it not, only for ſeeking.

This then, I would have all beare away, it is the ſubſtance of the Text: diſtillatio favi (as I may call it) drops of it ſelf without any ſtreining. We find (here) in the Bible, a ruled caſe. Bigthans caſe, that held up his hand, not for laying his hand, but for ſeeking to lay it, Planè ſuſpenſus eſt uterque, put to death they were both. Why ? Quæſiverunt ; for nothing, but that they ſought to doe it : they did it not ; they might plead, Non eſt factum, they did it not. It would not ſerve, they died for it, for all that, upon no other enditement than quia voluerunt. Voluimus is enough to attaint any : If that can be proved, no pleading not guiltie.

And this is the Law, not of the Perſians alone (which yet was the law of a hundred twentie ſeven Provinces ;) nor ours alone (and ſo may ſeeme to be the Law of Nations) but, that which ſtrikes it home, by vertue of this enrollment here, is the Law of God ; God by thus recording it, hath made it his owne ; that if there were no Law for it, they might be executed by this booke, and this verſe of it. Sit ſtill then, and ſeek it not : for if you doe, this is your doome, expreſly ſet downe here, by the pen of the Holy Ghoſt. Take it as a ſentence from Gods owne mouth ; Qui quæſiverunt, ſuſpenſi ; qui quærunt, ſuſpendendi ſunt. They that ſought, went ; they that ſhall ſeeke, to goe the ſame way.

2 The parties, by whom.

Yet for all this, ſought it was then, and ſince, even the Kings life ; Sed ea per quos. And that, per quos, by whom, is the next point. The crime is bad ; In Regem makes it worſe : But the ſeekers, worſt of all ; for they of all other ſhould not have ſought it.

Two, in number. Gen.34.25. 2 Sam. 4.5. 2 King.12.21.

Two they were in number : For (I know not how, but) for the moſt part they goe by Twos : Simeon and Levi, to the murther of Sichem ; Baana and Rechab to that of King Iſhboſheth ; Iozebed and Ioſacar, to that of King Ioas ; Bigthan and Tharez, to this attempt here againſt Aſſuerus ; and the very ſame number to that of this day. Treaſon is in Hebrew called בגד a binding together : Two there muſt be, to be bound, at leaſt : Two, to conſpire, or put their breaths together, to make a conſpiracie. Upon the point there is in all, never leſſe than three: For, inter duos proditores Diabolus eſt tertius, All that doe conjure, conjure up a third to them : The Divell makes them up three : for he is one ſtill : he, the faggot-band, that bindes them : he, the ſpirit that inſpires all Conſpirators. For (indeed) theſe unnaturall treaſons doe not ſo much ſteeme or vapor up out of our nature (bad though it be) as they be immiſſiones per angelos malos, ſent into it by ſome meſſenger of Satan, or rather by Satan himſelfe. Poſtquam miſit Satanas in cor Iudæ, After Satan had put it in his heart. For, hee it is, that puts in their hearts, to ſeeke to doe it ; and to do it, if God breake not the band, choke not the breath of them ; as here he did choke it in theſe, with ſuſpenſi ſunt. Luk.22.3.

Two in number, what were they ? Nobly borne (I doubt not) to be in the place they were.

What place ? There bee that think, Bigthan and Tharez were not their proper names ; but the names of the roomes they held. And they have reaſon for it ; Bigthan (as the word goes in that tongue) is Dapifer ; Tharez, is Pincerna. Thoſe (we know) were roomes ever counted of ſpeciall faith and truſt.

Of the Kings Chamber.

But plaine it is, they were of his Chamber. Not of his leiges alone, or of his houſhold, but (which is more) of his Chamber. It is a wonderfull thing, the State, that the Perſian Monarchs kept. No man, upon paine of death, to come ſo neere, as into their inner inner baſe Court, uncalled; if he did, he died for it, unleſſe the King, by holding forth his Scepter, pardoned him his life. You will eaſily then imagine, in what place they were, that had free recourſe into his innermoſt Chamber, to goe and come thither at their pleaſure. Chap. 4. 11.

Not only to do ſo themſelves, but to be thoſe, by whom all others were to goe or come: No man to come thither, but by them. For that is meant by Lords of the threſhold, or qui in primo limine præſidebant, as the Fathers read it, the very chiefe over his Chamber.

The Septuagint (who ſhould beſt know the nature of the word) they turne it ἀρχισωματοφύλακες. Φύλακες firſt, keepers; σώματος of the body. And many they had (for, many ſuch Kings need have:) But theſe two, they were ἀρχι, the chiefe, the Arch-keepers: had, if any more than other, the chiefe charge, the very principall of all. God do ſo and ſo to me (ſaith King Achis to David) if I make not thee the keeper of my head: and in ſo ſaying thought, he promiſed him as good a place, as he had: Hee could make him no more. To this place had the King advanced theſe two: and theſe two were they, that ſought this. That it ſhould be ſought at all, evill: that theſe ſhould ſeek it, too bad. They, that if others had ſought it, ſhould have ſtaid their hands; theſe to lay on their own, to ſeek it themſelves! 1 Sam. 28. 2.

All men know, it was no meane preferment, early and late to be ſo neere Aſſuerus's perſon; They had meanes thereby to do themſelves much good. So had they, to do others much hurt, if they were not the better men. But, for others, hurt it skills not, if they had not thereby had the meanes to doe Aſſuerus himſelfe; if the Devill prevailed ſo far with him as he did. Of his chamber Dapifer, his diſh; Pincerna, his cup: Keepers of his body, principall Keepers: if they ſeeke to lay their hands, they will ſoon find what they ſeek: the more dangerous they, the more his danger by them, a great deale. And is not this heavineſſe to death, when they that were ſo honoured, proove ſo unkind, when they that ſo truſted, ſo untrue; and may we not take up the Wiſemans Oh, O wicked preſumption, whence art thou ſprung up to cover the face of the earth? Eccluſ. 37. 3.

Stay a little, and looke upon them, as ye would upon a couple of monſters. 1 To ſeek this, in Regem alone, were too much: to breake their duty to their Leige Lord, if there were no more but that: to lay their hands on him, for whom they ſhould lay downe their lives. 2 Adde then: not to a King only, but to ſuch a King, nor to their Leige Lord alone, but to ſo good and gracious a Lord, that had done them ſo great favours, placing them ſo neere him, truſting them ſo far, honouring them ſo greatly. (For, no honour, to truſt; no truſt, to the chiefe truſt of all.) More than heatheniſh wickedneſſe this, to render evill for good: and whoſe wealth they of all other bound to ſeek, to ſeek his ruine. 3 And they came not to that place, but they were ſworne: to vilifie their oath then, and to teare in peeces the ſtrongeſt band of religion. The hands that had taken that oath, thoſe hands to lay on him! 4 To betray their truſt to him, that had laid his innocent life in their hands, and to make their truſt, the opportunitie of their treacherie! 5 In a word: of the chiefe keepers of his body, to become the chiefe ſeekers of his blood, the chiefe enemies of his body, and life and all! What can be ſaid evill enough of theſe? Say it were lawfull in any caſe (it is not lawfull in any; but ſay it were) to lay hands on a King: yet they (in all reaſon) of all others, ſhould not have beene the doers: Etſi ille dignus perpeti, at non tu qui faceres tamen. Were not theſe monſters then? was not their condemnation juſt? It grieves me, I have ſtayed ſo long on them, yet if I have made them and their fact odious, it grieves mee not.

What was the matter? what could move them, thus to play the wretches? Why they ſhould not, many and good reaſons we ſee. Why they did, none in the Text, but that they were angrie: and that is no reaſon, but a paſſion, that makes men goe cleane againſt reaſon many times. Bigthan was angrie, and Thares as angry as hee. 3 The cauſe wherefore. They were angry.

Yet, if it be but a little anger, it will over. Indeed (ſuch it may be) it will. What manner manner anger was it? The word is a ſhrewd word; ſignifies an anger, will not goe downe with the Sun, will not be appeaſed. What ſpeak we of the word? their deeds ſhew as much. We ſee, nothing would ſatisfie them, but his life: Nothing ſerve, but lay hands on him. That, they ſought; ſo angrie they were.

Ephes. 4. 25.

What angred them then? No cauſe is ſet downe. And, none I think there was. If there had, we ſhould have beene ſure to have heard of it. For men, to be angrie without a cauſe, and ever with Superiours, it is no new thing.

Well: if no cauſe, ſome colour yet: if not that, ſome ſhadow at leaſt. Somewhat we are to ſeek, why they did ſeek this.

If there be in the text any thing to lead us to it, it is in the firſt words, or not at al: In thoſe dayes. In thoſe, angry they were: as much to ſay as, before thoſe dayes, they were not; but, in thoſe, then they were. Elſe, there is no cauſe to mention that, of the daies, but to make this difference: Out of the text, nothing can be picked elſe.

Angry, for Aſſuerus choice of Eſther.

Why what daies were thoſe? That goes immediately before: The dayes wherein Aſſuerus had made choice of Eſther, to match with her, and make her his Queen; and had made a great feaſt upon it. At the feaſt (it ſeems) they ſurfeited, they could not brook that match, at any hand: Some ambitious deſire of theirs diſappointed by it; likely, that was the cauſe. This was faine to ſerve for the occaſion, for lack of a better: A bad one (we ſay) is better than none.

What, the great King of Perſia find no match in all his owne brave Nation? Never a Perſian Lady ſerve him, but he muſt to this vile baſe people (the Iewes) his captives and ſlaves, to pick him a match thence? What a diſparagement is this, to all the Perſian blood! It would make any true Perſian heart, riſe againſt it.

Nay then a worſe matter: (now, ye ſhall ſee them grow godly on a ſudden and wax very zealous as the faſhion is.) Nay then, we ſhall have a Queene of a contrary religion, we ſhall now be all Iewes. One that cares, neither for Mithra nor Oromaſdes; One by all likely-hood brought in, to be the utter ruine of the Ancient religion eſtabliſhed in Perſia, yer ſhe came there.

This was it (they tell us) and like enough ſo to be: As (ever) ye ſhall obſerve marriage-matters are made occaſions oft, to ſerve to many purpoſes. For, Aſſuerus may not marrie, but where Bigthan and Tharez appoint. Elſe, they will be wroth and fall on ſeeking. If any be in the Text, this was it. And was not this (trow you) a goodly occaſion, and a ſubſtantiall, to make them quit their allegeance, forget their oath, caſt behinde them all his favours, betray their truſt, truth and all; loſe all theſe? For, all theſe muſt they loſe; before they could ſeek that they ſought.

But, why found they it not? It was not ſo eaſie for them to find at firſt, by reaſon that, for any to come there, in the Kings preſence, with a weapon, nay but having his hands out to be ſeene, not having them hid, held cloſe under their garments, it was death: Cyrus put to death two of his kin for it. That ſo, they might well ſeek: and ſo I leave them ſeeking that, I pray to God they may never find. But the true cauſe was, God was angrie with this anger of theirs, that their ſeeking ſucceeded not.

II
His deliverie.

And now are we come to the Cataſtrophe, or turning about of all. For by this time innotuit res Mardochæo, Mardochai came to the knowledge of it: forth it came. Nay, if it come forth, the King ſhall doe well enough. To diſcover the treaſon is to deliver the King.

I
The meanes of it.

By notice given 2 By Mardochai.

This was by Mardochai: what was he? No Perſian (to begin with) but a ſtranger by birth, and by Religion; and a Captive, beſides: One that had better reaſon to have ſought it, than they. He had as great cauſes, as any are by them alleadged, that favour ſuch ſeekings. For, this King held him, and all Gods people with him (to uſe Eſthers owne termes) in bitter captivitie, as a Tyrant. And this, worſe he was (at leaſt, as evill as an hereticke,) for he was an Idolater. One would thinke, it had been a work meeter for him (this:) He, to ſeek; and they to keep him, from finding that he ſought; they him, not he them.

And

And how came hee to it? It skils not how, but as he ſate in the gate, he came to it. This is all; he ſtirrd not, but ſate ſtill. And ſate not in any lurking corner, but even in the broad gate; and there came he to it, or it to him. This was Gods doing ſure. Their anger boyled, ſo ſignifies נצפ and boyled over, it ſhould ſeeme, and brake out into ſome words: Elſe how ſhould Mardochai take notice of it? They would never truſt him with it (ye may be ſure) being a ſtranger. A Iew, with their diſpleaſure, at the match with a Iew, never: but, ſome bigge words came from Bigthan, that by Mardochai were over-heard. 3 As hee ſate in the gate.

What in the gate, in preſence of a ſtranger? The Targum (the moſt ancient expoſition we have) ſaith, God ſo took away their wits, as they forbore not to talke of it, he ſitting by, but did it in a forren ſtrange language. Knew him a Iew; thought he could ſpeak no language but his own, or a little broken Perſian perhaps: not the tongue they had their conference in. Which (it fell out) Mardochai underſtood, as well as they. And thus all came out, God would ſo have it: who ſo aſſotted them, to make a way, as to His mercie, for the ſafeguard of the King: ſo, to his juſtice, to bring that upon their owne heads, they ſought to have brought upon the Kings.

And Mardochai, when he had it once, he kept it not: Made it knowne, not to him he next met with: but diſcreetly, where he knew he well might, to the Queene. She was, by blood and bringing up, faithfull to him; and ſo did ſhe ſhew her ſelfe: for, what he broke with her, ſhe told the King, not in her owne, but in Mardochai's name, The faſhion is otherwiſe with ſome; to tell it in their owne names, and never ſpeak a word of Mardochai, for whom in truth it came. Well, the iſſue was, what ſhe told the King, ſeemed to him no idle phanſie of ſome vaine man, but ſuch as was meet to ground an equity upon. So, they were apprehended, and committed, and ſo to the Law we leave them. Well, by this meanes the danger is over, and the King ſafe, thankes be to God.

2 The ſtrangenes of the meanes.

And many waies doth God give juſt cauſe, to mankind, to admire His high providence, in bringing to light ſuch attempts as this, againſt his Annointed: ſuch varietie, ſo diverſe ſtrange meanes he hath, to effect it by; as here, in this I note foure unto you.

1 The partie firſt, Mardochai, that by him. That this health ſhould come to the King of Perſia, neither by Mede, nor Perſian; not by any of his owne people, but by a ſtranger, who was none of his lieges, borne out of his allegiance, a Iew, a meere alien; that this ſhould come forth by him, and by no other meanes. But ſo is God, wonderfull in his waies: and will by an honeſt ſtranger ſometimes, ſave that, a bad ſubject would deſtroy. That in default of his owne, God would have him ſaved by a ſtranger, rather than not at all.

2 Obſerve againe: that, to this ſtranger it came no otherwiſe, but as he ſate in the gate. We may not paſſe that; it ſtands in the front of the Text, as the ſpeciall means of all. That it thus came and no other way, as he ſate ſtill; ſtill, and went not up and downe ſearching: In the gate, a publike place, not any privie corner or lobby; he not diving into their boſomes, but only there ſitting, it ſhould thus happen; hee ſhould overheare them talking together in a ſtrange tongue (though to him not ſtrange:) by a meere caſualtie, one would think (all this;) Indeed by a high and wonderfull diſpoſition of Gods heavenly providence, this; that, even as he there ſate, it ſhould bee brought to him thus.

And very oft doth God bewray bad enterpriſes by ſuch (one would think them) meere caſuall events. But, in maximè fortuitis there is minimum fortuiti, & quæ fortuna fieri videntur, fato fiunt. It ſeemes chance, that is (indeed) deſtinie. And never let them looke for other (all the Bigthans of them.) One ſhalbe by a wall, or at a window under the houſe eaves, neer one crannie or other; God will ſo diſpoſe ſome body ſhall be within the hearing, when they full little think. For, God will have it out certainly: Rather than not, by ſome meere accident, ſome that ſitts by chance in the gate, ſome that goes by the gate ſhall bring it out, rather than it ſhall not bee brought out.

3 And may I not adde this for a third, that all this came out by occaſion of that which they pretended for their occaſion. That very match, which was ſo great a mote in their eye, that they ſo maligned at, they muſt needs ſweare the Kings death for it; that very match was the meanes that brought Mardochai thither, to the gate: for thither he came to hearken, not for any ſuch matter as this, but how the new Queen (his Neece) behaved her ſelfe; what report went of her. And as it fell out, this (which he came not for) there he heard: his thither comming, by this hap, was the happie meanes for this happie diſcoverie: happie for the King; happie for the whole land. But all came by his reſort thither, by meanes of the marriage. So, that, they made their occaſion, was made the occaſion of their ruine.

Pſal. 63. 8. Prov. 6. 2. Luk. 19. 22.

4 And let this be the laſt, that even from their owne ſelves, He brought it. They that goe about the like, their owne hands ſhall make them to fall, they ſhall be enſnared in the words of their owne lips: rather than it ſhall not come forth, it ſhall come forth ex ore tuo ſerve nequam; come out at their owne mouths, as here it did. Their owne tongues ſhall fall on babling, their owne pens on ſcribling: God will have it out certainly; even by themſelves diſcloſed, rather than not at all. And this for Gods mercy, He had here, and ſtill hath to bring ſuch plots to light, marvellous in our eyes.

Mardochai to be our example.

Now of Mardochai, the meanes of all. For, though as this dayes delivery was, we have no great uſe of him, there was no Mardochai, no diſcoverie there; this dayes was another manner of deliverie, of a higher nature than ſo: yet there is great good uſe of him for all that. Indeed, Mardochæus, exemplum noſtrum, he is our patterne: Ours, that be true men. Hee ſet before us a mirrour of a faithfull good ſubject, one according to Gods owne heart. For, this is a perfect Scripture, we have in it both what to flie and what to follow. As there be in it, two bad; ſo thanks be to God, there is one good. To avoid them: to be like to him.

Like to him three wayes: 1 Like him in his innotuit: 2 Like him in his nunciavit: 3 But above all, like him in that which was the ground of all: that he was a faithfull ſubject to a ſtrange and to a Heathen Prince.

1 In his innotuit.

Like him firſt, in his innotuit. Not to turne the deafe eare to Bigthan and Tharez, as if we heard them not: nor to look through our fingers at them, as if we ſaw them not. None knew, he underſtood the language they ſpake in: He might have carried it ſlily, made as if he had known nothing, not known that, he knew: nothing to compell him, but his conſcience, to take notice of it. But Salomon ran in his mind, Save him that is deſigned to death, Wilt thou not deliver him that is led to be ſlaine? Any; but the King more than any, If thou ſayſt, I know not of it, he that ponders the heart, doth not he underſtand? He that keepes the ſoule, doth not he know the contrary? And ſhall not he pay every man, (and ſo thee) according to thy worke? Well, for innotuit, ſince from the gate it came, good therefore that Mardochai ſit there, or (which is all one) that they which ſit there have ſomewhat of Mardochai in them: Be, if not curious and inquiſitive, yet vigilant and attentive. And yet curious and inquiſitive I would allow, in the caſe of a Princes ſafety. And the King and the Queene to have their eyes, and their eares abroad (both of them) and all little enough. We ſee for all the Kings Wiſe men, that knew the times, never a one of them knew this time. This good (we ſee) came by Mardochai, came on the Queenes ſide.

Prov. 24. 11. Prov. 24. 12.

2 In his nunciavit.

Like him in his innotuit, to know; Like him in his nunciavit, to make it knowne. Carefull to get notice, faithfull to give notice of it in due time. God, whoſe will it was, it ſhould thus happily come to him; His will it was, it ſhould as faithfully come from him. Hee knew, by the Law hee was bound, if hee heard the voice of conſpiracie and uttered it not, it ſhould bee ſinne to him (Leviticus. V.) Hee knew (by the Pſalme) what it was to partake with other mens ſinne, what to have his part with a thiefe or an adulterer; and if with them, with a traitor much more. He knew by the Proverbs, he was now in as deep as they, as good lay his hands on him, and ſeeke it,

Lev. 5. 1. Pſal. 50. 18. Prov. 24. 12.

it, as Lay his hand on his mouth and not seale to prevent it, keep it in and conceale it. He knew (for he told it Esther after) that if he had not bewrayed it, God wanted not his meanes, to have brought it out some other way. And last, he knew, by the Prophet, God would have set his face against him, for so cloking it, and have rooted him out. All this he knew: but, the mysterie of the seale of iniquitie (the Seale of Confession) it seemes he knew not. It was not graven then, that seale; nor many hundred yeares after. That shuts up treason, as a treasure, under a sacred seale, at no hand to be broken: no, though all the Kings lives in Christendome, lay on it. This act of Mardochais marres the fashion of that Seale quite.

Chap. 4. 14.
Ezek. 14. 8.

And, this may be said of him, he would never have laid any hands on himselfe: for then he would have let it proceed, and not hindred it, by his bewraying, as hee did. This also: he that did thus disclose, for a need would have taken an oath to disclose: Sure I am, would never have taken oath, or Sacrament not to disclose it: would never have stuck at the oath of Allegeance (that is once:) but it may be, would have stucke at the Seale of Confession, for ever comming upon his lips.

This for nunciavit. And all this he did, yea, though himselfe were no Subject borne to Assuerus, nor he his naturall Prince; but borne out of his Dominions, far off, in Iewry. Did it, not for Iosias, or Ieconias, or some King of his owne: Did it for Assuerus King of Persia, one that held him and his Country-men captive and thrall; yet to him he did it.

3 In his loyaltie to Assuerus a stranger.

Yea, more than that yet, this did he, to Assuerus not only a stranger, but more than so, to Assuerus a heathen man, an Idolater, one that worshipped the Sunne, and the fire, every day. As, that did not hinder him, that of a diverse Nation: so neither did this, that of a diverse, and that of a false religion. For though he were of a diverse Religion from the King, yet was he of Gods true religion, that teacheth men to be true to their Prince. Be he a Iew, or be he Gentile, Assirian, Persian, or what he will; Bee he a right worshipper, or be he an Idolater; Be his Nation, or be his Religion, what it will be: though the King be (as Assuerus) a Pagan, though they bee (as Mardochai) the only true Church and people of God; to be true to him though. But none of that religion, that is fast to the Catholike, loose to the Hereticke. If it be Iosias, O then stay your hand: but, if Assuerus, if Ethnicus, or quasi; if excommunicate, then set Bigthan and his hands freer to seek, and to find, and to lay them on and spare not. This Religion was none of Mardochais, (nor let it not be any of yours) witnesse this act of his, an holy and good act. For which (though not presently, yet) not long after, he was highly rewarded by the King, and for which, he is set here (his name, and his act both) among the Righteous, to be had in everlasting remembrance.

A Heathen.

Of the twaine now a word. I said I would tell you, what they sought and what they found. That they sought they found not. Not that: but pitie it is, but they should find somewhat, seeking as they did: and so they did. They found somewhat in stead of it, which had beene better lost than found: they found a halter scarce worth the finding: they found their owne perdition: and the worst kinde of it, perditio tua ex te, themselves the authors of it. Ex ore tuo, by that which came from themselves, out of their owne mouths: the Divels quærite & invenietis right.

The Traine.
What Bigthan and Thares sought and found.
Osee 13. 9.
Luk. 19. 22.

And will you see how fitly every thing fell out? They sought, and they were sought into; quæsitum est. They sought and found not: they were sought into, and found. They were wroth with the King, and God with them; the heavie wrath of God was upon them. They would have laid hands on the King, hands were laid on them for it: up the Gibbet they went, and off they went, and the world was well rid of a couple of traytors. Before they could finde, they were found themselves, and their fact, found: the Law was not to seek; that, was found and founded long before. A Law, that now hath received the approbation from God: and so now, a right Persian Law, never to be altered.

Dan 6. 15.

III.

The solemne Recording of this.

Have we done? not yet, this must be entred first, written: Nay written over twice, a Duplicate of it. [1] Written first in the Chronicles. And that before the King, (of such importance the King thought it.) [2] And then this writing here of the King, is here written over againe, a new order from God. So, two Constats: One, in the Kings Chronicles, the other in Gods Canonicall Scripture, of this act. Two Copies extant, one in Rotulis Regiſtri, the other in Archivis Eccleſiæ; One among the Kings Records, the other in the Churches monuments. What ſhould this meane? Something there is ſure, in the adding of this clauſe, about the writing it up. I know no meaning, but that God liked well of the writing of it in the Kings, that he would have as much done in his owne Records.

Why the King would have it Chronicled, is eaſily ſeene. It was a memorable event, worthy to be ſet downe there. But why God? Sure he ſaw, theſe Chronicles would not laſt ſo long, as his will was, this example here ſhould. And indeed they being now loſt, we had beene little the better, if it had beene there only; He made it therefore to be entred into his owne Chronica Chronicorum, that never ſhould be loſt. Well it was, it ſhould ſtand in the Perſian ſtorie while it did laſt; but God for failing, provided further, to have a memorandum of it in his own Sacred ſtorie, that laſt, as long as the world ſhould laſt. That, that is there, is ad perpetuam rei memoriam, indeed.

Another reaſon. Being in theſe Chronicles, it would have ſpread no further than Perſia, or the hundred twentie ſeven Provinces at the furtheſt. Gods eye looked further: that not Perſians only, but Iewes; Nor both thoſe, but Chriſtians too: Not the hundred twenty ſeven Provinces alone, but all the Provinces in the earth ſhould take notice of it. I ſpeake with the Apoſtle, Hath God a care of Perſia? either writ he not this for our ſakes? Yes, for our ſakes no doubt he wrote it, that we alſo might be the better for it. 1 Cor. 9. 9.

The better: two wayes: [1] Firſt, to know Gods cenſure of both theſe, in diebus illis, for the preſent: The due praiſe of him by whom the delivery, The juſt condemning of them by whom the danger; that none that ſo ſeeke ſhall bee ſaved by his booke: For that (we ſee here) brings them to the gallowes, and there leaves them. [2] Or rather there leaves them not, but by this Scriptum eſt ſets up their quarters, there to ſtand and be ſeene, by all that looke in it, to the worlds end. And this is worſe than hanging, yea in chaines; for, the carcaſſes of thoſe, in time will conſume and droppe away and come to nothing; ſo ſhall theſe never, but remaine as freſh ſtill, as the firſt day, they were ſet up, to all generations to come. It is that, that grieveth the noble generous nature (I dare ſay) more than the execution it ſelfe, there to hang upon the file in Bigthan and Tharaz's infamous black roll; their names to be read there, for ever.

But, this was written alſo for them that come after, and a double uſe there is of it that way: As the parties, and their facts, be good or bad, that there are regiſtred. If bad, then (as in the ſeventy eight Pſalme) Ne ſint ſicut, not to be like this Bigthan and Tharez. Ne ſint ſicut, not to be like them in their wicked attempt; Ne ſint ſicut, that they be not like them in their wretched end. Pſal. 78. 8.

Not like them; but like Mardochai (A ſint ſicut there:) that comming to the notice of ſo wicked a deſigne, tooke himſelfe bound in conſcience to detect it: yea, though it were againſt a ſtranger to him in nation, a more ſtranger in religion to him, yet to doe it. Here, Inſpice & fac (ſaith God, in his Law:) Vade tu & fac ſimile, (ſaith Chriſt, in his Goſpell.) In a word: this was written to the end, to tye up all hands from ſeeking as they did; and to open all mouths, to diſcloſe, as he did: To make men loyall to their Princes, though Heathen Idolaters, ſuch as Aſſuerus. Exod. 15. 40. Luk. 16. 37.

And if this were the end; if any ſhall goe quite croſſe (in a manner) in their Scriptum eſt's to this Scriptum eſt, in all theſe three: [1] Let looſe the hands to that, theſe (here) ſought and are condemned for it: [2] Stop up the mouthes from diſcloſing of that, Mardochai (here) did, and is comemended for it: [3] And both theſe, not in the caſe of Aſſuerus, but even of a Chriſtian Prince; what thinke you by them? what doe they ſay in effect, but Sint ſicut Bigthan & Tharez, Ne ſint ſicut Mardocheus.

I report me to your conſciences: God thus ſkoring up theſe, that but ſought to lay their hands on a Heathen King, would He ever approve of ſuch, as under-hand ſet on Subjects, to goe paſt ſeeking, even to lay their hand on Chriſtian Princes, Moſt Chriſtian ſtian Princes, their owne Princes; Owne by nature and nation, Owne by maſſe and religion too, as in diebus hiis we have ſeene two in France (a Bigthan and Tharez, both) one after another?

And what for Mardochai? They ſweare men, they give them their maker upon it, never to diſcloſe that, which Mardochai is (here) honoured for diſcloſing. Yea, and approve, nay more than approve of ſome, for doing cleane contrary to that, (Mardochai did here; even for concealing; nay, for ſcaling up (and that under a holy Signature) as foule and wicked a treaſon, as ever was.

This hath beene done. But, we are in writing, what ſay ye to that? Will ye compare but the writing of diebus illis, with ours in diebus hiis? Let there be a Booke written ſaith God (this of Eſther) that no man ever doe the like to theſe two, that no man ever ſeeke to conceale thoſe that ſhall ſo ſeeke: Let there bee a book written (ſaith ſome body elſe) as it were an Anti-Eſther to this Booke of Eſther, to ſet men on to ſeek that, theſe here ſought, and to teach them the way how to finde it; to point out, who ſhall be Bigthan, when and how they ſhall ſeek to lay, and lay both: As it might be a book written by Suarez in defence of Tharez (his name of the two names, neereſt) in ſome caſe to licenſe the ſeeking: and to command the cloſe keeping of ſuch geere as this.

But yet we have not all: Writing a Record, making up a Roll, is more than writing a booke. Every authentick Record (as is this) is of the nature of a preſident, to doe the like; of a copie ſet for us to write by. So here we have further a warrant, to make up our Records, by this Record; to Record all, that lay their hands, for ſuch as Bigthan and Tharez; and all that diſcloſe them, for ſuch as Mardochai. Ever, upon like occaſions, to make like entries. Shall we doe it? Write them downe (ſaith the King) in the Chronicle. Write them downe (ſaith God) in the Bible, for traitors, theſe two. Write mee downe ſome ſuch as did the like or worſe, for other manner perſons in another manner Regiſter, even for no leſſe than Martyrs. You know, who it is.

Regiſter me Mardochai (ſaith the Holy Ghoſt) for a partie well deſerving, for uttering his knowledge of ſo wicked a treaſon. Paint me up ſuch an one (ſaith another Ghoſt) ſtraw and all, and in the border print me him holy martyr, for not diſcloſing as foule a treaſon, nay fouler a great deale.

But trow you this to be Gods Vicar, that thus makes act againſt act; checkes Gods Records, with counter-Records of his owne; affronts Gods Chronicle with his New Calendar on this faſhion? Or Saint Peters Succeſſour? Nay not his: of all others, his leaſt: Hee laid his hand on his weapon, for his Maſter; So would hee teach, and not otherwiſe. Iudas, hee indeed laid none himſelfe, but he it was gave the watch-word, This is he, lay hands upon him. So that, Iudas's crue (it ſeemes) they be, that ſo doe; and no better than Iudas himſelfe, that ſo teach. No Apoſtle bid ever lay hands, but Iudas; He did: his Diſciples they be; his Succeſſours (not Saint Peters) that bid it. Mat. 26. 57. Mat. 26. 48.

We may and will then by his warrant, bee ſo bold as to enter them traitors in the Chronicle before the King: By what warrant, they may regiſter them for Martyrs, in the Calendar before the Pope, let them looke. Ours we ſhew, let them ſhew but the like, and carrie it: Elſe, if he ſee, allow, and print bookes with priviledge, that tend to the manumitting of Tharez's hand, and to the Sealing up of Mardochai's mouth; if under confeſſion he animate Tharez, and with his Seale of confeſſion, muzzle up Mardochai; if God write one way, and he another, in effect; write King, write God, what they will; write me him martyr; wee will bee ſo bold as to write him up with S. Paul, for Ἀνθιστάμενον, one that oppoſes himſelfe flat againſt this booke, and the Writer of it; which Booke ſtayes all hands from laying, and opens all mouths to the bewraying ſuch as theſe. 2 Theſ. 2. 4.

The comparing of Diebus hiis with diebus illis.

I will pray you, I may rather forget my ſelfe a little, than forget in Diebus hiis after all this: wee promiſed to ſhew, that they match and over-match In diebus illis. That they match in many points. That Kings both, both in danger; in the ſame danger, both; by the ſame number, and by thoſe of the ſame ranck; and upon the ſame motive, great anger for little cauſe. Againe, that both were preſerved, and both ſtrangly: that the ſeekers in both in ſtead of finding that they ſought, found their owne confuſion.

But as in many, they match; So, in many more, doth this day overmatch thoſe dayes. More degrees in our dyall, than in theirs; the day goes beyond the Text: and not this Text here alone, but any other, that ever yet I could find. The more (ſay I ſtill) are we all bound to God for His goodneſſe, that hath ſo magnified His mercies toward His Anointed, and in him to us all, as He hath vouchſafed him ſuch deliveries in diebus hiis, as He never vouchſafed in diebus illis to any King of his owne peculiar choſen people, or of any other under the Sunne. Such to be found in our Chronicles, as not the like in the Chronicles of Perſia: Nay, not, of the Kings of Iuda and Iſrael: But are ſine exemplo, ours; none comming home, all falling ſhort of them.

Which (me thinks) I can let you ſee ſenſibly; and ſo, that we have greater cauſe to rejoyce in this of ours. In the Kings firſt. The King in diebus illis (make the beſt of him) was but a Pagan, a worſhipper of Idols: theſe be barres in his Armes. The King in die hoc, neither Heathen (I am ſure) nor that can have the leaſt touch of Idolatrie faſtned on him: he that ſhamed not to ſay [No Chriſtian] and hath beene faine ſince to eat his word, he durſt not ſay an Idolater; that, would ſoone have rebounded backe upon himſelfe. And no Idolater is a Chriſtian; nor Chriſtian, an Idolater, I am ſure.

This firſt vantage then we have here yet: Alwayes the very ſtate of Kings, in it ſelfe, without any other addition is deare unto God (we ſee.) Aſſuerus here doth aſſure us of that, who was thus preſerved, only becauſe he was a King, and for no cauſe elſe. But I hold clearely; a Chriſtian King, to be more than a King; more than a Pagan King: and ſo Major Aſſuero hîc, and de majore majus gaudium, and ſo we, of the twain, more cauſe to rejoyce.

Next, as both Kings, yet not both like; ſo both in danger, and that not like neither. The danger of in diebus illis, was but of hands laying: the danger of this, of hands laid. On Aſſuerus, no hands were laid? it came not to that. It came to that, here. On they were, come off how they can. Thoſe in the Text, but ſought: they on the day, found what they ſought. It was paſt queſiverunt; It was plaine reſiderunt. That was the caſe, this day. No ſuch thing in theſe dayes. Aſſuerus was not offered the point of a naked dagger; not taken by the throat; not graſped and tugged with, till both lay on the floore. All this danger was but de futuro; ſought to have been, and might have beene but was not. This was de præſenti, preſent danger, of being preſently made away, in a corner, by the hands of bloodie wretches, that not only ſought to lay, but found that they ſought, and did lay. Now, the greater the danger, the greater the joy for the delivery (ever;) and ſo our joy the greater. For, no compariſon betweene the dangers: that is cleare.

No more was there between the Actors, by whom the danger grew. Bigthan, bad enough (I grant;) but behold a worſe, a bigger than Bigthan here. Bigthan and his fellow might have gone to ſchoole to them. They were angry, and ſo ſhewed themſelves to be, and the leſſe dangerous for that. Theſe were as angry as they, but ſhewed it not. They brake forth in termes, that it came to Mardochais eare. Theſe had learnt their leſſon better, not an evill terme came from them, no ſhew of anger appeared, but faire and falſe ſemblant all. So much the more likely to doe miſchiefe (ſay I,) ſo much the more like Iudas treaſon, the worſt that ever was. For, no betraying, to betraying with a kiſſe. Give me angry Bigthan, rather than fawning Iudas: to welcome one kindly, and ſet one privilie, with Iudas watch-word, This is he, lay hands on him; from ſuch, God deliver us. The more the parties ſuch, the more our joy, you eſcaped out of their hands.

Mat. 26. 48.

Both

Both Kings were delivered: so farre, equall. But then againe, great inequalitie in the manner; very great. That, in those dayes, by a Mardochai: All was regular, went the common ordinary way, upon a discoverie. Quotidiana sunt hæc; to be seene, to be read in every Chronicle. But on this day, there was never a Mardochai to discover ought: Mardochai failed here. A conceit there was, somewhat should have been discovered in another kinde; but the plot it selfe, no discovery of it, till the very instant; till one appeared in armes, till out went the dagger, till the dagger discovered it selfe: God was faine to be Mardochai, to supply his part: though he were wanting, God was not. By whom it is true Assuerus was delivered: but, You delivered, after a more strange manner (I report me to all.) Now, the more strange the manner, the more the joy ever. Then Mardochai did somewhat toward it: this came meerely from God; neither Mardochai, nor any else; sitting in the gate, or out of it; there or any where els.

Yet let me adde this, that you might be beholden to God (even that way too) He hath fitted you that way also. This fifth of August, without a discoverie, the fifth of November with a discoverie. So, with Mardochai; and without Mardochai, hath God wrought for You, in diebus hiis: that we might every way be bound to him, and that, every way our joy might be full.

Now, in both, as the hand of God was stretched over both Kings to save them; So was the same hand stretched out against both those, that sought their lives, to bring them to evill ends; both which may ever bee the ends of such beginnings. There was no wonder in theirs; there, all was done by a Legall course, a faire judiciall proceeding, they indited, convict and executed by course of justice. Good Lord, with what ease was Assuerus delivered, even sitting still! There was no wonder, in this, at all. So was it not here: Here was old pulling, and wrestling, and weapons out, and drawing of blood; and a kinde of battell fought dubio Marte, a good while, but at last the victorie fell on your side. And this winning of it, as it were, and seeing Your enemies lye dead at Your feet, made the deliverie the more wonderfull; and so the more welcome; and so Your joy the greater. And if one might take joy in the fall of his enemies, the fall of yours was worse for the manner. For, they died not like Subjects, but as open enemies or rebels: Not as penitent sinners, but as damned reprobates, lost not only their lives, but their soules too.

Thus, every way, doth this day goe beyond those: the King beyond, as a Prince Christian: the danger beyond; for, the extremitie neerer. The parties that sought, beyond; for, the lesse they appeared, the more perillous they were: the delivery beyond; for, without any Mardochai at all: And their fall beyond; for, strucken downe in the place, like ranck rebels; and tumbled into hell like reprobates, without space or grace, without fruit or signe of repentance. And, if thus many waies beyond, allow for every of these, a degree of Joy, and I have that I would.

Of this writing, one speciall end was for Ioy. A double joy: for either verse, one. [1] In the former, Rege incolumi gaudendum; Ioy for the Kings safety. [2] And in the latter, Stratis hostibus gaudendum; joy, that his enemies lay where they lay, on the floore.

For the Kings safetie we to rejoyce; but without a Mardochai. He parts not with God, in ours: it is entire without him. So it is not in the Text: God and Mardochai, there; here, God alone, and Ioy in God alone.

Then, for Stratis hostibus, in regard of them. First, that they sped not; then, that they were sped themselves: that their anger was vana and sine viribus; did no hurt: that Gods anger to them for it, was both sure: paid them home: and swift; did it out of hand. That they fell; and fell before him: He saw them lye slaine at his feet: that his eye saw his desire upon his enemies; nay more than his desire, that he was faine to pray for them, that had not the grace to doe it for themselves. Psal. 92. 11.

A little after in this Booke, for the saving of the Queene from the laying on of Hamans hands, we find, there was great joy and a double feast, the fourteenth and fifteenth of Adar. And can we imagine, but there must needs be as great (nay, Festum magis duplex) for the King here? If for Her a stranger: for their owne naturall Leige much more. Was so with them In diebus illis, and with us to be In diebus hiis. Chap. 9. 17

Or rather in die hoc; For (there) it was plurall, more dayes went to it than one; many dayes in doing; here, it was diſpatched ſooner. No diebus here; begun, acted, ended all in a day; nay, halfe a day, betweene noone and night. And this ſhall be the firſt, that it was not long in doing. Short as it was, yet may I take upon me, there is as great odds betweene this day and them, as is betweene the fifth of Auguſt, (ours) and the ſifteene of Adar, that is, December (theirs:) that is, betweene a long and a ſhort, a Summers and a Winters day.

There is not in all the Scriptures a booke that expreſſeth ſo plentifull joy, for Chap. 9. 22. the ſaving of a Prince, as doth this of Eſther: the whole ninth Chapter (in a manner) is ſpent in it. There is gaudium and lætitia, and hilaritas, and convivium, and tripudium. I cannot tell how many times over; and the day chriſtened by the name of Dies feſtus, a Feſtivall day. There is joy in Suſan, the Citie; there is joy in the Villages; there is joy in the hundred twenty ſeven, every province of them all; joy all over: and all this allowed, nay, a Statute made to keepe it. So, a day of joy to all poſteritie, and all this Cronicled ſo. A joy in the Cronicles; what would you more?

Hence have we warrant for this day of ours; and for all and every of them, on this day of ours; the ſame joy full out, the ſame that was for that in every degree, let be for this; and more for this, as this is more (as hath beene ſhewed;) as by the ſeaſon of the yeare, the day is longer, the Sunne brighter, the skie clearer, the weather fairer, in Auguſt than December. As this caſe more famous, Gods might and mercie more marvellous; more fit for a Chronicle, more worthy to be engroſſed in the great roll, ours than theirs.

And in one we ſhall be above them, that we begin our joy in the houſe of God; whereas they in Perſia, had none to begin it in: Here doe we begin it, as God would have us begin it, in the Houſe of Prayers, with prayers.

A prayer for Bigthan and Tharez, we cannot (either theſe of the Text, or thoſe of the day:) But, a prayer, that by their examples, both Ruina præcedentium may bee admonitio ſequentium, the deſtruction of thoſe that are gone before, may be the inſtruction of all thoſe that ſhall come after. This the firſt part; and if this will not bee, the ſecond. So may they ever find that ſo ſeeke; If ſeeke as they ſought, find as they found.

A prayer for Mardochai, that for his ſo ſitting in the gate, he may ſit in a better place: that ſo, many may follow him in his good example.

A Prayer for the King. But firſt a praiſe (the principall cauſe we come hither for.) Praiſed be God ever, that ſaved in Perſia, Aſſuerus from his two: that ſaved in Scotland, your Majeſtie from your two: the Saviour of Kings, Maximè fidelium. Then, the prayer; That thoſe dayes, and theſe dayes may never faile him, nor hee ever ſee other.

No more Bigthans (good LORD) but Mardochai's for them. That Mardochai may never faile him; but, if he doe, that thou wouldſt not (no more than this day thou didſt:) but ever ſave, ever deliver, ever preſerve him, and make them that ſeek his ruine, finde their owne. Either hang aloft, as theſe in the Text; or lye on the floore, as thoſe of the day.

And even ſo, let the end of this, be the beginning of the other, even of the joy of the whole day. For the day, for it: for this happie event on it; for the King, the Subject of it, To the cauſe of it, and of all our joy, God the Father by which, and through Chriſt in the unitie of the Holy Spirit, be all bleſſing, honour, praiſe, glory and thankſgiving, this day and all dayes, for ever and ever.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WINDSORE, On the Fifth of August, Anno Dom. MDCXXII.

I. Sam. Chap. XXIV.

Vers 5. And the men of David said unto him: See, the day is come, whereof the Lord said unto thee; Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, and thou shalt doe to him, as it shall seeme good to thee. Then David arose, and cut off the lap of Sauls garment privily.

6. And afterward David was touched in his heart, because he had cut off the lap which was on Sauls garment.

7. And he said unto his men, the Lord keepe me from doing that thing unto my Master the Lords Anointed, to lay my hand upon him: For, he is the Anointed of the Lord.

8. So David overcame his servants with these words, and suffered them not to rise against Saul. So Saul rose up out of the cave, and went away.

ECCE dies venit, Behold the day is come: So begins the Text: so say Davids men. And Behold the day is come; so may wee begin, and as truly so say of this Day, as ever did they of that. The first words agree well: So do the last. Abiit Rex viam suam, the King rose up and went his way: so ends the Text, and so ended this day too. And not onely the first and last words, but the midst and all fall out as fitly. For indeed, what is the whole Text, but a report of a King, in danger to have beene made away, and that closely in a cave, and a motion made to that end, and a knife drawen, and Davids men up against him and all? Yet (see the goodnesse of God!)

the King did well enough for all that; and went his way, without any hurt done him.

And, comes not this home to the day? Saul at Engedi, in the cave there, may he not seeme (as I may say) a type of His Majestie, at Saint Iohnston, shut up (to use Sauls words) in the close corner there? In stead of a knife, was there not a dagger drawne there, and somwhat else; and more sought than a corner of his cloake? And, as Davids men rose here; So, rose there not a popular tumult there?

And yet, being in that extremity, was he not delivered out of their bloudy hands? and did not all end, as the Text ends, The King rose up and went his way? And this our meeting now, in this publike solemne manner, is to no other end, but to rejoyce together in the presence of GOD, and to render unto Him our anniversary sacrifice of praise and thanks, that Ecce dies venit, Behold the day is come, wherein he scaped so faire, and went his way so happily.

And, shall we not withall, put out incense to our sacrifice (that is) add our prayers to our praises; that, as this day there was, so still and ever, a way may be made him to escape all his dangers?

King Saul (here) in the Text, was the first King, that ever the people of God had. In him (the first) would God have all succeeding Kings to read their destinie: that as they are placed high; so, their high place is no exemption from danger; a provoking it, rather. Here now, Saul is in danger in the vale Engedi. Once before had we him in as great a plunge; and that was in the hill Hachila: Abishai would faine have had a blow at him; and but one blow. But David came then betweene with his Ne perdas. 1 Sam. 26. 8.

That did not so well fit our turne. It was night then: Saul was in his bed asleepe. That, was not our case: this here comes nearer. This fell on the day. Saul was awake: So was His Majesty. We may say Ecce dies, Behold it was day, and that day is now come. Between them both, they make up thus much; that sleeping or waking; by night, or by day; in Hachila, the high lands, in Engedi the low vallies, out of danger they go not, if the hand of God be not over them, as here over Saul it was.

The Division First and last, we may recapitulate the whole Text into one word. It is all but a Delivery. Ecce tradam in manus, a Delivery into their hands; Ecce abiit, a Deliverie out of them. Which two make the two maine parts of the Text. The former, the Delivery into, lasts to the last verse: And, in the end of the last, comes the latter, the delivery out of; The King rose up out of the cave, and went his way.

I. Ecce tradam in manus is of two sorts: 1 Into Davids hands, and 2 into his mens hands. Or thus: Sauls danger here, is double: 1 One the danger of Davids mens motion; 2 the other, of their Commotion (for, rising they were, and David suffered them not to rise.)

1. In their Motion. 1 What was moved to David by his men: and 2 what David did upon it. That which was moved, was mittere manum, to lay hands on the King. That, he did upon it, was, he went and laid his hand on Sauls mantle, and cut off an end of it, and that was all. This, the fact: then, the censure of this fact.

When David had done this, what he thought of it: 1 What he, and 2 what his men. He thought not well of it, he did penance for it, his heart smite him for doing but so much. His men thought not well of it neither; but ex alio capite they, for not doing more than so.

2. What followed of this? The neglect of their motion, turned his men to a Commotion: They were rising against Saul, if they had not beene stayed. The second danger, this: farre the worse of the twaine: The rising of Davids men, than the drawing of Davids knife. Thus farre the Epitasis.

II. Then followes the Catastrophe. For, the issue was, Davids men were stayed by him, and kept from rising: Davids victory. And how? by certaine words speaking. Those words are in the third verse: Davids spell, I may call them.

And

And upon all this followed, the King was ſaved, twice ſaved, from both dangers (thanks be to God) and away he went, ſafe without any harme. Onely, loſt a peece of his mantle: and I would never greater loſſe might come to him.

Thus lie the parts in this order; which, when all is done, we muſt crave leave to reflect upon, and review againe, to ſhew, that the Ecce of this our Day is farre above the Ecce of that of theirs. III.

Now, by the ſpeciall providence of GOD, it ſo fell out, that all this was not paſſed and done in ſilence. There was arguing the point, reaſoning on both ſides. The whole text is but a kinde of Dialogue betweene Davids men and him, what was to be done with Saul their enemie, now they had him in the cave; kill him, or let him goe? And it fell out well, that this point was thus argued. For, out of this their debate, might thoſe two wretched men this day have learned (if they had had grace) and may all true men and good ſubjects learne, what to do or not to doe, in like caſe. For, a cleare reſolution here is, to be held for ever, taken out of Davids Abſit here, God forbid that ever any ſhould lay his hands on the Lords Annointed. Yea, though he ſhould catch him in a cave (or as good as a cave, as this day he was.)

Nay further, GOD ſo providing, here fals a matter in upon the By (of Sauls mantle) that removes it from the maine (Sauls perſon) quite. Sauls perſon, David touched not; went but to his mantle. And even for going but to that, did his heart ſmite him. Which (by à minore ad majus) puts this queſtion paſt all queſtion, as being a protection for the Kings robe: and, if for it, for his perſon much more.

And let me ſay two things of this Text to you: One, that as Saul was the firſt King; ſo, this the firſt caſe that ever was, wherein the making away of a King, was put to the queſtion. So, the leading caſe (as they call it) to all the reſt. Reſolved here by David (and we cannot reſolve our ſelves by a better) and reſolved once, reſolved for ever. No more Quere's of it now. 1

The other, that it is the onely caſe (this) that ever I read of in Scripture, of dixit Dominus alledged for killing a King; of killing Kings by Divinity. The more worthy it is your attention, the nearer it comes to the late phrenſie of this Age of ours. 2

And two uſes there be of it, as the chiefe perſons in it are two. [1] In Saul, to let Kings ſee their danger: [2] In David, to let ſubjects ſee their duty. To let Kings ſee their danger, that they may look up continually to their Deliverer out of evill hands. In David, to let ſubjects ſee their duty, and the extent of their duty, as to themſelves, ſo to others.

Two dangers were like to befall Saul here. From David firſt: His men perſwaded him to diſpatch Saul: perſwaded him, but prevailed not; He did it not: So Saul ſcaped once. Second: when that would not doe, they were upon riſing (themſelves) to have done it. David diſſwaded them: diſſwaded them and prevailed; they did it not neither: There he ſcaped twice.

In which two, David is two wayes our example, to learne us, the two duties (I ſpake of:) [1] Would not do it himſelfe: [2] would not ſuffer others to do it: Would not be perſwaded by others to it: did diſſwade others from it. I will ſay with our Saviour, Vade tu & fac ſimiliter, Let every good ſubject goe and doe likewiſe. Neither doe it, nor ſuffer it to be done: And he ſhall be according to Davids, who was a man according to Gods owne. Luke 10. 37.

Saul

I.
The first delivery: Ecce tradam in manus.

SAUL was now in the cave. What Davids men would have had him doe to Saul. Even what was good in his eyes (a good mannerly terme; but even what pleased him.) What is that? What meant they by it? The meaning is, they would have had him lay hands upon Saul. Plaine by Davids answer: What? lay hands on him? GOD forbid. More plaine yet, by Davids report of it to Saul (the eleventh Verse.) And some bad me kill thee. Loe, there ye have it in plaine English.

To make this motion seeme good in his eyes, they use here a perillous motive; or rather three in one. 1 Inimicum tuum, the motive of enmity or deadly feud. 2 Ecce dies venit, now is the time come; the motive of opportunity. 3 And de quo dixit Dominus, the motive of GODS word, of doing it by Divinity.

Inimicum tuum: that, is the ground of all: (a motive well beseeming them that make it; even fit for a Souldiers mouth:) he is your enemy, he would kill you; what should you do but kill him? should not we kill them that would kill us? This goes current in the Camp, this is bonum in oculis, a good motion in their eyes.

Now, if this hold for good, if an enemy be to be slaine; It is sure, Saul was Davids enemy: GOD Himselfe cals him so, Inimicum tuum: they be Gods owne words, one that (even as David saith himselfe) hunted for his soule (Verse 12.) And, even at this very instant had him in chase, and was so eager on it, as up the rocks he went after him, among the wild goats (ver. 3.) and followed him so hard, he was faine to take a cave (here,) In which cave, what taking he was in, ye may read in the 57. Psalme, (made, when he fled into this cave) even at Miserere mei Deus, miserere mei: One miserere would not serve him; in a greater agonie of feare. For, if Saul had but knowne it, David had never gone his way thence, as Saul did his. It is well knowen, Saul sought his life. That was not all: there was a further matter than so. Will you heare it from Saul himselfe? Look to the 21. vers. I know (saith Saul) thou shalt be King after me. Yea, shall! then was it inimicum tuum (indeed) in another sense; then was Sauls life, an enemie to Davids rising. David stands in his owne light, if he do it not. Do it then, and besides the assurance of Your life, the crowne is Yours. These two laid together, any would wonder, what eyes David had, that this seemed not good in his eyes. And, this for inimicum tuum.

Ecce dies venit.

But, many an enemy scapes with his life, because we meet not with an Ecce dies, a fit time and place to do it in. Verily, opportunity it selfe is a shrewd motive. The common saying is, occasio facit furem: that which one was farre from, would never have imagined, there will come so faire an offer, such a faire shoot (as they say) as will make a man do that, which but for such an occasion, he would never once have thought on. We are all to pray to GOD to take from us the opportunity of sinning: So fraile we are, it is no sooner offered, but we are ready to embrace it (GOD helpe us.) What say they then? Why Ecce here is a time, and here is a cave, as fit a place as can be for such a motion. Such an opportunity, as if you take it not, you shall not meet with againe, all your life long. To have your enemy light into your hands, in a darke cave, where you may dispatch him, and no body the wiser who did it, or how it was done. Well then, wisdome is seene in no one thing more, than in taking opportunity. Go to, shew your selfe a wise man: you know, what you have to do.

Ecce tradam.

Nay, it is not onely Ecce dies, but Ecce tradam; and there, is an Ecce. For, there is much in tradam; he is even delivered, even taken, and put into your hands:

I weigh

I weigh the word tradam. It is one thing to ſay, Your enemy is fallen; another to ſay, He is delivered. Falling is caſuall; Delivery imports a deliberate act of an Agent to doe it, to deliver him: So, this is more than chance, more than hap-hazard: It is not cecidit, it is tradam.

Againe; One thing to ſay delivered: another, delivered by God (now I weigh the perſon.) Ego tradam; it is God that ſpeaks it. One may be delivered, and by man, by ſome falſe traitor (it was not Sauls caſe, this, it was the Kings.) But here, God is the deliverer נתן the giver. Take him then as donum Dei. God hath even given you him, and having given Him, would have you take Him, and I hope it will ſeem good in your eyes ſo to do, and not let GOD give you Him for nothing. Ego tradam.

Nay, yet there is more. (Now, I come to weigh dixit Dominus.) For one may be delivered by God, ſeeing it, and ſaying nothing to it, but ſuffering it: by Gods permiſſion. So are all things. Of many of which (though) God ſaith nothing, ſpeakes never a word: but of this, God ſpake to you before, ſpake to you with His own mouth, and ſpake it with an Ecce; Ecce tradam: gave you warning of it, gave you His word for it, I will deliver him: and is now as good as His word, hath delivered him. See if He have not. 3 De quo dixit Dominus.

Will ye collect theſe three, 1 Not caſually fallen into your hands, but purpoſely delivered: 2 And delivered not by man, but by God Himſelfe: 3 And by GOD, not quovis modo, at adventure, but plainly propheſying and promiſing He would ſo do. Of this (ſure) God muſt needs be the Authour, that He foretels thus, and promiſes before-hand. So have you (here) God made acceſſorie, nay, principall to the murder of a King.

And now are we come indeed to the perillous point of all. This (lo) is it. They would have Saul made away; and for this, they alledge de quo dixit Dominus, as if God had beſpoken a ſet day for the doing of it. This, goes to the quick. Inimicum tuum is but a revelation of fleſh and bloud, that; but dixit Dominus, that is the will of our heavenly Father. So, not onely lawfull now, but a matter of conſcience, to kill Saul, אמר, God hath ſaid it.

Where, firſt, you ſee, it is no new thing, this, to kill Kings by Divinity. This geere is but newly raked up from hell againe. It is but the old divell new come abroad, that had beene in the world before. For, ever ſince there have been Kings over Gods people, this hath been abroach; broached firſt in the cave here at Engedi, and dixit Dominus pretended for it (you ſee) in the firſt Kings dayes of all.

The griefe is, they were not Sauls, they were Davids men, the better ſide, that alledge this. But Davids men all, are not of Davids minde: Iohns Diſciples ſometimes are found with the Phariſees; and the Apoſtle ſaith, Of our ſelves, there ſhall ariſe men ſpeaking perverſe things. Therefore never mervaile at it. Goe not after the men: Go after the Maſter, David himſelfe. Mat 9. 14. Acts 20. 30.

Well yet, I muſt needs ſay for theſe good fellowes (here) they go roundlier to the point, than doth Suarez, or any of them have beene blundering about this geere of late. They be all triflers to Davids men, here. For, upon the matter, all they have beene able to ſay, is; it hath beene done. King Eglon was killed; ſo was Athalia. Neither of them, a true lawfull Prince (as God would have it:) uſurpers both. So, nothing to the matter. But, ſay they had been lawfull: yet all this is but Homo fecit; it is not Deus dixit. Never a dixit Deus comes from them. Nothing but poore Paſce oves: which (ſure) is a full unlikely Text to perſwade a man to become a butcher, and cut his ſheeps throats. One Abſit of Davids here, one Ne perdas, one quis erit innocens, able to daſh twenty ſuch, and all they can ſay, to peeces. Not one of them comes off to the point, as do theſe in the Text, with dixit Dominus, Gods expreſſe word for it. Iud. 3. 21. 2 Kings 11. Ioh. 21. 16.

There is no remedy, we muſt ſtay a little at this, at dixit Dominus. What He ſaith, we may: nay, we muſt do. To His dixit, there is no contradixit. If GOD ſpeak once, let all fleſh keep ſilence. Zech. 2. 13.

I will not trouble you with, when God ſpake this, or where. Extant it is not.

Yet

Yet ſeeing David traverſes it not, denies not but that God ſpake it, we will take it for good, that they truly alledged GOD. For, it is not unlikely, that at ſome time when David was in ſome great diſtreſſe, GOD might ſend to him by the hands of Nathan, or Gad, his Seers, he ſhould take a good heart to him, he ſhould be ſo farre from being delivered into Sauls hands, as the day ſhould come, Saul ſhould be delivered into his, to do with him what ſeemed good in his eyes.

Well then, take it, God ſaid all this: and all this might God ſay, and yet Saul not touched. Ye ſhall ſee as little force in this Dominus dixit, as in their Homo fecit. Neither of them, to the purpoſe they are brought. You ſhall ſee withall, what it is when Sword-men will be medling with Dominus dixit, with our profeſſion; what trim conſequences we ſhall have, to make, What ſeems good in Davids eyes, and to murther Saul, to be all one. And withall, that it is good for Kings to be learned, and to be learned in Gods Law. For, had not David been the better Divine, he might well have been overtaken and made believe, there is a way to deſtroy Kings, even by the Word of God.

To ſcan them a little. Dixit Dominus, God ſaid. What ſaid He? The day ſhould come: well, it is come, that GOD would deliver Saul into his hands: well, that is done too. And David ſhould doe to him, what? What ſeemed good in his eyes. What is that? To deſtroy Saul? No indeed: Bonum in oculis, will beare no ſuch matter. We might diſpatch all in a word, all is put upon Davids eyes, and in his eyes it ſeemed not good. But to touch them ſhortly.

Facies ei quod bonum eſt in oculis tuis.

Firſt, facies ei here, injoynes nothing, leaves him but to himſelf: that is all can be made of it. Nay, they deſire no more, but ſo to be left. And when one is ſo left, what then, may he do what he liſt? Suppoſe, he liſt to do that which is evill or forbidden? Adam will tell you, no: That conſequence we all pay full deare for. It undid him and us all. Gods ſo leaving us, gives not any leave to do any thing that evill is; puts but power in our hands, to trie how we will uſe it. For, when power is ſo put, Ipſa ratio dictat, even by the rule of reaſon, we are ſo to uſe it, as we take the better, and leave the worſe ever, and reach not our hand to the forbidden tree.

Not, bonum in oculis but in oculis tuis.

When God leaves a man to do that which is good in his eyes, he had beſt wipe his eyes, ſee they dazle not. If they doe, that may be bonum in oculis, which is not bonum indeed. They be not all one, theſe two, [1] Bonum in oculis, and [2] Bonum: Take heed of that. That which is evill, may ſeem good to an evill eye. And no man is ſo fond, to think, God would have any evill done.

Therefore He ſaith not, bonum in oculis, and ſtayes there: but, He adds tuis; in oculis tuis. For, much is, as the party whoſe the eyes are. For, as the party is, ſo is his eye. And the party here, is David. God would not have ſaid this to every one. To David he did, and He knew what He did, and that Saul was ſafe enough for all that. He knew his eye, was ſingle and good, that nothing that was evill in Gods eyes, would ſeeme good in his. He would never have ſaid ſo much to Saul, of David: nor to Davids men, of Saul. Never have ſaid to David, Quod bonum eſt in oculis tuorum: if it had been what ſeemed good in their eyes, Saul had been gone. No, He had not ſo good a conceipt of their eyes: of Davids He had. To him therefore he ſaid it: and he deceived not Gods expectation. Pepercit tibi oculus meus (ſaith he at the 11. Verſe.) All then reſolving into Davids eyes, it ſeemed good in his eyes, to ſpare Saul. And, this is ſure, they have not Davids eyes in their heads, to whom it ſeems otherwiſe. For, to doe what ſeemed good in his eyes, was, to do Saul no harme. Looke to tuis then, that the eyes be Davids, and all his well.

In oculis tuis, not tuorum.

Then, ſeeing Davids eyes are ſo cleare and ſo good, how were it to be wiſhed, David would ſee with no other eyes, but his owne: would ſtill do, what is good in his owne, not in his mens eyes!

So this was their Elench. It ſeemed good in their bloud-ſhotten eyes, to lay hands on Saul; and they ſtrongly imagined, what ſeemed good in their bloud-ſhotten eyes, would have ſeemed ſo, in his too. The ſequele ſhewes, it did not. Why ſtand we any longer then upon it? but leaving the Motion, let us now ſee how it moved him, what he did upon it.

Some

Some think it moved him, till he came to the very puſh; and then God ſtrucke his heart, and his heart ſtruck him, and ſo his minde changed. Others thinke, that it ſtirred him not a whit (for the blow came after all was done.) Yet, as if it had moved him, he moved upon it. Somwhat to ſatisfie them, he would ſeeme to do ſomewhat. So, up he roſe, and toward Saul he made, בלט, as ſoftly and as ſecretly as he could. And when he came at him, cloſe behind him, out went his knife, as if he meant to uſe it. (His men, I dare ſay, hoped, to ſome other end.) Stay here. And he that had ſeene David thus, in this wiſe, comming cloſe behinde the Kings back with his knife drawne in his hand, would he not have taken him for Ravilliac? What difference? I promiſe you, this was not bonum in oculis, no very good ſight. And then knowing, Saul was his mortall enemy, and even now at this very inſtant time come forth to ſeek his life, and ſeeing them thus in a blinde cave, and David hard at his back with a naked knife, would he not have given Saul for dead, paſt (for ever) abiit viam ſuam?

b What David did upon this motion.

Well: when all came to all. Firſt, it ſeemed not good in Davids eyes, to uſe ſpeare or ſword, but his knife. Why, a knife will doe miſchiefe enough. 2. Then, to goe to worke with it, not punctim, but cæſim, not with the point, but with the edge onely; thruſt not, cut onely. Yet that will hurt too. 3. But cut, what? Neither fleſh nor skin, not them: Nay, not his ſhirt or doublet, his mantle onely, and but a peece of it. 4. And, it was no great peece neither, he cut no skirt: It was ſo ſmall, it was not miſſed. Sauls fellowes ſpied it not, till David came after them, called to them, held it up and ſhewed it them: and then they looked well, and ſaw a peece was gone, but not before. The word כנף, πτερύγιον, ala, ſignifieth a wing: and thoſe (we know) are but additionals, no part of the entire garment: the garment is whole without them. So, it was not in the whole cloth neither, he cut. His knife he drew, but drew no bloud with it; went not to Saul himſelfe, his perſon, but to his mantle; tooke but an edge of that, and away he goes: and ſo may Saul go his way, for any hurt, David hath done him. And this (lo) is all, came of the motion; and more than this, ſeemed not good in Davids eyes.

What, and is it but this? This and no more? No more but a ſhred of his mantle, and is that all? All, yea: and too much of that too. For, now it followes, in the ſecond verſe, when David reflected upon what he had done, how, this he had done, ſeemed in his eyes. It ſeemed good to them to do but thus much, or rather thus little, and after it was done, it ſeemed not good to him, not this little he had done neither; but it even ſeemed good to him, to repent when he had done it, as little as it was, or as it ſeemeth to us to be. Repent? Yea, that he had done no more. Nay, that he had done thus much, had cut his mantle, had cut at all. That which any would thinke, was highly to be commended in him, he went no further, you ſhall ſee him do penance for it, as if he had gone too farre, as if he ſhould not have gone ſo farre as that.

c His cenſure of it.

Will ye ſee David do penance indeed for it? Penance I ſay, in all the parts, the Schoolemen make of it. 1 Contritio cordis, in this verſe: his heart ſmit him for it. 2 Confeſſio oris, in the next; The Lord keep me from doing more, this was too much. 3 Satisfactio operis, in the laſt verſe, in making amends, by not ſuffering his men to riſe, but converting them from ſo ſinfull a purpoſe. And beſides, in leaving behinde him ad perpetuam rei memoriam, a monument of all this, a Pſalme, מכתם that is, a golden Pſalme (ſo he cals it) the 57. Pſalme, made as the inſcription ſhewes, at this his being in the cave. Of it, and there, both in word and deed: of ſaying deſtroy him not, which is the title of the Pſalme. Though yet get Saul in a cave, yet deſtroy him not. Other Pſalmes there be of the ſame title, but the 57, that is the firſt of them all, purpoſely ſet upon this occaſion, and at this time and place.

His contrition Percuſsit cor ejus.

For his Contrition. It is ſaid, after he had done it, his heart ſmit him, and told him why? Even but for making a hole in Sauls mantle. It is ſtrange, that his heart, that (one would think) ſhould have ſprung for joy, that he did no more but that; fals to ſtrike and to beate him for doing but that: in ſtead of exultation, that he had done well, done the King no harme; a palpitation, a pang or paſſion of feare takes him, leſt he had done more than he could well anſwer. And, it is the more ſtrange, the great valiant David, one of the nine worthies, whom neither the Beare daunted nor the Lion; who without all feare encountred the Giant great Golias, and ſmit him downe, whoſe heart ſerved him, fainted not then: here, for doing I wot not what, a ſhred of Sauls mantle, it ſerves him not; but beates and throbs, as, in feare, it is uſuall for the heart to doe.

Bonarum mentium eſt (ſaith Gregorie:) Good mindes will ſometimes feare and acknowledge a fault, where none is. Peradventure David doth ſo; is more ſcrupulous, than needs. Nay indeed. For, to doe but this, to the garment of any private man, ſuch as our ſelves, to cut or to marre it, is a treſpaſſe (I take it) and will beare an action. And if ſo; then muſt there needs be a higher, a more heinous offence to offer it, to any of the Kings robes; to mangle or deface them in any ſort. The materiall part of it, cannot (ſure) be juſtified. Onely, the formall part (as in Schooles we ſpeake) non tam quid, quàm quo animo, that may in ſome ſort ſeeme to qualifie his act, and helpe to excuſe him; that he did it, with no other minde, nor to no other end, but by the little ſhread taken off, to make it appeare, he did not ſo much as he could have done, if his minde had beene ſo bad to Saul, as Doeg and ſuch as he, would faine make him believe: teſte vel ſegmento hoc, which he gave in, by way of evidence (verſe 12.) When I cut off this lap, I kil'd thee not; as going a little farther, I might have done: might have done, but did not. Might have gone otherwiſe to work: with a ſword and not a knife; with the point, and not the edge; thruſt, and not cut: or, if cut, taken away a collop of his fleſh, as well as a corner of his cloake. Yet for all this though his heart were privie to no evill intent, it ſmit him though. For, in caſes touching the King ſo neere, it is not enough to ſay, I meant not that, but this. So, a fault it was; and as for a fault, his heart ſmit him.

There is no ſmiting, but for a fault. Specially, not of the heart. For, the heart ſtrikes not us, but it is it ſelfe ſtricken firſt. And if you aske, who ſtrikes it? that doth God: for, this (of the heart) is nothing elſe, but the reverberation of Gods ſtroke, His knock at our hearts, to fore-think us of what we have done amiſſe, when we have cut where wee ſhould not.

And it is no light fault, the heart ſuffers for. The heart is the chiefe part, and the Eccl. 15.57. blow of it is the greateſt blow. Give me (ſaith the Wiſeman) πᾶσαν πληγὴν, any ſtripe, any griefe, rather than the griefe of the heart. Cardiaca paſsio is the worſt paſſion of all. Therefore, as a fault; ſo, no light fault it was.

2 Sam. 24 10. We may patterne it with the numbring of the people, after. Then, it ſmite him too; and then he cried, Peccavi valdè: and the ſame reaſon is of both, as miſgiving him in both, he had in both done far otherwiſe than he ſhould. But this (here) was the firſt blow, the firſt diſcipline given him, as if he had gone too neere Saul; as if Nolite tangere
Pſal. 105.15. did reach further than the perſon, even to the robes royall.

Luk. 18.15. And herein is his contrition. For, we uſe to ſtrike our breſts with the Publican, becauſe we cannot come at our heart to ſtrike it, for not ſtriking us, when we make a fault. But, when the heart needs not be ſtricken for it, when it ſtrikes us firſt, when we feele
1 King. 5.38. plagam cordis (as Salomon cals it, in expreſſe words) upon making a fault; that our heart corrects us, gives us diſcipline for it; then is our penance begun, then is our Contrition in a good way.

Now good Lord, if but for a ſlit in Sauls cloake, his heart went and came thus; how would it have taken on, how coutrite would it have been, if his hand had happened to ſwerve a little, and done him any hurt! How many blowes then, what ſharpe penance for that!

Will ye now lay theſe together. How ſcrupulous, how full of feare David was, men were, in that world: Not his mantle or cloke, not an edge of it. And how deſperately audacious, how paſt all feare ſome are growne in this: Not cut (now) but thruſt: or, if cut, cut thorow cloke, coat, skin and all. And, their heart never ſmites them for it. Nay, there be, whoſe hearts would have ſtruck them, they had ſtruck no deeper: as did his, that he had hit the tooth, and miſſed the throat: and that, if the knife had been in their hands, would have cut his skirts ſo cloſe, the bloud ſhould have run down the reines of his back.

To ſuch, David (in effect) ſaith thus: It was a leſſe matter far that I did, than laying hands on his mantle: If you will be ruled by me, meddle not ſo much as with laying hands on his mantle: if you had felt ſuch a blow at your heart, as I did at mine, you would never offer. What? not mittere manum in illum? nay, not in pallium illius. Never talk of his perſon: ſo far from that, as not to the very corner, but of his cloke.

And this is the remove I told you of at firſt. Thus did GOD ſuffer this à minore ad majus to fall out in this firſt attempt upon a King, that we might inferre thereof a further matter, and yet no other than our SAVIOUR CHRIST's owne inference. May not a man put a knife in Sauls raiment? by this blow of the heart (here) it ſeemes he may not: may he not? and is not the body more worth than the raiment, O ye of little faith? Mat. 6. 25.

Alway, this we may count of, and ſo conclude this point: that, he whoſe heart did thus ſmite him for doing this; he would not do that, his heart ſmit him for, if it were to do againe. Not goe thus farre, ſince he felt it at his heart, his going but thus farre; though nothing ſo farre, as his men would have had him. And ſo much for percuſſio cordis, Davids contrition.

All this while we goe but upon collection; feele but by his pulſe, how his heart beateth. Will ye have an ore tenus, a full and a flat confeſſion from him, heare him diſtinctly ſpeak his minde to this very point, of laying hands on Saul; and give you the true reaſon, why he did it not; why, neither they, nor any ſhould ever do it? That followes now in the third verſe. Verſ. 7.

2 Davids confeſſion.

But firſt, let me tell you, this cut of Davids was not well taken, of either ſide. David (we ſee) thought not well of it: No more did his men. He, that he had done ſo much: They, that he had done no more. Evidently to be gathered; that his men when they ſaw he made no more of their motion than ſo, that he came back with his knife in one hand, and a ſnip of Sauls mantle in the other, and his knife had no bloud on it; and that he had done as much as he would do, and no more was to be looked for at his hands (for, he looked like one heart-ſtricken, that if it had beene now to doe, would not have done that, neither:) they fell into a rage, a mutinie, a plaine riſing; as reſolved, if he would not, they would: if it were not good in his eyes, in theirs it was. It was not an end of a mantle ſhould ſerve their turne; they would make him ſure for ever going his way: as knowing, if he went away, he would prove worſe than ever, as (indeed) ſo he did. So, when David was downe, his men were up. What Davids men thought of it.

Here now, is there a ſecond danger toward Saul, from Davids men, a multitude ready to riſe and run upon him. Plaine: for; it is ſaid in the next verſe expreſly, David ſuffered them not to riſe. Which could not be ſaid properly, unleſſe they were on riſing. But, an inſurrection there was towatd, and at Saul they would have beene, had not David interpoſed, and oppoſed himſelfe, with theſe words which now follow, and with thoſe words overcome them, and ſtayed them, that they did not riſe.

2 Sauls ſecond danger: Davids mens commotion.

So that, the words we now come to, ſerve for two purpoſes: Not ſo much for an Apologie for himſelfe, that he did it not (though, that they do too:) as for a diſſivaſive, or retentive to them; and in them, to us, and to all, that none ſhould ever attempt it. You ſaw even now, how evill his heart brooked it: you ſhall heare (now) his mouth utterly renounce it, ever to hold that for good, that ſeemed good in their eyes.

Davids diſſivaſive to them.

Firſt, a flat deniall it is. But, that is not ſo much: the manner of it, is all. It is not ſoberly ſoberly and coldly. No, I will not do this thing. No: but it is with very much vehemency, as the manner of men is, when they ſpeak in great paſſion. If ye marke it, it is with ſhort turnes: GOD forbid: What, doe this? To my liege Lord? To GOD'S anointed? lay my hands on him, and he GOD'S anointed? A pawſe at every word; as if he were halfe out of breath, as if his heart did beat ſtill. Weigh them a little: חלילה לי׳׳. There is not, in the Hebrew; there is not in any Tongue, ſo earneſt ſo paſſionate an abnegation, abjuration, abrenunciation, as it: It was the word they uſed when they rent their clothes at blaſphemy. We turn it, as our tongue will beare, as the poverty of it will ſuffer us. To turne it to the quick, there is more in it, than can in any one phraſe be expreſſed. So, not being able to do it in one, the Interpreters have aſſaid to do it in more than one. Every one, as their owne Idiome will beſt beare. The Lord keepe me from doing this thing (ſaith ours.) So, it is of the nature of a prayer againſt it. Μηδαμῶς, Out upon it, Away with it, By no meanes; Or Μὴ γένοιτο (ſaith the Greeke:) never let me, let any, never let it be done. So, it is an utter deteſtation. Abſit mihi à Domino (ſaith the Latine) Never let me come where God hath to doe, Accurſed be I of God, all evill come to me, if ever I do as you would have me. So, is it a bitter execration. It beares all. Under one, it is both a hearty deprecation or prayer againſt it, a deep deteſtation, and a fearfull execration, if ever he be brought to do it, to lay hands on Saul. Theſe three will amount to an oath of Allegiance at leaſt.

The reaſons of it.

1 Domino meo.

2 Chriſto Domini.

You will ſay, here is paßion indeed; but it is reaſon, and not paßion, muſt carry things when all is done. Nay, here is reaſon too, and reaſon upon reaſon, couched in theſe words, why not to do it. Domino meo, firſt; To his liege Lord, or Soveraigne: Not to him. Then, if that will not hold, Chriſto Domini, to the Lords anointed, not to him: That will. For, two he alledges; Domino, and Chriſto Domini; The firſt is from the earth, earthly; Domino meo, his earthly Lord. The ſecond, Chriſto Domini; Domini, is the Lord from heaven. The firſt he ſtands not on: this ſecond, that he ſtands on, that, he iterates once and againe, ſets up his reſt upon that: as indeed, when we have ſtudied all that ever we can, we ſhall never be able, to finde a more forcible. It can never be anſwered, if we care either for heaven or earth, Chriſtus or Dominus, Chriſt or God; any thing at all. It cannot be; the Lord of heaven ſhould ever endure (where his hand hath beene, to anoint) any hand ſhould be, to violate, to doe any violence to that party. Do but ſee how he utters it: Lay hands on him? and he GOD'S anointed? and ſo breaks off, as if he held it for a foule indignity, for a groſſe abſurdity in reaſon, once to queſtion it. So, for laying hands but on his mantle, Davids heart checked him: But, for laying hands on his perſon, that is paſt cor penitentis, it is vox clamantis, that, μὴ γένοιτο, Abſit; farre be it from me; never that, never.

Will ye now obſerve how, in this ſpeech, he returnes upon them and their three motives? GOD forbid (ſaith he) to that, for which they alledged dixit Dominus. To their GOD ſaid, he ſayes, GOD forbid: anſwers Dominus dixit with Dominus interdixit. Of which GOD ſaid, No, no, God forbid, and that חלילה׳, forbid with a curſe. And what God did then forbid, he doth forbid ſtill; what, to him he did forbid, he doth to us (to every good body, that cares either for his bidding or forbiding it.) They that lay their hands care for neither. Doe that, which (as we uſe to ſay) is againſt all Gods forbode.

Then, for inimicum tuum, he replies to that with Chriſtum Domini: oppoſing, as his GOD forbid, to Dominus dixit; ſo, the LORD'S Annointed, to his enemy, to weigh down that. And ſo it doth: there is, there will ever be more vertue in Chriſtum Domini, to keep him alive, than in any inimicum tuum, any enmity in the world, to deſtroy him.

Laſt, where they ſay, Ecce tradam in manus, He is now even put into your hands, but not mittere manum (ſaith he) not to lay any hands on him. So that, for all Dominus dixit, or inimicum tuum, or Ecce tradam in manus, David, is ſtill where he was, anſwers with reaſon, every part of their reaſon; God forbid, for any of them, or for all them, Saul ſhould have any harme, but goe his way quietly for him. And this for his Confeßion.

But

But, you will remember I told you, all this was ſpoken not ſo much for Davids defence, why he did it not; as to let them ſee a good ground, why they ſhould not do it; to keepe them from riſing. For, riſing they were, Riſing (ſay the LXX.) διαπῶσαι αὐτὸν, to have ſlaine Saul. They ſtarting up (as it were) in a kinde of indignity, that David had thus ſerved them, to do that themſelves, which they hoped, he would have done, but did not: for, done it ſhould be, if not by him, by them; that was reſolved. 3 Davids ſatisfaction.

Sure, had David had any edge to Sauls making away, here now was another, a ſecond, a faire opportunity offered it ſelfe: as plauſible a pretence as he could have wiſhed, to have let Saul beene taken away in a military tumult, a mutiny of Souldiers. As for David, he had refuſed it, he had good witneſſe of it: if they roſe rudely and ran upon him, what could he do withall? it was their fault, not his; he had no hand in it. But, in all this, he ſhewed himſelfe a moſt loyall Subject, in thus putting himſelfe betweene Saul and them; in taking paines, and even ſtriving till he had appeaſed them. Which ſheweth plainly, his heart was upright in all this buſineſſe, in ſaving the Kings life now ſecundò. Elſe, what he liſted not to doe himſelfe, he might have let them do.

So then: do it he will not; nor ſuffer it to be done, neither: neither per ſe, nor per alium, by himſelfe, or any other: thought it not enough to ſay, I will have no hand in it; but neither his owne, nor any mans hand elſe, if he can ſtay it. Not only Abſit à me, but abſit à meis: firſt and laſt, Abſit (ſaith David) to both. Not, non faciam only, let not me do it: but μὴ γένοιτο ne fiat, let not any, let not it be done. And what? not onely not mittere manum, but mittere de manu or de manibus (rather) ſend him out of their hands, ſend him away ſafe. To this ſecond end, were theſe words ſpoken by him, and (as the Text is) directed to his men; to quiet them, and not onely to cleare himſelf. Now to Davids victory.

Et vicit verbo hoc, and he even overcame them with theſe words, ſaith the Text. Here, is Davids victory. But, if he overcame them, then was there a ſtrife. So he even ſtrove to ſave Saul. And if he ſuffered them not to riſe, then were they buſtling up at leaſt, and ready to have riſen. II. The ſecond delivery. Ecce abiit.

The Text-word in the Hebrew, is full of force: יבקע, it is to cleave properly, or to rive in ſunder. So, either they were cluſtering (as the manner is in mutinies, to run together on an heape) and he made them ſhead and ſever themſelves, and returne to their places againe. Or ye may referre it to their hearts, that with theſe words were even ſmitten or cleft quite, and broken of their purpoſe, for proceeding any further in ſo bloudy an enterprize. Their motion did not ſo much as enter into him; his, did into them: entred into them, and as his heart ſmit him, ſo, he ſmit theirs; ſmit them, and even cleft them; made them leave, and let go their reſolution quite, and let Saul go.

The LXX. ſay, ἔπεισεν, that is, he perſwaded them with theſe words: (the beſt overcomming ever, by words, by perſwaſion.) Overcame them (our Text turnes it;) and ſo David had here a victory: Nay, a double victory: [1] Over himſelfe, one: and that is a great one: Great victours have failed of it. [2] Over his men, another; He kept them too. And ſo, by theſe two, ſaved the King twice. And many victories he had; but of them all, none like this: this the greateſt. For in thoſe other, he but ſlew his enemies; but in this here, without a drop of bloud ſhed, he ſaved his Princes life. And now, this victory obtained, David and his men are agreed; and they are ſatisfied, not to riſe, but ſit ſtill, and let Saul riſe quietly, and goe his way. By which, ſome amends was made him for the peece of his mantle. This, for Davids ſatisfaction, and for his victory both in one. For, this victory was (in a ſort) his ſatisfaction, and ſerved for it.

And now we have ſet the King ſafe, that he may go when pleaſes him, would I beg a little leave to returne to Davids words; to his ſpell (if I may ſo call it) to this cleaving word יבקע: that David did not onely ſmite, but even cleave his mens hearts.

With what axe did he this? (for, it is the act of an axe properly.) Even with these words; (they were Davids axe:) Shall we do this? Shall we so? lay hands on him? and he GODS Anointed? and the edge of his axe were these two, Christus Domini; they did the feat; all the force was in them. And (indeed) of great force they seemed to David, and were of great use with him, came from him oft. To his companies, here. To Abishai (a chapter after.) To the Amalekite (the next book after, I. Chap.) Twice, here: Thrice, to Abishai: Twice, to the Amalekite. Seven times in all. And still, nothing but Christus Domini; as if they had been a kinde of a Spell, to charme any from rising, to any such end.

Chap. 26. 9. 11. 16. 2 Sam. 1. 14. 16.

And (sure) a marvellous energie there seemes to have been in these words. Davids men (here) were rising: these words kept them downe; they rose not. Abishai after, he was even striking: they staid his hands, he struck not. David himself, he was but thinking a thought that way, they smit his heart, made it to ake, made him give over.

Now, when I fall to consider what vertue these words had in those times, to hold mens feet from rising; their hands from striking; yea, their very heart from thinking any such thought; O I am forced to wonder, they should not have in our times the force they then had. David could not overcome some men now: his men would rise, do what he could: feet, hands, and heart, flie loose now, these words notwithstanding. They have not the power to break men, men have rather the power to break them.

2 Sam. 23. 18. Davids men were brave souldiers; Abishai one of his three worthies: himselfe more worthy than they all. Power they had, to stay these so many men of armes: and have not now the power to make a silly Frier hold his hands. What is become of their vertue now? Of the cleaving force they then had? It should seeme, Davids men were othergates men than many (I will not say, of our Souldiers, but) of our Iesuites and Friers, are of late: had magis subacta pectora, brests of a better mould; had at times, been brought by David to know what GOD was, what it was to be Gods anointed, how precious their bloud was in His sight, how no man could lift up his hand against them, and be innocent. So, they soon took an impression of this his Absit, so passionately, so pithily (withall) delivered by him.

Psal. 116. 15. Chap. 26. 9.

Mens brests are now made of a tougher metall, the words meet with harder hearts in the Cloyster (now) than here they did in the Camp. Some mens hearts (now) leave not striking them, till they have stricken Saul to the heart. Turne Davids absit mihi à Domino, into Adsit mihi à Domino facere rem hanc: turne his execration into a prayer, nay, into many prayers, rosaries, and masses, for GOD's assistance, to an act, which his very soule abhorreth. And this is the reason. The words are not rebated; they have not lost their edge: but, men have instead of hearts now, flint-stones: Else the words being the same, the same effect would still follow, if the hearts also were the same.

For the same effect doth still follow, in all whose hearts GOD hath touched, on whom the Spirit of God is come. For, where the Spirit of God is, there the Word of God will work: and where it works not, we may safely say, there is no Spirit to work on.

To trie then, on whom the Spirit of God is come, there comes to my minde a pregnant place (it is the 12. of 1. Chron.) full to this point, and it will even bring us home to our owne Text againe. Amasa there, when the question was asked, whom they would take part with, he and his: cried, Thine are we ô David, and on thy side thou sonne of Ishai. And it is there in expresse termes affirmed, that the Spirit of God came upon him, that made him thus to cry. If then the same Spirit of God be upon us, that was upon him, it will make us take up the same words, Thine are we, and on thy side ô David: Thou hast a Testimony in holy Writ, to have beene a man according to Gods owne heart; what was in Gods heart, was in thine: then are we to think, say, and do, as thou diddest, and so the Spirit of God is upon us, indeed.

1 Chro. 12. 18.

1 Sam. 13. 14.

Will ye then be as David, with him, on his side? If Gods Spirit be upon us, we will: now come we to our Text. For, here is in this our Text, a vive anatomie, of David in each part: his eye, his hand, his heart, his mouth and all.

1 His eye, full of compassion to Saul his Soveraigne. It was not good in his eyes, to doe doe him any hurt; good to ſpare him. Pepercit tibi oculus meus, (11 Verſe) There is Davids eye.

2 His hand not able to ſtirre, not mittere manum in Chriſtum Domini, to lay any hands on him. O ne ſit manus mea ſuper te, he twice cries (13.14) Let not my hand be upon thee. There is Davids hand.

3 His heart ſmote him (we ſee) for putting but his knife into the edge of Sauls mantle. There is Davids heart.

4 His mouth: from that we heare vox clamantis, Abſit mihi à Domino, with great vehemency of paſſion. There is Davids mouth.

5 So ſayes David: and will ye heare how he ſings? Heare it upon his Harpe? how his heart and harpe agree: heare him ſay it and ſing it both? Ye may: For, to keep for ever this day in memorie, he made a Pſalme of Sauls being in the cave here, of his ſcaping out of it: And gives it this title, deſtroy not; no not in the cave: deſtroy not. By this meanes to ſing into mens minds; their duty in this point. And not into theirs alone, but into the hearts and minds; of all poſteritie; not to give their wayes to deſtroy Kings: No, though they have them in a cave, as theſe had Saul. Even there, to ſing deſtroy him not. Ne perdas in the cave is worth all.

So have you David at full: if any be of his ſide, thus to ſee, and ſay, and ſing, and think and doe. ---Sic ille oculos, ſic ora ferebat. If you would know, what his heart believeth touching this point, percuſſit eum cor; that, gave him a ſhrewd checke, for but a ſhred taken off Sauls cloake: he believes, he did not well in it. If what his mouth confeſſeth, Abſit mihi facere rem hanc. Abſit, ſaith his mouth; ne ſit, ſaith his hand; Ne fiat, ſaith his heart; ne perdas, ſaith his harpe. All keep time, all ſound one way; this way, all.

It ſeemed not good in his eyes to doe it: that, is the Text: Nor, to his hand, let not that be upon him: Nor to his mouth, he ſpit it out with an Abſit. Nor to his heart; leaſt of all to that, that for a leſſe matter, but for drawing his knife, though without minde of drawing a drop of blood, fell on beating, and caſt him into a cardiac paſsion. And any, who thinking but a thought that way, if his heart ſmite not him, let him ſmite it hardly. Elſe he is not according to Davids; and ſo, not to Gods heart.

III.

The Ecce of this our day. Pſal 48.8.

Thus have our eares heard of a King delivered in the Text. And the like, may our eyes ſee, of a King delivered on this day. Sicut audivimus, ſic & vidimus, is the Pſalm: but Plus vidimus quàm audivimus, may it truly be ſaid of this day of ours. I report me to you, if it may not: if there be not a greater Ecce; nay, many greater Ecces on this day, than on that.

Many wayes (I know) the ballance is even. Kings both: in danger, and danger of Ecce tradam, both. Both, in a cave (for, all caves are not under ground; ſome above ſtaires.) And of a knife, or worſer than a knife, both. And of a tumultuous riſing both: and yet both preſerved from both. Thus far, even. But then, in other points, they are not: No, no nor even in theſe. For, weigh them well, and Saul will be found (as Balthazar was,) Tekel, minus habens: too light in the ballance. And this of ours to over-weigh, to weigh him and all his downe, many wayes. Dan. 5.27.

To reflect a little on this. I have ſaid a great deale; I have ſaid nothing, if nothing be ſaid of this. It is the life of all. If, of the twaine, the Ecce dies of this day, be the greater, if more Ecces upon it: the more of them, the more beholds, the more beholden are we to God: the more marvellous His mercies have beene to us, the more plenteous our thanks be to Him for them.

The Ecce dies, is as the Ecce diei. Ever, the more remarkeable the day, the more the things are ſo, that happen upon it. The Ecce diei is of two ſorts: 1 Ecce tradam, 2 Ecce abiit Rex. Tradam, the deliverie into the danger: Abiit, the delivery from it.

And ever this we hold, the worſe the tradam (that is, the danger;) the better the Abiit, the eſcaping from it: and the better it, the more is our joy; and the more our joy is, the more our thanks ſhould ever be, Iehovæ liberatori. And, O that ſuch an Ecce might be on our thanks, as there is on the day, as it and the Ecce's of it do well deſerve at our hands.

1 To ſhew them, the Tradam is worſe; I begin with the Tradent, or Traditor. Ecce tradam, Behold, I will deliver him; it is God that ſaith this: this was Gods doing, Sauls deliverie into. Here is no trechery in the Text. Into the cave he came of his owne accord; was caſually found there, not guilefully drawne thither. So, was it not to day; but the King trained thither moſt treacherouſly. Ecce; Behold then, it is far worſe, when wretched men by wicked alluring meanes, ſhall toule one meaning no harme at all, into a ſecret corner as evill as Sauls cave every whit; and there ſet on him. Worſe, I ſay, for here the devill betrayes, God delivers not. Suffers, I grant; but is not agent in it. God never co-operates with treaſon. So then, no day (this) de quo dixit Dominus: rather de quo dixit diabolus, a day (in reſpect of them and their treacherie) of the devils owne beſpeaking. This then the firſt ods, that A Domino factum eſt illud, à diabolo factum eſt hoc: that of Gods; this of the devils owne tradam: and ſo the traditor worſe (I am ſure) with an Ecce.

And, who was delivered, Inimicum tuum, an enemie in the Text. Some reaſon; in that. Saul was ſo indeed, Davids enemie. You were not theirs: they were yours, without a cauſe. Nay, cauſe to the contrarie: Nay, cauſes more than one. And, in that regard worſe. Worſe, to deliver an innocent than a deadly enemie.

And delivered, whither? The Text is, into a cave. Where Saul (indeed) ſaith he was ſhut up: but to ſay truth, ſimply he was not ſo: the caves mouth was open, hee might have come forth, his men might come to him at his call. But, with us, in our cave, the King was ſecundum literam in the literall ſenſe, ſhut up indeed. Many locks and doores faſt upon him, no going out for him, no comming in for others. The worſe his caſe. Nay, a worſe could not be. So doth the Holy Ghoſt deſcribe the hardeſt caſe of all, by theſe three: [1] Concluſus, [2] derelictus, [3] & non erit auxiliator. All three, here: ſhut up, quite left, none to helpe. In farre worſe taking, than ever was Saul in the cave.

1 Reg. 14. 26.

There is no hurt in a cave, if there be no hurtfull thing in it: But David ſaith in the Pſalme, his was; and ſure it is, Your ſoule was there among Lions. The Text is, Tradam in manus tuas: Tradam in manus; I aske, into whoſe hands? for in danger, it is ever good lighting into good hands. Into what hands light You? No compariſon, there. Saul light into Davids hands: His in manus tuas, where Davids, and Davids were gentle hands. His heart ſmit him, for doing but ſo much, as you have heard. If their heart ſmit them this day; it was not for doing ſo much, but for doing no more. David was touched with his duty to his Soveraigne, ſtricken with the Majeſtie of Chriſtus Domini: Theſe, they trode under foot, dutie, and Majeſtie, and Chriſtus and Dominus, and all. Nothing like David, quite contrary, worſe with an Ecce.

Pſal. 57. 4.

Nay, not like Davids men. For firſt, in the Text, here is a diſpute detween them and David, and the parties divided. Saul the more likely to ſcape: as he did. Where the enemie is divided the danger the leſſe. But to day, in the Kings, no debate at all. It was concluſum in causâ, reſolved on both ſides, long before, what to do with him; if ever they got him. No way but one then.

Againe, Davids men (how ever evill minded at firſt, yet) after relented, were overcome. Theſe of the day, of far another Spirit; their malice invincible. Davids men overcomming was with words: Here, it came to blowes and to gripes, and all would not ſerve. Davids men, they were overcome willingly and did yeeld: Theſe were overcome too (thankes be to God) but it was maugre their wils, they never yeelded till they both lay dead on the floore. The more the parties, the more their hands ſuch, the more your perill: the more it, the more the faire grace of God, you eſcaped ſuch parties hands.

Now

Now to & facies illi; what was done. At Saul there was a Knife drawne; or rather not at Saul, but, at his mantle. A dagger, not at your mantle, but at You. Betweene theſe two, a dagger and a knife, there is ſome odds; but certainly betweene a daggers point, and a knives edge, there is. And, this was your caſe.

And what to doe with it? (that lets it further yet.) To doe nothing to Saul, and, no great thing, to his mantle: left a peece of that behind. His dagger, with far another minde, and at far another marke, than Davids knife. More was ſought here. You to loſe more than ſo. What talke we of a peece? I would a cloake, I would a whole wardrobe would have ſerved the turn, would have ſatisfied them, or excuſed you. No cloke-matter, here. Your beſt blood was ſought; Your breſt aimed at; and not the edge, but the point bent, and too neere You.

And, to be ſhort, for the laſt point, Bonum in oculis. No more than a ſhred, ſeemed good in his eyes; no leſſe than your life, ſeemed good in theirs.

Thus every way from point to point, the Ecce ſtill greater, in Tradam, the deliverie too: In Ecce abiit, in the delivery from, how holds it there?

In his extremitie, Saul found one yet to crie, Abſit, to deliver him. Never an Abſit here. Never an one? Yes: one there was, and that a ſtrong one. When that wretched creature, that was ſet to doe the fact, in a ſort hindred it for once. But, ſo faint an one it was, as that would not ſerve, as Davids did Saul. God was faine to ſtep into Davids roome: And when there was never a tongue on earth to ſay it, to ſay it from heaven; thence to give the true μὴ γένοιτο, Ne fiat, I would not have it done. From heaven He ſent you helpe; not by the caves mouth, but miraculouſly another way; by them that knew not, whither they went, but unwittingly were led by God to the place of your danger.

Let me ſee: at the moſt, there were but two attempts againſt Saul. So, he ſcaped but twice. Two and two againſt you. Twice and twice eſcaped your Majeſtie, foure times in all; foure diſtinct dangers, and as many preſervations. 1. That of him that ſtood readie armed. 2. That of the dagger at the firſt: 3, That of the ſword: Nay (more than one) Ecce duo gladii, of the ſecond brother. 4 And that of the popular tumult, worſt of all. Theſe were but upon riſing, in the Text; they roſe not: They, were not upon riſing, but were riſen up indeed. So, two Ecces more in yours.

And of all this perill, Saul had no ſenſe at all. Awake he was, but he might even as well have beene aſleepe. Of all that was ſaid he heard not a word: of all that was done, he perceived nothing; had an eaſie eſcape, he. So was it not with your Majeſtie. You heard, and ſaw all, and felt ſomewhat of that, was ſaid, and done; eſcaped the perill, but not the fright and feare, oftentimes worſe than the perill it ſelfe.

Upon the matter, in Sauls, ſomewhat was offered to be done, but nothing acted: No doing. Here there was doing and ſuffering both.

In Saul it never came to manum mittere, not on his perſon: hands were laid on his cloak; his perſon that not touched. Yours was: hands were laid, blood was drawn, the marks on your jaw, the hurt on your hand remained to be ſeene a good time after. So, Sauls comes not home, fals ſhort in every point. More Ecces in yours; Your day, Your danger, Your deliverie: the more of them, the more is God ſtill to be magnified by you, and by us all.

All fell out well in the end though, with both. It was meant, you ſhould neither have riſen, Saul, nor You. You both roſe. And either of you went viam ſuam; viam, not eorum, but ſuam, went not the way, they would have ſent you, the wrong way; but viam ſuam, your owne, the right way, the way of ſafety and peace. And thus ended Sauls danger, and thus Yours: thus the Text, and thus the day.

Nay, yours ended not ſo. The goodneſſe of God ſtayed not there. Yours had a plus ultra, another, a further, a greater Ecce yet, beyond that of Saul. There, as Saul went his way, ſo did his enemies their way too: he ſcaped them, and they him. Non ſic impii, non ſic: It was not ſo with Yours. You ſcaped them, they ſcaped not you: Quia ecce inimici tui Domine, Ecce inimici tui. For, Lo thine enemies, O Lord, lo thine enemies Pſal. 1. 4. Pſal. 92. 10.

ſhall periſh (and ſo they did;) and all the workers of wickedneſſe ſhall be deſtroyed (and ſo they were:) Miſit manum in manum mittentes, He ſtretched his hands againſt them that ſtretched theirs againſt You. And becauſe their hearts ſmit not them in this ſo foule an attempt, they were ſmitten to the hearts, the ſword went through both their hearts. The very place they had deſigned for yours, became to them the place of their periſhing: periſhing here, and periſhing eternally The day of which they ſaid, Now is the day come, it came indeed; but came, and prooved a diſmall day to them: the rubricke of it written in their owne blood, with an Ecce; the laſt Ecce of all, Behold our fearefull end, and let every one feare to doe the like.

They ſaid not Abſit nobis à Domino: God therefore ſaid Abſit Dominus à vobis. And ſo He is; He from them, and they from Him, as far as the bottome of the nethermoſt hell, is from the top of the higheſt heaven.

And ever the ſame hand of God be ſo layd on them, that ſhall offer to lay hands on Gods annointed. So may they all ſhut their eyes, as many as it ſhall ſeeme good in their eyes, to doe the like. So, may their hearts be ſmitten, that ever hatch in their hearts any thought that way tending, And the faithfull mercies of David bee upon them, whoſe eye and hand, heart and tongue, ſhall ſee, and ſay, and thinke, and doe, as hee did. And let the King live, live yet many yeares, to ſee the renewing of this bleſſed day, and to refreſh the memory of Gods mercies, upon it, ſhewed him; and in him, ſhewed us all.

Eſay 55.3.

And now to returne to the beginning. We may (I truſt) now ſay, Ecce dies venit, Behold the day is come, with an higher accent. A day, in regard of the deliverie into their hands, de quo dixit diabolus: but in regard of the deliverie from them, de quo dixit Dominus, which God did beſpeak. Beſpeake, but in a better ſenſe: not thus; in quo tradam in manus: but rather in quo eripiam de manibus: not deliver you into, but to deliver you out of their hands. And yet, it is dies in quo tradam too: but the edge turned toward them. Not, in quo tradam te illis; but in quo tradam illos tibi: not deliver you into your enemies; but deliver your enemies into your hands. The beginning was, they made full account, You had beene given over into theirs; and that the good ſhould have beene in their eyes. The end, as is happily proved, they were given into your hands, and the good was in yours; removed thither: And you have done, and they ſuffered what was good, not in their, but Your owne eyes: heaven and earth approving it and rejoycing at it.

Now then, as if they had done to you, that was good in their eyes, it had made many weeping eyes, it had beene Ecce dies funeſtus: ſo, ſeeing they have ſuffered what was good in yours and even in Gods eyes, and thereby made many a glad heart, ſhall it not be Ecce dies Feſtus; a day of joy and health in the dwelling of the righteous; wherein the right hand of the Lord had the preeminence, the right hand of the Lord brought this mighty alteration to paſſe? As they meant it, it had beene a day, the divell had marred: as it fell out, this was a day that the Lord hath made, and let us rejoyce and be glad in it; with the voice of joy and thankſgiving among ſuch as keepe holy day.

Pſal. 118.24.

Holy (I ſay:) for let God have the honour of the day, for ſetting ſo many Ecce's upon it. For which, all dayes, but ſpecially as the day it ſelfe returnes, we to make returne of our thankes upon it. Even upon it, upon this day, for this day, for the many Eccs of this day; to God the Author of them, for the King and his ſafety, the ſubjecta materia of them; for the Ecce ſurrexit è ſpeluncâ, his riſing out of the cave, in effect as good as his riſing out of the grave, or (as David in this Pſalme cals it) his deliverie from the Lions den: thence he roſe. And for Ecce abiit viam, that a way was made him, that he was not made away, but that his way he went. Then went, and many a way ſince hath gone, and many more may ſtill go, and the Angell of the Lord take charge of him to keepe him in all his wayes, and the Lord Himſelfe preſerve his going out and comming in, from this time forth for evermore.

There is a Pſalme (as I ſaid) the LVII. purpoſely ſet (of his being there in the cave, and ſcaping thence:) the Pſalme is like the day; repreſents it fitly. The forepart of it, full of danger and feare: Miſerere mei Domine, miſerere mei, and My ſoule is among Lions: well befitting you when you were under their hands. But the latter part, the Cataſtrophe, full of joy and triumph. When you were got out of the cave, and were now upon your way, then it was (I truſt) and ever will be as there it followeth: My heart is readie O God, my heart is ready, I will ſing and give praiſe: Awake up my glory, awake Lute and Harpe, I my ſelfe will awake up early: I will praiſe thee among the people, I will ſing unto thee among the nations: For, thy mercy is great toward me, it reacheth even up to the heavens, and thy truth above the clouds: Set up thy ſelfe, O Lord, above the heavens, and thy glory over all the earth; as this day thou didſt indeed. So ends the Pſalme, and a better end there cannot be. So, will we end with glory and praiſe, bleſſing and thanks, to all the three perſons of the glorious Trinitie: To whom for this day, and the Ecce of this day, be aſcribed this day all theſe, even this day, and for ever.

A SER-

A SERMON PREPARED TO BE PREACHED UPON THE V. OF AUGUST, Anno. Dom. M.DC.XXIII.

GEN. Chap. XLIX. Verſ. V, VI, VII.

Simeon & Levi fratres, &c.

Simeon and Levi brethren in evill, the inſtruments of crueltie are in their habitatitions.

Into their ſecret let not my ſoule come; my glory, be not thou joyned with their aſſembly: For, in their wrath, they ſlew a man, and in their ſelfe-will (or fury*) they digged downe a wall.*

Curſed be their wrath, for it was fierce; and their rage, for it was cruell: I will divide them in Iaacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael.

I Have read you a Text, out of a peece of Geneſis: a part of Iacobs laſt words, before he went out of the world; or (as they call it) a clauſe of his laſt Will and Teſtament. There is in it, a Cenſure upon a couple of his ſonnes. In which cenſure (I take it) I have read the deſtinie of another couple; in attempting (both) of a like foule deſigne, they as tahſe, and theſe as they: as Simeon and Levi, the brethren of the Text; ſo theſe two, the brethren of the day.

To open it ſelfe here in the Text; (The day will open it ſelfe ſufficiently.) You are to imagine, You ſee Iacob, being now about to go out of the world, lying at the very point of death, lifted up in his bed (for ſo he was) his Sons

Sons ſtanding before him, all twelve in order, according to their ſeverall ages, as they came into the world. He had ſomewhat to ſay to them (it ſhould ſeeme:) and comming to theſe two (his ſecond and third ſons) he called to mind a foule outrage by them committed, upon Hemor and Sichem, and the whole Citie. Of which you may read before, at the 34. Chapter.

This, though it were done and paſt many yeares before, that it might ſeeme to have beene forgotten, yet it comes freſh to his mind, and troubles him (now) at the houre of his death. The nature is ſuch (ever) of the ſin of blood.

This fact of theirs, he did not thinke good to ſlip over in ſilence; but, even then, to tell them of it, and to tell them his minde about it. No time, to keepe it from them now. He was going to God; and ſo, ſtirred in Spirit, not to leave the world, till hee had left a good teſtimonie of his deepe diſlike of attempts in that kind. It was the will of God, ſo as he ſpared not his eldeſt ſon Ruben, for a foule fact of another nature (for inceſt;) So neither did he theſe two, for another of blood guiltineſſe. Blood and Inceſt take heed of them.

Beſides, it might prove dangerous (he knew) if he did not declare his mind, and ſet a cenſure upon that, and the like attempts; and that he could not diſcharge his conſcience, if he had ſaid nothing to it. That others therefore hearing of it, might feare to doe the like; firſt he condemnes their counſell, with a Ne veniat. Let not my ſoule come in any ſuch counſell or companie: 2 Then layes his heavie curſe on the fact it ſelfe, and on their thirſt of revenge, the cauſe of it. 3 And laſtly, cenſures them doubly for it: 1 By dis-heriſon, depriving them, and not them only, but all their poſteritie, for ever having lot of inheritance of their owne, as all the other Tribes had: 2 And then Scattering them abroad up and bowne all Iſrael. For, theſe are two diſtinct: 1 To diſinherit, is one thing; and, 2 to ſcatter abroad, is another.

The Summe is, Iacob their Fathers curſe, and the diſ-heriſon of theſe two brethren Simeon and Levi; for conſulting firſt, and after purſuing ſo wicked a counſell; as the murder of Sichem. The Summe.

Culpa and Pœna will divide the Text; the fault, and the puniſhment. In it do but adde the perſons, to make the parts three; Simeon and Levi, the parties that made the fault, and upon whom, the puniſhment came. The Diviſion

The fault, was either the fact it ſelfe; or two weightie circumſtances of it. I

1 The fact was, they ſlew a man, they brake downe the wall, This for this fact, and for the two things in it; 1 Firſt, that there was a meeting and conſulting before, about the doing of it. 2 Then, that there was crueltie after, ſhewed in the doing of it. Conſulting, and plotting before: Rage and fury, after.

The puniſhment, or cenſure is of two ſorts: You may thus reduce them. II

1 The one is a Church-cenſure: 2 The other, a Civill penaltie; and ſo the ſentence of both Courts. 1 Maledictus, of one Court, that is Spirituall: And 2 Diſpergam, of the other, that is Temporall.

You ſhall obſerve, all here ſtands upon two's. 1 Simeon, and 2 Levi: 1 they, 2 and their bloodie weapons. 1. In the Plot, two: 1 Counſell; and 2 Companie: whence Iacob removeth two, 1 his ſoule, and 2 his glory. 2. In the fact, two: 1 Murder, and 2 Burghlary: done upon two; 1 Upon the men, 2 and upon the very walls. 3. In the manner, two: 1 Anger, and 2 fury: and they two, two Epithets; the Anger 1 ſtrong, in the beginning; and the Rage 2 indurate, in purſuing: killed the men, in their anger; brake down walls, in their furie. 4. In the cenſure, two: 1 The Curſe, 2 and the Penaltie. One lookes back; the other lookes forward: One, to the fact, the Curſe; the other, to the perſons, the Penall part. In the Penaltie, two: 1 The dividing, and 2 the Scattering; dividing their perſons in the familie of Iacob; Scattering their poſteritie, in the Common wealth of Iſrael. III

What is now the uſe, we have of it? Firſt, the not comming to any ſuch counſels;

the condemning of all ſuch attempts, the holding for accurſed, all ſuch outrages, as this was. Which (I truſt) we will now doe at the laſt. We have ſeene it condemned in Perſia, in Iewrie, and now, in Ægypt. In Perſia, by the Heathen: In Iewrie, by Kings and Prophets: And now in Ægypt, by the Patriarchs. By the Heathen, in the caſe of Bigthan and Tharez: By the Kings and Prophets, in the caſe of Abſalom, and Abiſhai: and now by the Patriarchs, in the caſe of Simeon and Levi. And all this even up as high as Geneſis, up before the Prophets, before the Law, long yer Moſes were borne, in the Patriarchs dayes: and (now) higher than Geneſis, further than the Patriarchs wee cannot goe.

Kings and Prophets you have heard: to day, you ſhall heare a Patriarch lay his curſe upon it, and not, in his life time only, but at the very point of death. All, to ſhew, how hatefull a ſin this is, and how God will be ſure to require it at their hands whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed blood. And this was the good doctrine then, and hath beene ever ſince, till our unhappie dayes; wherein, ſome that have attempted it, have ſcaped the Patriarchs Maledictus, and have much adoe to ſcape the Popes Benedictus and being made Saints for it.

Eſay 59.7.

I.

The Parties: Two.

SImeon and Levi are the parties. He joyns them together in the Proceſſe, for ſo they were in the fact: either, as deep as other, and ſo, their cauſes proceeded in joyntly Two they are: and two more than one. It is hand in hand, this; a double twiſted cord. Hand in hand is the ſtronger: double, than ſingle iniquitie.

Prov. 11.21.

Two brethren.

And, this is true of any two: but more yet of theſe two; for, theſe two are brethren. And, that very bond of Nature and naturall affection, works yet more ſtrength. For, ſtrong, as the barres of a Palace, ſo is frater qui à fratre adjuvatur (ſaith Salomon.)

Prov. 18.19.

The firſt thing, that makes us muſe, is, that Iacob cals theſe two Brethren; as if the reſt were not ſo: were nothing of kin to them. They were twelve brethren; themGen. 42.32. ſelves ſay ſo, to Ioſeph. But, not of whole blood, you will ſay. True: but, ſix of them (theſe two named, and foure beſides) they had all the ſame Father (Iacob) and the ſame mother (Lea.) And, why then theſe two, two brethren, and not they? We muſt ſeek out ſomewhat, wherein theſe two were, and the reſt were not. And we will not ſtirr a whit from the Text. They two were brethren (firſt) [1] in wearing of weapons of violence (in this verſe:) [2] and (in the next) brethren, in wicked counſell: [3] and (third) in the rage of revenge: [4] And (laſt) in a bloodie murder. And, as in theſe, that make up the fault; ſo, in the puniſhment. In all theſe, were theſe two, brethren; and theſe two only: The other, nothing of kin to them, no fraternitie in theſe.

If Rabbi Salomon be right, that μάχαιρα in Greeke bee all one with Mechera in Hebrew; then it is, the ſwords they were girt with were weapons of violence. But if (as others take it) Mechera be a tent; then, it muſt be, the weapons of violence were to be found in their tents: that, in their tents they had them, though not at their ſides. The other were of a more quiet diſpoſition: ſo were not theſe; but, their ſwords out, readie to offer violence upon every occaſion. The other had weapons too, but not weapons of violence: and, tents they had; but, crueltie dwelt not in them. Weapons of crueltie then, is their firſt difference.

1 Brethren, in wearing weapons.

מכרה

Why, may not one for a need, have by his ſide, or in his houſe, weapons? Yes: But theſe were Chele chamas (that is) weapons of violence, and violence implies wrong, ever. Weapons, he may: of wrong, he may not. All even our very hands and members themſelves: are to be weapons of righteouſneſſe. God never intended to arme injuſtice. There is no power given to deſtroy, or doe violence withall. The Law allowes no Chele chamas: no man to have them in his houſe, no man to weare them by his ſide. No ſword is allowed to private fury or revenge: Mihi vindictam, Revenge is GODS, for he will doe juſtice. The ſword of it is his; and no mans, but whom God girdeth with with it, by vertue of the words in Geneſis, by man ſhall his bloud be ſhed. But, that man is not every man: that ſword hangs not at every mans girdle; nor is, by every hand to be drawne forth. Gen 9.6.

There is one caſe onely, where the party would, and cannot ſtay for the Magiſtrates ſuccour: the aſſailant comes on him ſo fierce and furiouſly, that either he muſt uſe it, or loſe his life, and yeeld it to the rage of his enemy, being a private man, as himſelfe. In that caſe, if he cannot otherwiſe keep off violence from himſelfe, it is lent him prohâc vice tantùm; and the uſe of it made lawfull, by the unwritten Law, the Law of Nature, Vim vi: Yet (as we ſpeak) cum moderamine inculpatæ tutelæ, or (as our Law) Se defendendo. And never, but upon that occaſion: and in that caſe, the ſword is but a weapon of defence, to keep off violence. And out of that caſe, this one except, not to be allowed. Even they, that carrie the ſword in their name (Gladiatores) we call them Fencers: and ſo do they themſelves, their ſcience, the Science of defence, that is, Skill to uſe their weapons onely to that end. For (ever) a Cherethite is eo ipſo to be a Pelethite. Theſe two were but one: their weapons, to defend and ſave: to deliver from wrong, to doe none. To make the ſword, the weapon of cruelty, is to abuſe the ſword: Every abuſe is naught: And ſo, theſe two, Brethren, non tam naturâ, quàm nequitiâ, not ſo much in nature, as in naughtineſſe. As, we know a place, where many ſuch there be: no kin at all by nature, yet ſworne brethren they call themſelves: making Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis; binding themſelves by the oath of God, to ſerve the Divell: As they all are, whoſe feet are ſwift to ſhed bloud. So, the Patriarch implies thus much: that of all his ſonnes, theſe two were by nature, of a revengefull, of a bloudy diſpoſition. And as they were, ſo were their weapons. For, who will blame the ſword, or lay any thing to the weapons charge? The weapon is, as the man is; as he will uſe or abuſe it. Of it ſelfe, not violent, if he be not ſo, that weares it. But, theſe were ſo: and ſo, the fault, in the men, and not in the weapons. Brethren of bloud they were; and not ſo, but Brethren in bloud. And ſo paſſe we from this bloud. Eſay 59.7.

You may gheſſe at their diſpoſitions, not ſo much by their weapons, as by their counſell; in conſilium eorum: He tels of a Councell taken about it, where they met, and ſaid one to another, their ſwords ſhould do violence: their ſiſter was wronged, they would be revenged: and no revenge ſerve them, but death and deſtruction; death of the men, deſtruction of the Towne, yea, of the very wals of it. It was a plot or conſpiracie then: a very match made between them. 2 In counſell.

And what was their counſell? In dolo, deceitfully contrived. Marry they would their ſiſter, to Sichem; and all ſhould be well, if they would be circumciſed. Whereas, their purpoſe was, when they were ſoreſt of their circumciſing, when the wound was at worſt, and they could not ſtirre; then, to ſet upon them, and make a maſſacre of them all.

Here, Iacob cannot containe himſelfe, but burſt out, from ſuch Matches God keepe me. At the very firſt, at the doing, Iacob miſliked it: Miſliked it then, and ever after; and even now, at his death, he cries, Ne veniat, Never let my ſoule come among them, or have to do with them.

It troubled him much, at the time, it was done. He ſaw, he loſt his reputation by it. Loe, here is the holy Patriarch! Here be Imps of his breeding and bringing up! That they made him even ſtinke (you will beare with it, it is the HOLY GHOSTS word) before the Nations round about. Chap 34.30.

Beſide, they put him in feare, and hazard of his owne, and all their lives. Very like it was, they would all have beene over-run by the bordering people, but that GOD, ſeeing Iacobs innocency, even for His ſake ſent His feare into the heart of the Nations adjoyning, that they purſued them not to death with the like cruelty. Theſe were motives for the preſent: but here now, ſo many yeares after, he takes it on his death, he was never party nor privie to it. Never was he, to that; nor ever would be, to any ſuch, as we ſee by his ſo deeply deteſting it, and proteſting againſt it. For, it is, as if he ſhould ſay: I here declare openly before GOD and the World, it went againſt my very ſoule, this counſell of theirs: I had no hand in it, neither art, nor part (as they ſay) neither had, nor ever meant to have: but was, and ever will be innocent from all that belong to it, violence, counſell and all. Never let my ſoule come among ſuch.

And why not come in any ſuch counſell? For, where two or three are at counſell about any ſuch matter, Inter duos proditores Diabolus eſt tertius, where two are conſulting of any treacherie, the Divell is the third. Miſit Satanas in cor, was in Iudas, is the rule of all traitours. The firſt miſsion, the firſt motion, is (ever) from him: he the prime Counſellour of the three. And blame not Iacob, if he would not be one of, or one at any counſell of his, or have his ſoule at the end of any ſuch treatie.

Luk. 22. 3.

This, on their parts, makes it the more hainous, that they did it not of any ſudden paſſion, but conſulto, in cold blood: ſlept upon it, roſe upon it, were in it three dayes: Did all adviſedly of malice pretenſed: met about it, tooke counſell, how to effect it, the counſell of the ungodly: Put off the execution, till after three dayes.

Pſal. 1. 1.

Iacobs twofold abhorring of it
1 Non veniat anima in conſilium.
2 Non ſit gloria in cœtu eorum.

On Iacobs part; two things he ſpeakes of: 1 That neither his ſoule ſhould ever come in ſuch counſell: (So, it is a ſoule-matter; a counſell, and an act, which brings with it the hazard of the ſoule.) 2 Nor his glory, or reputation: (ſo that, it is a thing which toucheth ones honour and reputation neere; a blemiſh to the glory of a man.) As pollutes his ſoule, ſo taints his blood; is the loſſe of both. To ſave both theſe, he doth (we ſee) and we muſt diſavow all ſuch counſell and Counſellours. All are bound under the ſame paine, to make the ſame proteſtation: to ſay the ſame Ne veniat anima mea, all that are of the Iſrael of God. Let never my ſoule come into any ſuch counſell, let never any ſuch counſell come into my ſoule. Marke thoſe two words: 1 his ſoule, and 2 his glory: the two things of higheſt regard withall; 1 What ſhall become of our ſoules, 2 What Name we ſhall leave behind us. All, to thinke, that in ſuch company, they doe but caſt away their ſoules, they doe but loſe the honour of their name for ever.

And yet, a farther matter there is. For, marke theſe two words, Counſell, and Aſſembly, Sod and Kahal: for, by them, two ſeverall partakings hee feetnes to ſet out. 1 One, of their ſecret privie meetings, that is Sod. 2 The other is Kahal, which is any publike meeting or aſſembly of theirs; and namely, their Church and Congregation. Hee ſpeakes to his glory, never to make one in any ſuch aſſembly, never to be joyned to any ſuch Congregation: ſo, makes a matter of Religion of it. Never, of that Church, which ſhall give countenance, that there may be any meetings, to any ſuch end. It is no Kahal, no Church, no religion for Iacob, that favours any man that is ſo minded.

סירקהל

If then we will like or diſlike with the King and Prophet David, we muſt ſay Chalila li, God forbid. I ſhould once lift up my hand to any ſuch act; If we will like or diſlike with the Patriarch Iacob, we muſt ſay, Ne veniat in conſilium anima mea. You obſerve the Patriarchs and the Prophets agree well: Iacobs Ne veniat, with Davids abſit mihi à Domino. Not only to have cleane hands from it, not to lift them up, or ſtretch them out to the Act; but, a cleare ſoule: never once to conſult, but to deteſt, not only their conſultations, but even the congregations of ſuch conſultours, that be that way given. Neither Civilly, nor Eccleſiaſtically, neither in Church nor Market (as they ſay) to have to doe with them.

חלילה לי

And for a farewell to this point, let me tell you; there be, that interpret Iacob's ſpeech, in this ſenſe. Not, let not me, nor my ſoule be preſent, or partaker of any ſuch; but, let not my ſoule or life, be the matter or ſubject of any ſuch conſultation: Ne tractent de animâ meâ in conſilio tali, ut ſicut Sichemitis fecerunt; ſic facerent & mihi: God keepe my ſoule, ſave my life from any ſuch Conſultours, for ever comming to be treated or debated of, by any ſuch. Let never any ſuch meet in counſell, about my ſoule or me. Both will ſtand well: 1 Neither I, about any mans; 2 nor any, about mine: either, 1 to conſult about the life of any other; or, 2 my life to be conſulted of, by any other like them.

From

From the counsell we come to the fact, to the hatching of it. There is too much in the Counsell; that was fault enough, if no fact followed: But, here followed a fact too. and that a foule fact. Which is of two sorts: expresſed firſt in two words, [1] Interfecerunt, and [2] ſuffoderunt, that is, Murder and Burglary: and two more; killed, whom? it is ſaid, a man, virum, in the ſingular, but one; the number doth but aggravate, the fact is all one, one or more, both to be condemned.

II.
The Fact, 1 Murder. Interfecerunt.

But ſure, Iacob in ſaying Virum, a man, meant but, and aimed but at one, principally. Virum: Ad quem virum? what man was it? Hemor the chiefe man, the Ruler, the Lord of the City, and the territory about. Of no great circuit (perhaps,) That comes all to one: But; being the Soveraigne Ruler and Lord, ſuch a man is worth many men: that, in killing him, they may be ſaid, in one to have killed many. And, as if Iacob thought, they might be quit of the reſt, ſo they had left that man (the chiefe Magiſtrate) alone. Virum.

But, they killed more than one: Even every mothers ſon, all the males in the City. This is an outrage: not to leave a man to kill: to kill them all, as if they were but one man; to leave not one alive! Chap. 34. 25.

And why? what was the offence? Sichem had deſtowred their ſiſter. Say, there was a fault in Sichem: what no remedie, but kill and ſlay him? But if his were the fault, let him alone be ſlaine. But, what was his fathers fault? He ſought to make amends, by mariage, for the wrong done, and gave them a blanck for her Ioynter, to put in what they would: Agreed to be circumciſed, he and all his people: All that ever in reaſon could be required. Why was he (then) ſlaine? For being his father. Nothing elſe can be alleaged: But, all the men in the Citie, the poore people, what had they done? They went about their buſineſſe, medled nothing in the matter: Yet they went to the pot, too. So, it is the murder of many, and thoſe many, innocents all. Innocent and nocent together, to be ſwept away? ſhall the Iudge of the world doe it? ſhall any Iudge in the world do that, which the Iudge of the world would not doe? They ſaid; ſhould he abuſe our ſiſter? No: But ſhould he do it, and all they ſuffer for it? But, what had their wives and children deſerved; that they ſhould be led captive, and all they had, either in houſe or field, taken for a prey, made ſpoyle of, and carried cleane away? But what had the walls and houſes hurt them, that not only the houſe-walls, but even the Town-walls muſt be laid flat for it? was there ever heard of a greater havocke? Gen. 34. 2. Gen. 34. 11. Gen. 34. 24. Gen. 18. 25. Gen. 34. 31.

And ſo eager upon it they were, that, to commit the murder they commit Burglary firſt; Firſt, downe with the houſe-walls, that after, downe with the men. So greedie to kill, as breake downe walls, breake up houſes to make their ſlaughter. For, either it muſt be, they broke through the houſes to come at the men and kill them: Or, when they had killed the men, they pul'd downe the houſes and all. Both (it may well be) they did: But one it muſt needs. And, that one, is too foule and barbarous. 2 Burglarie. Suffoderant murum.

Now put to the circumſtances, which are ever of importance (ſpecially in a ſtorie) and well worthy to be weighed, in a matter of fact. Here was no warre, wherein ſuch things are done: (for, the name of warre covers many a foule fault.) But, warre it was not; but a treatie of peace. So, they ſhed the blood of warre (that is,) that blood which but in warre ſhould not be ſhed: made ſpoiles as in war; razed down Towns, as in war, and all this in peace. 1 King. 2. 5.

Nay, not only a treatie of peace, but of a match and marriage, contracting affinitie, of a firme league, of amitie perpetuall. Nay, of unitie in Religion, taking upon them the ſame ſeale of the Covenant. That, they violated all three, [1] Iura fœderis, [2] Connubii, [3] Religionis. And that; in all theſe, their counſell was fraudulent, Bemerma, without any good meaning, coloured only with theſe three pretences. Which they did not only violate, but above all abuſed the holy [1] ordinance of Matrimonie, [2] abuſed the Sacrament, [3] and made the ſacred Seale of righteouſneſſe, a cloake for their bad and barbarous intent. במרם

peccati there ſhould be plagarum modus. Here was no meaſure kept. A whole Citie ſackt, a whole Countrey ſpoil'd, all the men ſlaine, all the reſt led away as priſoners; and all for a fault, to which they were no wayes acceſſorie.

And that, all this they did, with a kind of contempt of Iacob their Father, and his authoritie: never acquainted him with it, never conſulted him about it. He was bound not to come in their counſell: they were bound to come to him for his; who, if they had come, would have counſelled better.

The concluſion is: Reaſon they had none, nor colour of reaſon. Only, it is ſaid Birtſonam, for their will and pleaſure, did they all this. A wretched pleaſure, to take delight in ſo wicked a deſigne. ברצנם

The Root of theſe: 1 Anger. 2 Furie.

To this, adde the root of all, ſet out in two words, 1 Rage, and 2 Outrage, or Anger and furie. That their anger ſhewed it ſelfe cruell; that their furie ſhewed it ſelfe indurate. It was not Aph only, that is, anger; but Gebrath, which is paſt anger, gone beyond it; indeed, very fury. They did it furiouſly. And, that fury was hard, hard as ſtone; caſt off all compaſſion, without pitie or mercie ſpared none; Not the poore people, that made no fault; not the women and children, but made bootie of them: No, not the wals, but downe with them too. And (which is worſt of all the reſt) ſpared not God neither: did all theſe in the very act of religion. If they had done it, when they were (yet) Heathen men, it had beene the leſſe: but now, in their being circumciſed to doe it, as they were comming on to be the people of God, and were within the Covenant, by receiving it already: Now to doe it, inferreth well, Curſed be the wrath, yea thrice accurſed, that outrage; for, the like was never heard. Anger (we know) is furor brevis: And ſi gravis, brevis, being ſo vehement, it ſhould not be long by courſe of nature: But this was long too, continued; not to be ſatisfied, but implacable; Nothing could appeaſe them, or turne them from their outrage, till they ſaw walls and all lye flat upon the ground. Here, we looke backe. Their weapons (above) where Chele, which is (properly) vaſa, veſſels. So as, their paſſion was not powred out like water, and ſo let run away, but it was kept or reſerved, as liquor in a veſſell; barrelled up, to be broached, when they ſaw cauſe. Without reaſon, in the beginning; without appeaſing, in the end. Such was the malice of theſe men: Such theirs of this day. אפ עברת כלי

The Cenſure. 1 A Maledictus to the fact. Deut. 27. 24. 25

Now, ſuch rage, ſo outragious, juſtly deſerves a Maledictus: Such wrath, ſo qualified beyond all account, ſo exorbitant, ſo inſatiable. On ſuch wrath, Iacob layes his Curſe, curſeth them here. Which Curſe was (after) by God renewed in Mount Ebal: Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly: Againe, Curſed be he that lyeth in waite, to ſhed innocent blood. The two laſt, and heavieſt curſes there, to which all Iſrael was to ſay Amen.

From Iacob.

While it was but in conſultation, Iacob cries Ne veniat, away with the counſell, come not at it. But, when it comes into act, then he cries, Maledictus, Curſed be the execution; at no hand, be an Actour in that. Nay, not only have no part in it your ſelves, but condemne them that have ſo, and hold them as people accurſed, even by Iacobs owne mouth.

Weigh a little this Maledictus of Iacob. Maledictus is a word, we would not heare, from the pooreſt or meaneſt body, that is. But there is much in the partie, who is (here) a Patriarch: and they vertuous holy and grave perſons. To be curſed of one of them is much: for, whom they curſe, God curſeth alſo. And not only a Patriarch, but a Father, to whom God hath given power to bleſſe, and to curſe; and whoſe curſe ever accompanieth a fathers; eſpecially ſuch a Father, as is like Iacob. So that, this puts them under Gods curſe certainly. Numb. 24. 9.

On his death-bed.

Weigh alſo the circumſtance, the time. For, this time was the time of bleſſing: Lying on their death-beds, men commonly give their laſt bleſſings to their children. So did Iacob to Iuda here, and ſo to the reſt. At this time (then) to doe it, is ſomewhat yet more ſtrange, than at another; Nay, than at any other time. Bleſſing-time

with

with others, is curſing-time with them. When he bleſt others, to curſe them, and that there, on his death-bed! For, the curſe of the death-bed is of all other the worſt: ſuch as are ſo curſed, ſome evill will come to them.

Yet ſomewhat to eaſe it. This curſe (if you mark it) is not on their perſons: their nature, as men, is not toucht; but only by reflexion upon their affection of Anger. And yet, not on that neither (For, there is good uſe of them alſo: for, one may be angry and ſinne not.) But, as it was tranſcendent, too much and too long; paſt the bounds of all reaſon and moderation. And this was their puniſhment ſpirituall. Epheſ. 4. 26.

Maledictus, that goes to the fact: Diſpergam to their perſons; which he denounceth, ſhall fall upon them. And, he doth not this by way of Prophecie, they ſhall be divided and ſcattered: but pronounced it by way of ſentence. Not, it ſhall be done: but he will doe it himſelfe. It ſhould be his owne act, and he would never leave it, till he ſee it put in execution. And, though it were not done in his time, yet it was as good as done; as certaine and ſure, as if, at that time, it had had the performance. 2 A Diſpergam to the Perſons.

You may referre dividam to Simeon, and diſpergam to Levi. Simeon was divided into pieces: A piece, in Iudah; a piece, in Dan; a piece, in Mount Seir of the Amalekites. Levi was ſcattered here and there, up and downe in every corner of the Land. Or (if you will referre it to both;) they were divided, while Iacob continued a family: they were diſperſed, when they after came to be a State.

And (if you mark) the puniſhment is very proper, and well proportioned to the fault. The fault was a bad union: their puniſhment is a juſt diviſion. Their fault was hand in hand, they were too neare: their puniſhment is, they ſhall be ſet farre enough aſunder, for taking any ſuch counſell more. So, whom the divell hath joyned, GOD puts in ſunder. And, a righteous thing it is, it ſhould ſo be. For, puniſhments ſhould have in them the nature of a medicine: They, cure (ever) by contraries: Heat, by cold; drought, by moiſture. Even as this doth; an evill joyning by a juſt diſperſion.

There was great wiſdome in this puniſhment. For, them that be evill, if we deſtroy them not, we muſt take order to weaken them: and to ſeparate them, is to weaken them. Vnited force is the ſtronger; diſ-united, the weaker ſtill. Undo the faggot-band, and when the ſticks be ſevered, you ſhall ſtick by ſtick, deal with them, and keep them under. A ſtick will eaſily be broken; a faggot will not. So as, to ſcatter them, is to weaken them.

And ſo to be, is good for Simeon and Levi themſelves. It takes from them, hability to do hurt: pares their nailes, breaks off their hornes, doth them good againſt their wils. For, if the worſt come to the worſt, they can hurt but ſingly or by one. And therefore we ſay; Conſultum eſt malis, ut à ſociis dividantur: they that are ill affected, it is good for them and their fellowes, to be put aſunder.

And, if it be good for them; certainly, for the other Tribes, much more: They ſhall all live the more quietly. For, if theſe two ſhould ſtill continue together, they might the ſooner, the more eaſily, againe in like ſort combine, and confederate themſelves together againſt the other Tribes, if they gave them but the leaſt occaſion. Now, they ſhall be ſo ſcattered, and ſet, where they ſhall doe no great harme any more: as no more they did. And ſo, as it was good for them, ſo we ſay, Conſultum eſt Reipublicæ ut dividantur ſocii ad malum; Good for the Common-wealth, if any be that way given, to remove them either from other at leaſt. So, they the weaker, and the reſt the ſafer. But ſcattering will not alwayes ſerve: for, even ſcattered, ſome do miſchief enough. And therefore, it is as good policie, to coope them up, if ſcattering they doe harme; as it is, to ſcatter them, if they prove the worſe for being together.

The grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment.

To ſpeak a little of the grievouſneſſe of the puniſhment: theſe degrees are in it.

1 Firſt, it concludes the diſperſion of them, the loſſe of having any lot at all of inheritance of their owne, as the reſt of the Tribes had. It kils not the men, but it puls downe their wall, and layes them to the Common, wherein every man had as much right, as they. And ſure, GOD of His goodneſſe, not intending to proceed the way Himſelfe 1 Diſ-inheriting.

had ſet, that, having ſhed mans bloud, by man ſhould their bloud be ſhed (for ſo, they ſhould have beene rooted out cleane, and two Tribes had been loſt in Iſrael:) The next was, to let them have no inheritance, entirely by themſelves, as had all the reſt. As the Pſalmiſt ſaith: Slay them not, leſt my people forget, any ſuch thing was done, but Pſal 59.11. ſcatter them abroad, and ſo put them downe that way, as chaffe is either to be burnt, or the wind to ſcatter it, no man can tell whither.

2 Scattering. A ſecond degree is, not onely to be diſ-inherited, but to be ſcattered: for, that was Gen.4.12. Cain's puniſhment, divided and caſt out from GOD's preſence, all his life long: To wander up and downe, he knew not whither. That was, for bloud too, the bloud of Abel. It is the Ieives puniſhment: (and that was for bloud too; the bloud of CHRIST;) that they are ſcattered all over the earth (as, to this very day they be;) and never could get together, to make an entire ſtate, no more than theſe did.

3 Even of their poſterity. The third degree is; That all this did light upon their whole poſterity, rather than upon their owne perſons. For, to have all, that came of them, ſo diſperſed abroad, was a more heavie hearing to them, than if it had light on themſelves: of that I make no queſtion. It is the courſe, GOD holdeth in His Law, to viſit the ſinnes of the fathers
Exod.20 5. upon the children. But, this is yet heavier: for, there, it is but to the third and fourth, but this is to endure throughout all generations. The father, which is little moved with his owne loſſe, if it ſhall turn to the dammage of his children, it will move him the rather: As, this ever hath done, and ever ſhall.

4 And that, upon record. And let this be the laſt: That Iacob's Maledictus, and his Diſpergam, do remaine and ſtand thus of Record, and ſo ſhall ſtand to the worlds end. The curſe on their heads, a blot on their names, a ſcattering upon their ſeed and poſterity for ever.

But, let me add this: That, though it appeares, their nature was none of the beſt; they were no good natur'd men, as given to bloud, and ſo to be diſliked: yet was not their nature exempted from grace though, but place left for grace, and ſo, they to be relieved that way. For, it may well be thought, this ſo ſevere a cenſure, ſpecially at this time now inflicted, and by their owne father, being to goe out of the world; that it wrought upon theſe two brethren, and wrought in them deep contrition of that their outrage. Wherewith GOD being appeaſed, turned their curſe into a bleſſing. Pœnam diſperſionis in præmium Sacerdotii (ſay the Fathers.). For, the curſe, which Iacob inflicted, Moſes reſerved; (not for their diſperſing, which came through their fathers fault:) Scattered they were, but ſcattered with honour: One having the Office of Prieſt-hood, and teaching men: the other, of Scribes and Schoole-maſters, training up their children all the Tribes over.

The Application of the Text. Let us ſee now, if you can finde in theſe men, the men of this day; and, in this fact, theirs; and ſo for the puniſhment likewiſe. 1 Two they were, this day: So the number agrees. 2 And brethren they were, as nearely allied. 3 And weapons they had both. 4 And made of the ſame metall (of violence) that theirs here. 5 Counſell they tooke, into which Iacob's ſoule would never have come. 6 And coloured it with falſe ſemblance (Bemerma) no leſſe than theſe: (One, of diſcovering of (I wot not what) Secret: the other, of not being from the Sermon in any wiſe: his Sermon, like their Circumciſion.) 7 Did as much as in them lay, to execute their counſell: offered to ſtrike, offered to binde, lay hands, graſped, fell to the ground. 8 And, from the ſame roote they came both, from deſire of revenge. Their fury no whit leſſe, no leſſe cruell, no leſſe implacable. Thus farre their likeneſſe holds.

But now, in two things, diſlike: 1. One, theſe in the Text had ſome cauſe: their Siſter was deflowred. Not the leaſt colour, here, Their ſiſter was honoured; themſelves dealt with but too well. No cauſe in the world, they. Diſlike, in this firſt.

2. And then, if you come to the iſſue, in that, diſlike too. It was not interfecerunt ברצנם indeed (we thank GOD for that, it was not:) Yet they did their good will (Birtſonam;) And, it was a judged caſe in Perſia, Volnerunt was enough.

But,

But, when we come to the Virum, there (I am ſure) is great odds. Ours, another manner of Virum, than theirs, and put Hemor and Sichem both together. Many a yeare after this, there were in that Land thirty one Kings, whereof Hemor (at the moſt) had but one part: The leaſt of your three Kingdomes, is greater than all the thirty one put together. So, there holds no proportion in Virum.

Will ye ſee now the puniſhment? that though hand were in hand, they were not unpuniſhed. Iacob's Legacie came on ours too. Under Iacob's curſe they died, His curſe upon their ſoules, under which their ſoules lie, and ſo ſhall for evermore. And upon their glory and honour; for, that is gone and loſt for ever, and, as their ſoules, ſo their memory accurſed. And upon their Tribe or Houſe; for, that is ſcattered as duſt before the wind, and come to nought.

And one degree further, wherein ours were diſlike. Simeon and Levi, for all this lived out their time; ſlew, but were not ſlaine. But, here this day with theſe, in ſtead of Interfecerunt, it was Interfecti ſunt. This Simeon and Levi, they lay both dead on the floore, with their weapons of cruelty in their hands, with their wicked counſell and purpoſe in their hearts. Which hearts of theirs, the weapons of juſt defence went thorow; and their counſell turned to their confuſion.

And now our Benedictus Deus to GOD: Bleſſed be He for this Maledictus of Iacob, for the Patriarch's curſe, that light upon them and theirs. And yet our Maledictus too, to them, their weapons, their counſell, their fury, their ſoules, and their memories. And, from ſuch bloud-thirſty curſed men, GOD ever bleſſe You.

Let me tell you this, for a farewell. Iacob doth here two things: [1] Delivers us a Document; [2] and denounceth a dreadfull puniſhment. His Document is, Ne veniat anima mea: His puniſhment is, Maledictus and diſſipabo. And chooſe, they that will not ſay, Ne veniat with him, he will ſay, Maledictus, his curſe be upon them. But, as Iacob ſaid, ſo we to ſay all, all to ſay after him, Ne veniat both paſsive, and active. Paſsive: Never be their counſell taken about Iacob's ſoule; or his ſoule, that is to us, Iacob, even the Feeder, the Paſtor, and Stone of Iſrael; never come his ſoule, to be the ſubject, or matter treated of in any ſuch counſell. Active: and never let any true ſubjects ſoule come in any ſuch counſell; nor ever any good Chriſtian come in that Church, wherein ſuch Counſell, or Counſellours are harboured and maintained; or that hold any doctrine that favours any ſuch conſultations.

But if any will not thus ſay Iacob's ne veniat; we to be ſo bold as to ſay Iacob's Maledictus, to him, his ſoule, his ſeed, his memory and all. Let all ſuch inherit the curſe, let it be their legacie. Exurgat Deus, & diſſipentur inimici, Let GOD ariſe, and theſe His enemies be ſcattered; As the ſtubble before the wind, and as the ſmoke, let them vaniſh and come to nothing. Let their lives be for the ſword, their names be put out; their ſoules for the curſe, their houſes pull'd downe and deſolate. So periſh all thine enemies, O LORD, &c. Pſalm. 68. 1. Iudg. 5. 31.

SERMONS OF THE Gun-powder-Treaſon: PREACHED UPON THE
V. of November.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL, On the Fifth of NOVEMBER, Anno Dom. MDCVI.

PSAL. CXVIII. VER. XIII. XIV.

A Domino factum eſt iſtud, & eſt mirabile in oculis noſtris.
Hæc eſt Dies quam fecit Dominus; exultemus & lætemur in ea.

This is the Lords doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.
This is the day which the Lord hath made; let us rejoyce and be glad in it.

TO entitle this time to this Text, or to ſhew it pertinent to the preſent occaſion, will ask no long proceſſe. This Day of ours, this fifth of November, a day of GODS making; that which was done upon it, was the LORDS doing. CHRIST'S owne application (which is the beſt) may well be applied here: This day, is this Scripture fulfilled in our eares. For, if ever there were a deed done, or a day made by God, in our dayes; this day, and the deed of this day was i: If ever He gave cauſe of marvelling (as in the firſt;) of rejoycing (as in the ſecond verſe) to any land; to us this day, He gave both: If ever ſaved, proſpered, bleſſed any; this day, He ſaved, proſpered, and (as we ſay) fairely bleſſed us. Luke 4. 21. i

The day (we all know) was meant to be the day of all our deaths; and we, and many were appointed as ſheepe to the ſlaughter; nay, worſe than ſo. There was a thing doing on it, if it had been done, we all had been undone. And the very ſame day we (all know) the day, wherein that appointment was diſappointed by God, and we all ſaved, that we might not die but live, and declare the praiſe of the Lord: the Lord, of whoſe doing, that marvellous deed was; of whoſe making, this joyfull day is, that we celebrate.

Verſe 17.

Pſal. 111. 5. This mercifull and gracious LORD (ſaith David, Pſalme 111. 5.) hath ſo done His marvellous works, that they ought to be had, and kept in remembrance. Of keeping in remembrance, many wayes there be: Among the reſt, this is one, of making dayes; ſet ſolemne Dayes to preſerve memorable Acts, that they be not eaten out, by them, but ever revived, with the returne of the Yeare, and kept ſtill freſh in continuall memory. GOD Himſelfe taught us this way. In remembrance of the great delivery from the deſtroying Angell, He himſelfe ordained the day of the Paſſe-over yearely to be kept. The Church, by Him taught, tooke the ſame way. In remembrance of the diſappointing of Hamans bloudy lots, they likewiſe appointed the dayes of Purim, yearely to be kept. The like memorable mercy did He vouchſafe us: The deſtroyer paſſed over our dwellings, this day: It is our Paſſe-over. Haman, and his Fellowes had ſet the dice on us, and we by this time had been all in peeces: It is our Purim day.

Exod. 12. 3, &c

Eſter 9. 26.

We have therefore well done and upon good warrant, to tread in the ſame ſteps, and by law to provide, that this Day ſhould not die, nor the memoriall thereof periſh, from our ſelves or from our ſeed; but be conſecrated to perpetuall memory, by a yearly acknowledgement to be made of it throughout all generations. In accompliſhment of which order, we are all now here in the preſence of GOD, on this day, that He firſt, by His Act of doing, hath made; and we ſecondly, by our act of decreeing, have made before Him, His holy Angels, and men, to confeſſe this His goodneſſe, and our ſelves eternally bound to Him for it. And, being to confeſſe it, with what words of Scripture can we better or fitter doe it, than thoſe we have read out of this Pſalme? Sure, I could thinke of none fitter, but even thus to ſay, A Domino factum, &c.

The Diviſion.

The treaty whereof may well be compriſed in three points: 1. The Deed or doing: 2. The Day, and 3. The Duty. The Deed, in theſe: This is the Lords, &c. The Day, in theſe: This is the day, &c. The Duty, in the reſt; Let us, &c. The other two reduced to the Day, which is the center of both. The doing is the cauſe; The Duty is the conſequent: from the day groweth the duty.

I. II. III.

To proceed orderly, we are to begin with the day. For though (in place) it ſtand after the deed; yet to us, it is firſt: our knowledge is à poſteriori. The effect ever firſt, where it is the ground of the reſt. Of the day then firſt.

1 That ſuch dayes there be, and how they come to be ſuch. 2. Then of the doing, that maketh them: wherein [1] that this of Davids was; and [2] that ours is no leſſe, rather more. 3. Then of the duty, how to doe it; by rejoycing, and being glad, for ſo, gaudium erit plenum, theſe two make it full: How to take order, that we may long and often do it, by ſaying our Hoſanna, and Benedictus; for, gaudium noſtrum nemo tollet à nobis, thoſe will make, that our joy no man ſhall take from us.

John 16. 22.

This

THis is the day: This? Why, are not all dayes made by Him? Is there any dayes not made by Him? Why then say we, This is the day the Lord hath made? Divide the dayes into naturall and civill; the naturall, some are cleare and some are cloudy; the civill, some are luckie dayes, and some dismall. Be they faire or foule, glad or sad; (as the Poet calleth him) the Great Diespiter, the Father of dayes hath made them both. How say we then of some one day, above his fellow, This is the day, &c.

I. Of the Day. Such dayes there be.

No difference at all, in the dayes, or in the moneths themselves: by nature, they are all one. No more in November, than another moneth: nor in the fifth, than in the fifteenth. All is, in God's making. For, as in the Creation, we see, all are the workes, and yet a plaine difference betweene them for all that, in the manner of making: Some made with Sit, Let there be light, a firmament, drie Land; Some, with Faciamus with more adoe, greater forecast, and framing, as man, that master-peece of His workes, of whom therefore in a different sense, it may be said: This is the Creature which God hath made (suppose, after a more excellent manner.) In the very same manner, it is with dayes; All are His making, all equall in that; but, that letteth not, but He may bestow a speciall Faciamus upon some one day more than other; and so that day, by speciall prerogative, said To be indeed a day, that God hath made. Gen. 1. 14. 26.

Now, for God's making, it fareth with dayes, as it doth with yeares. Some yeare (saith the Psalme) God crowneth with His goodnesse, maketh it more seasonable, healthfull, fruitfull, than other. And so for dayes; God leaveth a more sensible impression of His favour, upon some one, more than many besides, by doing upon it some marvellous work. And, such a day on which God vouchsafeth some speciall factum est, some great and publike benefit; notable for the time present, memorable for the time to come, in that case, of that Day (as if God had said Faciamus diem hunc, shewed some workemanship, done some speciall cost on it) it may with an accent, with an emphasis be said, This verily is a day which God hath made, in comparison of which, the rest are as if they were not; or at least were not of His making. Psal. 65. 11.

As for black and dismall dayes, dayes of sorrow and sad accidents; they are and may be counted (saith Iob) for no dayes: Nights rather, as having the shadow of death upon them; or, if dayes, such as his were, which Sathan had marr'd, than which God had made. And for common and ordinary dayes, wherein as there is no harme, so not any notable good, we rather say, they are gone forth from God, in the course of nature (as it were) with a fiat, then made by Him; specially, with a faciamus. So, evill dayes no dayes, or dayes marr'd: and common dayes, dayes; but no made dayes: Onely those made, that crowned with some extraordinary great Favour, and thereby get a dignity, and exaltation above the rest: exempted out of the ordinary course of the Calendar with an Hic est. Such, in the Law, was the Day in the Passe-over, made by God, the head of the yeare. Such, in the Gospell, of Christs Resurrection, made by God, Dies Dominicus; and to it, do all the Fathers apply this verse. And we had this day, our Passe-over, and we had a Resurrection or μεταβολὴ, as Isaac had. But, I forbeare to goe further in the generall. By this that hath been said, we may see, there be dayes of which it may be safely said, This is the day, &c. and in what sense, it may be said. Such there be then; that this of ours, one of them; that if it be, we may so hold it, and doe the duties that pertaine to it. Iob 3. 36. Exod. 12. 1. Heb. 11. 19.

II.
Davids day was such.

Davids day here, was one certainly, dictante Spiritu; and they, that are like it, to be holden for such: so that, if ours be as this was, it is certainly dies à Deo factus. Now then (to take our rule from the former verse) Factum Domini facit diem Domini. It is GODS deed, that maketh it GODS day: and, the greater the Deed, the more GODS day. There must be first, Factum est, some doing: and secondly, it must be à Domino, He the doer: and thirdly, that somewhat must be somewhat marvellous: and fourthly, not, in it selfe, so; but, in our eyes. These foure goe to it; these foure make any day a day of Gods making. Let us see then these foure: First, in Davids here, and then in our owne; and if we finde them all, boldly pronounce, This is the day, &c.

In it there was 1 A Factum est, A deliverance.

First, the factum est, in Davids; what was done, set downe at large in the fore-part of the Psalme. It was a deliverance: all the Psalme runneth on nothing else. Every deliverance is from a danger; and, by the danger, we take measure of the deliverance. The greater that, the greater the Delivery from it: and the greater the delivery, the greater the day, and the more likely to be of GODS owne manufacture. His danger first: what should have been done. He was in a great distresse. Three severall times, with great passion, he repeats it, that his Enemies 1 came about him; 2 compassed him round; 3 compassed and kept him in on every side: were, no swarme of bees so thicke: That they gave a terrible lift or thrust at him, to overthrow him; and very neare it they were. And at last, as if he were newly crept out of his grave, out of the very jawes of death and despaire, he breaks forth and saith, I was very neare my death; neare it I was, but non moriar, die I will not now, for this time, but live a little longer to declare the works of the Lord. This, was his danger: and, a shrewd one (it seemeth) it was. From this danger, he was delivered. This, the factum est.

From danger. Verse 10, 11, 12.
Verse 13.
Verse 17.

2 A Domino. By GOD, not by man.

But, man might do all this; and so it be mans day, for any thing is said yet. Though it were great, it maketh it not Gods, unlesse God, God (I say) and not man, but GOD Himselfe were the doer of it: and, if He the Doer, He denominates the Day. This then was not any mans, not any Princes doing, but GODS alone, His might, His mercy, that brought it to passe: Not any arme of flesh, but GODS might; not of any merit of his, but of His owne meere mercy. This was done by His might: Thrice he tels us of it; It was the right hand of the Lord, that brought this mighty thing to passe. This was done by His mercy; His ever-enduring mercy: foure times he tels us, it was that, did it. With that he begins, and makes it the key of the song. Then, as we have factum est, so we have A Domino: The deed and the doer both.

Verse 8, 9.
Verse 15, 16.
Verse 1, 2, 3, 4

3 Et mirabile, and marvellous it was. * Zech. 4. 10.

GODS doings are many, and not all of one size. The Prophet * Zachary speaketh of a day of small things; and, even in those small, must we learne to see God, or we shall never see Him in greater. Yet, so dimme is our sight, that unlesse they be great, commonly we see Him not: nay, unlesse it be great usque ad miraculum, so great, that marvellous withall, we count it not worth a day, nor worthy God: unlesse it be such. But, if it be such, then it is Gods, Qui facit mirabilia solus, Who only workes great marvells: then, man is shut out; and Gods must the Day be. A Domino factum, & mirabile.

Psal. 72. 18.

4 In oculis nostris, even in our eyes.

And yet this is not enough. The truth is, all that God doth, all His workes are wonderfull: Magna, sed ideo parva quia usitata. Great, wonders, all: but, not wonderfull; seeme small to us, because they be usuall: His miracles are no more marvellous, than His ordinary works, but that, we see the one daily, and the other, not. Therefore he addeth [In our eyes] for a full period: His doings, all marvellous in themselves; but, not marvellous, in our eyes, unlesse they be rare, and the like not seene before: But then, they be; and then we say, Digitus Dei est; it is the finger of God; nay, the right hand of God, that brought this mighty thing to passe. Then we give the day for Gods, without more adoe. Now then, we have all that goeth to it: 1 A Deliverance wrought; 2 wrought, by God; 3 a wonderfull deliverance; 4 and that, even in our eyes. These make Davids day, a day of Gods making.

Our Day was such.

These foure in ours. Factum est.

1 A deliverance from a danger, a greater danger.

Will these be found in ours, and then ours shall be so too? They will, all of them certainly; and that, in an higher degree, in a greater measure; match Davids day, and overmatch it in all. 1. We were delivered, and from a danger, that is cleare. How great? (for, that makes the oddes.) Boldly, I dare say, from a greater than Davids. Thus I shew it, and go no further than the Psalme it selfe.

1. David called upon GOD in his danger; he knew of it, therefore. We did not: we imagined no such thing, but that all had been safe, and we might have gone to the Parliament, as secure as ever. The danger never dreamt of, that is the danger.

2. His was, by compassing and hemming in, that is, above ground, and may be descried from a watch-tower. Ours was by undermining, digging deep under ground; that none could discerne.

3. One cannot be beset, but he may have hope to break through, at some part. But here, from this, no way, no meanes, no possibility of escaping. The danger not to be descried, not to be escaped, that is the danger.

4. His were a swarme of bees (He calleth them so:) they, buzze and make a noise when they come. Ours, a brood of vipers, mordentes in silentio; still, not so much as a hisse, till the deadly blow had been given. Verse 12.

5. His was but of himselfe alone; so he saith, I was in trouble, They came about me, kept me in, thrust sore at me: But one person, Davids alone. Ours of a farre greater extent; David, and his three Estates with him. Now, though David himselfe were valued by them at ten thousand of themselves (and not over-valued neither; for he is worth more; and all Kings like him, no lesse worth:) yet he and they too, must needs be more, than He alone. Not onely King David had gone, but Queene Esther too: and not onely they, but Salomon the young Prince, and Nathan his brother. Nor these were not all. The Scriptures recount, David had Iehosaphat for his Chancellour, Adoram his Treasurer, Seraja his Secretarie, Sadoc and Abiathar, and twenty two more, the chiefe of the Priests, Admo his Iudge, Ioab his Generall; all had gone: His forty eight Worthies or Nobles, all they too. The Principall of all the Tribes in the kingdome: all they too; and many more than these; no man knoweth how many. It is out of question, it had exceeded this of Davids here. Verse 11.13. 2 Sam. 18.3. 2 Sam. 20. 24. 2 Sam. 23.

6. One more. His danger (he confesseth) was from man: He goeth no further, I will not feare what man doth unto me. This of ours was not: meerly mans, I deny it; it was the devill himselfe. The instruments (not as his, a swarme of bees, but) a swarme of Locusts, out of the infernall pit. Not men; no not Heathen men: Their Stories; nay, their Tragedies can shew none neare it. Their Poets could never faine any so prodigiously impious. Not men; No, not savage wilde men: the Hunnes, the Heruli, the Turcilingi, noted for inhumanity, never so inhumane: Even among those barbarous people, this fact would be accounted barbarous. How then? Beasts: There were at Ephesus, beasts in shape of men; and ἀνθρώπου, brutishnesse is the worst, Philosophie could imagine of our nature. This is more than brutish; What Tiger, though never so inraged, would have made the like havocke? Then, if the like, neither in the nature of men, nor beasts to be found (it is so unnaturall;) we must not looke to patterne it upon earth, we must to hell; thence it was certainly, even from the devill. He was a murderer from the beginning, and will be so to the ending. In every sinne of bloud, he hath a claw, but, all his clawes, in such an one as this: wherein so much bloud, as would have made it raine bloud; so many baskets of heads, so many peeces of rent bodies cast up and downe, and scattered all over the face of the earth. Never such a day; all Ioels signes of a fearefull day, bloud, and fire and the vapour of smoake. As he is a murtherer; so we see (in Marke) by his renting and tearing the poore possessed childe, he Verse 6. Apoc. 9.3. 1 Cor. 15.32. Iohn 8.44. Ioel 2.30. Mar. 9.19.

It yrketh me to ſtand repeating theſe; That ever age, or land, but that our age, and this land ſhould foſter or breed ſuch monſters!

That you may know it for that perfectly, conſider but the wickedneſſe of it, as it were in full oppoſition to GOD, and you muſt needs ſay, it could not be His doing: Gen.18.23. Dan.9.27. Mat.24.15. One more yet: that this abomination of deſolation (ſo calleth Daniel, ſo calleth our Saviour, the uttermoſt extremity of all that bad is: ſo may we this truly:) that this abomination of deſolation tooke up his ſtanding in the holy place.

1. An abomination: ſo it is; abhorred of all fleſh, hated and deteſted of all, that but heare it named: yea, they themſelves ſay, they ſhould have abhorred it, if it had taken effect. It is an abomination.

2 Every abomination doth not forthwith make deſolate. This had. If ever a deſolate kingdome upon earth, ſuch had this beene, after that terrible blow. Neither root nor branch left, all ſwept away: Strangers called in; murtherers exalted; the very diſſolution and deſolation of all enſued.

3. But this, that this ſo abominable and deſolatory a plot, ſtood in the holy place, this is the pitch of all. For, there it ſtood, and thence it came abroad. Undertaken with an holy oath; bound with the holy Sacrament (that muſt needs be in a holy place;) warranted for a holy Act, tending to the advancement of a holy Religion, and by holy perſons, called by a moſt holy name, the name of Ieſus. That theſe holy religious perſons, even the chiefe of all religious perſons (the Ieſuites) gave not onely abſolution, but reſolution, that all this was well done; that it was by them juſtified as lawfull, ſanctified as meritorious, and ſhould have been glorified (but it wants glorifying, becauſe the event failed, that is the griefe; if it had not glorified) long yer this, and canonized, as a very good and holy act, and we had had orations out of the Conclave in commendation of it. (Now I think, we ſhall heare no more of it.) Theſe good Fathers they were Davids bees here, came hither, only to bring us honey, right honey they; not to ſting any body: Verſe 22. or (as in the XXII. verſe) they (as builders) came into the land, only for edification; not to pull down, or to deſtroy any thing. We ſee their practice, they begun with rejecting this Stone, as one that favoured Hereticks at leaſt, and therefore excommunicate, and therefore depoſed, and therefore expoſed, to any that could handle a ſpade well, to make a mine to blow him up; Him, and all his Eſtates with him to attend him: (The corner Stone being gone, the walls muſt needs follow.) But then, this ſhrining it (ſuch an abomination) ſetting it in the holy place, ſo ougly and odious; making ſuch a treaſon as this a religious, miſſall, ſacramentall treaſon; hallowing it with oriſon, oath and Euchariſt; this paſſeth all the reſt. I ſay no more, but as our SAVIOUR con- Mat.24.15. cludeth, when you ſee ſuch an abomination ſo ſtanding, qui legit intelligat; nay qui videt. GOD ſend them, that (not read of it, but) ſee it, and had like to have ſmelt of it, to learne that, they ſhould, by it: and ſo I leave it.

Tell

Tell me now if this were not His doing, and if it ſhould not have beene a day of His making, the Devils owne making?

This ſhould have beene done; this, the danger: what was done? This, the factum fuiſſet; what the factum eſt? All theſe were undone, and blowen over; all the undermining diſappointed; all this murder, and crueltie, and deſolation defeated. The mine is diſcovered, the ſnare is broken and we are delivered. All theſe, the King, Queene, Prince, Nobles, Biſhops, Iudges, both Houſes alive, all: not a haire of any of their heads periſhed; not ſo much as the ſmell of fire on any their garments. Give thankes ô Iſrael, unto the Lord thy God in the congregation, from the bottome of the heart; here is little Benjamin, thy Ruler, the Princes of Iuda &c. that they are here and do ſee them here, and that the Stone theſe Builders refuſed, is ſtill the Head-ſtone of the corner. That, ſhould have beene done; this, was done: and we all, that are here this day, are witneſſes of it; Witneſſes above all exception of this factum eſt.

Dan 3.27.

Pſal 68.26, 27. 28, &c.

But by whom, whoſe doing? Truly, not mans doing this; it was the Lords. A Damone factum eſt illud, or fictum eſt illud. It was the Devils doing, or deviſing (the plot:) A Domino factum eſt hoc, This was Gods doing (the deliverance.) The blow was the Devils: The ward was Gods. Not man, but the Devill, deviſed it: Not man, but God defeated it. He, that ſate in heaven all this while, and from thence looked downe and ſaw all this doing of the devill and his lims, in that mercy of his, which is over all his works, to ſave the effuſion of ſo much blood, to preſerve the ſoules of ſo many innocents, to keep this Land from ſo foule a confuſion, to ſhew ſtill ſome token, ſome ſenſible token upon us for good, that they which hate us may ſee it, and be aſhamed; but eſpecially, that that, was ſo lately united, might not ſo ſoone be diſſolved; He tooke the matter into his owne hand. And, if ever God ſhewed, that He had a hooke in the Leviathans noſe; that the Devil can go no further than his chaine: if ever that there is in him more power to help, than in Sathan to hurt; in this, he did it. And, as the devils clawes to be ſeene in the former; ſo Gods right hand, in this mighty thing (He brought to paſſe) and all the fingers of it.

1, To ſhew it was He. He held his peace and kept ſilence, ſat ſtill, and let it go on, till it came neere, even to the very period, to the day of the lot; ſo neere, that wee may truly ſay (with King David) as the Lord liveth, uno tantum gradu, nos morſque dividimur, there was but a ſtep betweene death and us. We were upon the point of going to the hill, all was prepared; the traine, the match, the fire, wood, and all, and we ready to be the ſacrifice, and even then and there, In monte providebat Dominus, God provided for our ſafety, even in that very place, where we ſhould have beene the burnt offering; from heaven, ſtayed the blow. It was the Lords doing.

3 Et eſt mirabile

This will not ſerve the turne. His doing makes it not the Day; His doing a miracle, that makes it: and that it is too. I take no thought, to prove this point: by the Law, the Prophets, the Goſpell. To put them to it; Moſes: enquire now of the dayes, that were before us, ſince the day that God created man upon earth, and aske from one end of heaven to the other, if there came to paſſe ſuch a thing as this, whether any ſuch like thing have beene heard; and, if we cannot ſuit it, or ſet ſuch another by it, we muſt needs yeeld it for one. By the Prophets, Goe to the Iſles and behold, ſend to Kedar and take diligent heed, and ſee if you can poſſibly finde the like: if not, confeſſe it for mervailous. Come hither (ſaith David) and behold, how marvellous God is! and what is that? that ſuch, as are rebellious, are not able to exalt themſelves. We need not goe ſo farre, we have it here to ſee; We may ſay to him, Come hither. By the Goſpell: for, ſo doe they (there) acknowledge our Saviours for miracles: Sure we have ſeene ſtrange things to day: We never ſaw it on this faſhion: The like was never ſeene in Iſrael: therefore marvailous certainly. It is now no miracle, no ſtrange thing, to have a King delivered: every other yeare, we ſee it, and therefore wonder not, at it. But to ſee King, Queene, their ſeede and all their eſtates delivered, that is mirabile, that is a new thing created on the earth. I conclude: as, that was the Divels doing, and was monſtrous in our eyes; ſo, this is Gods doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. And againe, upon all theſe markes, that, as this was a day, the divell would have marred; ſo this is a day, that the Lord made.

And let me goe further. Not, in ours only; for (ſure I am) that which followeth there, is true (Then ſaid they, inter Gentes) of other nations; The Lord hath done great things for them: and we are too blame, if we anſwer them not, with the Eccho there following, Yea indeed, the Lord hath done great things for us; for which wee have cauſe to rejoyce. If ſtrangers think it ſtrange, and ſay, and write, A ſeculo inauditum, The like was never heard before: if it were mervellous in their eyes, it were very mervailous it ſhould not be ſo, in our eyes too.

I adde, they that were the Actors of it, in their eyes, it is ſo; and that of the Apoſtle ſtle, may aptly be applyed to them. Behold ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and vaniſh, for God hath wrought a work in your dayes, a work which you your ſelves that were the doers, ſhall ſcarce believe, when it ſhall be told: that even aſtoniſhed themſelves, to ſee it goe forward ſo long, and ſo ſuddenly caſt down. Nay, I goe further, to make it a miracle conſummate. I doubt not, but it was ſtrange newes, even in Hell it ſelfe, inſomuch as even that place had never hatched the like monſter before. You ſee the welcome they in Hell gave him of Aſſur, (Eſay 14.) What art thou come, that makeſt the earth to tremble, and doſt ſhake whole kingdomes? And yet it is well known, all his ſhaking was but in a metaphore: He never made it ſhake actually, as theſe would have done: and therefore this of greater admiration, and (I doubt not, but) more wonderfull in their eyes: And ours are very dimme, if in all other it be, and be not ſo in ours.

Act. 13. 41.

Eſay 14. 16.

III. Thedutie.

Then if ſuch dayes there be, if this of ours be one of them, if the fore-part of the verſe doe, then muſt the latter alſo belong to us: If this, the day, the Lord hath made; then, this, the day, wherein we to rejoyce: When He makes, we to make; and our rejoycing in it, is our making of it.

To rejoyce, no hard requeſt, nor heavie yoke, let it not be grievous to us. We love to doe it, we ſeek all meanes to doe it in all caſes elſe: then to aſſay to doe it here. This (ſure) the Prophet would not require, nor make it the office of the day, but that upon ſuch dayes, God himſelfe cals us to joy.

And even as, when God calleth us to mourning, by black dayes, of famine or warre, or the like; then to fall to feaſting or revelling, is that that highly diſpleaſeth God: ſo, when God, by good dayes, calleth us to joy; then to droope, and not to accommodate our ſelves to ſeaſons of his ſending, is that which pleaſes him never a whit.

What? (ſaith Nehemias, upon ſuch a bleſſed day as this) Droope you to day? Nolite, at no hand to doe it, Dies enim feſtus eſt, it is a feſtivall day: what then? why it is eſſentiall, it is the nature of every Feaſt (ſaith God in His Law) omnino gaudere, by any meanes in any wiſe, therein to rejoyce. And Nehemias promiſe is to incourage us, that if the ſtrength of the Lord bee our joy, the very joy of the Lord ſhall be our ſtrength.

Nehem. 8. 9. 10.

Num. 10. 10. Deut. 16. 11.

To conclude: Sure I am, that if the plot had prevailed, it would have beene an high Feaſt in Gath, and a day of Iubilee in Aſcalon; The daughters of the uncircumciſed would have made it a day in triumph. Let us not be behind them then, but ſhew as much joy for our ſaving, as they would certainly have done, for our periſhing.

2 Sam. 1. 20.

Exultemus & Lætemur. God loveth our joy ſhould be full; it is not full, except we have both theſe, the body (as it were) and the ſoule of joy: the joy outward of the body, and gladneſſe inward of the ſoule. (So much doe the two words ſignifie, in all the three tongues.) Both he will have: for, if one be wanting, it is but ſemiplenum; halfe full.

Exultemus and Lætemur both.

And he beginneth with Exultemus, the outward: not to our ſelves within, which we call gaudere in ſinu, Ioy of the boſome; but ſuch, ſo exuberant, as the ſtreames of it may overflow, and the beames of it ſhine and ſhew forth, in an outward ſenſible exultation. It is a day, ſo would he have us rejoyce, that, as by day-light it might be ſeene in our face, habit, and geſture: Seene and heard both: Therefore hee ſaith (at the 15. verſe.) the voice of joy is in the dwellings of the righteous. And in the dwelling it doth well: But yet, that would not ſerve his turne; but, open me (ſaith he at the 19. verſe.) the gates of righteouſneſſe, that is, the Church-doore (his houſe would not hold him) thither will I goe in, and there, in the congregation, in the great congregation, give thankes to the Lord: And that ſo great a congregation, that it may conſtituere diem ſolennem in condenſis uſque ad Cornua altaris, that they may ſtand ſo thicke in the Church, as fill it from the entrie of the doore, to the very edge of the Altar. This ſame joy that is neither ſeene nor heard, there is ſome leven of malignitie in it; he cannot skill of it. He will have it ſeene in the countenance, heard in the voice; not only preaching preaching, but ſinging forth His praiſe. And that, not with voices alone, but with inſtruments, and not inſtruments of the Queere alone, but inſtruments of the ſteeple too, bels and all, that ſo it may be Hoſanna in altiſſimis, in the very higheſt key we have. This for exultemus.

Exultemus: the outward joy.

Verſe 15. Verſ. 19.

Lætemur, the inward joy.

But, many a cloſe Hypocrite may doe all this, and many a counterfeit Shemei and Sheba did all this, to David; got them a fleering forced countenance, taken-on joy: And therefore the other; that God will have his joy, not be the joy of the countenance alone, a cleere face, and a cloudy overcaſt heart; he will have the gladneſſe of the heart too, of the inner-man: Cor meum & caro mea; the heart, as well as the fleſh, to be joyfull. The joy of the ſoule is the ſoule of joy: not a body without a ſoul, which is but a carcaſe. Strange children may (and will) diſſemble with me (ſaith the Pſalme 18. 44.) diſſemble a gladneſſe, for feare of being noted; and yet within, in heart, you wot what. But, God calleth for his de fontibus Iſrael, which we read, from the ground of the heart. That is (indeed) the true fountaine of joy, that our lips may be faine, when we ſing unto Him, and ſo may our ſoule whith he hath delivered. Nay, he delivered both: and therefore, both the body to rejoyce, and the ſoul to be glad. This doth Lætemur adde, to exultemus.

How to order our joy.

If then we be agreed that we will doe both, I come to the laſt, how to order our joy, that it may pleaſe Him, for whom it is undertaken. It is not every joy, that He liketh. Merry they were, and joyfull (they thought) that kept their Kings day (Hoſ. 7.) by taking in boule after boule till they were ſick again. So they that Malachi ſpeaks of; there came nothing of their feaſts but dung (beare with it, it is the Holy Ghoſt his own terme) that is, all in the bellie and bellie-cheere. So they, that ſate downe to eat and drink, and roſe up to play, and there was all; that is the Calves feaſt: a Calfe can do as much. But with none of theſe was God pleaſed: and as good no joy, as not to the purpoſe; as not to pleaſe him.

Exod. 32. 6. 1 Cor. 10. 5.

That it may be to the purpoſe, that God may take pleaſure in it, it muſt begin at Hoſanna, at Aperite mihi portas Iuſtitiæ, at the Temple-doore; there muſt it goe in, it muſt bleſſe, and be bleſſed in the houſe of the Lord. I will firſt make joyfull in my houſe of Prayer (it is God by Eſay:) the ſtreame of our joy, muſt come from the ſpring-head of Religion.

Verſ. 9.

Eſay 56. 7.

Well then, to the Church we are come: ſo far onward. When we are there, what is to be done? Somewhat we muſt ſay, we muſt not ſtand mute. There to ſtand ſtill, that, the Prophet cannot skill of. That then, we may (there) ſay ſomething, hee here frames, he here endites a verſicle, which after grew into ſuch requeſt, as no feaſt ever without it, without an Hoſanna: it grew ſo familiar, as the very children were perfect in it. The ſumme and ſubſtance whereof (briefly) is no more, but (which we all deſire) that God would ſtill ſave, ſtill proſper, ſtill bleſſe him, that in His name, is come unto us (that is) King David himſelfe, whom all in the houſe, and all of the Houſe of the Lord bleſſe in His name.

Ver. 25.

Mat. 21. 9.

And to very good purpoſe doth he this: for, joy hath no fault, but that it is too ſhort, it will not laſt, it will be taken from us too ſoone. It is ever a barre, in all joy, tolletur à vobis; ſubject to the worme, that Ionas gourd was. It ſtandeth us therefore in hand; to begin with Hoſanna, ſo to joy, as that we may long joy to pray for the continuance, that it bee not taken from us: ever remembring, the true temper of joy, is (exultate in tremore) not without the mixture of ſome feare. For, this day, wee ſee what it is, a joyfull day: we know not (ſaith Salomon) what the next day will be: and if not what the next day, what the next yeare much leſſe. What will come, we know not; what our ſinnes call for to come, that wee know; even that God ſhould call to judgement, if not by fire, by ſomewhat elſe. If it be but for this, it concernes us neerly, to ſay our Hoſanna, that the next yeare be as this. It is our wiſedome therefore, to make the meanes, for the continuance of it, that God would ſtill ſtabliſh the good worke, He this day wrought in us; ſtill bleſſe us, with the continuance of the ſame bleſſings.

Pſal. 2. 11.

Prov. 27. 1.

And

And this that we may doe, not faintly but cheerefully with the lifting up of our ſoules therefore, as far as art or ſpirit can doe it, he hath quickned his Hoſanna, that he he may put ſpirit and life in us, to follow him in it, with all fervor of affection: foure times, twice with Anna, and twice with Na; either of them before, and after; but eight words, and foure of them interjections: all to make it paſſionate; and that ſo, as (in the originall) nothing can be deviſed more forcible: and ſo, as it is hard, in any other tongue, to expreſſe it; which made the Evangeliſt let it alone; and retaine the Hebrew word ſtill. But, this, as neere as I can, it ſoundeth. Now good Lord ſave us yet ſtill, now good Lord proſper us yet ſtill. Be to us as laſt yeare, ſo this, and all the yeares to come; Ieſus a Saviour, yeſterday and to day and the ſame for ever. Verſe 25.

And three things doth he thus earneſtly pray for, and teacheth us to do the like. 1 To ſave, 2 proſper, and 3 bleſſe.

1 To ſave: that ſhould be firſt with us; it is commonly laſt: We have leaſt ſenſe of our ſoules. To ſave us, with the true ſaving health; (it is a word whereof our Saviour Ieſus hath His name) it importeth the ſalvation of the ſoule; properly to that it belongeth, and hath joyned to it Hoſanna in the Goſpell (Hoſanna in excelſis) to ſhew it is an high and heavenly ſalvation. Mat. 21. 9.

2 Then, to proſper. If He but grant us the former alone, to have our ſoules ſaved though without proſperitie, though with the dayes of adverſity, it is ſors ſanctorum, the lot of many a Saint of his, of farre more worth than we: Even ſo, wee are bound, to thanke Him, if, even ſo, we may be but ſaved. But, if he adde alſo proſperitie of the outward, to the ſaving of the inward man, that not ſo much as a leafe of us ſhall wither, but looke what we doe ſhall proſper; and that, whatſoever men of evill counſels do, ſhall not proſper againſt us; if He not onely vouchſafe us Hoſanna in excelſis, but Hoſanna de profundis too, from deepe cellers, deepe vaults, thoſe that dig deepe to undermine our proſperitie; If he adde the ſhaddow of his wings, to ſhelter us from perils, to the light of his countenance, to ſave us from our ſins, then have we great cauſe to rejoyce yet more: and, both with exultemus from without, and letemur from within, to magnifie his mercie, and to ſay with the Prophet, Praiſed be the Lord, that (not only taketh care for the ſafetie, but taketh pleaſure in the proſperitie of his ſervants. Pſal. 1. 3.

3 Laſtly, becauſe both theſe the one and the other; our future ſalvation, by the continuance of His Religion and truth among us, and our preſent proſperitie (like two wals) meet upon the head-ſtone of the corner; depend both, firſt, upon the name of the Lord, and next upon him, that in his name, and with his name, is come unto us (that is) the King: (So, do both the Evangeliſts S. Luke and S. Iohn ſupply; and, where we read, Bleſſed be he, there they read Bleſſed be the King that commeth: ſo that neither of them ſure, unleſſe he be ſafe; that he would bleſſe him, and make him bleſt, that in His bleſſed name, is come amongſt us. The building will be as mount Sion, ſo the corner ſtone be faſt; ſo the two wals, that meet, never fall aſunder. If otherwiſe: but I will not ſo much as put the caſe but as we pray, ſo truſt, it ſhall never be removed, but ſtand faſt for ever. Luke 19. 38. Iohn 12. 15. Pſal. 125. 1.

This then we all wiſh that are now in the Houſe of the Lord, and we that are of the houſe of the Lord, do now and ever, in the Temple and out of it, morning and evening, night and day, wiſh and pray both, that he would continue forth his goodnoſſe, and bleſſe with length of dayes, with ſtrength of health, with increaſe of all honour, and happineſſe, with terror in the eys of his enemies, with grace in the eys of his ſubjects, with whatſoever David, or Salomon or any King, that ever was happie, was bleſſed with; Him, that in the Name of the Lord is come to us, and hath now theſe foure years ſtayed with us, that he may be bleſſed in that name, wherein he is come, and by the Lord, in whoſe Name he is come, many and many yeares yet to come.

And, when we have put this incenſe in our phials, and bound this ſacrifice with cords to the altar faſt, we bleſſe you and diſmiſſe you, to eat your bread with joy, and to drink your wine with a cheerefull heart: for God accepteth your work; your joy ſhall pleaſe Him: this Hoſanna ſhall ſanctifie all the joy, ſhall follow it.

To

To end then. This Day, which the Lord hath thus made ſo marvellouſly; ſo marvellouſly and mercifully; let us rejoyce in the Maker, for the making of it, by His doing on it that deed, that is ſo marvellous in our eyes, in all eyes; returning to the beginning of the Pſalme, and ſaying with the Prophet: O give thankes to the Lord, for he is gracious, &c. Let Iſrael, let the houſe of Aaron, yea, let all that feare the Lord, confeſſe that His mercie endureth for ever.

Who only doth great wonders. Who remembred us when we were in danger; and hath delivered us from our enemies, with a mightie hand and ſtretched out arme. A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE, AT WHITE-HALL, ON THE V. OF NOVEMBER, Anno. Dom. M.DC.VII.

PSAM. CXXVI.

In convertendo Dominus captivitatem Sion, &c.

Verſ. 1. When the Lord brought againe the Captivitie of Sion, we were like them that dreame.

2 Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with joy: Then ſaid they among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them.

3 The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we rejoyce.

4 O Lord bring againe our Captivitie, as the rivers in the South.

THe word Captivitie is enough to give us light, when and why this Pſalme was firſt indited; namely upon their return from the Captivitie. Of which returne of theirs, it may truly bee ſaid, it was one of the greateſt; nay, it was the very greateſt Deliverie that ever God vouchſafed his people. Their eſtate no where ſo miſerable as there; witneſſe the booke of Lamentations. Their caſe never ſo joyfull, as returning thence; witneſſe this booke of Pſalmes. No benefit ſo much celebrated: None, ſo many Pſalmes as it. Divide the whole Booke into foure parts, one fourth part is, for this returne: either directly of ſet purpoſe (as here are fifteen together) or recorded in Pſalmes, though made upon other purpoſe: ſtill, as the greateſt Deliverie that ever they had.

Yet, this I confeſſe unto you, that this Deliverie of theirs (ſuch as it were) falls ſhort of that of ours as on this day, wherewith yet I ſhall be faine to match it. But, this I muſt tell you before hand: to have this of ours fully patterned in all points, we muſt not looke for it; The Scripture hath it not. They had no powder, then, it was not found. If they had had, they would have uſed it, but for the murder of perſons: they knew no other murder. But, to murther all three Eſtates of a Realme at a clap! Facti ſunt ſicut ſomniantes, or rather, Facti non ſunt ſicut ſomniantes, they never dream't of any ſuch. And what then is our caſe, thinke we, that have received from GOD ſuch a Deliverance, as we can finde no match for it?

But well, though theſe Pſalmes of the Captivitie, come not fully home, bee not altogether like ours; yet, becauſe there be none liker, none that come neerer, wee muſt content our ſelves with theſe, and either take our Texts hence, or take none at all.

In taking this then, and applying it to the preſent, there ſhall need but one word to be altered, that is, the word Captivitie. But for it, all elſe would runne very cleere and currant: if we might but change that one word, and inſtead of reading, When the Lord turned away the captivitie of Sion, we might thus read, When the Lord turned away the blowing up of Sion: all beſides, every word elſe, would ſuit well, and keep perfect correſpondencie.

It is true, it was not a captivitie, that was turned away from us. And yet it is hard to ſay, whether it might not have proved to that too: and whether God, in turning it away, did not happily turne away a Captivitie. But, if not a Captivitie, that He turned away from us, was worſe than any Captivitie. This Pſalme ſheweth it; They that are Captives how miſerable ſoever their caſe be, yet have hope of returning, as theſe had and did. But, if this of ours had taken place, we had beene ſure enough for ever returning: we had beene (all) paſt ſinging, In convertendo.

This one word being changed (and that without wrong to the Text, for it is for a greater) all elſe will fall in and follow of it ſelfe. 1. As that of theirs, ſo this of ours, for all the world like a dreame. 2. As they, among the Heathen, then ſaid of them: So, they, of other Nations, now ſaid of us: that GOD had beene our good LORD, for bringing us againe, if not from the captivitie of Babylon, from Babylon (I am ſure) that is, from an horrible and fearefull confuſion, which He turned away from this Land, and from us all.

The Summe and Diviſion.

To ſet then this Pſalme, firſt for them, and then for our ſelves. It is a Pſalme of Degrees (the title is ſo:) and two degrees there bee in it. No new ones, but the uſuall; which we muſt ſtill fall upon, if we deale with the Pſalmes: (All the Pſalmes are reduced to them, even to thoſe two words Halleluja and Hoſanna, Praiſes and Prayers; Halleluja, Praiſes for Deliverance obtained; Hoſanna, Prayers for obtaining the like, upon the like need.) 1 The Halleluja in the foure firſt verſes: 2. The Hoſanna in the laſt. I durſt not ſever them; they proſper not, where they goe not together.

I. The Halleluja or praiſe, hath two degrees, which (as in all other things, ſo in this) make it praiſe-worthy. 1 The Stuffe, and the 2 Workmanſhip.

The Stuffe (or matter) I call, The turning backe the Captivitie of Sion: and two degrees in it: 1. That Sion is ſuffered to goe into Captivitie. 2. That GOD turneth away the Captivitie of Sion. This is Halleluja for the ſtuffe.

And againe, Halleluja for the Workmanſhip. That God did not deliver Sion Vtcunque; but, ſo deliver her, as the manner was memorable. The manner is ſet downe in two degrees (Which two are, as it were, the embroidery of the other. 1. Turned it ſo ſtrangely, as, when it was done, is ſeemed rather a dreame, than a thing done waking, Facti ſumus, &c. 2 Againe, turned it ſo memorably, as the Heathen talked of it, Tum dicebant, &c.

Which Dicebant divides it ſelf, 1 into the ſound amongſt the Heathen (in the ſecond verſe,) and the 1 Eccho of it in Iſrael (in the fourth.)

Then

Then commeth the concluſion (the beſt concluſion of all) Facti ſumus, &c. This their Halleluja.

Their Hallelujа is no ſooner done, but cloſe upon it commeth their Hoſanna. To their knees they get them, and pray Converte Domine. And in this alſo two degrees: [1] Firſt, they pray to turne it. [2] And then, ſo to turne it, as the ſtreames in the South. In the South (that is) the wilderneſſe; liking their Captivitie to a deſart, and their returning to ſtreames of water. And what more needfull, or what more welcome than water in the wilderneſſe? Theſe are the degrees and ſteps, in theirs. The ſame ſteps will we tread in our owne; to ſhew, that we may with good right convert to our owne uſe, this Pſalme In Convertendo. II.

HAllelujah firſt for the worke, then for the work-manſhip: The work is, The Lord turned away the captivitie of Sion. [1] Firſt, of the Captivitie of Sion; [2] Then, of the LORDS turning it.

VER. 1.
I
Hallelujah.
I
1 For the work.
1 The Captivitie of Sion.

The Captivitie of Sion: I aske firſt, why of Sion? why not the captivitie of Ieruſalem, Iuda, Iſrael? Ieruſalem, Iuda, Iſrael, were led away Captives, no leſſe than Sion. They, the greater, and more generall: why not the Captivitie of them; but of Sion? It ſhould ſeeme, there is more in Sion's, than in the reſt, that choice is made of it before the reſt. Why? what was Sion? We know, it was but a Hill in Ieruſalem, on the North-ſide. Why is that Hill ſo honoured? No reaſon in the world, but this; That, upon it, the Temple was built: And ſo, that Sion is much ſpoke of, and much made of, it is only for the Temples ſake. For whoſe ſake it is (even for His Church,) that the LORD loveth the gates of Sion, more than all the dwellings of Iacob. Loveth her more, and ſo her captivitie goeth neerer Him, and her deliverie better pleaſeth Him, than all Iacob beſides. This maketh Sions Captivitie to be mentioned chiefly, as chiefly regarded by GOD, and to be regarded by His. As (we ſee) it was: When they ſate by the waters of Babylon, that which made them weepe, was, When wee remembred thee, O Sion: that their greateſt griefe. That their greateſt griefe, and this their greateſt joy; Lætati ſumus, when newes came, (not ſaith the Pſalme, in domos noſtras, We ſhall goe now every one to his owne houſe, but) in Domum Domini ibimus, Wee ſhall goe to the houſe of the Lord, we ſhall appeare before the GOD of Gods in Sion.

Pſal. 122. 1.

Sion, God loved and favoured high: yet, how deare ſoever Sion is in His ſight, for Sions ſinnes, propter peccata populi mei, ſhe ſometimes is forſaken, and afflicted by him. Though He take not His mercie utterly from her, nor ſuffer His truth quite to faile, yet he viſiteth her offences with the rod, and her deeper tranſgreſſions with ſcourges: and among the reſt, with this ſcourge of Captivitie.

Pſal. 89. 33. 32.

To be plagued at home, in their owne Land, is but a rod in compariſon: Captivitie is a ſcourge, in reſpect of it, and a ſharpe one. To be bereft of all we have, and of (that, which they have, that have nothing elſe) libertie, to be carried into a ſtrange land; to be made bond and thrall to the proud commands of an Enemie; Woe is me for Sion (ſaith Ieremie.) And no man ſhall need but to read his Lamentations only. There is, in particular to be ſeene, the evill of captivitie, how ſharpe a ſcourge it is. The Booke was made for that end.

But, of all Captivities, none ſo evill, as that of Babel. If any other be a ſcourge, that is a Scorpion. In Ægypt, their caſe was more tolerable: their ſoules were free there, howſoever their bodies in Servitude: they might ſerve GOD yet, they were not compelled to fall downe before Iſis or Oſiris. Only, the Captivitie of Babel is the captivitie of ſoules, no leſſe than bodies. There, they muſt fall downe before the great Idol in the field

Dura, or be thrown into the furnace. Babel is the worſt place that is, for Sion to be carried captive to. And this is the firſt degree, Sion is afflicted, and that with Captivitie; with the Captivitie of Babel. Now to In Convertendo Dominus.

Dan. 3. 1, 6.

2 The Lords Turning of it. Tam. 4 9.

They that fell by the ſword (ſaith Ieremie) were in better caſe than they that went into Captivitie, ſave onely that, this poore hope they had left. They might returne again. They might returne, and ſo they did. Sion went into Captivitie; but her Captivitie went not ſo far, but it turnes againe. It is one of the Songs of Sion. Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth up, &c. And againe, Many a time have they afflicted me, &c. that is, many and many times more; but yet, they have not prevailed againſt me finally. Here is a proofe of it. Though brought to Babel, yet not left there; though led into Captivitie, yet reſtored to libertie. There may be ſnares, for her, but the end is, laqueus contritus eſt; there may be bonds, but the end, dirupiſti vincula, Thou haſt broken my bonds in ſunder. Sions captivitie is ſtill turned backe.

Pſal. 129. 1, 2.

Pſal. 124. 7.

Pſal. 116. 16.

But who ſhall turne it? In convertendo Dominus. Cyrus may ſeeme to have done it: But alas, Cyrus is a great Monarch, and they a ſort of poore Captives. Beſides, he is a Heathen man, an Idolater, a ſtranger to them and their Religion, no wayes like to turne, or to be turned; Quis revolvet nobis hunc lapidem, what engine ſhall bring this about? Dominus, the LORD ſhall. For, though the hearts of Monarchs bee as rivers of many ſtreames, yet, In manu Domini cor regis (ſaith a great Monarch) In His hand their hearts be; Et quocunque vult convertet, and he can turne them, as the ſtreames in the ſouth. (This verſe referring to that of Salomon.) It is the LORD then, the great Καρδιοστρέπτης, the great Turner of the greateſt Monarchs hearts, that thus turned Cyrus's heart. Cyrus being turned, his Decree came forth for their returne. A Domino factum eſt iſtud; It was his doing; they ſaw it, they noted it; and they had beene to be noted of great blindneſſe, if they had not noted it. But, note it they did. So they begin one of their Songs, Niſi quia Deus; and againe they repeat it, Niſi quia Deus, if the Lord had not done it, it had not beene done. But for Him, they had beene in Babel, ſtill. Thus much [1] for Sions Captivitie, and [2] the Lords turning: The Lord turned away the Captivitie of Sion. So have yee the worke: Hallelujah for the worke.

Mark. 16. 3.

Prov. 21. 1.

Pſal. 118. 23.

Pſal. 124. 1, 2.

2 Hallelujah. For the workmanſhip, or manner.

And againe, Hallelujah for the Workmanſhip. To eſcape a Captivitie, is enough, it skils not how, howſoever, it is well; thanks be to God. But, it receiveth increaſe, and is made capable of a higher degree, by the Matter: and that greatly. All captivities are grievous; ſpecially, that of Babel: And all returnes joyfull; ſpecially, from thence. Yet is even that made more joyfull, two wayes; ſet higher by theſe two degrees: 1. That it was like a dreame. It is ever a ſigne of a very ſtrange event, when men, at the ſeeing ought, though they be awake, yet think they are not; though they doe not dreame, yet thinke, they are in a dreame. 2. That they among the Heathen talked of it. It is ever a ſigne of a famous accident, when other men (ſpecially, other Nations) ſpeak, and ſpeake magnificè of it.

So ſtrange as like a dreame. 1 Vnlookt for.

Facti ſumus ſicut ſomniantes, We were as it were in a dreame, it came ſo unlook't for. For, ſo come dreames (we know) without looking for: (Men know not, when they goe to bed, what they ſhall dreame of.) And it is a benefit, to have a benefit come, like a dreame, without waiting longer for it.

2 Without labour.

Then, it came without any labour of our parts: That, that commeth in a dreame, commeth to us ſleeping; we doing nothing to it, or toward it, more than if we had beene faſt aſleepe. And, it is a benefit to have a benefit come like a dreame, without paines-taking for it.

3 Beyond hope

But neither of theſe is it: that it was unlaboured for, or that it was unlook't for. But, that it was ſo ſtrange, as no man would ever have looked for it; ſo ſtrange, as well might we dreame of ſome ſuch thing, but (awake) never any ſaw the like. The nature of dreames is ſuch: Men, in dreames, have ſuch ſtrange things appeare to them, as would never come into the mindes of any, that were awake. They ſee ladders ſo long as will reach up to heaven: they ſee the Moone and ſtarres worſhipping them: They ſee men with heads of gold and breſts of ſilver, and I wot not what things: incredible things, things, of the phanſies figuring, but never of the ſenſes apprehending. This maketh things, by all likelihood, to ſeeme like dreames. And ſuch was their caſe, at the coming out of Cyrus's proclamation, for their returne. It was ſo little looked for, that ever it ſhould come; it was ſo aboue all they could hope for, when it did come, that, what with the ſuddenneſſe, and what with the ſtrangeneſſe, for the preſent, it ſeemed to them a dreame of the night, rather than any viſion of the day. Well might they ſay, Facti ſumus, &c.

Gen. 28. 17. 37. 9. Dan. 2. 31, 32.

A dreame it was. To ſpecifie what kind of dreame. Iacob dreamed, and was much comforted with it: Nebuchadnezzar dreamed, and was exceedingly frighted with it. This (here) was of the nature of Iacobs: a comfortable pleaſant dreame: You may ſee by the effects in the ſecond verſe; Tum repletum eſt, &c. And ſure, the impreſſion of the phanſie, no where ſheweth it ſelf more powerfull, than in dreames; Men ſhall be ſo affected, as they ſhall even laugh out, as they ſhall even talke aloud; yea ſo, that they ſhall even wake with it many times. This here was ſuch; Ioyfull, it filled their hearts full of joy; ſo full, as it even brake forth, and ranne over, over into the countenance, Os riſu; over into the tongue, Lingua jubilo. The face is a mirrour, to ſhew, how the minde is affected; The tongue a trumpet, to ſound out the ſecrets of the heart. You might ſee their joy, in their face, as in a mirrour: you might heare it from their tongue, as from a trumpet. A ſigne it was, the Fountaine was full, when both the Ciſternes thus runne over. A p'eaſant dreame. Gen. 28. 15. Dan. 4. 5.

But, what is it for a dreame, to be pleaſant, if it bee not true withall? Nay; there is no more miſerable caſe; than of him that dreameth the pleaſant Ivorie-dreame, and when hee awaketh findes it nothing ſo. Dreames he is at a feaſt, and waketh all hungrie: dreames, hee is rich; and waking, findes nothing in his hands. This was not ſuch; it was per corneam portam, a true one; not to bee let goe for a dreame, for it proved more than a dreame, a reall thing indeed. For, when they came out of their dreame, all the Countrey about rang of it, Tum dicebant, &c. And true withall.

And there can be no better way, to come to a true judgement of what befalleth us, than by dicebant, what other men ſay of it. Men are commonly over-ſenſible of their owne joy: a truer eſtimation would be taken, from them that are no parties to it. Beſt, heare what they ſay.

Eſpecially, if it be not only Dicebant inter homines, but inter Gentes too; if they be not ſingle men, but whole Nations. Their Dicebant is yet a degree further. For, many a deliverance there is, the world never talks of, and yet, great for all that: but, thoſe that fill the eyes and the mouths of whole Nations, muſt needs be prima magnitudinis: and ſo was this then. Notice was taken of this, by thoſe inter Gentes, and no other talke for the time, but of it. This ſheweth, it might well be as ſtrange, as a dreame, but was no dreame indeed.

The heathen were either ſtrangers, and regarded them not; or enemies, and maligned them. No feare, that ſuch (eſpecially, the latter ſort) ſhould dreame too. No; Envie ſleepes not. And waking and ſeeing it; no feare, they will be partiall and confeſſe more than truth. Commonly, their nature is to abate, diminiſh, extenuate: no feare of amplifying at their hands. If they ſay, it is great; it is great indeed. And here, both ſtrangers and enemies confeſſe it; therefore we may be ſure, it was no vulgar or ordinary turning.

And truly, great reaſon they had ſo to ſay; It could be no policie (they ſay) for Cyrus, to ſend them backe. He had them now ſafe, and well broken to ſervice, by ſeventie yeares continuance. They might prove ſlipperie, and revolt; and ſo hee repent his ſending them home. Beſides, he ſent none backe, of all the reſt of his Captives, being (yet) of his owne Religion, which theſe were not. They ſaw (then) no reaſon for it, in the world. Then, to let them goe; and in ſuch ſort to let them goe; with ſo ample a commiſſion: with ſo rich rewards, to build againe: This, when it came to their notice, it made them muſe, it found them talke, it even drew from them this dicebant. So memorable, as the Heathen talked of it

VER. 2. The Sound among the Heathen.

Then ſaid they of the Heathen.] And, what is it they ſaid? It is to the purpoſe. In this (as in many other) the Heathens ſaying cannot be mended. This they ſay: 1 That they were no quotidian, or common things, but great. 2 Then theſe great things they aſcribe not to chance; that they happed not, but were done. 3. Then, done by God himſelfe: they ſee God, in them. 4 Then, not done by God at randome, without any particular aime, but, purpoſely done for them. 5 And yet there is more in magnificavit facere (if we looke well.) For, magna fecit would have ſerved all this: But in ſaying magnificavit facere, they ſay magnifecit illos, ut magna faceret pro illis, He magnified them, or ſet greatly by them, for whom He would bring to paſſe ſo great a work. This, ſaid they among the Heathen.

And it is pitie, the Heathen ſaid it, and that the Iewes themſelves ſpake not theſe words, firſt. But, they were ſo raviſhed with joy at the firſt, as they were to be born with. But now, finding the Heathen ſo ſaying; and finding, it was all but true, they ſaid; they muſt needs find themſelvs bound to ſay at leaſt ſo much: (And more they could not: for more cannot be ſaid.) So much then, and no leſſe than they. And this addeth a degree to the dicebant. That the ſound of it was ſo great among the Heathen, as it made an Eccho even in Iury it ſelfe.

VER. 3. The Eccho of it in Iſrael.

That Eccho then followeth (in the 3. verſe.) The perſon only changed: Nobiſcum, for Cum illis: there's all. And indeed, Sion ſhould have beene much to blame, if the Heathen ſhould ſee thoſe things for great, and God to be the Doer of them, and Sion ſhould not diſcerne them for ſuch. If the Heathen ſhould ſay magnificavit Dominus facere, and Sion ſhould not magnifie Him for this ſo magnificent a worke; if this Confeſſion ſhould even be wrung from the Heathen, and ſhould not come voluntarie from the Children of Sion, whom it more neerely concerned a great deale.

And what, ſhall there be no difference betweene Sions and the Heathens dicebant, but only Nobiſcum? Yes: for though the words be the ſame, there may be oddes in the uttering. God forbid, but Sion ſhould ſay, in another manner key, at the leaſt.

The Concluſion Facti ſumus lætantes.

And yet, there is ſome amends for Sion: the words are not all out the ſame. Here is a hemiſtichium more in Sions; in which they plainly expreſſe the oddes, betweene their affections and the Heathens. This it is; Facti ſumus lætantes: that is, the Heathen ſay it; but rather wondring, than rejoycing at it. They ſay it, becauſe they cannot chooſe but ſay it, it is ſo evident; but they bite the lippe when they have done; they could have beene well content to have ſpared the ſpeech; well content, that God had not done it, that they might not have ſaid it. In a word: they ſay it without a lætantes; but, Sion ſaith it joying, and joyeth in ſaying it: ſaith it, and, in ſaying it, ſay at the end of it, Facti ſumus lætantes, And this (here) is true joy; grounded upon the due conſideration of the matter, by occaſion of the heathens ſpeech. The other (before) was like the laughing in a dreame. But, this, true joy; and in ſigne thereof, it was at the firſt but facti ſumus ſicut ſomniantes; but here, it is facti ſumus (not ſicut, but) verè lætantes, truly joyfull indeed. And this maketh up their halleluja.

VER. 4. II Their Hoſanna. Pſal. 73. 20.

Their halleluja thus performed: they come to their hoſanna ſtraight. And why ſo ſtraight? They were ſicut ſomniantes, ſo they ſay: And, dreames (we know) have this qualitie, they are but ſhort. And they were facti lætantes, and, joy commonly is of the ſame nature, laſteth not much longer than a dreame, but vaniſheth quickly, as a dreame when one awaketh. Dreames, and joyes, as ſoone had, ſo ſoone loſt. That therefore their lætantes prove not ſicut ſomniantes, to keepe their joy waking, this they thinke, their wiſeſt way: No ſooner to make an end of halleluja, but ſtraight to begin their hoſanna; make the next verſe to their thankes for In Convertendo, a petition,

Converte,

Converte. And that to Him, that granted that; to grant this. In convertendo Dominus, Convertte Domine: (that is, Hosanna to Him in the highest.)

Converte Domine: Why how now? But very now, they praised Him for turning it away, and do they now pray Him, to turne it away? How hangs this together: to pray to have that turned, that is turned already? They may seeme to be scarce yet out of their dreame. Not so: These two Converte's, and these two Captivities are not all one. S. Augustine saith well (upon solutis doloribus inferni, Acts 2.) that two manner of wayes, a thing is loosed: 1 Either, after we are already snared; 2 or else before-hand, that we be not snared with it at all. CHRIST loosed those sorrowes, this latter way, which is farre the better way of the twaine. And even so, two wayes is a captivity (or any mischiefe else) turned away: 1 by an after-delivery, when it is come: 2 or by a fore-hand prevention, yet it do come. The Grecians expresse it, by Prometheus and Epimetheus: the Latines, by Anteverta, and Postverta; The Schoole-men, by praeveniendo, and subveniendo: But, prevention is ever the better. Better a good Buckler, to keep off the blow; than a good Plaister, to heale the hurt of it. Better never see Babel, than returne from it. The captivity of the first verse was come, and is now come and gone: Who knoweth, whether there be any other to come? If there be, Converte Domine, turne it away before-hand; take order there never come any more. So, it is plaine, for all the former In convertendo, they may well pray this last too, notwithstanding. They may well pray it; and good reason they have, to pray it. The children of Edom, and the rest of their evill neighbours, that shewed their good-will in this captivity past, are the same men still, still carry the same mindes. No yeare, no day goeth over their heads, but they wish and contrive, to bring another, either captivity, or some mischiefe else, I know not what. Therefore Converte Domine is no more than needs.

1 They pray to turne it.

Psal. 137.7.

Now, as Converte Domine is, what they wish done: Sicut torrentes is, the manner how they wish it done. Turne it, and so turne it, as the streames in the South. By the South, understanding the South climate; on which side, lay Arabia deserta. All, South-ward from them, was nothing but a drie and waste wildernesse. It is of the nature of a wildernesse to be without water. And what streames are there then in the wildernesse? None, but such as they call Land-waters. And how are they turned or brought thither? No other way, than by melting the snow on the great high hils there, which being dissolved by the summer-sun, come downe so plentifully, that all the pooles are filled with water so strongly, that they turne the course of mighty rivers. Their meaning then is: 1. They have as great need of delivery, as the South-climate hath of water. 2. Captivity is as congealed snow, and they frozen fast in it, that they cannot stirre. 3. They would have it turned, but by no violent way, but even onely by thawing and melting the hearts of Princes (Cyrus and the rest) set against them (whose hearts Salomon compareth to these streames:) by that, rather than by any other way. 4. That never was water-streame more welcome to the way-faring man, in the wildernesse, than this shall be to them. For, we read of two manner of turnings they had. 1 One out of Egypt, in violent and tempestuous manner: The sea fled, Iordan was driven back, Pharao was drowned; Sehon and Og slaine; very great adoe there was. 2 And now this, out of Babylon; neither by an armie, nor by maine strength, but by my Spirit (saith the Lord) breathing upon Cyrus, and in milde and gentle manner melting his heart: and there was all. A conversion (not as that of Pharao, but) as this of Cyrus: not, as the rivers of the North; but, as the streames in the South, is it they pray for. So pray they, and so will all pray that are well advised. Thus farre their Hosanna.

Now to alter the property of all this, and to convert it to our owne use: and to shew first, that both this Hallelujah, and then that this Hosanna, will no lesse agree to us, and our Queere (if not more, but certainly more) a review must needs be granted, of all the former points. And in them (there is no remedy, but) we must fall to measuring, that it may appeare there is great oddes, betweene this of ours, and that of theirs. Conſequently, that we are bound to give thanks with another manner of Halleluja, than ever did they. And that, whether we looke to that which was turned away; ours was worſe: to the manner of turning it ſelfe; ours was better: to the means of this turning; ours to be preferred: to the likeneſſe of a dreame, to the dicebant inter Gentes, to the facti ſumus lætantes: in all and every point, we are ſtill beyond them.

The Application.

Our turning and delivery the greater far.

1 For that which was turned away.

That which was turned away, in them, was a Captivity, for terme of yeares: In us, was an utter deſolation: as much odds between them, as betweene lying in priſon, and flying in peeces. Captivity (as we ſee by this) is Vox convertibilis, hath hope to turne againe; utter deſolation being uncapable of in convertendo, paſt all hope or poſſibility of ever returning more.

And what manner of deſolation? For, we may find Captivities to match theirs: For a people to be carried away captive, is no new thing upon earth. But, this deſolation of ours puts downe all that ever were. What ſhould I ſay, but as the Apoſtle of that which paſſeth the ſpeech of all ſpeakers, Oculus non vidit, &c. The like never was ſeene, heard, nor entred into the heart of man.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

2 For the manner of turning.

And our turning, therefore, the better: and not only therefore; but in it ſelfe, ſimply. Two turnings we ſaid there were: [1] By prevention, yer it come: and [2] ſubvention, after it is come; and prevention the better, and that was ours. Theirs was by Poſtverta, light upon them firſt. Ours came not at us at all; and yet, very neare us it came, as neare as could be, not to hurt us; and even then, away it was turned. So much the better (ſhould I think) we will reckon of it. That the blow, or blowing up was turned, and we not hurt; rather than we hurt, and lie long on the Chirurgians hand, and at laſt be cured. That of theirs lay heavy upon them for a long time, yer it was turned away: Seventy yeares full. Ours was turned, in the turning of a hand. And we know, it is a doubling of the pleaſure, to do it at once.

3 For the means.

As in the manner, ſo in the meanes of this turning, we paſſe them farre. In that of theirs, the immediate cauſe of their turning, under GOD, was the turning of Cyrus the Kings heart, which GOD hath in His hand, and turneth as the ſtreames of water. And was not ours ſo too? And yet ſtill, after a more excellent manner. Theirs, a Heathen; ours, a Chriſtian Prince: theirs, a ſtranger; ours, our owne. To the ſtrange turning of whoſe heart, to turne the letter into a ſtrange conſtruction, next to GOD Himſelfe, we may all truly aſcribe our deſtruction then turned away. This for the [1] turning, the [2] manner, and [3] meanes of it.

4 For the likeneſſe to a dreame. Ezra 1. 1.

Now at the time of this turning, if they were ſicut ſomniantes, we were more. 1. They were delivered by a proclamation: proclamations (we know) come not forth, till it be wel on of the day, when the ſtreets are well filled with people to heare them; but never early in the morning. But, the newes of ours came betimes, when a great part of us were not out of our beds, and ſcarce well awake; ſo, it might be affirmed of us literally, we were then in good earneſt, ſicut ſomniantes.

Acts 12. 7.

2. S. Peter was awake, broad awake, when the Angell made his chaines fall off: he clothed himſelfe, ſhod himſelfe, girt himſelf, went thorow three gates one after another, and after that, thorow a whole ſtreet; yet that that happened, was ſo exceeding ſtrange to him, that all this while, he thought he was but in a dreame. Our caſe was S. Peters for all the world; we were truly delivered, and yet many of us got up, and were fully ready, yer we could get our ſelves ready to believe, but that we did ſtill Viſum videre: Sicut ſomniantes, & ecce vigilantes.

3. They had ſenſe of their captivity, their minde ran on it; the more their mind ran on it, the more like to dreame of it. We had not ſo much; it was the further end of our thought, and therefore more like a dreame, more unlooked for.

4. They were not faſt aſleepe, they did ſomewhat toward their delivery; with long, often, and earneſt prayer; they did ſolicite GOD; they and their Prophets for them. We prayed not, we knew no cauſe to pray: nothing at all did we to it or toward it, it ran into our nets, while we were on ſleep.

5 For the joy of the dreame.

Shall I ſay any thing of the joy of the dreame? This I may: that we paſſe them in that that. They were in a ſtrange Country; they muſt looke more demurely, they muſt ſpeak more ſparingly. We were in our owne, we might do it the more freely, both in countenance and ſpeech. And for the time, ſo we did.

And will ye now ſee, we paſſe them in dicebant. Theirs was dicebant; but of ours, not onely dicebant, but Scribebant and excudebant; ſaid it, writ it, and printed it. And what, as this here, Magna? Nay, Magna, Et à ſeculo inaudita; ſuch, ſo great, as the like was never heard before. 6 For Dicebant.

This for dicebant. And for inter Gentes, we paſſe them there. For, who talked of theirs? a handfull of nations, in compariſon; but thoſe that bordered about. They in effect ſay as much: Not Gentes, not all; but inter Gentes, ſome among them. A ſmall part of the World, compared to ours: more tongues a great deale went to our Dicebant. I may ſafely ſay, Quæ regio in terris, What land is there, whither the fame of it is not gone, where it is not ſpoken of? and we by meanes of it renowned and made famous over all the earth, even to Turks and Infidels (for, thither alſo it is come, how GOD hath dealt with us.) Yea, even our very Enemies themſelves (I doubt not) when it was told in Gath, and publiſhed in the ſtreets of Aſcalon, even in Rome it ſelfe, even they in the Conclave, even the Pope himſelfe, helped to make up this dicebant; though not aloud that their voice may be heard in the ſtreets, yet among themſelves, in private, were forced to ſay as much: that, the greatneſſe of ours received witneſſe from the mouth of our enemies. 7 For Inter Gentes.

Our dicebant is double to theirs then, and ſo is our facti ſumus lætantes: There is, as a joy for our owne delivery; ſo likewiſe another joy, for the fall of our enemies: they had the former only: We, both former and later. For, in theirs, they, to whom they had beene Captives, let them goe, and there was all; and they were glad of it: but they of Babylon became not Captives to Sion. But in ours, not onely the Captivity was turned away; but we led captivity captive, which is the greateſt Joy of all. They that meant ours, inſtead of ours, found their own: were taken in their owne turne, became captives themſelves; and as they intended, our members ſhould, ſo theirs (now) rent, and ſtretched one from the other. So, in every point, they fall ſhort of us; and we, in all and every, are ſtill beyond them. 8 For facti ſumus lætantes.

And now let me a little ſtay, and ſay as much for our ſelves, as for the Iewes. If we ſhall but enter into our owne hearts for a moment, we cannot but thinke thus: What, doth this our deliverance draw thus much, even from other nations, that are our enemies? Why then (belike) it muſt be ſome extraordinary great one. Why (me thinks) it toucheth not them, this; it toucheth us: it is we, that were delivered and not they: and, ſhall they ſay all this of us, and ſhall not we ſay as much of our ſelves? Shall we come behind them, or rather, ſhall we not come behind them, ſince they are got before in this Dicebant? The words we cannot mend, they are ſo full; Great were the things, and very Great: they chanced not, they were done; done by GOD, He was the Doer; He the Doer of theſe great things, and we the people, for whom theſe great things were done: And ſo, a people highly magnified by Him in His mercy; and ſo, a people deeply bound to magnifie Him for all His mercies, but for this, above all, that all the World ſpeaks of.

And, though we cannot, with other words than they; yet can, and will (I truſt) with farre other affections. GOD forbid, but facere nobiſcum ſhould be ſounded in an higher key, than facere cum illis. In dangers (I am ſure) it is; never any mens dangers touch us as our owne: Never they from the ſhore, cry ſo heartily, Lord ſave them, that they ſee in danger of drowning upon the Sea; as they in the ſhip, themſelves cry, Lord ſave us. GOD forbid, but we that felt it, ſhould take up our Hallelujah in a higher ſtreine than they, that were but lookers on; heard of it, and ſpake of it, but were not partakers as we were of it.

Let this be the difference: that we ſay the ſame, that they ſay: but they ſay, Magnificavit Dominus facere cum illis, and facti ſunt gementes; and we, Magnificavit Dominus facere nobiſcum, & facti ſumus lætantes.

And, ſince our caſe doth ſo many wayes ſurpaſſe this of the Iewes, in all the points along;

along; our Halleluja muſt needs do ſo too. It is but reaſon I will require. Theirs (here) went no further, than their mouth and their tongue, Os & lingua: more they mention not. But, in a certaine place, the Pſalmiſt, when he would expreſſe a far greater joy, thus he ſaith, All my bones ſhall ſay, Lord who is like thee? This, I think reaſon, that ſeeing our bones ſhould have been ſcattered in every corner like as chips, when one heweth wood on the earth; (ſhould have, but were not:) Not only our mouth and tongue (as theirs;) but our very bones ſhould ſay, Halleluja, Lord who is like thee, who haſt rid us from a danger, the like whereof never was? I add further: that, if we and our bones would hold our peace, the ſtones ſhould crie it. For, timber-work, and ſtone-work, and all had flyen in peeces (we know) then; even (as Abakuk ſpeaketh) that the beame out of the timber work, and the ſtone out of the wall, may cry one to another; the beame to the ſtone, Halleluja; and the ſtone, to the beame againe, Halleluja, to Him, that hath kept them faſt, and not made Ieruſalem as an heape of ſtones. Even they, to cry: Every bone to have a tongue; and every ſtone and beame to have a tongue, to put downe theirs, and to make our dicebant, our Halleluja, out magnificavit the lowder.

Our Hoſanna.

And now, ſhall we ſtay here and end with Halleluja, and cut off Hoſanna quite? I dare not: I ſeldome ſee Halleluja hold long, if Hoſanna forſake it, and ſecond it not. For I ask; What, are they all dead, that ſought our lives? Say, they are: Is the divell dead too? If he be not, it skils not, if they were. His powder-mill will ſtill be going; he will ſtill be as buſie, as ever, in turning over all his devices, in turning himſelfe into as many ſhapes as Proteus, and all to turne us to ſome miſchief. The more it concernes us, not to be too long at our Halleluja, but, when we have done it, before we ſtirre, to take up our Hoſanna; not to forget it in any wiſe. After we have praiſed Him for in convertendo, that ſo it is: to returne, to our Converte Domine; that ſo it may long be. The wheele will ſtand, it will not turne on ſtill, without it.

Then, in the perſon of humble ſupplicants cry we all, Hoſanna to the higheſt, and Converte Domine, to Him, that is Lord of Ezekiels wheeles, and of all their converſions. The rather, for that there is no one deſigne, hath more laid open and let us ſee the defects and weaknes of all humane wiſdome and watchfulneſſe, than this. There wanted neither, but it went beyond both. No, nor any deſigne hath let us ſee, how dangerous and undiſcoverable plots, the Devill is able to poſſeſſe his limbes withall. All to let us ſee, what need we have, to turne to Him, with our Converte, that can ſee what they do at mid-night, in the Vault, as well as what is done at noone-day, on the houſe top: can ſee, and diſcover; diſcover it, and turne it away. That He would, as many as are comming this way, turne them all away.

Ezek. 1. 15.

And turne them all away, by the way of prevention; not ſuffering them to light on us (as theirs did) and then after remove it; but averting it, before it come; leſt after, it be too late.

And (that we forget not Sicut) that He turne it by ſuch, and no other means, than the ſtreames in the South; that is, with no great adoe: not, in boiſterous or rigorous meanes, as that of Ægypt; but, in milde and calme manner, as this of Babel, and as our owne. By the ſame meanes ſtill; even by the turning of the heart, which is in His hands; which as the ſtreames in the South He now did turne; and ſo ſtill and ever may. That, from that fountaine (ſtill) may flow the ſtreames, that may give us refreſhing in time of our need. That, if it be his bleſſed will, that may ever be the Sicut, as now it was.

And now, turne our captivity, ô Lord, paſt and to come; turne both; that, as the ſtreames of the South, they may melt, fall away, and come to nothing; that our future dangers may ſtill be ſicut ſomnia, ever as dreames, but never viſions: that, as we have been now matters of praiſe to the Nations, for our former delivery, ſo we never become a by-word to them, for any after-calamity: but that, our concluſion may be ever, facti ſumus lætantes, ſtill in joy, and this joy may never be taken from us; that we ſtill may land and magnifie thy glorious Name, evermore praiſing thee and ſaying, Magnificetur Dominus. The Lord hath magnified His power and goodneſſe toward us, this day, for which His holy Name be magnified, this day, and for ever.

A SER.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE,

AT WHITE-HALL,
On the Fifth of NOVEMBER,
Anno Dom. MDCIX.

LUKE Chap. IX. Ver. LIV, LV, LVI.

Cum vidiſſent autem Diſcipuli, &c.

And when His Diſciples Iames and Iohn ſaw it, they ſaid: Lord, wilt thou that we command, that fire come downe from heaven, and conſume them, even as Elias did?
But Jeſus turned about and rebuked them, and ſaid: Ye know not of what Spirit ye are:
For the Sonne of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them.

WE have here, in this Text, a whole towne of Samaria, in danger of being deſtroyed; of being deſtroyed, by fire: and they ſcaped it narrowly: ſo neare it was, there lacked but dicimus, a word ſpeaking. Of the Diſciples, ſome were very forward in the motion: but, Christ rebuked them: and the end was, the towne was ſaved. And was not this, under the termes of Iames and Iohn, and a towne of Samaria, our very caſe, this day foure yeare? We were then in danger of deſtroying; and deſtroying by the ſame element, fire; and ſo neare it we were, it would have been done as ſoon, as a letter burnt. There were then, that forwarded theſe fire-works, with their dicimus, all they could: and they ſaid, they were Diſciples of Jesus's ſociety. But Jesus

ſhewed Himſelfe, to be (in heaven) of the ſame minde, He was, on earth. And as He was then better, to this towne, than His Diſciples; ſo, to us He was better, than the Fathers of His Society, and rebuked them too: and bleſſed be GOD, as the Text ends, ſo did the matter; in Non perdere, ſed ſalvare: none deſtroyed, all ſaved.

Finding here theſe words [Non perdere] in the Text, which amount to as much as Ne perdas, it brings to my minde, that this Text will ſecond well David's Ne perdas. As, when time was, we had David's Ne perdas, to ſave a King: ſo, here we have now the Son of David's (CHRISTS) Ne perdas, to ſave (a towne in the Text; but with us) an Aſſembly more worth than Samaria, and all the townes in it.

This Ne perdas of CHRIST, beſide the Sabbath it ſelfe, is to us (this day) matter of a ſecond Sabbath: and ſo, this (like that in the Goſpell) δευτεροπρωτῳ, a ſecond beſides the firſt, two Sabbaths in one; wherein, the voice of praiſe and thankſgiving is here, and is all over the Land, for the happy non perdere, ſed ſalvare, of this day.

Luke 6. 1.

The Summe. The whole Text is a queſtion, upon a Caſe: the Caſe, this. CHRIST was journeying from Galilee, to Ieruſalem: Being in that countrey upon His way, He ſent to this towne, to take up lodging: No lodging would be had; a generall reſtraint; no man to receive Him: the quarrell, becauſe His face was toward Ieruſalem; would not worſhip with them, in their mount. Upon this Caſe, this queſtion: Whether this towne, for not receiving CHRIST, upon pretence He was not of their Religion, might not be conſumed? Or make the Caſe (if you will) blowne up with fire. Some little difference there is, and but little: Vis, dicimus deſcendat (ſay they;) Vis, facimus aſcendat (ſay ours:) deſcendat, or aſcendat, both end, in conſumet eos, deſtruction of them and us. In this queſtion, we ſhall divide CHRIST and His company. For, of them, two here named were ready to do it, and therefore reſolve, it might be done. But CHRIST ruleth the Caſe, for the Towne, that it ought not to be done; No, not for this quarrell, Non receperunt eum; No not upon theſe parties, Samaritans; No not by that means done by miracle.

Verſe 53.

It was an errour (this) of the Diſciples; we ſee it plaine, by Neſcitis: but, of it may well be ſaid, that Gregory ſaith of another of theirs, O ſalutaris error, qui tatius mundi ſuſtulit errorem! A bleſſed errour it was; for, by it the world was rid of the like errour, ever after. Rid of the errour of this day: What CHRIST anſwered in this Caſe, He would have anſwered in ours, à fortiori; If not a poore Towne, not ſuch an Aſſembly. If not, by a ſupernaturall and miraculous; not, by an unnaturall, and monſtrous act. If not, for Himſelfe; not for Saint Peter. So that, this dayes caſe determined here by CHRIST, before ever it was propounded: and determined quite contrary, by JESUS, to His Diſciples, then; or to His Society, of late. We are all much bound to S. Luke, for recording it, or to the HOLY GHOST rather, for inſpiring him, ſo to do. For, ſo long as this Verſe ſhall ſtand in this Goſpell, it will ſerve for a reſolution to this queſtion. Whether upon pretence of religion, CHRIST will allow, the Iew ſhould blow up the Samaritane? Upon non receperunt eos, any of His Diſciples may do that, which they (here) would have done? This rebuke here of theſe, will reach to all undertakers in the ſame kinde. This Non perdere ſed ſalvare, ſaves all our Townes, Cities, and States, from conſuming by fire, from any of CHRISTS company.

The Diviſion. To paſſe then to the entreaty. In the former verſe, there is a Motive, and a Motion. 1 The Motive in theſe: And when His Diſciples, Iames and Iohn, ſaw this. I. The Motion in theſe: They ſaid, LORD, wilt thou that we, &c. 1 Somewhat they ſaw, to move them: and what they ſaw, is in the verſe before; Non receperunt Eum: CHRIST'S ſuffering repulſe; and for no other cauſe, but becauſe His face was to Ieruſalem-ward: that is, were not affected, as they were in religion. 2 The Motion, 1 to have the Towne deſtroyed for it: 2 deſtroyed by fire: 3 by fire from heaven: 4 from heaven, onely by dicamus, ſpeaking a word onely: and 5 this, upon warrant, Sicut fecit Elias, Elia's example.

Verſe 53.

II.

In

In the latter, CHRIST'S cenſure. Firſt, He giveth no leave, nor liking any way to the motion. 1 Magiſter, vis dicimus (ſay they:) ſed, Magiſter non vult dicere. 2 So farre from that, as He rebukes them, that moved it. The rebuke of the movers, is a diſlike of the motion. 3 Rebukes them not, for ſome one point, or circumſtance in it, but even for the whole, for moving to Him, any ſuch thing. 4 Nay, Hee goeth further: likes not the motion; nor likes not the ſpring it comes from. 5 In His rebuke, tells them, Neſcitis, they are much miſtaken: miſtaken themſelves, and miſtake Him, both. Themſelves, to move any ſuch matter: Him, to move it, to Him: it being neither meet for them, to move; nor Him, to grant. Them, to move: for, they were of another ſpirit, if they could hit on it. Him, to grant: For, He came to another end than either to heare, or yeeld to motions of that nature: tels them they are not of Elias's ſpirit, but of His, if they be His Diſciples; and ſo muſt come as He came, Non perdere, ſed ſalvare. III.

But (becauſe we come not now to learn only; but to give thanks, as the duty of the Day requireth) after this, we will lay the two caſes together, caſe by caſe; this of the Day, to this in the Text: by which, it will eaſily appeare (I doubt not) that we have as great cauſe every way, of joy, and thankſgiving; nay, of the twaine, the greater, for the happy Ne perdas, Chriſt's Ne perdas, of this day.

OR yer we come to the motion, let us begin with that, that was the beginning of all this quarrell; that is, Diſſent in Religion, between the Samaritan, and the Iew. We ſee the fruit of it here, and what ſpirit it maketh men of. On the one ſide. Be they Iewes, go they to Ieruſalem? let them have neither meat, drink, nor lodging; (that is to ſay) ſtarve them. On the other: Be they Samaritans, Sectaries? pitie of their lives; put fire to them, burne them, blow them up. Mutuall and mortall hatred breaking forth upon every occaſion. The woman of Samaria expreſſeth it, by Non co-utuntur, They uſe not, one ſide the other. She might even as well have ſaid, co-abutuntur, they abuſe each the other; ſo they doe, forgetting humanity and divinity too, on either part. Here is the fruit: this, the ſpirit it breedeth. And theſe two, the Samaritan, and the Iew, they made not an end of this, till it made an end of them. Look in Ioſephus, you ſhall ſee in the dayes of Claudius, (Cumanus then Deputy) the very like quarrell to this (here) upon the very ſame occaſion, taken wholly by the Zelotæ, and purſued hard, opened the way to the Iewes wars, which never ended, till the utter rooting out and deſolation of them both. Thus it was: and thus it will be: and by this wee ſee, how neceſſary Chriſt's pax vobis is; and the Peace-maker, that could make the peace, how bleſſed he ſhould be! bleſſed here, and bleſſed everlaſtingly. I. The Motive. Iohn 4. 9. Iohn 20. 26. Matth. 5. 9.

But, let me tell you this withall: this Spirit was not then, in all; neither all the Deſciples, nor all the Samaritans, Some there were, on both ſides, more moderately affected. The Diſciples (I doubt not) did all of them (the other ten, too) much diſlike this diſcourteſie offered Chriſt: yet, all cried not for fire: Two onely, theſe two only of the twelve. On the other ſide; the Samaritans neither, all were not thus inhumane. Though this Towne received Him not, it is ſaid (in the laſt verſe) they went to another Towne, and there he was received. So all, neither all the Diſciples thus ſpirited; not all the ſonnes of thunder; ſome the ſonnes of raine, as Bartholmew is interpreted: nor all the Countrey of Samaria; God provided better, for both. All had gone to a generall combuſtion, if all had been of this deſtructive ſpirit: and all did goe, when thoſe ſpirits gate the upper hand. Verſe 56. Mark. 3. 17.

And for their comfort, that are ſuch, this: that Our Saviour CHRIST was none of the Zelotæ, but ſhewed Himſelfe on that ſide, that enclined to humanity and Iohn 4. 7. peace. There was no fault in Him. It was ſtill His deſire co-uti Samaritanis, to uſe and be uſed by them, He would have had water, and asked it of the woman of Samaria: Sent His Diſciples to that Towne, (there) to buy meat; and now, to this Town here, to take up lodging: ſhewed Himſelfe (ſtill) willing, to breake downe this partition-wall. In this very journey, after this repulſe here, yet He healed (among others) a Luk. 17. 16. Leaper, yea, though a Samaritan. Yea, ſo favourable that way He was, and ſo ready to be uſed, as He was counted and called a Samaritan for His labour. Well then, let Iohn 8. 48. this Towne, and theſe two Diſciples pleaſe themſelves, in their conſuming zeale: that other Towne, in the laſt verſe, and the other tenne were in the right. CHRIST was in the right (I am ſure:) and it is ſafe for us, that the ſame minde bee in us, that was in CHRIST IESUS. And ſo now to the Motion: But firſt, to the Motive, And when they ſaw, &c.

Let me ſay this, for St. Iames and St. Iohn; They ſaw enough, to move any to indignation. A great indignitie it is, that, which is done by common courteſie, to every ordinary traveller (harbour for a night) to deny that, to any: Omni animantium Verſe 58. generi pabulum & latibulum, fodder and ſhelter, they are due to all living creatures by the law of nature. Within a verſe after, Chriſt ſaith: Vulpes foveas habent, &c. Not to allow a man, ſo much, as every Fox is allowed, a hole, for his head; a very great inhumanity, to any: who could chooſe, but be moved?

2. And if to deny this, to any were too much: it received increaſe, by the perſon. It was Chriſt, that was thus repelled: of whoſe well uſing, it ſtood them upon, to be jealous; and not to ſhew themſelves cold, in putting up any diſgrace offered to their Maſter. We muſt needs allow their zeale, in their Maſters quarrell.

3. And, when was this? For, that circumſtance addes much, here. It was even then, when He was newly come down from the Mount, from His transfiguration: immediately upon that, came this. Him whom a little before, they had ſeene glorified from Heaven; to ſee him now thus vilified upon earth, would it not move any?

4. And, who were they that did it? A pelting country-towne; and they in it, a ſort of Samaritan-Heretikes, whom the world were rid of; at whoſe hands, who could endure to ſee him thus uſed? Comming from hatred of Hereſie, how can it chooſe but be a good motion?

5. And now, why was it, they did Him this diſgrace? For no other cauſe, but for His Religion: becauſe His backe was to their Mount, and His face to Ieruſalem. And here, zeale is in his prime; Never ſo plauſible, as when it hath gotten Religion for his pretence, and the Catholike cauſe for his colour; then they may ſet fire on the Towne. Put theſe now together. [1] A barbarous indignity, harbour for a night denied: and [2] denied Chriſt: [3] Chriſt ſo late in all His glory: [4] and that by a ſort of Hereticks: [5] and only, for that He was well affected in Religion. The caſe is home: when they ſaw this, it moved them to make a Motion. Never talke of it: the motion cannot bee miſliked; ſpecially comming commended by the Movers, two of His Diſciples: and none of the meaneſt of them, two Pillars (as Saint Paul calleth them) and he, whom Galat. 2. 9. Iohn 21. 7. IESUS ſo loved, one of the two.

II. The Motion.

We ſee, what moved them. Now, let us ſee what they move, and upon what warrant. They move to have them deſtroyed, by fire, from Heaven. Their warrant, ſicut fecit Elias: whom they had ſeene a little before in the mount, and who (they are ſure) would never have endured it.

In their motion (me thinkes) two things they take for granted: [1] one, that deſtroyed they muſt bee: no leſſe puniſhment ſerve. [2] The other, that it ſhould bee by fire. They make no queſtion of theſe two, nor ſo much as conſult with Chriſt of them; [1] whether it be meet they were deſtroyed; [2] then, whether fire, were not a fit kind of death for ſuch. They runne away with theſe two, and paſſe ſentence upon them. Die they muſt: die they muſt, and then limit the kinde; being hereticks, beſt even burne them and make no more adoe.

They

They onely adviſe with CHRIST about the meanes, whence, they will have their fire, and how. Whence, from heaven: how, by dicimus. And hitherto, the caſe like. Both, to be deſtroyed: both, by fire: both, upon one pretence, they and we. Now, they breake company, IESU's Diſciples, and IESU's Society. For, when it comes to the meanes, IESU's Diſciples will take no indirect courſe: doe it, like Diſciples, or not at all. They will goe to work, on GOD's Name: call it downe, not conjure it up: from heaven, His owne ſphere; not from any infernall place, not rent the earth to bring it up. S^t. Iohn (as an Eagle) flyes up to the clouds: not (like a Mold-warpe) creepes into a vault, to doe it. De cælo do it, like Prophets; not, like incendiaries, fetch fire the wrong way.

The like may bee ſaid, of Dicimus: not, from heaven, by any optike inſtrument (as ſome had, before that time, fired whole navies;) no, but only by Dicimus, ſaying the word and no more. No powder, but from the clouds: no match, but their tongue: No Vis fodimus, no pickaxe to digge: nor boats to carry, nor traines to kindle it: but, Vis dicimus, by way of miracle, or not at all. This, the motion. Now to the Warrant.

A good Warrant will doe well. CHRIST without it (they know) likes of nothing done. The quo Warranto (to winne CHRIST to be willing, to obtaine His fiat) they alleage, one would thinke a good one: [1] Sicut fecit; ſo, no noveltie; a preſident for it: [2] and ſicut fecit (no leſſe Prophet, than) Elias. They had ſeene him but lately: they did the more eaſily call him to minde. Moſes they ſaw then too; but, they could not ſerve themſelves of him. He was taken out of the water; No good ſicut for them, that were about fire workes. And he was the meekeſt man on the earth: and it was no meeke matter; and ſo he no meet man, for the purpoſe they were about. Elias, is Scripture as well as he: the authoritie of ſo great a Prophet is enough, to doe no more than he did, upon like occaſion. Nay, not like; here, the occaſion is greater: behold Plus quàm Elias, a greater than Elias, ſuffereth diſgrace here; and therefore ſicut Elias is but reaſonable. And here againe, our motioners will fall ſhort too. For, if the motion to CHRIST had beene Vis fodimus? whom would they have alleadged, whoſe example or authoritie, ſicut fecit? Who, who ever did the like? Which of the Prophets, or Patriarchs? Their motion muſt have beene without a ſicut fecit.

1 The warrant.

Exod.2.5.

Num.12.3.

For the matter, all is one (ſaith Sanders) all one. Elias, when he commanded fire from heaven, might even as well have commanded any on earth: runne upon them, runne them thorow; had as great power over the mettals on earth, as over the Elements in the skie. And it is like enough, if Sanders had lived till Anno Domini MDCV. and had beene conſulted with, he would have ſaid ſtraight: All one, Elias might as well have bid put fire under the Towne, from beneath; as let fire fall on the Towne, from above. But, by his leave, there is great oddes betweene theſe. For firſt, Elias muſt do, as his Commiſſion was to doe it, from heaven: He might not inter-line his Commiſſion, and put in, by mettals, or Gun-powder, or what he liſted. And againe: who ſees not, Eliah's fire, and Samſon's Foxes are not all one? GOD's arrowes (as lightning from heaven) and theſe tela ignita Satanæ, Satan's traines and fire-workes, from under the ground. In one, the hand of GOD muſt needs bee: in the other the paw of the Devill, the malice of man, the fury or treachery or forlorne creatures may have no place. No ſuch authority, no ſuch feare to touch the conſcience, as the act of God hath; therefore, that is not ſicut Elias. And laſtly, if it were, yet is, nothing gained by it: Chriſt repeales it by and by; and forbids in this, either the act or ſpirit of Elias.

Iudg.15.4.
Pſal.18.14.
Ephes.6.16.

But now, they that ſay thus (not Magiſter dicito tu; but) Magiſter vis dicimus nos; feele, in themſelves (belike) no lacke of ſtrength. The Cardinall cannot ſay of them, Id non fuit, quia deerant vires, that was not done, becauſe there wanted force. So that, if after, they loſt any of their due, it was not, becauſe they lacked power, to maintaine it. S^t. Paul denieth it flatly: Having (ſaith he) in a readineſſe, vengeance againſt all diſobedience. Had it; had it, in a readineſſe; and, againſt all diſobedience. And ſure, they

2 Cor.10.6.

Acts 13.11,5,5. that could thus doe, call fire from Heaven; ſtrike Elimas blinde; ſtrike Ananias ſtarke dead, in an inſtant; need not loſe their intereſt, which they had (forſooth) in this ſame temporall dominion, for lacke of ſtrength. Now, it is well knowne, it was the caſe, here in the Text: Diſcipulus potuit, ſed Magiſter noluit. It was, for want of vis, this in the Text: Vis, of Volo, of will in Chriſt: not, for want of vis, or vires, power in them. It went not, by vires aderant, vel deerant: It went, by Magiſter vis; Chriſts Will was wanting, and nothing elſe. That was their caſe (here:) who therefore (becauſe two things goe to the act, 1 their power, and 2 Chriſts will) howſoever they felt their owne power, and themſelves able to doe it, yet would not doe it, on their own heads, without His privitie, or leave: and ſo now, they aske it; Magiſter, vis dicimus. By which very manner of propounding it, in this confident ſtyle, it ſeemeth, little doubt they made to carry it cleere; made full reckoning of Chriſts Volo, and that Hee would be moved with their motion.

III. Chriſts cenſure and rebuke of them.

And with their motion, He was moved; for, it is ſaid, He turned with it: but, it was, the wrong way. At the turning, it may be thought, they looked for ſome good turne; that Chriſt ſhould have commended them, and ſaid: I con you thanks, I ſee you have care of my credit; you are even worthy for it, to ſit one on my right hand, the other on my left, for ſhewing your ſelves my Champions: your motion is good, forward with it.

But, it falls out, His turning is the wrong way: He turned on the left ſide, To rebuke them. This Chriſt did. Now I will tell you, what He ſhould have done. For according to the new taken up reſolution, of the grave Fathers of the ſociety, He ſhould have taught them firſt, to take a paire of ballances, and weighed, whether the good that would enſue would over-weigh the loſſe of the towne: If it would, up with it and ſpare not. That it would certainly. For, it would ſtrike ſuch a feare (the burning of this Towne) into all the Townes about, that Chriſt ſhould never after want receiving: and it would ſalve Chriſts reputation much, who had been though too great a favourer of theſe Samaritans: and it would be much for His credit, that He had Diſciples could doe as much as ever could Elias.

But, CHRIST never ſtands weighing theſe: but, for all the parties were Samaritans, parties not to bee favoured: for all it is made His quarrell, non Eum: for all their meanes ſhould be by miracle, which cannot be miſliked: for all this, turnes and rebukes them. Never thinkes the motion, worth the anſwering, as being evill ex totâ ſubſtantiâ: but, rebukes them for moving it, rebukes the ſpirit, it came from: and rebukes them of ignorance of their owne ſpirit; Yee know not, what ſpirit yee are of. As much to ſay as, If yee did, yee would make no ſuch motions: that you doe make any ſuch, it proceeds from Neſcitis. That, would be marked. They are in ignorance; and the worſt ignorance (of themſelves) that move for fire. They knew not, what ſpirit they are of; but, whatſoever it is, a wrong ſpirit it is; for, here it is rebuked, by Chriſt.

Matth.20.23. Iohn 4.22. Rom.10.2.

That which Chriſt rebuketh is, Neſcitis; that is their fault: There is no word, on which his rebuke can fall, but that. It can be no good motion, that comes from Neſcitis. For, from Neſcitis commeth no good; without knowledge, the ſoule it ſelfe is not good. Neſcitis quid petatis; No good Prayer: Adoratis quod neſcitis, no good worſhip; and ſo ignorant devotion, implicite faith, blinde obedience, all rebuked. Zeale, if it be not ſecundùm ſcientiam, cannot be ſecundùm conſcientiam; matter of conceit, it may be; of conſcience, it cannot be. It is but κακοζηλία, and κακοζηλίαν is not to be allowed (we ſee) no, not in Chriſts owne cauſe.

2 For Neſcitis cujus ſpiritus. Prov.16.2.

And, it is not every ignorance, this: not, of the act, but of the ſpirit, Hee chargeth: which is more. For, Spirituum ponderator Deus, GOD weighes the ſpirit: men looke to the acts; He, to the ſpirit: therefore, trie the act; but, the ſpirit, rather.

We

We may be deceived in any act, if we know not the ſpirit, it comes from. One and the ſame act proceeding from diverſe ſpirits, good for one; for another, not ſo. Therefore, Probate ſpiritus is ever good counſell; and diſcretio ſpirituum, a principall part of knowledge. 1 Iohn 4.1. 1 Cor. 11.10.

And if this import us, to doe in other mens ſpirits, not to be deceived in them; much more in our owne: that we deceive not our ſelves, which is the third degree. Neſcitis, cujus ſpiritus; cujus vos; the foule elench of all, ab ignoratione proprii ſpiritus, to fall into this fallax. For indeed, many blinde actions come from men, by reaſon of ignorance, of this third. And this we are to looke to the rather, for that we ſee two ſo great Apoſtles, like to precipitate themſelves into a bloudy act, for miſtaking this point. 3 For Neſcitis cujus ſpiritus vos.

1. There are (ſure) many Neſcitis, they were in. Elias (firſt) did not that, they would doe: that, is one. His fire took hold of none but Delinquents; every one as deepe in the ſame fault, as another. Here is a great many women and children in the towne, not acceſſory to this. God would not ſuffer the wicked and innocent to periſh together, no not in Sodome; would not ſuffer Ninive to be deſtroyed, becauſe there were in it many, that knew not their right hand from their left. This did not Elias. Gen. 18.23. Iohn 4.11.

2. Then, it was but quod fecit Elias; not, ſicut: there is another. For, what Elias did, he did by ſpeciall inſpiration, had a particular Commiſſion, and (as it were) a Privie Seale for it. And, that we muſt ever diſtinguiſh, in the Prophets, when they proceed by their generall calling (therein we may follow them:) and when an act is executed, and done by them, by immediate warrant: for ſuch warrant paſſes not the perſon, no precedent to be made of it. Elſe, without their revelation, wee may doe quod fecit Elias, and not Sicut. And, that is a great Neſcitis, and doth much harme: for many a lewd attempt, it is ſought; and, if they get it once over their heads, they think they are ſafe. For killing of Kings, Sicut fecit Ehud: of Queenes, Sicut fecit Iehoiada: for rebelling, Sicut Libna. No, no: Quod fecit, not ſicut fecit; what they did, they doe: as they did, they doe not. Iudges 3.21. 2 King. 11.20.

3. But, if it were Sicut fecit too, it would not ſerve; It is a Neſcitis ſtill; and this is our Saviour Chriſts, directed to their allegations of Elias. I obſerve, they aske of the act; and Chriſt anſwers of the Spirit. So that, Sicut fecit Elias, is not enough; is but a weake warrant: you muſt be of his Spirit, as well as doe his act. His Sicut will not beare your act, unleſſe you have his ſpirit, too. It is not enough to ſay, thus did Elias, unleſſe you adde, I am of the ſame ſpirit.

4. Then, it remaines, they muſt ſay, they are of Elias's ſpirit; and into ſome ſuch phanſie (it ſeemes) they were fallen: but, that, is another Neſcitis. Why, what harme is that? Elias's ſpirit (I hope) was no evill ſpirit. No: but, every good ſpirit, as good as Elias's, is not for every perſon, place, or time. Spirits are given by God, and men inſpired with them, after ſeverall manners, upon ſeverall occaſions, as the ſeverall times require. The Times ſometime require one ſpirit; ſometime, another; Elias's time, Elias's Spirit. As his act good, done by his ſpirit: ſo his Spirit good, in his own time. The time changed, the ſpirit (then, good) now, not good. For both are faulty: the act, without the ſpirit; and the ſpirit, without the time. And, ſo it may fall out, that at ſome time, one may be rebuked, for being of Elias's ſpirit well enough, when Elias's ſpirit is out of time.

5. But, why is it out of time? That is another Neſcitis, which CHRIST ſets downe plainely, when He renders the reaſon: For, the Sonne of man is come: (for, we may well make a pauſe there.) As if He ſhould ſay: Indeed, there is a time to deſtroy (ſaith Salomon, Eccleſ. 3.) that, was under the Law: Ignea lex, the fiery law, as Moſes calls it: then, a fiery ſpirit would not be amiſſe; then, was Elias's time. But, now, the Sonne of man is come: ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of. The ſpirit of Elias was good, till the Sonne of man came; but, now He is come, the date of that ſpirit is expired. When the Sonne of man is come, the ſpirit of Elias muſt be gone. Now ſpecially: for, Moſes and he reſigned lately, in the Mount. Now, no Law-giver, Eccl. 3.3? Deut. 33.2.

on Prophet, but CHRIST, CHRIST now, and His Spirit, to take place. You move out of time: will ye be of Elias's spirit, and the Sonne of man is come? A plaine Nescitis.

6. The Fathers work out another Nescitis, out of the Emphasis [Vos;] Cujus spiritus Vos. Vos, is no idle word: it makes a plaine separation, betweene them and Elias. Vos, You: Why, you are my Disciples, (I trow:) you must answer, to Cujus spiritus vos? Cujus spiritus Tu. CHRIST'S Disciples; and Elias's spirit? that cannot bee. Choose yee now: for, of whose spirit ye are, His Disciples ye must be. If you bee His, what do you here with me? get you to his Tabernacle. If ye be mine, off with Elias's mantle and spirit both. The Disciple, and the Master are of one spirit. To make a Disciple, is nothing, but to doe, as GOD did, at the doore of the Tabernacle; take of the Masters spirit, and put it on the Disciples. But, if ye bee of My Spirit, My Spirit is in specie Columbæ, not Aquilæ; not of the Eagle, that carrieth Iupiter's Thunder-bolt; but, of the Dove, that brings the Olive-branch in her bill, the signe of Non perdere, sed salvare. If this spirit be in you, let all your motions smell of the Olive-branch, not of the thunder-bolt; come from saving grace, and not from consuming zeale.

Deut. 31. 14.
Iohn 1. 32.
Genesis 8. 11.

7. But yet, the worst Nescitis is behinde. For worse it is, to be mistaken in Christ, than in our selves. And Him they mistooke, in that, they would move Him, to that, whose comming was contrary, quite contrary to that, they would have Him doe. This is a Nescitis, indeed. Vere nescitis, qui petitis à Magistro mansuetudinis licentiam crudelitatis. A nescitis, to seeke at the hands of Him, that is the Master of all meekenesse, a licence to commit such crueltie.

The very title of the Sonne of man, is enough for this. For, whatsoever as the Sonne of GOD, He may doe, it is kindly for Him, as the Sonne of man, to save the sonnes of men. Specially being the Sonne of such men, as He was, the Sonne of Abraham, who entreated hard, that even Sodom might not be destroyed. The Sonne of Iacob, who much misliked, yea, even cursed the wrath of his two sonnes, in destroying Sichem. The Sonne of David, who complained much of the sonnes of Zeruiah that they were too hard for Him. (As Christ doth here, of the sonnes of Zebedee: who (as indeed they had bin borne of a thunder-cloud, and not of a man) were so ready, to make havock of the lives of men.) It cost the Son of man more to redeeme men, than to have them blowen up so lightly. And, if Iames and Iohn were to pay for them, at His price, they would not be so evill advised, as to make so quicke riddance of the lives of men.

Genesis 18. 24.
Genesis 44. 7.
2 Sam. 3. 39.
Psalme 49. 8.

Christ doth here warrant us, that, to tell cujus spiritus, the way is, by ad quid venit? what spirit is he of, by to what end comes he; whither blowes it, which way is his face, to salvare, or to perdere? For, to the end of His comming, GOD hath framed His spirit. You may know it, by His first Text. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, to heale the broken, to deliver the captive; to save that was lost, He sent me: therefore He was sent, and therefore He came. You may know it, by His Name, IESUS a SAVIOUR: you may know it, by His Similies (no destroying creatures;) a [a] Lambe, no Wolfe; a [b] Hen, no Kite; a [c] Vine, no bramble, [d] out of which came fire to burne up all the trees in the forrest. Of His comming, cleane contrary to this, speaks the Prophet, [e] He shall come downe like the raine; (speaks the Apostle) [f] Hic est ille IESUS qui venit in aquâ, that came in water, to quench; not, in fire, to consume.

[c] Iohn 15. 5.
[d] Iudges 9. 15.
[e] Psalme 72. 6.
[f] 1 Iohn 5. 6.

Againe, that Hee doth not this [non perdere, sed salvare] by accident, as it hits; but, on set purpose: It was the cause, the finall cause, the very end, GOD sent Him, and He came for.

In which point, to take away Nescitis cleane for ever, he sets it downe positively, and privatively both: Wherefore Hee came not; and wherefore He came. Came not, to destroy; but, came, to save: this, is plaine dealing. But first, not to destroy: that they, which cannot save, may yet bee sure, not to destroy any, but; if they can, not onely not destroy, but save too, as CHRIST doth. But, of these, CHRIST came but to one end; hath but one office; came not, to the other; and this would be marked

marked. The Cardinall begins his Booke to the Pope, Duplex Petri officium, Pascere & occidere: CHRIST had but one; to feed, to save: Another there is, was Homicida ab initio. But, if Saint Peter have gotten two offices, he hath one more, than CHRIST. CHRIST came to save onely, with a flat exclusive, of the other. Ioh. 8.44.

And; where they move Him, in specie, for a destruction by fire; He (not content to deny that alone) denieth it in genere, not to destroy at all; neither, by fire, nor any other way. Here, we have a case of fire: will ye have another, of the sword? Shall we doe it by fire? (say Iames and Iohn, here;) Domine si percutimus gladio? (saith Saint Peter, after) in a greater quarrell farre than this, when they laid hands on Him, to carry Him to His passion. That, He denieth too, and in that quarrell; and saith, Simite, let alone your sword: Out with your fire, Iames and Iohn; up with your sword, Peter. So that, neither by fire, here: nor by sword, there: neither, by miracle (as here) nor without miracle (as there) doth Christ like of these motions. What then? Shall not Christ bee received? Yes! He is most worthy so to bee. I adde, they that refuse it, are worthy any punishment: but, that every man is to be dealt with as he is worthy, would proove but a hard peece of Divinitie: hard for all, and even for themselves, too. If, so oft as Christ suffers indignitie, fire should come downe from heaven, Domine quis sustinebit? we were all in hard case: Iewes, and Samaritans, and all: yea, Disciples; yea this Iames, and Iohn, and all. The Samaritans, they received not CHRIST; they were gone; burnt all. For Ierusalem's sake, because His face was that way (here) He was not received. When He came to Ierusalem, how was He received there? Why, there He was murthered: worse used than in Samaria. Then, we must call for more fire: Ierusalem must be burnt, too. Now, for the Disciples, Iames and Iohn, how carried they the matter? It is true: they had received Him; but, when most need was, thrust Him from them, renounced Him, utterly denyed, that ever they knew Him. Then, we must trouble heaven once more: call for fire, for Iames and Iohn, too. Nay then, the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not, nor received Him not: Why then, the world is at an end, facti sumus sicut Sodoma; all a heape of ashes, if this Doctrine go forward. Belt, take Phaeton out of the charlot, that he set not all on fire. Sure, this (I take it) is a Nescitis: For, who receiveth Christ, as hee should? yea, who refuseth not one time, or other, to receive Him? Who, of the Disciples, who at Ierusalem? Then, all must be turned out and in: Non venit salvare, sed perdere. Then, this will follow; if no place for repentance, then no life of CHRIST. For, whom shall He save, when Iames and Iohn have consumed all to ashes? But, it will be well to leave CHRIST some body, to save: not disappoint Christ of His comming, and send Him backe without His errand. Chap. 22. 49. Psalme 129.3. Iohn 1. 10, 11. Rom. 9. 19.

Now, out of this Nescitis, to frame our Scitis. 1. By this time wee know CHRIST's Spirit (as Hee teacheth us) by His comming. His comming was not to destroy: they that came a destroying, came not in His company. 2. Then, our owne spirits: if they doe spirare Christum, they have the same fourme, end. 3. We know their spirits, that hatched alate this question anew; Vis faciamus ascendat ignis? And theirs too, that never turned and rebuked it, but gave allowance to it, both before, and after it was done: yea, bound them to it by oath, and set it forth, with both Sacraments. Of Penance, and of the Altar: and (what should I say?) resolved flat against Christ, in the very same point; and did not (as He) cast water, but put oyle to the flame. Our Scitis, out of this Nescitis

Can these be the Society of Iesus, and the spirits blow two contrary wayes, and their commings be, to two contrary ends? His, not to destroy: theirs, to destroy: His, to rebuke; theirs, to allow of such motives?

To know, what spirit they be of, look what manner of spirits they make choice of, and by their wills choose, and cherish none other; eager, fierce, boisterous

Matth 21.5. 11,29. ſpirits. O, Elias's ſpirit, is a goodly ſpirit! but Chriſts Ecce Rex tuus venit manſuetus; or Diſcite à me quia mitis, it is not worth a mite: that ſpirit is too weake, and too faint, to forward their fire-workes.

And, if yet ye doubt, no better way to be reſolved, than by Ad quid venit? aske that, and it will reſolve you ſtraight. Wherefore came Doctor Morton, a little before the Rebellion in the North? Wherefore came Doctor Sanders into Ireland? Wherefore Cardinall Allen into the Low-Countries in LXXXVIII? To what end, came he out of the Arch-Dukes campe hither? was it, to ſave mens lives, or to deſtroy them? By theſe marks, we cannot but know, Cujus ſpiritus.

It ſufficeth, that CHRIST rebuketh this ſpirit: that if they be the Society of IESUS, it is Alius Ieſus, another Ieſus than this in the Text: Bar-Ieſus, for he, by interpretation, is Elymas, that is a deſtroyer. CHRIST likes no deſtroying: no, though the Towne be full of Samaritans, He likes it not: no, though the colour be non receperunt Eum; yet He likes it not: no, though we could miraculouſly doe it, like Elias, yet likes He it not. It is not GOD's will in the Old Teſtament, that Sion ſhould be built in bloud: Nor, in the New, that His Church, on the aſhes of any eſtate: Nor, that His not receiving ſhould be pretence, for the extirpation of any Towne; much leſſe, Kingdome or Country.

Our Duty. This we learne. But, we come not only for that, but to congratulate this poore Towne, that ſcaped the fire, and our ſelves no leſſe, that ſhould have periſhed by the ſame element, though not from Heaven, yet another way; though not by dicimus, yet by another meanes: and in publike manner to render our yearely ſolemne thankſgiving, that we alſo, by the Sonne of man, were delivered, from the powder laid ready to conſume, and from the match light to give it fire; that they were rebuked, yea (more than that) deſtroyed themſelves, that ſought our deſtruction. Every way, our caſe hath the advantage: and therefore bindeth us, to greater dury.

Will yee conſider it, in the parties. This, was againſt Samaritans; and, by the Apoſtles: Came commended, by the movers; they were Apoſtles: aggravated, by the parties, againſt whom; they were of the Sect of the Samaritans. We are no Samaritans (I truſt:) but, they no Apoſtles, (I am ſure:) no Apoſtles, nor of no Apoſtolike ſpirit, which would authorize that, which was rebuked in the Apoſtles themſelves. And, for Samaritans (which falls to our turne;) it may be, they count us and call us ſo: it is no matter, they called CHRIST Himſelfe ſo, then. This (I ſay:) had we bin ſuch as they would have us to be; ſuch, as theſe (here) very Samaritans, we were to finde as much favour, at the hands of the Society of Ieſus, as did the Samaritans, at the hand of Ieſus Himſelfe; if their ſpirit, their comming, their faces ſtood, as His, to Non perdere.

But we are none. No, if we goe by the marks, the Scripture ſets down of them, the Samaritans will light on their ſide. For, let it be enquired, whether part, in the worſhip of GOD, uſeth more ritus Gentium, they or we (the marke of the Booke of the Kings:) of whether of us, it may more rightly be ſaid, You worſhip, you know not what (which is CHRISTS own mark.) In a word: let this be the caſe, Whether Religion have more windowes open to Ieruſalem, whoſe face lookes more fully that way. No: the looking to Ieruſalem, is not the quarrell; the not looking to Rome, that, is the matter.

2 King. 17.8. Iohn 4.22.

And ſure, this quarrell is much after one in both: That, in the Text, was made a matter in Religion, but, was none: no more was this of theirs. Non receperunt, is no act of Hereſie: Non crediderunt, that, is. But it is not their miſ-beleeving, moved them in the Text: nor theſe neither. It was the not-harbouring makes all this adoe. So they would entertaine them, they might beleeve as they liſt. Vpon the matter then, it falls out to prove, not zeale againſt their Hereſie, but zeale for their owne entertainment; which will not, but directly, be made matter of Religion.

Now, if yee weigh the deſtruction, ye ſhall find, though in the maine, they agree (for upward, and downward makes ſmall difference) yet, ours was the worſe.

Worſe;

Worſe; for, it ſhould have been ſudden, which is worſe for the ſoule; therefore ſimply worſe. Worſe, for that would have waſted but to the ground; and there left: but, this ſhould have fetched up foundations and ground, and all. Worſe certainely: for, that ſhould have conſumed but Samaritans only: but this, for the good of the Catholike cauſe, Samaritans and Iewes, both. Yea, ſuch as themſelves were, Diſciples, and Iames and Iohn too, if they had beene there, for company. Worſe: for, this had the ſhew of an example, Sicut fecit Elias: but ours, Sicut fecit who? Not, Sicut fecit E L I A S: No; Sicut without example. Never the like entred into the heart of any, that carried but the ſhape of a man. So, ſtill the advantage, on our ſide.

Now, for the delivery, when all is done, that which was ſaved here, was but a poore Towne without a name. I ſhould much wrong that famous aſſembly, and flower of the Kingdome, if I ſhould offer to compare it with that, either in quantity, (alas, like little Zoar to great NINIVE) or in quality, when, in ours (to ſay nothing of the reſt) One there was, more worth than tenne thouſand ſuch as they, wee have good Scripture for it. 2 Sam. 18. 3.

Theſe, here, were rebuked but verbally, on earth: Ours, really rebuked from Heaven. Really rebuked, in their intention, by miraculous diſappointing the execution: And themſelves put to a foule rebuke beſides: God firſt blowing their owne powder in their faces, to write their ſin there; and after making their bowels, their mercileſſe bowels, to be conſumed with fire, within the very view of that place, which they had meant to conſume with fire; and all Vs in it.

CHRIST came to ſave Us: There be manifeſt ſteps of His comming. Apparant firſt, in that Hee made them, they could not containe their owne ſpirits, but brought them out by their own Dicimus: made them take pen and paper, and tell it out themſelves, and ſo become the inſtruments of their own deſtruction, which is the worſt of all.

Againe He came, when He gave His Majeſtie underſtanding to read the riddle of [ſo ſoone as the letter is burnt:] to conſtrue the dialect of theſe unknowne ſpirits, and picke it out of a period, as dark as the cellar was dark, where the powder lay.

There is but one comming in the Text: He came not to deſtroy, but to ſave: Here, were two in ours; both commings, of CHRIST. 1 He came not to deſtroy, but to ſave us, in mercy: 2 He came not to ſave, but deſtroy them (His ſecond comming) in judgement. To conclude: This one notable difference there is, on our ſide: They ſhould have beene deſtroyed by miracle; and wee were ſaved by miracle: The right hand of the LORD brought it to paſſe; which is of all others, the moſt welcome deliverance. Pſal. 118. 16.

And ſhall I then, upon all this, make a motion? Maſter, wilt thou, wee ſpeake to theſe whom thou haſt delivered, that ſeeing thou tookeſt order, the fire ſhould not aſcend to conſume them, they would take order, their prayers may aſcend up, and as the odors of the Saints phials, burne before Thee ſtill, and never conſume, but be, this day ever, a ſweet ſmell in Thy preſence? Their fire, they came to put under the earth, CHRIST would not have burne; another fire, Hee came to put upon earth, and His deſire is that it ſhould burne: even that fire, whereon the incenſe of our devotion, and the ſacrifice of our praiſe burne before God, and be in odorem ſuavitatis. Wee were appointed, to be made a ſacrifice: If Iſaac be ſaved, ſhall nothing be offered in his ſtead? Shall we not thanke God, that He was better to them, than Iames and Iohn: and to us, better, than thoſe were, that will needs thruſt themſelves, to be of His ſociety? That, when this dicimus was ſaid of us too, ſtayed it at dicimus, and never let it come to perficimus; miraculouſly made knowne theſe unknowne ſpirits: that he turned and rebuked the motion, and the ſpirits that made it; that He came, once and twice, to ſave us and deſtroy them. Luk. 12. 49. Eph. 5. 2.

If we ſhall, let us then doe it; let our ſoules magnifie the Lord, and our ſpirits rejoyce in God our Saviour: that the beginning of the Text and of our caſe, was fire, to conſume them (in the firſt verſe:) that the end was, non perdere, ſed ſalvare (in the laſt.) Such Luk. 1. 46.

may ever be the end, of all attempts to deſtroy us. So may He come ſtill; and ſtill, as here, Hee came; never to deſtroy, ever to ſave us. And, as oft as He, to ſave us; ſo oft we, to praiſe Him.

And God grant, that this anſwer here of CHRIST may ſerve, for a determination of this caſe for ever; and every Chriſtian bee ſo reſolved by it, as the like never come in ſpeech more, by any dicimus. But if (as we know not what ſpirits are abroad,) that every deſtroying ſpirit may be rebuked, and every State preſerved, as this Towne here was, and as we all were, this Day. And (ever) as He doth ſave ſtill, we may praiſe ſtill; and ever magnifie His mercie, that endureth for ever. Amen.

LAMENT. CHAP. III. Ver. XXII:

Misericordiæ Domini quia non sumus consumpti: quia non defecerunt miserationes Eius.

It is the LORDS mercies that wee are not consumed, because His compassions faile not.

THE Verse is not amisse; The Booke suits not so well. For this joyfull Day of Our great and famous Deliverance, CHRISTS, tibiis cecinimus is more meete, than Iohn Baptists Planximus; and DAVIDS Harpe, than IEREMIES Lamentations. This (I know) commeth to your mindes, at the mention of this Melancholicke Booke. But yet, if wee weigh our case well; not, what it fell out to bee, but what it was meant to have beene; the very Booke will not seeme so out of season. For, this very day, should it not have beene a day of Lamentation to the whole Land? Was it not so marked in their Kalendar? And they had their will, would they not have given matter of making a book of Lamentations, over this State; and that another manner Book, with more, and with longer Chapters, than this of Ieremie's? By the mercie of GOD, is proved other- Luk. 7.32.

otherwiſe. But what? ſhall we ſo intend the day, what it is, as we forget, what it was like to have beene? No: the booke and the verſe Iuxta ſe poſita will doe well; one ſet out the other, as the blacke-work doth the white. The Book put us in minde, but for GOD's mercy, in what caſe we might have bin. The verſe by Gods mercy, what we are. And even to thank Him, that our lot was, hit the verſe, and miſſe the book; to fall within the one, and without the other.

The truth is, I had a deſire that Miſericordiæ Domini might have their day: and this day I thought to dedicate chiefly to them. We have formerly moved and reſolved the queſtion, out of the Goſpell; we have once or twice called to joy out of the Pſalmes. The barbarouſneſſe of the act, and the parties to it, hath been juſtly inveighed againſt: A time given to each of theſe. And ſhall we not allow one day to the magnifying or Him, and His mercies, that was the cauſe of all? It ſhould have had the firſt day by right, and we were pointed to it, by Miſericordia Domini ſuper omnia opera Ejus: Well, at laſt now in this ſeventh yeare, this annus Sabbaticus, let us make it our Sabboth, reſt upon it, and put it off no longer. Be this day dedicated to the celebrating of them.

To this end, though all the Scripture over, GOD's mercy be much ſpoken of (for where ſhall ye light, but ye ſhall finde it upon one occaſion or other?) yet, to fit this Pſalm. 144. 5. day and our caſe, as it fell out this day, (in my poore conceipt) none in any other booke, falleth out ſo juſt, commeth ſo home, as this verſe to this day, It was the mercies, &c. as upon the opening will fall out. Which though it be in the booke, yet is nothing of the nature of the Booke.

The Summe and Diviſion. The Verſe is a Recognition or acknowledgement: I may adde, a juſt and joyfull recognition. And that double, [1] That we were not conſumed, and [2] Why we were not. So, it ſtandeth on two parts; [1] That we were not, a happy effect: [2] Why we were not: it was Gods mercy, the cauſe of that and all other our happineſſe.

I. The effect is in theſe words: Non ſumus conſumpti. Of which, [1] Conſumpti, is the danger; and [2] Non ſumus the deliverance.

II. The cauſe in theſe words, Miſericordiæ, Domini quod non: And there firſt, [1] Non, we were not. [2] And then there was a cauſe quòd non, that we were not: [3] Then, that cauſe was GOD's mercie. [1] Which wee take in ſunder: It was GOD firſt, that did it: [2] Then, it was His mercy that moved Him to it. In the mercie, three things wee finde: [1] Miſericordiæ, more than one, many, mercies. [2] Compaſſions, or (as the native ſignification of the word is) bowels, the bowels of mercie; that ſpeciall kind. [3] And thoſe have this propertie, they faile not, or (which is all one) conſume not: not they; and ſo not we, Their not-conſuming is the cauſe, we were not conſumed.

III. Then laſt our Recognition. That ſeeing, His mercies faile not us, that wee faile not them; ſeeing they conſume not, nor wee, by their meanes; that our thankfulneſſe doe not neither, that it fall not into a conſumption. But that, in imitation of the three, wee render Him [1] plurall, thankes; [2] and theſe from the bowels: and [3] that unceſſantly without failing. And this, not in words onely, but in ſome realitie, ſome worke of mercie, tending to preſerve thoſe, that are neere conſumpti, pining away.

Plaine

PLaine it is, a danger there was: Elſe, vaine were the Recognition. That danger is ſet down in the word Conſumpti: ſome conſuming there ſhould have bin: ſome ſuch matter was in hand. A word, even (as it were) of purpoſe choſen, for us; for, it ſorteth juſt with our danger as may be. I. The Effect. I The danger.

Conſuming may be more wayes than one: but, no way ſo proper, as by the element of fire, Confector & conſumptor omnium (ſaith the Heathen man) that makes away and conſumes all things. It is the proper peculiar Epithete of that Element, conſuming fire; and the common phraſe of the HOLY GHOST is conſumed by fire. This fits us right. Fire it was, conſuming fire, ſhould have conſumed us: it was a firy conſumption. Conſumpti ignt. Heb 12.29. Luke 9.54.

Then con-ſumpti, in propriety, is nothing but ſimul ſumpti: Con is ſimul in compoſition. All taken, all put together, and an end made of all. And was it not ſo with us? King and Prince, Lords Spirituall and Temporall; Iudges, Knights, Citizens, Burgeſſes, and a great number beſides of ſpectatours and auditours, that day, out of all the flower of the Kingdome: all couped up together under roofe, and then blowen up all. This is ſimul ſumpti, and conſumpti, both. 2 Con-ſumpti. 1. Simul ſumpti. 2 Perſonally.

Will ye any more for company? This was but perſonall; take the reall too: lead, ſtone, timber, windowes, wals, roofes, foundations and all, muſt have up too: an univerſall deſolation of all, both perſonall and reall. That the ſtone out of the wall, and the beame out of the frame, if they could ſpeake, might ſay, and we are in; ſimul ſumpti, and conſumpti, too; all laid waſte, not one ſtone ſtanding upon another. This, was right conſumpti, ſpent indeed, were nothing left, perſon or things with life or without: utter havock made of all. 2 Really. Habac. 1.11. Matt. 24.2.

Thus far might Ieremie goe, and match us in theſe three. I will touch two or three more beyond him, that we may ſee, our caſe ſhould have bin more lamentable, than the book of Lamentations it ſelfe.

1. There was no fire in Ieremies time; none but of wood and cole, and no conſuming but that way: and that fire conſumes by degrees, peece and peece, one peece fire while one is wood, ſtill; ſo that one may ſave a brands-end for a need. But this was a fire, Ieremie never knew of, nor many ages after was ever heard of: takes all at once. No brand here, no pulling out of the fire, no ſaving any; here is quick work, all done and paſt, as ſoone as the paper burnt. Zech. 3.2.

2. Another: In this of the Prophets they had faire warning. There was a camp pitched three ſeverall times in Iehojakim, Ieconias, Zedechias dayes: they had time to make themſelves ready. But in ours, facti eſſemus ſicut Sodoma, our deſtruction had been like that of Sodom; no camp pitched there, but ſuddenly, in a moment: to the hazard of many a ſoule, that were (I doubt me) but evill prepared, if they had bin thus ſuddenly ſurpriſed. And that had bin a lamentable conſumpti (indeed) of both body and ſoule: the body here, the ſoule eternally. A terrible blow indeed, and we ſhould not have knowne who would have hurt us. Rom 9.29.

3. Now we do, as hap is; and therein we leave Ieremie behind againe. It was not an open enemy offered this: Vſually, deſtruction commeth from them. So did this, in the Text: from the Chaldees, not only ſtrangers, but in open hoſtility with the Iewes. But, in ours, they were not ſo much as ſtrangers, but borne ſubjects of one and the ſame countrey, tongue, and allegiance. The more lamentable, to be conſumed by our ſelves; to be ſhot thorow with an arrow, the feathers whereof grew on our own wings. So they were, naturally: but, when they fell once to this unnaturall deſignement, when they fell on conſuming, they were no longer men, all humanity was quite conſumed in them. And this was the danger.

To make a danger dangerous, two things are required: 1 The ſureneſſe, and 2 the neereneſſe. If it be uncertaine, we reckon not of it; nor, though it be certaine, if it be farre away. Let us ſee, both was it.

2 The certainty of the danger.

To make it certaine, theſe are required: 1 It be ſoundly reſolved: 2 ſurely bound: 3 and ſeriouſly put in execution. Firſt upon good reſolution, a ſentence given quod eramus conſumendi, we were to be made away: and rather than we ſhould not, their owne friends, allies, and kindred; yea, their own deare Catholikes to goe the ſame way, to have beene in the Conſumpti, as well as we. This was to have it certaine, to make ſure work.

Gravely reſolved; and faſt bound, as funiculus triplex, the three immutable things of their Religion could bind it. 1. Bound by oath: their Sacramentum militare, they ever tooke firſt, never to diſcover, never to deſiſt.

2. Bound againe by their Sacrament of Penance. Thither they went in an error, as if it had bin ſome fault; but, they found more, than they went for: went for abſolution; received a flat reſolution, it was not only no ſin, but would ſerve to expiate their other ſins. And, not only expiate their ſins, but heape alſo upon them an increaſe of merit. In effect, that our conſumption would become their conſummation.

3. Bound laſt, with the Sacrament of the Altar, and ſo made as ſure, as their Maker could make it, Theſe three; ſure now, paſt ſtarting (I trow.)

3

But go too: Oathes and Sacraments conſume nothing. True: It was therefore not only ſolemnely bound, but ſadly ſet upon. They fell to their Pick-axes, laid in their powder, by ten and by twenty barrels at once: and I know not how much iron, and how many huge ſtones; Fervebat opus, in earneſt they were. Of all which we may ſay (with Saint Iohn) That which wee have ſeene with our eyes, which wee have looked upon, and our hands have handled, that preach we, in this point. That, very ſure it is, we were very farre gone in our conſumption.

1 Iohn 1. 1.

1 The neerenes of it.

And all this while, it may be, it was in dies multos, far enough away; to be done a good while after, we know not when. How neere was it? Nox una interpoſita, but a night (nor that neither: neither a whole night, nor a whole day;) but a few houres we had to ſpend. The traine ready, and the match: three for failing. They ſtayed but for the con, for the time, till all were con (that is) ſimul ſumpti; and then conſumpti ſhould have come ſtraight upon all.

This was our caſe, thus dangerous, thus ſure, thus neere; Inſomuch as, wve vvere even given for dead. The letter ſhewed as much. Their being together, and waiting for it, at their meeting place, ſhewed as much. They made full reckoning, we were little better, than even conſumpti in the preterperfect tence. And neerer we cannot come. It is well known, David vvas never deſtroyed indeed finally, yet (often in the Pſalmes) he ſaith, He was brought back from the deepe of the earth againe; from the gates of death: yea even from the nethermoſt Hell: His meaning vvas, he was exceeding neere it. And ſo were we as neere as was poſſible, and not be ſwallowed up of it. And this is the meaning of conſumpti. And thus much for it.

Pſal. 71. 18. 9. 14. 86. 13.

2 The deliverance. Eſay 37. 3.

Now are we to put Non ſumus to it, and we are ſafe ſtraight. Which two words containe our delivery. So as, though we were deſtinate as fewell, to this fire; though venerunt filii ad partum, though they were come to the point, to be delivered of that they had ſo long travelled withall; though like we were, and ſure we were, and neere we were, yet conſumed we were not. We were not: for, here we are, bleſſed be GOD. Here, and elſe-where (ſome few except which ſince be gone to their graves in peace.) The place ſtandeth, the perſons ſtill alive. Non ſumus conſumpti; this is ad oculum, it admits no further diſcourſe. But this it admits, that we may ſtay a little and lay our Non ſumus, to this of Ieremie in the Text; and we ſhall find ours, another manner of preſervation, by oddes; that ſo wee may provide our ſelves of another manner of recognition.

1 The comparing of theirs & ours.

1 In the perſons. Chap. 2. 21.

Non ſumus conſumpti (ſaith Ieremie:) when for all that, in every corner of the ſtreets, they lay ſlaine. Only he, and a handfull more in compariſon, were ſpared. This

ſerved

ſerved him to ſay; yet, we be not all gone: A cold comfort (God knoweth.) This for perſons.

For things. The gates of Ieruſalem were burnt with fire, and a great part of the Citie; howbeit not all. A remnant there was left, though but a poore one (GOD wot:) yet, enough in his ſenſe, to ſay Non conſumpti, all is not conſumed. [1] Will ye ſee now them with us? With them, ſome few left alive, the moſt ſlaine: with us not one ſlaine, but all ſtill alive. [2] With them, a part of the buildings left, though the farre greater part conſumed: With us, neither ſticke nor ſtone touched, nor burnt; nay, not ſo much as ſinged. All ſafe: all, in toto; and all in qualibet parte. [1] Vpon the matter, thus it is. They were not conſumed, that is, not all: Wee were not conſumed; that, is not at all. All were not conſumed, with them: None at all, with us. [2] Some were ſaved there: Both all and ſome here; neither Perſon, nor thing miſcarried. 3 Ieremie could not ſay: It is Gods mercy, wee are all ſafe: He was faine to give it in the negative, We are not conſumed. We may ſay it, and put it in either: both in the affirmative, All ſafe; and, in the negative, None conſumed, no not one.

[2] In the thing.

There bee indeed two Non conſumpti's: [1] One commeth after, after it is burnt a great while, with water to quench it. [2] The other goeth before, and keepes it from taking fire at all: and that is ours. In which caſe, Non conſumpti is no terme diminuent. Nay, the precurrent negative is better by much. Aske the ſpeculative Divine, if it be not ſo: If Ne nos inducas, be not better, than, Libera nos; Leade us not in, than Deliver us out. Not to Sinne, than, to be forgiven it; not to fall, than, to be lift up againe; And (to inſiſt in this preſent) not to kindle, than, to quench. For, the latter is from Subſequetur me miſericordia, Mercie ſubſequent, which is good; the former from Citò nos anticipent miſericordiæ tuæ, from the anticipation of mercy, which is farre the better of the twaine.

The difference of ours above theirs.

Pſal 23.6. Pſal. 79 8.

2. One great difference we ſee betweene the two Non ſumus's. Another now, no whit leſſe. For the greateſt of all their miſeries, and which touched Ieremie neereſt, was the proud inſolency of their enemies (the Chaldees) over them; worſe, than the conſuming, was their inſulting upon them. This, worſe than all the reſt. Thankes bee to GOD, ſo did not ours. They had no cauſe to triumph over us: we, over them, rather. Non ſumus conſumpti: Non nos, at illi. Will yee obſerve that? Wee were not: but our enemies were conſumed themſelves. Et viſcera impiorum crudelia, the cruell bowels of thoſe wicked men, conſumed; and that with fire, and that, before, and in the ſight of the very place, to which they had vowed deſtruction, and, in which, the deſtruction of us all. That the ſaying of the Prophet might be taken up over them: Væ qui conſumis, Nonne conſumeris & ipſe? You that will needs be a conſuming, ſhall not you your ſelves be ſo ſerved? In the pit you digged, in the net you ſpread, in the element you made choice of, your owne bowels burned. Behold yee Deſpiſers, and tremble, and feare; your miſchiefe is turned upon your owne heads, and your conſumption lights upon your owne bowels. This then doubles the point: that not onely we were not, but that they (our conſumers) were.

Pſal. 30.3. Pſalm. 107.6.

Prov. 12 10. Eſay 33 1. Pſalm 9. 15. Acts 13.41.

3. Yea, I adde (for a full triplicitie in this point) even that we were cured of our conſumption ſleeping (for ſo we were) and never dreamed of any danger, till we had ſcaped it. This alſo is a maine difference, and encreaſeth our Non ſumus a great deale, above theirs. For, as that, the miſerie of all miſeries, when a man is, and yet knoweth not himſelfe to be miſerable: So (I ſay) that, the delivery of all deliveries, when wee know not our perill, till we be paſt it: And that was our caſe, Much trouble of feare, and care, much anguiſh of ſpirit is ſaved by it; which the poore Iewes, were even worne, ſpent, and conſumed withall; and which Ieremie (GOD wot) was in, a long time. We, not a moment. But without heavineſſe for a night, wee had joy in the morning. Sure, if this be a benefit, So they cried unto the LORD, and Hee delivered them out of their diſtreſſe: what call yee then this, They never cryed unto the LORD; yet Hee delivered them out of their diſtreſſe?

Then put theſe together: 1 We were not conſumed at all. 2 There ſhould have beene fire: there was not ſo much as ſmoke. 3 All ſhould have gone: not a man, that periſhed. 4 All ſhould have periſhed, and periſhed utterly: not an haire of any of their heads fell to the ground. 5 We were not conſumed at all; our conſumers were conſumed. 6 And we without any care taken, were rid of our conſumption: We were not; our enemies were. We without conſuming our ſelves with thought, and anxietie of mind delivered from our danger before ever we knew it. And remember withall (not, Non taliter fecit omni populo, but) Non taliter fecit populo ſuo: He did not deale ſo, not with his own people, as He did with us.

Pſalm.147.

II. The cauſe.

The effect we have; we were not: what was it, that we were not? Firſt, an It there was; a כ' a Quia it had (that is) a cauſe, certainely. It was not forte fortunâ, by hap hazard. No, it was no caſualtie (this fire;) no more was the ſaving us from it: neither caſuall; but cauſall both. We will not then (with thoſe in Eſay) libare fortunæ, no healths to fortune, but ſeeke out this It, even the cauſe that wrought it. In Philoſophie, they count him a happie man, that can find the cauſe: But ſure in Divinity, miſerable and unhappie we, if we find it not; but (with ſwine) feed and fill our ſelves with the Acornes, and never once look up to the tree, whence they came. A dangerous errour, no leſſe than the danger it ſelfe.

1 It was God. Eſay 65 11.

2. Our next caution muſt be, to take heed of Non cauſa pro cauſâ. Where let me tell you this. There is a diſeaſe under the ſun (and it is one of ours:) as to put all faults from our ſelves, to others; ſo, good deeds (as neere as we can) to plucke all to our ſelves from others. Others (I ſay:) not only men; but even God Himſelfe. And that two wayes: 1 If any good be done, it was our own arme, or our own head did it: ſomthing in us: God is left out. But, if it be too evident, He had a hand in it; then it was God, 2 but not his mercy, not of Himſelfe, but ſomthing from us there was, that moved Him to do it. So, either ſomthing in us, or ſomthing from us: whereof the one is againſt It was God; the other, againſt It was his mercy: not God, or not His mercy; but we or ſomewhat of ours. Ever our manner is, never to ſeeke further than our ſelves: there we would faine find it. And there, if we can find any colour of a cauſe, in any wiſdom, or foreſight of our own, it is as a miſt, or cloud, to take God out of our ſights, the firſt originall true cauſe, the cauſa cauſarum of all ſuch miraculous divine preſervations, as this was.

And yet ſecondary cauſes there be (I know:) And even in this, man may ſeeme to have a part. It was the letter that was ſent, it was the Kings divination, which I reckon the higheſt cauſe upon earth. This it was; and that it was: But, God it was (I am ſure) above both. He, that did infatuate him, that ſent the letter: that made them falſe among themſelves; falſe to their oath, falſe to their ghoſtly father, falſe to their Maker. And God it was, that inſpired that divination into His Majeſtie: Logike, or Grammar, could not reveale it. God only could; could, and did, direct to that moſt true, but (withall) moſt ſtrange interpretation. Let God then have that is His: Non nobis Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo da gloriam, Not unto us Lord, not unto us, but to thy Name be the glory of it given.

2 It was Gods Mercy.

GOD it was: but, what in God? For (we ſee) it is not enough to aſcribe it to Him; but (for ſome reaſon) we go muſt yet further. God may do it, and be bound to do it, and did us wrong, if He do it not. What then in God? 1. His power may ſeeme to claime the chiefe place, in a deliverance. But power, and wiſdome, and other fixe (that is) all the reſt of the Divines Attributes, be but Communiter ad duo (as the Schoolemen terme them:) No prime cauſes themſelves; but, attendants only, and ſet on work by the two Maſter-Attributes, 1 Iuſtice, or 2 Mercie. So that, Iuſtice it was; or Mercie it was. Mercy it was (ſaith Ieremie) and ſo may we all, in and by his mouth that ſtraight upon it pronounced, Miſericordia Domini ſuper omnia opera Ejus. For, if it had not beene that Mercy, nay if (as St. Iames ſaith) it had not beene Miſericordia ſuperexaltat judicium, Mercy had not beene above all His workes, even juſtice and all, it had had beene evill with us, Mercie it was, Iuſtice it was not. For then, our owne good deſerts might procure it, as due to them; and ſo we come about againe, to finde the firſt cauſe in our ſelves, becauſe we were this or that. All commeth to one: if it were our owne fore-ſight, it was not GOD; and if it were our own merit, it was not Hee neither.

Pſalm.145.9.

Iames 2.13.

But, for this, I appeale to our ſelves. For (I verily thinke) if we would but call to mind (and here now, I would, that every man would call to minde) in what caſe he was for his ſoule to God-ward, at that very time; whether in ſtate of ſinne or of grace; Sure, if we did but returne to our hearts, and there (as Salomon ſpeaketh) cognoſcere quiſque plagam cordis ſui, every man feele how his heart beates; that heart of ours would ſoone tell us. Beſt claime not by juſtice: Beſt, even confeſſe (with Ieremie) It was God, and Gods mercie, without more adoe. 1 Reg 8.28.

We were in conſumpti, if it were but our conſuming ſins: 1. If but of what then was and (may I not ſay) ſtill is conſumed and waſted? What huge ſummes in ſuperfluity, riot, of belly and back, and worſe matters! 2. Our time: if but the conſuming of it, in eaſe and idleneſſe, and too well-knowne fruits of them both. 3. Of the Service of God, that is quite conſumed by moſt of us, now: fallen too, but a ſermon, if that, and how little like a Sermon, we heare it, and leſſe (I feare) after regard it! 4. Of Gods Name that runnes waſte; and our Bleſſed SAVIOUR, that is even peecemeale conſumed in our mouthes, by all manner oathes and execrations, and that without any need at all. Theſe, with other ſins, that fret like a moth, and creepe like a Canker, to the conſuming of our ſoules, we ſhould find: that, as it was our enemies purpoſe, we ſhould have beene conſumed; ſo it was our deſert, to have beene conſumed: and that, it was His mercy only, we were not conſumed. This is the true cauſe, God's mercy.

In which, note theſe two: how fitly it anſwereth and meets both with 1 our conſuming, and 2 with us.

1 As the cruelty of man was the cauſe, we ſhould have bin, ſo (full againſt it) the mercie of God, the cauſe we were not. The true cauſe of our ſafety, Gods mercy; as of our deſtruction, mans cruelty.

2. Againe, to provide, that being out of our conſumption, we fall not into preſumption, and ſo plucke a worſe judgment upon us. The mercy of God, againſt our deſert. Our deſert it was, to have beene: His mercy it was, we were not. His juſtice, for our deſerts, would have come upon us: It was His mercy turned His juſtice from us, upon them. His juſtice would have ſubſcribed the ſumus: His mercy it was that gave the Non, and ſtayed it; Glory be to God, and to His mercy for it.

Which mercy yeeldeth us three things to be obſerved: 1 The number, 2 the nature, and 3 the property.

1. The number: that it is not miſericordia but miſericordiæ; not one, but many, even a pluralitie of them: A multitude of them, becauſe a multitude of us; They many, becauſe we many: We many, and our ſinnes many more, and where ſins are multiplied, there a multiplicity of mercies is needfull, Ne fortè non ſufficiant nobis & vobis, leſt there be not enough for both houſes, and for all three Eſtates in them: For ſo is it to be wiſhed, there may be a repreſentation of all His mercies, as that Aſſembly is the repreſentation of all the Realme: that ſo there may be enough for all. His mercies. 1 Their number. Mat. 25.9.

2. But then of mercy, the cauſe here is ſet downe; (another cauſe;) becauſe His compaßions faile not: How hangs this together? Thus: the word, which here is turned compaßions, in very deed properly ſignifieth the bowels. It is to ſhew, that not mercies, nor a number of them at large, from any place or any kinde, would ſerve for this work: but, a certaine ſpeciall kinde of choice mercies was required; and thoſe are they, that iſſue from the bowels: miſericordiæ viſcerum, or viſcera miſericordiæ (which you will.) You ſhall find them together in ſome ſpeciall workes of GOD, ſuch as, this was. 2 Their nature.

Theſe are the choice: for, of all parts, the bowels melt, relent, yeeld, yerne ſooneſt. Conſequently, the mercies from them, of all other, the moſt tender, and (as I may ſay)

the mercies moſt mercifull. The beſt, both becauſe they are not drie, but full of affection, and come cheerefully: (An eaſie matter to diſcerne between a dry mercy, and a mercy from the bowels.) And becauſe to mercy one may be inclined, by ſomewhat from without; when that failes, where are we then? But, the bowels are within him, and when we have brought the cauſe within Him, we are ſafe. Quando cauſam ſumit de ſe & viſceribus ſuis, that mercy is beſt, and yeeldeth the beſt comfort.

But, in this word of the Prophets, there is yet more than bowels. מעים were enough for them: רחמים are more; are the bowels, or veſſels neere the wombe, neere the loynes: In a word, not viſcera only, but parentum viſcera, the bowels of a father, or mother, thoſe are רחמים which addes more force a great deale. See them, in the parable, of the father toward his riotous lewd Sonne; when he had conſumed all vitiouſly, his fatherly bowels of Compaſſion failed him not though. See them in the Story, in David, toward his ungratious impe Abſalom, that ſought his Crowne, ſought his life, abuſed his Concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael; yet heare the bowels of a father, Bee good to the youth Abſalom, hurt him not, uſe him well for my ſake. See them, in the better harlot of the twaine: Out of her motherly bowels, rather give away her child quite, renounced it rather, than ſee it hurt. This is mercy, here is compaſsion indeed: ô paterna viſcera miſerationum! when we have named them, a multitude of ſuch mercies, as come from a fathers bowels, we have ſaid as much, as we can ſay, or can be ſaid.

Luk. 15. 20.

2 Sam. 18. 8.

1 Reg 3. 26.

And, mention of this word is not unfit, whether we regard them (our enemies) per quod itum eſt in viſcera terræ (in which place, GOD's bowels turned againſt them and toward us:) or whether we think, that His bowels had pity on our ſo many bowels, as ſhould have flown about, all the ayre over, and light ſome in the ſtreets, ſome in the river, ſome beyond it, ſome I know not where.

3 Their propertie.

Now, that which maketh up all, is the property laſt put; quia non deficiunt, or (which is all one) non conſumuntur, faile not, or (as yee may reade it) conſume not. And ſo, as we begun, we end with Non conſumpti. There cannot be a more kindly conſequence than this; our not failing, from their not failing; we do not, becauſe they do not. If they did, we ſhould: But, quia non conſumptæ illæ, non conſumpti nos: for, they are not conſumed, no more are we. And why do they not faile? Becauſe He Himſelfe doth not. He is the ſame ſtill, He failes not: His bowels are as he is; ſo, they faile not, no more than He.

And in this [Quia non deficiunt] is all the comfort we have. For, ſince Ieremies time, one would bee amazed to conſider, (the huge number of foule enormities, that have been committed, and yet the parties that commit them not conſumed;) where there ſhould be mercy to ſerve; for them all. One would think, by this, they ſhould have beene drawn drie. So they had, but for this לא תמו. It can never be ſaid, Now, there is all; there is (now) no more left. No: an inexhauſt fountaine there is of them: never dry, but floweth ſtill freſh and freſh. And looke, even the next words, Ieremie tels us, they renew every morning: No morning comes, but a freſh ſupply of them. And even this morning, this fift of November, we had a good proofe of it. Yea, they are never perfect, the ſumme is never made up: There is ſtill added every day; and they ſhall not be conſummate, till the conſummatum eſt of the world.

And but for theſe bowels, that ſtill melt; and for theſe compaßions ever-flowing and never failing, they (our enemies) had not failed of their purpoſe. But, becauſe theſe failed not, they failed; becauſe theſe conſumed not, wee were not conſumed. They are not only plentifull, as, in the plurall; and choice, as from the bowels, the bowels of a Father; but perpetuall: (what talke we of perpetuall?) they are eternall. Theſe three, their 1 multiplicity, their 2 ſpeciality, their 3 eternity, theſe three we hold by.

III. Our recognition.

And now to our Recognition. To performe it to the full, as it deſerveth, that (I know) we cannot. Worthily to celebrate, and ſet forth His mercies therein, according ding to their merit, what tongue of men or Angels can do it? But, ſhall we not therefore do it, as we can? We were not conſumed: Shall our thankfulneſſe fall into a Conſumption? His compaſſion failed us not, ſhall our recognition faile them? Shall we not find our tongues as well to praiſe His mercies, as to pray for them? Can we powre out petitions in time of need, and can we not drop forth a few thanks when we have what we would? No, let this be the firſt: that we anſwer, Miſericordiæ non conſumptæ, with gratiæ inconſumptæ; that our thanks fall not into an hectike.

Then, that we imitate the three properties of this vertue, that ſaved us, and to whom we owe our ſelves; no other, than thoſe, that be expreſſed in the Text.

1. That we keep the number, do it plurally. Not ſingle thankes, for plurall mercies: that agrees not. Iterate them over and over, as much as we may. In the weight, we ſhall ſurely fall ſhort; let us make amends with the number, Do it oft, and many times; in hope, that Sæpe cadendo, they ſhall effect that, which Vi, by any force in them, they are not able.

This for every one, to give as many as we may, make them many. Now, as many as we are many. As we ſhould have gone all together, as we ſhould have gone; ſo, and no otherwiſe, let us, together, here, all acknowledge His mercies, this day, ſhewed us, and praiſe Him all of us for them: Praiſe Him King, and Queene, &c. Pſalm 148. 11, 12, 13.

Yea, nor only Dicat nunc Iſrael, but Dicat nunc paries, praiſe Him wals and windowes, praiſe Him lime and ſtone, praiſe Him roofe and foundation, Let them praiſe the Name of the LORD: for He ſaid but a word, and they ſtood faſt; He commanded, Non, and they were not ſtirred. Ieremie ſpeaks to a wall to weep (Chap. 2. 18.) we may, with as good reaſon, to rejoyce, and give thankes. All, that ſhould have periſhed together, praiſe Him together. Pſalm. 118. 24. Pſal. 148. 5, 6.

2. Next: that we put him not off with certaine (I know not what) hollow thankes, that have no bowels at all in them. But doe it, De viſceribus, De intimis fibris, from the very bowels, from the innermoſt veines and the ſmalleſt threds of them: with Him, Praiſe the Lord, ô my ſoule, וכל קרבי and all my bowels, all that is within me, All my bones ſhall ſay, &c. When the bones (the bones that ſhould have beene ſhivered in ſunder) when the bowels (the bowels, that ſhould have been ſcattered abroad) ſpeake, that is the right ſpeaking. If every one of us, to himſelfe, would but ſay the very words of this verſe only, as they ſtand, It was, &c. It was, &c. even this onward, were worth the while; if it be not for forme, but feelingly ſpoken: Dic, Die, ſed intus dic; ſay it, but ſay it from within, let the bowels ſpeake it; though our words faile us, they doe not. And (indeed) the conſumption ſhould have been with fire; ſhall our recognition be frozen? no ſparke, no vigor igneus, no fervor at all in it? How agree theſe, a fiery deſtruction, and a frozen confeſſion? It ſtandeth us upon to be delivered, no leſſe from cold thanks, than from a hot fire. Pſal. 103. 1. Pſalm. 35. 10.

3. And that we never faile to doe it. No yeare to intermit it, no weeke, and (I would I might adde) no day neither. Anſwer Miſericordia Ejus manet in æternum, with Miſericordias Domini cantabo in æternum: and not, mercies that never faile, with ſhort thanks and ſoone done; ſpecially, ſeeing, their not failing lyeth upon our not failing them. Pſalm. 136. Pſal. 89. 1, 2.

Now, it would do well to ſeale up all with a Recognition reall; that is, the praiſe of mercy, with ſome work of mercy. What was done upon us, this day? our preſerving: A work of mercy it was. This work can no way ſo lively be expreſſed, as by a work of like nature, nothing ſo well (ſaith S. Iames) by warme breath, as by warme clothes. Erga conſumendos, ſuch as are in danger of it, not by fire, but by cold and nake dneſſe. Iames 1. 16.

This, as it is a moſt kindly way to reſemble it: ſo (withall) is it a moſt effectuall meanes to procure the continuance and not failing of it. Magnes eſt miſericordia Dei erga nos, miſericordia noſtra in fratres; of God's mercy to us, keeping us from conſuming, our mercy toward our poore brethren is the loadſtone, to keepe them from the like. So, under one, ſhall we both ſet it forth and procure it; procure that, wee ſo much ſtand in need of, and ſet forth that vertue, to which we were ſo much this day beholden.

Now to GOD; to Him, and to His mercy; the bowels of His mercy, and the freſh fountaine of them: That ſuffered us not to be conſumed, but delivered us; and that from that fire, and that univerſall, utter, ſudden, unnaturall conſuming by it, the decree whereof was ſo certainely gone forth againſt us, come ſo neere us and wee not aware of it: That ſuffered us not to be conſumed, but gave them to be conſumed in our ſteads; and hath this day, preſented us all alive to give Him praiſe for it: To Him, for the multitude of His mercies, for the paterna viſcera miſerationum ſuarum, that never faile, nor conſume themſelves, nor ſuffer us to faile, and be conſumed: To Him I ſay, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL,

on the V. of Nov. A. D. MDCXIII.

PROV. CHAP. VIII. VER. XV.

Per me Reges regnant.

By Me KINGS Reigne.

THese words may well ſerve for a Sermon, for they be a peece of a Sermon. For, all the Chapter is a Sermon preached by one ſtanding in the top of the high places, (verſe 2.) The high places, that was (then) their Church; The top of them, that was the Pulpit.

It is the common queſtion, Who preaches? Ever, we muſt know that: And though the whole book be Salomons; and though he be a * Preacher upon Record; yet Major Salomone hîc, a greater Preacher than Salomon is here. He was but wiſe; it is Wiſdome it ſelfe made this Sermon. And we may bee bold to preach, what Wiſdome preacheth: A Sermon out of ſuch a Sermon, cannot be amiſſe.

* Eccleſ. 1.1. Mat. 12 42.

Specially, this Wiſdome; the eſſentiall Wiſdome of GOD: which upon the point, will prove to be none other, but CHRIST: And ſo, our Text fall out to be de verbis bis Domini, that is, de verbis Domini ſecundum Salomonem; for, ſo there be, no leſſe than ſecundum Matthæum, or Ioannem.

Which though they were uttered by Him, before He was in the fleſh, what of that? they be no whit the leſſe; but full out as good Goſpell, as if they had beene recorded by any of the foure Evangeliſts: yea, and this we may adde further; even Goſpell, before any Goſpell of them all. Thus much for the Author of the ſpeech.

The Summe. The ſpeech it ſelfe ſeemes, as if ſome queſtion there were, Per quem Reges? Or ſome were about to bring the Writ of Quo Warranto, to know, how they claime to be Kings; how to hold their ſoveraigne Authority; by whoſe grant?

And let not this ſeeme ſtrange: It is no new thing, to bring this Writ in like caſes.

Exod.2.14. Mat.21.23. One was brought againſt Moſes; Who made thee a Ruler? Nay higher; one againſt our Saviour Himſelfe: By what authority doeſt thou theſe things, and who gave thee that authority? Againſt Moſes, againſt Chriſt? and why not then againſt Salomon and his fellow King?

Exod 3.14. Iohn 10.36. And this ſame Per Me (here) is an anſwer to all. Who made you (Moſes) a Ruler? He whoſe Name is I am, ſent me. Who gave Chriſt His authority? He, that ſanctified Him, and ſent Him to be the Meſsias of the world. And here now; Kings, by whom, Per Me, by Him too. Theſe words of his Charta Regia, This their Charter Royall: And He that gave it them, will warrant it for good, and beare them out againſt all the Per me's in the world. This for the Nature of the ſpeech.

A point neceſſary, if ever, at this time to be weighed well, and looked into; wherein this queſtion is put up, and ſo vexed, that it cannot reſt: Wherein they have ſet up an Anti-per and given him this ſentence in his mouth, Ego facio, ut Rex tuus Rex ne ſit, I will make your King no King, this Text Per me notwithſtanding. One, to ſever Reges and Regnant, that they ſhall reigne no longer, than he ſees cauſe to ſuffer them. And is it not time then, to make good their Tenures?

And that do this Text, and this day. The Text, in word; the day, indeed cum effectu, really.

The Text, the words indeed (as the words of wiſdome) are but few, and the ſentence ſhort; ſcarce any in Scipture ſo ſhort: In our tongue, but foure words, and they but foure ſyllables. But it fareth with ſentences as with Coynes. In Coynes, they that in ſmalleſt compaſſe containe greateſt value are beſt eſteemed: And, in ſentences, thoſe that in feweſt words compriſe moſt matter, are moſt praiſed. And ſuch is this.

Exceeding compendious, that we muſt needs be without all excuſe (it being but foure monoſyllables) if we do not remember it.

And withall, of rich Contents: for, upon theſe foure ſyllables, depend all Kings and Kingdomes of the Earth: Of ſuch force are they.

Of which foure, the two latter (Reges and Regnant) be two as great matters as any be in the World. One, the Perſons themſelves, as they be Kings. The other, the Act of their reigning, or bearing rule over Nations. Theſe two latter depend on the two former per, me: which are but one in effect; but, He a great One. For, it is there poſitively ſet down, aſſerendo, that theſe two latter, are by this former; By and through Him, that ſayes per me. By and through Him Kings firſt ſetled in their reignes. By and through Him ever ſince upholden in their reignes. By and through him vouchſafed many miraculous preſervations in their reignes. Thus farre the Text.

Luk 1.78. Then, by the tender mercy of our GOD comes the day from on high, and giveth great light unto the Text: This Day, on which a very memorable memoriall of a famous Per me. One, in great Capitall letters: Even of Per Me Reges; and not of per Me Reges alone, but of per Me Leges, (and that too followes, here in the verſe) and of per Me Greges too; all had gone up, but for this, per Me. This Day, this per Me ſoundeth in your eares, and this day this per Me was ſealed in your eyes, and this queſtion actually decided.

For

For the Order in treating whereof, our parts muſt be as our words: Looke how many words, ſo many parts: foure, of either. 1 Of Me firſt, the Cauſe: 2 Then of Per, the Manner: 3 After of Per me Reges, the Perſons: 4 And laſt of Per Me regnant, the Act. The Diviſion. I. II. III. IV.

PEr Me. It is a generall Rule, Per dicit cauſam: the Nature of this Prepoſition (Per) is to note a Cauſe certaine. And a certaine cauſe excludeth Chance. Firſt, then, Kings and Kingdomes have their Per: they be not fortè fortunâ, at hap-hazard, ex concurſu atomorum. They bee no caſualties, The winde blowes no man to them (ſaith the Pſalme 57.) And Non temerè (ſaith the Apoſtle;) where Non temerè, as it is not in vaine, ſo is it alſo not at adventure: Cauſall they are; Caſual they are not. A Per there is; a Cauſe of Kings raigning. I. The Cauſe. Mc. 1 Kings and kingdomes have a Cauſe. Pſal 75 6. Rom. 13. 4.

What is that cauſe? Per me: and Me is a Perſon; And a perſon is Naturæ rationalis individua ſubſtantia, a ſingle or determinate ſubſtance of a Nature indued with reaſon. It is not Res bruta vel muta, no dumbe thing or without underſtanding, is cauſe of them. He ſpeakes (we heare:) ſaith, Per Me. And His very laſt words before theſe, be, I am underſtanding. 2 That cauſe is a perſon. Verſe 14.

Againſt thoſe that doe Iovi menſam ponere, aſcribe it to the Poſition of the ſtarres, to this or that Planet in the Aſcendent. No; it is not de luminibus (they, be no Perſons:) but de Patre luminum (He, is.) So a cauſe there is, and no imperſonall cauſe, but Per me a Perſon. Eſay 65. 11. Iames 1. 17.

What Perſon? Per me regnant: and that is not Per ſe regnant: ſo, another perſon it is beſides themſelves; one different from them. That they reigne, is not, by or from themſelves, but by or from ſome other beſides. Regnabo (ſaith Adonijah) but he failed; it would not be: To teach him, it is not Per ſe, by their owne bow or ſword, nor Marte nor Arte, they reigne; And ſo to ſacrifice to them. It is not their own place, they ſit in; nor their own power, they execute: It is derived from another perſon; Ipſe eſt qui fecit nos, & non ipſi nos (may they alſo ſay) He it is that made us, and not wee our ſelves. A Perſon; And another perſon. 3 Another perſon beſide themſelves. 1 Reg. 1. 5. Pſalm. 44. 6. Abac 1. 16. Pſalm. 100. 3.

And who is that other perſon? Let me tell you this firſt: It is but one Perſon, not many, Per Me is the ſingular number. It is not Per nos: ſo, it is not a plurality; no multitude, they hold by. That claime is gone, by Per me: one ſingle perſon it is, Per quem. The other, a Philoſophicall conceit it came from, from thoſe that never had heard this Wiſedome preach. In this booke, we finde not any Soveraigne power, ever ſeated in any body collective, or derived from them. This we finde, that GOD He is King; that the Kingdomes be His, and to whom He will, He giveth them. That ever they came out of God's hand by any Per Me, any grant into the Peoples hands to beſtow, that we find not. One Perſon it is. 4 But one Perſon, not many. Pſal 93. 97, 99. Dan 4 14 Ier 27. 5.

I aske then, this one Perſon who He is? This I finde (at the XXIV. Verſe.) That whoſoever He is, He was, when there were yet no Abyſſi, no depths, nor no mountaines upon the Earth, nor the Earth it ſelfe: He was before all theſe. I finde againe, (at the XXVII. verſe.) When the heavens were ſpread, a decree given to the Sea, the foundations of the Earth firſt laid, He was there a Worker together with God: Was at the making of all, was Himſelfe Maker of all. So, neither Man nor Angell; they were not ſo ancient, they created nothing, they were created themſelves. 5 That perſon, neither man nor Angell.

Then ſileat omnis caro, let all fleſh keep ſilence, And Omnis Spiritus (too,) in this point of Per Me. Neither the ſpirit that ſaid of the Kingdomes of the Earth, All theſe are mine: Nor he, that though he have hornes like the Lambe, yet ſpeaketh words like the Zech. 2. 15. Mat 4 9. Apoc 13 11.

Dragon

Dragon. Theſe foure ſyllables are a ſuperſedeas to all books or book-makers for any mans Per Me, any mans claime. It is no man. And if no man, then no Pope: for he alſo is a man (as Saint Peter ſaith, he was:) And Circundatus, compaſſed with infirmities, St. Paul ſaith, he is: Sure, he made not the Earth; himſelfe is made of earth. The Abyſſus, the deep was made, yet hee aſcended out of it: the ſeven hils, long before he ſate on them. He is not this per Me; they hold not of him: they hold of per Me, that created heaven and earth.

Acts 10.26. Neh.5.2. Apoc.13.1. 17,9.

And this per Me will beare no per alium beſides: He that muſt ſay, Per Me Reges, muſt alſo ſay, Per me Cœlum & terra. None but He that can ſay the one, can ſay the other. Therefore none with Him in this Per. None to ſtep forth and rejoyce, Etiam per me, and by me too: unleſſe he can ſay Etiam per me Cœlum & Terra. Per alium then hath no place here.

But might not the High-Prieſt claime deputation under per me? For that, there is a ruled caſe of it here, in him that was the ſetter down of this (Salomon.) Had the High-Prieſt, had Abiathar ever a per me for him? It is well knowne, his per me went with Adonijah, againſt Salomon: His per me, if it could, would have depoſed Salomon. But ſo far was it from him to ſay per me Salomon, that contrary, Salomon might ſay and did, per me Abiathar. Depoſe Salomon he could not; depoſed he was himſelfe. Non nobis Domine, non nobis, would he have ſaid: It was per me the wrong way with him.

1 Reg.1.7. 1 Reg.2.27. Pſa.115.1.

6 But GOD.

Well then, being neither Man nor Angell (ſince they made not the World:) GOD it muſt be of force: There is in the reaſonable nature, no other perſon left, but He: And He it is. He, the partie, that ſpeakes: By Me Kings; I am the Cauſe, that Kings reigne. Then, Reges quod ſunt, per Deum ſunt: Kings, what they are, by GOD they are: θεῖον τὸ ἀξίωμα (ſaith Chryſoſtome:) and a ſpeciall dignifying of their ſtates it is, ſo they are. It was (we find) wont to be the uſuall ſtyle (yea, even of Popes themſelves) writing to Kings, to wiſh them health in eo per quem Reges regnant, in Him by whom Kings doe reigne: And that was neither Pope, nor people; But GOD alone, whoſe proper ſtyle that is.

Pſa. XIII. ad Deum.

7 GOD, the SONNE.

By God then: I aske yet further, by what Perſon of the God-head? ſo far we have warrant to goe by this Text. It is Wiſedome, whoſe ſpeech all this is: No created wiſdome, but the Wiſdome of God created all things, it ſelfe uncreate: that is the SONNE of GOD. For, whom Salomon here calleth Wiſedome, the ſame (in the thirtieth Chapter after) hee termeth the SONNE: What is his Name (ſpeaking of God) or What is His SONNE'S Name? By Him, by that Perſon do they reigne: And now at the laſt, are we come to the right per me.

Chap.30.4.

1 As the middle cauſe.

Per (the prepoſition) would teach us ſo much, if there were nothing elſe. Per dicit cauſam mediam, it deſigneth a middle cauſe. And He is the middle Perſon, of the great Cauſe, Cauſa cauſarum, A Deo (ſaith St. Paul;) per me (ſaith Salomon:) from GOD the Father, by God the Sonne. We may know it, It is CHRIST'S prepoſition, this (ever:) per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum.

Rom 13.1.

2 As Man.

And by Him, moſt properly: for, in that He was to be Man, all the benefits which were to come from God, to man, were to come by Him. He, the Per, of all: among which, this one of Regall Regiment is a principall one.

3 As Wiſdome.

By Him againe. Becauſe He is Wiſdome (which I reckon worth a note) that the per of kingdomes, whereby they conſiſt, is not Power ſo properly (the Attribute of the firſt) as Wiſdome (the Attribute of the ſecond Perſon:) they ſtand rather by Wiſdome than force. Beſides, Sapientis eſt ordinare (ſaith the great Philoſopher) the proper work of wiſdome, is to order. And what is Anarchie, but a diſordered Chaos of confuſion? Or what is Rule, but an εὐταξία, a ſetting and holding of all in good order. This being Wiſdomes proper work, this per is moſt properly His.

4 As a King. Pſalme 2.8. Apoc.19.12. Pſalme 47.7. Pſalme 145.13.

By Him, yet againe, becauſe on Him hath the Father conferred all the kingdomes of the Earth: we read it Pſalm. II. We ſee Him Apoc. XIX. with many Crownes on His head. Meet then it was, that the Kings of the ſeverall quarters of the Earth, ſhould be by Him, that is Rex univerſæ terræ. That the Kings of the ſeverall Ages of the world ſhould be by Him, who is Rex ſæculorum, whoſe Dominion endureth throughout all ages

ages. In a word: Ut utrobique regnetur per Chriſtum: And that all Crownes, both the Crowne of Glory in Heaven, and the Crownes of higheſt dignitie here on earth, ſhould bee holden of Him, all; as all are. Thus by this time, we ſee this Per Me, who Hee is.

II. The Manner; Per.

Now returne I to Per: There is much in the right taking of this word: What Per is it? There is a Per of Permiſſion; as we ſay in the Latine, Per me licet, You may for all me; Good leave have you; I hinder you not: Or (as in Engliſh,) By Him, that is, beſides Him, they came, and Hee ſtopped them not. Is this the Per? Indeed ſome ſuch thing is blundered at, as if GOD onely permitted them, And ſcarce that.

1 Not by Permiſſion.

Thus comes one of them forth with the matter, and makes it the very firſt words of his book. The Prieſt, he is à Solo Deo; but, the King, he is ex importunitate populi: The people importun'd God, and He yeelded with much adoe, agrè (His owne word) againſt His Will: And ſo we muſt interpret Per Me, that is, Contra me; By me, that is, all againſt my minde it is, that Kings Raigne, but I beare them or beare with them. Vpon the matter, this it is; They would have Kings to be, by Toleration only; And ſo, by that Per, are all the evils and miſchiefes in the world. And, are not Kings much beholden to theſe men, thinke you?

But, this Per we reject utterly: It cannot be. For, though the Latine Per will beare this ſenſe, the Greeke [διὰ] the Hebrew [בְּ] will by no meanes; the phraſe, the Idiome of the tongue will in no wiſe endure it. διὰ will admit no permiſſion; nor בְּ neither. Away then with that.

2 But by Commiſſion. Iohn 1.3.

How take wee Per then? What need we ſtand long about it, having another Per, and of the ſame perſon to patterne it by: Omnia per Ipſum facta ſunt (ſaith Saint Iohn; And the ſame ſaith Salomon by and by after, in this Chapter.) Then, as By Him, all things made there: ſo, By Him, Kings Raigne here. The World, and the Government of the world, by the ſame Per both; one and the ſame cauſe inſtitutive of both. That was not by bare permiſſion (I truſt:) no more, theſe.

By the ſame [b] Ego dixi. Even by the ſame, that He Himſelfe [c] Dixit Dominus Domino Deo. As He then; they. And ſo doth Chriſt Himſelfe interpret [d] Ego dixi, πρὸς ὃς λόγος ἐγένετο. A Word came to them; And what manner was it? [e] Saint Paul telleth us, it was διαταγὴ, an ordinance, a word of high authoritie; the Imperiall Decrees have no other name but Διαταγαί. This now then, is more than a Per of permiſſion: A Per of Commiſſion it is; A ſpeciall warrant, an ordinance Imperiall, by which Kings Raigne.

By Him: Nay, more than By Him (if you look better upon the word.) There is no By in the Hebrew; and yet the word is בְּ. But, that (in true and exact proprietie tendered) is In Me, not By Me: The meaning is, that they are first in Him, and so come forth from Him.

And yet, so from Him, as still they be in Him; both [p] Corona Regis (saith Esay) and [q] Cor Regis (saith Salomon) their persons and Estates both, in manu Domini.

For, such is the nature of the Prepositions, the HOLY GHOST hath made choyce of, as they may be inverted and verified both wayes. For, as it is true, They reigne in, and by Him: so is it likewise true; He reignes, in and by them. They in GOD, and GOD in them, reciprocè. Hee, in them, as His Deputies; they, in Him, as their Author and Authorizer. Hee, by their Persons: They, by His Power. And so having brought them to Him, even into Him, and lodged them in Him, there let us leave them.

r Iohn 17.21.

III. The Persons: Reges.

This while we have bin in the two former; [1] Per, [2] Me. Now to the two latter; [3] Per Me, Reges; and [4] Per me, regnant.

Per me Reges. And first, I am glad we have met with this word Reges, in propriis terminis: when we meet with some other, there is such pinching at them. The Apostle speakes of Higher Powers: ô, it is too generall; it may be Powers Ecclesiasticke, as well as Civill: (A meere shift.) The Psalmist saith, Ego dixi dii; that, is not home neither, there is mention of Iudges in the Psalme, as well as Princes. But, here is a word, will hold them; Kings in expresse termes, totidem literis: No evasion here, no shifting it. This is home, (I trust.)

4 Reges in propriis terminis. Rom. 13. 1. Psalme 82. 6.

Per me Reges. Why, what great matter is that? Per Illum omnia (saith Saint Paul, Rom. 11.) All things are by Him.

Rom. 11.36.

All things; but all good things specially, (saith St. Iames,) Why, By Him, there can nothing come, but good.

Iames 1. 17.

2 Reges specially, above all other creatures.

Thirdly then, speciall good things. By a speciall Per, they. And Kings are such, and for such reckoned up here, in this very Chapter. Even for one of the Principallest benefits, vouchsafed mankind by God, this By me Kings: for, will ye but marke this, they have precedence, are reckoned up here, before the creation it selfe: for, that commeth after, at the XXIV. Verse. To shew, it is (as indeed it is) better for us, not to bee at all; than, not to bee under Rule. Better no Creation, than no Government. GOD is highly to be blessed for this Per me Reges: that He hath given potestatem talem hominibus, Such power unto men.

Matth. 9. 3.

3 Reges, without qualification. 1. Of Religion. 2. Of Tyranny. Numb. 16.3. Hos. 13.11. Hosea 8.10.

Now, I weigh the word [Reges] What? any by Him? any in grosse qualification? what without any regard of Religion at all? Sure, if none but true Professours had been here meant, It must have been but Per Me Rex: for, none but one, but this Salomon, was then such, of all the Kings of the Earth. But, in that it is Reges, the Holy Ghost's meaning is to take in the rest: Hiram, and Pharaoh, and Hadad; they are in too in this Reges. For, where the Scripture distinguishes not, no more doe we. Be their Religion what it will, By Him they are.

But, what if they take too much upon them (Core's exception?) Then, it is Dedi vobis Regem in irâ (saith GOD by the Prophet:) Angry I was when I gave him, but I gave him though. Per Me iratum, it is: but, Per Me, it is still; Per Me, though with a difference.

4 All By Him, made, and unmade.

But, this Onus principis (say they in the Prophet) how may we be rid of it? Is there any any other Per me, to goe unto, to deprive or depoſe them? Sure, where the worſt is reckoned that can be of them, Clamabunt ad Dominum is all, I finde. No Per to doe it but He. By Him, and by none but by Him, they be; By Him, and by none but by Him, they ceaſe to be. In Nature, every thing is diſſolved by the ſame meanes, it came together. In Law, Inſtitution and Deſtitution, belong both to one. In Divinity; the Prophet in one and the ſame Verſe, ſaith, Dedi vobis Regem (in the fore-part) and with one breath, Abſtuli eum in the latter: So, both pertaine to Him; Dominus dedit, Dominus abſtulit. As for this new per me, we argue from the Text: He makes no Kings (we know;) and, as he makes none, ſo he can unmake none. No right, to one Per, more than another.

1 Sam. 8. 18.

Hoſea 13. 11.

All be Kings then, by Him: yet; not all alike. GOD forbid, but there ſhould be degrees, Magis and Minus, one more than another: But we ſhould put a difference, between Melchiſedek and Nimrod; between Salomon and Saul.

5
All, but eſpecially good Kings.

We ſay then, All Kings by Him; but, among all, and above all, ſuch as he that ſet downe this, ſuch as Salomon; for he by the great Capitall Per Me. Per Me iratum, thoſe other; Per Me propitium, He: And that is the per indeed. Thus much he doth inſinuate, by adding in the latter part of the verſe (which commonly is the Exegeſis of the former) namely, if juſta decernunt doe come too. If he be a Righteous KING, as Melchiſedek, King of righteouſneſſe: If he ſow the fruit of righteouſneſſe in peace, that is, be a peaceable King, as Salomon: If he Rule per Me (that is) Per Sapientiam, rule wiſely. Thoſe are per me propitium; Thoſe are Kings primæ intentionis, Kings of ſpeciall favour.

Heb. 7 2.

Iames 3. 18.

This for the Perſon. Now to the Act: Per Me regnant.

IV.
The Act: Regnant.

And I make theſe two, two diverſe, becauſe ſome are Reges, Kings, and yet reigne not: (as true Heires defeated.) And ſome reigne, and are no Kings: (as do all Uſurpers of the Throne, per fas nefaſque.) Alwayes, one thing it is, to be a King; another to reigne. Ioas was the true King, all thoſe ſix yeares he raigned not; Athalia reigned all thoſe ſix yeares, yet true Queene was ſhe never any. Of ſuch, GOD ſaith, in Hoſea; Regnaverunt, ſed non à me. Why? for, per me Reges regnant, By Me Kings reigne; KINGS, of lawfull and true deſcent, they Reigne by Me: Theſe were none ſuch. So, they reigned; but, without any per from Me. But, when theſe meet, and they that be Reges de jure, regnant de facto, then it is as it ſhould be: And per Me it is, that they ſo meet.

Hoſea 8. 4.

This Regnant I conſider, as an Act, three wayes: 1. As it hath a beginning. 2. As it hath continuance. 3. As it hath Rectitude or obliquity incident to every act. Regnant, that they reigne at all: Regnant diu, that they reigne long: Regnant rectè, that they reigne aright. And every one hath his per. Per, Ianuæ, By, the doore, by Him they enter their reigne: per, lineæ; By, the line, which He ſtretcheth out over every government, longer or ſhorter; by Him they continue their reigne: per, regulæ; By, the rule; ſo reigne, as they ſwarve not from Him, touch Him ſtill; continue with Him, and He with them, and ſo He will make them to continue long.

I am led to this, becauſe you ſhall ſee theſe three duely ſet upon every Kings head, through all the ſtory of the Bible.

1. Such a King, was ſo many yeares old, when he began his reigne: there is his Inchoation, his Regnant, his doore of entrance.

2. And then: So many yeares he reigned in Ieruſalem, or Samaria: there is his continuation, his diu regnant, his per of Line, or continuance.

3. Then ever followes (if you mark it) either, And he did well, and walked in the ſteps of his Father David; there is the manner, his benè regnant, his Rule, or Rectitude: Or, and hee did evill in the ſight of the Lord, and turned not from the wayes of Ieroboam, there is his obliquitie; out of Rule himſelfe, and brought all out of rule with him. This holds in all, and in all will hold, after they be once off of the ſtage.

1 Regnant, Per Januæ. The entrance.

As it is Actus inchoatus: they reigne, that is, they come to the Crowne, they begin their reignes.

It is generally true, that the maine frame of Government, the firſt raiſing of it, could be by none, but this Per Me. But I inſiſt on particulars rather: Wherein, any that ſhall but weigh, what difficulties, what oppoſitions be raiſed, what plots and practices to keep Reges from regnant, thoſe from it whoſe of right it is, ſhall be forced to confeſſe, that even by Him they have their firſt entrance. Take him that is next hand Salomon; and he that ſhall marke, Adonijah's plot, drawing the High-Prieſt (Abiathar) and the Generall of the field (Ioab) into a ſtrong faction againſt him; ſhall finde, Salomon was bound to acknowledge, that Per Me he came in. Or if he will not, Adonijah himſelfe will, he was forced to doe it: That the Kingdome was turned from him, and was his brothers, for it came unto him (even Per Me) By the LORD. This Confeſſion of his is upon record, 1 King. 2. 15. And your Majeſtie was non ignara mali hujus, was not altogether free from theſe: It is Engliſh I ſpeake. Poſſibly, from Ioab you were; but, not from Abiathar; His Bulls, they were abroad: And ſome there were that could not enter by the doore, but were climing up another way. Yet for all theſe, you came to your reigne, and you came by the right Per, by the doore: And, this (I know;) You are one of the number of thoſe Kings that aſcribe their regnant to this Per Me. This, for Actus inchoatus: Now, they are in.

2 Regnant diu, Per, lineæ: Their continuance.

But when they are in, they may out againe ſoone enough; when begunne, end quickly; if Per Me, as He was the Cauſe procreant, ſo He be not alſo the cauſe Conſervant, and make their reigne Actus Continuatus; draw the line out a long, keep and continue them for many yeares in it. Regnant, is true in the firſt inſtant. One reignes; if it be but [a] for a ſevennight, as Zimri reigned no longer: But what is that? Or what is it to reigne a Moneth, as [b] Shallum; or three, as [c] Ioahaz; or ſix, as [d] Zacharias did? Nothing: The continuance, propriè loquendo, that is, the reigne; and Regnant without this Per is as good as nothing. And the Text is for this. The word in Hebrew is not Regnant in the Preſent, doe reigne; but regnabunt in the Future, ſhall reigne, or continue reigning. And ſo is the Prepoſition [Per] for it too, For, Per addit durationem; addes ever a continuance, where it is added; as is evident, by perſiſt, permanent, perdurable, perſeverance, perpetuity.

a 1 Reg. 16. 15.
b 2 Reg. 15. 13.
c 2 Reg. 23. 31.
d 2 Reg. 15. 8.

And this now queſtionleſſe depends upon GOD alone; even their quicke cutting off, or their long preſerving in their reignes. He can draw the line longer or ſhorter; draw it out ſtill, or ſnap it off. Hee can take them from their reigne by the [e] hand-writing on the wall, MENE, &c. Hee can take it from them by [f] Solvit baltheum Regum, taking off their Collar, and [g] caſting their throne downe to the ground. He can call in a forren enemy, ſtirre up a ſeditious ſubject, let looſe the ſea of popularitie in upon them; unlawfully to do it, but to do it though. Many ſuch things are with Him.

e Dan. 5. 26.
g Pſal. 89. 44.

Now we are at the maine. For, here comes all the danger: there is ſuch heaving and lifting at them after they be in; ſuch thruſting by force, ſuch undermining by fraud: So many Per me's, Per Me Clement, Caſtell, Catesby; and they againe ſo many Per's, Per knives, piſtoll, poyſon, powder, all againſt this Per of continuance; as be the former how it will, they cannot but confeſſe here, that Per Me it is, that they hold out their Reignes.

And, here fall's in kindly, this dayes deſigne and the viſible Per Me, that happened on it; For, By Him it was, and by His mercy, that King and all were not quite conſumed. That your Reigne, and your life were not determined both together: Not that you went not downe (with David) into the pit; but, that you went not up, up into the ayre in (I know not how many) peeces, and that now, after thus many yeares, it is Regnant with you ſtill: And may it be Per Me Regnat (ſo we all pray;) and not Per Me Regnat onely, but, Per Me Regnabit, many times, many yeares more. I but put

put you in minde here of what I told you right now: It is In Me (in Hebrew) not Per Me; In Him, not by Him, though never ſo hard by Him (for, that is vvithout Him;) but even In Him, and then they be ſafe.

And in Him You have reigned: for He hath incloſed You (as it vvere) and compaſſed You on every ſide. As in a fortreſſe, ſtrong hold, or place of defence; ſo have You reigned in Him: That, as David oft calleth God, ſo may You; Your Rocke, Your Refuge, Your Sanctuary of ſafe-guard: So that the enemy hath not been able to doe you violence, nor the ſon of wickedneſſe had power to hurt You. Pſal.18.2. Pſal.89.22. Iames 4 6.

And yet, there is more in this Regnabunt, greater grace yet. For vve may extend it yet further, to a continuance, not in themſelves in their perſons only; but, in their poſterity too. That, when it ſhall ceaſe vvith them, and they in their graves, yet it ſhall be a Regnabunt ſtill, and they reigne in their race and progeny, when they have done reigning themſelves. This dravves out the Per longer: for, ſo reigne they, many ages; not their own only. Kings, in themſelves; Kings, in their ſeed; Reges à ſæculo in ſæculum, from one generation to another. By Saul, and by David, we may plainly ſee; one thing it is, to bring one to be King, as Saul was: another, to eſtabliſh the Kingdome in his line, as with David it was. And it is that, he magnifieth ſo much, 2 *Sam.*7. That GOD had not onely brought him thitherto (to the Crowne) that was but a ſmall thing: but that alſo He had ſpoken of His Servants Houſe, in longinquum, for a long time; for, that is the right Regnabunt. The right Regnabunt is not that (in *Dan.*2.) like an Image, which vvhen it is broken, nothing comes of it: But the right, is that (*Dan.*4.) where it is like a goodly tree that hath branches come out of the ſtemme, vvhich will prove Siens and be new grafted againe, and ſo ſucceſſively derive it ſelfe down to many generations. This alſo is, Per Me; and altogether by Him, and in his hand, who can eſtabliſh ſucceſſion, as to David; and who can alſo bid Ieremie, Write this man deſtitute of children, of Him there ſhall none come more to ſit upon the Throne of Iſrael. Ierem 22.30.

This for the Continuance, Diu regnant. I will but touch the third: I would not have touched it, but that it is a ſpeciall meanes, for the ſecond, of continuance. To Diu, the way is by rectè; To rule long, the way, to rule right: Nay, it is the way to rule for ever: And, without Rectè, the ſhorter the better; better for them, and better for all parts. 3 Regnant recte Per, Regula. The manner.

Thus doth one Per ſtill lead us to another: for as it is true, Per dicit cauſam, ſo is it likewiſe true, Per dicit regulam. By Him, as a cauſe; By Him, as a rule, from which Rule not ſwarving, there is a direct promiſe, Deut. 17. He ſhall prolong his reigne, and not his alone, but even his childrens too, in the midſt of Iſrael. And, by that Rule, a long line ſhall be drawne, for the drawing out of his reigne many yeares. Deut. 17.20.

And, this we need not ſeeke for, any where elſe; it is even in the body of the word. For Rectitudo and Rectus, and Rectè, Subſtantive, Adjective, and Adverbe, all come of Rego: ſo doth Regula too, it ſelfe: That they need be no ſtrangers one to another; There is an alliance, and there ought to be a reciprocall reference, betweene them and Regere, and between Regere and them. Erit apud rectiſſimum Rex (ſaith Moſes, *Deut.*33.) He ſhall be, as ſtraight, as neare the Rule, as may be. Deut.33.5.

Now, that Rule is (here) Me; and Me is Wiſdome; and Wiſdome is the Rule which God Himſelfe draweth His lines by; And Kings, as in other points, ſo in this, to be as like, and draw as neere God as they may.

But then, care would be had, it be that Wiſdome which is Me (indeed.) For, Achitophel's and Ieroboam's goe for Wiſedome, in the world; but (indeed) ſuch wiſdome (as Saint Iames termeth it) is earthly, ſenſuall, and hath ſomewhat of the Devill in it. It is not that worldly wiſedome, they be Kings by; but that which is from above, and that (I told you) is Chriſt. What they are, by Him they are; That they continue, by Him it is; Who is, and will be pro illis qui per illum; be for them, that be by Him; and will not ſee or ſuffer the overthrow of his own Ordinance. Iames 3.15.

And, may I not then commend Him (this Per Me) to them? That, ſince they reigne, by that Wiſedome (which is CHRIST) they would reigne by that, and by no no other Wiſdome. And that reciprocation (I touched before;) that ſeeing they reigne by Him, He may reigne by them; Regnet, per illos, qui regnant per Illum; ſince they rule by Him, to be ruled by Him: There cannot be a more reaſonable requeſt, than this: Regnet per Reges, per quem regnant Reges.

Specially, ſince this Per of the Rule, will bring them to the Per of Perſiſtence: ſo long as they continue with Him, and He with them, Hee will continue them and their reignes, and nothing ſhall ſtirre them. But, let goe that, and take them to another Per Me. And I dare not promiſe ought: If any have miſcarried, he hath firſt left his Per go, and then after was put out of protection: And then, the ſons of perdition had power over Him, and his continuance ſoone came to an end.

Take this then, for the fare-well of this point. Sever not Reges from Per Me, and you ſhall never ſever Reges from Regnant: But if they have once loſt their Per Me, marvell not, if they loſe their Regnant not long after.

The Application to the People.

But, this Sermon was made for the people: To them then, I turne. For, as if Princes will weigh this Per Me, they will rule the better: ſo if the people doe the like, they will obey the ſooner. This is ſure: If Per Me Reges regnant, then Per Me populi parent; if from Him the Power of Soveraigntie, by Him alſo the Dutie of Allegiance; which we do beare them, even for this very Per Me; even therefore becauſe they bee of Him. Δι' Αυτὸ (ſaith Salomon, here) Per Ipſum, by Him: Δι' Αυτὸν (ſaith Saint Peter)

1 Pet.2.13. propter ipſum, for Him, for His ſake.

Two points I would commend to you and ſo end: Chriſt it is, that here ſpeaketh: Wiſdome it is, that here ſpeaketh. Since it is Chriſt here ſpeaketh, it is againſt Chriſtian Religion; ſince it is Wiſdom here ſpeaketh, it is folly to hold, to ſay, or to do the contrary.

For Chriſt: If Per Me Reges be from Chriſt: from whom is the other Per me? Per me rebelles, Per me regicîdæ: from whom they? If By Me Kings Reigne, be Chriſts; By me Kings ſlaine, whoſe Per is that Per? That Per cannot bee the Per of any, but of Chriſts oppoſite: who is that? Quæ conventio Chriſti & Belial? What agreement hath

2 Cor.6.15. Chriſt and Belial? There he is: You ſee, whoſe brood they be, that go that way, Even Belial's brood. He, out of his enmity againſt Per Me, can neither endure Reges nor Regnant; but ſtirrres up enemies againſt them both, both Reges and Regnant. Againſt Reges, Regicîdas; to aſſault their perſons: Againſt Regnant, Rebelles; to ſubvert their eſtates.

Ioh.10.35. And, it is He that ſets up this Anti-per, who takes upon him, to looſe this Scripture; to ſever Reges and Regnant: Nay (which is worſe than this) to make Saints and Martyrs of them, Qui vias dant ad delendos Reges, that ſet their wayes to deſtroy Kings, againſt

Chap.31.3. which there is a ſpeciall Caveat in the laſt Chapter of this Book. But (which is worſt of all: for though the Rebell be evill, yet the Rebel-maker is farre worſe:) He that raiſeth up this new ſect of Rebel-makers worſe than Rebels themſelves: For, if they be the brood of Belial, Qui vias dant, What ſhall they be, qui vias docent? ſhall not they be Primogeniti Satanæ, Belial's firſt begotten? That ſcore out the way for deſtroying of Kings; tell, by whom, and in what ſort, it is to be proceeded; to make a very method or Agend of it.

There is a ſhort reſolution in this Text for all theſe: Seeing it is Chriſt, it muſt be unchriſtian (if not Antichriſtian) to make any ſuch courſe: Chriſts Diſciples they are not; None of His (ſure,) that either put their hand to practiſe it, or their pen, or tongue, to defend it.

And as, if this be Chriſt, it is unchriſtian; ſo, if this be Wiſdome, then is their courſe, folly; And ſo it is, three wayes,

1. Folly firſt, to ſeeke to ſever Reges and Regnant, from Per Me: it will not bee. To thinke, they can ſet themſelves againſt Kings, and yet never have to doe with God at all. But, Kings (we ſaid) are in GOD: ſo they muſt goe through Him, before they can come at them: they cannot deale with Kings, but they muſt begin with GOD, firſt.

firſt. Gamaliel's poſition is ſound and good: All one to fight with God, and that which is of God: for, they cannot be ſevered. Act. 5. 39.

2. And, if they cannot; to fight againſt GOD, to kicke againſt the pricke, that is folly and madneſſe (I am ſure.) Ye may returne them all for fooles, that goe about it. That think with their devices to out-reach Him, whoſe folly is wiſer than their wiſdome. Or by their practices to over-beare Him, whoſe weakeneſſe is ſtronger than their ſtrength: He will be too hard for them, do what they can. Act. 9. 5. 1 Cor. 1. 25. 1 Cor. 1. 25.

3. Specially (which is the third) having had ſo often, ſo certaine experience, that they which have gone about it, ſtill come by the worſe. For extreme folly muſt it needs be, to begin that, which none that ever yet began, could bring to good end; Which, all that ever yet began, ever came themſelves to an evill end: As, to an evill end have they come, all the packe of them. Theſe foure words have put them all downe.

And (as it falls out) this day, of this folly, we have Exemplum ſine Exemplo: And in the ſucceſſe thereof, may all the reſt read their deſtiny. For, by the light of this day, any (that is not blind) may ſee, that By and through Him, Kings Reigne, in that, by and through Him, they, that would have blowen them up, are come to a ſhamefull end. Blow them up, they ſhall not, but blow themſelves downe they ſhall; downe, [a] after Coreh, the ſame way he went: Even to [b] their owne place, with Coreh, and Iudas, to the bottome of hell. That ſo, it may appeare to all the world, ſince this Per Me is Wiſdome, if Wiſdome ſet them up, folly it ſhall be, in them that ſeeke or ſet themſelves to put them down; to ſubvert, either Reges their perſons, or Regna their States.

[a] Num. 16. 33.
[b] Acts 1. 25.

Let Wiſdome then be juſtified of her children: And ſo many, as love Per Me, love and be friends and take part with both their Perſons, and States. If they be Per Ipſum, By Him, put our Per to His Per, that they may be, by us, too: We cannot erre (we are ſure) if we keep the ſame per, that Chriſt doth. Luk. 7. 35.

And (to conclude) let this be our laſt duty: ſince wee know Whence they be, we know whither to goe; ſince, By whom they be, to whom to repaire, if we have any buſineſſe concerning them. If we have a good Prince, whom to thank; if otherwiſe, whom to appeaſe.

But if a good (for to that caſe I returne) never to look upon Him, but to lift up our eyes withall, to this Per quem. As, to thank Him, that He hath preſerved him many other times (but ſpecially and above other, this day; him, and his, that is, him and us all: ſo, duely to pray to Him, that He which reigneth thus by Him (that is, by His appointment) may ſafe, and well, and long reigne by Him, (that is, by His protection.) To thanke Him, for Per Me regnant, and to be ſutors to Him, for Per Me regnabit; that He would draw out this per, and make it a long per, Per multos annos. That it may ever be (as, in the Text, it is) Regnabit, ſtill; ſtill, in the future, Shall reigne.

Shall reigne out his owne age himſelfe, in perſon (there is one Regnabit.)

Shall Reigne in His Iſſue and off-ſpring, and that many ages: (there is another Regnabit.)

Shall Reigne, in the life of memory, and a bleſſed remembrance of his time and reigne, and that thorow all ages: (there is a third Regnabit.)

Shall reigne all theſe; And beyond all theſe, there is another yet, as the laſt, ſo the beſt of all; Shall reigne, all theſe per Deum, By God; and, after all theſe, Shall Reigne, Cum Deo, With God, in the glory, joy, and bliſſe of His heavenly Kingdome, and that perpetually: which kingdome ſhall have none end, but be in Sæcula Sæculorum. To which Kingdome I, &c.

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL, on the V. of Nov. A. D. MDCXIIII.

PROV. CHAP. XXIV.

Fili mi, &c.

Verse 21. My Son, feare thou the Lord, and the King: and meddle not with them that are given to change.

22. For their destruction shall rise suddenly: and who knoweth the destruction of them both?

23. These things also belong to the wise.

WE begin this yeare, where we left the last. Then By Me Kings reigne: Now, by Me, rerum novarum studiosi, seditious persons, come to ruine and destruction. For, that is the sum and substance of this Text. Prov. 8. 15. The Text: Anno 1613.

It is a fatherly advice given, by Salomon to his son; Not to meddle or make with them that are given to changes. And there was a change; such a change, as never was seene, or heard in any age, meant and medled in, this day. So the first verse interessed in the Day. The Summe of The Text.

And, this is not a bare advice, and nothing els; but, upon a penalty. And that penalty set down, by way of a prophecie. And that prophecie fulfilled, and that penaltie extended; this day too. So, the second verse likewise. So that, this day, the first verse was justified; the wisedome of the Counsell, that it is wise and good: And, this day, the second verse was verified, the event of the prophecie, that it is certaine and sure; for destruction followed them, that followed not it.

The

The Diviſion. The points in it are, as the verſes are, two: [1] There is an advice, in the former: My SONNE, feare GOD and the King, &c. [2] with a penaltie annexed, in the latter: For their deſtruction ſhall ariſe ſuddenly, &c.

I. There is in the advice, [1] firſt, a kinde of commending of it. [2] Then, the advice it ſelfe.

1. The commendation ſtands firſt: For, Fili mi, I take to be a Commendation, That it is a counſell, a Father would give to his ſonne: And, that is no evill one, we may be ſure. Doe but caſt your eye, over the counſels in this book, that are given with a Fili mi, you ſhall find they be de meliore notâ, ſpeciall ones, all very well worth the giving.

2. The advice it ſelfe followes: the maine drift whereof is, A Retentive againſt medling with certaine perſons; perſons, ſuch as this day brought forth. To feare, and to forbeare. Feare God and the King: And Forbeare to have to do, or deale, with any ſuch. It conſiſts of two counterpoints: a Fac, and a Fuge. Do this; and eſchew that. The Fac is Feare GOD, and the King. The Fuge is, Et ne commiſcearis, Medle not. Follow one, fly the other.

II. Now, it is puniſhment enough for a man, not to follow good Counſell, when it is given him: Yet hath GOD ſo ordered, as there goeth (ever) ſome further evill, with the contempt of good counſell. As, with the contempt of this, there goeth a penaltie, no leſſe than deſtruction and ruine: and that, a ſudden deſtruction, and an unknowne ruine: It ſhall ſurpriſe them on the ſuddaine: And it ſhall be ſuch withall, as Quis ſcit (ſaith Salomon) Who knowes? (that is) No man knowes, how fearefull. Print well in your minds theſe foure; [1] Deſtruction, [2] ruine, [3] repentè, [4] quis ſcit? They be the quatuor noviſſima of the Text. And, for feare of theſe, feare to medle with theſe ſpirits.

So Salomon ſits here, as a Counſellour; and, as a Iudge. A Counſellour, to adviſe: A Iudge, to pronounce. Heare his Counſell, then: If not; heare your ſentence. And chooſe which verſe you will be in. There is no ſcaping them, both. In one of them we muſt be, all. Either in the verſe of counſell: Feare God and the King, &c. Or, in the verſe of penaltie: For, their deſtruction, &c.

III. The ſhutting up of all, is, Hæc quoque ſapientibus: (So reade it the Seventy, with this verſe;) And ſo, the Fathers all: And not, as now it ſtandeth (with the verſe following.) The meaning is: that, this is no counſell, for fooles: No man ſo wiſe, the wiſeſt man that is, it may well become him to take it. Commonly, they, that medle, in theſe matters, want no wit; are wiſe, at leaſt in their owne conceits: therefore (ſay the Seventie) πῶτα ὃ λέγω ὑμῖν τοῖς σόφοις, You, that think you are, and would be taken for wiſe, to you be this ſpoken.

I. The Advice. [1] The Commendation thereof. From a Father.

I Will ſpeake a few words, of the commendation. Fili mi: It is of a Father, to his Sonne. True and hearty is the counſell of a Father, to his child.

The very force of naturall affection ſo whetting the wit, as oft, even a ſimple man, will give his child no ſimple advice, but ſound and good. But, if it happen not alwaies to be of the beſt, it is the beſt he had, you may be ſure. There might want braines; the good heart of a Father was not wanting.

And he wiſe. To ſupply that want, I aske ſecondly, who is this Father? I finde, that it is Salomon, that ſpeaketh. One famous for his Wiſdome among the ſons of men. One, able to give good Counſell, worth the following. And yet (I know not how) they that are

are holden for wiſe, other-while give not all the beſt. But it is becauſe they bend not their minds; and they bend them not, becauſe they reſpect not the parties ſuch, they give it to. But, were it Filii mi, had they to him the hearty true zeale of a Father, it would make them gather their wits together, and helpe it much. That is, if we could get theſe two to meet; the braines of a wiſe-man, and the bowels of a Father: if a Father were Salomon; or if Salomon were a Father: if a Father were as wiſe as Salomon, or Salomon could be as kinde as a Father; that, were like to be good counſell indeed. For as a wiſe man, he well could: And, as a Father, he (ſure) would give his beſt. So, none to that. Why, here they be both: This Father, is Salomon, The braines of Salomon, and the bowels of a Father, both in it.

What lacke wee yet? Somewhat: Wiſe is not all. Wee finde one wiſe, that would not have given this counſell, for he gave it not himſelfe (as might bee Achitophel.) None of his wiſdome: away with it: It is devilliſh. No, this is Salomon: not only wiſe, but godly wiſe, with the wiſedome that is from above: and that is the wiſdome indeed. Godly wiſe. Iames 3.17.

In ſigne it is ſo; ſee, his counſell begins with Feare GOD, the beginning of all true wiſedome, when all is done. And ever the counſell right, that is ſo grounded. If this come to the two former, I ſee not what can be required more. To the commendation of it then, all three meet in it. Here is a 1 Father; the Father is 2 wiſe; wiſe, as 3 Salomon, his wiſdome from the Spirit of GOD. There can be no more. To ſuch a counſell (I truſt) we will give eare. And ſo, I pray you, let us. Pro.1.7:

The counſell hath in it a 1 Fac, and a 2 Fuge. The Fac, is Feare GOD and the KING. There is in it, a ſingle act, and a double object. The ſingle act 1 Feare: The double object 1 GOD, 2 the King. We begin with them, as in nature, firſt, Deum & Regem. 2 The Advice it ſelfe. The Fac: 2 Feare GOD and the King.

Where, at the firſt, we ſee (and it is a good ſight to ſee) GOD, and the King, in conjunction. And no marvell, if Rex, quem, and Deus, per quem doe joyne. But joyn they doe, and joyne they may, and yet be in two ſeverall ſentences, or in two ſeverall members of one ſentence. Et would couple them well enough. Ioyned neerer than ſo, in one and the ſame ſentence: In one, and the ſame member, of one and the ſame ſentence. And in one member they may be too; and yet ſome word between them, and not immediately. Here, ſo immediate, ſo hard one to other, as nothing in the world between them, but the Van, the Et, the very ſoder (as I may ſay) that joyns them thus together. 1 The Object, GOD and the King in conjunction. 2 Inter ſe.

All this is but one: but, I obſerve no leſſe than five conjunctions of theſe two great Lights, all within the compaſſe of this Text. 1 Firſt, with one Et. 2 Then in one time (there is but one Time, betweene them both.) 3 Thirdly, as with one Et: ſo with one Et ne, both; that, is but one, neither. 4 Fourthly, they have but one party in oppoſition to them both, Shonim. 5 Fifthly, the treſpaſſers againſt them both, have but one end, ruinam utriuſque. שנים

All this, this joyning, thus neere, thus cloſe, immediate thus many wayes; all this is God. God it is, that thus joyneth Himſelfe, to the King; and the King, to Him. Not only here, by Salomon, under the Law; but even in the Goſpell alſo, by Chriſt. He joynes Cæſar and God too; and (in a manner) as neere, with the ſame Et, and with but one Reddite: and puts them, and their duties, both, in one period. Here, God before Cæſar: there, Cæſar before God. Matth. 22.21.

Now, the nature of thoſe that be joyned by God, is ſet downe by our Saviour, thus. Quod Deus conjunxit: Quod it is; not, quos, or quæ: No more plurall, then: No, but coaleſcunt in unum, they grow together; together into one, one ſingular quod. God's Conjunction is (ever) of the nature of an Vnion. One Et; One Et ne: One feare between them; One oppoſite againſt them. Matth. 19.6.

To theſe, thus joyned by GOD, what is our duty? As we find them cloſe joyned to our hands, ſo to keepe them. Firſt, Homo ne ſeparet; not to ſever them at any hand. Nay, Homo ne ſolvat, not to make the knot more ſlacke or looſe. Think, it was not for nought nought, that our Saviour Christ ſaid of this Scripture in particular, Non poteſt ſolvi Scriptura. Not, Non diſſolvi: but, Non ſolvi. Diſſolvi, the knot looſed quite; but ſolvi, not made more looſe, or ſlacke, than He left it. One is oppoſed to the joyning; the other, to the neere joyning of them. Not to doe it, our ſelves: and not to endure them, that are tampering about it. Not the Anabaptiſt, that would put out Et regem, cleane. Not other (little better) that put it out and put it in, at their pleaſure; a King or no King; to be feared, or to feare: faſt or looſe; to joyne, or to ſtand a looſe (as it were in oppoſition, the whole heaven in ſunder:) Timete Reges, the Accuſative; or Timete Reges, the Vocative, as fals fitteſt to their turne. Neither to endure them, that would diſſolve it cleane: Nor them, that would faine ſlacken it, to the end, to wring or wedge in a third betweene Deum and Regem. No; let them ſtand; and ſtand, as they be left: unlooſed, unlooſened, Deum & Regem. They that fall to be changers (after) in the Text, begin their change (ever) at this; at tranſpoſing, or interpoſing ſomwhat, between Deum & Regem. Therefore, look to this well. This, for the firſt conjunction inter ſe, betweene themſelves.

John 10.35.

b Their conjunction in Time. a The Act.

Then are they joyned againe in aliquo tertio, in a third: Time. Why, in Time? Indeed, Our SAVIOUR CHRIST's Quæ Cæſaris, is more ample a great deale: many things contained in it, beſides. Of thoſe many, this is but one; but, this is one. And this one (here) is made choice of, becauſe it falls fitteſt, to the purpoſe in hand.

The purpoſe is, to reſtraine from medling. Now, feare is more reſtrictive, than honour, or any of the reſt. The Philoſopher calls it φίμωσιν φύσεως, the paſſion, that holds (as it were) the reines of our nature, to check us, and keep us backe, from that which is hurtfull; to which (other-while) we are but too inclinable. As namely, there is a ſpirit in us: and that ſpirit (ſaith St. Iames) luſts after envie: And envie is, at our Superiours, toward whom (even the ſupremeſt of them) men ſtand not (alwayes) in ſo good termes, as were fit. Nay, ſo farre forget themſelves, ſometimes (witneſſe this Day) as they fall to change; change with a witneſſe, change them into aſhes; put fire to them, and blow up King, and all. Here needs a Retentive: Feare, is fit for that. Therefore it is feare: Feare God and the King.

Iames 4.5.

Of [feare God] we ſhall ſoone agree, that he is to be feared: I would to God, we would, with as great accord, agree to doe it, as we will eaſily agree, it is to be done: that ſo, it might be with us, as with holy Iob it was, Ut timor noſter, ſpes noſtra, from our feare might grow our hope; the true hope, when all is done. Even that, which riſeth from feare, which makes us refraine to doe evill, and ſo breeds in us, the hope of all hopes, the hope of a good Conſcience.

Feare GOD.

Iob 4.6.

But feare God is not all. Et Regem, and the King: him we muſt feare, too. In water and bloud (ſaith Saint Iohn:) not in water only, but in water and bloud. So here: God and the King: not God alone; but God and the King. Non ſufficit unum: oportet utrumque fieri, in Copulativis.

GOD and the King.

1 Iohn 5.6.

Hence riſeth the ſecond conjunction. As before of God, and the King: ſo here now, of the feare of God, and the feare of the King. And even the ſame benigne aſpect that is betweene God and the King, the ſame is there between the two feares: the very ſame, every way.

They be Σύστατα compatible (as we ſay in Schooles:) they will ſtand together, goe together, hold together, well. They hinder not one the other. By the grace of God, wee may doe both. Both, be regall and religious too. We ſhall not feare the King, a whit the leſſe, for fearing God: Nor (vice versâ) GOD the leſſe, for fearing the KING.

Not the leſſe? Nay, the more. For, they be not only Σύστατα, but Συνίστατα: not only, a joynt and mutuall conſiſtence between them, but a joynt and mutuall aſſiſtance, either of other. Not only, not hinder, but further; nor endure, but induce one the other. So that, that which is (here) Et Deum; is (elſe-where) Propter Deum. And not only with God, but for God, we feare the King.

1 Pet. 2.13.

And, though Regem ſtand laſt, bee (as wee ſay) ultimum in executione, yet is it (here

(here, in this place) primum in intentione: The ſequell ſhews it. For, when he comes to the Et me (marke it well) the point of oppoſition, He ſaith not, Medle not with irreligious perſons, Atheiſts, ſuch as feare not GOD (ſo he ſhould, if Time Deum had beene principally meant:) No, but Medle not, with the Seditious. Now, they (we know) are moſt properly oppoſite, to the King. The feare of GOD hath elſe-where his chiefe place, many times and oft. But, here, Time Regem is prime intentionis, the very marke, all this Text levels at.

Then, why is it not Time Regem and no more adoe, and leave out Time Deum quite; For, what hath GOD to doe here, in matter of this kinde, of Sedition? Not ſo: There is reaſon, Time Deum ſhould be in, and firſt in. In the point of Allegiance, he that will lay his ground ſure, it behoveth him (as Gregory ſpeaketh) arceſſere rivum Fidelitatis, de fonte pietatis, to draw downe the ſtreame of allegiance from the true conduit-head of it, the feare of GOD: If, thence it come not, it is minus habens, not as it ſhould be. For, if it be right, Time Regem is to come, out of Time Deum.

Marke this method well: to have Regall duties rightly ſetled, he goes up as high as GOD; beginnes with Time Deum, the feare of GOD. And, thither we muſt, if we ſhall goe ſoundly to worke. It is not the Common-Law, or any Act of Parliament, that breeds Time Regem, kindly. If our feare to the King, be taught us by the law of man, it is not yet upon his true baſe, his right corner-ſtone. To Divinitie we muſt; to this Booke, the Booke of the feare of GOD; if it be right, ground it there. And, if that might take place, there ſhould need no law elſe, to ſuſtaine or preſerve Kings or States. But, feare God firſt.

Set this downe then for a rule: that, there is no Surer friend, no Surer ſtay to Kings, and their rights, than Time Deum (that is) true Religion. And ſet downe this with it: that, it is a ſure ſigne of a good Religion, if it will joyne with Time Regem (the dutie to the Prince) well. For, if it be a true Time Deum, it ſtrengthens Time Regem; it weakens it not.

And on the other; that it is an infallible note of a bad one; if either it ſhoulder the King from GOD, or ſhrinke up the ſinewes of civill obedience.

But, if it make Time Deum, to blow up Time Regem; make the Catholike faith, to overthrow the Catholike feare of GOD (for, both I truſt, be alike Catholike;) if they perſwade men, that the King, and the whole Parliament muſt up, or the feare of GOD cannot ſtand: they are out of this Text quite: they are cleane beſide Time Deum, as it was in Salomons time: teach a new feare of GOD, falſely ſo called, without this Booke altogether.

But, what is become of Time Regem, with them? Sure, they that feare not, to blow up the King, I will never ſay, they feare the King: they that put men, in their Amphitheatrum Honoris, nay, in their Martyrologie, or Kalendar of Martyrs, for not fearing to attempt it, it is a ſtrange feare, they teach; Indeed, rather Time Rex, than Time Regem.

And, another ſort there is, not come ſo farre; with whom (yet) Time Deum & Regem is not, as it ſhould be: that feare (I know not how) as if the feare of the King did abate ſomewhat, from the feare of GOD; and there were no true feare of GOD, without ſome mixture of contempt of order and government. But, if one can grow ſomewhat bold, ſomewhat too bold with Kings, to teach them their duties; and feare not to ſpeake evill of ſuch as are in authoritie, then (loe) he feares GOD aright. Iude 8. And, none of the Clergie feares GOD, but they that uſe it. Nor none of the Laity, but ſuch as beare them in it. And theſe two are the onely Feare-GOD's in the Land. Others, that thinke, they may doe both, and would gladly doe both, may not be allowed to feare GOD on the right faſhion; They feare the face of man. And Ierem. 1.7. thus, with their new feare of GOD, they put out of countenance the feare of the King. As if. theſe feares caſt out one another; and one could not be in at the former, but of neceſſitie, he muſt be out at the later. What is this, but to make a disjunctive (at the leaſt) betweene them?

Rom.13.7. But you (beloved) never feare to doe as Saint Paul wils you: Cui timorem, timorem, to give feare, to whom feare belongeth; and, to the King it belongs, as here we see.

Psal.82.6. He that said Ego dixi, Dii estis, in so saying, said, Et sicut Dii, timendi estis. Therefore, Nemo timeat timere Regem, let no man be afraid to feare the King, and yet feare GOD too. You may doe both; you must doe both. The Text is short, but full, in this point. For, Time Deum; that is, be a good Christian: and, Time Regem; that is, be a good Subject. And, the better Christian, the better Subject.

But indeed, I have not done well in speaking of them all this while, as of two feares. There is but one Time, in the Text. If you strike it out from Regem, you strike it out from Deum, too. For, there is but one in all, And they consequently to be feared, not with two, but with one and the same feare, both.

This, for the conjunction: which (I wish) we may endevour by all meanes to mainetaine. For, besides the offence to GOD and His feare, It is a preparative to the change (which here followeth) to sever GOD from the King, or the King from the Kingdome; to force them one from the other, that GOD hath so straightly united together: hath Himselfe, and would have us to doe the like. And now, after we have done with the Fac, and the conjunction, let us come to the Fuge and the opposition.

2 The Fuge, And medle not, &c. Feare GOD then and the King, wherein? In many other points; but (to hold us to the Text) in this namely, that you medle not with these following. And, even by this, yee may take measure, whether you feare them or no, by your fearing to joyne with such, as this day brought forth. For, if yee joyne with them, yee oppose straight to both those: not to the King alone, but to GOD; to His feare, as well as the Kings. Indeed, to the feare of them both. For, to both, are these here set in opposition. It is not Feare the King (alone) and medle not with them; but, GOD is in too, as well as the King.

Nor, it is not, feare GOD and the King, and then over againe, with two for two; and medle not, either with irreligious, or seditious persons: but, with seditious, onely. Sedition is joyntly opposed to both; and no lesse to GOD, than the King. To either, in equall opposition.

I note here, no lesse than foure oppositions besides the Et ne; as before, foure conjunctions besides the Et. 1 Against the King: 2 Against GOD: 3 Against both: 4 Against the feare of both. 1. The King: For, it is (this medling) a trespasse at common Law, against him, his Crowne and Dignity. 2. GOD: for it is a sinne also against GOD's Law, against Heaven and Him: Not onely, these on earth, Læsæ Majestatis: to GOD's Majesty no lesse than the Kings. 3. Both Deum & Regem; For, it is directly against both Tables: And against the two first and great Commandements of both Tables: 4. And, Being a sinne against feare, it will pricke fast toward presumption; and, that is a high sinne: If that once get the dominion over any, he shall not be innocent from the great Offence. So, against the 1 King, 2 GOD, 3 Both, the 4 Feare of both.

Psal.19.13.

But, by this, cleare it is, who ever they be, that medle with these, eo ipso they feare not GOD. Directly: for, if the Commandement be, Feare GOD, and medle not; one cannot doe both; both be a medler, and yet feare GOD, though. He cannot say (with the medlers of this day) Yes, yes: medle with the Powder-plot, and yet be a good Catholike, and feare GOD well enough for all that. Nay, feare GOD the better; and be the better reputed of, you know where, for this very medling,

But, that in this point we may proceed to purpose, we are to see first, 1 who be these Shonim, שנים: 2 And then, what it is to medle with them.

What these Changers be. The word in the originall, is very pregnant, and plenteous in signification; which hath made divers turne it diversly. The Vulgar turnes it Cum detractoribus, such as detract from Princes: and well. Ours, before, was With the seditious: and, it was well so. Now, we reade, With them that are given to change: And, that is well too. For, all are in it; and well may so be. For, Detractours, Changers, Seditious, all come to one.

Detractours.

Detractors, For they that in the end prove to be ſeditious (marke them well) they be firſt detractors: Or (as the nature of the Hebrew word is) Biters. It is, of Shen, a tooth; they have teeth in their tongues. Ever, the firſt thing that moves to a ſedition, is Shemei's tongue. As at firſt, it did (ſedition;) ſo doth it ſtill, begin in the gain-ſaying, in the contradiction of Coreh. So began he; This Moſes, and this Aaron, they take too much upon them, doe more than they may by Law; they would have ſomewhat taken from them. So Abſalom: Here is no body to doe any juſtice in the Land. So Ieroboam; LORD, what a heavie yoke is this on the peoples neckes! Meddle not with theſe Detractors.

1 Detractours.

2 Sam 16.7. Iude 11. Num. 16.3. 2 Sam.15.3. 1 King.12.4.

Then ſecondly, when they have made the ſtate preſent naught, no remedie, we muſt have a better for it; and ſo, a change, needs. What change? Why, Religion, or the Church-government, or ſomewhat (they know not well what) ſtands awry. Yee ſhall change your religion (ſaid they of this Day) and have one for it, wherein for your comfort, you ſhall not underſtand a word (not you of the People) what you either ſing, or pray: and for variety, you ſhall change a whole Communion, for an halfe. Now a bleſſed exchange, were it not?

2 Changers.

What ſay ſome other? You ſhall change for a fine new Church-government: A Presbyterie would doe much better for you, than an Hierarchie: And (perhaps) not long after, a government of States, than a Monarchie. Meddle not with theſe Changers.

Now thirdly, whom you finde thus magnifying of changes, and projecting new plots for the People, be ſure, they are in the way to ſedition. For (marke it) they doe ſedire, that is, ſeorſim ire, goe aſide; they have their meetings apart, about their new alterations. Now, of ſedire comes ſedition, ſide-going. For, if that be not looked to in time, the next newes is, the blowing of a trumpet, and Sheba's proclamation, We have no part in David. It begins in Shemei, it ends in Sheba. But ſo, at laſt, all (yee ſee) comes to one: Shonim all.

3 Seditious.

2 Sam.20.1.

And now to the Medlers. But firſt will you obſerve, here are two ſorts in the Text, [1] they that medle; and [2] they, with whom they medle. The Seditious (that is) the contriver of the treaſon; and the Medlers (that is) his complices. And that it is not, Be not your ſelfe ſeditious: but, medle not with ſuch as bee. Be not the author, or ring-leader; but, be no fautour of them, have no part or fellowſhip in the buſineſſe, Ne commiſcearis, be not a mixt traytour: For, mixt and pure, both are naught.

As for them, that are in it at the maine (as they ſay) he doth not ſo much as once ſpeake of them: Of them, there is no queſtion. Onely, directs his ſpeech to them, that are brought in on the By. Tells them, in ſo being, they are as deepe in as the others. No acceſſory here: as is the Seditious, ſo is the Medler, Author, and Fautor, all alike. Alike, firſt: For, both without the feare of GOD and all religion, alike. Alike againe: For, lyable to the ſame penalty after, ruinam utriuſque.

Well now, What is it to medle, this Commiſceri? I would note two things to you out of it: [1] The nature of the word, [2] and the extent.

The nature, I take to be worth a note. Commiſcearis, is a mixture; What manner of mixture is it? Out of the Hebrew word, it properly betokens that mixture or medly, that is, of the light with the darkneſſe after the Sun-ſet. in crepuſculo, in the Owle-light (as we call it.) That, is Ereb properly: (Thence commeth the Poets Erebus: yee know, what that is.) No this, in very deed, is rather a confuſion, than a mixture: and might well have beene turned Ne confundaris, Be not confounded together, they and you; or (as Saint Peter ſpeakes) Runne not together with them to the ſame confuſion. So, a confuſed mixture it is, or a mixture to confuſion.

1 The Nature of Ne commiſcearis.

1 Pet.4.4.

You ſhall ſee, it is a word well choſen. Take it of the perſons, and a confuſed mixture it is. For even the children of light (not alwayes ſo wiſe in their generation) that is, ſome plaine meaning men are ſometimes drawne in too, by ſome illuſion or other; to medle and to joyne with theſe ſonnes of darkneſſe. As, ſome went with Abſalom to the paying of his vow in ſimplicitie; and were in before they were aware.

2 Sam.15.11

For, being there with him, they muſt doe as he did. Iuſt the medley of the Phariſes, and Iohn's Diſciples.

2 Or take it, of the plot it ſelfe. In it alſo, ſuch a mixture there is; for, they want not ſome gliſtering pretences, as it were a falſe light, caſt on the plot. But, goe to the bottome of it, and there it is Caligo tenebrarum, the very dungeon of darkeneſſe: and, well, ſo; as being wrought in a darke cellar, under ground, by the ſonnes of Erebus, in the skirts of Erebus it ſelfe.

3 Or, looke to the carriage of it: there, ſhall you plainely diſcover, a very blending

2 The extent of it. Now, of the Extent: Medle not. How many wayes may one be, or be ſaid to be a medler? That may hee many wayes; as many, as one may be partaker of an-

And laſt, (which I take, to be full out as bad, if not much worſe than any of the reſt) by ſpeaking or writing, in praiſe or defence, either of the deed or the doers; their caſe, Num. 16. 47. calling Coreh, and his company, the people of the LORD: for ſure, if the conſenter be in; the commender much more.

All theſe make up this medley. To theſe, or any of theſe, well may it be ſaid, Ne commiſcearis. Now I know, degrees there be, in mixture; more or leſſe: but, here is no degree. Onely, Ne commiſcearis, ſimply. Not, in no great quantity: but, not in the leaſt ſcruple, not at all. It is ranke poiſon; the leaſt drop of it is deadly. Never ſo little is too much.

Therefore, abſolutely, Ne commiſcearis; Medle not with them at all: not with abſolving them, not with giving them the oath, not with praying for them; above all, not with offering the unbloudy ſacrifice, for ſo bloudy a treaſon. Iacob's counſell
Gen 49. 6. is beſt: In conſilium eorum ne veniat anima tua, not to come once among them. To ſe-parate your ſelves from the tents of Coreh, touching whom, you know, what GOD
Num. 16. 26. gave in charge, and what Moſes proclaimed, Away from them, come not neere them, touch not any thing that is theirs. It is infected; they have the plague; if you medle with it, it will bring you to deſtruction.

II. The Penaltie. So are we come to the ſecond Verſe, to the penalty. And, it is not more than needs. 1. For ſure, even good counſell enters but ſlowly into us (we are ſo dull,) if it have not an edge given it: be not ſeconded with ſome forcible reaſon, to helpe it forward. 2. Now, no reaſon more forcible, or of better edge to enter us than that, which is taken from the feare of ſome great miſchiefe or maime inconvenience, which will ſurely take hold of us, if we take not hold of the counſell. 3. And, as none more forcible, ſo none more fit for the preſent counſell: It is, to feare. Now, to induce feare, what way more fit, than to ſet before us, ſome matter of terrour, ſome fearefull object or conſequent, it will bring us to. And what more fearefull, than of all the five fearefull things ſet downe by the Philoſopher, the moſt fearefull (that is) the feare of death? This? Why it workes with beaſts, and even with the dulleſt of them, Balaam's beaſt; Num.22.23. ſparre him, ſtrike him, lay on him with a ſtaffe, ye ſhall never get him to run upon the Angels ſword, upon his owne death; that ſhall ye never. Sure, we are to thinke: His firſt Commandement GOD headed with the beſt head, He had; and that was Morte moreris. He thought it the ſureſt, and moſt likely to prevaile. And, if any thing hold us, this will. If ye feare neither GOD, nor King; yet feare this.

1. But yet, if we weigh the word [deſtruction] there is more in it, than death. To death we muſt all come; but this, it will bring you to an untimely end. Not fall of your ſelfe; but deſtroyed: even plucked downe, a great while before you would fall. 1 Deſtruction.

2. Nay, nor it is not untimely death, neither: there is more in it than ſo (in deſtruction.) All that die before their time, are not deſtroyed: GOD forbid. No: there goeth ſome evill touch, ſome ſhame, ſome foule uncouth end (ever) with it; that is it, that makes it deſtruction.

3. But what manner deſtruction? Some may be reſtored, and built againe: This is ad ruinam (that, is added in the latter part of the Verſe) to ruine: So that, never built againe; never repaired more: that is, to utter deſtruction. 2 Nay, ruine.

4. And yet, there is more ſtill. For, theſe two, (1 ruine, and 2 deſtruction) they be not uſed of a perſon, properly: but, as the word gives, of an houſe, or ſtructure. Adde this then, that it will be the ruine and plucking downe, not of your ſelfe alone, but of your houſe too. And (indeed) how many great Houſes have beene ruined by it?

Then, if this will not hold you from medling; that it is a ſinne, a double ſinne, againſt both Tables; that it is a ſinne of preſumption: if this will not; let this, that it is deſtructory, a deſtroying ſinne; one of thoſe ſinnes, that followes them, that medle with it, hard at the heeles, and never leaves them, till it have brought them to deſtruction and utter ruine: them, and their whole Houſe, it eradicates; it pulls all up by the roots. Sinne it ſelfe is a Nimium: yet, is there a Nimium, in ſinne too, O be not over wicked (ſaith the Preacher) be not too too fooliſh, ſo very wicked, ſo over fooliſh, as to ſhorten your owne dayes, to make you die tempore non ſuo, before your time come: yea, to be deſtroyed utterly, you, your houſe and all. Sure, if this come of it, he bade you not feare, for nought.

Nay, this is not all; he goes further. Of all Retentives, feare; of all feares, the feare of death; death, and deſtruction. Now, of all deſtructions, this: (for, all deſtructions are not of one ſize neither: ſome more fearefull, than other.) But this, this is no common one: it hath two attendants, to make it more fearefull than the ordinary deſtructions, or viſitations of other men. The former two, as it were manacles for the hands; not to have a hand in it: Theſe latter, as fetters to the feet; not to goe about it. But ſtill it runnes upon two; as it were, one for the King, another for GOD ſtill.

This is the firſt: Their deſtruction, it ſhall riſe ſuddenly. Every word hath his weight (if you mark them.) It ſhall riſe: fitly. For, Sedition, we call it a riſing: one riſing, He puniſheth with another. Riſe, it is; not Surget, but conſurget: as early up, riſe as ſoone, as the Sinne it ſelfe. From the firſt moment of ſinne, their deſtruction: riſes with it, followeth it at the heeles; is ſtill hard behind it; if they could look back, and ſee it, it is not an inch from them. 3 And that, ſuddenly.

2. Riſe, and riſe ſuddenly. Let death come ſuddenly upon them at unawares (it is Davids prayer:) and ſo ſhall it come (it is Salomons prophecie:) come, ab improviſo, breake forth, and ſurprize them in a very ſudden. Fitly, this too: Their meaning was, to have diſpatched all of a ſudden: As ſoone as the paper burne, the powder goe off. Quicke and ſudden ſurprizing therefore, doth beſt befit them: the puniſhment, in every point comes home to the ſinne. Pſal.55.15.

3. Sudden things confound, and are therefore the more fearefull. Fit, this againe; Theſe would have brought all to confuſion (what a confuſion had there beene this day?) Meet therefore they ſhould be amazed with the ſuddeneſſe of the breaking out; and the confuſion they meant, fall upon their owne ſoules.

4 And eternally Et ruinam eorum quis ſcit?

4. But, what manner of confuſion? The word he uſes in Hebrew, ſheweth that: It is properly, the confuſion they are in, that are in a thicke miſt or fogge; that, after they have beene a while in it, are they know not where; and when they come out of it, finde themſelves where they never ment to have come.

This fits likewiſe: In a miſt they walkt; carried their matters miſtily: and at laſt, loſt themſelves in it: In darkeneſſe they delighted (darke vaults, darke cellers) and darkneſſe fell upon them for it. And when they were out of their darke vault, found themſelves in a darke priſon; which they little thought ever to have come in.

It doth very well (this ſuddenneſſe) ſet out to us, the courſe and carriage of this ſinne. It will flatter on, and draw him on, a great while. All things will ſeeme ſo ſubtilly contrived, ſo cunningly carried, ſo ſecretly kept, and ſo long; commonly, till the very time it ſhould be done in: And then, even on a ſudden, all breakes out; and that, ſtrangely; and all the goodly cobweb, that was ſo many moneths in ſpinning and weaving, comes me a broome, and in a minute ſnaps it downe and deſtroyes it quite: the cobweb, and the ſpider; the plot it ſelfe, and the author and all. To have their treaſon kept in, ſo many proroguings of the Parliament; their cellar, ſo fitly choſen; their Powder, ſo ſafely laid in, and ſo well couched; and all in a readineſſe: and then, ἐξαίφνης, in a night, ſuddenly to have all come forth, ſo ſtrangely; and all their long conſultations and often deliberations quaſhed all, in a moment! Their deſtruction ſhall riſe ſuddenly, this is the firſt.

But this is nothing to the other, Et ruinam eorum quis ſcit? That, that is the feareſull one, indeed. For, nothing ſo fearefull, as that, a man cannot tell what to make of it. Who knowes their ruine? Who knowes? that is, no man knowes. Good Lord! what might that ruine be, that no man knowes? No man knowes? Why, doe we not all know, what it is they ſuffer, that come to this deſtruction? they are drawne, hanged, &c. we all know it. It is rather, quis neſcit? than quis ſcit? (this) one would thinke.

No: Quis ſcit? (ſaith Salomon) And he knew well what he ſaid. It is unknowne, their ruine: what then ſhall we make of it? Sure, no deſtruction, here. All here, the worſt is knowne of them. It muſt be ſome other-where, in ſome other world, than this. And ſo it is. And that is quis ſcit? indeed: That, no man knowes. For, it is as truly ſaid of the paines of Hell, as of the joyes of Heaven, quis ſcit? Eye hath not ſeene, nor eare heard, nor hath entred into the heart of man, what, or how great they be: the one, not ſo joyfull, but the other as dreadfull: Vnknowne, both: Quis ſcit? equally true of both. For, Nemo ſcit, niſi qui accepit, no man knowes them, but they that be in them.

1 Cor. 2. 9.

Apoc. 2. 17.

And it were well, when they medle firſt with it, they would bethinke them of this. If a man might know before-hand, it were this, or it were that, or it were we know not what; then it were not ſo fearefull. But quis ſcit? goeth beyond all conceit. But they doe, they know not what: and ſo they ſuffer, they know not what. The meaning is: they periſh here, they periſh everlaſtingly: that this deſtruction is eternall deſtruction, and no other.

And indeed, the later word ſheweth as much: which is not every ruine, but (properly) the ruine, or fall into a fire: it is taken from לפיר, that is, a burning fire-brand. This alſo is fit: Fire they meant, and they end in fire; even in Hell-fire. For, ſo is the nature of the word; and ſo is the Hebrew proverb upon it, לפיר לא פריון: It is a ruine, from which there is no redemption, It is a fall, or ruine, from whence no riſing. A fall, into the bottomleſſe pit, into the furnace there: if they once come there, they never come thence. So, it comes ſuddenly; but it lights heavily. They know not, when it comes; but, when it comes, it payes home. When the miſt breakes up, they finde themſelves among the fire-brands there. And if nothing elſe will, let this move them.

And utriuſque we may not leave out. It is added, to make ſure worke. For, if it had had not, it might have beene imagined, that theſe foure noviſſima had beene to come upon them only, that feare not GOD: That there be no miſtaking, in the reference to whome, it is expreſſely ſet downe, utriuſque Horum; it is, upon both of them; one, as well as the other: as well of thoſe, that fault in their dutie toward the King; as thoſe, that are void of the feare of GOD. And againe, as well thoſe, that medle or make; as thoſe, with whom they medle or make; the plotters themſelves. Both of them, in the ſame condemnation: Both come to the ſame deſtruction. So, as wee finde GOD and the King joyned, in one feare, at the firſt; So, here, finde we againe the treſpaſſers againſt either, wrapped up in one deſtruction, at the laſt. Ruinam one end, utriuſque of them both. And, ſuch end may ever come of ſuch beginnings.

III. The Concluſion, Theſe things belong to the wiſe.

And thus (now) he knits up all, πῶτα ὃ λέγω ἐμὶν τοῖς σοφοῖς, Be this ſpoken even to you that be wiſe. For, Salomon's owne ſonne (indeed) was no very wiſe man. So, it might ſeeme (perhaps) to be given to him (this counſell) and ſuch as hee was none of the wiſeſt: Fooles may not medle; Wiſe men may. Now (commonly) they be no fooles, want no wit; they thinke, they beare a braine, that medle in theſe matters. Therefore, is this addition; to ſhew, that how wiſe ſoever they take themſelves, or be they never ſo wiſe, it may well become them, to take this advice here. Hæc quoque ſapientibus: it concernes them too.

There was one, as wiſe, as ever they will be, whoſe counſell (in his time) was holden as the Oracle of GOD: Yet, this great wiſe man, for medling in this, contrary to it, proved but a foole, and made up the number of thoſe that came to this untimely, and unknowne ruine and deſtruction. And now, where he is, we know; what hee ſuffers, we know not. It was Achitophel, I meane. 2 Sam. 16. 23.

And ſtrange it is, that is obſerved of his name. For, Tophel is a foole: And, Achi is a couſin germane at the leaſt, if it be not neerer. So, as wiſe as he was, his name was ominous, and gave him to be (as he proved) germanus ſtulti; a wiſe man; but, of whom a foole might have claimed kindred: As, of him, he might; and, of all, hee may, that medle as he did. This Achitophel, as wiſe as he takes himſelfe, he ſhall be the wiſer if he take this counſell.

The Application to the Day.

We have done with the Text, now: The Day will hold us yet a little. For, the Day ſubſcribes probatum eſt to this Text, and ſets a ſeale to it.

Thus it ſhall be (ſaith Salomon.) But, was it thus? Aske the Day, and it will aske you, was it not thus? was not this Scripture this Day fulfilled, not in our eares, but in our eyes (indeed in both?) Was there not an execution of this ſentence upon it? Did not Salomon ſhew himſelfe to be, not onely a wiſe man, but a Prophet, and that a true one? Luk. 4. 21.

This Day was delivered, aud brought forth certaine ſonnes: You have heard what the Father hath ſaid to his ſonnes; will ye ſtay a little and heare, what the ſonnes will ſay to their Father; take his counſell or no. No: theſe ſonnes were wiſer, than their Father; ſaw deeper (as they thought) into the matter, than Salomon; thought not him wiſe enough, to adviſe them. Not him; but got them an heape of new Fathers, that gave them other manner counſell; even to trie a concluſion with Salomon, upon this Text.

Will yee heare ſome new Divinitie, how ſome Fathers here with uscounſelled their ghoſtly children: the Fathers of the Societie, their ſonnes of the Societie, the wicked Societie of this day? You ſhall ſee the Text turn'd round about, cleane contrarie.

My ſonnes feare GOD and the Pope (ſo is the new edition:) and as for thoſe that would faine change things here, doe, medle with them, ſay Salomon what he liſt. Ecce major Salomone, Loe a greater then Salomon (you know where.) He (as, yet, it ſtands in the gloſſe to be ſeene) made this Booke of Proverbs authenticall, by citing it: and, as he made it, can unmake it againe at his pleaſure. Nothing in it ſhall binde you. Here is the counſell croſſed. Matth. 12. 42.

But then, how ſhall wee doe with the latter verſe? For that, take no thought: where he tels you (this Salomon) of deſtruction, it is nothing ſo: On with your Powder-plot notwithſtanding. You ſhall be ſo farre from this (he tels you) that, if ought come to the plot or you, otherwiſe than we wiſh, it ſhall be no deſtruction; no, but a holy martyrdome, And quis ſcit? who knowes the bleſſed eſtate you ſhall come to by theſe meanes? But, Martyrs you ſhall bee ſtraight upon it, in print: And who knowes, whether there may not be wrought a ſtraw-miracle, to confirme as much if need be?

But to put you cleane out of doubt, for your medling: you ſhall have of us the Fathers of the Societie to medle in it, as well as you; to make up this holy medley with you. To confeſſe you, to abſolve you, to ſweare you, to houzle you, to ſay Maſſe for you, and to keepe your counſell in all holy equivocation. You ſee, what worke was made; how the matter was uſed with this Scripture when time was: how the Fathers of the Societie tooke this Father by the beard, and affronted him and his counſell, in every part of it.

What ſhall we ſay of theſe Sonnes, and theſe Fathers? Sure, their Catholike faith we will not medle with; but, what Salomon ſaith, we may be bold to ſay, and pronounce, Feare of GOD there was none in them: neither in the father, nor in the ſonne. Neither in them, that gave the counſell; nor in them, that tooke it. None of them, GOD's ſervants: Him, they feared not: None of them, Salomons ſonnes; him, they heard not.

But, of the twaine, the fathers, that gave the counſell, farre the worſe: who, what Salomon termes deſtruction, that turned they into edification: and, what he ruine, that changed they into exaltation; & gloriam utriuſque quis ſcit? A ſtrange change: that, now become glorious, that, before theſe dayes, was ever damned as deteſtable! Changers right: change States, and change Churches, ſo long till they change Divinitie and all; ſet up a new feare of GOD, a fearefull one to Kings and to Kingdomes; and that had like, this Day, to have coſt many a thouſand mens lives.

And needs there not a retentive, when theſe coine ſuch motives? when that, which by Father Salomon (here) is ſo ſtraightly forbidden, is juſtified, nay, is ſanctified, and glorified, by theſe Anti-paters, Anti-Salomons, Anti-greater-than-Salomon: they?

Well, looke to the end. See, what became of this ſanctified Sedition. Sure, here Salomon was in the right: reade their deſtiny truely. For, ſurpriſed they were, and blacked all of the ſudden; and that, ſtrangely; and carried away ſtraight to their utter ruine: And their ruine who knoweth? Not their ruine here, or fall from the ladder; but a greater ruine, and into a deeper place: How low, into what torments, quis ſcit? (ſaith Salomon) and ſo ſay I. Their end (here) we ſaw: their end, who knowes? Or, how they hang in hell for it? And all, for not following this advice.

To draw to an end: their ruine we know not; that, is quis ſcit? But, by their ruine who knowes not; that is, quis neſcit? For, all men ſee and know, how highly theſe medlings diſpleaſe GOD, who hath ſo many wayes, ſo ſtrangely, both of old and of late, and ſtill doth teſtifie to the world plainely, His deepe diſlike of them: that a wonder it is, that (ſtill) there are, that dare adventure upon them; ſave that, GOD, for want of His true feare in their hearts, ſuffers this efficacie of errour, this ſtrange deluſion to beſot them.

But, let them take this from Salomon; that, toties quoties, ſo oft as they ſeeke to Mica 3.10. build Sion in bloud, ſo oft ſhall their building end in deſtruction: and ſo oft as they riſe to that end, they ſhall riſe to their ruine: fathers, and ſonnes, and ſonnes-ſonnes, to the end of the world.

But, we (Beloved) who have better learned to feare GOD (I truſt) if Salomon ſhall acknowledge us for his ſonnes, or GOD for His ſervants; if we will be the children of Matth. 13.9. Wiſdome, let Wiſdome be juſtified of her children. Let us do Salomon the honour, to thinke him wiſe enough, to give us counſell. And ſince wee ſee, hee is proved a Prophet, and not

not a word of all this Text is fallen to the ground; that ſtrange examples there have beene of it, and that, many; and this day, one Exemplum ſine exemplo, an Example per ſe, a matchleſſe one, in this kinde: Having theſe before our eyes, and having in remembrance the foure noviſſima in the Text, 1 Deſtruction, 2 ruine, 3 repentè, and 4 quis ſcit. Let us feare thoſe foure; and fearing them, perſiſt as we have done hitherto, in the feare of GOD and the King; and ever feare, to have to doe or to deale with them, that feare neither. So I pray GOD, we may; and that this may be the fruit, even our fruit. And, His bleſſing upon that, hath beene ſpoken, that we may live and die Timentes Deum & Regem, ever pure from this mixture: and ſo GOD make Vs all.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL, on the V. of Novem. A. D. MDCXV.

PSAL: CXLV. VER. IX.

Suavis DOMINUS universis: & Miserationes Ejus super omnia opera Ejus.

The LORD is good to all: and His mercies are over all His workes.

TEN yeares it is now, since our memorable delivery, as upon this day: And we here to celebrate, not the Anniversary onely, but the Decennalia of it. Now, in numbring, it is well knowne, that, at ten, we beginne anew at the figure of one; we returne againe (ever) to the first. So doe we now. For, this was the first; Misericordia DOMINI super opera ejus.

We shall never forget it, so many of us as then heard it, that it was the first, that it was thought (and that, Authore magno) to be the fittest theme of all, wherewith to beginne the first solemne thankesgiving of all, for the great Mercie of GOD, and for the great Worke of that Mercie, this Day, shewed upon us all.

To this then the first (every way, the first) may I crave pardon, to put to my poore cipher, and make it ten, this tenth yeare. So, as it was the first fruits, it may be the tenth. So, they may be, as they should be, Primitiæ & Decimæ de eodem, both out of one and the same.

It

It led us at the very firſt, whither firſt and laſt we muſt come; to the true Cauſe of that our Delivery: of that, and of all other, we have had, or ever ſhall have, the Super omnia of His Mercies.

That deliverance when it came, it came not temerè, it had a cauſe. That cauſe was GOD, and, in GOD, His Mercy, It was the mercy of GOD, we were not conſumed: ſo ſaid we then (out of Ieremie) at the ſeventh yeare. That mercy of His, that is ſuper omnia: So ſay we now (out of David) at the tenth. For, this is King David; and, that way, not unfit neither: As, written firſt by a King; applied ſince, by a King; in the caſe of ſaving a King, and a Kingdome: Or rather, one King, but more Kingdomes than one. Lament. 3. 22.

It was then ſpoken, to the praiſe. And it is a praiſe; and it is out of a praiſe. For ſo, is this Pſalme intitled: David's Praiſe. For howſoever the prayers and the praiſes (all) in this Booke, are, (for the moſt part) of Davids penning: yet, two there are, he hath ſingled out from the reſt, and ſet his owne marke on them, as proper to himſelfe. The LXXXVI. Pſalme, his Tephilla; Davids owne Prayer. And this here, his Tehilla his owne Praiſe or thankſgiving. As if he had made the reſt, for all in common: but reſerved theſe peculiarly for himſelfe.

With Exaltabo te DEVS, it begins; He will exalt GOD; Every day, and for ever: ſo he vowes, in the two firſt verſes. For what, will he exalt Him? For many high perfections in Him. For the greatneſſe of His Nature, which is infinite, at the third; For the greatneſſe of His wondrous workes (the fourth:) for His glorious Majeſty (the fifth:) For His mighty Power (the ſixth:) For His Goodneſſe, ſubdivided into His Iuſtice and Mercy: For His Iuſtice (the ſeventh;) And for His Mercy (the eighth.) And here now, in the ninth, in this verſe, and theſe very words, He ſets the Super omnia, the crowne and garland (as it were) on Mercies head; gives it the Soveraignty over all. Exaltabo Te; GOD He will exalt: and Exaltabo in Te, in GOD he will exalt His mercy, above all the reſt.

Vpon the matter then; all is (as we ſaid) but a praiſe of Mercy. And a praiſe, not poſitivè (that is not ſo effectually) but, by way of compariſon (held ever the better.) The Summe.

In a compariſon (ever) three points we looke to: 1. With whom it is made, With the workes of GOD. 2. How large it is laid; Not with ſome one or more, but with them all; all commers (as they ſay.) 3. And, in what? In the point of Super; (in that, there is ſo much adoe about) the point of Supremacie: whether above, whether Superiour to other.

Two things of GOD there are ſet downe: 1 His Mercies, and 2 His Workes; theſe two compared: Compared, in the point of Super, and Mercy found to carry it. Her's the Supremacie. All His workes, high all, great all, all excellent: But majorum horum Miſericordia, the higheſt, greateſt, moſt excellent of them all, Mercy; that, the Super omnia of them all. Of theſe then.

Firſt of the words as they ſtand in order.

Then, of Merci's Super, and that three wayes, 1 Super, above; (So, we read it.) 2 Super, over; (So the LXX. ἐπὶ πάντα.) 3 Super, upon; So we pray, Fiat miſericordia ſuper nos, Let thy mercy be upon us. 1. Super, above it may be (as a Spire is) and not reflect downe, and be over. 2. Super, over it may be, and hoover aloft; not deſcend, or come downe upon us. 3. But, Super, upon, is it; when it lights upon us: that is, Fiat miſericordia ſuper nos. The Diviſion. I. II.

And of theſe, 1 as well for Merci's honour, that is over them, 2 as for the good of the Workes, that are under it.

Then come we to a Super in this Super, Vpon ſome of GOD's workes, more than otherſome: And ſo to our ſelves; And ſo to this day. III.

For (ſure) this Scripture, if it be well looked unto, doth competere, agree to no caſe, ſo, as it doth to ours; Nor to ours, as this day. We are His workes once, and

thoſe

Thoſe Mercies of his, here ſaid to be over all His workes, have beene over and upon us. Vpon us, in LXXXVIII. and many other times: but, above all other moſt ſenſibly, this day; this day, of all dayes. And that with ſuch a Super, in ſo high a degree, in ſuch, ſo great a Mercy, ſo great a worke of Mercy, as great as ever was any. In Saving ſo great a number, from ſo ſtrange and unheard of a cruelty: by a Mercy, ſuper omnia (I may ſay;) from a cruelty, Super omnia (I am ſure.)

IV Then laſtly, what we are in Super to GOD, for this Super. Where, 1 of the Super upon the head of all GOD's Workes, for theſe His Mercies thus over them. 2 And, of all His Workes, and above them all, of the Super remaining upon our heads, for diverſe beſides, but for this Day and this Worke, Super omnia: Above all the Dayes, we ever ſaw; Above all the workes, He ever wrought for us.

And, it is the tenth yeare, this; And, naturally, Decumana ſunt grandiora. A Fluctus decumanus, a deepe floud it was, had like to have gone over our ſoules: And a Miſericordia Decumana, A Mercy of a large ſize it was, that made, it went not then. That we performe then Laudes Decumanas, great praiſe and large thankes, now, this Anno Decimo, ſome way anſwerable to the greatneſſe of our Perill, and to the greatneſſe of the Mercy, that made us ſo well paſſe it. The numbers of ſeven and ten are not without their weight. The Seventh, the Sabbath: The Tenth, GOD's part. Both wayes, as the Sabbath day, as the Tenth yeare, ſacred to GOD is this Day, and our dutie upon it.

Pſal. 38. 4.

I. Of the words in order. Miſericordiæ, The Mercies.

MIſericordiæ DOMINI. Miſericordiæ. To looke into the nature of the word Mercy: It is beſt conceived, by the Object, and by the Act. Mercy hath for her Object circa quod, her matter and metall to worke upon, Miſery: the beſt Vertue, the worſt Object of all. It is not ſo plaine (this) in our Engliſh word [Mercy] as in the Latine [Miſericordia] for, there, is miſery full out at the length.

Vpon this Object, the proper Act of Mercy, Miſeratio, as the Fathers read this Text: Miſericordia is the Habit; Miſeratio, the Act, which is nothing elſe but Miſericordia eliquata, that wich runnes from Mercy, at the melting; the Act that releeves us of miſery, and all the degrees that lead to it, neceſſities, impotencies, defects, diſtreſſes, dangers, and whatſoever would make our caſe miſerable, more or leſſe.

To releeve theſe, is the Act: and (this you muſt take with you) without merit, to releeve them. The oppoſition, the Church makes, in diverſe her Collects, Non noſtris meritis, ſed tuâ ſolâ miſericordiâ, with an expreſſe obſtante of all merit. For, the eye of Iuſtice will releeve all them, that deſerve it. Goodneſſe, in merentes, that, is Iuſtice. Goodneſſe, in immerentes, yea, and ſometimes a degree farther, in malè merentes, that is, Mercy properly. Nevertheleſſe (ſaith the CVI. Pſalme) for all they deſerved it (to be miſerable) when he ſaw their miſery (ſaw that, and nothing elſe to move Him) that moved Him, and He heard their complaint, and gave order for their reliefe. This, is Mercie.

Miſericordiæ Ejus Mercies in GOD.

This, Mercy is in GOD; Miſericordiæ Ejus. Indeed ſuch is the immutable conſtancie of the Divine Nature, as we ſhould hardly conceive it to be in this wiſe flexible, but that great care is taken of this point (of no one, ſo great;) that there is Mercie in GOD, there be Miſericordiæ Ejus.

But what Mercy? From the nature and force of the word רחמים, which (I am not now to tell you, I have done it heretofore) is properly the bowels; that is, there are tender mercies in GOD (ſo we turne it, in the Benedictus.) Not, of the ordinary ſort, ſlight, and ſuch as pierce not deepe, come not farre: but, ſuch as come de profundis, from the very bowels themſelves; that affect that part, make the bowels relent.

And

And what bowels? Not the bowels of the common man (for then מעים had beene the right word:) but רחמים are the bowels of a parent (ſo, we ſaid, the word ſignifies) and this ads much; ads to mercie οἰκτιρμῶν, naturall love. To one ſtrong affection, another as ſtrong, or ſtronger than it.

And what Parent? the more pittifull of the twaine, the Mother. For, רחם (the ſingular of this word) is Hebrew for the wombe. So as this, to the two former, addeth the Sex; the Sex, holden to be the more paſſionate, and compaſſionate of both. 1 Of all mercies, thoſe from the bowels: 2 and of all bowels, the bowels of a parent; 3 and, of the two parents thoſe of the mother, thoſe from the wombe: ſuch pitie, as the mother takes of the child of her wombe; ſuch, as the wombe, of the child that lay in it. Mercies are in God; ſuch mercies are in God.

And GOD, willing to ſet forth unto us the exceeding great tenderneſſe of His mercie, to have it throughly apprehended by us, Humanum dicit, ſpeakes to us in our own Puerilis. And, to expreſſe the efficacie of His action, takes to Him, the affection: and to expreſſe the affection, takes to Him the part of the body, the ſeat of it, the bowels: and, the bowels of a parent, of that parent, whoſe bowels, in our nature, are the pittifulleſt of all, the mother. And (if you will) you may adde this: that one mother hath but one wombe, for all her children; but, he ſpeakes (here) of GOD in the plurall; as if He had the compaſſion of more wombes than one, the pity of many mothers put together.

It is good newes for us, theſe mercies are in God: but, better yet, that they are in Him; with a Super. But, beſt of all, that that Super, a Super, not Super quædam, but Super omnia. In God, with a Super.

Much is ſaid in few words, to mercies praiſe, when this is ſaid, Super omnia. Nihil ſupra were much, none above it: but Super omnia, it above all; he that ſaith that leaves no more to ſay: there is no higher degree; Super omnia is the Superlative. And that ſuper Super omnia.

Super omnia, Above all. For, Opera ejus, His works, theſe two might well be ſpared. All, are workes: and all are His works. Super omnia opera ejus, that is, abſolutely Super omnia. For, workes, is no terme diminuent here: All His workes, that is, all, ſimply. Beſide God and His works, there is in the wide world, nothing at all.

But yet, with His workes, with them it is laid; and well: Not, with God's other Attributes, abſolutely; but with them, in the point of works: His Attributes are all alike; all, as Himſelfe is; infinite, all; and one infinite is not more than another. But, take the workes (and Virtus in actione, we know) lay it there; Compare the workes of any of them, nay, of all of them, with the works of mercy, and mercy carries it cleere. More works; more, in number; (If they their thouſand, mercie her tenne thouſands:) 1 Sam. 18. 7. More great, more glorious Workes, of it, than of any of them all; Nay, than of all of them: Super omnia opera, that it is. And now to our Super. And firſt, Super, above.

II.

Super, above, is ſaid (here) by way of figure. Properly, Super is of height: height is a dimenſion, that pertaines to quantity; and quantity, to bodies; whereof Mercy is none. The meaning is, it is the chiefeſt. So, heaven in the greater World; So, the Head, in the leſſe: both of them the higheſt, both of them the chiefeſt; chiefeſt of all, and rule all. As (indeed) of whom is Super ſaid, ſo rightly, as of the Soveraigne? So doth mercy: namely, His Power (which may ſerve for all) Deus (ſaith the Church, the ninth Sunday after Trinity) qui omnipotentiam Tuam parcendo maximè & miſerando manifeſtas; GOD, which ſhewest thine Almighty power, moſt chiefly, in ſhewing mercy. Of their Super 1 Super, above.

But to keepe us to the letter. Super, above, is either 1 reall, or 2 locall. 1. Reall, as Saul above the people, higher by the head and ſhoulders than any of them. 2. Locall, as Zachee; though low in ſtature, yet above in the top of a Sycamore tree. 1 Sam. 10. 23. Luk. 19. 4.

Mercy is it ſelfe higheſt. We will ſoone end this point, by the heavens, the uppermoſt of all His workes. His mercy (ſaith the CVIII. Pſalme) is ſupra above; and that, with a ſuper, a great way above the heavens: and, if above them, above all under them. It is it ſelfe higheſt. 1 Above reall. Pſal. 103. 4.

1 In place.

And it hath the higheſt place of all, above all, the precedence before all. The higheſt place. The Arke was (on earth) the figure of the ſpirituall heaven: Over it were the Cherubins; Above, upon the top of their wings, was the Mercy-Seat; there ſits mercie in the higheſt place of all.

2 In precedence. Exod. 34.6.

As the higheſt place, above all: ſo the precedence before all. In Gods owne ſtile framed and proclamed by Himſelfe, Exod. XXXIV. conſiſting of thirteene titles, (מדות) meaſures or degrees) next after the Lord God, the very firſt is this word, here. And take this withall; that, of the thirteene, nine of them belong to Mercy: that proportion it hath, that ſo, it may have the ſuper every way.

From this place it hath, over all (and by GOD's appointment; it took it not, it ſelfe, we gather the place it hath, in GOD's eſteeme. That, which one moſt ſets by, he ſets by himſelfe, and next himſelfe: ever, the deereſt, the neereſt ſtill. GOD, by thus ſetting it, next to Him (none betweene God and it, in His Style) ſhewes plainely, what vertue it is, He loves above all; and what vertue He commends to us above all. To us all; but ſpecially, to them that are above all: To be ſuper omnia, in them that be ſuper omnes. As the nobler the Nature, and the neerer to God, the more eaſie (ever) to take the impreſſion of it. To hold you no longer in this firſt. It is one of Gods Titles (Melchiſedek firſt gave to him) Altiſſimus. As Hee, Altiſſimus: ſo Mercie, altiſſima ever: Altiſſima, in Altiſſimo, the higheſt Vertue in Him that is moſt high, which is God, above all to be bleſſed, and to be bleſſed for this above all. And this, for ſuper, above.

Gen. 14.19. Rom. 9.5.

2 Super over.

But, there is more than ſo, in it. Super is over; ἐπὶ πάντα, is over all. All that are above, are not over. It is not above only, as an Obelisk or Maypole, higher than all about them, but have neither ſhadow nor ſhelter; no good they doe. Mercy hath a broad top, ſpreading it ſelfe over all. It is ſo above all, as it is over them, too. As the vault of this Chappell is over us, and the great vault of the Firmament over that. The ſuper of latitude and expanſion, no leſſe than of altitude, and elevation.

And this, to the end that all may retire to it, and take covert: It, over them; and they, under it. Vnder it, under the ſhadow of it, as of Eſay's great rocke in the Wilderneſſe, from the heat. Vnder it, under the ſhelter of it, as of Daniels great Tree, from the Tempeſt.

Eſay 32.2. Dan 4.12.

Super omnia, Over all. Pſal. 104.24.

Over all his workes, now. O Lord (ſaith the CIV. Pſalm) how manifold are thy works! We ſhall never get through halfe of them, GOD knowes; Non eſt pertranſire infinitum. We will contract them, thus: take the two extremes, ſo ſhall we take in all betwixt them. Over all, that is, none of them all ſo high, but as high as they be, they need come under it. Nor none of them all ſo meane, but as meane as they be, they are not left out: one way or other, within it, under it, all. So we divide His workes, into His OPERA, and His opuſcula; and over both it is.

1 All His workes. His OPERA. Iob 15.15. Rom 9.23. Gen 32.10.

None ſo high: None on earth, not His Saints (who of all on earth, have the ſuper, are of higheſt perfection) In them He found no ſtedfaſtneſſe (Iob XV.) they be Vaſa miſericordiæ all. If you will take it with Iacobs ſtaffe, He ſaith, minor ſum cunctis, he is under them, under them all.

Not in earth then: No, nor in Heaven. Neither heaven it ſelfe, nor the brighteſt part of heaven, the ſtarres; they are not cleane in His ſight, they alſo need it. Nay, not the Angels, the very brighteſt of them all: In them He found, Pravitatem, [illegible] ſomewhat amiſſe even in them. So, over them too; they need it. The very Seraphim have ſomething to cover. As for the Cherubin, they will ſet Mercie a ſeat upon the top of their wings: So glad and faine are they to have it over them. All the tongues of Saints and Angels muſt ſay this verſe with us, Miſericordia Domini ſuper omnia opera ejus. Both ſay it, for both need it: And if both they, I would faine know, who needs it not.

Iob 15.15. Iob 4.18. Eſay 6.1. Exod. 37 9.

2 All His Opuſcula.

Now, as none ſo high; none of His opera, His Folio-workes: So, none ſo meane, none of His opuſcula, but over them too. As His art no leſſe wonderfull, in making the Ant, than the Elephant: So, His care no leſſe over the one, than over the other.

Naturas

Naturas rerum minimarum non destituit Deus: The very minims of the world, His Mercie leaves them not destitute. Not the Wilde Asses, without a place to quench their thirst. Not the young Ravens crying on Him. Not the sparrow of halfe a farthing, lets not them light on the ground without His providence. Even these, even such His mercy is over also. It is not Pallium breve; the Mantle is wide enough, it leaves none out. Psal.104.11. 147.9. Matth.10.29.

None, but? What say you to hell and those there? Not them? Nazianzen (that had the honour to be called the Divine, of his time) thinks it may be maintained, not them: and so doe the Schoole-men all, inasmuch as even there, Mercy moderates, too. That it is not, with them there, as it might and should be; but tolerabilius, easier, than they do deserve by much. None, no not in that place, though beaten with many stripes; not yet with so many as the quality of his offence, in rigour of justice would require. This is sure: Deus præmiat ultrà, punit citrà: God (ever) rewards beyond, but punishes on this side; short still, of that we deserve: that His very punishment is tempered with mercy: that even in His wrath, He remembreth mercy. Luke 12 47. Hab.3.2.

But we will not stand upon this; we need not, we shall find another Super for these, anon. For many are the Supers of mercy. Not in any one (possibly;) but in one sense or other, over all. Then (if it go by quò communius eò melius) None so good, for none so common (I am sure.)

And reason, why Mercy should spread the wing of her mantle thus, over all. All are Opera ejus. Opera ejus: Ejus may be referred indifferently: to Mercy, as well as to God. Mercy hath the name from רחם, the wombe. For, she was the womb, (indeed) in which, all were conceived at first, and she delivered of them all. Plaine, by the CXXXVI. Psalme; Who by His excellent Wisdome made the heavens, Who layd out the earth above the waters, who made great lights, &c. And the cause of every one, at the end of every one, and of twenty more, For, His mercy endureth for ever. That, set all on work: His Wisdome, to contrive; His power, to execute; appointed all, did all. The reason is Ejus, referred to Mercy. Mercy the maker of them all. Psal.136.5, 6, 7, &c.

It was Mercy, and nothing but mercy, set the Creation in hand. For, it is well known, ab non ente, there could be no moving cause at all. Nothing we were; We, and all His workes: In nothing, there can be nothing to induce, why it should be brought out of the state of being nothing. So that, His mercy it was, that removed that universall defect, of non entitie at the first.

And having then made them, it is kindly, that Viscera misericordiæ should be over those Opera that came de visceribus; whom it brought from nothing, to be over them and not see them cast away, and brought to nothing againe. The Eagle (saith Moses) the poore Hen (saith our Saviour) will do it for their young ones: stretch their wings over them to preserve them, what they can. Mercy the preserver of all. Exod.19.4. Mat.13.37.

So that these very two words [Opera ejus] containe in them a reason, why mercy should do no lesse. A reason? Nay two. 1 One, for that they be Ejus, His. I am thine, ô save me; a good reason: His they be, a part of His possession. That alone, is enough with us, to preserve that is ours; only because it is ours, though we never made it. 2 But besides that they be His, they be His handieworke. Another good inducement, Despise not ô Lord the works of thine own hands. We see then, why over all; quia ejus, quia opera; because His, all; because His workes, all. And it is well for us, the reason is laid so large. For, what ever we be or do, or what ever become of us, His we are, and His workes we are still. So, still His mercy is over us, and we under it. The reason. 1 In Ejus, his possession. Psal.119 94. In opera, his handyworke. Psal.137.8

It made me say at first, This Super as it is highly to the praise of Mercy, that it is over His workes: So it is every way, as highly to the good of all his works, which are under mercy. The vanitie, Salomon saw (One set over others for their hurt) hath no place, here. That Mercy is over all, is for the generall good of all, and that is ever a blessed Super. We shall not need to feare any heart-burning, any emulation, for this Super: or to aske what the works say to it? they all say, Amen Hallelúja: glad are they, that mercy is in that place; they would have none other, if they might. It followeth next, Confiteantur tibi opera; His workes are ready all to confesse, to acknowledge this Supremacie without any scruple; to take the oath to it. Super omnia. 1 For mercies praise. 2 For the good of His workes. Eccl.8 9. Verse 18.

For Super (over) there is no doubt, that it is as the Cherubims wings, ſtretched from one ſide of the Temple to the other; Over all, for all to flie under and finde ſuccour there. Tutiſſimum eſt (ſay they, that can ſay leaſt by it:) when all is done, nothing, whereto we may ſo ſafely commit our ſelves. And, therefore Super omnia, that Super omnia we might truſt in it. But I ſay, that, even Super (above) it is not, as a bare pole upright; there is a brazen Serpent upon the top of it, for us to look up to and receive comfort by. I will touch two or three: for thus we deduce. Firſt, if it be above all His workes, it followes, then above every one of them: And, One will ſerve the turne. Of all the works of God there is no work we are afraid of, but one; that is, His judgment, the work of His juſtice. Above that, it is: for, above all it is. And, that is to our comfort greatly. For which (beſides this generall above all, and therefore above it) we owe to Saint James; that we have it expreſſed in particular, even in termes terminant, Miſericordia Super-exaltat judicium, Mercie is exalted (more than exalted, Super-exalted) above judgement, nominatim. That work of His, we moſt ſtand in awe of, over that work by name, Mercy triumpheth. And, in the very Decalogue, there may you ſee the Super of a thouſand to foure, in Mercy over juſtice. Even there, even in the rolle of His Iuſtice (the Law;) there, would God have it extant upon record, that Mercy is above it.

Exod. 20 6.

And if mercy be above it, thither (to mercy) we may remove our cauſe, as to the Higher Court. There lieth an Appeale thither, A Solio Iuſtitiæ ad Thronum Gratiæ, from the Bench of Iuſtice, to the Throne of Grace and Mercy. There, we may be relieved. Now, if it be above that Opus, that work of Gods, for Gods works we ſeek no more.

Heb. 4.16.

A ſecond we deduce thus. If it be above all His workes, ſhall it not much more be above all ours? What are we to Him; ours to His? No work of ours then, or to bee done by us, but the mercy of God is above it; no ſinfull work (I meane; that we erre not Cains error, His ſinne was above GODS mercy: No; Mercy above it. Grande eſt barathrum peccatorum meorum (it is Chryſoſtome) ſed major eſt Abyſſus miſericordiæ Dei: Great is the whirlepoole of my wicked workes, but greater is the Betheſda, the wide and deepe gulfe of the mercy of God that hath no bottome. And indeed, it were not truely ſaid, It is above all His workes, (all His, and much more then, above all ours) if any of all our workes were above it; No more then, There is a Lambe, that taketh away the ſins of the world, if there were any ſinne in the world, He takes not away. And this is the Super indeed, that would be looked into by us, by reaſon of another Super, Iniquitates noſtræ ſupergreſſæ ſunt capita noſtra, Our ſins are gone up, over, above our heads; over head and eares, in ſinne. And another Super yet, above them; Even the phials of Gods wrath hanging over our heads, ready to be powred on us and them, were it not, that mercie is above them, and ſtaies them: Were it not that, Over whom miſery, over them mercy: Elſe were wee in danger to be overwhelmed with them every houre. We ſee then, the compariſon was well laid in Super. Our ſinnes, over us; judgments over them; but mercie over all, Super omnia. Alwaies, where there is Super, there is Satis; Satis ſuperque ſhewes, Super is more than Satis. Enough then there is, and to ſpare, for them all.

2 Above all our works, our ſinfull works.

Gen. 4.13.

Iohn 1.29.

Pſal. 38.4.

Apoc. 16 1.

One more: not only above all ours, but if it be above all His works, then is it above all the works of them that be His works: and ſo (not to hold you) above the Devill and all His works. For he alſo, is one of them: Of Gods making, as an Angell; of His own marring, as a devill. Above his works (I ſay) and above the works, and practices of his limmes, and all they can doe or deviſe againſt them, over whom His mercy is. The Son of God (ſaith Saint Iohn) in mercy therefore appeared, Ut ſolveret opera Diaboli, that He might looſe, undoe, quite diſſolve the workes of the Devill. No worke ſhall he contrive, never ſo deep under ground, never ſo neere the borders of his own region, but Gods mercy will bring it to light; it, and the workers of it. His mercy will have a Super, for their Subter. There ſhall be more in Mercy, to ſave; than in Satan, to deſtroy: More, dicat nunc Iſrael; more, may this Realme now ſay. A notorious Work of His, as ever any; Nay, Super omnia, as never was any, this day by His mercy brought to light, and diſſolved, quite diſſolved. We heard it not with our eares, our fathers told it us not; our eyes beheld this Super.

3 Above the works of all His works.

1 Ioh. 3.8.

Pſalm. 124.1.

Pſalm. 44.1.

So

So we are come, to our owne caſe, yet we were aware, That is Super, upon. Over all it is; yet, not over all alike: at leaſtwiſe, not upon all alike; upon ſome, more than over other ſome. Æqualiter eſt Illi cura de omnibus, but, not æqualis; Equally, a care of all, but not an equall care, though. No, His mercy over all in generall, is no barre, but upon ſome there may bee a ſpeciall Super; and ſo, ſome have a Super in this Super too. 3 Super upon: 1 Vpon ſome, more than others of His workes.

For, if the reaſon, why mercy is over all His works be, becauſe they be His workes: then, the more they be His workes, the more workmanſhip He beſtowes upon them, the more is His mercy over them. Whereby it falls out, that as there is an unequality of His works, and one work above another; ſo is there a diverſe graduation of His mercy, and one mercy above another; or rather, one and the ſame mercy, as the ſame Planet in Auge, in the top of His Epicycle, higher then it ſelfe, at other times.

To ſhew this, we divide His works, (as we have warrant) into His works of Fiat (as the reſt of His creatures:) and the Work of Faciamus, as Man, the maſter-peece of His works; upon whom He did more coſt, ſhewed more workmanſhip, than on the reſt: the very word [Faciamus] ſets him above all. 1. Gods προβουλία: that He did deliberate, enter into conſultation (as it were) about his making, and about none elſe. 2. Gods αὐτοεγία: that Himſelfe framed his body of the mould, as the potter, the clay. 3. Then, that He breathed into him a two-lived ſoule, which made the Pſalmiſt breake out, Domine quid eſt homo, &c. Lord, what is man that thou ſhouldſt ſo regard Him, as to paſſe by the heavens and all the glorious bodies there, and paſſing by them, breathe an immortall ſoule, put thine own image, upon a peece of clay? 4. But laſt, Gods ſetting him Super omnia opera manuum ſuarum, Over all the works of His hands. His making him (as I may ſay) Count Palatine of the world; this ſhewes plainely, His ſetting by Man more than all of them. As he then, over them; ſo, Gods mercy over him. Over all His works; but, of all His works, over this work. Over His chiefe work, chiefly: in a higher degree. And, not without great cauſe. Man is capable of eternall either felicitie or miſery; ſo are not the reſt: He ſins; ſo do not they. So, his caſe requires a Super in this Super, requires mercy more than all theirs. 2 Vpon Man more than other creatures. Gen.1.26. Gen.2.7. Pſalm.8.4. Pſalm.8.6.

Vpon men then, chiefly. They, the firſt Super in this Super. But, of men (though it be true in generall, He hath ſhut up all under ſin, that Hee might have mercy upon all, yet) even among them a Super too, a ſecond. Another workmanſhip He hath yet; His workmanſhip in Chriſt Ieſus: the Apoſtle calls it (Epheſ. 2.10.) His new creature (*Gal.*6.15.) which His mercy is more directly upon, than upon the reſt of mankind; Servator omnium hominum, the Saviour of all men (ſaith the Apoſtle;) marrie, Autem, moſt of all, of the faithfull Chriſtian men. Of all men, above all men, upon them: They are His Work wrought on both ſides; Creation on one ſide, Redemption on the other. For (now) we are at the work of Redemption. Rom.11.32. 1 Tim.4.10.

And here now is Mercy right, in kind, רחמה רחמי Rahame Rahama, the mercy of the bird of mercy, that is the Pelicans mercy (for, כחמת is the Pelican, which hath her name of mercy, as the truly mercifull bird.) For, here (now) is not the wombe to hatch them, nor the wings to cloake them, but the Pelicans bill of mercy, ſtriking it ſelfe to the heart, drawing bloud thence, even the very heart-bloud, to revive her young ones, when they were dead in ſin, and to make them live anew the life of grace. This is Miſericordia ſuper omnes miſericordias. Shall I ſay it? (I may truly:) Mercy, in all elſe, above His works; but, in this, above Himſelfe. For, when it brought Him downe from Heaven to Earth, to ſuch a birth in the manger, ſuch a life in contradiction of ſinners, ſuch a death on the Croſſe, it might truely be ſaid then, Miſericordia etiam triumphat de Deo. You ſhall mark therefore, at the very next words, when he comes to his thanks, it is Confiteantur Tibi opera Deus, but Sancti Tui benedicant Tibi: Thy works, let them ſay Confiteor; Thy redeemed, Thy Saints, let them ſing Benedictus. Thy works, let them tell truth and confeſſe; But Thy Saints, let them ſpeake all good and bleſſe Thee; highly bleſſe Thee, for this thy high mercy of all other upon them, as of all other, they have moſt cauſe to doe. Luk.2.13. Heb.12.3. Phil.2.8. Verſe 10.

To elevate it one degree, one Super, more. For (I know not how, but you ſhall obſerve, that, even among the faithfull, even among them, God ſingles out ſome one People ſtill, from the reſt, that He makes of above the reſt, and vouchſafes His ſpeciall favour upon, more than the reſt, though Chriſten men, as well as they; and no reaſon in the world to be given of it, but the Super of His mercy. It was ever ſo: Some Nation, of whom it might be ſaid, Non taliter fecit omni Nationi, He hath not dealt ſo with every Nation:- Nay, Non omni is nulli, Hee hath not dealt ſo with any Nation. Some of whom it might be ſaid, Of all the people in the Earth, I have choſen you, to come neereſt you, to vouchſafe you my chiefeſt, my choiceſt mercies, Super omnes. Not in matters only pertaining to the ſoule, in which all Chriſtians are intereſſed alike; but even in the things pertaining to the courſe of this life, ſecular (as we call them) and temporall: In them, too. And, in both, is better than one alone. In ſaving that way with the ſalvation, the King rejoyceth in (21. Pſalm.) ſaving them, from plots and practices, even againſt their worldly proſperity; from Achitophels plots, from Abſaloms Vow, and ſuch like.

Pſal. 147. 20.

III. Our Super in this Super.

And now to our Super. For, may not we (think you) reckon our ſelves in all, in this laſt, above all. His works firſt: ſo are all His creatures. His chiefe workemanſhip: ſo are other men. His workmanſhip in Chriſt: ſo are other Chriſtians. But above all, theſe, His non taliter. For, if we be not very dim-ſighted, without any perſpective glaſſe, we may ſee ſuch mercies and favours of His, Super upon our ſelves, as (ſure) the nations round about us have not ſeene: and I thinke I may ſay, not any nation on the Earth ſeene the like.

Many wayes might this be made appeare, and many daies brought to give us light to it: But, let all elſe paſſe in ſilence: this Day, this fifth of November, is inſtar omnium. Nay, is ſuper omnes, before, beyond, above them all: to elevate to us, this point, of the tender mercies of our God, whereby this day ſprung from on high did viſit us. This Day (I ſay) enough and enough, to bring from all our mouthes, that it brought from His Majeſties, and that with admiration, Miſericordiæ Dei ſuper omnia opera ejus! And the Confiteantur, and the Benedicant of right belonging to it.

Luk. 1. 78.

I The mercy of Ne inducas.

We, right now, divided His works: we will now divide His mercies. That do we, according to their Object, which is miſery: And that is double. 1 For, either it is already upon us, and we in it: 2 Or but over us, yet ſo over us, as we are within the ſhadow of death, at the very pits brinke (as they ſay) and even now ready to be tumbled in. To quit us of theſe two, there is a double mercie (they follow at the 14. ver.) 1 Erigit lapſos, 2 Suſtinet labentes, Lifts up them that be downe, and ſtaies them that bee going downe, There is a Super in theſe two. 1 One of them, the better (which our Pater-noſter will teach us:) Ne inducas firſt, and then Libera. Better, leade us not in, than deliver us out. If we are in, deliver us: but, better never come in at all. Ionas was delivered; So was Ninive: Ninive's was better (they came not in;) than Ionas his: he was in, but got out. That of Libera, God ſend us too, if ever we ſhall need it: and ſend it all them, that at this preſent, doe. But yet give me the mercie of Ne inducas, let it not light, let it paſſe over; the Paſſe-over, that, is the memorable Delivery; that, the high Feaſt.

2 The Mercy of Libera, from a crueltie cloſe to us.

And, that was the Super, upon us. And it behoved ſo to be. We were not in: It came not to that; thanke Mercy for it. If it had, it had beene paſt with us, paſt Libera: that other mercy could have done us no good. If it had not been præveniſti, poſtveniſti had come too late. For, if in, never out more. This, our firſt Super.

But, being not in, we were as neere it, as neere might be, and ſcape it. Over, it was; nay, it was rather under us, then: but all is one, Super or Subter; either will ſerve, here: that Subter would have ended in a Super, ſent us up high enough (I wote well:) therefore we will keepe the word of the Text [Super] let it goe.

Firſt, when it was contrived, Over us it was: then, when it was ſet in hand, Over us yet more: but when it came to parata ſunt omnia, all ready for the match, and the match for it (for, ſo neere it came) then, it was over us (I trow) hard over us: and, then to

ſcape it, when it was even in a manner ready to ſeaze on us, that, is another Super: for, then to eſcape it, that, doth us the more good, ever; and that is ever praiſed, for the Superiour deliverance. The ſecond Super.

Specially, if you adde the third: that when it was ſo neere us, and we to it, it was not ſo cloſe by us, as cloſe from us; we knew it not. And none ſo miſerable as they that are ſo, and know not they are ſo: Nay, think it cleane otherwiſe. The Laodicean miſery, that (we ſay) is of all other the moſt wofull: Tu dicis quod, Thou ſaiſt, thou art this, and thou art that; ſafe, and ſure, and happie: and behold, thou art none of all theſe, but, even then when thou ſayeſt it, miſerable, and even in the jawes of death. That is the miſery, that comes as the throwes of a woman in travaile: as the flood, upon the old world; as the fire, upon the five Cities.

3 And cloſe, from us. Apoc. 3. 17. Ier. 6. 24.

And that was our caſe right: they, in the dayes of Noe; they in the dayes of Lot, never reckoned leſſe, of the floud, or the fire, over them; than we, of the powder, under us. And I blame us not: Who would not have thought himſelfe ſafe, in that place; who, that he might not have troden on that threſhold, that floore, without danger? If ſafe at all, if any where, there. It is the Aſylum, the ſureſt place (one would think) in all the land. Ἐν ᾧ φρονεῖς μάλιστα, ἐπιβαίνεσθαι σε: Where our greateſt truſt, there our danger moſt deadly: and that is (ever) the Super of all miſeries. Mat. 24. 37. Luk 17. 26. 28.

Being then ſo over us, or under us; under us, and neere us, neere us and we not aware of it: ſo neer, that they made full account (I ſay not (as the Pſalme) to have ſwallowed us up quicke, but) to have blowne us up quick, and in a moment ſent us up, ſhivered all to peeces: it was a third, and a principall ſuper (this) more than ordinary, that made us ſupereſſe, to remaine ſtill alive, after ſo great, ſo preſent, ſo ſecret danger. Pſal. 124. 3.

And yet another ſuper more, againſt this laſt; which will ſerve, as black worke (I meane, their crueltie) to make this white worke of Gods mercie ſhew the better to us. It is a Super omnia, too. As our deliverance, a work of Mercie ſuper omnia: ſo, our intended deſtruction, a worke of cruelty ſuper omnia. 4 The ſuper omnia of this crueltie.

Super omnia, above all examples (to begin with.) For, the like never ſeene, nor heard of. Nay, not to be raked out of any ſtory, in any age, of any country, civill or ſavage, of the like. And Super omnes, over all it would have gone, not ſpared any, no degree, high or low; no eſtate, Nobles or Commons; no calling, ſacred or civill; no ſex, King or Queene; no age, King, or Prince; no religion, their owne, or others. This is but ſuper omnes: Nay, ſuper omnia, it was too, Super, up with lime, and ſtone, and timber, iron, glaſſe and leade: up with floore, windowes and walls, roofe and all. Yet another ſuper omnia: all bands of birth, country, allegiance, nature, bloud, humanity and Chriſtianity; tread upon them, trample upon them all, teare them all in peeces. Never ſuch a ſuper omnia; in all ſenſes. So (indeed) a cruelty for the Devill himſelfe: To make the oppoſition perfect, of GOD's Mercy, and Satans Cruelty. Of whom (to give each their due) it may be ſaid, and no leſſe truely ſaid, Crudelitates ejus ſuper omnia opera ejus, his Cruelties are above all his works; than of GOD, that His Mercies are above all His.

Super omnia opera ejus, it is; and contra omnia opera DEI: Above all his own, and againſt all GODS works. The enemy of GOD he is, and ſo of all GOD's workes; and of thoſe His workes moſt, that GOD moſt ſets by (that is) mankind; And of that part of mankind moſt, God hath done moſt for, and ſo may be thought, moſt to favour (that is, Chriſten men:) And then of them, if there be a Non taliter in His mercy, a Non taliter too, in his malice, ſtraight. If a ſuper omnes, with God; a ſuper omnes with him, in ſenſu contrario.

To any creature (only becauſe it is a creature) is he cruell: he will into the Hogſtie, to ſhew it, rather than not to ſhew it at all. Matth. 5. 13.

But, to man, to one man, rather than to a whole heard of Swine.

And among men, his malice is moſt at Chriſten men: they are neerer, to the kingdome of GOD. To keep them from that, Himſelfe hath irrecoverably loſt (that is) Heaven; and to plunge them into eternall miſery, whereinto himſelfe is fallen, without all redemption.

And among Chriſten men, to the beſt ſort; to publike perſons, rather than to private meane men.

But, if he could get a whole Parliament together: A King, his Nobles, his Commons; that is, a King, Kingdome and all; and up with them all at once, all together: there were none to that: that (lo) he would over ſea and land to compaſſe. For, that were indeed, with him, a ſuper omnia: He never had done the like.

Prov.12.10. Of this their Father, were thoſe ungodly men of this Day. Vngodly (I ſay:) For Salomon ſets us this ſigne, to know ungodly men by; Viſcera impiorum crudelia, if the bowels bee cruell, then ungodly, certainly. No pitie, no pietie, with him. And we find, that mercy is a plant of our nature: So incident to the nature of man, as they are holden inhumane, that are without it. No pitie, no humanity. Why then, Satanitie, it muſt be, if God and man diſclaime it: Even of him, cujus crudelitas ſuper omnia opera ejus.

Now God cannot abide cruelty at any hand. By what He placeth higheſt, may we know, what He loves beſt (mercy:) and by that, may we know, what He can worſt away with (cruelty.) Nay, if once he take his fellow by the throat, deale cruelly with him: never heare him more. No cruelty can He endure, at all: ſpecially, no ſuch cruell cruelties, as this that paſſed all.

Matth.18.28.

And in this caſe of ours, I make no doubt, God was moved both wayes.

Pſal 141.7. One way, by Mercy: for us, that our bones might not be ſcattered, in every corner; as when one heweth wood, chips flie about. And againe; for them, we ſhould have left behind, that Videns IESUS turbas, miſertus eſt eis, He looked upon them too, and ſaw, they ſhould have beene ἐσκυλμένοι and ἐῤῥιμμένοι, ſcattered all, and hurried up and downe, like a ſort of poore maſterleſſe ſheepe: His mercy wrought with Him, in both theſe reſpects.

Matth.9.36.

But, on the other ſide, their Cruelty moved Him alſo. And (I am perſwaded) God, looking upon thoſe mercileſſe boweld men, when in their hearts they hatched that monſter of cruelty, even at the ſight of that barbarous reſolution (yea more than barbarous) His heart even turned againſt them, His very ſoule abhorred that devilliſh intention of theirs. They had thought to have had the Day; but, to the high praiſe of His mercy, and to the confuſion of Satan and all his crueltie, He gave order, Mercy ſhould have the day: and ſhe had it, that there might be a mercy, ſuper omnia, above this Crueltie ſuper omnia: as there was. Their counſell brought to light; brought to nought; brought upon their own heads: and both counſell and counſellers brought to a ſhamefull end.

Nay, would they make mens bowels fly up and down the ayre? Out with thoſe bowels; what ſhould they do in, that have not in them that, that bowels ſhould have. Would they do it by fire? Into the fire with their bowels, before their faces. Would they make mens bones flie about like chips? Hew their bones in ſunder. Iuſt is Davids prayer: Their delight was in cruelty, let it happen to them: They loved not mercy, therefore let it be farre from them.

Pſal.109.17.

Pſalm.136.10. 15. 20. But, how now? We are gone now from mercy quite. No no: there is mercy even in this ſeverity. In the Pſalme of Mercy (CXXXVI.) Slaying is made a work of mercy, Slew the firſt borne of Ægypt, cruell Pharaoh, cruell Og, For his mercy endureth for ever: Mercy, in ridding the world of ſuch. For, they are not worthy to be inter opera DEI, among Gods workes, that renounce that vertue, that is, ſuper opera DEI, over all Gods workes.

And ſo now ye ſee that Super, I told you, we ſhould come to at laſt; Over hell, and them there. The Super Superantis, the Over of an Overcommer; of Mercy a Conqueror. Above His other works, with the Super of a Soveraigne, to protect them: Upon the devill and devilliſh men in their works, with Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, to tread upon them, to make His enemies His footſtoole, and ſo a Super, Over them too.

Pſalm.91.13.
Pſalm.110.1.

And

IIII. The Super of our Duty.

And now, we have ſet Mercy in her Chariot of triumph; In which, if ever ſhe ſate, ſhe ſate in the Super omnia of this Day. Let us now come to the laſt Super, the Super of remaining upon the head of all Gods works, for His mercy over them all; but, among them all, and above them all, upon our heads (if it were but for the Soveraigne Mercy of this Day) what we were in Super to God, for it.

The Super upon all Gods works followes, in the words next enſuing, [a] Confiteantur. Are His mercies over all his workes? Why then, [b] O all yee workes of the Lord, all fleſh, [c] every thing that hath breath; but chiefly His chiefe work, the ſons of men, [d] the nations and the kindreds of the earth, come all to confeſſion: all owe this (to confeſſe) at leaſt. Confeſſe? what? Nothing but mercie, and the Super of the Mercy. Nothing, but that it is, as it is: do but as God doth, exalt it, place it, where He ſets it. Let the deepe ſay, it is over me; and the drie land ſay, it is over me; and ſo of the reſt, every one: ſo many workes, ſo many confeſſions.

[a] Verſe 10. [b] Verſe 12. [c] Pſal 150.6. [d] Pſal. 117.1. From his worke

There is a further Super, upon His Saints: they, owe more to Him than His ordinary workes. His workes but to confeſſe: His Saints, to confeſſe and bleſſe, both. They are double workes, needle-work on both ſides: more becomes them. Te decet hymnus in Sion: Both, to confeſſe, it is above all; and to bleſſe and praiſe it, above all. For, if it be above all, it followes, more praiſe is to come to Him, for it, than for all. If Mercy, above all; the praiſe of His mercy, above the praiſes of all.

From his Saints Ver. 10. Pſalm. 65.1.

There is a further Super yet, upon us that have found and felt the Super of it; the Non taliter (ſay I) above workes and Saints both. All are bound: but we that are here ſuper omnes; more than all, we. We that ſhould have been Martyrs of Satans cruelty, it ſtands us in hand to be Confeſſors of GODS Mercie, as, to which we owe even our ſelves; our ſelves, and our ſafety; ſafety, of ſoules, and bodies, every one of us.

Then, let the King, Queene, and Prince; let all the three Eſtates; let the whole Land delivered by it, from a Chaos of confuſion; let our ſoules, which He hath held in life; let our bodies, which He hath kept together from flying in peeces; let all thinke on it: think how to thank Him for it; ſay, and ſing, and celebrate it above all. We, above all; for it, above all.

For, if ever Mercy were over work of His; if ever Work of His, under it directly; it was ſo over us, and we ſo under it, this Day. If ever, of any it might bee avowed; or to any, applied: If ever any might rightly and truly, upon good and juſt cauſe, ſay or ſing this verſe; we of this land, may doe both: It will fit our mouths beſt, beſt become us.

For, ſuch a Worke did He ſhew on us, this Day, as if Mercy have a Super omnia of other, this may claime a Super omnia of it, of Mercie it ſelfe. His mercie is not ſo high above the reſt of His workes, as this Dayes Work, high above the works of it. That, ſupreme to all: this ſupreme to it. Mercy, in it, even above it ſelfe.

We then, that have had ſuch a Super in this Super; we, of all others, nay more than all others, to have it yet more ſpecially recommended. A bare confeſſion will not ſerve; but the higheſt confeſſion of all, to take the Oath of the Supremacie of it. We, if ever any, to ſay it, and ſweare it: if it had not beene in Soveraigne manner over ſome of His workes (that is, our ſelves) we had beene full low yer this, infra infimos, beneath, under all His workes: not (now) above ground, to ſpeake and to heare of this Theme.

Let it then claime the ſupremacie in our confiteantur, and in our Benedicant, both above workes, Saints, and all. And that, not mentally, or verbally alone; in heart ſo to hold, and in tongue ſo to report it: but, which is worth all, really in worke, ſo to expreſſe it. I meane, as our thanks for His mercie above all our thankes; ſo our workes of Mercy, above all our workes. But, be they ſo? His are ſo: are ours? I would to God, I could ſay they were: but (ſure) they are not. His mercy above all his workes: With us, in this point, it is cleane contrary: all our works, above our mercy. The leaſt, the laſt, laſt, the loweſt part of our workes, are our workes of mercy: the feweſt in number, the pooreſt in value, the ſlighteſt in regard. Indeed, infra omnia, with us, they.

But ſure: GOD, in thus ſetting it above all his workes, ſheweth, He would have it, with us, ſo too. That which is Super omnia ejus, to be Super omnia noſtra: as above all His, ſo above all ours likewiſe. And CHRIST our SAVIOUR would have it Luke 6.36. ſo; His Eſtote, is Eſtote miſericordes: and how? not barely, Eſtote; but Eſtote, ſicut Pater veſter cæleſtis; Mercifull, as He. And, how is He? So, as, with Him, it is above all. To imitate Him then in this, let it be higheſt with us; as, with Him, it is higheſt. Sure, we are not right, till it be with us, ſo too: As in Gods, ſo, in ours: above ours; above them all. That ſo, it may have the Supremacie, in Confiteantur, in Benedicant, in praiſe and thankes, in words, and workes, and all.

To ſet off the Super of this day then, and to conclude. If the generality of His workes confeſſe Him, for theirs; and the ſpeciality of His Saints bleſſe Him, for theirs, what are we to do, how to confeſſe, how to bleſſe for the ſingular Mercie of this Day (and let all others goe?) Sure, our mouths to be filled with praiſe as the Sea, and our voice
Pſal. 71.8. in ſounding it out, as the noiſe of His waves, and we to cover the heavens with praiſe, as with clouds for it.

But, we are not able to praiſe thee O Lord, or to extoll thy Name, for one of a thouſand. Nay, not for one of the many millions, of the great Mercies, which thou haſt ſhewed upon us and upon our children. How often haſt thou rid us from Plague, freed us from Famine, ſaved us from the Sword, from our enemies compaſſing us round, from the Fleet, that came to make us no more a people!

Even, before this Day, we now hold; before it, and ſince it, have not thy compaſſions withdrawne themſelves from us. But, this Day, this Day above all dayes, have they ſhewed it Super omnia: and, not over, but upon us.

Wherefore, the powers thou haſt diſtributed in our ſoules, the breath of life thou haſt breathed into our noſthrils, the tongues thou haſt put into our mouthes, behold, all theſe ſhall break forth and confeſſe, and bleſſe, and thank, and praiſe, and magnifie and exalt thee and thy mercy, for ever. Yea, every mouth ſhall acknowledge thee, every tongue be a Trumpet of thy praiſe; every eye look up, every knee bow, every ſtature ſtoope to thee, and all hearts ſhall feare thee. And all that within us. Even our bowels; thoſe our bowels, that (but for Thee: had flowen, we know not whether: Even our bones: thoſe bones, that (but for it) had beene ſhivered bone from bone, one from another, all ſhall ſay, Who is like unto thee ô Lord in Mercy? Who is like unto thee, glorious in holineſſe, fearefull in praiſe; doing wonders, wonders of mercy, as this day, upon us all, to be held by us and our poſterity, in an everlaſting remembrance.

Glory bee to Thee ô Lord, glory be to Thee: Glory be to thee, and glory be to Thy Mercy, the Super omnia, the moſt glorious of all thy great and high Perfections, Glory bee to Thee, and glory be to it: To it, in Thee; and to Thee for it. And that by all thy works, in all places, and at all times. And, of all thy works, and above them all, by us here; by the hearts and lungs of us all, in this place, this day, for this day, for the mercy of this Pſal. 136.1. day; for the mercy of it above all mercies, and for the work of this day above all the works of it. And, not this day onely, but all the dayes of our life; even as long as Thy mercy endureth, and that endureth for ever; for ever, in this world; for ever, in the world to come. Per, through the Ciſterne and Conduit of all Thy mercies, Ieſus Chriſt.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL, on the V. of Novem. A. D. MDCXVI.

PSAL. CHAP. XXXVII. VER. III.

Venerunt filii usque ad partum, & virtus non est pariendi.

The children are come to the birth, and there is no strength to bring forth.

I Have taken this peece, and no more. More I could not (you see:) It will not fit our turne, or this Day (the fore-end of the verse:) This is a day of trouble, rebuke, blasphemie, cannot we say. We must say: This is a day, not of trouble, but of joy; not of rebuke, but of praise; not of blasphemie, but of thanksgiving, with us. And so may we say too, and yet keep these words for our ground, still. Nothing lets, but that one and the same day, may be, both a day of joy, and of sorrow. They that have the day, and they that lose the day, the day is but one: but, to the winner, a Joyfull day; to the loser, not so; but, a day of sorrow, and of blasphemie, otherwhile. And so was this day, a day of Sorrow, to some: they might have taken up the whole verse as it stands: those (I meane) that, doe what they can, must be feine to father the children, that this day were comming, but came not forth. That they came not forth, the want of strength to be delivered, made it to them a day of Sorrow (some say, of blasphemie, too:) No so, to us. To us, a day of praise and thanks; that they lost their so looked-for and longed-for children; that they were not born, who if they had been borne, would have been the bane of us all. To us then, as this, a day; So this, a verse of joy.

The

The Summe. The words are (in Hebrew) of the nature of a Proverbe; and uſed by them, as a By-word, upon the defeating of any plot. Not every defeating; but then, when a plot is cunningly contrived, and cloſely followed, and is neere brought to the very point to be done, yet not done though; but defeated, even then: then, take they up this Proverbe and ſay, Venerunt, &c.

And, two wayes take they it up thereafter as the deſigne is. If it be bad, yet well layed, and well ſeconded, and for all that, in the end diſappointed; then utter they it cheerefully, Aha, the children, &c. but as GOD would, &c. by way of gratulation. But, if good, and for a while come fairely forward, but in the end prove to nothing; then take they it up with a ſigh, alas the children, &c.

It cannot be denied, but good King Ezekiah, whoſe the words are, ſpake them here in ſome griefe. Griefe, two wayes; for 1 firſt, grieved he was to heare how Rabſakeh had raged and raved, and ſpewed out moſt horrible blaſphemies. Faine would he, he and his men, rather than their lives have been at him for it. They were even great with this (as it were) and the children come to the birth; But their ſtrength ſerved them not, they durſt not give him a word, for feare of a further miſchiefe, if they ſhould provoke him. Now, there is no more hard and grievous caſe in the world, than when a man ſhall be forced to heare blaſpheming, and not be in caſe to anſwer it home.

2 But, the King of Aſſhur (his Maſter) was not far off, with his forces; but at the ſiege of Libna (not paſt a dozen mile off;) that Towne, not like to hold out long, and then have at Ieruſalem, and they (GOD wote) but meanely provided to welcome him. But a poore remnant, to ſo huge an Hoſt; So huge, as with their very feet they Verſe 25. dried up rivers, as they went. Non erant vires, was their caſe right; and this was here a ſecond griefe.

For the words, though they ſound, as if the Queene, or ſome great Lady, were in child-birth, yet no ſuch matter. All is ſpoken by Allegory; and no woman, but the State of the Kingdome, here meant.

Eſa.62.4. Ezek.23.36. Hoſ.1.6. Eſa.47.1. Verſe 22. And it is no new thing to ſet forth States by women. The Prophets doe it oft: Eſays Hephſiba; Ezekiels Ahola, and Aholiba; Hoſee's Loruhamah, all ſhew it. Nothing more common with them, than the Daughter of Babel for the State of the Chaldeans; the Daughter of Sion for the State of the Iewes.

Hoſ.4.12. Apoc.12.2. And not to women onely, but to women with childe; then ſpecially, when there comes any ſhrewd plunges upon an Eſtate. Filia Sion quaſi parturiens (Hoſea 4. 12.) Sion is ready to cry out, in the Old: And, in the New, the Church (then) hard beſtead, is repreſented by a Woman ready to fall in labour, (*Apoc.*12.11.) And States, when they would be delivered of ought (would, and cannot) as it were the throwes of child-birth ſeeme to be upon them; and this Proverbe, then not unfitly applied to them, Venerunt, &c.

Gen 35.16,17. 1 Sam 4.19. A Woman, her time is come, and ſtrives to bring forth, and cannot, not having ſtrength for it; this (wee know) is a caſe of great extremity: we know it by Rachel (*Gen.*35.) by Hophnies wife (1 *Sam.*4.) both which were in the caſe here; at the point to be delivered, and wanted ſtrength, and it coſt them both their lives.

Now, as when a woman is ſo, all about her are at their wits end; know not what to do, or whither to turne themſelves: No more did Ezekias; but even turnes to the Verſe 1. Prophet Eſay: (as, at ſuch times, Prophets ſhall have their turnes; not oft, beſides:) To him they ſend for Leva orationem: Lift up thy prayer; Prayer, now: for, but, in prayer, no helpe is left; if that relieve us not, we are gone. This ſpake then Ezekias in griefe.

It grieves me on a day of joy, to hold you ſo long in a point of ſorrow; but, the turning all into preſent joy will make amends. To that, I come.

This for the preſent, was their caſe; but this was not their caſe long. For, within a while after, before the end of the Chapter, the very ſame words, by the very ſame perſons, were (or might have beene) taken up, in a farre other, more joyfull key.

Then,

Then, when the King of Aſſur, he that caſt them into this agonie, as he was upon removing to come towards them (and ſo, the children (as it were) come to the very birth, indeed:) GOD put a ring in his noſe, turned him about home againe, as faſt as ever he could, upon newes of invaſion of his countrey, by the Æthiopian: When, being ſo neere come to the birth, he came not, had not the power to come on foot toward them; then (I hope) the caſe was altered: then might we have ſaid this Text as an Io pæan, with joy, Venerunt, &c. Verſe 29. Verſe 9.

And this (lo) is our very caſe, this day. For, why are we here met, but that (as the Text is) a birth there ſhould, this day (the fifth of November, this very Tueſday) have bin with us? ſhould have bin, but was not: That it was not: This day ſhould have bin a Diſmall day; that it was not ſo. A birth was in bearing, and venerunt ad partum (I promiſe you:) that it was not borne, that it was partus non partus, a birthleſſe birth, it is (with us) a day of joy: and as this, a Day; ſo this, a Text of joy: and thanks be to God, it is ſo. And we ſay theſe very words of Ezechias, not as (here) he did, but, as after he might have, and as wee, this day, may ſpeake them, with a cheerefull accent, Venerunt ad partum, &c.

There bee in the Text, two parties, which make us two parts: 1 the Children, and 2 the Mother. The Children, in the very firſt word: The Mother in the laſt: Pariendi it is here; Parienti it is in 2 Reg. 19. If there be no ſtrength pariendi, it is, becauſe there is none parienti. Of theſe two, two things are here ſaid: One affirmed, The other denied. And Diviſion. I. II. 2 King. 19. 3.

Affirmed; the children were ready: Denied; the mother, not, non erant. The children not unwilling; for they were come: the mother unable; for, by that time they were come, her ſtrength was gone. The end is left for us to gather: for, if no ſtrength to beare, no birth there will bee; No more there was. And, that there was not, it is holy-day with us, to day.

Applying all to our caſe, I am to tell you firſt, 1. Theſe children, who they were: 2. and ſecondly, how neere to the birth they came: 3. thirdly, of the ſtrength to bring them forth, the failing of it, and how it came to faile: Vpon theſe, two queſtions, 1 One, why they were not ſuffered to come forth? 2 Why they were ſuffered to come ſo farre? 4. And laſt of all, of the Tu ergo, or inference upon all this: Which is not that which Ezekiah inferres (the next verſe) Tu ergo leva orationem: But another Ergo, as it were a new birth of ours, Tu ergo leva gratiarum actionem. Yes, yes: That, and leva orationem too: And ſo let us lift up our prayer, and for nothing more, than that we may raiſe a good levie of thanks indeed, to ſend up to GOD that there was no ſtrength to bring it forth, when it was ſo neere brought. Verſe 2.

I.

THe Children, are the firſt word, and ſo offer themſelves to be begun with. And with them, we muſt begin: For on them all depends (whether the Day ſhall bee kept, or the Text uttered, with joy or not. For (indeed) primâ facie, it may ſeeme to bee ſomwhat an unkindly joy, to take pleaſure in the periſhing of children, when they be come to the birth. Yet ſuch may the children bee, that are to come, as it makes no matter. Nay, as we well may wiſh, they may; and well rejoyce, if they doe miſcarry there, and come no further. I. The Children 1 Who they were.

To begin, from the beginning. There reade we of the Seed of the Woman, and the Seed of the Serpent: we are back at our Text ſtraight. If it be the womans ſeed, ſave it alive in any wiſe, let it come, not only to the birth, but, from the birth, well; and if by any miſchance it doe not, ſay the words of the Text, but ſay them with griefe, Ve- Gen. 3. 15.

nerunt, &c. On the other ſide, if it be the ſeed of the Serpent, away with it, let it not come to the birth: if it doe, let it not be borne, ſtifle it in the wombe, and be glad when you have done, and ſay with joy and ſpare not, Venerunt, &c.

And yet I cannot tell neither, whether wee make the rule ſo generall, as to ex-
Heb. 11. 23. tend to all the Womans Seed. But, if the children be, as of Moſes it is ſaid, Hebrewes 11. ἀστεῖον proper ſweet children: Nay, if they be but according to kinde, regular births; when they be come ſo farre, it is griefe, if they come no further. But, otherwhiles there fall out theſe ſame παρεκβάσεις φύσεως, Naturæ errores, Miſhapen monſtrous births, and then, in that caſe, and for ſuch, it skils not when they be thither come, if farther they come not. Yea, I dare ſay, it will not diſcontent the unhappy parents that begat and bare them, though this Verſe be verified of them, that when they come to the birth, they might not be borne, but have the wombe for their grave, and no ſtrength to deliver them.

Since then, upon the matter, all is thereafter as the children be, our firſt enquiry is to be, what theſe children were? Where let me tell you this, you ſhall not looke for ſuch children as women goe with: (the verſe is proverbially, not verbally to bee underſtood:) Not of any Womans birth; none there was, at the ſpeaking it. Ezekias meant it of Sennacheribs intent, to ſacke Ieruſalem: and we of their attempt or enterpriſe, this day, to have made a maſſacre of us all. Of them that went bigge with this monſter.

To begin with the ſoule then, of theſe children. For, there is not onely fructus ventris, there is partus mentis: the minde conceives, as well as the wombe: the word [conceiving] is like proper, to both. Men have their wombe, but it lieth higher, in them; as high as their hearts; and that which is there conceived, and bred, is a birth.
Pſal. 7. 14. So, I finde, the Holy Ghoſt in the Pſalme calleth it; Behold, he travelleth with miſchiefe, he hath conceived ſorrow and brought forth ungodlineſſe. And that is, when an evill man, in the evill wombe of his heart, ſhall hatch or conceive ſome devilliſh device, and goe with it as bigge as any woman goes with her childe, and be even in paine, till hee have
Mat. 15. 18, 19. brought it. This is the birth here meant: and there in the heart, is the matrix or conceptory place, of all miſchiefe. Thence (ſaith our Saviour) de corde exeunt, From the heart they come all.

Vſually they ſay in Schooles, Conceptus, conceptio; partus, opus: the conceipt is a kinde of conception; and the work, a kind of birth: the imagination of the heart is an embrio, conceived within; the worke now brought to paſſe, is a childe borne into the world. Nay, they goe further, to more particularities, and carry it along through all the degrees of child-bearing. 1 When a device is intended, then is (ſay they) the child conceived (as it were.) 2 When projected and plotted handſomely; then, the child articulate. 3 When once actuated, and ſet in hand, then is it quicke. 4 When ſo farre brought, as all is ready; then the child is come to the birth. 5 And when, actum eſt, all is done, and diſpatched, the child is borne. 6 But, if it fall out otherwiſe, than was looked for, no ſtrength to bring it forth; then have you a dead-borne childe. 7 And Ioh. 16. 21. looke, with the naturall mother what joy there is, when there is a man-childe born into the world; the ſame for all the world, is there with theſe bad men, when their imaginations proſper. And, what griefe the poore woman hath, at the periſhing of the fruit of her body; the like in a manner is there with them, when their powder will take no fire. So have you the ſoule, or ſpirituall part to begin with.

Will ye ſee the body alſo, in the birth of this day? You may, even ad oculum, have it laid out before you. In imitation of the naturall wombe, wherein we lay, and whence wee come all, there is (by analogie) another artificiall, as art doth frame it: Such I meane, as was the Trojan Horſe, of which the Poet------Uterumque armato milite complent, the belly or wombe, when it was full of armed men: and ſo many armed men as there were, ſo many children, after a ſort, might be ſaid to be in it. And, if that: may we not affirme as much of the vault, or cellar, with as good reaſon? The verſe will hold of it too----Uterumque nitrato pulvere complent. The uterus or wombe of it, crammed as full with barrels of powder, as was the Trojan Horſe, with men of armes. This ods onely. Every one of theſe children, every barrell of Powder, as much, nay more force in it to do miſchiefe, than twenty of thoſe in the Trojan horſes belly.

The more I thinke of it, the more points of correſpondence do offer themſelves to me, of a birth and comming to a birth, and that in every degree. 1 The veſſels firſt give forth themſelves, as ſo many embrio's: 2 The vault, as the wombe, wherein they lay ſo long: 3 They that conceived this device were the mothers, cleare: 4 The fathers, were the fathers (as they delight to be called) though, oft, little more than boyes; but here, night fathers, in that they perſwaded, it might be, why not? might be lawfull; nay, meritorious, then: ſo, it was they, that did animate, gave a ſoule (as it were) to the treaſon. 5 The conception was, when the powder, as the ſeed was conveighed in: 6 The articulation, the touching of them, in order, juſt as they ſhould ſtand: 7 the covering of them, with wood and fagots, as the drawing a skin, over them: 8 The Venerunt ad partum, when all was now ready, traine and all: 9 The Mid-wife, he that was found with the match about him, for the purpoſe: 10 And partus, the birth ſhould have been upon the giving fire. If the fire had come to the powder, the children had come to the birth, incluſivè, had beene borne. But, Non erant vires (which, I turne) there was no fire given: and ſo, partus they wanted, as God would.

And, that onely wanted: for, all the reſt held to an haire. Nothing, that could be in a birth, was wanting: all, to be pointed at, from point to point; that, the Text is fitly enough applied to it. By this time, ye ſee the Children, both body and ſoule. Now, when lookes the mother; when reckons ſhe, her time will come?

Will yee now (which is the ſecond point) weigh a little better, what is in theſe three words, venerunt ad partum. 1 Firſt, they were not upon their way comming; but, venerunt, they were even come. 2 And come; not, verſus, toward; but even, ad, to. 3 Ad, to; not, loca partui vicina, ſome parts neere, or next to it; but, ad partum, to the very birth-place, the neck, or orifice of the matrice. Or, if you will take partum, for the time; not ad tempora partui propinqua, within ſome few dayes of their reckoning; but, ad partum, to the very time, the day, and within a very little, to the houre it ſelfe; it miſſed not much: (that is) as neere, as neere might be. If ever there were a venerunt ad partum, and no partus upon it, here it was. 2 How neere the birth.

And, if you marvell, it was ad partum, and not ad parturitionem, firſt: Marvell not not at that; why, it would have beene a very ſhort travell, that. That of the Prophet (in the ſixtie ſixth Chapter) Antequam parturiat, peperit, would have beene fulfilled in it; ſhe would have beene delivered, before ever ſhe had fallen in labour. To the birth they came, then. And you will remember, how farre they came, how many degrees they paſſed, before they got thither. They came, 1 to generation; they came, 2 to conception; they came, 3 to articulation, 4 to viviſication, 5 to full maturity; and yet, none of all theſe, our venerunt, here. Paſſed all, and every one of theſe, never ſtaid, till they came 6 even ad partum, could come no further, unleſſe they had come forth; which God forbid; and ſo He will, you ſhall ſee. For, thus have we done now, with the firſt part (the Children.) Chap 66. 7.

II. The Mothers.

Now to the Mothers part. The Children came to the birth, and: The right and, the kindly Copulative, were; To the birth they came, and borne they were; In a kinde conſequence, who would looke for other? It is here, Venerunt, & non: thither they came, and no farther; there ſtopped. Ad, in [ad partum] is but uſque ad, excluſivè; that is, to it they came; through it, they came not.

And, why came they not? By meanes (as is here ſet downe) of a non erant. Somewhat there was not, that would have beene; ſomewhat miſſing: a non erant there was, whatſoever it was.

What non erant was that? It was not, Non erat ingenium (I am ſure) Peſtilent wit they lacked none, as deepe, as dangerous an invention, as ever came into the braine of man. Neither came it thither, or was bred there without the Seed of the Serpent. Nor can it be ſaid, Non erat, that they wanted will; For, ſo maliciouſly were they bent in that wretched will of theirs, as they reſolved to know neither friend nor foe, but up with all together. Nor did they want opportunity, of a place: Got the vault firſt, and the cellar after. No, nor meanes: had their iron-tooles; had powder enough, and good ſtowage for it. Theſe they had, all: yet, Non erant (ſaith the Text;) what Non erant might that be? Non erant vires, they had no ſtrength.

3 Her want of ſtrength.

To a birth, there go two things: 1 The children muſt be come thither, to the birth-place. 2 When the children be come thither, there muſt be ſtrength, at leaſt as much to deliver them. Ad partum, opus eſt nixu; ad nixum, opus eſt viribus: To a birth, there goes a kinde of ſtreſſe; to a ſtreſſe, there is required ſome ſtrength. Nixus inanis ſine viribus; and nixu inani nihil paritur: To no purpoſe is the ſtreſſe, if there be no ſtrength, but all in vaine: And, if that be in vaine, there will no birth be (No more there was) but the child periſh; and if the mother ſcape, it is well; but (oft) they goe both. And ſo fell it out here; the children dead-borne, and the Mother died for it too. To ſpeake without allegory. To the producing of any effect, two things there go: 1 Counſell, and 2 Strength; not, counſell alone; but counſell and ſtrength. For as ſtrength without counſell, will procure but a mola: So counſell, without ſtrength, will prove but an abortement. We ſee daily, many excellent devices come to nought; all, becauſe they be not ſtrongly followed to execution. Strength then, there would be.

And, ſtrength they had not. Not ſtrength? yes (ſure) that had they. To follow them, in the allegorie; the mother was ſtrong, elſe would the children never have come ſo farre, as they did, to be ſo ripe, and ready for the delivery. And, the children were ſtrong children; ſtrong enough, but with one ſmall ſparke, to have ſent us all up aloft, if we had been twice as many more. To leave the allegorie: ſtrength they had enough; to handle the pickaxe, to dig deepe into ſtone walls; ſtrength enough, to lay in great barrels, and thoſe all full, and a great many of them. Strength enough, to remove them up and down, as they might ſtand beſt for the purpoſe; and to clap on iron and ſtones, and wood enough, upon them. And, how then was there no ſtrength?

You will eaſily marke, Vires is the plurall number; and ſo, many ſtrengths there be: and, that he ſaith not [Vires] ſimply, any ſtrength at all; but, vires pariendi, ſtrength to bring forth. Vires, is one thing; vires pariendi, another. Vires, they had; vires veniendi, ad partum: elſe had they never come ſo far; but vires pariendi that, they had not.

For partus is opus (we ſaid:) and nothing was done. All the while, till they came ad partum, their ſtrength ſerved them well. At the inſtant, they ſhould have beene brought forth, it failed them, Strength there was, to carry it along, to bring it ſo farre: but not pariendi, to bring it to iſſue.

To bring a thing to iſſue, that, paſſes the devils power. He could give them the counſell (as, no doubt, he did: it was too devilliſh, to grow in any mans head.) But, the ſtrength to iſſue, that lieth not in his hand. Ye may be ſure if it had, they had had that too. He longed, as much as they, to heare the blow, and ſee the ſight. Hee, that helped them to lay in the powder, would have helped to have put to the fire, had it been in his power. But it was more than they could do: the ſtrength to iſſue is Gods ever, and He took it from them.

Pſal. 68. 20. Domini ſunt exitus: The Iſſues of all attempts are in the hands of GOD, them He reſerves to Himſelfe, as His own peculiar; yea, even of evill attempts. For, howſoever He be not at the beginning of them; at the end, He muſt be, or no end will be: Domini ſunt exitus. The horſe may be prepared to the battell; the lots, caſt in the lap; Pro. 21. 31. Pr. v. 16. 33. the Cellar made ready for the powder; and the powder for the cellar: And, when all is done, that the wit or malice of the devill, or man, can doe or deviſe, comes GOD and daſhes all in a moment. The Counſell of Achitophel; Hamans high favour; the great Fleet at Ezion-geber; Sennacheribs huge hoſt: defeats them all. For, counſels may bee in the heart of man, and words at his tongues end, and acts at his fingers end; yet nothing ſhall be ſaid or done, unleſſe GOD will ſo have it. He gives or denies ſucceſſe, as Him pleaſes. That when the children are upon the point to be delivered, there ſhall be ſtrength, or no ſtrength to doe it, as pleaſes Him. And here, it pleaſed Him not: ſo,

2 Sam. 17. 14. Eſter 7. 7. 2 Chro. 20. 37. Verſe 36.

no birth there was; but quando filii venerunt, vires abierunt, when the children were come, all the ſtrength was gone.

It ſeemes, it was ſomewhat doubted, leſt when it came to the pinch, this ſtrength ſhould faile: therefore was their ſtrength ſought, even the ſtrength of prayers; to leva orationem, they gat them; but, they ſent to the wrong party: Not to Eſay, but to Baalam, to curſe, where GOD did bleſſe; and to bleſſe that curſed birth of theirs, which His very ſoule abhorred. So many prayers were ſaid, they might have a good heire. They ſay, there were ſo, for Queene Maries child: But, ſhe had no child to come, theſe had. But all in vaine: when the time came, for all their Maſſes, and Proceſsions, and Roſaries, and Ieſus's Pſalters, it would not be. No children came, ſtrength there was not. Num. 23. 8.

And will you know, how it came to faile them, this ſtrength? Ye may, and never goe out of the Text, or the termes of child-bearing. Or ever the birth was fully come, one of the complices fell to be with-child; and no remedy, but he muſt needs be delivered before his time; had not the power to keep his hand from the paper, and ſo diſcloſed it. And, diſcloſe a treaſon, and the necke of it is broken, the ſtrength of it is gone; as Sampſons ſtrength ſoone was, when the Philiſtims knew once, where it lay. And this was the ſtrength, and none but this, that failed them. An eaſie ſtrength (one would thinke) to hold ones tongue, or to hold the fingers ſtill. That, had he not: but for lack of that muſt needs be ſcribling; and that marr'd the faſhion of the birth quite. His not having the ſtrength, not to bring forth his, made, they had not the ſtrength, to bring theirs forth. His putting his hand to the paper, made, there could be no fire put to the powder; made, the mid-wife was intercepted; and ſo, the birth, though neere the delivery, yet never delivered. Iudg. 16. 18.

And yet, I cannot tell you neither: for when this work of darkneſſe was brought to light, the light was ſo dimme, and the riddle ſo darke, even then; that, for all that bringing to light, the children were comming forward to the birth, ſtill. Till ſtrength was given to deliver us from this birth, by another travell. For, a travell I will call it, the ſtudying, and the bringing forth of the hidden myſtery, of the burning of the paper, the ridling of that Riddle. For, ſo came out, who the children were, and of what element they were made, what, and whereabout the wombe was, they lay in. So by a birth; and by that birth, wee were delivered, from this. That birth ſmote all dead. For, it was found, even ſo: and then came proſtratio virium indeed. Then, all ſtrength (indeed) was quite and cleane taken from them. That being taken from them, they were not delivered; and by their not being delivered, wee were all delivered.

To the joy now. Divide the Text: Venerunt ad partum, is their joy. Non erant vires is ours. That, theirs, for a time: this, ours for ever. To make their griefe the greater, when it came, they were for a while, put in joy. Glad were they (I dare ſay) to ſee it goe current, kept cloſe ſo long. They even itched for joy at it, and fell into a fooliſh paradiſe: provided a Protector and all. Comes me Non ſunt vires, all their joy was at an end, and with that began their ſorrow. We by their griefe, ſhall beſt conceive our own joy, taking the whole verſe intirely together. 1 The joy of Non erant vires

A griefe it was, and it went to their hearts, theſe children, that they came not. A double griefe, that when they held well ſo long, and were ſo likely to come, yet they came not; had ſtrength all the while, had it not, then. Venerunt ad partum, & venerunt ad portum are much like. Any wrack is a griefe; but no griefe to the griefe of that wrack, that is made, even in the very havens mouth. To goe the voyage well, and arrive well, and then, before the very port to ſink, and be caſt away! To bring the game to the upſhot, and then to loſe it! It trebled their griefe, that ſo many Ladies Pſalters, and Ieſus's Pſalters were ſaid for it; and that neither Ieſus nor our Lady bleſſed the birth no better. And laſt, that the children periſhed; and periſhed not alone, but the mothers went too, and ſome of the fathers, for company. It ſhould have bin parientes pepererunt: it was parentes, or parientes, (if you will) perierunt.

Now looke how many wayes they were grieved, and ſaid, alas, for venerunt ad

tum. Alas for non erant vires; ſo many wayes doe we rejoyce, and ſay, It is well, that venerunt ad partum: Thanks be to God, that Non erant vires. 1. Firſt, for non erant vires, by it ſelfe: that, defeated it was. 2. Then, for Venerunt ad partum, & non erant vires, together: that it proſpered ſo long, and yet defeated it was; this was gaudete with an iterum dico. 3. Then, that without any leva orationem on our parts; without any on ours, and againſt ſo great a levie of theirs, of I know not how many prayers, and proceßions, and all for the proſperous ſucceſſe of a buſineſſe knowne to none but the Superiors. 4. And, to make it terque quaterque, that we ſaw them come tumbling downe that made full account to have ſeene us flie up.

That we were delivered from a danger ſo neere; brought to ſo narrow a point; we not praying, nor ſo much as once thinking on the matter, but delivered as it were in a dreame: Our ſelves not only delivered from, but they that ſo ſought ours, delivered to their owne deſtruction; brought not forth, but were themſelves brought forth to Iudas's end, the end of all traitors: and their children, not brought out, but, as ἐκτρώματα, pulled out of the wombe of the cellar, peece and peece, and never ſaw the Sunne alive, or the Sunne them; pitty it ſhould.

Pſal. 126. 1.

2 The Reaſons of Non erant vires.
1 Why they not ſuffered to come forth.
Gen. 35. 18.
1 Sam. 4. 21.

Shall I now tell you a reaſon or two, why Non erant vires pariendi? 1 one out of pariendi, 2 the other, from Non erant vires.

1. This pariendi was indeed pereundi; the bringing forth a quantity of powder, the periſhing of a whole Parliament. They were not; but, put caſe they had come forth (it is well, we are in caſe, to put this caſe) certainely, they had beene Benoni's, Sons of ſorrow, to this whole land; Ichabod's right, our glory had beene gone cleane. For, what a face of a Common-wealth had here beene left? Excluſivè they came ad partum: if, incluſivè they had, their incluſivè had bin our excluſivè. We had bin ſhot off, and that out of this life and this world, every one. Venerunt, if they had come ad partum; if they, ad partum, we ad perniciem. Non erant vires: If there had, theſe vires had bin virus to us, and their pariendi our pereundi. If thoſe children had not beene loſt, many fathers had beene loſt; many children had loſt their fathers, and many Wives their Husbands. There had been a great birth of Orphanes and Widowes, brought forth at once. What manner of birth ſhould this have been, firſt in it ſelfe: then to us? In it ſelfe: we ſaid, for Vipers, there ſhould be no ſtrength, to deliver them. Were not theſe Vipers? the wombe, they lay in muſt have beene rent, for them to come forth: were they not the brood of Vipers? What talke you of a Viper, that ſometime (it may be) ſtings a child to death: or an elder body, if it be not looked to in time? What are Vipers, to them, that at once, would not have ſtung, but have ſent up, and torne in peeces, a King, a Queene, a Prince, and I know not how many of the Nobles, Clergie, Commons; all the Eſtates of a Realme, a whole Country, their owne Country, all at one blaſt? We ſaid, for Monſters, there ſhould be no ſtrength to deliver them. Theſe were ſuch monſters, as not in Chriſtendome alone, but, even in Africke (that mother of monſters) the Turkes, and Moores, and all that heard of it, were amazed, that ever the earth ſhould beare ſuch a brood of Miſcreants. For, they ſhould not (as children) have cried at their birth, but roared as devils; or, as if all the infernall furies had broke out of hell together. Let this ſerve: it was ſo out of meaſure bad, as it was too bad, ever to be brought. What marvell then, if nature ſhrunke in and would give no ſtrength, for ſuch a birth as that.

2. Shall I tell you another, why non erant vires? I will: it is ſomwhat a ſtrange one, but it is raiſed out of the words of the Text, and it is a birth borne of late, and chriſtened by the name of a Non erant vires, that you may know, they be a-kin, this and that: And ſo (I hope) it comes not out of ſeaſon, ſince for that childs ſake, this (I hope) fared never a whit the better.

You cannot but remember a clauſe not long ſince printed, and ſo (as it were) a child but lately borne, a Cardinals child it is (I meane the Tenet late taken up at Rome: I) That, all is now to goe, all Chriſtianity to ſtand or fall, by ſunt, or non ſunt vires.

The old Chriſtians never knew of any ſuch birth as this: Id fuit, quia deerant vires, ſaith the Cardinall. As much to ſay as, if they now in theſe dayes, be ſo as they were, carry carry themſelves quietly, it is quia non ſunt vires: and to hold no longer, than dum erunt; and then you are like to heare of them, to have them goe againe with ſuch another birth. (You ſhall have them as milde as Gregorie the firſt, when they have no ſtrength; but as fierce as Gregory the ſeventh, when they have.)

Nay, and they would beare the world in hand, this Child may claime kindred of the Fathers: that this was the minde of the bleſſed Saints, and Martyrs, in the perſecutions of the Primitive Church. That, with them, all went by Si adeſſent vires, and if then they had had ſtrength, never an Emperour ſhould have kept his Crowne upon his head. For, it was neither allegiance, Conſcience, Chriſtian duty, nor reſpect, that held them in. Id fuit, quia deerant vires: as (if they had not bin wanting) full well they ſhould have underſtood. That they were gentle and meeke, gramercie non erant vires; that and nothing elſe. O write a book for Gods ſake, de gloriâ Martyrum (Turonenſis ſo hath) of the glorious Martyrs that ſuffered then; but it was becauſe they had no ſtrength: elſe, the Emperours ſhould have ſuffered, not they.

But, they mightily wrong the Fathers, to father this opinion on them. Two hundred yeares after Chriſt, in the midſt of the fervor of perſecutions, Tertullian tels us another tale; that they had ſtrength then, more than enough; and ſo, ſuffered then, upon a better quia, than quia non erant vires. Well neere two hundred yeares after that; the Eccleſiaſticall Story ſheweth, under Iulian the Apoſtata, and under Valens the Arrian, they wanted no ſtrength then: (the greater part of the Apoſtates Armie being Chriſtians; and the chiefe Leaders and braveſt Companies, under the Arrian, being Orthodoxe.) And two hundred yeares yet after that, againſt the Lombards, Gregory ſaith, there was then ſtrength enough, to have left them neither King nor Duke, if all had gone by vires, then. But, he (good man) might not miſcere ſe, meddle with ought that might be the death, cujuſquam, of any one man. And theſe would have beene the death of I know not how many, but that Non erant vires. No ſuch children then, as thoſe, this day brought forth. It is not the Divinity of the old Chriſtians, but of the new Ieſuits, this: They muſt take the child to themſelves: It is no babe of the Fathers, it is a brat of their owne breed; hatched in theſe dayes of ours, never heard of before. And ſuch an one it is, as if it be let goe, we ſhall have a generation of monſters come of it ſoone.

He began with vires: Another ſince him ſaith; if ye have not vires, virus will ſerve as well. And ſince that, another; if vires, and virus faile too, go to it with fire-worke: Pulvis Serpentis which is worſe than virus Serpentis; Serpentine powder worſe than Serpentine poyſon. Poyſon kils one by one: powder, with one puffe, diſpatcheth all. For poyſon, ye may have a counter-poyſon: No antidote for powder, if it once take fire. Poyſon gives men leave yet, to die with ſome leaſure: Powder, that it doth, it doth at once in a moment.

To the utter confuſion of this error, that all is to goe by ſunt vires, was it, that non erant vires, this Day. And do but mark it, that God payes them with their own mony. They put all upon this very point; in this point, God this day foiled them. They go all, by ſtrength; and that ſtrength, then failed them. All, upon Si eſſent vires: God took order quod non eſſent vires. And God never let them have ſtrength, that ſo reſolve to put it; that, can they once gather ſtrength, no King, no State ſhall ſtand before them; but blow them up, ſinke them; poyſon them; one way or other, away with them all.

You ſee the reaſon, with GOD: but, ſee you not withall, next under GOD, whereto we are to aſcribe our ſafety? Euen to non erant vires. There is a point hangs by that. For, while that laſts, while ye keep them there, yee ſhall have the Primitive Church of them; have them lie as quiet, as ſtill, as ever did the barrels in the vault, till vires (like fire) come to them; and then, off goe they: then, nothing but depoſe Kings, diſpoſe of kingdomes, aſſoile ſubjects, arme them againſt their Soveraignes: then, doe they care not what. But, if the powder take not fire, then ſhall you ſtraight have books tending to mitigation; then, all quiet againe. Certainly, thus ſtanding, it were beſt to hold them in defectu virium, to provide ut ne ſint; to keep them at non ſunt vires, till time, they be better minded in this point, and we have good aſſurance of it: For, minded as they are, they want no will, no virus: they tell us what the matter is; ſtrength they want, they write it, they print it; and ſi adeſſent vires, they would act it in earneſt.

2 Why they were ſuffered to come ſo farre?

But yet, why was it ſuffered to come ſo farre? Why not taken ſooner? Evill (we all know) is beſt nipped in the bud; beſt (ever) deſtroyed in the Spawne. Being then ſo evill, as it was, why was it let goe all the while?

1 Reaſon on Gods part.

I will give you two reaſons: 1 One on Gods part, 2 The other on ours. 1. On Gods part: I know not how, but ye ſhall obſerve that he loves, that He takes delight thus to do. It is His play with Leviathan. To ſuffer his Whelps and him to have their courſe for a time, and for a long time; and then ſuddenly give them a twitch, and down they come. Let them go even till they come to the birth, and then come in the neck of them with a non ſunt vires, and all is marr'd.

Verſe 9.

Here in the text, how many Countries wan Senacherib? How neere was he let come to Ieruſalem, even to Libna, within leſſe than a dozen miles? News came ſuddenly, of the Blackmoores invading his Countrie, back he goes, had not the power to ſtirre one foot farther. How farre was the invincible Navie ſuffered to come ſailing in LXXXVIII. to caſt anchor even before the Thames mouth, every houre ready to deliver her children a ſhore. In an inſtant, a fatall faintneſſe fell upon them; their ſtrength and courage taken from them; about they turned, like a wheele; fled and had not the power to look behind them. But, non erant vires pariendi, we all know. God loves thus to doe: and then do it, cùm venerunt ad partum. His glory is the greater, He can let it come ſo nigh, and then put it by; let it alone till then, and then doe it.

2 On our parts.

2 There is another on our parts. For, eaſie account, and but eaſie, would have been made, if they had been taken at firſt: no greater matter, that. That we might make no eaſie account, we ſcaped not eaſily, but hard and ſcant: ſo, to make our eſcape the ſtranger, and our joy the more, that it went ſo farre, and came ſo neere, and yet miſſed us.

Of it ſelfe, it is beſt, Ut malum ubi primùm contingit, ibi moriatur, Evill be cruſhed at firſt, the Serpents head troden, at his firſt peeping in, or putting it out. But God doth not alwayes that, which in it ſelfe, is beſt to doe: but that, which will beſt affect us, and we take in beſt part. And ſo did He this: thereby to beget in us, and bring forth of us, a new birth of praiſe and thanks according.

4 The inference.

For, now we have done with this degenerate birth of theirs, we are to ſtay a little, and ſee, if we can get another, a more kindly birth, come from our ſelves. For barren we may not be: this delivery from theirs, is to make us delivered of another; wee to bring forth ſomwhat, for their not bringing forth.

What is that? The Text will lead us to it, if wee looke but over the next verſe. For there, when any evill travell threatens us, we finde by Ezechia, the kindly Birth then, on our parts, is Tu ergo leva orationem, a levie of prayers. Now, that being turned away, and turned away in a manner ſo miraculous, the naturall kinde iſſue then, is another Tu ergo, Tu ergò leva gratiarum actionem, a new levie of thanks: a new leva, quia levatus, for His eaſing of us, of ſo heavie a chance, like to light ſo heavie on us.

Verſe 4.

At the preſent (ſure) while it was freſh, we were raviſhed with it; for the time, we ſeemed to be even with child, as if we would bring forth ſomwhat; and ſomwhat we did bring forth, even an Act, that we would from yeare to yeare, as upon this Day, bring forth and be delivered of thanks and praiſe, for this delivery for ever. And here we are now, to Act that, we then enacted: even to travell with this new birth. God ſend us ſtrength, well to be delivered of it.

For, ſo ſhall we double our joy: 1 One joy, for the turning away of that miſcreant birth, of theirs; 2 another, for the welcomming this of our own.

This birth, we now travell with, is a good and a bleſſed birth. Bleſſing, and glory, and praiſe, and thanks, are in bonis all; all, good in us (if any thing be good in us;) the the beſt fruits of our nature, when it is at the very beſt. And if they be brought forth, it is as it ſhould be, and as God would have it.

But if (which God forbid) they ſhould either not come, or when they be come, our ſtrength faile, and they not brought forth, then are we at an after-deale againe; then would not this day bee ſo joyfull for the miſ-going of the other, as ſorrowfull for the abortion of this. Our joy (at leaſt) not ſo entire, but mixt with ſorrow: for, there is ſorrow even to Death, if we goe with ſo good a fruit, and it come to the birth, and there periſh; if we ſhall but make an Act, and doe no Act upon it.

Wee ſeeme to ſorrow at nothing more, than that many a good purpoſe there is, and many a vow made in time of need, ſickneſſe, or adverſity (ſo many, as it is by Divines held, There be moe good purpoſes, and that by ods, in hell, than there be in heaven) but, abortive purpoſes, and vowes all. For, O that we were but the one halfe of that we then promiſe to be, when we want and would have ſomewhat! O then, how thankfull we would be! how never forget! how faſt the Children come to the birth, then! And when we have what we would, our vigor quailes preſently, our ſtrength is gone from us, & non ſunt vires pariendi. For, all the World ſeeth, nothing we bring forth. Alas, how many aborcements are there daily of theſe Children! No where may this Verſe be taken up, No where ſo oft, ſo fitly applied, No where ſo uſed upon better cauſe than this, upon the failing of good deſires and intents.

That this we may do, to take us to leva orationem: let this be our laſt. To lift up our prayer firſt, againſt ſuch unnaturall births as that was, the Prophet Hoſees prayer, Give them ô Lord, what wilt thou give them? a barren wombe and drie breſts. There was no ſtrength for that birth of theirs: It was well, there was not: Thanks be to God, there was not: Thanks bee to God, for non erant vires. And, Ne ſint vires (ſay I) Never let there be ſtrength, for any like this birth; Never ſtrength, but weake hands, and feeble knees, for any ſuch enterpriſe. Ne vires pariendi: Nay, Ne veniant ad partum; not neither, not ſo farre: Nay, ne ad conceptionem; Nay then, Ne ad generationem, if it may be. If it may not, but they ſcape thither, to the birth; then, lift up your laſt prayer, and let this be it, and let it come up to Heaven, into God's preſence, and enter in even to His eares, for the equity of it; in all ſuch deſignes, that pariens may be ſine viribus, and partus, ſine vitâ: the mothers, no ſtrength; and the children, no life: But child and mother, periſh both, as this day, they did. And, better ſo, they periſh, than ſuch a number, than a whole Country periſh, by their meanes. This, a Ne veniant and a Ne ſint vires, againſt theirs. Hoſea 9. 14.

But, for ours, for our praiſe and thanks, Veniant, Let them come; and Sint, ô ſint vires, and let there be ſtrength, when they come; for ſuch, for ſo good a birth. Ever be there ſtrength, to kindneſſe, to thankfulneſſe, to the accompliſhment thereof, whereto we are in duty ſo deepely bound. Strength (ever) to all honeſt and good reſolutions. Pittie, but they would be ſo; Pitty, there ſhould want ſtrength for them. Well may they be conceived; come well to the birth; when they be come thither, vigor enough, to deliver then; and never, when they be come ſo farre, to miſcarry.

We may take our light from that. It is venerunt filii: and filii is the plurall number. So, more than one, many there would be. And filii fals well with the word gratiæ, which lacks the ſingular. No ſuch phraſe, as Agere gratiam. A ſingle thank was never heard of. And both fals well likewiſe, to quit the birth, we were quit of: For, the barrels were many and full, and ſo would our thanks be.

Againe, they would be filii; that is, ſuch as children be; and children be fleſh, bloud and bone; I meane, ſome reall, ſome ſubſtantiall thanks. Not to travell (as it were) with winde, with a few words onely, which are but aire, and into the aire they vaniſh againe. Partus opus (yee remember) we ſaid before: ſome worke there would bee, Actio gratiarum, ſomewhat actually done; leave ſome realty behind it, as in a Child there is.

Thus farre, like: but then, a difference. Come it would, not as did their ad partum excluſivè, thither and no farther; but, incluſivè to the birth, and from the the birth, have the bleſſing of the Wombe and of the breſts; of the wombe, to bring it forth; of the breſts, to bring it up, till it proved ſomwhat worth the while.

That ſo we may rejoyce as much in the affirmative of this birth of ours, Venerum & ſunt vires; as we did in the negative of that of theirs, venerunt & non erant vires. So doing, GOD ſhall againe and againe turne away thoſe births, if any be in breeding; take away all ſtrength from them being bred, as to Day, He did: And give us new occaſions daily to bring Him forth praiſe and thankes, for His daily continued mercies, in delivering our King, our Land, Us and Ours all.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL, on the V. of Novem. A. D. MDCXVII.

LVKE CHAP. I. VER. LXXIV, LXXV.
The VII. and VIII. Verses of Benedictus.

Vt, ſine timore, de manu inimicorum noſtrorum liberati, ſerviamus Illi,
In ſanctitate, & iuſtitia coram Ipſo, omnibus diebus noſtris.

That we being delivered, from the hands of our enemies, might ſerve Him without feare,
In holineſſe, and righteouſneſſe, before Him, all the dayes of our life.

THE children were come to the Birth, and there was no ſtrength, to deliver them. (There we left, laſt.) Their not being delivered, was the cauſe, of our being delivered. (And now I goe on.) Eſa. 37. 3. The Text the yeare before.

And our being delivered was to this end, That, wee being delivered, from the hands of our enemies, might ſerve Him, &c. For I demand: Delivered we were (as this Day) why was it? Was it that we might ſtand, and cry out of the fouleneſſe of the fact? Or ſtand, and inveigh, againſt thoſe monſters that were the actors in it? Was it, that we might bleſſe our ſelves for ſo faire an eſcape? Or beſtow a peece of an Holy-day on GOD, for it? And all theſe we may doe, And all theſe we have done: and upon good ground, all. Yet none of theſe the very Ut: nor we delivered, that we might The end (or Ut) of this dayes deliverance.

might doe theſe. But when all is ſaid, that can be ſaid, hither we muſt come: to this Ut here, and pitch upon it: for, this is indeed, the Ut finalis; the right, the true, the proper That: That, for our deliverance, we bethink our ſelves, how to doe Him ſervice.

Take the whole tract along, from the firſt word, Benedictus: There is viſited and redeemed in the firſt verſe: A horne, or a mighty ſalvation, in the next: After, we ſaved from them that did hate us: But you ſhall ſee, that all theſe ſuſpend ſtill, no perfect period, till you come to this. But at this, there is. Viſited, redeemed, ſaved, mightily ſaved; why all? For no other end, but that being ſo viſited, redeemed and ſaved, we might wholly addict, and give over our ſelves, to the ſervice of Him, who was Author of them all.

Our delivery from the grand delivery by Gift.

I wot well, that principally and properly, the whole ſong referreth to the deliverance of deliverances, our finall deliverance, from our ghoſtly enemies, and from their fire (the fire of hell) by our bleſſed Saviour; which was ſo great, as it was able to open the mouth, and looſe the tongue of a dumbe man, and make him breake forth into a Benedictus.

But, inaſmuch as in every kind, the chiefe giveth the rule (or, as we ſay here) the Ut, to all that are from, and under it: And that, ours and all other deliverances, that have been, or ſhall be, are from or under that of His: Our enemies, ſet on by thoſe enemies; Ours lighted their match, at their fire (the fire of hell) and ſo doe all others, whatſoever: therefore is it, that this Text aptly may be, and uſually hath bin ever applied to any deliverance, from any enemies whatſoever: thoſe of LXXXVIII. theſe of this Day: the ſame Ut, in all: as comming, all from the ſame principium à quo: and tending all, to the ſame finis ad quem, that here is ſet downe.

For the principium à quo; we have formerly endeavoured, to ſet that ſtreight, from whence our deliverance came: Even from the goodneſſe of GOD; yet not expreſſed under that terme, goodneſſe, but under the terme of mercy, as elſewhere. As here (but a verſe before) To performe the mercy. And a little after, Through the tender mercies of our God.

The ſame cauſe from whence.

Verſe 5.
Verſe 11.
Mercie.

Which terme is made choice of, for two cauſes: One, it includes miſery; The other, it excludes merit: and ſo, fitteſt for our turne.

1. Goodneſſe may be performed to one, though in good caſe: Not mercie; but to ſuch only, as are in miſery. In miſericordia there is miſery, ever. And this, to put us in mind of our caſe, the extreme miſery we had come to, but for His mercifull deliverance.

Lam. 3. 22.
The Text An. 1612.
Pſal. 136.
The Text An. 1615.

2. Againe, goodneſſe may be ſhewed to ſuch as may ſeeme ſome way to deſerve it: So cannot Mercie. For, but where merit is wanting, mercy is not pleaded properly. Theſe ſet us right, in the principium à quo, that we aſcribe it not to a wrong cauſe. Out of Ieremy: It was the mercy of the Lord, that wee were not conſumed. Out of the Pſalme: That mercy of His, that is over all his workes.

2
The ſame end whereto.

And now to the finis ad quem. For, we are as eaſily, and no leſſe dangerouſly miſtaken in that. By mercies meanes, without all merit of ours, we were not conſumed, but delivered from ſo great a miſery, ſo neere us: why were we ſo? Were we liberati, to become Libertines, to ſet us downe, and to eat, and to drink healths, and riſe up, and ſee a play? was there no Ut in it? Yes: what was that? Ut ſerviamus illi.

The Summe or Subſtance of the Text.
Contractus innominatus.
Verſe 5.

So, there growes an obligation out of it. For, Ut, is a conditionall, and implies ever a kinde of contract, at leaſt, that which is not named, but is much uſed. Do ut des, facio ut facias. So that, the Text is of the nature of a Bond, or Covenant. And I give it not that denomination, of mine owne head: I finde it ſo called, in expreſſe termes, but a verſe before, To remember His holy covenant.

The Diviſion.

A Covenant then, names it. And a Covenant divides it: For, a Covenant is ever between two, the two here, GOD and us.

I.

The Covenant on GOD's part, is at the fourth verſe: That we ſhould be ſaved from our

our enemies. Which Covenant is here pleaded, as performed, by Him, under liberati.

The Covenant on our parts, ours; That, then, we should serve Him for it. His part is kept, liberati, shewn that. Then may we be put in suit, for ours, that is, for ser-viamus.

On GODS part, I set forth these. 1. That we were delivered. 2. That, from our enemies. 3. That, from the hands of our enemies. 4. That, without feare (for so it stands in the verse) Ut sine timore liberati; that, without feare being delivered. So it may be taken; and so it is taken, by sundry of the Fathers.

On ours, I reckon these. Our Service: The matter, and the manner of it. The matter, wherein: Serve Him in holinesse, Serve Him in righteousnesse; not holinesse, or righteousnesse alone, but to serve Him, in both.

The manner how (often, no lesse acceptable than the service it selfe.) 1. Ut sine timore; that our service be freely and cheerefully done (now we are out of feare.) 2. Ut Coram ipso, That unfainedly, as before Him, not before men (before whom we may and doe often halt.) 3. And for the time of it, Ut omnibus diebus, that we faint not, or give over, but continue in it all our life long. Three qualities of ours, and indeed, of every true and faithfull service. That these be done; And that they may be done; And that, that which shall be spoken may tend to this, that they may bee done, &c.

GODS part, The Covenant.

Our part. The Condition. The Matter.

The Manner. 1 2 3

I.

Ut liberati. That we being delivered. To shew the great equity on Gods part of the Covenant, we say first: that we were to serve Him, though liberati were left out; being, or not being delivered. This to be our first point.

The Equity of Gods Covenant. 1 Ut, without liberati.

The Noble Armie of Martyrs, it was all their case, they served out their service, without any Ut liberati, any bond of temporall deliverance. Farre from any liberati; were they three, that were upon casting into the fire, and even then said: Our GOD, whom we serve, He can deliver us out of thy hands, and from the fiery fornace. But, if He will not (not deliver us) Be it knowne unto thee, O King, wee will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image, which thou hast set up. That is, serve Him we will, whether He deliver us or no. Will ye heare an Heroicall spirit, indeed? Not, Etsi me non liberârit, Though He should not deliver me: but, Etsi me occiderit, yea, though He should kill me, to die for it, I will doe my duty, and serve Him, though. It is Iob. These stood not upon liberati: But, deliverance, no deliverance, come of it what would, they were at a point, would and were resolved to serve Him. And (ad erubescentiam nostram dico, I speake it not to our commendation) if there were in us, any remnant of their generous spirit, God should not need to come in Indentures with us. It favours somwhat of a mercenary, that. Serviamus should hold, and let liberati goe, whither it would: And we, live and die, His servants, though He had not, or should not deliver us. This is Ut, without liberati.

Dan.3.17. Verse 18.

Iob 13.15.

1 Cor.6.5.

But then, Ut, with liberati. If GOD take us, as He findes us, and say with the Apostle; Parco autem vobis, Goe to, I beare with you; and κατ' οἰκονομίαν by way of indulgence, condescend to condition with us, if He come to Ut liberati; shall not that hold us? Our dutie being absolute, depending upon no Ut, if upon speciall favour, GOD will come in bonds, and let it runne in this tenour, That being delivered wee shall serve Him; else not: shall we not then doe it? This being done, I marvell what we can alleage, to decline our dutie; unlesse we meane, it should be fast with GOD, and loose with us; He bound to doe all for us, and we free, to doe nothing for Him.

2 Ut with liberati.

1 Cor.7.28,6.

And yet a third (to magnifie His mercy, yet more, and to tye us the harder to our Covenant)

3 Ut, with liberati, first, before serviamus.

Covenant) Ut, is not only with liberati, but with liberati, firſt: GOD is bound, and firſt bound, to do for us, before we do ought for Him. It is not, That we ſhould ſerve Him, firſt, and then He deliver us, after: But, that He ſhould firſt deliver us, and after, when we are delivered, then, and not before, we ſhould do our ſervice. It is not liberandi, ſhall be, or may be, hereafter: It is liberati, are already. So we are afore-hand with Him. He hath done His, before we begin ours. Liberati, you ſee, precedes ſerviamus: liberati, the tenſe paſt; ſerviamus, but the preſent (and I would it were the preſent) I doubt, for a great part it is yet to come.

And the reaſon, why He will have it ſo to precede; is, He would have our ſervice grow out of His favours, our duty, out of His bounty. That is the right, and (indeed) the Evangelicall ſervice. If He have us at the advantage, on the hip (as we ſay) it is no great matter, then, to get ſervice at our hands. None more ſervile than we, then. But that, is the Legall, for feare. And that ſomtimes He hath, but likes it not; He would have it, out of love, out of the ſenſe of His goodneſſe, have our hearts broken; with that. That, is the only acceptable ſervice to Him, that growes out of that root. The ſerviamus that growes out of liberati; delivered and ſerve: firſt delivered, and then ſerve. This for the equity of the Covenant on Gods part.

B. The performance of Gods Covenant.

Now come I to plead, that on Gods part this Covenant was performed, that liberati we were. Heaven and earth would riſe againſt us, and cnodemne us, if we ſhould not confeſſe liberati this day. Heaven ſaw it, and was aſtoniſhed: And it is gone over all the Earth; the fame of it. But that, we doe. The keeping of this Day, the meeting of this Aſſembly, are both to acknowledge and profeſſe, that a liberati there hath bin.

a 1 That delivered.

b Twice delivered. Pſalm. 71. 20.

Nay, not one alone: Two there have bin: and two ſuch, as our eyes have ſeene, but our eares have not heard, neither could our Fathers tell us, of the like. Two ſuch, as no Age ever ſaw, nor can be found in any Story: That of LXXXVIII. This of DCV. (both within the compaſſe of ſeventeene yeares.) One by ſtrand, the other by land (as they ſay.) From a Fleet by Sea, from a Vault by land, de abyſſis terræ (as ſaith the Pſalme) as well, as de abyſſis maris: a Summer, and a Winter deliverance: either of them, like this of Zacharie's, able to bring Benedictus from a dumb man.

Pſal. 71. 28.

a From our enemies.

So, delivered we were. But, a delivery is a thing at large: though it be, but from a miſchance, from ſome heavie accident, it is a delivery. But, if it be from our enemies, it is ſo much the more: As, in that, there is nothing but caſualty: in theſe, there is rancour and malice, they hate us: So this the greater danger by farre.

b Mortall enemies.

And there is much in the enemies: Of them, ſome reach but at our ſtates, lands or livelihoods: Otherſome, nothing wil ſatisfie, but our lives. Every enemie is not mortall, where he is, the danger is deadly. Ours were ſuch, ſought to bring utter deſtruction on us: and not on us alone, but on ours: nor on us and ours only, but on the whole land in generall.

c Secret enemies Pſalm. 74. 4.

Againe, of ſuch as be deadly, ſome are roaring enemies (the Pſalme ſo cals them) ſuch as threaten and proclaim their enmitie, like thoſe in LXXXVIII. Others lurke, like Vipers, that ſting to death, without any hiſſing at all; as were ours (this day) which are the more dangerous a great deale.

More than liberati (which is) ſet free.

This made it (indeed) to be more than liberati (ours.) Liberati, is properly ſet free, and freeing is but from Servitude. This was more. Our death was ſought, and we delivered from death, and that a fearefull death, unprepared, ſuddenly, in a moment, to be ſhattered to peeces. And yet it was liberati too, in the proper ſenſe: for upon the matter, it was from both. The Prophets diviſion would have taken place in it. Qui ad mortem, ad mortem; qui ad ſervitutem, ad ſervitutem. They, that had bin blowen up to death; they, that had bin left, to Servitude (to a State more miſerable, than death it ſelfe.) So, in one liberati, we had two. Both from that of Haman's lots, which were, to death (one that was גוֹרָל in Hebrew, this was κλῆρος in Greek:) And from that of Babylon, beſides, which was thraldome and confuſion. Thus were we delivered from our enemies.

Yet liberati too.

Ier. 43 11.

Eſther 3. 7.

But

But from the hands of our enemies, is more, than from our enemies. For let the malice of an enemie be what it will, if his hands be weak, or ſhort, or we far enough from them: the matter is ſo much the leſſe. But if we come within his reach, if he get us within his hands, then God have mercy on us. 3 The hands of our enemies, not our enemies.

Specially, if there be in his hands, a knife thus engraven, To cut the throats of the Engliſh Heretickes, as in LXXXVIII. divers ſo engraven in Spaniſh, were brought from the Fleet, and ſhewed. Or if there be in his hands, a match, ready to give fire, to XXX. barrels of powder (not ſo few.) If the hands be ſuch: that is then a delivery, not from our enemies only, but from their hands, or (as we ſay) from their very clutches. Yee will mark, that thorow all the Pſalmes, ever the part is ſtill enforced: Not from the Lions, but from the Lions paws; from the hornes of the Unicornes, from the teeth of the Dogge: So here, from the hands, from the bloudy hands of our enemies. Pſal. 22.14, 22. 124, 6.

Further I ſay, it is more, to be delivered from their hands, than out of them. For, if (out) then (in) firſt. They muſt firſt be, in the hands, that are delivered out of them. But from them, that may be from comming in them at all. The better deliverance of the twaine. And that was ours: And that was CHRISTS: Hee is ſaid, to have looſed the ſorrowes of Hell, Non quibus nexus eſt, ſed ne nectteretur, ſaith Auguſtine. Not, wherewith He was bound; but that He might not be at all bound with them. So we, not by taking us out, but keeping us from, from their hands, from the hands of our enemies. 4 From their hands, not out of them. In Act. 2.24.

Let me yet ſtay a little. For (me thinks) we may find in this word, not only our deliverance, but even the very manner, and the meanes of it. Not in liberati, the Latine: but, in S. Lukes own words; ῥυσθέντες that will come home to both. Delivered, the Manner of it, Eruti.

ῥυσθέντες that is, properly, eruti. Eruti, that fits us, for the manner, two wayes. From a dark hole.

Eruere, is de tenebris in lucem educere. Out of ſome dark deep hole (as it might be the Cellar) to bring forth ſomething to light (as it might be thoſe ſame vaſa mortis, veſſels there couched, and deſtined to the blowing us all up.) It muſt be ſome dark vault or pit, Unde, from whence: well therefore ſaid of us eruti, that were delivered from a pit-danger, a danger under ground, in abyſſis terræ, in the deepe of the earth. Pſal. 7. 13.

Secondly, eruere, the compound is, from ruere (the ſimple) that is, from a ruine. Not as if we ſhould have fallen into the pit, but that, there was there beſtowed within it, that which would have ſent us up, that down we ſhould have come, have fallen down, all to peeces. Ruina it would have been, and therefore eruti, right. And they talke of helping incendium ruinâ: Here, there had bin incendium and ruina both, and neither helped other, but both bin paſt all help. From a ruine or fall.

Delivered from a ruine; But eruere is then in kind, vvhen we are ſo delivered from a ruine, as with their ruine, that ſought ours. So it was, we parted not of even hands, we from them, and they from us, neither of both, a fall. No: we fell not (no fall with us:) they fell, and had a foule fall. We were ſo delivered from their hands, as they delivered into ours. We eruti: they ruti and cæſi both, fell and were ſlaine. The pit they digged, they fell into themſelves: In the ſnare they laid, was their owne foot taken. The higheſt deliverance of all (ſo much made of in the Pſalmes.) With the ruine of our enemies. Pſalm. 20.8. Pſalm. 9 15.

And thus much was before implied, when it was called Cornu ſalutis, a Horne of ſalvation. The ſalvation that ſo comes, comes ever with the perdition of the adverſe partie. So is the Horne expounded in Deut. XXXIII, With theſe ſhalt thou ſtrike thine enemies and puſh them, as any wilde beaſt. Ventilare is the word, Toſſe them up into the wind, upon the top of their hornes, till they have gored them, and brought them to their end. Such was our Horne of Salvation, or (as we turne it) a mightie ſalvation. God ſhewing His might no leſſe againſt them, than for us: viſited and redeemed us mightily, in His mercy; viſited and ruined them as mightily, in His wrath. Implied in cornu ſalutis. Verſe 2. Deut. 33.17.

And againe, in this, not only the manner, how, but the meanes whereby. For, He hath raiſed up a horne of ſalvation. Now to raiſe up, muſt needs be interpreted of a perſon, the meanes of the delivery. Who was that? In Daniel, and the Revelation, I finde it totidem verbis, Decem Cornua, decem Reges ſunt: Alluding therein, as to their great Delivered. The meanes of it. By a King. Dan. 7. 24. Rev. 17, 12.

great power, ſo ſomwhat to the anointing thence powred on their heads: that it ſhould be ſalus Regia, and per Regem. A delivery wrought by a King: the King of heaven to work it, mediante Rege terreno. In cujus labiis divinatio, if ever it were in any's, who did thereby eruere that, out of the dark phraſe, by which we all were eruti. And ſo, not the manner alone, but the meanes in it, too, that we vvere eruendo, eruti.

Eruendo. By picking out. Prov. 16. 10.

5 And laſt, that all this was ſine timore. For in the Verſe ſo it ſtands, firſt, ut ſine timore liberati. And ſtands ſo firſt, that we might take ſpeciall notice, and note of it. And though divers Writers draw (ſine tempore) to ſerviamus, as if there were an hyperbaton, to ſerve Him without feare: Yet vvhat ſhould let us, ſo to take it, as it ſtands? Specially ſince divers of the Ancients take it ſo: (I name Origen, Titus Boſtrenſis, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, and Theophylact.) But we may well reconcile them both, if vve ſay (which truly we may ſay) That, without feare we were delivered, to ſerve Him in a ſtate without (or void of) feare.

[a] That delivered without feare.

It is a great favour, vvhen we are delivered; to be delivered, abſque hoc, that we bee at all put in any feare. Some, are ſometimes ſaved from their enemies, but it is, with ſome fright firſt. It was the Iewes caſe, vvhen from Haman: It was ours, in Anno LXXXVIII.

Eſther 4. 3.

They that are ſo, it cannot be denied, but delivered they are, but not ſine timore liberati, not delivered without feare. This vvas without feare. Our caſe, juſt. We had no ſenſe, and ſo, no feare at all, of the danger, till it was paſt. I cannot better expreſſe it, than in Theodorets ovvn words. Sed ſi ſic dicendum eſt (ſaith he) veluti non ſentientes ita, nos de periculo tranſtulit in ſecuritatem. If it may ſo be ſaid, without any ſenſe or feeling at all, did he tranſlate us, from the depth of danger, into the ſtate of ſecurity. In vvhich point, ours did come neere to the great delivery of the world, by CHRIST, what time the vvorld little thought, either of their ovvne perill, or of His paines and paſſion, that delivered it. Yet, in this, ours had more than was in CHRISTS owne delivery, That there, though it were without feare, yet not without ſomwhat as evill, as feare. For, CHRISTS was vvrought by His innocent death (a matter of ſorrow, and griefe.) But in ours there was none, neither feare nor griefe, nor any other unpleaſant paſſion. No innocent ſuffered here; none but they, that had their heads in the contriving, or their hands in the digging about it. Without feare it was, vvithout any thing elſe, that might taint our delivery, with the leaſt matter of grievance.

[b] Without feare or any other paſſion.

The recapitulation of all the former.

So then, [1] delivered vve vvere. [2] And not from the caſualty of any miſchance, but from the malice of enemies: Enemies, and thoſe [3] capitall; And thoſe [4] cloſe hidden enemies: From them; yea, [5] from their very hands: And [6] From their hands, not out of them. And our delivery was eruti, [7] from ſomthing in abyſsis terræ; And [8] from a ruine too: [9] And that, with their ruine, that ſought ours. [10] Our ſalvation, Cornu ſalutis, a Royall deliverance: [11] And yet eruendo it was. [22] And all abſque timore, [13] Or abſque any thing elſe that might blemiſh our joy vvith matter of ſorrow in the leaſt degree.

And this for GODS part, who hath remembred His holy Covenant (I truſt) and performed it in every clauſe; nay, in every word, to us, to the uttermoſt.

II. Now, to our part (which we may be put in ſuit for.) Liberati then, is cleare. But how? abſolutely? at large? abſque aliquo inde? No condition annexed? No Ut? Yes: take the Ut with you. Liberati, Ut. Delivered that we ſhould: Should do ſomwhat: for, naturaliter obligamur ad dantem. This Ut is naturall: there groweth a naturall obligation between him that doth, and them that receive a good turne: (And a deliverance, ſpecially ſuch an one is a good turne.) The fields we till, the trees we plant, ſhew it. They returne their fruit to them, that beſtow labour, or coſt upon them. That (I know not how) but ſo it falls out, in matter of benefits, we be not ſo ſoone looſed, but we be tied againe: Nor eaſed, but loaden afreſh: nor freed, but bound anew. It is the Lavv, the bond of nature, this, Liberati Ut.

Our Covenant or Condition:

Delivered, That we ſhould.

And

And that Ut, is Ut ſerviamus. And this particular, Ut, groweth out of the Law of Nations. There the Law is, ut victus ſit in poteſtate victoris, the conquered, ever, in the power of the Conquerour, to take his life, or to ſave it, at his pleaſure. But, if he will ſave it, then comes the voluntary Ut, or Covenant, He that hath his life ſaved, to vow to beſtow it, in his ſervice, that did ſave it. Servi (the very name) came of ſervati. They that ſhould have died, and were ſaved, did willingly covenant, ſerva & ſerviam, to ſerve him, by whom their lives were preſerved. This being the Law of Nature, and Nations, why ſhould not the GOD of Nature, the King of Nations, be allowed it? that if our lives have bin by Him ſaved; we ſhould, from thenceforth, come to this Ut, ut ſerviamus Illi. Should ſerve Him.

Well, well, it is paſt now; if it were to come: It is, that we being delivered; if it were, that we being to be delivered, we would tell another tale then: we would be glad and faine ſo to covenant, O deliver us (then) but for this once, and we would ſerve Him (that we would) and be holy and righteous, and what He would beſides. Put any Ut, to liberati, then. We would then ſeek it of Him, that now is offered by Him, to be delivered, if being ſo delivered, we will covenant, but to do that, which we were bound to do, delivered, or no. c We would have covenanted to ſerve Him.

And, why ſhould we think much of this ſerviamus? All the world knowes, if the plot had gone on, and the powder gone off, the whole land ſhould not have ſcaped ut ſerviamus: But ſhould have ſerved duram ſervitutem, bin not in ſervice, but in ſervitude. Their ſervitude, is changed into this ſervice A bleſſed exchange for us. Great oddes between thoſe two: Nay, no compariſon at all, between Gods ſervice, and their ſervitude; their bondage, thraldome, ſlavery, tyranny, I cannot heape too many names, Gods ſervice is freedome in reſpect of that: Nay, without any reſpect at all, His ſervice is perfect freedome, we ſay it, we pray it, every day. we ſhould have ſerved, if not delivered. And ſerved a worſe. For the ſervice, ſerviamus

And if no compariſon, in Serviamus; None, in Illi (I am ſure.) Nay, if there were any thing to miſlike in ſerviamus, amends is made for it, in Illi. For, the ſervice is much thereafter, as the Illi, the party is, whom we ſerve. Dignitate Domini honorata ſit conditio ſervi. He may be ſo great a State (we ſerve) as, it is an honour to ſerve Him. Now how great a Lord, the Lord of Lords is, what ſhall I need tell you? There is no end of his greatneſſe. How great, and how good withall, res ipſa loquitur; that appeares, by our delivery, in part: and more ſhall, by His eternall reward laid up, for them that ſerve Him. There is, in all the world, no more honourable, nor beneficiall Service, than, this ſerviamus Illi. For the party, Illi. For His greatneſſe. Pſal. 145. 3. For His goodneſſe.

But ſay, we have no minde to ſerve Him; if we ſerve not Him, yet ſerve we muſt, and ſerve we will, if not Him, ſome other. It is the condition of our life, one or other ſerve we doe. We muſt hold of ſome Lord: if free from one, another we ſerve: And who is that other? when we are free from GOD, from righteouſneſſe, we ſerve ſin and Satan (a worſe ſervice, I dare ſay:) better then, be free from them, and ſerve God in righteouſneſſe. If we ſerve not Him, ſome other we muſt, and worſe. Rom 6. 18, 20.

But, if we not ſerve Him; I aske, what will we do then? will we ſerve His enemies? For ſo are theſe. We were not delivered from our enemies, to ſerve His enemies (I am ſure) That were a foule ſhame for us: that were againſt all reaſon. But, if we ſerve not Him, we ſerve them. Reſolve then to ſerve Him, that hath ſaved us: Not, His enemies, in a prophane and unrighteous; but Him, in an holy and righteous courſe of life. And ſo, am I now come to that, wherein our ſervice lieth. Thoſe worſe be His enemies.

In holineſſe and righteouſneſſe. In which two, in a ſort, are recapitulate the two Tables of the Law: Holy to GOD, Righteous to men. Quòd quis reverenter ſe habeat ad divina: Quòd quis laudabiliter cum hominibus converſetur (ſaith Chryſoſtome) Reverently to performe holy duties: Laudably to have our converſation among men. The Matter of our ſervice, wherein.

Both theſe (firſt:) not either of them. To ſpend our ſervice but in one, is but to ſerve Him by halfes: in both, then, to ſerve Him. Neither in an unrighteous holines; nor, in an holy kinde of unrighteouſneſſe. Neither with the Phariſee, to have all our holineſſe in our Phylacteries and fringes, and frequenting the Lectures of the Law Matth. 23. 5. Holineſſe and Righteouſneſſe Both.

(no matter how we live:) Nor with the Saducee, live indifferent honeſtly, but neither beleeve ſpirit, nor look for reſurrection: be Chriſtians, like Agrippa, in modico, a little Religion, upon a knives point, will ſerve us. Neither in holineſſe then only, nor in righteouſneſſe only, but in both.

Act. 23.8. Act. 26.18.

In both, but in their order though, as they ſtand; And holineſſe ſtands firſt. So, to reckon of that as our prime ſervice. For, if there had not bin ſome meaning in it, it is ſure, righteouſneſſe might have ſerved for both: Religion, holineſſe, all vertues are συλλήβδην, in it. Suum cuique (ſaith righteouſneſſe) and in that, is quæ Dei, Deo. Every one, his due; And ſo God His.

Holineſſe firſt.

Matth. 22, 21.

Yet are they ever thus parted, here, and elſe-where: Partly, to ſet out GOD's part by it ſelfe (as the fat from the ſacrifice) for the dignitie of His perſon: Partly, to keep up the diſtinction, which ever hath, and ever muſt be maintained, of ſevering things ſacred from common; and holy, from humane duties. And partly alſo to check the conceit that runs in the world abroad, O, he is a good man, lives quietly with his neighbours, payes every man his due: Every man his due? and how then? ſhall GOD lack His due? I trow not, but have His too, and His firſt. Reaſon is, Hee be firſt ſerved.

Eccluſ. 47. 2.

And holineſſe is His due: you may read it, in the plate of gold, in the High-Prieſts fore-head, Holineſſe to the LORD: You may heare it, from the mouth of the Seraphim, they mention none of all His Attributes, but that: That they do, and do it, thrice over, Pointing us thereby, what is chiefe in Him, and ſhould be chiefe with us, and whereto we ſhould chiefly direct our ſervice. Holineſſe, is His due: and (heare you) ſo His due, as the Apoſtle is direct, totidem verbis, without this due payed, without holineſſe, ſhall no man ever ſee God.

Exod 28.36. Eſay 6.3. Heb 12.14.

To ſerve Him in Holineſſe.

But then, you will mark, it is to ſerve Him, in Holineſſe. Holineſſe is one thing: To ſerve God in Holineſſe, is another: Holineſſe we may have (at leaſt, thinke our ſelves to have) but, a ſtately, ſurly kinde of Holineſſe it is, ſo as in our Holineſſe, we ſerve Him not. But it is not enough to be holy: a ſervice in holineſſe is required at our hands: that we acknowledge a ſervice in holineſſe, and as ſervants, carry our ſelves and ſerve Him, in it.

Our ſervice in holineſſe I divide, as the Pſalme doth: Either in ſecreto Sanctorum, when we are alone by our ſelves (as, there, in ſecret, good folkes faile not, to ſerve Him.) Or, in Synagogâ in the open Aſſembly, with the Congregation.

Our ſervice in Holineſſe in the Congregation. Pſal. 111. 1.

Our ſecret holineſſe I meddle not with. Abſcondita Deo noſtro, I leave it to GOD. I hope, it is better, and more ſervice-like, than our outward is. As abſcondita Deo, ſo revelata nobis: Our Church-Service, our Service in Synagogâ, the outſide of it (ſo) that is no ſecret; all men ſee what it is, that full homely it is, nay, full rude it is (and ſlightly the meaner the perſons, the more faultie in it. Our holineſſe is growen too familiar, and fellow-like; Our carriage there, can hardly be termed ſervice, there is ſo very little of a ſervant in it.

Deut 29.29. Deut. 29. 39.

When we do not only ſerve Him, but do our ſervice before Him (both, are in the Text, Illi, and coram illo) as that we do when we come hither, it is to profeſſe our ſervice, that we come. When we come, before the preſence of the Lord, the preſence of the Lord of the whole earth (ſo the Pſalme doubles it, to make us think on it the better) then, ſaith he, worſhip Him in decore Sancto, in a holy kind of decency, or (as we read it) in the beauty of holineſſe. Our holineſſe ſhould have a kind of beautie with it. Holines and honour, the Apoſtle joyneth them together; Godlines and gravitie, εὐσεβεία καὶ σεμνότης, and them too. Now this is that, the world complaines of; there is not that decor, that beautie: not that honour, not that σεμνότης, that venerable grave behaviour, in our holineſſe, we carry not our ſelves in His holy Sanctuary, where our holineſſe ſhould be at the holieſt, nor at His ſervice there, as ſervants ſhould, and uſe to do.

Our ſervice in adoration or worſhip of Himſelfe. Exod. 20 5. Pſal. 95. 6.

We ſtumble at the very threſhold. Our very firſt ſervice (or rather, the introduction to our ſervice) in the firſt Table (the Table of holineſſe) is there ſet downe to be, adorabis. We turne it, ſhalt worſhip. How that is, we are told every day in the Pſalme, Let us worſhip, and fall downe, and kneele before the LORD our Maker. It was ever in the Primitive Primitive Church, the first voyce was heard, the first thing they did, ante omnia adoremus Dominum, qui fecit nos, Before we do any thing, let us fall down and worship the Lord that made us. And it shall never be found, that they came in without it. But this shall, that men came to the Temple, purposely to adore, and that, that they did, though their time or occasions would suffer them to do nothing else. That, they held a service, of it selfe. Now, adoration is laid aside, and with the most, neglected quite. Most come and goe without it; Nay, they scarce know, what it is. And, with how little reverence, how evill beseeming us, we use our selves in the Church, comming in thither, staying there, departing thence, let the world judge.

The worship of the Saints in Heaven. Rev. 4.10.

Why? What are we to the glorious Saints in heaven? Doe not they worship thus? Off goe their crownes, down before the Throne they cast them, and fall downe themselves after, when they worship. Are we better than they? Nay, are we better than His Saints on earth, that have ever seemed to goe too farre, rather than to come too short, in this point? There was one of them, and he was a King (no lesse person) when it was thought, he had done too much. What? uncovered? yea, uncovered (saith he) and if that be too vile, vilior adhuc fiam plusquam; I will be yet more vile; Why, it is before the Lord, before whom we cannot be too low. To humble our selves before Him, it is our honour, in all eyes, save such as Michal. And I reade of none, but of Rabsakeh, that upbraided King Ezekias, for saying to his people, You shall worship before this Altar. No more then, is sought from us, than Kings on earth, than crowned Saints in heaven, in their holy service, do before Him.

Of the Saints in earth. 2 Sam. 6.22.

Esay 36.7.

Gods disdaine of our worship.

In Malachi's time, things were growen much to this passe, that now they are, to this want of regard: to thinke any service (though never so slight) would serve GOD well enough. When they were come to this, GOD is faine to take state upon Him, and to tell them plainely, He would have them know, He is a King, and a great King. 1 Great: for He is King of the whole earth; Others, but of some part of it. 2 Great: for Hee is King for ever and ever; Others, but for a terme of yeares. 3 Great: for Hee is King of Kings, and they His lieges too, whose lieges we all are. And so fals to termes with them, that He held scorne to be so slighted over, even to these very words, Shall I take it at your hands? And then, bids them goe, and do but offer such service as this, to their Prince, do but come before him on that fashion: See, if he will be content with it, or accept his person (that is) give him a good look, if any should so appeare in his presence. No more will GOD: He knoweth no reason, why any King or creature on earth, should be used with more respect, or served with more reverence, than He.

Malac 1.14. Psal. 47.7. Psal. 10.16. Rev. 1.5. Mal. 1.13.8.

Our service in His holy things. In the Sacrament. Mal 1.7.

Thus serve we Him, in His holy worship: how serve we Him, in His holy things? how serve we Him, in our holinesse there? I will begin, and take up the same complaint that the Prophet Malachi doth. First, Mensa Domini despecta est: The Table of the LORD is not regarded. That Sacrament, that ever hath beene counted, of all Holies the most Holy, the highest and most solemne service of GOD; (where are delivered to us, the holy Symboles, the pretious memorials of our greatest Delivery of all;) why, of all others they speed worst. How are they in many places, denied any reverence at all, even that which prayer, which other parts have? No service then: No servants there: but bidden guests, haile-fellowes, homely and familiar, as one neighbour with another. And not only, de facto none they have: but de jure, it is holden, none they ought to have. And that, so holden, as rather than they shall have any, some will suffer for it, or rather for their own proud folly, in refusing it. What time they take the cup of salvation, they will not invocate, at least not bee in specie invocantis: as the King the Prophet would. What time they receive the Cup of blessing, they will not receive it as a blessing, as children receive it from their Parents, and their children from them. Both which, invocation and receiving a blessing, were never done, but de geniculis. What shall the rest look for, if thus we serve Him, when we are at the holiest?

Psal. 116.13. 1 Cor. 10.16.

Our service of God (in the service; that is, in prayer.

Shall we now come to the service indeed? λατρεῖαν the word here in my Text. It is no new thing, for one species to carry away the name of the genus from the rest, as in in this: For, though there be other parts of GODS ſervice: yet Prayer hath borne away the name of ſervice, from them all. עבירה the Hebrewes call their Common-Prayer, and that is, ſervice. And the Greekes, theirs, Λειτουργίαν, and that is ſo, too. And we, when we ſay, At Service time, and the Service-Book, and refuſe to be preſent at Divine Service, meane ſo likewiſe. And, GOD Himſelfe ſeemes to goe before us, and direct us ſo to do. For, His Houſe, He hath named the Houſe of Prayer. (Obſerving the Rule, to give it the denomination, from that which is the chiefeſt ſervice in it.) As indeed, when all is done, devotion is the proper, and moſt kindly work of Holineſſe: and, in that ſerve we God, if ever we ſerve Him. Now, in what honour, this part of holineſſe is; what account we make of this ſervice, do but tell the number of them that be here at it, and ye ſhall need no other certificate; that in His ſervice we ſerve Him but ſlenderly.

Eſay 56.7.

Pſal. 138 2.

Our ſervice of GOD in the Word.

Thou haſt magnified thy Name, and thy Word above all things; ſaith the Pſalme. After invocation then of His Name, let us ſee how we ſerve His Word; that part of His ſervice, which in this Age (I might ſay, in the errour of this Age) carries away all. For, what is it to ſerve God in holineſſe? why, to go to a Sermon: All our holiday holineſſe, yea, and our working-day too, both are come to this, to heare (nay, I dare not ſay that, I cannot prove it) but, to be at a Sermon.

The Word is Holy (I know) and I wiſh it all the honour that may be: but, God forbid; wee ſhould thinke, that in hoc uno ſunt omnia. All our holines is in hearing: All our Service, eare-ſervice: that were in effect, as much as to ſay, all the body were an Eare.

1 Cor. 12. 17.

An errour it is, to ſhut up His ſervice into any one part, which is diffuſed through all. Another, ſo to doe, into this one. It is well knowne, that, all the time of the Primitive Church, the Sermon was ever done, before the Service begun. And that, to the Sermon, Heathen men, Infidels, and Iewes, Heretikes, Schiſmatikes, Energumeni, Catechumeni, Pœnitentes, Competentes, Audientes, all theſe, all ſorts of people were admitted: But, when they went to ſervice, when the Liturgie began, all theſe were voided; not one of them ſuffered to ſtay. It were ſtrange, that, that ſhould be the only, or the chiefe Service of God, whereat, they which were held no ſervants of God, no part of the Church, might and did remaine no leſſe freely, than they that were.

But even, this holy Word (wherein all our holineſſe is) how ſerve we Him, in it? Nay, we ſerve Him not, we take the greateſt liberty there, of all other. We come to it, if we will: we goe our wayes, when we will: ſtay no longer, than we will: and liſten to it, while we will: and ſleep out, or turne us and talke out, or ſit ſtill, and let our mindes rove (the reſt) whither they will: take ſtich at a phraſe, or word, and cenſure it, how we will. So, the Word ſerves to make us ſport: we ſerve not it. At this part of our ſervice in holineſſe, we demeane our ſelves with ſuch libertie (nay licentiouſneſſe rather) that holy it may be, but ſure ſervice it is not, nothing like. And truely, it is a notable Stratagem of Satan, to ſhrink up all our holineſſe, into one part: and into that one, where we may be, or not be: Being, heare or not heare: Hearing, mind, or not minde: Minding, either remember or forget: Give no account to any, what we doe or not doe: Only, ſtay out the houre (if that) and then go our way; many of us, as wiſe as we came: But all (in a manner) hearing (as Ezechiel complaineth) a Sermon preached, no otherwiſe than we do a Ballad ſung: and doe even no more of the one, than we do of the other. Eye-ſervice God likes not (I am ſure) no more (ſhould I think) doth Hee eare-ſervice. Speake on Lord, for thy ſervant heareth (and well if that, but ſcarce that, otherwhile:) but, ſpeake on LORD, whether thy ſervant heare or no: would any of us be content with ſuch ſervice? Yet this is all: to this, it is come. Thus we ſerve Him in holineſſe: This ſervice muſt ſerve Him (as the world goes;) for, if this way we ſerve Him not, we ſerve Him not at all.

Ezek. 33. 32.

1 Sam. 3. 9.

Our ſervice in holineſſe out of the Congregation.

But all GODS Service in holineſſe, is not in the Church. Some is abroad. And, when we are forth of the Church, neither Word, nor Sacraments, nor Common-Prayer, there: Onely there, we ſerve Him in His Name.

And

And, Holy and reverend is His Name (ſaith one Pſalme,) And, Great and fearefull is His Name (ſaith another.) Now, how unholily, this holy; how unreverently, this reverend Name is uſed; upon hovv ſmall cauſe, this great; how without all feare, this fearefull Name is taken up in our mouths, I muſt ſay it againe and againe (which Saint Auguſtine ſaith) Aures omnium pulſo, conſcientias ſingulorum convenio: I ſpeak to the eares of all in generall; I convent the conſcience of every one in particular, that heareth it. That, which by Him is magnified above all things, is by us vilified beneath all things. We pray for it firſt; we regard it laſt, certainly. For if it be indeed holy, let no man count it common. If not count it ſo, not uſe it ſo: for, what we uſe as common, eo ipſo, we make it unholy (quantum in nobis eſt;) for, common and holy are contradividentia.

To His Name. Pſal. 111. 9. Pſal. 99 3.

Pſal. 138 2. Matth 6.9. Act. 10.15.

1 And to make it ſo common, that is, to prophane it: Evill enough that. 2 But in the eagerneſſe of our ſpirits, to uſe it to grievous execrations, that is more, even to pollute it: A worſe matter far. 3 But beyond both theſe, to let it come to this, that we grow unſenſible of both, and both paſſe from us, and we have no feeling of either, this is worſt of all. Call we this to ſerve Him in Holineſſe, for this dayes delivery, when we ſo ſerve His Name?

Ezek. 39 7.

But neither is all Gods ſervice in holineſſe alone: Some is in honeſt dealing with men, in righteouſneſſe: God is ſerved in that too. He that hath done a peece of good juſtice, dovvnvvard: that hath done his duty to his Superiour upward: that hath dealt equally with his even Chriſten: in ſo doing, hath not only dealt well with men, but done God good ſervice alſo. That a man may goe from Church, and yet ſay truly, he goes to ſerve God, if he go about theſe.

Our ſervice to God in righteouſneſſe.

Well, how goes our righteouſneſſe? how ſerve we God there? Divers errours are committed in that, too.

One is of them, that think holineſſe a diſcharge from righteouſneſſe quite. So they ſerve God, and heare Lectures (as the terme is) they take themſelves liberty to pay no debts, to put their mony out to uſury, to grinde their tenants; yea, and ſo they miſſe not ſuch a Lecture, in ſuch a place, they may do any thing then. Nay, God is ſerved in righteous doing, as well, nay, better, than in holy hearing.

Holineſſe held a diſcharge, from righteouſneſſe.

A ſecond kinde (which I like not neither) that when men deale honeſtly, keepe touch, pay their debts; they are ſo brave, ſo imperious upon it, ſo like great Lords, as if righteouſneſſe were no ſervice, all were meere liberality they did, men were bound to them for doing it, they were not bound to do it, Nay, we ſerve in righteouſnes, too, That alſo is a ſervice (ſure.)

Righteouſneſſe held no ſervice.

A third, and that very common, of them that make the law of man, a ſcantling of their righteouſneſſe: and further than that will compell them, they will not go, not an inch; not ſo far neither, ſine timore, but for feare. Yea, not only our righteouſneſſe to men: but even our feare to God, is taught us by man's precepts: and in both, ſo the Statutes of Omri be obſerved, all is well. But, whatſoever a man elſe may make ſure, hee cannot make ſure his ſoule, by the Law of the Land. This righteouſnes here, goes up to God and His Law: and pierces deeper beyond the outward act, even to the inward man: whence, if ours come not, or whither, if it reach not; Man we may (perhaps) but God, in righteouſneſſe, ſerve we not.

Righteouſneſſe meaſured by the Common Law. Eſay 29 13. Mica. 6. 16.

But even according to mans Law, our righteouſneſſe goes not well ſo, neither. The Philoſopher gives a rule, when a people is juſt or righteous, according to mans law: (GOD's he knew not) and that is, when juſtice wants vvork, hath little to doe. By which rule, ours is in no very good caſe: Men are ſo full of ſuits, ſo many cauſes depending before every ſeat of Iuſtice, ſo much to do: and all, to repaire the wrongs of our unrighteous courſes, while each one ſeeks rather, to over-rule men by wrong, than to ſerve GOD by right.

Our righteouſneſſe too much worke.

And this were not ſo evill, if all the injuſtice were below: if the Seats vvhich are ſet to doe juſtice and righteouſnes, were themſelves right. For, fares it not even with them, as the Prophet Hoſee ſaith, The Princes of Iſrael are as they that remove the landmarke? Each Seat ſeeking to enlarge their ovvn border, and to ſet their meer-ſtones within the others ground? A full unnaturall thing in a body, that one arme ſhould never thinke it ſelfe ſtrong enough, untill it had cleane ſhrunke up the ſinevves of the other:

The Seats of righteouſneſſe faulty. Hoſ. 5 1.

other. But I ſtay. Theſe things, being amended, we ſhall be ſo much the more in a forwardneſſe, to ſerve God, both in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe: And ſo, for the matter of our ſervice, keep our Covenant.

II. The Manner of our ſervice, How.

For the manner, now. To ſerve Him, [1] ſine timore, without feare: [2] Coram ipſo, before Him: [3] Omnibus diebus noſtris, all the dayes of our life.

That, without feare.

1. Sine timore, without feare. And ſo, in a ſenſe we do. So without feare at all, as if men were afraid, to ſeeme to feare God. But this is no part of His meaning. Without feare (here) is not without feare of Him (of God) but, that being now without feare of our enemies, vve ſhould do it, the rather. For, who being in a bodily feare; who having Pharaoh and his hoſt hard at their backes, could quietly think of ſerving God? That, even God Himſelfe, did rid His people of that feare, before ever He gave them His Lavv, to ſerve Him by. But when mens minds are quiet from the agonie and terrour of it, when they are ſetled in tranquillo: they ſhould in all reaſon then, better intend His ſervice.

Exod. 14.
Exod. 20.

And, will vve (think you) if we be ſo out of feare, intend it the better? without doubt, in experience, vve find it contrary. For, except we be held in feare, we ſcarce ſerve Him at all: how ſoone we are out of feare, we forget our ſelves, and our ſervice, yea, God, and all. True: yet for all that, the ſervice ſo done in feare, is but a dull heavie ſervice. It likes Him not. God loves lætus lubens, vvhen being at libertie, with a liberall minde we do vvhat vve do. Læti ſerviemus Regi (ſay they in Geneſis) and it pleaſed the King: And it pleaſeth God as well, if the ſervice we do, vve do it cheerefully, vvithout mixture of feare, or any ſervile affection.

Gen. 47. 25.

Without This feare to ſerve Him, but not vvithout His feare. Nam, ſi Dominus, If He be a Lord (as if vve be His ſervants, a Lord He is) ubi timor? vvhere is My feare, ſaith He in Malachi? As love, to a father: ſo feare, to a Lord, doth belong moſt properly. And, this is not Old Teſtament only: the Apoſtle is as direct, in the New; if we will ſerve Him to pleaſe Him (and as good not ſerve, as ſerving not pleaſe) if vve will ſo ſerve Him, we muſt do it, with reverence and feare: λατρεύωμεν εὐαρέστως μετ' αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας. Neither rudely then, vvithout feare; nor baſely, with feare: But reverently, with feare; and cheerefully without feare: (that is the meaning.)

Mal. 1. 6.

Heb. 12. 28.

That, before Him.

2. To ſerve Him, Coram Ipſo, before Him, Coram Ipſo: for, coram me, is the terme of the Lavv. As if He were preſent, and looked on. And it helpes much to our ſervice, ſo to do it. Helps our reverence, not to do it rudely: (we doe it before Him.) Helpes our ſincereneſſe, without hypocriſie, to do it as before Him: For, theſe tvvo words, coram Ipſo, are the bane of hypocriſie.

Exod. 20. 3.

All things are before Him: In nothing can we get behind Him, or vvhere He cannot ſee us. But, ſome things are before Him and men, both: Thoſe, vve call not, before Him, properly. Properly, that is, before Him, that is, before none but Him. That is, the heart. Coram homine, the ſervice of the eye: Coram ipſo, the ſervice of the heart. Men love no eye-ſervice neither, if they could diſcover it, but they are faine to take it; the heart is not coram ipſis; Coram ipſo it is. Vpon that, is His eye: and nothing pleaſes Him, if the heart be avvay: for that, of all other, is His peculiar Coram Ipſo.

It is a broken ſervice, if any part; chiefly, if the chiefe part (the heart) be away. It vvould be entire, and with all parts, ſince all are before Him.

It is a mock-ſervice, as if what ſerves man, would ſerve Him: as if we could complement it vvith God, vvith faces and phraſes, as vvith men we do.

That, all the dayes of our life.

3. The laſt, is omnibus diebus noſtris. As ſincere, without faining: So, conſtant without fainting. Coram me, excludes the Phariſaicall ſervice of the out-ſide of the platter: Omnibus diebus, the Bethulian ſervice, for certaine dayes, and no longer.

Matth 23. 25.
Iudg 7. 30.

You ſhall have few, but will ſerve God at a brunt: have certaine pangs of godlineſſe come upon them at times: be affected for the preſent, with a delivery, grow a little holy upon it. That little, is little worth. God complaines in Malachi, That in their holineſſe they puffed, and blew, as men ſhort winded, quickly weary of it, and ſoone out of breath. And in Hoſee, that their righteouſneſſe was as the morning-cloud, ſcattered, and gone, before the Sun was an houre high.

Malac. 1. 13.

Hoſ. 6. 4.

To

To ſerve Him then, not with uſura exigui temporis, ſome ſmall time: primis diebus, two or three dayes at the firſt, and then, defuncti, we have quit our ſelves well: but from day to day, as long as there is a day left to ſerve Him in; So long to ſerve Him. To ſerve Him to the very laſt.

The mercifull and gracious Lord hath ſo done His marvellous acts, that they ought to be had in everlaſting remembrance; all of them. But ſome more eſpecially: for ſome are more than marvellous. As was this of ours. That if quibuſdam diebus, would ſerve for them: Omnibus diebus, is little enough for this: So more than gracious, ſo more than marvellous, ſo more than both, in this: as the memory of it, never to die, never to decay, but our dayes and it, to determine together.

Some dayes more than ſome other, though. Pſal. 111. 4.

And for all that, though omnibus diebus, all our dayes, and in them all: yet, not in them all alike. So in all, as in ſome, more than otherſome, Suſcipiunt magis & minùs. So then to ſerve: as in our dayes after the delivery, we doe it, more, and better, than before: And upon the day it ſelfe (that is, as this day) we do it, moſt of all.

More. The days ſince. And this day moſt.

Thus, we have laid forth our Covenant, both for Matter and Manner. Wherein if we will deale as juſt men, we muſt keep it: and if deale as wiſe men, we will keep it. For, who knowes, but we may (perhaps) ſtand in need of a delivery again? If we behave our ſelves frowardly in His Covenant, what ſhall become of us then? How ſhall we hope for ſuch another at His hands? And if He doe not, who can deliver us from ſuch another?

It will be wiſely done to keep our Covenant.

But, ſuch another (we hope) ſhall never come: And I wiſh, and hope ſo, too. But ſhould hope ſo the rather, if I could ſee, we did but ſet our ſelves to ſerve Him, as hath bin ſaid. Otherwiſe, the devill, he is our enemy; (that is once.) And if we had no other, he is enough: An unquiet ſpirit he is; I truſt him not, though ever ſince, he ſleeps the Foxes ſleep. For the breach of our covenant, if he be let looſe, he is able to do miſchiefe enough. And we have the amends in our hands. Liberati we had, Serviamus we returned not. Returne it then, and then we ſhall be without feare of any more.

We ſhall be without feare of ſuch another.

And not only without feare: but we ſhall be in hope alſo; and that, not of a new deliverance only (if need be) but, of a further matter. For though our ſervice be due, without any: but much more due, upon a delivery, ſpecially ſuch as ours this day was, though no more ever ſhould be done for us: yet that we may know, we ſerve a Lord of great bountie, this ſhall not be all: over and above our aſſurance to be delivered, toties quoties; we ſhall not be unconſidered for our ſervice, beſides. Let our delivery goe, tranſeat: He deſires no ſervice, but for a reward.

We ſhall be in hope of a reward.

And ſo I returne now to the word of our ſervice, the word of our Text, λατρείαν. In λατρείαν, there is λάτρον: And λάτρον, is a recompence or reward. Gods ſervice is λατρεία. Delivered we were, by Covenant: Of His great bounty, Rewarded we ſhall bee beſide. It is in the very body of the word (this.)

Reward is in the body of the word λατρεύειν (to ſerve.)

So here is λύτρον and λάτρον: λύτρον in our delivery, and λάτρον in our recompence. Let one of them, λύτρον or λάτρον: or, if not one of them, both of them prevaile with us, to ſee Him ſerved.

And what ſhall the reward be? I will tell you that, and ſo end. It ſhall be the Grand deliverance in the Benedictus, here. And ours of the day was a riddance of us, from our bodily enemies, for the time; and we ſet in a ſtate of temporall peace, which we have enjoyed ever ſince: So, the finall reward of our ſervice ſhall be a riddance from our ghoſtly enemies, for ever, that come not with a puffe or blaſt of Powder, but with a lake of fire and brimſtone, the ſmoke whereof ſhall aſcend for evermore. To be rid of them, and ſo being rid, to enjoy a State, of perfect, of eternall peace and ſecuritie, without ever fearing more, ſine timore, indeed.

The reward of our ſervice. Without feare Rev. 14. 11.

And to make it every way correſpondent: for coram ipſo, here; it ſhall be, coram ipſo, there. Even in His preſence, in whoſe preſence is the fulneſſe of joy.

Before Him. Pſal. 16. 11.

And for omnibus diebus, here: all the dayes of this tranſitory, ſhort life, we ſhall enjoy it all the dayes of heaven. Omnibus diebus? nay omnibus ſeculis, all the Ages of eternity. And ſo, for that, which in Law is held but as a leaſe of ſeaven yeares, have an everlaſting free-hold, in His heavenly Kingdom, there to reape the reward of our Service, world without end.

All the dayes of our life.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT WHITE-HALL,

on the V. of Nov. A. D. MDCXVIII.

ESTHER. CHAP. IX. VER. XXXI.

Obſervantes dies Sortium & ſuo tempore cum gaudio celebrarent: ſicut conſtituerant Mardochæus & Eſther, & illi obſervanda ſuſceperunt à ſe, & ſemine ſuo, Ieiunia & clamores & Sortium dies.

To confirme theſe dayes of Purim, according to their ſeaſons: as Mardochai the Iew, and Eſther the Queen had appointed them, and as they had promiſed for themſelves, and for their Seed, with faſting and prayer.

HERE have wee the making of a new Holy-Day (over and above thoſe of GODS in the Law.) And the making it, by Royall authoritie, and the Peoples aſſent; and ſo, of the nature of an Act or Statute: a good preſident for us, that have made the like. Here is a joynt concurrence, of Mardochæus adviſing, Queene Eſther authorizing, they (that is, the people) undertaking for them and their Seed, to confirme, what? Purim; there is the day: when? at the appointed times, that makes it a ſet day: how? with faſting and crying (that is, prayer.) that makes it an Holy-day. Vpon what ground all this? That, is in the Word Purim, the name of the day. It is called Purim: Purim (that is) lots, as much to ſay as, the Lot-holy-day.

This

This name it came to have, for that there was a diſmall day comming toward them, by meanes of a lot caſt; which (yet) it was their lot to eſcape. In the remembrance of which eſcape, this Day was thus ordained: and the like may ſo bee upon like occaſion.

The Summe.

Thus it was. Haman, one in higheſt favour with King Aſſuerus, had taken a diſpleaſure at Mardochæus: and, a feud it was, the ſtrangeſt feud that hath beene heard of: not with all of his kinne, or all of the name; but, with all of the nation, all the Iewes, becauſe Mardochai, (forſooth) was a Iew.

His quarrell was at Mardochai alone; none had offended him, but he; yet ſuch was his pride, or malice, or both, as I know not how many thouſands, men, women, and children, muſt die all, for no other cauſe, but that it hapned, Mardochai to be their Countryman. For, other treſpaſſe had they made him none.

Well, in the height of his favour with the King, and by a wrong ſuggeſtion, hee obtained the lives and goods of all the Iewes in the Land. And, when hee had them now in his hand, and might have diſpatched them out of hand; that, he would not; (ſee how men ſhall bee tranſported and forget themſelves!) in a ſtrange kinde of inſolencie (they call it bravery) fell to make a lottery of their lives. And Pur, the lot, was caſt; what moneth firſt; then, what Day of the moneth, they ſhould have all their throats cut. It fell to be the XIIII. of Adar (that is) FEBRUARY: and then, hee got a Proclamation, that upon that day all the Iewes ſhould bee put to the ſword.

But, before that day came, by the goodneſſe of GOD, it was the poore Iewes lot, to eſcape for all that: And in the meane time, the lot turned upon the lot-caſter: and he that intended this great Maſſacre, it fell to his lot, to be hanged himſelfe. And, this was the ground of their holy-day. That, in remembrance of this lottery-day, that ſhould have beene, the XIIII. of Adar, as the Eve or Vigil, and the XV. as the Feaſt or Holy-day it ſelfe, ſhould religiouſly bee kept for ever; as, to this day, it is. Chap. 7 10.

This comes ſomewhat to our caſe. For, as they were in danger then, by a lot; So were wee, this day, by a plot, in as great danger as they, and as ſtrangely delivered; Wee, from our plot, as they, from their Lot; and ſo, as deepely bound, and by this Text, as perfectly enabled, to make a Day of Purim, as ever were they.

A plot, and a lot, though they ſound alike, yet (with us) they differ much. A lot ſeemes meerely caſuall; a plot is laid with great circumſpection: but, with GOD, they are in effect all one. The beſt laid plots, with Him, prove no better but even as uncertaine lots, but even hap-hazard, if He liſt to diſ-appoint them. So as upon the matter, quod Deum, lot or plot, no great oddes; both come to one. Seeing then, there is no more oddes, and that there is in every Text, a predominant word, and, in this Text, the word Purim is it, we will inſiſt upon that word, and account them lots both; ours, as well as theirs.

The Diviſion.

To make a like day, with a like obſervation, there are required, 1 a like ground 2 and like authoritie.

To ſhew the ground like, wee are to ſhew the lots to bee like; theirs, and ours. Like, 1 in the caſting in, the intent or danger: 2 like in the drawing out, the event or eſcape.

I.

In the caſting the lots, or intent, theſe foure: 1. The lots that were caſt; their perill, and ours. 2. The parties, on whom they were caſt: the Iewes, and our ſelves. 3. The parties, by whom they were caſt: their Haman, and ours. 4. And the cauſe, or colour, for which they were caſt.

In the drawing or event, foure more: 1 The meanes of their and our eſcape, 2 the manner, 3 the time, and 4 the iſſue.

In all theſe, to match theirs and ours. And, in all theſe, I make no doubt, this of ours will more than match that of theirs: the lot of our danger more fearefull, the lot of our deliverance more wonderfull.

And if ſo, then have we as good ground, as they; nay better, than they any.

II. This for the ground. But, that alone is not enough: yet lacke we authority. Here it is: the Queene, by advice, injoyning it; The people ſubmitting to obſerve the day, at the appointed time.

We conclude then: the ground being all one, on which (a famous deliverance:) the authority the ſame, by which (the Queene there, the King here, injoyning it:) theſe being alike, a like bond to us, ſuper animas noſtras, for a like day of ours, even the day on which it was our lot to eſcape; at a like time, that is, once a yeare; and in like manner, to be holden, as theirs, with prayer, and crying, though of another nature.

And this Record (here) in the Roll of Eſther, ſhall be our warrant for ſo doing againſt all oppoſers.

I. The Ground. I The Danger.

THE lot is caſt in the lap, but GOD giveth the hap: It is Salomon, in Proverbes c. 16. v. 33. We begin with the lot in the lap, Hamans lap, the danger: And come after, to the hap GOD gave, the happie deliverance. The danger. 1 They and we had but one lot both: to be deſtroyed quite, utterly. And we agree in two more: 2 to be deſtroyed all; 3 to be deſtroyed at a ſet day: theſe three.

But in all three, our lot the worſe every way. And the worſe it is in the lap (the lot) the better it is in the hap, if we ſcape it.

Vtter deſtruction. Vtter deſtruction to both. But their lot was a ſword, to bee ſlaine: Our Pur was πῦρ πυρὸς, Our lot, fire and powder, to be blowen up. Of the twaine, this the worſe.

The ſword is in a hand, and that hand is guided by the heart, and that heart may relent at the ſight of a ſilly innocent babe, a poore old man, a woman great with childe; ſo, ſome hope, for ſome to ſcape there. But, fire, no hope for any: Fire cannot relent, that ſpares none.

Iude 23. Yet Saint Iude ſpeakes of ſaving ſome by plucking them out of the fire: But, not this fire; no plucking out here, no ſcaping for any; all diſpatched in a moment, paſt ſaving all. Rom. 9. 29. Facti eſſemus ſicut Sodomæ: nay worſe. That, came from heaven; this, from hell: from hell-ward, at leaſt. Gen. 19. 21. There, three: here, not one ſhould have eſcaped. Gen. 14. 12. Lots caſe, his lot will end this; his lot, to all intents, better, when he ſcaped the fire of Sodom, than when the ſword of the foure Kings in battell. This, the moſt deſtructive deſtruction of all: if any more than other, this is it. Might we draw lots for our death, we would never draw this. And this was our lot.

2 Generall deſtruction. A generall Lottery was intended in both. Truly might His Majeſtie have ſaid, as ever did Queene Eſther (Chap. 7. v. 4.) Traditi ſumus ego & populus meus, Betrayed we are I and my people.

Chap. 3 6. And will ye mark, how like of Haman it is ſaid, Pro nihilo duxit in unum Mardochæum manus mittere, Hee thought it nothing to lay hands on Mardochei alone, magiſque voluit omnem Nationem perdere, No leſſe would ſerve him, but the havocke of the whole Nation: Chap. 3. Verſe 6. Said not our Haman the ſame? What, lay hands on the King? (as one of them offered) Tuſh, that is not worth the while, magiſque voluit omnem Nationem, Nay, if we ſhall doe it indeed, be right Hamans, up with King, and Parliament and all; make a generall lottery of it in any wiſe. Haman right (this) in his owne termes.

But,

But, though in this, they ſeeme to be even (both our lots:) yet draw them, ours is the longer, ſenſibly. For though Haman preſumed very neere, when hee came to the Kings ſide, touched the Queenes life; Yet wel-fare Haman (ſay I) in this, the King hee touched not; No harme to Him; the King was out of Haman's lottery. Here, the King was in, too; Ours went to Queene, and Prince, Peeres, and Prelates, and Commons, yea, King and all. Omnem Nationem, but not Regem, there. Omnem Nationem, & Regem, here. This was univerſall indeed: And we, in this, beyond them.

Theirs was in diem, againſt a day. Ours was ſo, too. So, the lots even.

On a ſet day. Chap 3.7.

With Haman, Miſſa eſt ſors in urnam, quo die deberent gens interfici; exiit Adar. Die they muſt, that was reſolved; That was not enough. (See whither pride will carry men!) Hee would caſt the Dice (as it were) draw cuts, make a lotterie, of no leſſe matter than mens lives. And that, not of a dozen or a skore, but of a whole Nation, which day and which moneth, they ſhould die all. And, in this caſting, they went from moneth to moneth, and from day to day, till, at laſt, there (with Haman) the lot fell on the fourteenth of Adar: and with ours, on the fifth of November.

And, take this with you too: Haman's lottery was in Niſan (that is, March) the firſt month, but it fell not till Adar (that is, February) the laſt month: ſo, a twelve-moneth betweene. And, was it not ſo with us? A yeare before, nay more than a yeare, was our Day ſet. And firſt, it was in the moneth Adar, in February (as theirs was, juſt;) but, by proroguing the Parliament, we ſcaped, and were reprieved once and againe. But, to it againe they went, and ſo at laſt the lot fell on this very day, to be the day of our Purim. Thus farre the lots Even.

But their day Known, Ours not.

But then here againe there fell oddes on our parts, two wayes: 1. One, the Iewes had notice of their day; It was proclaimed: ſo, they that could, might have ſlipped away ſecretly, and ſo ſcaped. And they that were watched, that they could not, well; yet, they might make their ſoules ready, and die prepared. And even that, when there is no remedy but die we muſt, it is good not to be ſurprized on the ſudden, but to have ſome warning, that ſo we may make us ready for GOD. But ſee our caſe now: We know not of our day, we. The day was kept as cloſe, as the powder: We had gone off ſuddenly, to the great hazard (as it may be feared) of many a ſoule, that for default of this, had periſhed (indeed:) periſhed here, and periſhed eternally. Againſt a lingring death we pray not; ab improviſa morte, we doe: And mors improviſa had beene our lot then. Here is then the firſt oddes. Both were in diem; but, theirs in diem certum, certainly knowne to them all. Ours (as I may ſay) in diem certum, and yet incertum: Certaine, to Haman, to them; they knew it perfectly: Uncertaine, to us; We knew not whether any ſuch day or no: Wee had gone to it, Wee had drawne our lot blind-fold. So, ours worſe than theirs.

Theirs, an ordinary, Ours a Parliament-day.

Another oddes there is (worſe yet than this) in the dayes. For, what was the foureteenth of Adar, but an ordinary common day? But, the fifth of November (as it fell out) was the firſt day of a Parliament; a famous day, as comes in many yeares. That, not onely when wee ſhould have ſaid Pax & ſecuritas; but when wee ſhould have beene in all our glory, when even at the time, Repentinus venict ſuper eos interitus, the moſt unſeaſonable time of all had beene our lot; a heavie lot if it had light.

1 Theſ. 5.3.

When men goe to their death, they would goe mourning, all in blacke, as the manner is: But, when they are going in all pompe and magnificence, then to bee ſhot off, and flie all in peeces! no man would draw that lot if he could ſcape it. Yet, that was our lot, and at that very time.

For a King to be made away, is a thing not unheard of: but, in this manner, a King to be made away, in his robes royall, the Imperiall Crowne on his head, the Scepter in his hand, ſitting on the throne of his Kingdome, in the midſt of all his States, then, and there, and in that manner; that paſſes all: that, the lot, that never yet hath beene heard of. And, let it never be heard of; Let never King have the lot ſo to periſh: Pitie any ever ſhould. Yet this was Yours (Sir) like to have beene. Too much oddes this. And this for the lot, that was caſt.

2 The Parties On whom.

Now for the Parties, on whom this lot caſt. There, ſure I am, we have the vantage. The Parties, in the Text, who were they, but a ſort of poore ſcattered Iewes of the captivitie, in a ſtrange Countrey farre from their owne, and in their enemies hands. Farre otherwiſe was it with us, here. No captives we, but a flouriſhing Kingdome, as any under Heaven. Not in any forren part, ours; but, at home in our own native ſoile.

It had been ſomwhat, for Aſſuerus, to take away ſo many lives at once; but, His Captives they were, he might doe with them, what he would, in rigour of Law: ſo, their end had beene by lawfull authoritie. But, in ours, no colour, no ſhadow of any law; but, a moſt barbarous trechery againſt all law, both of God and man. Alas, the Iewes they had neither Prince nor Peeres, they were no State. What talke I of them? I ſhould wrong our ſelves much, to ſtand on this any longer.

3 The Parties By whom.

This for upon whom. Now, by whom, the lots were caſt. For, it was our lot to have our Haman, too. The Lot-Maſter, and the Plot-maſter, I hold them Hamans, both. But firſt, where they had but one, we had many. And then, theirs nothing to ours. Haman was, to the Iewes, a ſtranger in Nation, for he was an Agagite: A ſtranger in Religion, for hee was an Heathen man. Ours were no ſtrangers in Nation; the ſame Nation, that we. No Turkes, or Infidels, but profeſſing the ſame CHRIST, that we; and better than we (they ſay:) for. right Catholikes, they; and not Chriſtians, but (which is more than Chriſtians) Ieſuites, ſome of them. Better, for an Iſraelite, to ſuffer at the hands of an Ægyptian, than of an Iſraelite his brother, as Moſes told them. Better, at the hands of the uncircumciſed, than of the people of GOD. The Iewes, they had periſhed, by the hand of an Alien, and a Pagan; If our lot had beene ſo, it had beene the leſſe unhappie. But, our lot it was, to be ſhot thorow with our owne ordnance: IESUS to have blowen up CHRIST; and one Chriſtian man to have committed ſuch a butcherly barbarous act, upon another (nay, many others) ſuch an act, as never was heard of among the Heathen, to the eternall ſtaine of all that profeſſe Chriſt.

Chap. 3. 1.

Exod 2. 13.

Chap. 7. 5.

Wicked Haman is his Epithete: Too good for thoſe, that, not onely as a brood of Vipers, ſought to gnaw out the bowels of their owne damme (which Haman never did;) but, in ſuch ſort did it, as all the malice of man, calling to it the malice of the Devill, could never invent the like. But, a degenerate Chriſtian is the worſt man; and the worſt man is the worſt Creature, of all others.

4. The Cauſe or Colour.

Chap. 2. 5.

And what might be the cauſe of all this? It ſeemes, the ſame in both. Hamans was, becauſe that he was not worſhipped by Mardochei. And, in ours too, If wee aske ----quo numine læſo, Quidve dolens, we ſhall find, it was much to that, Even the not worſhipping of one no whit leſſe proud, than Haman. And here, they will fall ſhort too. For, in our, Mardochei muſt fall downe, and kiſſe his feete; which, Haman in all his pride never required.

But, it were hard to deſtroy an whole Nation, for no other cauſe, but that one man of them would not make him a legge. Wee muſt have ſome other than this, ſome better pretence muſt be had, ſure. So have all evill things, one thing for the cauſe, another for the colour. In good, one ſerves for both. Sure, in effect, the ſame was that of ours, that here was ſuggeſted by Haman. Theſe ſame Iewes (ſaith he) they are a people with a Religion by themſelves: As much to ſay (with us) as, A ſort of Hereticks they be, the world were well rid of them; it makes no matter, up with them all.

Chap. 2 8.

But then, here comes a difference againe, to make ours the worſe. Haman made it but a matter of policie, It is not for the Kings profit to ſuffer them. Ours made it no leſſe than a matter of Religion. Religion was at the ſtake. A caſe of meere Conſcience: not to doe any thing, but the Oracle conſulted firſt, the Father Provinciall, who ex tripode reſolved it for ſuch. And, as if he had had all our lives in his hand, anſwered in no other ſtyle, than did Aſſuerus, Chap. III. Ver. XI. De populo fac quod libet; As for this this people, doe with them what yee liſt: with them, and with the King too (which was more than here did Haman) blow them up and ſpare not. And though there be of our owne Catholikes among them, no force: blow them up, for all that: It is for Religion, this.

I conclude all, with the very ſight, if this lot of theirs had fallen to our lot.

It had bin an heavie ſight (as in the maſſacre of Paris) to have ſeene men tumbling in their own bloud here and there in the ſtreets: Nothing to this, to ſee men torne in ſunder, heads from ſhoulders, armes from legs, both from the body; quarters and halfe quarters flying about: the braines fly one way, the bowels another; bloud ſpilt, like water in the river, in the fields, in every corner of the ſtreets, never the like ſight, and ſo never the like lot to this.

Now then: ſince, in our lot, 1 the deſtruction more deſtructive (for by Powder) 2 more generall (for King and all with us:) 3 upon a leſſe certaine and upon a more famous Day: Our Nation more noble; our Haman more wicked; Their cauſe and colour more to be abhorred: I conclude, our lot was the worſe, and the worſe the lot, the better the eſcape: the better it, and the better deſerving a Holy-day for it. And this for the lot in the lap.

Now to GOD that giveth the Hap.

Where, firſt I note, that the word Pur it is no Hebrew, but a Perſian word; yet it was thought meet to retaine it. They give this reaſon, for that, the ſame word Pur (in Hebrew) ſignifieth to diſappoint: ſhewing plainely, that the Hebrewes GOD ſhould give an Hebrew Pur to the Perſian Pur, diſappoint the Perſian lot: and though it were caſt, yet not ſuffer it to light, though. 2 The Event.

We finde at the XXIV. Verſe, Haman did caſt but Pur in the ſingular, but one ſingle lot (He needed caſt but one, ſince all were to goe one way, none to eſcape;) yet the Day is called Purim, that is the plurall, as if there were more than one, ſome other beſide that of Hamans. And ſo it was fit there ſhould, that there might bee as well a good lot as an evill. The troth is, there can be no lottery of one; there behove to be two at leaſt: two diverſe. The law is ſo. The firſt lots, we reade of, that ever were caſt, were betweene the two Goats, Levit. 16. Whoſe lot it ſhould be to die, and whoſe to ſcape, to be the Scape-goat. Here was never a ſcape-goat in Haman's; ſinne-goats, all: ſo, beſide the Law quite. GOD took Haman caſting lots beſide the Law, and He tooke the matter into His owne hand; and he did it regularly, made two lots, to two ends, and for two parties. One for Mardochai and the Iewes, them one; for Haman another: GOD put in one, for him too, by his leave. Mardochei ſaith it plainly in the Greeke Supplement c. I. v. X. that GOD made two lots and gave them forth, One for His owne People, and one for the wicked (meaning wicked Haman.) So have ye Haman's Pur (he caſt but one, which was diſappointed and never drawne:) And GODS Purim (two of His putting in, and both drawn.) And it is well we have removed it out of Haman's, into a better hand, that we may ſay, In manibus tuis ſortes meæ (as ſaith the Pſalme) Not in Haman's hands are our lots, but in thine. Levit. 16.8. Pſal 31.15.

Two good hopes we have thereby. 1. One that though it was nothing with Haman, to lay hands on Mardochei, nor with ours, on the King; yet with God it will bee ſomewhat, nay much: That GOD will be otherwiſe minded, than Haman or they. Not magiſque voluit omnem Nationem perdere, but magiſque voluit omnem Nationem ſervare; rather ſee Haman hanged, and a dozen ſuch as he, then that a whole Nation ſhould periſh in this manner.

2. And then ſecondly, ſeeing they be now in GODS hands, be the lot what it will or in what lap it will, in Haman's own lap (to be ſure) yet when it comes to the drawing, God will give it forth, which way, and with what ſucceſſe He pleaſeth. And when all is done, what Haman, nay, what Aſſuerus himſelfe doth purpoſe, God will diſpoſe; and there ſhall be neither lot, nor plot, againſt the Lord. And ſo we come to God's Purim, to His lottery.

Wherein we are againe before them as many wayes, in the 1 meanes, the 2 manner, 1 The Meanes.

ner, the 3 time, and the 4 iſſue, all foure. 1. The fewer meanes, the more like a lot: and we had no meanes. They had, and uſed meanes, both to GOD and man. To GOD by faſting and fervent prayer, which prevailes with Him much. To man, to King Aſſuerus; they had the Queenes mediation, which prevailed with him too. We uſed none, either to GOD or man; faſted not, prayed not, ſuſpected no evill to be toward, and ſo uſed neither. There is no cauſe, no meanes in a lot, It is Saint Auguſtines note, that it is therefore termed the Lot of the righteous (in the Pſalme) and in the Apoſtle, Sors ſanctorum, for that, merit or meanes there is none at all; GOD onely allots it to us. And ſuch was ours; not by meanes, as they; but, delivered (as I may ſay) from a lot, by a lot, a meere lot. So, our Purim (we may ſay) was more pure than theirs.

Pſal.125.3: Coloſ.1.12.

2 The Manner.

But though no meanes we had to GOD, yet a meanes from GOD we had; they and we both. For, from a King, it came, in both. But, farre otherwiſe, in the manner, with us, than with them, two wayes. 1. Firſt, with them, the delivery came from the King, and well might: For, from him came their danger, from his proclamation under his hand and ſeale; without which, Haman could have made no lottery of himſelfe. With us, in a better manner; and ſo, our lot better. For, from the King came our eſcape; but no danger from him. He, as deepe in the danger, as we. Nothing that was evill, nothing that pertained to any perill, from Him: but, our ſafety ſolely and wholly from Him, next to GOD.

Another yet. For in theirs, the King that had bin-miſinformed by Haman, was ſet right by the Queenes more true information: and this, is a regular common way. But ours, by no information of Eſther or of any: onely, by meere inſpiration, immediatly from God by making that come into the Kings head which neither did, nor would have come into any mans head elſe: the more ſure, that it came from God, ſince ſo great a ſalvation was wrought by it. For, the burning of the paper, if he had taken it in the ſenſe that others did, or any would have done, we had all bin burnt indeed, as ſoone as the paper. But, God drew from him, a ſenſe beſide all ſenſe, even as it were by a lot, ſince (to all mens ſeeing) it was rather a caſuall, than a rationall interpretation. The drawing of that ſenſe, was even like the drawing of a lot: ſo that, ſorte merâ ſervati ſumus; and never any more true Purim, than this of ours. And though men, when they eſcape, ſtand not much on the meanes or the manner (it is well, they are well:) Yet, it cannot chooſe but do us much good, to ſee our ſelves ſaved, by ſo Royall a meanes, and in ſo miraculous a manner. It is a ſigne quòd reſpicit nos Deus, God reſpects us, in the manner of whoſe ſaving, He would ſhew ſo divine a miracle.

3 The Time.

But beſide the meanes, and the manner, thirdly the circumſtance of time is worth the conſidering: For in both, all came about in a night. Haman had made all ſure, ſo ſure as he had ſet up the gallowes and all, and meant to move the King, and made no doubt but to have Mardochai hanged, the next morning. This was over-night. And, that very night, did God take order, the King could not ſleep. And by that meanes, was Mardochei's good ſervice read to him. Sure, for Saving the Kings life, he deſerved not to loſe his own. Now, it comes to the drawing. A good lot, a prize: Honour, for Mardochei. And this good lot, for Mardochei's honour, God drew even out of Haman's own mouth; he, was by the King, made to be the proclaimer of it.

Chap.5.14. Chap.6.1.

It ſtaid not there. But, the day following, the King being rightly enformed by the Queene, Her people were no ſuch people, as Haman made them; one of them had ſaved the Kings life; with this, forth came there a good lot, for the Iewes: the former proclamation called in, the Poſts ſent with all ſpeed to publiſh another for their deliverance.

Chap.8.9,10.

Now comes Haman's lot. God tooke him caſting lots upon His people, and He caſt one upon Him too. For, when the Queene fell on her knees, and begged her owne life of the King, He was juſtly diſpleaſed with Haman's preſumption, that durſt come ſo neere him, as touch her life; and ſtraight allotted him the ſame death, he had hight Mardochei. And, the ſame day in the ſame place, and even upon the very ſame gallowes, he had purpoſely ſet up for him, the night before, it came to his lot, to be fairely hanged himſelfe.

Chap.7.3. Chap.7.9,10.

ſelfe. This, is God able to doe: to make Haman, in the lot he caſt for the Iewes, unwittingly to draw his owne deſtiny; and make the day by him ſet for them, the fatall day of his own deſtruction. To do this, and upon ſo ſhort warning, to doe it: for, all this was done, in the ſpace of foure and twenty houres. Wherein, we ſee it verified, that Salomon ſaith: That the Kings heart is in Gods hand, and he turnes it as a water-courſe, to run which way He will have it; and other-while makes a damme in it, and diverts the current a quite contrary way, cleane back upon Haman, to overflow him, and to drowne him. Thus did He with them. Prov. 21. 1.

And ſo did He with us, and more alſo: and that, in leſſe time. For, ours was neerer than ſo; and, the neerer it came, the fairer our lot, to eſcape it.

For with them, the fourteenth of Adar was not yet come; the Poſts, had time to goe and come, before it: but with us, it ſtayed till the very day it ſelfe was come. In a night, both: but ours, the night, the next night before; ſo was not theirs. Ever, the Scripture doth preſſe this point: Not till the day, Noe entred into the Arke: Not till that morning, that Lot went out of Sodom. So ours, not till the very night immediately preceding the diſmall day it ſelfe. And then, when powder, and traine, and match and all were in a readineſſe, then comes me God with His Stulte hâc nocte, and daſhes all. They were delivered, before the day came: The day it ſelfe came, before we were delivered; It was hâc nocte (indeed) literally. So, we ſcaped more narrowly; our lot more neere the drawing. So, ours was potior tempore. Matth. 24. 38. Luk. 17. 29. Luk. 12. 20.

And potior jure too. For, though the ſame iſſue, to both; yet in that alſo, have wee the better. A delivery there is mentioned (124. Pſal.) Our ſoule is ſcaped even as the bird, out of the ſnare of the Fowler; the ſnare is broke, and we are delivered. And, this is worth the drawing. But, this is but Pur, a ſingle lot: For, if that be all, the bird is eſcaped, and that is well for the bird: but, the fowler (ſave that he is a little deluded) he is not hurt; and ſo, he can ſoone ſet another ſnare againe. This, is but Pur. 4 The iſſue. Pſal 124. 7.

But, Purim, is better; when the fowle ſcapes, and the fowler ſcapes not, but comes himſelfe to a foule end. The ſnare is broken: No, the ſnare is whole, and they taken in the ſnare. It ſprung only, and away went the fowle; but with the ſpring, the knot was knit anew, and Haman and his fellow-fowlers caught, and ſtrangled in it.

And this (loe) is Purim: Purim, after the Hebrew idiom, is the great lot. To ſcape a ſnare; and in the ſame ſnare, to have (not their foot, but) their necke taken, that ſet it: There is no greater. The Paſſeover is no greater: There, they ſcaped, and Pharaoh drowned: here, they ſcaped, and Haman hanged.

Will yee look back to the Kings ſentence at the five and twentieth verſe? This it is: Malum, quod cogitavit contra vos, avertatur in caput ipſius. Not, Avertatur à capitibus veſtris; (Eſthers firſt petition was no more, let my life be given me, Turne away my deſtruction: That, it is too:) but, that is not it. This is it: Convertatur in caput ipſius, The evill, he deviſed, be it turned away from your heads (that is well;) not a haire fall from any of our heads; But the ſame evill, they deviſed, be it turned upon their owne heads, that were the deviſers, This, is it: and this is as much as the King could grant, or the Queene could deſire. Chap 7. 3.

And this ſame is the lot of this day. They imagined ſuch a device, as they were neere the performing, yet were not able to performe. The non-performance was well, the ſcattering of their imaginations; wee ſcaped by the meanes. But further, they were taken in their own turne, and the evill they deviſed againſt us, returned upon their own heads; their heads, and quarters both. To Haman's end they came: Nay, to a worſe than Haman's, and juſtly; for, their device, worſe than his. The place, they meant to have done execution upon us in, under the ſame place, they themſelves executed. Before their eyes, on whom their cruell bowels had no compaßion, were their cruell bowels burnt. The heads, from which it came, to have blowen up the Houſe; the houſe hath blowen up their heads, and ſo they be Agagites right. Their bodies plucked in peeces, their quarters rent in ſunder, ſo their meaning was to have dealt with ours, This is the lot of the ungodly from the LORD. Their evill lot, and (under one) the ſame, the happie lot of our deliverance. Pſal. 21. 11. Iob 20. 29.

And ſo we have done with Purim now. For, by this it is plaine, 1 Ours was altogether without meanes, and ſo more lot-like: 2 Ours was more miraculous in the manner, and (for all the world) like a lot: 3 Ours was more neere brought in time; and (like a lot) drawen at the inſtant: 4 Ours was beyond theirs, in the avertatur; For ours, without ſack-cloth or aſhes, faſting or crying, at all: And, in the convertatur; for, our fowlers came to a fouler end than theirs; and what would we more? Never might David more truely ſay, than we, The lot is fallen to us in a faire ground, The LORD hath maintained our lot.

Pſal.16.6.

II. This, GOD hath drawen for us: Shall we now draw for Him againe; and for this ſo faire a lot, allot Him ſomewhat of our part? Memento is ſet before the great, and ſo before all Holy-dayes. All, Hee would draw from us, is, but that the lot of this day, or the day of this lot may never be forgotten. A benefit would not be forgotten; Not mans: GODS much leſſe. Such a benefit eſpecially. For, even in GOD s, there is a difference: GOD hath His daily benefits, and thoſe to bee remembred of courſe. But, ſome other He hath ſo rare, as the like never ſeene: Thoſe would have a more than ordinary regard. For, where GOD is Extraordinary, we to be ſo too. If Hee make it a memorable day, by ſome ſtrange delivery, we to make it memorable, by ſome rare acknowledgement. They ſeeme willing ſo to doe, here. Illi ſunt dies, quos (ſay they;) Ille eſt dies quem (may we ſay) nulla unquam delebit oblivio: and ſo let us ſay: and ſo ſaid, and ſo done, is as much as GOD requireth. But our thankefulneſſe is not to flie away, like a flaſh of powder. To fix it then, fiat volatile fixum; that would bee done. And, fix it, in any thing elſe but time, time will eate it out. Beſt then, fix it in time it ſelfe: and that hath beene ever thought a wiſe way; ſo ſhall it roll about with the time, and renew as it doth. And ſo, time, which defaceth all things and bringeth them to forgetfulneſſe, ſhall be made to preſerve the memory of it, whether it will or no. Fix it in time; what part of time? A day; Memento diem, ſaith God in His Law, and ſo points us to the proportion of it. Set ſome day; and let there, then on that day, bee ſome ſpeciall commemoration of it.

This lot to have a time of remembrance. Exod.20.8.

But that day, or time, is to be a ſet day. Fix it in time; but, fix the time too. The word of the Text [זמן] is an appointed day, that comes once a yeare; as Solenne is quod ſolum in anno. Now this, ſome will not heare of: No ſet dayes, no appointed times (they) but keepe them in memory, all the yeare long. I like not that. For, ſo, when time was, it was ſaid by ſome, they would not have this day nor that day, to faſt on, but keepe a continuall faſt (they:) and it ſeemed a pretty ſpeculation at firſt, but proved nothing but a ſpeculation: what their faſt is come to, by this time we ſee. It is to be doubted, if other ſet times were likewiſe taken away, their continuall feaſt would prove to no better paſſe, than their faſt is: Better be as it is, and we doe, as God and good people have done before us.

2 A ſet time, or day.

Provided that it ſhall bee lawfull for them to keepe the memory of this Day, every day, if they be ſo diſpoſed. So yet, as they be content to allow ſome ſuch Day, as this for them, that are not of ſo happie memories; for feare, leſt it be left at large to every mans daily devotion, it may fall to be forgotten; and where it now hath one day, then to have none at all.

And if a ſet time, what day can we ſet ſo fit, as the day it ſelfe it fell on? With them, the fourteenth of Adar: with us, the fifth of November. It cannot but be the beſt way (this) that God took Himſelfe: and God took this. The ſame dayes, He did His noble acts upon, thoſe very dayes, did He order once a yeare ſolemnly to be kept. The fourteenth of Niſan, did the Deſtroyer paſſe over them; that day, from yeare to yeare did Hee ordaine the Paſſeover to be holden. Fiftie dayes after, He granted them His Law: in memory of this gift, they to keep yearly the day of Pentecoſt. Can we goe by a better example than this of Gods own?

3 The day it fell on.

Lev.23.5.

Lev.23.16.

Theſe two were not all; but GOD did as great acts after, as theſe were, for the ſame people. They then, ſetting before them this way skored them out by GOD (for every famous famous benefit, a ſolemne day:) for thoſe other benefits after vouchſafed them, they did appoint like ſolemne dayes, of themſelves.

We inſtance in this of Purim, which Moſes and the Prophets never knew. We inſtance in another after this, which Eſther or Mardochei never knew, the Encænia, or Feaſt of new dedicating the Temple, after it had been polluted by Antiochus, recorded in the X. of the V. of Iohn. And I would faine know, why it ſhould not be like acceptable to GOD, to keep the fourteenth of the laſt month Adar, for their deliverance from Haman, by Eſther in Perſia; as it was, to keep the fourteenth of the firſt moneth Niſan, for their deliverance from Pharaoh, by Moſes in Ægypt: Quid intereſt?

The ground being morall, or rather naturall, as reducible to thankfulneſſe, which is a vertue of the Law of Nature: the prime example being GODS own: By warrant of it, the former Church having inſtitute others, the Chriſtian Church knew nothing to barre it from doing the like: ſo, Holy-dayes ſhe appointed too. It is Saint Auguſtine (de Civitate X. 4) Memoriam beneficiorum Dei, &c. The memorie of GOD's benefits we Chriſtians keepe ſacred and holy, by holding ſolemne Feaſts for them, leſt elſe, by revolution of time, forgetfulneſſe might creepe upon us, and we prove unthankfull. And doe we any other thing in appointing this day, than all theſe did? I conclude, with the ſtyle of the Councels: Sequentes igitur & nos per omnia Sanctorum Patrum veſtigia, We, herein doe but tread in the ſteps of our holy Fathers, and follow them were followers therein of GOD Himſelfe.

If it be ſaid, all this while we heare no precept alleadged, we have nothing but example: No more had Eſther, here; precept had ſhe none. Only GODS example ſhe had; Picked the foureteenth of Adar, out of the foureteenth of Niſan: from Pharaoh, that, from Haman, this. It is true, Dirigimur præceptis; By precepts we take our direction: But it is no leſſe true, Inſtruimur exemplis; We receive inſtruction (in a great part) from examples alſo. One ſerves for our rule, the other for our patterne; and we, as to obey the one, ſo to imitate the other: For, Perfectio inferiorum, aſſimilatio ſuperiorum: The inferiour hath no greater perfection, than to become like to them that are his Superiours. Superiours (I ſay) and that, in time, no leſſe than in place; that is, ſuch as have in former times, laudably gone before us. The Bible ſheweth this plaine; there, beſide the Bookes of the Law, that ſerve for Precepts to direction, God hath cauſed to be written the Story of the Bible, to yeeld us examples, for imitation. And thoſe Books of Story are in Hebrew, called the former Prophets; to ſhew, before there came any predictions into the world, there was a Prophetical force in them, to guide Gods people by. To the Law, and to the Teſtimony: For, the practice of the Saints runneth along with the Law, under the name of Teſtimony; their lives having ever born teſtimony to God, and his truth. And as the Hebrews ſay, a barren Divine ſhall he be, qui neſcit facere legem de Prophetis, that out of the Saints practice, cannot frame a Law.

The ground then being laid: If this be agreed of, that a day, that a ſet day, and that this very day may be appointed: We have two points more, to touch, [1] the authoritie, by which it is to bee injoyned; and the [2] manner, according to which it is to bee obſerved.

1. The authority firſt. For, be the ground never ſo good, yet are not wee to take up dayes, of our own heads, but by order of authoritie: they are to be injoyned us. Whoſe authoritie here? There be in a Law, but three things, [1] advice, [2] authoritie, [3] and ſubmiſſion, they be all here. It ſhould ſeeme, at the firſt, Mardochei did only by a letter, adviſe them, Ut ſuſciperent & revertente ſemper anno celebrarent honore (Ver. 20.) before; and this, before he was in place. That letter of his, either not taking place, or not place enough; and they being either laid down, or ſo like to be, here commeth now שויק a ſecond, to confirme that (as the word is) and this, no advice now, but בכל תזקפ with all authoritie; of the nature of a Law, to eſtabliſh them for ever. 1 The Authority by which it was injoyned.

Now, this could not Mardochei, nor Eſther, nay nor both of them do, of themſelves, in Perſia; not, without the regall authoritie there, or without commiſſion from it. Not ſend over the hundred twenty-ſeven Provinces; nay, not over any one Province of them, but by vigour of Aſſuerus's warrant. His warrant they had, at the XXV. Ver. and by it proceeded

proceeded they, to doe all this. What Esther did, she did in the power of Assuerus.

Now Assuerus (it is well knowne) was a Heathen King; yet have we here a Feast Ionas 3.7. establiſhed by his authoritie. So was the King of Ninive, a Heathen too; yet have wee a Faſt injoyned by his. So was the King of Babel, a Heathen King; yet a Law by him
Dan. 3.29. made, upon paine of death not to blaſpheme the true God. So were Cyrus, and Darius;
Ezra. 5.13. 6.12. yet the Temple built by their authority. Things pertaining to Religion, all. So that there is, in the Regall power, of all, yea, even of Heathen Princes, to confirme and to injoyne what may tend to the worſhip and ſervice of God.

2 Cor. 13.10. 1 Tim. 2.2. Power againſt the truth, or for falſhood, I know none: no Power to deſtruction; to edification, all. And, prayer is to bee made without ceaſing, for Kings, that they may apply their power to theſe, to edifie in the Truth. So they will, if Mardochai may be in place to adviſe them, not Haman. But if they miſ-apply it, and not to the end, God gave it them; (for He that gave it them, is to take account of them for it, and He will require it at their hands;) to Him they be reſpondent.

But, bee this, here and ever remembred, if by a Heathen Princes power this was done, ſhall it be denied to a Chriſtian Prince, to one in whom Aſſuerus's power, and Eſther's Religion (both) meet to take order for dayes, or rather rites of that nature? Well then, having both our ground, and our authoritie לקים (which word is, three ſeverall times repeated in this one verſe, 1 Once for Mardochai, that adviſed; 2 Once, for Eſther, that injoyned; and 3 Once for the people that undertooke to obſerve it: It is the Iewes operative word whereby they enact all their ſtatutes:) Be it then enacted, what? Ut nulli liceat dies hos abſque ſolennitate tranſigere, Verſe 23. That it be lawfull for no man, to paſſe theſe dayes, without ſolemnizing.

To a Law there goe two כאשר, two Caaſhers, two accordings. Both twaine are here. 1 According as Eſter, with Mardochai's advice, injoyned it: 2 And, according as they (that is, the people) tooke upon them, decreed to obſerve it.

Which obſerving is the life of every law: even the publike approbation, or giving allowance of it, by the conſtant keeping it. The ſecond according is added for the peoples commendation: that what was prudently adviſed, and lawfully injoyned, was by them as dutifully obſerved.

And this they not only did, but bound themſelves moreover, and their ſeed, ſo to continue. Themſelves, and that with the higheſt bond, ſuper animas ſuas (which is more than upon themſelves, and would not have beene put in the margent, but ſtood in the text) upon theirs, and upon their ſeeds, never to let them fall. The word is קבל at the 27. ver. that is, to make a Kabala, or tradition of it. And that is the true tradition indeed: when a thing orderly taken up (there, is קים) is carefully, and out of conſcience kept up (there, is קבל) and delivered over from the Father to the Sonne, and from the Sonne to the Nephew, to all ſucceeding Ages; none daring to tranſgreſſe it, on the charge of their ſoules. This Kabala made it a perfect Law.

2 The manner of keeping it. Now, a word of the manner of the keeping them, and ſo an end. They enacted, to keepe the Purim-dayes: How to keep them? It will lead us (this) to the nature of them, whether as holy-dayes or no. For, at this, there be that ſticke too. A feria they will allow them, a play-day, or ceaſing from worke; or a feſtus dies, if you will, a day of feaſting, or encreaſe of fare; but, not dies ſanctus, no holy-day, no, at any hand: For, then may Eſther make Holy-dayes (they ſee) it followes. What ſhould one ſay to ſuch men as theſe?

For 1 firſt, it is plaine by this verſe, they took it in animas, upon their ſoules; a ſoule-matter they made of it. There needs no ſoule for feria or feſtum, play or feaſting. 2 Secondly, the bond of it reacheth to all, that Religioni eorum voluerunt copulari (Verſe 27.) to all, that ſhould joyne themſelves to their Religion: Then, a matter of Religion it was, had reference to that; what need any joyning in Religion, for a matter of good-fellowſhip? 3 Thirdly, it is expreſly termed a rite, and a ceremony (at the 23. and 28. Verſes) as the Fathers reade them: Rites I truſt, and ceremonies (as holy-dayes are no more) pertaine to the Church, and to the Service of GOD; not, to merry meetings; that, is not their place. 4 Fourthly, they faſt and pray here, in this Verſe; faſt the

Eve,

Eve, the fourteenth, and ſo then, the day following to be holy-day, of courſe. 5 Fifthly, with faſting and prayer (here) almes alſo is injoyned (at the 22. Verſe.) Theſe three will make it paſt a day of revells or mirth. 6 Laſtly, as a holy-day, the Iewes ever kept it, have a peculiar ſet Service for it, in their Seders; ſet Pſalmes to ſing; ſet Leſſons to read, ſet Prayers to ſay (and that at foure ſeverall times as (out of Neh. 9. ver. 3.) their manner is, on holy-dayes) good and godly, all. None, but as they have uſed, from all antiquity. 1 Being then taken on their ſoules: 2 reſtrained to the ſame Religion: 3 directly termed a ceremony: 4 being to be held with faſting, prayers, and 5 almes, workes of pietie all: 6 the practice of the Church concurring: theirs was a holy-day cleere, and ſo ought ours to bee, Thus have we a preſident, upon record, to draw up ours by: the Superiours, to injoyne ſuch a day; the Inferiours, to obſerve it.

And, as a warrant to doe it; ſo a rule how to doe it; with faſting and with crying (that is) prayer, earneſt prayer (the laſt word.) What, and muſt we faſt then? That were no good lot in the end of a Text. No: if we will pray, well: I dare take upon me, to excuſe us from faſting. Their faſting was, to put them in minde of the faſt, their Fathers uſed (Chap.4.3.) by meanes whereof they turned GOD, and GOD turned the Kings heart, and ſo all turned to their good. But, for us, we have no ſuch means to remember in ours: we uſed not any, and ſo hold ours without any. They had two dayes; their holy-day had a faſting day. Our lot is to have but one; and that, no faſting-day; an immunitie from that. So much the better is our lot: A feaſt, without any faſt, at all.

But though without faſting, not without earneſt prayer (meant here, by crying:) nor, without earneſt thanks and praiſe, neither. For, joy alſo hath her cry, as well as affliction: The voice of joy and health is in the dwellings of the righteous. But, prayer (ſure) will doe well at all hands, that a worſe thing happen not to us. But, prayer is but one wing: with Almes it will doe better, make a paire of wings; which is before preſcribed, at the two and twentieth Ver. So to eate the fat and drink the ſweet our ſelves, as wee ſend a part, to them for whom nothing is provided: Dies enim Sanctus eſt, ſaith Nehemias; for (by his rule) that, makes it a right holy-day. Pſal 118.15. Nehem.8.10.

But, prayer is the laſt word here; ends the Verſe: and with that, let us end. Even that all, that ſhall ever attempt the like, let Haman's lot be their lot, and let never any other light on them, but ſors funiculus. Let Queene Eſther's prayer, and King Aſſuerus's ſentence ever take place, Malum quod cogitavit, convertatur in caput ipſius; Ipſius, or Ipſorum, one, or many: Let not the rod of the ungodly light on the lot of the righteous. Let God in whoſe hand our lots are, ever maintaine this dayes lot to us: never give forth other, but as in this Text, and as on this day, on the foureteenth of Adar, and on the fifth of November. And praiſed be GOD, this day, and all our dayes, that this day ſhewed, that He taketh pleaſure in the proſperity of His ſervants, and from all lots and plots, doth ever deliver them. SERMONS

PSALME CXLIV. VER. X.

Ipſe eſt qui dat ſalutem Regibus : qui eruit DAVIDEM ſervum ſuum, de gladio maligno.

It is He that giveth ſalvation unto Kings : who delivereth David His ſervant from the perillous, or malignant ſword.

SCarce any that heare this Verſe rehearſed, but ſees, that it fits, both to this our purpoſe, and time. The time : Here is mention of Kings, of Salvation given to Kings : Of one, a matchleſſe King; DAVID in danger and delivered; From the Sword, in danger and delivered : All moſt appoſite.

For behold Kings, Kings, to whom GOD hath given Salvation : hath given Salvation, and doth give ſalvation, and I pray GOD he may ever give it, much Salvation, for many yeares. Behold our King his ſervant; whom this day now ſix years ſince [I ſay this very day] GOD delivered, wonderfully delivered, from the hurtfull Sword. Verily theſe agree; whil'ſt at once we heare the words of the Text, we have as it were, a Commentary thereof before our eyes.

But for our purpoſe: This meeting, and this, not only honourable, but alſo ſacred Aſſembly, what meanes it, what intends it? What els, than to give thankes to GOD, for ſalvation given to the King? And, what els, I pray you, doth this Verſe ſound forth, than, thankes alſo to GOD, for ſalvation given to DAVID.

For in the preceding verſe, the Pſalmiſt took his Harpe, tuned the Strings, promiſed a Song, a new Song. And behold the Contents of this new Song, in this verſe. The ſumme of this verſe (for the next verſe is a Prayer, neither hath it any Song in it) and the Argument is, giving of Thankes: and of Thankes, for nd other benefit (although there were many more) yet, for no other benefit, than the Kings Deliverance. That namely, the Saviour of Kings, to wit GOD (for this is GODS periphraſe, Who gives ſalvation to Kings :) that this Saviour of Kings, had delivered his ſervant DAVID, from ſome eminent danger: yet, from no other danger, than the hurtfull Sword, that is the Traitors.

And thus ſurely, doth this Verſe: and thus then alſo, the people of Iſrael, prayſed Him for their Kings deliverance: It is He that giveth ſalvation unto Kings : who delivereth DAVID His ſervant from the hurtfull Sword.

And we indeed, here to day, ſing the very ſame thing; every way the ſame, one only word a little changed: It is He who gives ſalvation unto Kings : It is he who hath delivered JAMES His ſervant from the perillous Sword. It is He, that hath done this; It is He, whom, for this Delivery, all of us, have met here, to day, to praiſe in a Feſtivall, an Aſſembly, a Song.

And, this verily is uſuall with GOD, and ſurely no new thing, To give ſalvation to Kings: This is His ancient goodneſſe: yet, of this ancient, and no new goodneſſe, ever and anon He ſhewes new examples; yea, in our age He hath ſhowne them, nor, doth He ceaſe to ſhew them, even to this day. For this very thing, which to day we celebrate; although it be new (and ſurely new it is) Yet it is not the laſt. For, ſince GOD hath vouchſafed us Him, one, and againe another hath befallen us, wherewith GOD hath lately bleſſed us. Twice, or thrice, hath GOD given deliverance, twice, or thrice, hath GOD delivered Him: and (to let paſſe other, ſurely thoſe moſt admirable) He that ſix yeares ſince hath delivered him, from the hurtfull ſword; Very lately, this yeare, (this very yeare) hath delivered him from the perillous Gunpowder. Thus yearely He heapes upon us new Deliverances. It ſhall be our duty, here to imitate DAVID: and, for ſeverall new Preſidents, to ſing new Songs; for ſeverall new Deliverances, new Thankſgivings: So ſhall He every yeare heape upon us new Deliverance: Rehearſing old, Hee will enrich us with new: nor ſhall there ever be wanting new matter for a Song, if a new Song be not wanting. If old ones be not forgotten, a new Harueſt of Thanksgiving ſhall yearely increaſe unto us.

And thus, briefly, touching the ſcope of this Verſe. It is an eaſie taske to divide it. It falls aſunder of its owne accord; and ſevers into two parts. The one a Theſis: The other an Hypotheſis. The Theſis is, concerning His care of Kings in generall. It is He who gives ſalvation to Kings. The Hypotheſis, is touching His care of DAVID in particular. It is He who delivereth DAVID His ſervant from the hurtfull ſword. Or indeed (becauſe we have to doe with Muſicke, and are to treat of a Song) His generall care of Kings, is as the Cantus, Cantus firmus: his particular care of DAVID, is as the Diſcantus, or Cantus figuratus. Yet, for DAVID, although GOD hath diverſly delivered him, both many wayes, and times; notwithſtanding he inſiſts on this alone (which is proper both to this ſeaſon, and to us) becauſe, He delivered him, from the perillous ſword.

I. I will firſt ſpeake of the ſafety of Kings in generall, and alſo both of the cauſe of it, and manner of giving it.

II. Next of King DAVID'S Deliverance.

III. Laſtly of our King.

Quæ ego dum ſic ſingula complectar. &c.

It is He that giveth Salvation unto Kings, &c.

I Promiſed firſt to ſpeake of the Theſis.

Who gives ſalvation,
Who gives it to Kings.

To give Salvation: So well it agrees to the Divine nature, to ſhew Himſelfe a Deliverer; that GOD doth challenge that as native, proper, and peculiar to Himſelf. ISAIAH 43.11. I, even I am the LORD, and beſides Me, there is no Saviour: Thus He is a Saviour: ſave therefore He will.

And indeed, GOD will ſave both man and beaſt, ſo wonderfull is His mercy: ſaith our Prophet, Pſalme 36. 7. Even thus alſo the nature of Beaſts, is partaker of this ſaving power in GOD: It is He, who gives ſalvation, even to bruit beaſts.

Yea, even to bruit beaſts, yet ſo, that nevertheleſſe, the Apoſtle doubts not to demand and aske, 1 Cor. 9. 9. Doth GOD take care for Oxen? doth He not rather ſay it for our ſake? As though his care for them, in reſpect of that to us, might be eſteemed no care at all. Neither is it. For we are His chiefe care, thence JOB ſpeakes unto him him on our behalfe, as it were by a peculiar title, I have ſinned, what ſhall I doe unto thee, O thou preſerver of men, Iob 7.20. He, it is who gives ſalvation unto men. He, is the preſerver of men: But eſpecially of Kings μάλιστα διοτρεφὲς Βασιλῆων (as the Heathen Poet ſings not amiſſe) for they more than all kind of men, are GODS delight, and care: The name θεοφυλακία agrees to the King, more than others. For Great deliverance giveth He to the King, ſaith our Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 18. verſ. 50. He alſo ſaith, He is the ſaving health of His annointed. Pſal. 28. 8. In whomſoever He ſhewes Himſelf wonderfull, He is wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, as he ſaith, Pſal. 76.12. He, is ſurely wonderfull in Them, in preſerving Them. 2. In none more. 3. In none, ſo wonderfull. Thus by theſe three ſteps we aſcend to our Theſis; It is He that giveth ſalvation unto Kings. 1 2. 3

To Kings. I ſay in generall: For touching Kings GODS ſervants, I ſhall diſcourſe more fully, when I come to the Hypotheſis, concerning DAVID his ſervant.

It is He, who gives ſalvation to Kings: He it is. Therefore let Kings know, to whom they ought to aſcribe their deliverance; even to Him. There is no ſafety for them, In the ſtrength of an Horſe, viz. not in their cavalry. Not in the legs of a man, viz. not in their infantry. Not in the Ships of Tharſis, viz. not in their Navall forces. A Horſe is a vaine thing to ſave a man. A Ship is a weake veſſell, and cannot ſave. Finally, Vain is the help of man. Salvation belongeth to the Lord. His it is; Looke up thither unto Him. He it is, who tels you from heaven, I am your ſalvation. Let Kings know this. Pſal.147.10. Pſal 48.6. Pſal.33.16. Pſal.60. Pſal. 3.8. Pſal.35.3.

Let the people alſo know, whither, when all is done, they ought to lift up their eyes, whom to implore, when they would have their King ſafe: Namely, to the LORD, to whom ſalvation belongs. O LORD ſave the King. Hoſanna in the higheſt. Pſal.20.9. Mat.21.9.

Hence let rebels amongſt the people know, That GOD hates thoſe, who labour to ſnatch that Salvation from Kings, which GOD gives them: Let loyall people know, that they are GODS friends, and GOD theirs: who deſire the ſalvation of Kings. For God deſires the very ſame thing. It is he that gives ſalvation unto Kings.

I come neerer. Who gives ſalvation. What ſalvation? Surely each kinde, whether that of Phyſitians, of a ſound and healthfull body againſt diſeaſes; namely, as they are mortall. For (as DANIELS image may teach us) Every Kingdome ſtands upon feet of clay. Kings alſo are the very Treaſures* of their people; But yet, Treaſures in earthen veſſels: Therefore they need, this ſalvation. Dan. 2. 33. * 2 Cor. 4 7.

True therefore it is, ſhould we meane this; for GOD gives this, alſo. True indeed: but not proper to this place. For this ſalvation (as our Text tels us) is from the ſword, not ſickneſſe; rather from malignant manners, than malignant humours; from externall force, not from internall * diſtemper. I therefore apply my ſelfe to that. He gives ſalvation: He gives this ſalvation to Kings: to Kings before others. νοσεμάτα

I now demand the cauſe, and more neare and inwardly ſearch GODS will. Why, to them before others? Is it, becauſe Kings have need of ſafety, and the doner of ſafety, more than others? Yes verily, becauſe they have: for as much as to them, more than others, that malignant one ſhewes himſelfe more malicious. (For thus κατ' ἐξοχὴν S. JOHN in his firſt Epiſtle often cals that wicked Spirit) He it is, that deſtroyes Kings. Namely the Angel of the bottomleſſe pit, of whom the ſame JOHN ſpeakes, Apocal. 9. 11. His name in Hebrew is Abaddon: In Greek Apollyon, that is a deſtroyer. A deſtroyer: a name directly oppoſite to GOD's name. His name, is Saviour. And the name of His ſonne; JESUS, a Saviour alſo, (an Angell interpreting it.) They give ſalvation. But he is Abaddon, he is a deſtroyer, who chiefly deſires this, to ſnatch away, to rake, wholely to overthrow this ſalvation, all the ſalvation of all. And marke with me, how earneſtly he endeavours it. 1 John 2.13, 14. & 5.18. Mat.1.21,

Wee ſaid this formerly. GOD ſaves even Beaſts: much more Men. And Princes moſt of all. This Abaddon ſets up himſelfe againſt GOD, and is only bent to deſtruction. Yea, rather than not deſtroy, He is buſied in deſtroying bruit beaſts: which very thing is evident in the ſilly Swine, which (CHRIST permitting him) he carried headlong, and choaked in the Sea. Thus he it is, who takes away ſafety, even from bruit beaſts, Mat.8.32.

But He covets rather to deſtroy any man, any one man, than whole flocks and herds of cattel, (as Iob witneſſeth) Thus He it is who takes away ſalvation from men.

Iob 1. 12. and 2. 4.

But to Kings eſpecially, beſide and above other mortals, hee is moſt hatefully malicious: And if any King be eminent in piety, as David: him he chiefly hates. He, indeed, alwayes meditates on miſchiefe againſt Kings, he deſired to deſtroy even Assuerus, a Heathen King (only, becauſe he was a King) by his Eunuches. Yea, David alſo! For, how often, was he thruſt at, yea, overthrowne, that he might periſh: and now at the very point of deſtruction, unleſſe God had delivered him; as he ſpeakes of himſelfe, Pſalm. 118. 13. He, it muſt be, in every reſpect who can give ſalvation to them. It is the other, who takes it away.

Eſth. 2. 21.

But why doth that Abaddon, ſo zealouſly deviſe, to bring deſtruction upon Kings, to take away their ſafetie? What have they only done? Surely becauſe there is none, who can be, to him, who can be to his kingdome, a more capitall enemie, than Kings: For it is by their power and authority; that, what likes, may not bee lawfull to every one: (I will uſe the words of Scripture) that Every man may not doe (unpuniſhed) whatſoever is right in his owne eyes: which, every one both might, and did doe, when there was no King in Iſrael. Now for every man to have power to doe, whatſoever ſeemes right in his owne eyes, unpuniſhed, this verily, that Abaddon earneſtly deſires; It muſt needs pleaſe him well, his kingdome may well proſper; if things goe thus.

Deut. 12. 8.

For, then it will ſeeme right to the eyes of Micha, to make and ſet up an Idoll for himſelfe, in his private houſe, Iudges the 17. 4. And what's lawfull for Micha, why not for another alſo? Thus, looke, how many families, ſo many new prodigious Idols. And that's indeed, a miſerable Church, where this is ſuffered.

It, will alſo ſeeme right to the Danites, to rob, to ſteale, nor only to breake thorow the wals of Micha's houſe, but alſo as Laish, even to pillage and ſpoile whole Cities, to deſtroy all, not ſave a man. Iudges 18. Then raviſhings of women, and whoredomes not to be named, will ſeeme right in the eyes of the men of Gibea: Iudges 19. Lamentable indeed is the face of that kingdom, where there is ſuch work. That theſe, and ſuch like things, may be done, this ſurely he wils earneſtly, and that Abaddon would purchaſe this, at a high rate. But that theſe, and ſuch things as theſe may not be done, Kings doubtleſſe are his hinderers. Wherefore, he labours by all meanes, to take them away; to take their ſafety from them, and in this he is wholly imployed.

First, and before all things, he deſires Anarchy. If that may not be; Then would he incontinently deſtroy Kings, one, after another. That ſo Kingdomes might ſhake as a Reed in the water. (which uſually happens in often change of Kings) never enjoying a ſetled reſt. Whereby, being alwayes under one new King, or another, they can never get ſtrength againſt evill manners, and wicked men.

1 Kings 14. 14

We have already ſeen, for what reaſon: It will be worth our labour, to know, by what meanes alſo, that Abaddon ſeekes to deſtroy Kings. And this is plain from the ſame Chapter, in the 9. of the Apocalyps. For there he hath his Emiſſaries, Locuſts aſcending out of the ſmoak of the Pit, (whoſe king he is) and thoſe alſo, as well as their king Abaddon, are ſworne enemies to Kings. He ſubornes theſe for this attempt. But who are theſe Locuſts? A kinde of creatures, who have a Mans face, Womans haire: but Lions teeth, and their tayles the ſtings of Scorpions. No others, ſurely, (if Fathers which interpret this place, are to be heard) than thoſe very ſame, which our Prophet David, twice in this Pſalme, cals, ſtrange children: whom S. John afterward perceived to be Locuſts. Theſe did David call ſtrange children, long before. For that kinde of people, was neither unknowne to David: neither yet are they unknowne to us. Even, our age, brings forth ſtrange children. Strange indeed. A kind of men, which ſtile themſelves----Of the Society of Jeſu. But Jesus (as is aforeſaid) is a Saviour. Wherefore theſe alſo, if from him, they have their name, if they be not ſtrange children, they ought to miniſter ſalvation: But, is not this a ſtrange thing, and monſter-like, that theſe, who from Jesus a Saviour, have made a name for themſelvs, are accounted moſt wicked, even the Embaſſadors of Abaddon,

V. 8. 11.

Traitors

Traitors to Kings, the overthrow of kingdomes, in what ſtate ſoever they get footing? Are not theſe verily ſtrange children, who under a ſtrange Ieſu by name, every where attempt practices moſt eſtranged, from the nature of JESUS, namely, deſtructions, treaſons, ſeditions? And that you may know, that theſe alſo of ours, are of the ſame lineage with thoſe of DAVID: their marks are every way alike. Filii alieni (ſaith DAVID, Pſalm, 18, 45.) mentiti ſunt mihi. Even the ſame thing which he ſaith twice in this Pſalme. Their mouth ſpeaketh a lye, their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. And are not theſe of ours juſt like them? only except, what DAVID cals lying, that, they call Equivocation. A diverſe title, no different things. For, their right hand, is equally wicked. Becauſe, whether they engage their hand, for faithfull dealing; or lay their hand, on thoſe ſacred Evangels, to winne beliefe by religious oathes: Their right hand is wicked, and deceitfull in both: both waies, both mouth and right hand, is eſtranged from their mind, their mind eſtranged from GOD; at the leaſt from the true GOD: For from an equivocall God, that is, the God of this World, it is not perchance eſtranged. And now he imployes the helps and aſſiſtance of theſe (whether it pleaſe you to call them Locuſts, or ſtrange children) to whet theſe perillous ſwords, to mingle poyſons, to give fire to Powder-plots. To whom their King Abaddon, gives in ſtrict charge (theſe being his Chiefetaines) that which formerly the King of Syria commanded his Captaines; Fight neither with ſmall nor great ſave only againſt the King. But deſtroy him, with Sword, with Fire, with Poynado, with Poyſon, with Powder, diſpatch him what way ſoever,

Nempe
——Rege incolumi, mens omnibus una,
Amiſſo rupere fidem.

(as the Poet very elegantly) I conclude. Though, one there be who would give ſalvation: There is another, who would take it away: Though one there be, who would ſtretch forth a gracious ſhield: There is another, who brandiſheth a perillous ſword. Though there bee true borne children, which deſire their ſafety; There are ſtrange children, which wiſh their ruine. Though there be a JESUS, who can ſave: There is Abaddon, who would deſtroy. Though there be CHRIST, who would favour them: There is an Antichriſt (neither is he only called Antichriſt, becauſe he is an adverſarie to CHRIST the LORD, but alſo becauſe he is an enemy to the Anointed of the LORD) I ſay there is an Antichriſt, who would be Miſchievous and quickly deſtroy them, either with the perillous ſword, or elſe a Powder-plot.

You have now already ſeene, both why, and how that Abaddon would deſtroy Kings. Next, you ſhall briefly heare, both wherefore, and by what meanes, GOD would give them ſalvation. Firſt, wherefore, wherefore doth GOD give ſalvation to Kings? Namely, becauſe they are his Vicegerents upon earth; Becauſe they are in GOD's place, becauſe they repreſent his perſon: Becauſe they are his miniſters, his chief miniſters. Wherby, is ſhown, that there is a kind of neceſſity for God to ſave thoſe, viz. becauſe they are His Embaſſadors. Surely thoſe that are Kings Legates into forraigne Countries. Thoſe who are Viceroyes and Preſidents in Provinces here at home: it hath alwayes beene accounted part of princely wiſedome, by all meanes, to protect them, to vindicate them from contempt. For, the honour of an Embaſſador, is his honour that ſends him, and the Vice-royes diſhonour, redounds upon the King. Even our Prophet DAVID when thoſe were reproachfully handled, whom he ſent, inſteed of himſelfe, to rejoyce with King AMMON, he judged himſelfe to be violated in them. The diſgrace, as though it had beene proper to himſelfe, he ſeverely revenged. Thus, it is with the ſupreme King, to whom our Kings are Vice-royes: His owne honour, except Kings be ſafe (who are His Vice-royes) His own honour, cannot ſtand ſafe, and inviolated. Even, for His own honour, He will preſerve them ſafe. For * By Him they reigne, By him they are ordained. By Him they are; what they are. All comes to this point, that it belongs to him, in ſom ſort behoves Him, that whom He makes, them, He ſhould alſo favour: And whom He favours, that they may not bee wronged, He is alſo their revenger, if they be violated. This, is one reaſon why He ſhould give ſalvation to them.

Rom. 13.4.6.

2 Sam. 10. 4. & 12.31.

* Prov. 8. 15. Rom. 13. 2. 4

Further to this, I alſo adde another.

God deſires His peoples ſafety, Hee deſires all our ſafety: (for the benefit of Salvation the more generall it is, the more heavenly it is). The LORD ſaid to Ionas, Is it meet that thou ſhouldeſt deſire the preſervation of the gourd? And ſhould not I ſpare Nineveh that great City, wherein are 120000 perſons which cannot diſcerne between their right hand and their left? Now He gives Salvation to Kings, thereby to derive it to the people, fitly to Them, that by Them, it may extend to all. For thence it is, that He not only cals the Magiſtrates Gods: I have called you Gods: But alſo Saviours. For, ſo it is in the book of Iudges, as often as mention is made of the ſupreme Magiſtrate: GOD (ſaith he) hath raiſed up a Saviour for them, Othoniel, Gedeon, Iephthe, and others. Therefore They, ſave many thouſands. Finally, it is moſt agreeable, fit, and a thing well be-ſeeming GOD, to ſave the Saviours, of ſo many thouſands: That is, to give Salvation to Them, in whoſe ſafety, Our ſafety, yea all our ſafety, is placed. That place of S. Paul is remarkable, Let prayers (ſaith he) be made for all men. But this is boundleſſe; it is too long, to run through all. Will you therefore, confine it in briefe? Let them be made for Kings. Becauſe if for Them, for all. If it be well with Them, it will be well with all. In which place the Apoſtle pleads powerfully. Marke his gradations. For Kings (ſaith he) that They may be ſafe; thence is it, that whilſt They are ſafe, the peace is ſafe: In a ſafe peace, there is the knowledge of GOD: From the knowledge of GOD, an honeſt and godly life: from a godly and honeſt life, comes the ſafety of the whole world. Do you not ſee? That the Safety of Kings and prayers for it, is laid as the very corner ſtone, to all mens ſafety.

Pſal. 82. 6.

Iudg. 3. 9. 15.

But, why ſeeke I for theſe examples abroad? Seeing, we have them growing at home, here in our Pſalme, and ſurely far more abundantly. In this verſe, are thankes to be given for the Deliverance of Kings: In the next verſe, are prayers to be made. Why, I pray you? Namely (verſe 12.) that, So, it might go well with, Our ſons, our daughters: verſe 13. That, So, it might be well with our Storehouſes, our Flocks: verſe 14. That, ſo, all might go well with our Oxen. That, there be no Breaking in, nor going out, or complaining in our ſtreets. None of theſe, ſhall be, we ſhall have all theſe ſafe, if the King be ſafe. By account indeed, there are eight (which the Fathers from the words of the Pſalme, Bleſſed are the people, who are in ſuch a caſe: have called them the eight felicities of this life, the eight earthly beatitudes) all depending upon the ſafety of Kings. Nor only theſe eight, but alſo (which laſt remaines, and is worth all, Bleſſed are the people whoſe GOD is the LORD) this alſo (that GOD may be our LORD, that is, that our religion may be ſafe) doth, certainly, very much depend on the Prince. For, ſurely, he that reades of the ſixe Kings of Iudah, ſucceſſively in the books of Kings: or the five Emperors, ſucceſſively in the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory: Or he that here at home, hath ſeen amongſt us foure Princes ſucceſſively by turnes altering Religion; and as the Kings, ſo the people alſo, changing in Religion: will diſcern, that it is of great conſequence, that Salvation be given to SALOMON; leaſt, when he is dead Ieroboam make Iſrael to ſin. Therefore that Hee may give ſalvation to the people, He gives ſalvation to Kings: both for his owne honours ſake, and even for all our ſakes, He gives ſalvation to Kings. Why He ſhould give ſalvation, I have already made knowne. How He gives it, that yet remaines. I haſte unto it.

1 King. 15. 30.

I. First, by ſending his Word, that he may ſave them: but if that be a ſmall thing, by ſtretching forth his hands alſo, that he may ſet them in ſafety.

First by the Word of ſalvation. For, leaſt any ſhould overthrow that Salvation which GOD hath given: he hath provided in a triple charge, wherewith (as with a triple trench.) He hath fortified the ſafety of Kings.

Pſal. 105. 15. I. Touch not mine annointed. Whereby He ſecures them from violent hands.

Exod. 22. 28. II. Curſe not the ruler of thy people. Whereby He ſecures them from the poyſon of the tongue.

Eccleſ. 10. 20. III. Curſe not the King, no not in thy thought. Whereby He ſecures them againſt the bould, and boundleſſe thoughts, of the ſoule it ſelfe.

And

And if they be ſafe enough, from theſe three, all would be well: the ſafety of Kings would be abundantly provided for. Thus, GOD provides by His triple ſaving Word, that their ſafety may not come in danger.

But if theſe are not enough (and often they are not enough) but this triple bulwark being caſt down, ſtrange children, dare both ſit in counſell, and mutter ill words, nay verily, even lift up their hand, againſt GODS annoynted. Yet then, as it is in the 7. verſe, He will ſend his hand from Heaven, He will ſend His hand from Heaven, and will deliver them from the midſt of danger. This truly and indeed Hee will do, by oppoſing Himſelfe, both againſt their counſels, and againſt them.

Againſt their counſels, partly by detecting them, whilſt yet, they are ſcarcely ripened: partly, by ſcattering them, even then, when they are digeſted, finiſhed; even then, when all is in a readineſſe.

And verily, for to detect their counſell He ſaith, in another place, that He hath ordained a lanterne for His annoynted. A lanterne ſurely, that is, faithfull counſell: and thoſe that are His miniſters (they being the lampes of Kings) whom it concernes, throughly to know their inmoſt deſignes: But, when the Kings lampe is too dim, then GODS lightning gives light. For, ſo it is, in the 6 verſe, when the light of the lampe ſufficeth not, by Him (Miſſo à ſe de Cælo fulgure) is the whole plot diſcovered. The Kings lanterne, I ſay, as, when Mordecai brought the accuſation againſt the trayterous Eunuchs: As, when Eliſha revealed the plot, concerning Aram's lying in waite for the King of Iſrael.

Pſal. 132. 18.

Pſal. 144. 6.

Eſth. 2. 22.

2 King. 6. 9.

But it was Fulgur Dei, when as SALOMON ſaith, A bird of the aire ſhall cary the voyce, (namely) when by ſome ſtrange meanes, and by no humane aſſiſtance things are brought to light. When their own tongues ſhall make them fall, as it is, Pſal. 64. 8. That is, when by their own whiſperings, their own writings they betray themſelves. That, all that ſee it may be aſtoniſhed; who ſee it to be the hand of GOD, and that thou, LORD, haſt done it. And doubtleſſe He is wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, but in no one thing more, than, in ſending this His Lightning, whereby the moſt ſecret counſels of traytors, are often revealed.

Eccl. 10. 20.

YEt, ſuppoſe it be ſo: grant, that nothing be ſuſpected, not a word ſpoken, every thing concealed till all be in readineſſe: And now, the treaſon brought to the laſt caſt: Yet, even then, He will ſcatter them notwithſtanding, and, as it is in the 5 verſ. He will touch the Mountaines and they ſhall ſmoake, every one. Abſolom, now having uſurped a Kingdome, grew as big as a mountaine. GOD will but touch Abſolom, He, will ſmite his braine with madneſſe, that he might reject that very counſel which was moſt conducing to his deſigne. Thus in a moment GOD ſcattered them all. Adonias alſo ſwelled into a mountaine. GOD will but touch Adonias, He will ſmite his heart with a cauſeleſſe feare, that, then, when he was almoſt fully enthroned, hee durſt neither go on forward, nor ſtir: Thus they all vaniſh into ſmoake. All of them are become (even when all was as ſure as bird in hand) as a bowing wall and tottering fence; they either fall with their own accord, or with the leaſt enforcing are caſt down, they are touched, turne into ſmoake, and vaniſh.

Pſal. 144.

2 Sam. 17. 14.

Pſal. 62. 3.

And thus GOD ſets up Himſelfe againſt their conſpiracies, and ſhowes, that He will aſſert the ſalvation of Kings: Moreover, He undertakes this very thing, againſt the traytors themſelves: By making ready the ſtrings of his bow againſt the face of them, as it is, Pſal. 21. and as it is here (verſe 6.) By conſuming them with His arrowes. That men ſeeing their moſt unhappy ends, might tremble at their accurſed deeds. Moſes hath rightly compriſed the whole matter, then, when Corah firſt of all withſtood him. Hereby (ſaith he) ſhall ye know, that Magiſtrates are from GOD, that GOD takes care for their ſafety. If theſe men, dye the common death of all men, or if they be viſited after the viſitation of all men.

Pſal. 21. 12.

Num. 16. 28, 29, 30.

Then ye may make a doubt, whether, it be He: But, if God do a new thing, and bring all of them forth, every one, to puniſhment, all of them, to fearefull ends: If Divine Juſtice follow them at the heeles, and ſuffer them not to bee carried to their graves in peace, Morte vel maturâ vel ſiccâ: Hereby ſhall ye plainely know, that It is the

the Lord himſelfe who gives ſalvation unto Kings. Becauſe the hand of the Lord is gone forth againſt them. And, verily ſo it is: For, what is become of thoſe who boldly aſſayed, to caſt down that triple bulwark (of which I lately ſpake:) What is become of Sheba, who durſt lift up his hand, and ſound a trumpet, againſt DAVID? His head is thrown down, from the wall. And, what became of Shimei, who durſt open his mouth, and curſe the annoynted of the LORD? His hoare head, went downe to the grave with bloud. What alſo became of the Eunuchs, who only thought in their minds, how they might lay hands on the King? They were both hanged on a tree. And what ſhould I ſay more? The time would fayle me, to ſpeak of Baana and Rechab, of Abſolom, and Achitophel, of Adonia, and Ioab, of Zimri and Iozabad: And all the reſt, all who have ſought the deſtruction of their Kings, they have all periſhed, and are gone to their grave by ſome ſhamefull death. All theſe, cry out as it were with one voyce; From our example, let no mortall men dare, to take that ſalvation from Kings which GOD hath given unto them. DAVID, called GOD the horne of his ſalvation: He ſaid truly. For by pouring out oyle from the horne (out of the loweſt and hollow part of it) GOD annoynted Him. And with the ſame horne (the end of it being ſharpened) GOD ſcattered his enemies, and brake them all in peeces. Thus, with one end, He Annoynted him King: with the other He gave him deliverance. Thus, is GOD indeed a horne of ſalvation to his annointed.

2 Sam. 20. 1. 2 Sam. 20. 22. 1 King. 2. 9. Eſth. 2. 21, 23. 2 Sam. 4. 12. 2 Sam. 34. 24, 25. Pſal. 18. 1.

But I may not keep you too long in the Theſis; Ye have ſeen (I ſuppoſe) already, both why it ſhould be juſt with GOD, to give ſalvation unto Kings. 1 Becauſe there is a wicked one who would deſtroy them. 2 Kings are in GODS Place. 3 GODS honour is concerned in Saving them. 4 In their Safety, the ſafety of many nations conſiſts. You have alſo ſeen, how GOD brings this to paſſe; By His Word, and by His Work. 1 He reveiles it by His Lightning. 2 Hee touches them and turnes their counſels into ſmoake. 3 The contrivers themſelves, Hee ſhootes them thorow with His arrows. Aud thus He Works ſalvation for Kings, in the middle of the earth.

THe Theſis now finiſhed, I deſcend to the Hypotheſis. It is He who hath delivered DAVID His ſervant, &c. But I begin with this. GOD is the Saviour of all Men, but eſpecially of thoſe that beleive. It is S. Pauls ſaying. Let me add, He is the Saviour of all Kings, but eſpecially of thoſe that beleive. For there is like reaſon in both. Thus I inferre it. If, Divine providence reſt upon Kings, Kings indefinitely, Kings in general: What, ſhall it do upon Kings, who alſo themſelvs beleive, & are the Rulers of thoſe that beleive? If, GOD be wonderfull in the Kings of the earth, what is He in Kings, who, are both Sons and Nurſing Fathers of the Church? If in Aſſuerus a Heathen, what is He in DAVID, a religious and pious Prince. For (as the ſon of Sirach ſpake wiſely of him) Even, as fat is parted from the fleſh of the Sacrifice, ſo is DAVID from the Kings of the earth: That look what Kings are amongſt men; Such, is DAVID amongſt Kings, what will GOD therefore do for Him? What, will He do for them, that are like to Him, Faithfull as DAVID, in all his houſe? For, ſurely, what you may find ſeverally, in other Kings, are here in DAVID conjoyned. Namely, a King and a Servant of God. Wherefore both becauſe he is a King, He, will give ſalvation unto him, and becauſe He is His ſervant, He will deliver him from the perillous ſword. That He is a King, He, hath that in common with other kings of the Heathen; for whom, that GOD ſhould thus provide, there is no cauſe, but only this, becauſe they are Kings. That He is GODS ſervant, this is peculiar to Him, above others.

1 Tim. 4. 10. Eccl. 47. 2.

And GOD will ſurely ſave all His ſervants, of whatſoever even of the meaneſt condition: But Kings that are His ſervants, above others, both, becauſe, as Kings by Him they reigne, and becauſe, as ſervants, they are governed by Him. O Lord ſave the King. This is his prayer, Pſal. 20 9. O God ſave thy ſervant: This is his prayer, Pſal. 86. 2. This is one petition and yet not one. One in DAVID: not one in all: For all are not ſervants. Yes, verily, all are His ſervants, all the Kings of the earth. And ſo it is indeed; all are, for all, although unwitting, although unwilling, yet all, doe Pſal. 20. 9. Pſal. 86. 2.

His

His Wil. All are, but (which is for our purpoſe) all do not ſo acknowledge themſelvs, all do not carry themſelvs like ſervants. Nabuchodonozor was His ſervant. For ſo GOD ſpake by Ieremiah: Behold, I have given all theſe lands to Nabuchodonozor my ſervant: Yet notwithſtanding He did not acknowledg this. He acknowledged not, either himſelfe to be a ſervant, or Him his Lord. For he ſaid as much to the three Children. Let us ſee, who is that God which will deliver you out of my hands? Neither indeed did Pharaoh acknowledge it. Who is the Lord? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Iſrael go. Our DAVID did not ſo, no ſurely. But he acknowledged himſelfe a ſervant: Heare him ſpeake for himſelfe. Behold O Lord, how that I am thy ſervant; I am thy ſervant, and the ſon of thy handmaid. Neither is He this in word and ſpeech alone, but alſo indeed and in truth: Not (as they) doing it, neither wittingly, nor willingly, but of ſet purpoſe, Doing all his Will. Being ſo carefull in the LORDS buſineſſe, that He would not climbe up into his bed, would not ſuffer his eyes to ſleepe, untill he had found out a place for the Arke of the LORD: And in bringing it back, being girt with a linnen Ephod hee ſo behaved Himſelfe, amongſt the ſervants of GOD, ſo (I ſay) that he ſeemed to his wife, to be, too much a ſervant. But he could never, be humble enough before his LORD, never carefull enough to do His Will. DAVID was a ſervant indeed: humble as a ſervant: faithfull as a ſervant: a ſervant after His own heart. Fitly therefore, and to the purpoſe is it ſaid, in this verſe, His ſervant DAVID. Therefore GOD ſpeaks ſo, of him His ſervant: Pſal. 89. 21. My hand ſhall hold him faſt, and my arme ſhall ſtrengthen him: the enemy ſhall not be able to do him violence: the ſon of wickedneſſe ſhall not hurt him. That is (in one word) I will deliver him.

Ier. 27. 6. Dan. 3. 15. Exo. 5. 2. Pſal. 116. 14. Pſal 132. 3. 4, 5. 2 Sam. 6. 20. 1 Sam. 13. 14. Pſal. 89. 21, 22, 23.

And what he ſaid, in his word, he fulfilled in deed; therefore, GOD often delivered him, both from many (I do not ſay) dangers; that word is too large, for our preſent purpoſe) weapons I do ſay, which is more appoſite) from ſharp arrowes, drawn, and ſhot at him, to deſtroy him. He delivered him from Goliah's ſpeare: He delivered him from the javeline of Saul: and (which is proper to this place) He alſo delivered him from the ſword.

From the ſword, yet, not from any mans at all, in common, and promiſcuouſly: But (as it is in the verſe) from the malignant ſword: And is there indeed, a malignant ſword? Do I ſay a malignant one? Perhaps there is an evill one, perhaps a wicked one: but to call it a malignant ſword, that is too violent an expreſſion. Indeed the ſword is in no fault, there is no malignancy in the iron: all the malevolency is in him, and is diffuſed through his mind, at whoſe ſide it hangs. For in any other ſenſe, there is no malignant ſword.

Who therefore, I pray you, is that malignant one? Truly it is not he, who openly and in flat termes is miſchievous, or malevolent: Not he, who as an enemy profeſſeth open hoſtility. He is that malignant one, who covertly and in ſecret is malevolent. Who under a ſmooth forehead, hath a feſtered mind: under a painted face, a rotten heart. Who (as SALOMON skilfully deſcribes him) Speakes faire, but there are ſeven abominations in his heart, finally he is that malignant one, and his ſword (in as much as he is malignant) is malignant, that is, it is like it's Maſter.

Thoſe Locuſts which I lately mentioned, are the malignant ones. They have a Womans face, but behind a Scorpions tayle: whom I lately called ſtrange children, they are thoſe malignant ones: whoſe mouth is vaine: But for their ſwords point, that is not vaine, (as we ſee) neither wounds it in vaine, but gives a home, and more than that, a malignant wound.

And, is it ſo? Are there ſuch about DAVID, who covertly wiſh him evill? Cannot, ſo good a King, ſo faithfull a ſervant of GOD, cannot he how ever, eſcape thoſe malignant ones? Surely he might, and ſo he did. DAVID had ſuch, whom DAVID did not ſatisfie. DAVID had alſo, his malignant ones, and they, their ſwords: and by them and their ſwords, he was in greateſt perill. The King, as yet met with no Doeg, and men of Keilah: Now the King met with Shimei and Sheba. Hee had to deale with His companions, His guide, and Achitophel, His familiar friend. He had to do with Abſolom His ſon, His ſon Abſolom. He met with others, and thoſe no few: For in many Pſalmes, You may heare Him complaining of theſe worſt (for they are not the beſt) ſort of men. Yea even in this our Pſalme, twice He complaines of ſome Natives, indeed by birth, but in affection forraigners, that is, painted ſubjects, in whoſe Mouth there is no truth, nor truſt to their right hand. DAVID had ſuch as theſe, even he that's like DAVID (if any be like Him) yet ſuch as theſe He ſhall have. And from theſe, namely, once at the eight verſe: Nor there once alone; But againe alſo at the eleventh, that is againe, and againe, hee prayes, to bee Delivered. For Hee knew how perillous this ſword was, that ſurely the enemies ſword in reſpect of it, was full of courteſie. For this ſword was no ſword of Warre, nor of GOLIAH, nor of the Philiſtims, who openly invade, which becauſe He ſaw, He might avoyd: This ſword is the Traytors ſword: IOAB is a ſword, even this ſword; who friendly ſaluted ABNER, kindly embraced AMASA, Yet thruſt both of them into the belly, and that in ſuch ſort, namely ſo Perillouſly, that hee needed not to give them a ſecond Wound: For with that alone, both their bowels guſhed out upon the Earth. IOAB is a ſword, a perillous ſword: the fault, is in HIM.

1 Sam. 22. 9, 22. Pſal. 55. 14. 2 Sam. 18. 33.

Now, (that all may know, how good GOD is to DAVID.) GOD Delivered Him from this ſword. Him I ſay: For ſome there are, yea ſome KINGS, whom He Delivers not: There are ſome KINGS, whom He deſtroyes, whom this perillous ſword, deſtroyes; Namely, over whom GOD doth not ſtretch forth His Helmet of ſalvation. He, deſtroyed ISHBOSHETH, who lay on his bed at Noone. He, deſtroyed ELAM, as he was drinking himſelfe drunke, in his Stewards houſe. He deſtroyed IOASH affrighted with the peoples uproare. He deſtroyed Gedaliah feareleſly feaſting, with Iſhmael, his malicious murtherer. This ſword deſtroyed all theſe, that is GOD delivered them not. But GOD delivered DAVID, delivered Him (who ever that Malignant one was) from his ſword. And becauſe GOD delivered Him, He ſung this verſe to GOD as it were his Canticum ουτηελον. And thus much for the Hypotheſis, that is concerning David.

2 Kings 16. 9. 2 Chro. 24. 25.

I now come, to our ſelves.

For as GOD formerly delivered his ſervant David: ſo lately He delivered his ſervant Iames; He delivered both, and both from the ſword, both from the perillous ſword: So, that this verſe, may truly bee applyed, to them both, that it may bee rightly ſung: both on this day, this yeare: and on this day, for every yeare.

For, now the ſixt yeare is paſt, ſince on this day (this very day) ſtrange children lay in waite for Him: ſtrange children diſſembled with him. They inticed Him home to their houſe; they entertained Him, with all ſeeming courteſie, moreover they promiſed (ſome ſecret thing) vanities, and lyes, all. And ſo at laſt He that was not guilty of wickedneſſe Himſelfe, and therefore ſuſpecting no evill, Him they brought, whither they deſired, namely to a place, in the very inmoſt roome in the houſe, where that Perillous ſword was. There they ſet upon Him, (againſt the law of hoſpitality) their gueſt; Nay againſt a farre greater Law, for ſubjects aſſaulted their King: His retinue was excluded, the doores bolted, thus they ſet upon Him, alone, unarmed, voyd of all defence, and aſſiſtance. For then were ſtrange children preſent, who brought forth that ſword, true borne Children, who might interpoſe their buckler, and (if need were) their body too, theſe were abſent: All gone away. What, could here bee expected, but a certaine death? Surely, my minde trembles, to remember how neere that ſword was brandiſhed, that He, even felt its cold iron edge, both applyed, and more than that, daſhed againſt that ſacred breſt. What (I ſay) but certaine death, the ſword being brandiſhed, ſo neere unto him? Even then, GOD freed and delivered Him, GOD who gives ſalvation unto Kings, to Kings, His ſervants: Even then, GOD freed, and delivered Him, the King, His ſervant, in the midſt of danger, in the very jawes of death; from the midſt of danger, from the very jawes of death, He ſaved, and delivered Him. GOD Himſelfe (I ſay) delivered Him.

Pſal. 18. 45.

Firſt, by ſtriking that armed man, with feare; who was ready inſtructed, and appointed, to act this great wickedneſſe, So, that he neither durſt, nor could aſſay any thing. Moreover He changed the mind of that armed man ſo ſuddenly, that he he who was appointed to doe it, held backe his hand, who appointed him thereto (when he would have acted this wickednesse.) Further yet by giving present courage, both power, and strength sufficient to the King ad feralem illam palæstram. That the enemy was not able to doe him violence, that the sonne of wickednesse could not hurt him. Lastly by leading those, the right way after a marvellous manner, through unknown passages, that knew not the place, unacquainted with the way, and by guiding those men who being summoned by the Kings out-cry, hasted on each side, towards his reliefe; (men, for this, so happy and faithfull service, worthy eternally memory:) finally by freeing Him, both from this first, and also from that other sword, of the other brother, yet more malignant than the perillous one; and so freeing Him, that their sword went thorow their owne heart, and their mischievousnesse was turned on their owne pate. Thus the King is saved, salvation given to the King, given from heaven (if, ever salvation was given from heaven, to any) as if, GOD had sent His hand, from heaven, and brought Him helpe: at once delivering Him; and at once, overthrowing those perillous cut-throates, and killing them, with their owne perillous sword. Surely, this is no humane assistance; not from man. It is the Lords doing and it is marvellous in our eyes: In all mens eyes: and, it is wonderfull in our eares: In all mens eares: and for this cause, no posterity, no future age, shall passe it in silence.

Psal. 89. 23.

Psal. 37. 15.

Psal. 7. 17.

But this also, seemed a small thing to God, unlesse afterward often, and indeed very lately Hee had delivered Him (for yet it is not a yeare agoe) from a like, yea from a greater, from a farre greater danger, not of the sword, but of the Perillous Powder: An act so horrid, so black, so foule, so accursed, that, it is to be cursed, with all execrations, that, it almost exceeds our beliefe, who yet our selves have seene it. Later ages, sure enough (I thinke) will scarcely credit it, that ever there were in a mans shape, such Locusts from the neither-most hell, who should devise so hellish practices. Such, as was the magnitude of the danger, such shall be the measure of our thanksgiving. And verily that late powder-plot, might make us forget this dayes deliverance. But, farre be it from us. For (as I said at first) new deliverances are so to be celebrated, that old ones are also to be renewed. We shall sing Him, His song for that in due season. Now it is enough to mention it.

2 Sam. 7. 19.

I will no longer offend your patience: I will finish the remainder in few words.

THerefore as they, then, sung this song for their King: So, doe we, now, for ours. For salvation, is not so like salvation, as is theirs, and ours. Nor verily, is there any where an example, whence wee may take a patterne to our selves, what it behoves us now to doe, so fit for us to imitate, as the manner and method of this Psalme (nor, doe I faree digresse) of this place, in the Psalme, which we have now in hand. David doth two things (which the Hebrewes, especially doe elegantly expresse:) Hee mixes Tehilla and Tephilla: (that is) petitions with Thankesgivings: Prayers with a Song. As soone as He had sung His hymne, instantly, with one and the same breath, He said His prayers. For in the foregoing verse, He brought forth His song, He tuned His strings, takes His Lute, sings, thus, (as ye have heard) It is he who gives salvation to Kings: it is he who hath delivered David his servant from the perillous sword. And behold immediately (namely in the following verse) He layes His Lute out of His hand; He falls down on his knees, betakes Himselfe to his prayers: and there dictates a prayer for himselfe and for us, in these words. Save Me, and deliver Me, from the hand of strange children: whose mouth talketh of vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. This was the best way for Himselfe, and for his people, whilst Hee mixed these: and let us imitate his example. And first, as the ground of our duty requires, let us praise this Preserver of Kings, the Deliverer of his servant, our King. Let us praise Him with a new song, in singing, with stringed instruments, with Pipes, with wind instruments; with the best and choysest, that our breath, voyce, mind, hand, either hath, or can get. For even the best we have is due to this favour; is due to GOD, for this. Yea all we have, even the beſt things are leſſe than this favour; leſſe than He deſerves, for this. But yet, let us aſſay the beſt we can, to ſing ſomething. And herein let all that is within us, all our bones, confeſſe unto thee O Lord, that ſalvation is thine, that thou giveſt it, that thou giveſt it unto Kings, that thou haſt given it to our King: and in Him, to us all, even, to Three kingdomes, in one; to one in Three. And now, what can we ſay more unto thee? For thou Lord knoweſt thy ſervants, though we expreſſe our minds unworthily; yet inwardly in our minds, and inmoſt thoughts, wee are eternally bound unto thee, for this, the Kings ſalvation.

Pſal. 103. 1. & 35, 10.

2 Sam. 7. 20.

But yet, becauſe to have once delivered Him, it is not enough, nor twice, or thrice, nor ſeaven times (for as long as He lives, ſo long is there this danger, from thoſe perillous ones) becauſe all ſtrange children are not in a ſtrange Land. Some there are in ours, even with us: In regard all the ſons of Belial are not yet dead, at leaſt their father Belial is not dead: But is yet alive, yet he deviſes his miſchievous plots, no leſſe now, than in Davids time: No leſſe, than any time ſince David, till this day: No leſſe? Yea certainly, and more, becauſe he hath but a ſhort time: Let us alſo after the manner of our Pſalme, leaſt we ſtay too long in the ſong, hang up our Lutes a while, and lay them aſide for a ſeaſon; Yea let us alſo kneele downe, and adjoyne our prayers; Yea let us alſo after his example make publike prayers. No other, than he Himſelfe doth make, here, and in other Pſalmes. Here: Save him: Yea deliver him from ſtrange children; from their mouth, right hand, their perillous ſword. And out of other Pſalmes: * Save now I beſeech thee O Lord: O Lord I beſeech thee ſend now proſperity. O God ſend forth thy ſtrength; ſtabliſh this good worke that thou haſt wrought for us. * Shew thy marvellous loving kindneſſe: * Shew great deliverance to thy King: * Præcipe omnimodam ſalutem IACOBO. It is Thou, who haſt given ſalvation: It is Thou, who haſt delivered: Bee thou alwayes the ſame that Thou art. Alwayes deliver, alwayes ſave Him, alwayes continue theſe bleſſings unto us.

But for thoſe that remaine (for I muchfeare, that yet ſome remaine) ſtrange children, what elſe pray we, than as Cuſhi did, 2 Sam. 18. 32. For David alſo, when he, was then in like ſort delivered from the ſword of a Sonne, both his owne, and a ſtrange one, Abſalom: * The enemies of my Lord the King and all that riſe againſt him, to doe him hurt, let them bee as thoſe brothers, brothers in iniquity, miſchievous brothers. * So let all thine enemies periſh (the enemies of thine annointed) O Lord. But thoſe that love Thee, that love Him: bee as the Sunne when hee goeth forth in his might. That thereby as wee, ſo may our ſeed enjoy, who under the proſperous ſucceſſe of His Reigne, have poſſeſſed, thoſe eight earthly Beatitudes (in this Pſalme) the eight Felicities of this life; Yea that ninth alſo (worth all the reſt) of pure Religion: I pray GOD wee may long, and many yeares enjoy the ſame, under Him, in ſafety, in health, in long-life: (which this foure yeares wee have done) Yearly, paying our vowes, on this day, for this dayes ſake, for the ſalvation given on this day:

Alwayes inter-lacing this verſe; in the beginning, in the midſt, in the end: It is he who gives ſalvation unto Kings: It is hee who hath delivered IAMES his ſervant, from the perillous ſword.

To him, be honour, praiſe, glory, thankſgiving, for ever and ever. Amen.

A SERMON PREACHED AT S^t. MARIES HOSPITALL,

On the Tenth of Aprill, being Wedneſday in Eaſter-weeke, AN. DOM. MDLXXXVIII.

I. TIM. CHAP. VI. VER. XVII, XVIII, XIX.

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, that they truſt not in the uncertainty of riches, but in the living GOD, which giveth us all things to enjoy, plenteouſly;

That they doe good, be rich in good works, ready to diſtribute and to communicate:

Laying up in ſtore, for themſelves, a good foundation; againſt the time to come, that they may lay hold of Eternall life.

THE commendation of the Word of GOD is, that Every Scripture is profitable for our inſtruction. Every Scripture is profitable: yet, not every Scripture, in every place alike. For, the Place and Auditory have great intereſt in ſome Scripture; and a fit Scripture hath a greater and fuller force in his own Auditory. And GOD, in ſo excellent a manner hath ſorted His Scriptures, as there lie diſperſed in them, ſeverall Texts, ſeaſonable for each time, and pertinent to each place and degree; for Prince, for people; for rich, for poore; for each, his peculiar Scripture, in due time and place, to be reached them. 2 Tim. 3. 16.

This Scripture which I have read, whoſe it is, and to whom it ſpeaketh, is at the very reading ſtraight-way evident: as one ſaith of the XLI. Pſalme (Bleſſed is he that judgeth rightly of the poore) that it is Scriptura Pauperum, the Poore mans Scripture; So, of this, it may be rightly ſaid, that it is Scriptura Divitum, The Rich mans Scripture. And, if this be the Scripture for rich men; this place is the place of rich men: and therefore, if this Scripture have his place, no where ſo fit as in this place. For, no where is there ſuch ſtore of riches, by the [a] Harveſt of the water, which farre ſurpaſſeth the harveſt of the ground: No where are the like [b] Summes ſealed; No where do they [c] ſucke the abundance of the Sea, and the treaſures hid in the ſand, in like meaſure: No where are the [d] Merchants Noble-mens fellowes, and able to lend the Princes of the earth, ſo much, as here. Therefore when as I gave all diligence to ſpeake, not onely true things, but alſo ſeaſonable, both for this time and this place, I was directed to this Scripture. I need not to ſay much in this point; to ſhew, it concerneth this Audience. I will ſay, as the Fathers ſay, upon the like occaſion; Faxit Deus tam commoda, quàm eſt accommoda; I pray GOD make it as profitable, as it is pertinent; as fruitfull to you, as it is fit for you.

The Diviſion

I. 1. This whole Scripture hath his name given it even in the firſt word: Charge (ſaith he) the rich, &c. It is a Charge.

II. 2. It is directed to certaine men; namely, to the rich of this world.

III. 3. It conſiſteth of foure branches: Whereof two are negative, for the removing of two abuſes.

1. The firſt, Charge them, that they be not high-minded.

2. The ſecond, Charge them, that they truſt not in their riches.

The reaſon is added (which is a Maxime and a Ground in the Law of Nature, that we muſt truſt to no uncertaine thing:) Truſt not in the uncertainty of riches.

The other two are affirmative, concerning the true uſe of riches.

1. The firſt: Charge them that they truſt in GOD. The reaſon: Becauſe, Hee giveth them all things to enjoy plenteouſly.

2. The ſecond: Charge them that they do good; that is the ſubſtance: The quantity, that they be rich in good works: the quality, that they be ready to part with (and a ſpeciall kinde of doing good) to communicate, to benefit the publike.

And all theſe are one Charge. The reaſon of them all doth follow: Becauſe by this meanes they ſhall lay up in ſtore, and that for themſelves, a good foundation againſt the time to come. The end: that they may obtaine eternall life.

I. A Charge.

Præcipe divitibus: Charge the rich of this world, &c. Beloved, here is a Charge, a Præcipe, a Precept, or a Writ, directed unto Timothy, and to thoſe of his Commiſſion to the worlds end, to convent and call before him; He, the rich men of Epheſus; and we, the rich men of this Citie, and others of other places of the earth, and to give them a charge.

Charges (as you know) uſe to be given at Aſſiſes in Courts from the Bench. From thence is taken this judiciall terme διάταξις, as it appeareth, Acts 5. 28. Did not wee charge you ſtraightly? ſaith the Bench in the Conſiſtory judicially aſſembled. Whereby we are given to underſtand, that in ſuch aſſemblies as this is, the Lord of Heaven doth hold His Court, whereunto all men, and (they that of all men ſeeme leaſt) the rich and mighty of the world owe both ſuit and ſervice. For, as earthly Princes have their Lawes, their Commiſſions, their Miniſters of the Law, their Courts, and Court-dayes, for the maintenance of their peace: So hath the King of Kings His Lawes and Statutes, His Precepts and Commiſſions by authority delegate, Ite prædicate, Goe preach the Goſpell. His Counſellers at law, whom Auguſtine calleth Divini Iuris Conſultos; His Courts

Rom. 7.
Matth. 28. 19.

In

In occulto conſcientiæ, in the hid and ſecret part of the heart and conſcience, for the preſervation of His peace, which the world can neither give nor take away; to the end that none may offend, or be offended at it. Pſal 7.8. Pſal. 119.165.

This we learne. And with this we learne, all of us, ſo to conceive of, and to diſpoſe our ſelves to ſuch Meetings as this, as men that are to appeare in Court, before the Lord, there to receive a Charge; which when the Court is broken up, we muſt thinke of how to diſcharge.

In which point, great is the occaſion of complaint, which we muſt take up. For who is there, that with that awe and reverence ſtandeth before the LORD, at His charge-giving, that he receiveth a charge with, at an earthly Barre? Or with that care remembreth the LORD and His Charge, wherewith hee continually thinketh upon the Iudge and His charge? Truely, the LORD's Commiſſion is worthy to have as great reverence and regard attending on it, as the charge of any Prince; truly, it is. Weigh with your ſelfe: is not GODS charge with as much heed and reverence to be received, as an earthly Iudges? Abſit ut ſic (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) ſed utinam vel ſic: GOD forbid but with more heed and reverence; well, I would it had ſo much, in the meane time: And (which to our ſhame we muſt ſpeake) I would we could doe as much for the Bible as for the Statute-bookes; for heaven as for the earth; for the Immortall GOD, as for a mortall man. But whether we doe or no, yet as our SAVIOUR CHRIST ſaid of Saint Iohn Baptiſt, If yee will receive, this is that Eliah which was to come; ſo ſay I of this Precept, If yee will receive it, this is the Charge the LORD hath laid upon you. And this let me tell you farther; that it is ſuch a charge, as it concerneth your peace, the plentifull uſe of all your wealth and riches (in the ſecond Verſe of my Text, Which giveth us all things to enjoy plenteouſly, &c.) Which may move you. Or, if that will not, let me adde this farther; It is ſuch a Charge, as toucheth your eſtate in everlaſting life, the very laſt words of my text. That is, the well or evill hearing of this charg, is as much worth as your eternall life is worth. And therefore, He that hath eares to heare, let him heare. Mat. 11.14. Mat. 11.5.

It is a Charge then, and conſequently to be diſcharged. To be diſcharged? Where? Charge (ſaith he) the rich. He ſpeaketh to the Rich: you know your owne names; you know beſt, what thoſe rich men are. Shall I tell you? You are the rich, he ſpeaketh unto you. It is the faſhion and the fault of this world, to exerciſe their authority on them moſt, that need it leaſt: For, rich men, to feaſt them that leaſt need it; for mighty men, to preferre them that leaſt deſerve it. It is an old Simile, we have oft heard it; that The Lawes are like Cobwebs: that they hold faſt the ſilly flies, but the great Hornets breake thorow them, as oft as they liſt. And as there are Cob-web Lawes, which exempt mightie men; So, the ſame Corruption, that was the cauſe thereof, would alſo make Cobweb Divinity. For, notwithſtanding the Commiſſion runneth expreſly to the Rich, Charge, &c. Notwithſtanding they be in great danger, and that of many ſnares (as the Apoſtle ſaith in this Chapter) and therefore need it greatly: Yet (I know not how) it comes to paſſe, whether, becauſe they thinke themſelves too wiſe to receive a charge, any charge at all; or becauſe they thinke themſelves too good to receive it, at the hands of ſuch meane men, as we be (and, if they muſt needs be charged, they would be charged from the councell, from men more Noble and Honourable than themſelves) they would not gladly heare it, ſurely they would not; and becauſe they would not gladly heare it, we are not haſty they ſhould heare it. And great reaſon, why (as we thinke:) for, as it is true which is in the Pſal. 45.1.8 So long as they doe good to themſelves, men will ſpeake good of them: So, it is true backward too; So long as we ſpeake well of them, ſpare them, call not on them, they will doe good to us. And otherwiſe, if we ſpare them not, but proſecute our charge, then commeth Odi Micheam filium Iimlæ, I hate Micheas the ſonne of Iimlah. And who would willingly live in diſgrace, and ſuſtain, I ſay not the fierce wrath, but the heavy looke of a man in authority? That, makes the office of giving a charge, a cold office, and therefore to decay, and be ſhunned of all hands: that, makes us, if

2 To the Rich. Verſe 9. 1 Reg 22.8.

Ibidem. we cannot of the Eunuch learne to ſpeake good to the King; yet, to follow Balaks counſell at the leaſt, neither to bleſſe, nor curſe: that makes, that though for ſhame of the world, we will not ſet up for Vpholſters, and ſtufe cuſhions and pillowes, to lay them under their elbowes; yet, for feare of men, we ſhunne the Propet Eſay's occupation, to take the trumpet and diſeaſe them, leſt we loſe Balaks promotion, or Ahab's friendſhip; Eſau's portion, or I wot not what elſe, which we will not be without. In a word: this maketh, that Ionah was never more unwilling to deliver his meſſage at Ninive, than is Timothy, to give his Charge at Epheſus.

Num. 23. 25.

Eſay 58. 1.

The Apoſtle ſaw this, and what it would come to; and that you may ſee, that he ſaw it, you ſhall underſtand, he hath beſides this of yours, directed another Writ to us, Verſe 13. I charge thee, &c. running in very rigorous and peremptory termes, able to make any that ſhal conſider them aright, to tremble. Straightly commanding us, in the name of GOD the Father, and of the LORD IESUS CHRIST; laying before us the Paſsion of CHRIST, If there be any grace, and the day of Iudgement, and there be any feare, that we fulfill every part of our charge; and immediately after nameth this your charge for one. And knowing that we are given to feare Princes and Lords, he telleth us of the Prince of all Princes, and Lord of all Lords: Knowing, that we are given to feare and be dazled with the glittering of their pompe (which yet a man may abide to looke on) he telleth us of Him, whoſe brigheneſſe noe eye may once abide: Knowing, that we feare honour and power, though it laſt but for a ſmall time, He feareth us with one, whoſe honour and power laſteth for ever.

Verſe 13. Verſe 15.

Verſe 16.

Ibidem.

Beloved in the LORD, I beſeech you weigh but the place, weigh it, and have pitie on us. For, Nunquid nos recipimus, nunquid nos delere poſſumus? Si delemus, timemus deleri (ſaith Saint Auguſtine.) We writ not this charge, our pens dealt not in it; it was not we that writ it, and it is not wee that can blot it out, unleſſe we our ſelves will be blotted out of the booke of life.

Such is our charg as you ſee, to charg you: and, but for this charge, but that we are commanded, but that we are threatned, and that in ſo fearfull manner threatned we ſhould never doe it; of all men, we ſhould never deale with the Rich. For, who would not chooſe to hold his peace and to ſeeke his owne eaſe for his charge, many times chargeable, ſometimes dangerous, evermore unſavoury, but for this Proceſſe that is out againſt us? For my ſelf, I profeſſe, that in the ſame words that S. Auguſtine did ſometime: Ad iſtam otioſiſsimam ſecuritatem nemo me vinceret: In this diſcreet kinde of idleneſſe, no man ſhould goe beyond me, if S. Paul would be content; if order might be taken, to have theſe Verſes cancelled; if we could deliver (I ſay not yours, but) our own ſoules with ſilence. But, this ſtanding in force, Coget nos Paulus iſte, we are inforced by this Paul; His præcipio tibi, I charge you, drives us to our Præcipe illis, to charge them. We charge not you, but when we are charged our ſelves: we terrifie not you, but when we are firſt terrified our ſelves. And I would to GOD we knowing this terrour might both feare together this day, at the charge-giving, that ſo we might both rejoyce together in the great Day, at the charge-anſwering. This may ſerve; and I beſeech you, let it ſerve to ſtand betweene us and your diſpleaſure in this behalfe: and ſeeing the Commiſſion is penned to our hand, and that Rich men are in it nominatim (except the leven of affection ſhew it ſelfe too evidently in us) to thinke, we cannot otherwiſe doe; and that therefore it is, becauſe the commandement of our GOD is upon us, is heavy upon us. The charge it ſelfe followeth.

II.

The firſt point of the Charge: Not to be High-minded.

Charge the Rich, &c. This is the firſt point of the charge, that they be not high-minded, 1. Firſt, againſt that, which if it come with all the riches, yea, all the vertues in the world, it ſpoileth them all; that is, againſt Pride. 2. Secondly, againſt that which is the root of this bitter branch, and the prop and ſtay of an high raiſed minde, namely, a vaine truſt in our riches. Both theſe forbidden, by meanes of their uncertainty ἀδηλότης: ſuch, as a man cannot tell where to have them, therefore not to be boaſted of, therefore not to be truſted in.

Ever

Ever ſince our firſt Fathers, by infection tooke this morbum Satanicum, this Divelliſh diſeaſe (Pride) of the Divell; ſuch tinder is in our nature, that every little ſparke ſets us on fire: our nature hath growne ſo light, that every little thing puffeth us up, and ſets us aloft in our altitudes preſently. Yea, indeed, ſo light we are, that many times, when the gifts are low, yet for all that, the minde is as high, as the bramble: low in qualities (GOD knoweth) yet had his minde higher than the higheſt Cedar in Lebanon. Iudg.9.15. But if we be but of meane ſtature once, but a thought higher than others our fellowes, if never ſo little more in us, than is in our neighbours, preſently we fall into Simons caſe, we ſeeme to our ſelves as he did, to be τις μέγας, no doubt ſome goodly great thing. Acts 8.9. But if we come once to any growth indeed, then preſently our caſe is Haman's caſe: Who but he? Who was hee, that the King would honour more than him? Nay, who was there, that the King could honour, but he? He, and none but he. Eſter 6.6. Through this aptneſſe in us that we have to learne the Divels leſſon, the Divels Diſcite à me, for I am proud; (for ſo it is, by oppoſition of CHRIST's leſſons, which is Diſcite à me, quia mitis ſum, becauſe I am meeke and gentle;) Matth.11.29. we are readie to corrupt our ſelves in every good gift of GOD; in Wiſdome, in Manhood, in Law, in Divinity, in Learning, or Eloquence, every and each of theſe ſerveth for a ſtirrup to mount us aloft in our owne conceits. For, where each of the former hath (as it were) his owne circuit (as Wiſdome ruleth in Counſell; Manhood in the Field; Law in the Iudgement-ſeat; Divinity in the Pulpit; Learning in the Schooles and Eloquence in Perſwaſion:) only Riches ruleth without limitation: Riches ruleth with them all, ruleth them all, and over-ruleth them all: his Circuit is the whole world. For which cauſe, ſome thinke, when he ſaith Charge the rich, he preſently addeth, of this world, becauſe this world ſtandeth altogether at the devotion of riches; and he may doe what he will in this world, that is rich in this world. So ſaid the Wiſe-man long agoe, Pecuniæ obediunt omnia: all things anſwere Money; Eccl.10.19. Money maſtereth all things; they all anſwer at his call, and they all obey at his commandement. Let us goe lightly over them all; you ſhall ſee, that they all elſe have their ſeverall predicaments to bound them, and that Riches is onely the tranſcendent of this world.

Wiſdome, ruleth in Counſell; ſo doe Riches: for we ſee, in the Court of the great King Artaxerxes, there were Counſellours, whoſe wiſedome was to be commanded by riches, even to hinder a publike benefit, the building of the Temple: Ezra 4.5. Manhood ruleth in the warre; ſo doe Riches: Experience teacheth us, it is ſo: It is ſaid, it was they, that wan Deventer; and that it was they, and none but they, that drave the Switzers out of France, and that without ſtroke ſtrucken. Law governeth in the Seat of Iuſtice; ſo doe Riches: and oftentimes they turn juſtice it ſelfe into wormewood, by a corrupt Sentence; but more often doth it turne juſtice into vineger, by long ſtanding, and infinite delayes, yer Sentence will come forth. Divinity ruleth in the Church and Pulpit; ſo doe Riches: For, with a ſett of ſilver peeces (ſaith Auguſtine) they brough Concionatorem mundi, the Preacher of the world IESUS CHRIST to the Barre, and the Diſciple is not above his Maſter. Learning ruleth in the Schooles; ſo doe Riches: And indeed, there, Money ſetteth all to ſchoole. For, (to ſay the truth) Riches have ſo ordered the matter there, as Learning is now but the Vſher; Money he is the Maſter: the Chaire it ſelfe, and the diſpoſing of the Chaire, is his too. Eloquence ruleth in perſwaſion; and ſo doe riches: when Tertullus had laboured a goodly flowing oration againſt Paul, Felix looked, that another, a greater Acts.24.27. Orator ſhould have ſpoken for him, namely, that Something ſhould have beene given him: and if that Orator had ſpoken his ſhort pithy ſentence, Tantum dabo, Tertullus his oration had beene cleane daſht Tantum dabo is a ſtrange peece of Rhetorike: Deviſe as cunningly, pen as curiouſly as you can, it overthrowes all. Tantùm valent quatuor ſyllabæ, ſuch force is there in foure ſyllables. Though indeed, ſome thinke (it being ſo unreaſonable ſhort as it is, but two words) that it cannot be the Rhetorike of it, that worketh theſe ſtrang effects, but that there is ſome ſorcery or witchcraft in them, in Tantum dabo. And ſurely a great Sorcerer (Simon Magus) uſed them to Peter:

and it may well be ſo, for all eſtates are ſhrewdly bewitched by them. I muſt end:
Acts 8.19. for it is a world to thinke and tell, what the Rich of the world, may doe in the world.

So then, Riches ſeeing they may doe ſo much, it is no marvell though they be much ſet by. Et divites cum habeant quæ magni fiunt ab omnibus, quid mirum, ſi ab omnibus ipſi magni fiant; et cum magni fiant ab omnibus, quid mirum ſi & à ſe? Rich men having that which is much ſet by, no marvell though of all men they be much ſet by; and if all other men ſet much by them, no marvell, if they ſet much by themſelves; and to ſet much by a mans ſelfe, that is to be high-minded. It is our owne Proverbe in our owne tongue: As riſeth our good, ſo riſeth our bloud. And Saint Auguſtine ſaith, that Each fruit, by kinde, hath his worme breeding in it: as the Peare, his; the Nut, his; and the Beane, his: So, Riches have their worme, Et vermis divitiarum, Superbia; and the worme of riches, is Pride. Whereof we ſee a plaine proofe in Saul:
2 Sam 9.21. Who, while he was in a poore eſtate, and his boy and he could not make five pence betweene them, was as the Scripture ſaith, low in his owne eyes: after, when the wealth and pleaſant things of Iſrael were his, he grew ſo ſterne, as he forgate himſelfe, his friends, and GOD too: and at every word that liketh him not, was ready to runne David, Ionathan, and every owne thorow with his javeline. It is very certaine; where riches are, there is great danger of pride. I deſire you to thinke, there is ſo, and not to put me to juſtifie GODS wiſdome herein, in perſwading and proving, that this
Pſal.62.10. charge is needfull for you that be rich; that it was needfull for the Prophet, to preach under the Law, If riches encreaſe, ſet not your heart on the top of them, Let not that Prov.30.9. riſe as they riſe: Nor for the other Prophet, Give me not riches, leſt I wax proud: Nor for the Apoſtle Paul under the Goſpell, to ſay: Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high minded. I beſeech you, Honour GOD, and eaſe me ſo much as to thinke, there was high cauſe, it ſhould be in charge; and that, if a more principall ſinne had beene reigning in the rich, this ſinne ſhould not have had the principall place, as it hath.

How then? what, are you able to charge any here? will ſome ſay: It is not the manner of our Court, nor of any Court, that I know. To us it belongeth only to deliver the Charge, and to exhort, that if none be proud, none would be; and if any be; they would be leſſe: and, if any be not humble, they would be; and if any be humble, they would be more. You that are the Court, your part is to enquire, and to preſent, and to endict; and that, every one in his owne conſcience, as in the preſence of GOD, unto Him to approve your innocencie, or of Him to ſue for your pardon. You finde none (you will ſay:) I would to GOD you might not.

When a Iudge at an Aſſiſe, giveth his charge concerning treaſon and ſuch like offences, I dare ſay, he would with all his heart, that his charge might be in vaine, rather than any Traytour or Offender ſhould be found. A Phyſitian, when he hath tempered & prepared his potion, if there be in him the heart of a true Phyſitian, deſireth (I know) that the potion might be caſt downe the kennell, ſo that the patient might recover without it: So, truly, it is the deſire of my heart (CHRIST Hee knoweth) that this charge may not finde one man guilty amongſt all theſe hearers; amongſt ſo many men, not one highminded man. I wiſh, it might be in vaine. The beſt Seſſions, and Potions, and Sermons are thoſe, which are in vaine: I ſay not, in vaine, if there be cauſe of reproofe and no amends. But, if there be no cauſe, and ſo it be in vaine, I joy therein and will joy. But, if it be farre unlikely, amongſt ſo great riches as is here, to finde no pride at all; very unlikely: then, heare the charge and preſent your ſelves and finde your ſelves guilty here iu our Office, this day, while you may finde grace, leſt you be tried and found ſo, in that day, when there ſhall be no hope of grace, but onely a fearefull expectation of judgement.

Which that you may doe the better, ſo many as GOD ſhall make willing (as, ſome (I hope) He doth) I will informe you, how to try your ſelves; referring you, to the ſeverall branches, in our Statutes, in the High Court of Parliament in Heaven: laying them out unto you, as I finde them in the Records of the HOLY GHOST.

The

The points are three in number. First, if the mind of any man be ſo exalted, that he looketh downe on his brethren, as if he ſtood on the top of a Leads, and not on the ſame ground they doe, that man is high-minded. Saint Auguſtine ſaith well: Excipe pompatica hæc & volatica, they are the ſame that you are. They have not veſtem communem, the ſame coat; but they have cutem communem, the ſame skin: and within a few yeares, when you die, if a man come with a loyner and meaſure all that you carry with you, they ſhall carie away with them as much: and within a few yeares after, a man ſhall not be able to diſcerne between the ſhoulder-blade of one of them, and one of you. Therefore no cauſe, why you ſhould incedere inflati, inſericati, and from a high minde, bewraying it ſelfe by a high looke, contemne them, as many of you do. I ſay then, if any of you be a child of Anak, and look downe ſo upon another, as in his ſight his brethren ſeeme as graſhoppers; [1] Whether it appeare in the countenance, in drawing up his eye-browes, in a diſdainfull and ſcornefull eye; ſuch an one as David (though he found no penall ſtatute to puniſh it) could never abide (and David was a man after GOD's own heart, and therefore neither can GOD abide it:) [2] Or whether it appeare in a proud kinde of Dialect of ſpeech, as was that of Saul's; Vbi nunc eſt iſte filius Iſhai? Where is this Sonne of Iſhai? that he come to the Phariſees Non ſum ſicut: [3] Or whether it be in the courſe of their life, that they be like to the great fiſhes (to Pikes) that thinke, all the little fiſhes in the ſtreame were made for them to feed on. So that, it appeareth, they care not, what miſery, what beggery, what ſlavery they bring all men to, ſo they may ſoke in the broth of the cauldron, and welter in their wealth and pleaſure: who are in their ſtreets and pariſhes as Lions, a great deale more feared then beloved; as implacable as Lamech to beare any injury, and will have, for one drop of bloud, no leſſe than a mans life: what ſpeak I of bearing injury? which will doe injury, and that for no other reaſon but this, thus it muſt be, for Hophni will have it not thus, but thus; and except they may doe thus (what they will, to whom they will, when and how they will) forſooth they do not governe, their authority is nothing: in this ſort, over-bearing all things with their countenance and wealth, and whoſoever ſtandeth but up, drawing him before the Iudgment-ſeats, and wearying him out with Law. Theſe men who do thus, from a high in-bearing of the head, in phraſe of ſpeech, and in the order, or rather diſorder of their dealing: over-looke, over-crow, and over-beare their brethren of meane eſtate, it is certaine, they be high-minded: Enquire and looke, whether any be ſo.

Secondly, if any minde climbe ſo high, that the boughes will beare him no longer, by exalting himſelfe above either his ability, condition, or calling (a fault, which hath like to coſt our times deare;) that mans footing will faile him, he will downe; he and his minde are too high a great deale. The late treaſons and conſpiracies came from ſuch kinde of mindes. For, when the mindes of men will over-reach their abilities, what muſt be the end, but (as we have ſeene of late) to prove Traitors? Why? becauſe they have ſwolne themſelves out of their skin. Why ſo? becauſe they had laſhed on more on their pleaſure than they had. For, ſo doing, when they had over-reached themſelves, they became φρυατεῖς, they muſt take ſome heady enterpriſe in hand, What is that? to become φροδόται; that, ſeeing their credit is decayed in this State, they may ſet up a new; and that is, by over-turning the old.

2 Tim. 3.4.

And not only this paſſing the ability is dangerous to the over-turning of a Common-wealth; but the paſſing of a mans condition too: and tendeth to the impoveriſhing, and, at laſt, to the overthrow of the eſtate alſo. There is yet of this feather another kinde of exalting our ſelves above that we ought, much to be complained of in theſe dayes. S. Paul calleth it a ſtretching of our

Which breaking compaſſe and out-reaching is (no doubt) the cauſe of theſe lamentable rents and ruptures in the Lord's Net, in our dayes. For, Only by pride commeth contention, ſaith the Wiſe-man. Which point I wiſh might be looked upon and amended. Sure, it will marre all in the end.

3 Thirdly, if any man lift up himſelfe too high, any of both theſe wayes, GOD hath taken order to abate him and take him downe: for, He hath appointed His Prophets,

Whoſoever is in any of theſe mens caſes, is in the caſe of a high-minded man; and that of the higheſt degree: for they lift themſelves up, not againſt earth and man, but againſt heaven and GOD Himſelf. O beloved, you that be in wealth and authority, love and reverence the Word of GOD. It is the root that doth doth beare you; It is the Majeſtie thereof that keepeth you in your thrones, and maketh you be, that you are: But for Ego dixi Dii eſtis (a parcell-commiſſion out of this commiſſion of ours) the madneſſe of the people would beare no government, but run head-long, and overthrow all Chaires of Eſtate, and breake in peeces all the Swords and Scepters in the world; which you of this City had a ſtrange experience of in Iack Straw and his meiny, and keep a memoriall of it in your City Scutcheon, how all had gone downe if this Word had not held all up. And therefore, honour it I beſeech you; I ſay, honour it. For, when the higheſt of you your ſelves, which are but graſſe, and your Lordſhips glory and Worſhip, which is the flower of this graſſe, ſhall periſh and paſſe away, this Word ſhall continue for ever. And if you receive it now, with due regard and reverence, it will make you alſo to continue for ever. Pſal. 82. 5. Eſay. 40. 8.

This is your Charge, touching the firſt branch. I beſeech you, enquire of it, whether there be any guilty in theſe points: And if there be, ſuffer us to doe our Office, that is, to humble you, or elſe ſure the LORD will doe His, that is, pull downe riches, and minde, and man, and all. Patimini falcem occantem, ne patiamini ſecurim extirpantem. GOD will not ſuffer it certainly: He would not ſuffer it in a [q] King; He would not ſuffer it in an [r] Angell; He cannot beare it, to riſe, in an [ſ] Apoſtle, for the greatneſſe of revelations; therefore, Hee will not beare it in any man for any cauſe whatſoever. Let this be the concluſion of this point. [q] Deut 17. 20. [r] Iude 6. [ſ] 1 Cor. 12. 7.

2 The ſecond Point. Not to truſt in uncertaine riches.

We ſhall never have pride well pluckt up, ſo long as the root of it ſtickes ſtill; that is, a Vaine confidence in riches. For if we doubted them, we would not truſt in them, we would not boaſt of them. But, we truſt in them, and that inordinately, as counter-meanes againſt GOD: not ſubordinately, as under-meanes unto GOD: and in ſo doing, we tranſlate GOD's Office unto us, and our homage unto Him, to a plate of ſilver, or a wedge of gold. And that is (ſaith Saint Paul) the worldly mans idolatry. And indeed there is little difference: It is but turning the ſentence of the Prophet David; of Idolaters, to ſay thus, Their Idols are ſilver and gold; and of the Worldly men, thus, Silver and gold are their Idols. Coloſſ 3. 5. Pſa. 135. 15.

We may examine our ſelves, in this point of the charge; namely, whether our truſt be in our riches, by two waies: For it being a received ground; that our ſtrength is our confidence; where we take our chiefe ſtrength to lye, that is it certainly, which we truſt to. Now, what that is, wee ſhall ſoone finde. 1 If wee can certifie our ſelves, in our need, among all meanes, what doth firſt offer it ſelfe in our intention. 2 And againe, when all our meanes forſake us and faile us, what is our laſt ſuccour in execution. Prov. 24. 23.

By courſe of nature, every thing, when it is aſſaulted, ever rowzeth that part firſt, wherein his principall ſtrength lyeth: if it be in his tuskes, them; or in his hornes, or whatſoever it is, that. To a poore man (if he have a cauſe in hand) there is nothing commeth to minde but GOD and innocencie, and the goodneſſe of his cauſe: there is his ſtrength, and that is the Horne of his ſalvation. But, the rich, (ſaith Amos) hath gotten him Hornes in his owne ſtrength; and not iron-hornes, as were Zidkia's, but golden-hornes, with which he is able to puſh any cauſe, till he have conſumed it. For, indeed, if he be to undertake ought, the firſt thing that commeth to his head is, Thus much will diſpatch it: Such a gift will I aſſure ſuch a man', and ſuch a gift will ſtop ſuch a mans mouth, and ſo it is done: Neither is GOD in all his thoughts. Amos. 6. 13.

Tell mee then, in your affaires, what commeth firſt to minde? nay, tell your ſelves what it is. Aures omnium pulſo (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) conſcientias ſingulorum convenio: Tell your ſelves, what it is; and by this, trie and know, wherein your truſt is; whether this charge meet with you or no, whether your riches be the ſtrength of your confidence.

Now lightly, what we firſt thinke of, that we laſt fly to. It is ſo. Salomon ſaw it in his time and ſaid, The rich mans wealth is his caſtle: that even as men, when they are foiled in the field, and beaten from the City-walls, fly laſt of all into the Caſtle, and there thinke themſelves ſafe, as in their place of chiefe ſtrength; So, it falleth out with the Prov. 8. 11.

the rich of this world, in any of their cauſes; when juſtice, and equity, and truth, and right, and GOD, and good men, and a good conſcience and all forſake them (and yet yeeld they will not, in the pride of an high mind) they know, when all other have forſaken them, their purſe will ſtand to them: and thither, as to their ſtrongeſt ſalvation they fly, when nothing elſe comforts them. So that, when they cannot in heart ſay to GOD, Thou art my hope, their matter is ſo bad they doe ſay ('tis he, in Iob) to their Wedge of gold, Well yet, thou art my confidence. And ſurely, he that deviſeth or purſueth an unrighteous cauſe, becauſe his hand hath ſtrenght, that man may be arraigned of the point. As againe if any ſay, and ſay within truly (dic, dic, ſed intus dic, ſaith Auguſtine) with all my riches, with all my friends, and all the meanes I can make, I can doe nothing againſt the truth: when a man is ſo rich, that he is poore to doe evill; ſo wiſe, that he is a foole to doe evill; ſo truſteth in his riches, that he dare not take an evill cauſe in hand, no more than the pooreſt commoner in the Citie; I dare diſcharge that man the Court for this point. Oh beloved, thinke of theſe things; and ſecretly betwixt GOD and you, uſe your ſelfe to this examination: Sure if GOD be GOD, if there be any truth in Him, you ſhall finde grace, peace and comfort in it at the laſt.

The Reaſon. The Vncertaintie of Riches.

Charge the rich, that they be not high minded, nor truſt, &c. And, why not high minded? and why not truſt? Incluſively the reaſon is added in theſe words, becauſe of the uncertaintie of riches. It is Pauls reaſon; and it is Salomons too, who knew better what belonged to riches, than Paul or any other. Travell not too greedily for them, beſtow not all thy wiſdome upon them (ſaith he:) for they have the wings of an Eagle, and will take their flight of a ſudden. Such is Saint Paul's word here, the very ſame. We behold them, we hold them, they are here with us; let us but turne our ſelves aſide a little, and looke for them, and they are gone. It is, as if he ſhould ſay; Indeed if we could pinion the wings of our riches, if we could naile them down faſt to us, then were there ſome ſhew or ſhadow, why we ſhould repoſe truſt in them: But it is otherwiſe; they are exceeding uncertaine; even the harveſt of the water much above all trades. Yea, I take it, the Merchants confeſſe ſo much, before they be aware: For; by this, he claimeth to be allowed an extraordinary gaine, becauſe he ventureth his trafficke as uncertain, and that he is driven to hazard and put in a venture his goods continually, and many times his perſon, and (to make him a right venture) many times his ſoule too. And, if they be not uncertaine, how commeth it then to paſſe, the rich men themſelves are ſo uncertaine? that is, that they that were but the other day a little before, of principall credit, within a while after, and a very ſhort while after, their bils will not be taken? And if riches be not uncertaine; what need they upon a night of foule weather, ſuch Aßurances upon the Exchange? What need the Merchants have ſecurity one of another? What need they, to have their eſtates ſure, and ſo good? ſuch aſſurances and conveyances, ſo ſtrong, yea, more ſtrong than the wit of man can deviſe, if both riches and men be not uncertaine? I know, they pretend the mans mortality: but, they know, they meane many times, the mortalitie of his riches rather than himſelfe; or at the leaſt, of the one as of the other. I will be iudged by themſelves.

Prov. 23. 5.

Prov. 27. 24.

I would have you marke Saint Paul's manner of ſpeech. Before, he called them, not rich, barely; but, with an addition, the rich of this world. Sure, it is thought of divers of the beſt Writers both old and new (I name of the new, M. Calvin; and of the old, Saint Auguſtine) that this addition is a diminution; and that it is (as it were) a barre, in the Armes of all rich men; and that; even by that word, hee meanes to enthwite them, & (as I may ſay) to cry them down; ſo, to make an entrance to his charg that men ſhould not be too proud of them. For, being of this world, they muſt needs ſavour of the ſoile; be as this world is (that is) tranſitory, fickle and deceitfull. And now, he comes in with riches againe; and will not put it alone, but calleth it the uncertaintie of riches. And I ſee, it is the Holy Ghoſt's faſhion, not in this place onely, but all along the Scriptures, to ſpeake nothing magnificially of them, as the manner of the world world is to doe. Saint Paul calleth them not rich, but the rich of this world: Saint Iohn likewiſe calleth them not goods ſimply, but this worlds goods. Saint Paul calleth them not riches, but the uncertainty of riches: Our SAVIOUR CHRIST calleth them not riches, but the deceitfulneſſe of riches. So David: the plate and arras and rich furniture of a wealthy man, calleth it of purpoſe, the glory of a mans houſe; not his glory, but the glory of his houſe; (that is Saint Chryſoſtomes not:) And Salomon calleth them (as they be indeed) GODS bleſsings of His left hand. For, immortality, eternall life, that onely is the bleſsing of His right hand. All, to learne us, not to boaſt our ſelves, to ſtay our ſelves, or (as CHRIST calleth it) to rejoyce (I ſay not, as He to His Diſciples, that a few devils, but) that a few mineralls be ſubject unto us; but that, by our humbleneſſe of minde, truſt in GOD, dealing truly with all, and mercifully with our poore brethren, we are aſſured, that our names are written in the booke of life. This then is the uncertainty of our riches; becauſe, they are the riches of this world (the world, and they, are all within the compaſſe of our Text) that is, you muſt leave them to the world, they are none of yours. Denique ſi veſtra ſint (ſaith Gregorie) tollite ea vobiscum, If they be yours, why doe you not take them with you, when you goe? By leaving them behind you to the world, you confeſſe, they are not yours, but the worlds. But, indeed, they are the riches of this world; Hîc enim acquiruntur, hîc vel amittuntur, vel dimittuntur: here you get them, and here you may loſe them; here you get them, and here you muſt leave them. And in this disjunctive, you have the certainty of riches: the very certainty is loſing or leaving, that is, forgoing; ſo, the very certainty is an uncertainty. Leave them, or loſe them we muſt: leave them when we die, or loſe them while we live. One end they muſt have, finem tuum, or finem ſuum; thy end, or their owne end. You muſt either leave them when you die, or they will leave you while you live, this is certaine: but, whether you, them; or, they you; this is uncertaine. Iob tarried himſelfe, his riches went: The Rich mans riches tarried, but he himſelfe went. One of theſe ſhall be, we know; but which of them ſhall be, or when, or how, or how ſoone it ſhall be, that we know not. Iob 1.21. Luke 12.

Let us briefly conſider this double uncertainty.

1. Of our riches ſtaying with us firſt.

2. And then, of our ſtaying with them.

1. In 2 Cor. 11.26. when as he would glory, he ſaith, He will glory in his infirmitie: which when he would recount, as a principall part of it, he reckoneth, that he had beene in perills of waters, in perills of robbers, of his owne nation, among the Gentiles, in the city, in the wilderneſſe, in the ſea, and among ſt falſe brethren. If this were frailtie, then (ſure) fraile and weake are riches. And ſure, if the rich will glory, they muſt glory with Saint Paul: for, they are in all, and in more and greater than the Apoſtle ever was. He was in perills of water; they in perill both of water and fire: He was in perill of robbers, they in perill of Rovers by ſea, and Robbers by land: He in perill of his owne nation; they are in perill of our owne nation, and of other nations: both removed as the Moore and Spaniards, and neere home, as the Dunkirker: He in perill of ſtrangers; they, hot of ſtrangers onely, but of their owne houſhold, their ſervants and factours: He in perill of the Sea; they, both of the tempeſt at the Sea, and the Publican on land: He in the perill of the wilderneſſe, that is, of wild beaſts; they, not onely of the wild beaſt called the Sycophant, but of the tame beaſt too, called the flatterer: He in danger of falſe brethren; and ſo are they in perill of certaine falſe brethren called wilfull Bankrupts, and of certaine other called deceitfull lawyers; for the one, their debts; for the other, their eſtates and deeds can have no certainty.

Muſculus on that place (where CHRIST willeth Our treaſure to be laid, where no mothes come) ſaith, his Auditors did laugh in conceit, at CHRIST, that frayed them with moths, their maids ſhould deal with the moths well enough: (Saith he) you thinke; he meant the ſilly poore flies: Tuſh you are deceived, what ſay you to Tineæ urbanæ, evill Creditors? You muſt needs credit, you can have no vent, for your merchandize: and what ſay you to a ſecond kind of moths, called Tineæ forenſes, Weſtminſter-Hall-moths? (for I truſt, I may ſpeake of the corrupt Lawyer, with the favour Mat. 6. of the better ſort) you muſt needs credit them with your evidence and eſtates; it is not certaine what wealth theſe two moths doe waſte, and in what uncertainty mens riches are, by their meanes.

Theſe are out of Saint Paules perils: he was free from theſe moths. But many rich men might be brought forth in a faire day and ſhewed, whoſe ſubſtance hath by theſe moths beene fretted to peeces. Thus little certainty have we, of their ſtaying with us.

2 But grant, Let it be that they were certaine: yet, except we our ſelves were ſure to ſtay with them alſo, it is as good as nothing. That there may be a certainty betweene two things (as a man, and his wealth) to continue together, they muſt either of them be ſure: elſe, if the one faile, where is the others aſſurance? Grant then, we were certaine of them, we are not certaine of our ſelves; and in very deed, we are no more certaine of them, than they of us. Leaſes of them we have for ſixtie yeares; but they have no leaſes of us for three houres: If they might take leaſes of us too, it were ſomewhat. Now, when the Leaſe is taken, nay when the Fee-ſimple is bought, and the houſe, and the ware-houſe filled, and the purſe too, if GOD ſay but Hâc nocte, it daſhes all. For which cauſe; I thinke, Saint Iames (ſpeaking in two ſeverall places of our life and our riches;) our riches he compareth to the graſſe, of no certainty; it will either wither or be pluckt up ſhortly: but this is a great certainty in reſpect of that of our life, which he reſembleth to a vapour, which we ſee now, and by and by we turne us to looke for it, and it is vaniſhed away. To us then that are uncertaine of our ſelves, they cannot be but riches of uncertainty.

Luke 12. Iames 1. 11.

But, let us admit, we were ſure of both theſe, what is it to have riches and not to enjoy them? And the enjoying of riches dependeth upon two *uncertainetie*s more.

1 Firſt, a mans uncertainty, which hangeth upon the favour of a Prince; which is many times wavering and uncertain. I know not, whether I ſhall make you underſtand it, becauſe of the want of examples in our time, by meanes of the mild & bleſſed government that we live in. For, a practice it hath been, and many Records doe our Chronicles affoord, in the daies of ſome Princes of this Realme, when a man was growen to wealth, to picke holes and make quarrels againſt him, and ſo feaze his goods into the Princes hand: to uſe wealthy Citizens as ſpunges, to roule them up and downe in moiſture till they be full, and then to wring all out of them again. God wot, an eaſie matter it is, if a Prince ſtand ſo minded, to find matter of diſgrace againſt a ſubject of ſome wealth; & then he might fare never a whit the better for his wealth, for fine and forfeiture whereof, rather than any fault elſe, the buſineſſe it ſelfe was made againſt him. We cannot tell, what this meaneth; we may thanke the gracious governement, we live under; ſo that, I thinke, I doe ſcarce ſpeake ſo that I am underſtood. But, ſuch a thing there is, ſuch an uncertainty belonging to riches, whether we conceive it or no,

2 Againe, if the times which we live in, happen to prove unquiet and troubleſome, then againe comes another uncertainty. For, the daies being evill and dangerous, a man can have joy, and indeed no certainty neither of riches. For, if there fall an invaſion, or garboile into the State by forren or Civill warre, then (if ever) is Iobs ſimile verified, that Riches are like a cobweb; that which a man ſhall be weaving all his life long, with great adoe and much travell, there comes me a ſouldier, a barbarous ſouldier, with his broome, & in the turning of a hand ſweeps it cleane away. How many in our neighbour countries, during their miſerie have taſted this uncertainty? How many have gone to bed rich, and riſen poore men in the morning? Great troubles are looked for, and great troubles there muſt be and will be, doubtles. The world now knoweth his Maſters will and doth it not, it muſt therefore certainly be beaten with many ſtripes, with many more than the ignorant world was. And therefore this word [of this world] in this Text, we may with a Emphaſis pronounce and ſay, Charge them that are rich in this world, that they truſt not in the uncertainty of riches.

Iob 8. 14.

There

There are but three things in riches : 1 The poſſeſsing, 2 the enjoying, 3 and laſt the conveighing of them. Little aſſurance is there in the two former, and what ſhall we ſay of the conveighance? If our pompe cannot deſcend with us; well yet, if wee were certaine to whom we ſhould leave them, ſomewhat it were for the certainty of them. Theſe conſiderations oft had in mind would looſen both our aſſurance in, and our liking of them.

What for the conveighance: doe we not ſee daily that men make heritages, but God makes heires; that many ſonnes roſt not that, their fathers got in hunting? that they that have been in the chiefe account for their wealth, their ſons ſhould be driven even to flatter the poore, and have nothing in their hands, no not bread? that never ſnow in the Sun melted faſter, than doe ſome mens riches as ſoone as they be gone. Iob 20.10.

Theſe things are in the eyes of the whole world. O beloved, theſe are the judgements of GOD. Deceive not your ſelves with vaine words: ſay not in your hearts, this is the way of the world, ſome muſt get and ſome muſt loſe. No, no: it is not the way of the world, it is the way of GODS judgement. For, to the reaſon of man nothing can be alledged, but that conſider the infinite number of infinite rich men in this place, the poſterity of them theſe many yeares ſhould by this time have filled the whole land, were it much bigger than it is, with their progeny, even with divers both Worſhipfull and Honourable Families from them deſcended: and it is well known, it is otherwiſe, that there is ſcarce a handfull in compariſon. This is not the way of the world; for we ſee divers Houſes of divers lines remaine to this day in continuance of the ſame wealth and worſhip which they had five hundred yeares ſince. It is not therefore the way of the world; ſay not it is ſo; but it is a heavy judgement from the Lord. And theſe uncertainties, namely this laſt, came upon ſome of them for their wicked and deceitfull getting of them: upon ſome of them, for their proud and riotous abuſing them: upo n ſome of them, for their wretched and covetous retaining them. And except ye now heare this the Lords Charge, looke unto it, howſoever you wraſtle out with the uncertainties your ſelves; aſſuredly this laſt uncertainty remaineth for your children. The Lords hand is not ſhortned. I ſhall never get out of this point, if I breake not from it. Eſay. 59.1.

Theſe are but three fruits of all your getting, 1 the tenure: 2 the fruition: 3 the parting with. See, whether the Lord hath not laid one uncertainty on them all. 1 Vncertainty, in their tarrying with us, and uncertainty, in our tarrying with them. 2 Vncertainty of enjoying, by reaſon of the danger of the time; 3 Vncertainty of our leaving them, by reaſon of the danger of our childrens ſcattering. The eſtate in them, the enjoying of them, the departing with them, all being uncertaine, ſo many uncertainties, might not Saint Paul truly ſay, the uncertainty of riches?

There is yet one behind, worſe than them all. I will adde no m ore but that: and that is, that our riches and our worſhip they ſhall leave us, becauſe they be uncertaine; but the pride of our minds, and the vaine truſt in them, them we ſhall be certaine of, they ſhall not leave us. And this is grave jugum, a heavy miſery upon mankind: The Goods, the Lordſhips, the Offices that they got, them they ſhall leave here: the ſin, that they commit in getting and enjoying them, they ſhall not leave behind them for their hearts, but that ſhall cleave faſt unto them. This is a certainty you will ſay: it is indeed a certainty of ſinne, but therefore an uncertainty of the ſoule: ſo doth Iob reckon it amongſt the uncertainties of riches. For, what hope hath the hypocrite when he hath heaped up riches, if God take away his ſoule? where is his hope or his truſt then? Never will they ſhew themſelves in their owne kinde, to be a ſtaffe of reed, as then: both deceiving them which leane on them, and beſides going into their ſoules and piercing them. For, very ſure it is, many of that calling die in great uncertainty this way; wiſhing, they had never ſeene that wealth which they have ſeene, that ſo they might not ſee that ſin which they then ſee. Yea ſome of them (I ſpeake it of mine owne knowledge abroad) wiſh, they had never come further than the ſhovel and the Spade: crying out at the houre of death, both of the uncertainty of their riches, and of the uncertainty of the eſtate of their ſoules too. Iob 27.8. Eſay 36.6.

This point, this, is a point of ſpeciall importance, to be ſpoken of by me, and to be thought of by you. I would God, you would take it manie times (when GOD ſhall move you) into ſad conſideration. With great affection, and no leſſe great truth (ſaid Chryſoſtome) that heaven and earth, and all the creatures in them, if they had teares, they would ſhed them in great abundance, to ſee a great many of us, ſo careleſſe in this point as we be. It is the hand of the LORD, and it is his gracious hand, (if we could ſee it) that He in this manner, maketh the world to totter and reele under us; that we might not ſtay and reſt upon it, where certainty and ſtedfaſtneſſe we ſhall never find; but in Him above, where onely they are to be found. For, if riches, being ſo brittle and unſteadie as they be, men are ſo mad upon them; if GOD had ſetled them in any certainty, what would they have done? What poore mans right, what widowes copy, or what Orphanes legacie ſhould have beene free from us.

The III. point Truſt in God.

Well then: if riches be uncertaine, whereto ſhall we truſt? If not in them, where then? It is the third point, Charge them that be rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, neither truſt in the uncertainty of riches: but that they truſt in GOD. It is the third point of the Charge, in generall, and the firſt of the affirmative part: and containeth, Partly a Homage to be done for our riches, to GOD, and that is, truſt in Him: And partlie a rent-charge laid upon our riches, which is doing good. And indeed, no other than David had ſaid before, truſt in the Lord and be doing good.

Pro. 37. 5.

Saint Paul will batter downe, and lay flat our Caſtle, but he will erect us another, wherin we may truſt. Yea indeed, ſo as Salomon did before, ſetteth up a Tower againſt the Tower; The Tower of the righteous, which is the Name of the Lord, againſt the Rich mans Tower, which is as you have heard before, his riches. Inſtead of the Worldlings faith, which is to make money an article of his faith; teacheth us the faith of a Chriſtian, which is, to vouchſafe none but GOD that honour. Even ſo doth the Apoſtle here; and that, for great reaſon. Nam qui vult ſecurus ſpirare, ſperet in Eo, qui non poteſt perire, He that will truſt, and be ſecure in His truſt, let him truſt in Him, who Himſelfe never failed, and never failed thoſe, that put their truſt in Him: in whom is no uncertainty, no not ſo much as any ſhadow of uncertainty.

Prov. 18. 10.

Iames. 1. 17.

Truſt in Him, by looking to Him firſt, yer we admit any elſe into our conceipt: and by looking to Him laſt, and not looking beyond Him to any, as if we had a ſafer or truſtier than He.

And that, becauſe He is the living God: as if He ſhould ſay, That you phanſie to your ſelves, to truſt in, is a dead idoll, and not a living God; and if ever you come to any dangerous diſeaſe, you ſhall find, it is an idoll, dead in it ſelfe, not able to give it ſelfe life; much leſſe to another: not able to ranſome the body from the death, much leſſe the ſoule from hers; not able to recover life when it is gone, nay not able to preſerve life when it is preſent; not to remove death, nay not to remove ſickneſſe, not any ſicknes, not the gout from your feet, not the palſie from your hands, nay not ſo much as the ache from your teeth: not able to adde one haire to your head, nor one haires bredth to your ſtature, nor one houre to your daies, not one minute to the houres of your life. This moth-eaten God, as our SAVIOUR CHRIST calleth it, this canker-eaten God, this God, that muſt be kept under locke and key from a thiefe, truſt not in it for ſhame. O let it be never ſaid, the living truſt in the dead. Truſt in the living God, that liveth Himſelfe, nay that is life Himſelfe; in His Sonne, that was able to quicken Himſelfe, and is able to quicken you; of whoſe gift and inſpiration you have already this life; by whoſe dailie ſpirit and viſitation your ſoule is preſerved in this life, in this mortall and corruptible life; and of whoſe grace and mercie we looke for our other immortall and eternall life.

Who not only liveth, but alſo giveth you, &c.] A living and a giving God: that is, that liveth, and that giveth: of whoſe gift you have not onelie your life and terme of yeares, but even alſo your riches themſelves, the very hornes that you lift ſo high, & wherwith unnaturally many times you puſh againſt Him that gave them. He giveth; for the earth was the Lords, and all that therein is, till the earth He gave unto the children of men: And ſilver and gold were the Lords, till, not by a caſual ſcattering, but by His appointed giving; not by chance, but by gift, He made them thine. He gave them: thou broughteſt none of them with thee into the world, thou cameſt naked. He gave them; and when He gave them, He might have given them to thy brother of low eſtate & made thee ſtand and aske at his doore; as He hath made him now ſtand and aske at thine. He giveth you riches; you get them not; it is not your owne wiſedome or travaile that getteth them, but His grace and goodneſſe that giveth them. For, you ſee many men of as great underſtanding and foreſight as your ſelves, want not only riches, but even bread. It is not your travell; except the LORD hath given them, all the early up-riſing, and late downe-lying had been in vain. It is GOD that giveth: make your recogniſance it is ſo, for feare leſt if you denie Dominus dedit, you come to affirme Dominus abſtulit. GOD teacheth, it was He that gave them, by taking them away.

for

Pſal. 24. 1. 5. 16. Agg 2. 8. Eccle. 9 11. Iob 1. 21.

This is S. Pauls reaſon: let us ſee how it ſerves his concluſion to the overthrow of our vaine pride and fooliſh truſt in them. If it be gift, Si accepiſti, quid gloriaris? be not proud of it: And if it be gift, He that ſent it, can call for it againe; truſt not in it.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

Who giveth us all things, &c.] All things, ſpirituall or corporall, temporall or eternall, little or great, from the leaſt and ſo upward; from the greateſt & ſo downward: from panem quotidianum, a morſell of bread, to Regnum cælorum, the Kingdome of heaven. He giveth us all even unto Himſelfe: yea He giveth us himſelfe and all, and more we cannot deſire.

Why then, if He gives all, all are Donatives; all that we hold, we hold in franck almoigne; and no other tenure is there, at Gods hands, or in our Law. For, quid habes quod non accepiſti? What is there, that is to ſay, name one thing, thou haſt, that thou haſt not received; and if there be any one thing, boaſt of that and ſpare not. But if that be nothing, then let Cyprians ſentence take place (ſo much commended and ſo often cited by Saint Auguſtine) De nullo gloriandum eſt, quia nullum eſt noſtrum: and adde unto it, De nullo fidendum eſt, quia nullum eſt noſtrum: we muſt glory of nothing, for that we have nothing of our owne; neither muſt we truſt any thing; for that we have nothing of our owne.

1 Cor. 4. 7.

That giveth us all things to enjoy:] Not onely to have, but to enjoy. For, ſo to have them, that we have no joy of them; ſo to get all things, that we can take no part of them, when we have gotten them; ſo to poſſeſſe the labours of our hands, that wee cannot eat the labours of our hands; as good be without them: This is a great vanity and vexation; and indeed (as Salomon ſaith) an untimely birth were better, than ſo to be. But bleſſed be God, that beſides theſe bleſſings to be enjoyed, giveth us healthfull bodies to enjoy them with, the favour of our Prince to enjoy them under, the ſtates of peace to enjoy them in; whereby our ſoules may be ſatisfied with good things, and every one may eat his portion with joy of heart.

Eccles. 6. 2, 3.

That giveth all things to enjoy] that is, dealeth not with you as He hath dealt with the poore; hath given you things not onely of uſe and neceſſity, but things alſo of fruition and pleaſure: Hath given you not onely Manna for your need, but alſo Quailes for your luſt: Hath given you out of Ophir not onely linnen cloth and Horſes for ſervice, but alſo, Apes, Ivory, and Peacocks, for your delight. Vnto them He giveth indumenta, covering for their nakedneſſe; but unto you ornamenta, clothing for your comelineſſe. Vnto them He gives alimenta, nouriſhment for their emptineſſe; unto you delectamenta, delicious fare for daintineſſe. Therefore you above all men, are to rejoyce in Him, there is great cauſe: that He may rejoyce over you, unto whom Hee hath given ſo many wayes, ſo great cauſe of rejoycing.

Pſal. 78. 29. Pſal. 147. 20.

That giveth us all things to enjoy plenteouſly:] Plenteouſly, indeed, may Iſrael now ſay, (ſaid the Propet;) may England now ſay (ſay I) and I am ſure upon as great cauſe. He hath not dealt ſo with every Nation, nay He hath not dealt ſo with any nation. And plenteouſly may England now ſay; for it could not alwaies: Nay it could not ever have ſaid the like. Plenteouſly indeed, for He hath not ſprinkled, but powred His benefits upon us. Not onely Bleſſed be the People whoſe God is the Lord (that bleſſing which is highly to be eſteemed, if we had none beſides it,) but Bleſſed be the people that are in ſuch a caſe. That bleſsing He hath given us, all things to enjoy plenteouſly; we cannot, nay our enemies cannot but confeſſe it. O that our thankefulneſſe to Him, and our bounty to His, might be as plenteous, as His gifts and goodneſſe have beene plenteous to us!

Pſal. 144. 15. Ibid. 8

To move us from the two evils before, the Apoſtle uſed their uncertainty, which is a reaſon from Law and the courſe thereof. So he might now have told us, if we truſted not in God, we ſhould have the table turned, and His giving changed to taking away; our all things, into want of many things, and having nothing neere all; our plenty into penury; and our enjoying more than we need, into no more than needs, nor ſo much neither. Thus He might have dealt: but He is now in a point of Goſpell, and therefore taketh his perſwaſion from thence. For, this indeed, is the Evangelicall argument of Gods goodneſſe; and there is no goodneſſe to that, which the conſideration of Gods goodneſſe worketh in us.

The argument is forcible; and ſo forcible, as that chooſe whether this will move us or no: Sure, if this will not prevaile with us, we ſhall not need Moſes and Chriſt, to ſit and give ſentence upon us; the Divell himſelfe will doe it. For, as wicked as he is & as wretched a ſpirit, yet thus he reaſoneth upon Iob: Doth Iob feare thee for nought? As if he ſhould ſay: ſeing thou haſt dealt ſo plenteouſly, yea ſo bounteouſly with him, if he ſhould not ſerve thee, if he ſhould ſo far forget himſelfe, it were a fault paſt all excuſe, a fault well worthy to be condemned. A bad fault it muſt be, that the Divell doth abhor: yet ſo bad a fault it is (you ſe) that the Divell doth abhor it. When men receive bleſſings plenteouſly from God, and returne not the homage backe againe, unthankfull rich men ſhall need no other Iudge but the Divell, and then, as you ſee, they are ſure to be condemned. For, if God will not doe it, the Divell will.

Iob 1. 9.

Let me then recommend this third part of the Charge to your carefull remembrance and regard. It concerneth your homage, which is your truſt in Him, that you truſt in Him with your ſervice of body and ſoule, who hath truſted you with His plentie and ſtore, and hath made you in that eſtate, that you are truſted with matters of high importance both at home & abroad. For it is the argument of all arguments to the true Chriſtian, becauſe GOD hath given him (ſaith S. Iames) without exprobration, and given all things, without exception of any; and that to enjoy which is more than competency; and that plenteouſly, which is more than ſufficiency; therefore, even therefore, to truſt in Him only. If there be in us the hearts of true Chriſtians, this will ſhew it; for it will move us: and ſo let it I beſeech you. Let us not, as men under the Law, be tired with the uncertainty of the creatures; but as men under grace, have our hearts broken with the goodneſſe of our God. In that God to place our truſt, who beyond all our deſires giveth: if we reſpect the quantity, all things; if the manner, very plenteouſly; if the end, to joy in them; yet ſo, that our joy and repoſe end in Him: a very bleſſed and heavenly condition.

Iames 1. 5.

The IIII. Part
That they doe good.
Pſal. 37. 3.

Truſt in the Lord and be doing good, ſaid David: S. Paul ſaith the ſame, Charge the rich of this world, that they do good. The laſt was a very plauſible point, which we have dwelt in with great delight. What? the plenty of all things; that we enjoy, and long may enjoy, I beſeech God: who is not moved with joy to heare it reported?

But little know they, what a conſequent S. Paul will inferre upon this antecedent. For, thus doth Paul argue. GOD hath done good to you by giving you; you alſo are bound to doe good to others, by giving them. If he hath given you all things, you ought to part with ſomething: (and the more you part with, the liker yee become to Him, that giveth all things.) If He have given you to enjoy, you ought to receive others into the fellowſhip of the ſame joy: and not to thinke, that to doe others good, is to do your ſelves hurt. If plenteouſly He have given you, you ought to be plenteous in giving; giving, and, not when the LORD hath His Epha great, wherein He hath mete to you, to make you Him ſmall, whereby you meaſure to the poore; turning the plenty of heaven into the ſcarcity of earth.

Thus doth the Apoſtle fetch the matter about, and thus doth he inferre your doing good to theſe little lambes and ſuch like, out of GODS doing good unto you.

And that which he inferreth, he doth exceeding fitly, and ſheweth great art and learning in it. For, ſpeaking of enjoying (his very laſt word) he is carried in a very good zeale and affection of the rich of this world, to deſire of GOD, and to entreat of them that they may not have onely προσκαιρον ἀπόλαυσιν of them (that is) enjoy them for a ſeaſon, but that they may enjoy them for ever; not onely, for a few yeares, or weeks, or daies (we cannot tell well which) but from everlaſting to everlaſting: And that is, by doing good. So enjoy that we may doe good too. Heb. 11 25.

To ſay truth: Saint Paul could not better deviſe, than here to place it. For, our too much enjoying eateth up our well-doing, cleane. Our too much laſhing on in doing our ſelves good, maketh that we can doe good to none but our ſelves. Our preſent enjoying deſtroyeth our well-doing utterly, & conſequently the eternall enjoying we ſhould have of our riches. As Pharao's leane kine devoured the fat, and it was not ſeene on them, ſo doth (ſaith Baſil) our ἐφ' ἃ μὴ δεῖ, our riotous miſpending (where we ſhould not) eat up our ἐφ' ἃ δεῖ, our Chriſtian beſtowing where we ſhould: and a man cannot tell, what is become of it. Very well and wiſely ſaid that Father, Ἀκόνη δὲ τῆς ἀσωτίας ἡ φιλοτιμία, Pride is prodigalities whetſtone, and it ſets ſuch an edge upon it, in our enjoying, that it cuts ſo deepe into our wealth; and ſhares ſo much for our vaine and riotous enjoying, that it leaves but little for our well-doing. Gen. 41. 4.

Looke how the truſt in God and the truſt in riches are ſet one againſt another, here by the Apoſtle; ſo are our high minds, and our doing good. One would not thinke it at the firſt, but (ſure) ſo it is; we muſt have lower minds and leſſe pride, if we will have more good workes and greater plenty of well-doing. You may therefore enjoy your wealth, that is true: but you muſt alſo take this with you, you muſt doe good with it, and learne of the Apoſtle, there be two uſes of your riches, and that therefore GOD hath given them, 1 To enjoy, 2 To doe good: not, to enjoy onely; but, to enjoy and to doe good.

Enjoying, is doing good: But, not to our ſelves onely; but, by doing good, here, Saint Paul meaneth to doe it to others, that they may be the better for us. The very ſame two doth Salomon in very fit termes ſet downe: that Water is given into our ciſterne, 1 that we may drinke of it our ſelves, 2 that our fountaines may flow out, and they that dwell about us fare the better for them. The very ſame two doth a greater than Salomon, our SAVIOUR Himſelfe count of too: for, of His purſe, we read He had theſe two uſes, to buy that He had need of Himſelfe, and to give ſomething to the poore. It is good reaſon, that man conſiſting of two parts, the ſoule and body, the body onely ſhould not take up all; but, the ſoule ſhould be remembred too. Enjoying is the bodies part; and well-doing is the ſoules: your ſoules are ſuiters to you to remember them, that is to remember well-doing, which is the ſoules portion. Pro. 5. 15. Mat. 22. 42. Iohn 13 29.

Remember this ſecond: the other (I doubt not) but you will remember faſt enough. This was the uſe of our SAVIOUR CHRISTS purſe, and if yours be like His, this muſt be the uſe of yours alſo. For ſurely, it is greatly to be feared, that many rich at this day, know not both theſe: indeed know no other uſe of their wealth than an Oxe or an Aſſe, or other bruite beaſts would know; to have their cribb well ſerved, ſweet and cleane provender of the beſt in the manger, and their furniture and trappings fit and of the fineſt faſhion: No other, than the Glutton did, to goe in ſoft linnen and rich ſilke, and to fare deliciouſly every day. Or than the other, his pew-fellow, that profeſſed, it was all the uſe he counted of; and therefore we ſee he ſaith to his ſoule, eate thy fill (ſoule) and drinke thy fill; fill and fat thy ſelfe, and enjoy this life; never looke to enjoy any other. Luke 16. 19. Luke 12 19.

We muſt learne one uſe more, one more out of our Charge, and conſequently.

When we look upon our ſealed ſummes, our heapes of treaſure,& continuall commings in,thus to thinke with our ſelves:This that I ſee here, hath GOD given me to enjoy, but not onely for that, but, to doe good with,alſo. The former uſe of my riches I have had long and daily ſtill have, but what have I done in the other? The rich men in the Goſpell, they had the ſame; they did enjoy theirs; but now (it is ſure) little joy they have of them: why? for want of this other. Abraham he did both; he enjoyed his riches here, and now another, an eternall joy of them. Yea, he received Lazarus into his boſome. Why? he received him into his boſome,and cheriſhed him, and did good here on earth. And ſo did Iob, and ſo did Zacheus. Now good LORD, ſo give me grace, ſo to enjoy here, that I loſe not my endleſſe joy in thy Heavenly Kingdome. Let me follow their ſteps in my life, with whom I wiſh my ſoule after death. Theſe things are good and profitable for the rich, oft to thinke on.

Well then, if to doe good be a part of the Charge, what is it to doe good? It is a poſitive thing (good;) not a privative, to doe no harme. Yet, as the world goeth now, we are faine ſo to commend men; He is a honeſt man, he doth no hurt: of which praiſe any wicked man,that keepes himſelfe to himſelfe, may be partaker. But,it is to doe ſome good thing: what good thing? I will not anſwer,as in the Schooles; I feare; I ſhould not be underſtood; I will goe groſſely to worke. Theſe that you ſee here before your eyes, to doe them good, to part with that, that may doe them good, uſe the goods that you have, to doe but that, which ſundry that they have heretofore occupied thoſe roomes where you now ſit (whoſe remembrance is therefore in bleſſing upon earth;and whoſe names are in the bookes of life in heaven) have before you in divers workes of Charity, to the maintenance of the Church,the benefit of Learning,and the relieſe of the Poore of the land. This is to doe good. This,I truſt, you underſtand.

This know; that God hath not given ſight to the eye, to enjoy, but to lighten the members; nor wiſedome to the honourable man, but for us men of ſimple ſhallow forecaſt; nor learning to the divine, but for the ignorant: ſo, neither riches to the wealthy, but for thoſe that want reliefe. Thinke your Timothy hath his depoſitum and we ours, and you have none? it is ſure, you have. Wee, ours, in inward graces and treaſures of knowledge: You yours,in outward bleſſings and treaſures of wealth. But,both are depoſita,and we both are feoffes of truſt. I ſee, there is a ſtrange hatred, and a bitter gain-ſaying every where ſtirred up againſt unpreaching Prelates (as you terme them) the Paſtors that feed themſelves onely; and they are well worthy: If I might ſee the ſame hatred begun among your ſelves,I would thinke it ſincere. But that I cannot ſee. For, that which a ſlothfull Divine is,in things ſpirituall; that is, a Rich man for himſelfe and no body elſe, in things carnall, & they are not pointed at. But ſure,you have your harveſt as well,as we ours; and that a great harveſt. Lift up your eies and ſee the ſtreets round about you, the harveſt is verily great, and the Labourers few: Let us pray (both) that the Lord would thruſt our Labourers into both theſe harveſts,that the treaſures of knowledge being opened, they may have the bread of eternall life: and the treaſures of well-doing being opened,they may have the bread of this life,and ſo they may want neither.

Matt. 9. 37.

I will tell you it, another as eaſie a way: Saint Auguſtine making it plaine to his auditorie (ſomewhat backward as it ſhould ſeeme) was faine to tell them thus,thus to define doing good: Quod non vultis facere,hoc bonum eſt (ſaith he:) that that you will not doe, that that I cannot get you to doe, that is to doe good. Shall I tell ſo to you? No indeed, I will not; I hope better things, and partly I know them. But, this I will ſay:that which the Papiſts with open mouth, in all their bookes,to the ſlander of the Goſpell; that which they ſay, you doe not; nay, you will not doe; that is, to doe good.

One of them ſaith,that our religion hath comforted your force attractive ſo much and made it ſo ſtrong; that nothing can be wrung from you. Another, hee ſaith, that our Religion hath brought a hardneſſe into the bowels of our profeſſors, that they they pity little, & the cramp or chiragra into their hands, that they give leſſe. Another, that our preaching hath bred your minds full of Salomons horſleeches, that cry bring in, bring in, and nothing elſe. All of them ſay, that your good workes come ſo from you, as if indeed your religion were, to be ſaved by faith onely. Thus through you, and through want of your doing good, the Goſpell of CHRIST is evill ſpoken of among them that are without. They ſay, we call not to you for them: that we preach not this point, that we leave them out of our Charges. Libero animam meam, I deliver here mine owne ſoule: I doe now call for them; I have done it elſwhere yer now. Here, I call for them now, I take witneſſe, I call you to record, I call heaven to record Domine ſcis quia dixi, ſcis quia locutus ſum, ſcis quia clamavi: Lord, thou knoweſt, I have ſpoken for them, I have called for them, I have cryed for them, I have made them a part of my charge, and the moſt earneſt and vehement part of my charge, even the charge of doing good.

Vnto you therefore that be rich be it ſpoken; heare your charge I pray you. There is no avoiding, you muſt needs ſeal this fruit of well-doing, you muſt needs do it For, having wealth and wherewithall to doe good, if you doe it not; Imprimis, talke not of faith, for you have no faith in you; if you have wherewith to ſhew it, and ſhew it not, Saint Iames ſaith, you have none to ſhew. Nor, tell me not of your religion; there is no religion in you: Pure religion is this (as to very good purpoſe was ſhewed yeſterday) To viſit the fatherleſſe and widowes: and you never learned other religion of us. 1. Iames 1.27.

Secondly, if you doe it not, I warne you of it, now; you ſhall then finde it, when you ſhall never be able to anſwer the exacting of this charge, in the great Day: where, the queſtion ſhall not be of the highnes or lowneſſe of your mindes, not of your truſt and confidence, or any other vertues, though they be excellent, but of your feeding, clothing, viſiting, harbouring, ſuccouring, and in a word, of your well-doing, onely. This I ſay to you; beare witneſſe I ſay it. 2

Now to them, in your juſt defence I ſay: (for, God forbid, but while I live, I ſhould alway defend this Honourable Citie in all truth.) to them whom the miſt of envie hath ſo blinded, that they can ſee no good at all done, but by themſelves, I forbid them, the beſt of them, to ſhew mee in Rhemes or in Rome or any popiſh Citie Chriſten, ſuch a ſhew, as we have ſeene here theſe two daies. To daie, but a handfull of the heape, but Yeſterdaie and on Mundaie, the whole heape; even a mightie armie of ſo manie good wookes as there were relieved Orphanes, the Chariots of this Citie, I doubt not, and the horſemen thereof. 2 Kings 2. 12.

They will ſay, it is but one; ſo they ſay: Be it ſo, yet it is a matcheleſſe one. I will goe further with them; Spoken be it to GODS glorie, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo da gloriam. Not unto us, not unto us O Lord, but unto Thy Name give the praiſe; for thy loving mercy and for thy truthes ſake which we profeſſe. I will be able to prove, that Learning, in the foundation of Schooles and encreaſe of revenues within Colledges; and the Poore, in foundation of Almes-houſes, and encreaſe of perpetuities to them, have received greater help in this Realme within theſe forty yeares laſt paſt, ſince (not, the ſtarting up of our Church, as they fondly uſe to ſpeake, but ſince) the reforming ours from the error of theirs, than it hath, I ſay, in any Realme Chriſten, not only within the ſelf ſame forty yeares (which were enough to ſtop their mouthes) but alſo than it hath in any forty yeares upward, during all the time of Popery: which I ſpeake, partlie of mine owne knowledge, and partlie by ſufficient grave information to this behalfe. This may be ſaid, and ſaid trulie. Pſal. 115. 1.

And when we have ſaid this, what great thing have we ſaid? that, time for time, ſo many yeares for ſo many; thirty yeares of light have made compariſon with thirty yeares of trouble. But, this is not as we would have it: We would have it out of all compariſon. This, that hath been ſaid, is ſtrange to them (I know) and more, than they reckoned of. But I would have you in theſe times of peace and truth, ſo farre beyond them, as that you might φιμῶν, ſnaffle them in this. So, that they durſt not once offer to enter into this theame with us, or once to mention it more. So it ſhould be, I am ſure, ſo the Goſpell deſerves to have it. 1 Pet. 2. 15.

You

2 The quantity. Be rich in good workes.

You have the ſubſtance of that you muſt doe, to doe good. Now here is the quantitie: Be rich in good workes: that ſeeing you are rich indeed, you would not be poore men, but rich in good workes.

Good workes (Saint Paul ſaith) not good words. Good, with the goodneſſe of the hand; not with the goodneſſe of the tongue, and tongue onely; as many now are, (well therefore reſembled to the tree that Pliny ſpeaketh of, the leaves of it as broad as any target, but the fruit is no bigger than a beane:) to talke targets, and to doe beanes. It were better reverſed, if we were (as S. Paul ſaith) perfect in all good workes, than perfect in certaine curious and queint termes, and ſet phraſes, wherein a great part of many mens religions doe now adaies conſiſt: plaine ſpeech and ſound dealing; plaine ſpeech and good workes, beſt.

2 Tim 3.16.

And rich in them. The Rich man in the Goſpell, would (as he ſaid) build his barnes bigger to put in them πάντα τὰ ἀγαθά, all his goods he had: no good out of his barne. Yes, yes ſome in good workes too. Saint Paul hath here within the compaſſe of this Text two Rich men; his deſire is, they may both meet together in every rich man. Rich, ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι, in the world that now is, ſo ye are: Rich, in the world that ſhall be after this; be that too. Rich in cofer; ſo ye are: Rich in conſcience; be ſo too. Your conſciences you ſhall carry with you: your cofers you ſhall not. Thus you are valued in the Queenes books: what are you in GODS bookes? So much worth in this land of the dying: how much worth in the land of the living? Saint Pauls advice is, that you ſtrive for both: which you ſhall be, if ye be rich in good workes. The true riches are the riches of His glorious inheritance. They be the true riches, which except a man can aſſure himſelfe of, after the leaſe of his life is out, he ſhall be in a marvellous poore caſe, as was the Rich man; and begge of Lazarus there, that begged of him here. Thoſe riches muſt be thought of, marry then you muſt be rich in good works. Not to give ſomething, to ſomebody, at ſome time: Why? Who doth not ſo? That is not to be rich. To give φειδομένως ſparingly, a peece of bread, or a draught of drinke; and that only; that belongeth to him whom GOD hath ſparingly bleſſed, to the brother of low eſtate: it is not your worke.

Ephes. 1.18.

Luke 16.24.

In the Law, to the building of the Tabernacle, the poore gave Goats haire; and Badgers skinns; that was for them, and that was accepted: the rich they gave purple, gold and Iewels to the Tabernacle, they were rich in good workes. And in the Goſpell, to whom much is given, of him proportionally much ſhall be required: that is, in a word, as you are ſeſſed in the Queenes bookes, ſo are you in Gods bookes, each one according to his abilitie. And God will looke, that according to that ſeſſement they ſhould be done: that you ſhould περισσεύειν, abound in good workes, as you doe in wealth, that you ſhould προηγεῖσθαι Goe before and ſit higheſt; and have a precedence in workes, as you have in your places. And in a word, that you ſhould be, Lords, Knights, Aldermen, Maſters, Wardens, and of the livery in good works, as you be in your ſeverall Wards and Companies. And indeed to ſay the truth, to commit ſo many ſins, as no Auditor can number them, and to affoord ſo few good works, as a child may tell them: to receive ſuch profits, as great count bookes will not hold them; and to yeeld ſo ſmall ſtore of good workes, as a little paper not ſo broad as my hand may containe them: To laſh out at a banquet, you know what; and to caſt to a Captives redemption all the world knowes what: to caſt your pride with pounds, and your good works with pence; what coherence is there in theſe? This is not to be rich: But that, is a part of the charge too. I pray you remember it; Remember to be rich: not onely to doe good, but to be rich in doing good. That, will make you in caſe well to die, as now (God be thanked) you are well to live.

3 The Quality. Ready to diſtribute.

And with the quantity, take the quality too, I pray you: for the quantitie, richly; for the qualitie, readily. Ἐξ ἀνάγκης, with compulſion, not willingly; and ἐκ λύπης, with grudging, not cheerefully, theſe are the faults contrary to this vertue. God muſt have

it done with a facilitie, with a readineſſe eaſily. And good reaſon, eaſily; for eaſily you may. We that want, cannot without difficultie; we would and we cannot: we have a heart without a hand: though we be willing, nothing is done; why? we are not able. You are well able (GOD be thanked) if you be well willing, there is no more to doe, it is done. This readineſſe is a neceſſary vertue in our daies: where, yer a benefit come (nay many times, yer a debt) ſo much ingenuity is ſpent, ſo manie Rogo's, ſuch a Vade & redi, goe and come ſuch a time; ſuch a dauncing on the threſhold, Pro.3.28. ſuch a failing of the eyes, yer it can be ſeene; ſuch a cleaving to the fingers, yer it will come off, ſuch inſtillation by now a drop & then a drop: as to a liberall nature, when it commeth, it is like to bread ful of gravell; for hunger a man muſt needs have it, and but for needs muſt, a man, had as leefe be without it. O beloved, mar not all you doe before God and man for want of this one thing. You love a faire ſeed-time, all of you: Hilaris datio, ſerena ſatio; cheerefull giving is like a faire ſeed-time. As you, for your ſeed, to burie it, with a ſeaſonable time; ſo and no leſſe GOD deſireth for His that His ſeed may not be ſowen with an overcaſt mind, but with the gladneſſe of heart and cheerefulneſſe of countenance. Even as He doth Himſelfe; who what He beſtoweth, beſtoweth ſo, as He taketh as much, yea more delight in giving, than we in receiving. So doe, and then this Charge is at an end: Be ready to communicate.

There is of this word, ſome difference among Writers; but ſuch as you may eaſily reconcile. Some thinke, the Apoſtle would have rich men to be εὐκοινώνητους eaſie to be ſpoken with, and to be ſpoken to. Some, that He would not onely have them give readily, but lend freely, and not practiſe the Devils Alchymiſtrie (as they doe) by multiplication in lending. Some, that they ſhould not thinke their beneficence to be a taking from them without receiving back, inaſmuch as there is an entercourſe of the givers grace, and the receivers prayer. Some, that His mind is, that they ſhould not doe good to ſome few, but even to a multitude. All are good and godly, and agreable to the analogie of faith: and you by doing all, may verifie and agree all, and make of a diſcord in opinions, an harmonie in practice. Saint Hierome (mee thinketh) ſaith beſt, that Communicare eſt communitati dare, aut ad aliquid commune, to be beneficiall to a Society, or to beſtow to ſome common uſe.

This is the perfection or pitch of well doing, that moſt plenteous grace by the thankſ- 2 Cor 4.15. giving of many, may redound to the glory of God. The Apoſtle therefore is a further ſuitor to you that be rich, and will not end his Charge, till he hath laid this on you too, to doe good to Societies and Foundations, either neceſſary to be erected, or more than neceſſary to be maintained, leſt through our evil-doing, our fathers wel-doing periſh. It is not for every man to reach unto them; there is no hope to have them upholden but by you: that you would therefore have them in remembrance, and to thinke upon them to doe them good.

But alas, what hope is there to heare, that good will be this way done, ſince it is thought, that many may be endicted for ſeeking to eat up Companies, and to convert that which was the good and making of many, into their owne ſingulare commodo, by out-buying and out-bidding all beſides themſelves, that they alone may appropriate civil livings, turne common into private, the whole bodies nouriſhment into one forgrowen member, and in the end dwell alone upon the earth. Ier.49.31.

That the world is toward an end, other men may be perſwaded by other reaſons; none more effectuall to perſwade me, than this one, that every man doth what in him lieth to Diſcommon communities, and to bring all to the firſt privation. For the world being it ſelfe a maine Societie; theſe men, by diſmembring under-ſocieties, ſeeke and doe what they can to diſſolve the whole. So that, GOD muſt needs come to make an end of the world, or elſe, if this hold on, we ſhould ſhortly make an end of it our ſelves.

It is further complained, that wheras ther hath been & is given charitably to the poore & their maintenance, that the poore themſelves want, and they that have the receiving of the profits doe yet encreaſe mightily. Had not theſe things need to be put in the Charge? Are they not in the eares of the Lord? Is it not a ſinne crying to heaven?

heaven? Shall he not viſit for theſe things? for this diſcredit of His Goſpell, for this unexcuſable, unfaithfull dealing, in the eares of Iew and Gentile, of Turke and Chriſtian, of GOD and man? I beſeech you ſtill, ſuffer the words of exhortation: it is good for you to know, what things are ſaid abroad. For my part, in GODS preſence I proteſt, I know none; and if there be none, preſent none. It is that I deſire; the charge is now given, may be given in vaine.

1 To the Church
a Gal. 6. 6.
b Rom. 12. 13.

Now, if you enquire, to whom your doing good ſhould ſtretch it ſelfe? Saint Paul himſelfe will tell you. To them that inſtruct you, they are to a communicate with you in all your goods, that is, the Church: and to the neceſſity of the Saints, & to the b Saints that be in neceſſity, that is, to the Poore.

c Eſter 4. 14.
d Neh. 1. 11.
e Ezek. 28. 14.

The Church firſt: c For this end, came Eſter to the Kingdome, and d Nehemiah to his great favour with the Prince, even to doe good to the Church: And for this end hath e Tyrus that rich City, that aboundance beſtowed on her, even to be a covering Cherub to the Church of GOD, and to ſtretch out her wings over it. The Prophets meaning was, the rich men muſt be a ſhadow of maintenance and defence to the Arke, to Divinity, their riches muſt ſerve them as wings to that end; they muſt bee covering Cherubs on earth to the Church militant, if ever they will be ſinging Cherubs in heaven with the Church triumphant.

And much good might be done, and is not, in this behalfe, and that many waies. I will name but one, that is, that with their wings ſtretched out, they would keep the filth and pollution of the ſinne of ſinnes (whereof you heard ſo bitter complaint both theſe daies) of Simonie and Sacriledge, from falling on the Arke, and corrupting and putrifying it, which it hath almoſt already done. That ſeeing the Pope do that he doth (howſoever ſome have alledged the Papiſts great deteſtation of this ſinne, and of us for this ſinne, for a motive; it is all but diſſembling, their hand is as deepe in this ſin as any mans:) I ſay, ſeeing the Pope doth as he doth, that is, as he hath diſpenſed with the oath and duty of Subjects to their Prince, againſt the fifth Commandement: with the murder, both violent with daggs, and ſecret with poyſon of the Sacred Perſons of Princes, againſt the ſixth: with the uncleaneneſſe of the ſtewes, & with inceſtuous marriages, againſt the ſeventh: So, now of late, with the abomination of Simony, againſt the eight; having lately (as it is knowne by the voluntary confeſſion of their owne Prieſts) by ſpeciall and expreſſe warrant of the See Apoſtolike ſent hither into this Land his Licence diſpenſative to all Patrons of his marke to ſet up Simonie, and to mart and make ſale of all Spirituall livings which they have or can get, to the uttermoſt penny, even (if it were poſſible) by the ſound of the drumme; and that with a very cleare conſcience (ſo that ſome portion thereof be ſent over to the releefe of his Seminaries, which by ſuch honeſt meanes as this, come to be now maintained.) Seeing thus doe the Papiſts, & we (loth to be behind them in this gaine of bloud) make ſuch merchandiſe with this ſinne, of the poore Church and her patrimony, as all the world crieth ſhame of it: To redeeme the orderly diſpoſing them to the Churches good, were a ſpeciall way for you rich men to doe good in theſe daies. Neither as theſe times are, doe I know a better ſervice, nor which (I am perſwaded) will pleaſe GOD better, than this, or be better accepted at His hands.

2 To the poore

This for the Church: you muſt have a wing ſtretched abroad to cover it. And for the poore, you muſt have a boſome wide open to receive them. Lazarus in a rich mans boſome, is a goodly ſight in heaven; and no leſſe goodly in earth. And there ſhall be never a rich man with Lazarus in his boſome, in heaven, unleſſe he have had a Lazarus in his boſome here on earth.

Iohn 12. 8.

The poore are of two ſorts: Such as ſhall be with us alwayes (as CHRIST ſaith) to whom we muſt doe good by releeving them: ſuch is the comfortles eſtate of poore Captives; the ſuccourleſſe eſtate of poore Orphanes; the deſolate eſtate of the poore Widowes; the diſtreſſed eſtate of poore Strangers; the diſcontented eſtate of poore Scholars; all which muſt be ſuffered and ſuccoured too.

There are others, ſuch as ſhould not be ſuffered to be in Iſrael, whereof Iſrael is full:

I

I meane, beggers, and vagabonds, able to worke: to whom good muſt be done, by not ſuffering them to be as they are, but to imploy them in ſuch ſort, as they may doe good. This is a good deed no doubt; and there being, as I heare, an honourable good purpoſe in hand for the redreſſe of it, God ſend it good ſucceſſe. I am as one, in part of my charge, to exhort you by all good meanes to helpe and further it.

Me thinketh it is ſtrange, that the exiled Churches of Strangers which are harboured here with us, ſhould be able in this kinde to do ſuch good, as not one of their poore is ſeene to aske about the ſtreets; and this City, the harbourer and maintainer of them, ſhould not be able to doe the ſame good. Able it is no doubt, but men would have doing good too good cheape. I know, the charges will be great: but, it will quit the charges, the good done will be ſo great. Great good to their bodies, in redeeming them from divers corrupt and noyſome diſeaſes, and this City from danger of infection. Great good to their ſoules, in redeeming them from idleneſſe, and the fruit of idleneſſe, which is all naughtineſſe, no where ſo rife as among them; & this City from much pilfering, and loſſe that way. Great good to the Common-wealth, in redeeming unto it many rotten members, and making them men of ſervice, which may hereafter do good in it, to the publike benefit, and redeeme this City from the bloud of many ſoules which periſh in it for want of good order. Laſt of all, great good to the whole eſtate, in bringing the bleſſing of God upon it; even that bleſſing, that there ſhall not be a begger in all Iſrael. So much for doing good. Deut. 15. 4.

Laying up in ſtore. &c.] That is, your worke ſhall not be in vaine in the end, but receive a recompence of reward: which is a prerogative, the which GODS Charges have above all other. In mans, there is death to the Offender; but if any have kept his charge; he may claime nothing but that, he hath. Onely the Lords Charges are rewarded. The laſt point: The Reaſon.

So that, beſides the two reaſons which may be drawne out of the former, 1 one of the uncertainty, 2 the other of Gods bounty. 1. Of the Vncertainty, Da quod non potes retinere: That we would part with that, that we cannot keepe long; that wee muſt part with yer long, whether we will or no: 2 Of the Bounty of God; De meo peto, dicit CHRISTUS; That God which gave, asketh but His owne; but of that, He gave us, a part to be given Him, and we (if there be in us, the heart of David) will ſay, quod de manu tuâ accepimus, 3. Beſides theſe, a third; Though God might juſtly challenge a free gift without any hope of receiving againe, He will not; but tell us, His meaning is, not to impoveriſh or undoe us, but to receive theſe, which He gave us, and came from Him every one; and thoſe that within a while forgoe we muſt, to give us that, we ſhall never forgoe. That is that, He teacheth us: commandeth not our loſſe, but commendeth to us a way to lay up for our ſelves, if we could ſee it; not, to leeſe and leave all, we know not to whom. 1 Chro. 29. 16.

Well ſaid Auguſtine, preaching on theſe very words: At the very hearing theſe words [Part with and diſtribute] the covetous man ſhrinkes in himſelfe; at the very ſound of parting with; as if one ſhould poure a baſon of cold water upon him, ſo doth he chill and draw himſelfe together, and ſay Non perdo: he ſaith not, I will not part with, but, I will not loſe; for he counteth all parting with to be loſing. And will ye not loſe, ſaith Saint Auguſtine? yet, uſe the matter how you can, loſe you ſhall: for, when you can carry nothing away of all you have, doe you not loſe it? But, goe to (ſaith he) be not troubled, heare what followes, ſhut not thy heart againſt it.

Laying up for your ſelves.] I know, Iudas was of the minde, that all that went beſides the bagge, was Vtquid perditio? and ſo be all they that be of his ſpirit. But, Saint Paul is of that minde, that ἀποθησαυρίζειν, to lay out to good uſes, is to lay up to our owne uſes: that, in parting thus with it, we doe not dimittere, but præmittere; not loſe it, by leaving it here from whence we are going, but ſtore it up, by ſending it thither before, whither we are going. And indeed, one of the two, we muſt needs, either leave it behinde and loſe it for ever; or ſend it before, and have it our owne for ever. Now chooſe whether you will hold of *Iudas*s, or Paul's. Laying up for your ſelves.

For indeed, it is not laying up, Saint Paul findeth fault with; but the place, where: not building, or obtaining, or purchasing; all which three are specified, and the Apostle speaketh in your own termes, and the things you chiefly delight in: but, the laying up in the flesh, which will rot, and with it whatsoever is laid up with it; or in the world, which is so variable now, & will be consumed all to nought: and with it, whatsoever is laid up in it. But, he would have us to lay it up in heaven; which (besides that it is our owne countrey, and this but a strange land) is the place, whither we passe leaving this place behinde; and from whence we must never passe, but stay here, and either for ever want, or have use for ever of that, we part with here. And to say truth, Vt quid respicimus? With what face can we looke up and looke upon heaven, where we have laid up nothing; or what entertainment can we look for there, whither we have sent no part of our provision; but for ought of our sending, the place is clean empty?

You will say; how can one reach heaven to lay any thing there? I will aske you also another question: How can a man being in France, reach into England to lay any thing there? By Exchange. And did you never heare of our exchange, Cambium cœleste? You know, that to avoid the danger of Pirates, and the inconvenience of forren Coin, not currant at home, it is the use of Merchants to pay it there, to receive it here. Such a thing is there in this laying up. We are here as strangers: the place here we wish our selves, is our Countrey, even Paradise (if so be, we send our carriage thither before; if not, I feare, we intend some other place: it is not our countrey.) When we shall take our way thither, thorow the way of all flesh, through death, certainly we lose all; he strips every one, he layes hold of: and put case, we could get thorow with all our bagges; here it is currant (for it is the coine of the world;) but, there it is base, and goeth for nought; what shall we then doe? Quare non facis? Why deale you not with exchang, paying here so much, to have so much repaid you there. Adires traprezitas, you should goe to the Bankers: who be those? Cum quæsiveris, when you have sought all, Pauperes sunt campsores, they be the poore: Da pauperibus & accipies thesaurum. Where is our bill? Quod, vel quantum uni. Who will repay it? Ego resolvam: Nec repetit mercedem, sed dat mercedem. What? refuse you to take CHRISTS bill? if you dare trust your servants without feare of losing; if you trust your LORD, feare you to lose? If them, of whom you receive nothing, but, they of you; what, not of him of whom earst you professed to receive all things? If CHRIST be of credit, and heaven be not Vtopia; if we thinke there is such a life after this, we shall ever have to doe there, Lay up here. Thinke, it is a laying up. Vpon the beleeving of this one word, the weight of doing and not doing, all the Text lyeth.

When we recount our good deeds, we commonly say, For him, and for him, we have done this and that; It is true, saith Saint Paul. That good you doe, you doe for them, and for your selves too: but more, for your selves than for them. To lay up, and to doe good; yea, to others; Nay, to do your selves good, to lay up for your selves. Before, you thought it scattering, it was indeed laying up: Now, you thinke, it is for them; it is, for you, and your sakes, God commandeth it.

GOD hath no need of you to feed the poore; No need of the Widow to feed Elias; He could still have fed him by Ravens: and, as he fed Elias by one; so could He them, by others, or other meanes, and never send them to Sarepta among you. He could have created sufficient for all men; or so few men, as all should have been sufficient for them. Hee would not: He ordered, there should ever be poore in the Land: Why? To prove them; and to prove you by them: that, Hee which feedeth you, might feed them by you; that your superfluities might be their necessaries: that they of their patience, in wanting; and you, of your liberality in supporting, might both together, of Him that made you both, receive reward. They with you, in your bosomes there, as here: a good fight in heaven, and a good fight in earth. For sure, there shall never be a rich man in heaven, without a Lazarus in his bosome. Therefore, we have need of them, as they have need of us; yet, that, we make theirs, remaineth ours still.

Deut. 15. 11.

It

It liketh the HOLY GHOST, as to terme our preaching our ſeed, ſo to terme your wealth, your ſeed. The ſeed, the husbandman caſts it, the ground receives it: Whoſe is it? the ground's? No, the husbandmans. And, though it be caſt out of his hands, and rot in the bowels of the earth, and come to nothing, and there becomes of it, no man can tell what; yet, this count he maketh, it is his ſtill; and that every graine will bring him an eare, at time of the yeare; and ſo, that he hath in caſting it from him, ſtored it up for himſelfe. Whereas, in fooliſhly loving it (as many doe their wealth) he might have ſtored it up for wormes and muſtineſſe, and by that meanes indeed have loſt it for altogether. The ſeed is your almes: The ground is the poore: You are the Sowers. When it is therefore ſowen among them, how it is ſpent, and what becomes of it, you know not: yet, this you know, and may reckon; that at the fulneſſe of time, at the harveſt of the end of the world, for every graine of temporall contribution, you ſhall receive an eare of eternall retribution. Whereas, ſtoring it up here, it may after your deceaſe be ſtored for harlots, and gameſters, and rioters, in whoſe hands it ſhall corrupt & putrifie, and your ſelves loſe the fruit thereof for ever. By this compariſon you may know, that when you are dealing for the poore, it is your owne buſineſſe, you intend: that, not forgetting them, you remember your ſelves; pitying them, you have pity on your owne ſoules, and that your labour ſhall not be in vaine in the Lord. 2 Cor. 9. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 58.

Men uſe to reaſon with themſelves; it will not alwayes be health, let us lay up for ſickneſſe; it will not alway be youth, for age: and why not (ſaith Saint Paul) it will not alway be this life, not alway preſent life, lay up for your ſelves againſt the life to come. In this place, here, we ſhall not be alwayes, but in another of our eternall abode. This time, that is, will not be alwayes; but ſuch a time will come, as in which, that we call a thouſand yeares, ſhall be no more than a day, now. That place and that time would be thought of: and good wiſdome it will be, for a man to forget what hee is, and to weigh what he ſhall be. Surely, for any preſent matter GOD did not make us; Sed ad neſcio quid aliud, to ſome further matter yet to come. Not yet preſent: as yet, in promiſe, not yet in performance; as yet in hope, not in poſſeſſion. I know, that even in this place the LORD doth reward, and ſheweth us plainly, that Date and Dabitur are two twins: We our ſelves have by good triall found it true; when our carefull Date and proviſion for the poore laſt yeare ſave one, was requited in præſenti with a great Dabitur of the laſt yeares encreaſe. But this is but an &c. making nothing to the maine promiſe which is to come, which our SAVIOUR would never have out of our eye; Habetis hîc, here you have your comfort, Habete illic have it there too, for here you cannot ever have it. For the preſent time, you have officers and ſervants to wait on you; in the time to come, none will accompany you, all will leave you, when to the grave they have brought you, ſave mercy only; none will wait or make roome, but opera eorum, your workes which you have here laid up for the time to comes. Pſal. 90. 4. Luke 6. 24.

The Scripture ſpeaketh of this life, and all the felicity therein, as of a tent or booth, ſpread for a day, and taken downe at night. Even like Iona's gourd for all the world; freſh in the morning, and ſtarke withered yer evening. But, of the life to come, as of a ground-worke, never to remove it ſelfe, or we from it; but to abide therein, ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ or ἐν τῇ βασιλικῇ in the priſon, or the palace for evermore. Wee ſhall not therefore loſe, but lay up in ſtore: not for others, but for our ſelves: Not, for a few dayes now, but for hereafter: Not a tent to be taken downe, but a foundation never to be removed. Heb. 11. 9. 2 Cor. 5. 1.

Of all the words in the Text, not one was meet for the teeth of Rhemiſts, ſave this only: here you have a perillous note cloſe in the margent: Good works are a foundation. A foundation, very true: who denies it? but whether a foundation in our graces, as CHRIST is without us, that is the point. The ground whereon every building is raiſed, is termed fundamentum. The loweſt part of the building immediately lying on it, is ſo termed too. In the firſt ſenſe, CHRIST is ſaid to be the onely foundation: Yet the Apoſtles, becauſe they are the loweſt row of ſtones, are ſaid to be 1 Cor. 3. 11. Epeſ. 2. 20. Col. 1. 23. foundations, in the ſecond. So, among the graces within us, faith is properly in the firſt

Epheſ. 3. 18. ſenſe, ſaid to be the foundation: yet, in the ſecond, doe we not deny, but as the Apoſtle calleth them, as the loweſt row, next to Faith, Charity, and the workes of charity may be called foundations too. Albeit the margent might well have beene ſpared at this place: for, the note is here, all out of place. For, being ſo great Schoolemen as they would ſeeme, they muſt needs know, It is not the drift of the Apoſtle here, in calling them a foundation, to carry our conſiderations into the matter of juſtifying, but onely to preſſe his former reaſon of uncertainty there, by a contrary weight of certaine ſtability here: and ſo, their note comes in like Magnificat at Mattins.

Thus reaſoneth Saint Paul: This world is uncertaine, of a ſandie nature; you may reare upon it, but it is ſo bad a ſoile, as whatſoever you raiſe, will never be well ſetled, and therefore ever tottering; and when the raine, and the wind, and the waves
Mat 7. 26. beat againſt it, it commeth downe on your heads. Therefore to make choice of a faſter ſoile, build upon GODS ground, not upon the worlds ground: for, πάντα ἐκεῖνα βέβαια, Chryſoſt. in locum, Hom. 18. μετὰ ἀσφαλείας ἁπάσης (ſaith Chryſoſtome;) there all is firme, there you may build and be ſure, fall the raine upon the top of it, blow the wind againſt the ſide of it, riſe the waves againſt the foot of it, it ſtands irremoveable. Wherein the Apoſtle (ſaith Chryſoſtome) doth teach a very goodly and excellent art, how to make of our fugitive riches a truſty and faſt friend; how to make Gold out of Quickſilver, and of the uncertainty of riches, a ſure and certaine ground-worke.

Aſſurance and ſecurity are two things (wee know) that rich men many times buy deare: here they may be had; not for thus much, or thus long, but for as much as you liſt, and as long as eternity is long, that never ſhall have end. The meaning is; that if you lay out, or lay on that you have, on theſe earthly things (the plot; which the world would faine commend unto you) with this life, or at the furtheſt, with this world they ſhall be ſhaken in peeces and come to nought; and you poſſibly in the houre of death, but moſt certainly in the day of judgement, ſhall ſhake, when the world your ground-worke ſhakes, and be in trembling feare and perplexed agonie touching the eſtate of your ſoule: knowing, there is nothing comming to you but the fruit of this world, which is ruine; or the fruit of the fleſh, which is corruption. But, if you ſhall have grace to make choice of GODS plot, which He hath here levelled for you to raiſe upon, O quanto dignum pretio! that will be worth all the world in that day: the perfect certainty, ſound knowledge, and pretious aſſurance, you ſhall then have, whereby you ſhall be aſſured to be received, becauſe you are ſure you are CHRISTS, becauſe you are ſure you have true faith, becauſe you are ſure you have framed it up into good workes. And ſo ſhall they be a foundation to you-ward, by making evident the aſſurance of ſalvation: not, naturâ, to GOD-ward, in bringing forth the eſſence of your ſalvation.

Looke you, how excellent a ground-worke here is! (not for a cottage;) whereon you may raiſe your frame to ſo notable a height, as ſtanding on it, you may lay hand on, and lay hold of eternall life. O that you would minde once theſe high things, that you would be in this ſenſe high-minded! Saint Pauls meaning is to take nothing from you, but give you a better to requite it by farre. He would have you part with part of your wealth to doe good, he will lay you up for it, treaſure in heaven for your owne uſe. He would have you forſake the worlds ſand and uncertainty, wherein you cannot truſt; but therefore, hee markes you out a plot out of the rocke wherto you may truſt. He would not have you high-minded in conſideration or compariſon of ought on this earth; but he would have your mindes truly exalted to reach up to heavenly things higher than the earth. And laſt, inſtead of this world, the luſts and riches thereof, to match that, if you will lay hold of it, he holdeth out eternall life and the glory thereof.

To take a ſhort proſpect into eternall life. Life it ſelfe firſt (you know) is ſuch a thing, as were it to be ſold, would be ſtaple ware; if it ſtood where hold might be laid laid on it, ſome would thruſt their ſhoulders out of joynt, but they would reach it. It was a great truth out of a great lyar's mouth, Skinne and all. And I meane not eternall, but this life; and therefore ſome readings have, to lay hold of true life; as if, in this, were little truth. Indeed Saint Auguſtine ſaith, it is nothing but a diſeaſe: Wee ſay of dangerous ſickneſſe, he hath the plague, he is in a conſumption, ſure he will die; and yet it failes; divers die not: whereas, (ſaith he) of life it ſelfe, it may be ſaid, and never failes: He lives, therefore he will certainly dye. Iob. 2 4.

Well yet, this life, ſuch as it is, yet we love it, and loth we are to end it: and, if it be in hazard by the Law, what running, riding, poſting, ſuing, bribing, and if all will not ſerve, breaking priſon is there for it! Or, if it be in danger of diſeaſe, what adoe is there kept, what ill-ſavoured drugges taken! what ſcarifying, cutting, ſearing! and when all comes to all, it is but a few yeares more added; and when they are done, we are where we ſhould have beene before; and then, that which is now life then ſhall be no life. And then, what is it the neerer? What if Adam had lived till this morning, what were he now the neerer? Yet, for all that, as ſhort and fraile as it is, we doe, what poſſibly man can doe, to eeke it ſtill; and thinke our ſelvs jolly wiſe men when we have done, though we die next yeare after for all that. If then with ſo great labour, diligence, earneſtneſſe, endeavour, care and coſt, we buſie our ſelves ſometimes to live for a while, how ought we to deſire to live for ever? if for a time to put death away, how to take death away cleane? You deſire life I am ſure, and long life; and therefore a long life, becauſe it is long, that is, commeth ſomewhat neerer in ſome degree to eternall life: If you deſire a long laſting life, why doe you not deſire an everlaſting life? If a life of many yeares, which yet in the end ſhall faile; why not that life, whoſe yeares ſhall never faile? If we ſay, it is lacke of wit or grace when any man runs in danger of the law of man, whereby haply he abridges himſelfe of halfe a dozen yeares of his life; what wit or grace is there, wilfully to incurre the loſſe of eternall life? For indeed, as in the beginning we ſet downe, it is a matter touching the loſſe of eternall life, we have in hand; and withall touching the paine of eternall death. It is not a loſſe onely, for we cannot loſe life, and become as a ſtone, free from either: if we leeſe our hold of this life, eternall death taketh hold upon us: If we heape not up the treaſure of immortality, we heape up the treaſure of wrath againſt the day of wrath. If your wealth be not with us to life, pecunia veſtra vobiſcum eſt in perditionem. We have not farre to ſeeke for this. For, if now we turne our deafe eare to this Charge, you ſhall fall into temptations: feare yee not that? Into many fooliſh and noyſome luſts; nor fear yee that neither? yet feare whither theſe lead; which drowne men in perdition and deſtruction of body and ſoule. Feare yee not theſe? doth the Lord thunder thus, and are ye not moved? Quibus verbis te curabo? I know not how to doe you good. But, let eternall life prevaile. Sure, if life come not, death comes. There is as much ſaid, now, (not as I have to ſay, but) as the time would ſuffer: Onely let me in a few words deliver the charge concerning this, and ſo I will breake up the Court for this time. Pſal. 101. 28. Rom 2. 5. Acts. 8. 20. Verſe 9.

And now (Right honourable, beloved, &c.) albeit that according to the power that the LORD hath given us, I might teſtifie and charge you in the preſence of GOD the FATHER, who quickeneth all things; and of the LORD IESUS, who ſhall ſhew Himſelfe from Heaven with His mighty Angels in flaming fire, rendering vengeance to them, not onely that know not GOD, but to them alſo that obey not the Goſpell of our LORD IESUS CHRIST, that yee thinke upon theſe things which you have heard to doe them: yet humanum dico, [for your infirmity, I will ſpeak after the manner of men, the nature of a man beſt loveth to be dealt withall, and even beſeech you by the mercies of GOD, even of GOD the FATHER who hath loved you, and given you an everlaſting conſolation and a good hope through grace, and by the comming of our LORD IESUS CHRIST and our aſſembly unto Him,

Him, that you receive not this Charge in vaine; that ye account it His charge, and not mine; received of Him, to deliver to you. Looke not to me I beſeech you: in whom, whatſoever you regard (countenance or learning, yeares or authority) I doe moſt willingly acknowledge my ſelfe farre unmeet to deliver any; more meet a great deale, to receive one my ſelfe, ſave that I have obtained fellowſhip in this buſineſſe, in diſpenſing the Myſteries, and delivering the Charges of the LORD. Looke not on me, looke on your owne ſoules, and have pitie on them: Looke upon Heaven, and the Lord of Heaven and earth, from whom it commeth, and of whom it will be one day called for againe. Surely there is a Heaven; Surely there is a Hell: Surely there will be a day, when enquiry ſhall be made, how we have diſcharged that we have received of the Lord; and how you have diſcharged that, you have received of us in the Lords Name. Againſt which day, your conſciences ſtand charged with many things, at many times heard. O ſeeke not death in the error of your life, deceive not your ſelves; thinke not, that when my words ſhall be at an end, both they ſhall vaniſh in the aire, and you never heare of them againe. Surely you ſhall; the day is comming, when it ſhall be required againe at your hands. A fearefull day for all thoſe, that for a little riches, thinke baſely of others; upon all thoſe that repoſe in theſe vaine riches (as they ſhall ſee then) a vaine confidence; upon all thoſe, that enjoy onely with the belly and the backe, and doe either no good, or miſerable ſparing good with their riches: whoſe riches ſhall be with them to their deſtruction. Beloved, when your life ſhall have an end (as an end it ſhall have) when the error of death ſhall bee upon you; when your ſoule ſhall be cited to appeare before GOD, in noviſſimo; I know and am perfectly aſſured, all theſe things will come to minde againe, you will perceive and feele that, which poſſibly now you doe not. The Devils charge commeth then, who will preſſe theſe points in another manner, than we can: then it will bee too late. Prevent his charge, I beſeech you, by regarding and remembring this, now. Now is the time, while you may and have time wherein, and abilitie wherewith; thinke upon it, and provide for eternall life: you ſhall never in your life ſtand in ſo great need of your riches, as in that day; provide for that day; and provide for eternall life. It will not come yet, it is true, it will be long in comming: but when it comes, it will never have an end.

Wiſ. 1. 12.

This end is ſo good, that I will end with eternall life, which (you ſee) is Saint Pauls end. It is his, and the ſame ſhall be my end, and I beſeech GOD it may be all our ends. To GOD immortall, inviſible, and onely wiſe; GOD, who hath prepared this eternall life for us; who hath taught us this day how to come unto it; whoſe grace be ever with us, and leave us not, till it have thereto brought us; the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt, bee all glory, power, praiſe, and thankeſgiving, now and for ever,

AMEN

ASER-

One of the SERMONS, upon the II COMMANDEMENT

PREACHED IN THE PARISH Church of S. Giles Cripplegate

Ian. IX. AN. DOM. MDXCII.

ACTS CHAP. II. VER. XLII.

And they continued in the Apoſtles Doctrine, and Fellowſhip, and Breaking of Bread and Prayers.

THere had beene two ſundry dayes before, Sermons concerning the poſitive outward worſhip of GOD, out of this Text, conſiſting of theſe foure parts.

1 The Apoſtles Doctrine. 2. Their Society or fellowſhip. 3 Breaking of bread. 4. Prayers.

The effect of this laſt, was to acquaint the Auditory with ſundry Imaginations by diverſe erected, which many unſtable perſons doe runne after and worſhip inſtead of thoſe foure, the Apoſtles Doctrine, &c. The order was to begin with the doctrine firſt, and ſo after, through the reſt, as they ſtand.

IHat ſuch imaginations there are, Salomon complaineth of Ratiocinia plurima, wherby men were with-drawn from the ſimplicity of their creation. And under the Goſpell, S. Paul likewiſe of Venti doctrinarum, wherby Chriſtian people began to bee blowen and carried about from the ſtedfaſtneſſe of the truth. Eccl. 7. ult. Eph. 4 14.

But eſpecially under the Goſpell. For that, as S Auguſtin ſaith (De Civit. 18.) Videns Diabolus templa Dæmonum deſeri, & in nomen CHRISTI currere genus humanum humanum, &c. Seeing idolatrous images would downe, hee bent his whole device, in place of them to erect and ſet up divers imaginations, that the people, inſtead of the former, might bow downe to theſe and Heb.13 9. Apoc. 2. 14. worſhip them. Since which it hath been and is his daily practice, either to broach, Doctrinas novas & peregrinas, new imaginations never heard of before: Or to revive the old, and new dreſſe them. And theſe (for that 2 Cor. 2.10. by themſelves they will not utter) to mingle and to card with the Apoſtles doctrine, &c. that at the leaſt yet, he may ſo vent them.

And this indeed is the diſeaſe of our age, and the juſt complaint we make of it. That there hath beene good riddance made of images: but, for imaginations, they, be daily ſtamped in great number, and inſtead of the old Images, ſet up, deified, and worſhipped, carrying the names & credit of the Apoſtles Doctrine, Government, &c.

Touching theſe imaginations then, to finde ſome heads of them:
1 Tim. 4. 1. Mat. 16. 9. 12. They bee, in reſpect of the Devill, who inſpireth them, called Doctrinæ dæmoniorum. In reſpect of the inſtruments, by whom he breathes them
Apoc. 2. 13. Acts 20. 29. out, Doctrinæ hominum: As the doctrine of the Phariſees, The doctrine of the Nicolaitans.

Theſe men were of two ſorts, as S. Paul ſorteth them, [1] Wolves which from without entered into the Church: [2] Men ariſing from among themſelves teaching perverſe things.

1 Imaginations from without the Church.

1 Thoſe which from without entred, were Philoſophers from the Gentiles: Phariſees from the Iewes. Both which bred many imaginations in Chriſtian Religion.

Againſt them both, S. Paul giveth a double Caveat. Not to be ſeduced by
Col. 2. 8. Philoſophy (meaning as he ſheweth, the vaine deceit of that profeſsion:)
1 Tim. 6. 20. that is the former. [2] Nor with the humane traditions and rudiments of the Phariſees: that, is the latter. To avoid oppoſitions of ſcience falſly ſo called:
Tit. 1. 14. there is the firſt. To avoid Iewiſh fables and traditions: there is the ſe-
Luke 5. ult. cond. For, from theſe two forges, came a great part of the imaginations which enſued. Each of theſe ſects, eſteeming his old wine good; and conſequently brewing it with the new wine of the Goſpell.

1 By Philoſophy.

Imaginations by Philoſophy. Firſt, by the courſe of the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory it appeareth, that Simon Magus (who of a heathen Philoſopher became a Chriſtian, and was baptized) after, through the gall of biterneſſe wherein he was, fell away againe and proved the firſt of Acts 8. 23. all heretikes. Hee, firſt: and after, Valentine; and then, Baſilides deviſed many ſtrange ſpeculative phanſies. And indeed, whoſoever they bee, that dote about unprofitable curious ſpeculations, from this kind they ſprung firſt.

After theſe, thoſe two maine hereſies, that ſo mightily troubled the Church: Firſt, that of the Manichee, who brought a neceſsity upon all things by meanes of his duo principia: making men ſecure how they lived,

ved, becauſe it was ordained what ſhould become of them. Secondly, the other of the Pelagian, who aſcribed to mans free-will, and ability to keepe GOD'S Law; and thereby made void the grace of Chriſt. Both theſe were but two baſtard ſlips of corrupt Philoſophy: The former, an imagination iſſuing from the ſect of the Stoikes and their fatall deſtinie: The latter, from the ſect of the Peripatetikes, and their pure naturalls.

Imaginations by Iudaiſme. As the curious ſpeculations came from the Philoſophers of the Gentiles; So whatſoever ſuperſtitious obſervations were imagined, came from the Phariſees and ſects of the Iewes. As Simon Magus is reckoned, the firſt heretike: So Ebion the Iew, is the ſecond. And from him ſprang the opinion of the neceſsity of Iewiſh obſervances; which was the occaſion of the Councell in Acts 15. and the opinion of worſhipping Angels as Mediators, as Theodoret teſtifieth upon Coloſ. 2.18. And for thoſe Ceremonies, as at the firſt they deſired to retaine thoſe very ſame that were Iudaicall; So (when it was withſtood by the Apoſtles) they did after but turne them, and new varniſh them over into others like, and with them ſo clogged the Church, as the Iewes eſtate was much more tolerable than the Chriſtian's, Saint Auguſtine's complaint, Ep. 19. 2 By Iudaiſme.

Now from theſe two ſorts of perſons proceeded thoſe two ſeverall meanes, whereby (as it were in two moulds) all imaginations have been caſt, and the truth of GOD'S word ever perverted. 1. From the Phariſee, That peecing out the new garment with old raggs of traditions, that is, adding to, and eeking out GODS truth, with mens phanſies; with the Phylacteries and fringes of the Phariſies, who tooke upon them to obſerve many things beſide it. Mat. 9.17. Mar. 7.4. 2. From the Philoſopher, that wreſting and tentering of the Scriptures (which S. Peter complaineth of) with expoſitions and gloſſes newly coyned, to make them ſpeake that, they never meant. Giving ſuch new and ſtrange ſenſes to places of Scripture, as the Church of CHRIST never heard of. And what words are there or can there bee, that (being helped out with the Phariſee's addition of a truth unwritten, or tuned with the Philoſopher's wreſt of a divided ſenſe) may not bee made to give a colour to a new imagination? Therefore, the ancient Fathers thought it meet, that they that would take upon them to interpret the Apoſtle's Doctrine, ſhould put in ſureties, that their ſenſes they gave, were no other, than the Church in former time hath acknowledged. 2 Pet. 3.16. It is true, the Apoſtles indeed ſpake from the Spirit, and every affection of theirs was an oracle: but, that (I take) was their peculiar priviledge. But, all that are after them, ſpeake not by revelation, but by labouring in the word and learning: are not to utter their owne phanſies, & to deſire to be beleeved upon their bare word: (if this be not dominari fidei, to be Lords of their Auditor s faith, I know not what it is:) but onely on condition, that the ſenſe, they now give, bee not a feined ſenſe (as S. Peter termeth it) but ſuch an one, as hath been before given by our fathers and fore-runners in the Chriſtian faith. Say I this of my ſelfe (ſaith the Apoſtle) ſaith not the Law ſo too? Give I this ſenſe of mine owne head, hath not Chriſts Church heretofore given the like? Which one courſe, if it were ſtrictly held, would rid our Church of many fond imaginations which now are ſtamped daily, becauſe every man upon his own ſingle bond, is truſted to deliver the meaning of any Scripture, which is many times nought elſe, but his owne imagination. This is the diſeaſe of our Age. Not the Phariſee's addition (which is well left,) but (as bad as it) the Philoſopher's gloſſe, which too much aboundeth. And I ſee no way but this, to helpe it.

2 From within by Chriſtians. Gal 2.4.

Imaginations from the Chriſtians. Secondly, from among the Chriſtians themſelves aroſe men ſpeaking perverſe things, whom S. Paul well calleth fratres ſubintroductos. Who alſo by their imaginations, mainly corrupted the Apoſtles Doctrine, which we heretofore divided.

into the { 1 Matter, in which { 1 The Subſtance, and therein { 1 the foundation. 2 the Building upon it. } 2 Manner, { 2 The Ceremony.

Concerning all which, imaginations have riſen.

1 In the matter and ſubſtance. a Touching the foundation. Heb. 6. 2. Mar. 1. 15. Acts 20. 20. 1 Repentance Acts 6. *Apoc. 2. 15.

Imaginations touching the foundations. Which are two (ſo called by the name of foundations, firſt laid by our Saviour Chriſt, and after kept by the Apoſtles) Even [a] Repentance, and [b] Faith.

Imaginations touching Repentance. Nicolas one of the ſeven, (as Euſebius teſtifieth) became a man of Imaginations, and began the ſect of the Nicolaitans * whom GOD hateth! After whom aroſe Carpocrates in the ſame, of whom came the ſect of the Gnoſtikes. A ſect that blew up that part of the foundation, which is called Repentance from dead workes. For (as Epiphanius teſtifieth,) they held; that all other things beſides faith, were indifferent, Repentance and all. And that; ſo a man knew and imbraced certaine dictates and poſitions, they would deliver him, live how he liſt, he could not chooſe but be ſaved. And of theſe high points of knowledge they intituled themſelves Gnoſtikes, that is, men of knowledge. And all other Chriſtians that could not talke like them, Simplices, good ſimple ſoules. Such is the imagination in our daies, of carnall Goſpellers; That, ſo hee forget not his Creed, hee cannot miſcarry. Theſe bee the Gnoſtikes of our age.

Imaginations

Imaginations touching faith. On the other ſide, againſt the other part of the foundation (faith;) Latianus a Chriſtian and a great learned man caſt his Mine, of whom was the ſect of the Encratites: who offended at the licentious lives of the Gnoſtikes, fell into the other extreme, that Non eſt curandum quid quiſq; credat, id tantùm curandum eſt, quid quiſq; faciat: that the Creed might be cancelled well enough; for, an upright and ſtraight courſe of life, GOD onely regarded: And in every Sect, a man might be ſaved, that lived well. Theſe, for their ſober and temperate kinde of life, termed themſelves Encratites, that is ſtrict livers; and all other Chriſtians that lived not in like auſterity, Pſychicos (that is) carnall men. Such is in our daies the imagination of the Civill Chriſtian; who, ſo his converſation be blameleſſe and honeſt, careth not for Religion and Faith at all, but for the moſt part lives and dies in brutiſh ignorance. We may call theſe the Encratites of our Age.

Imaginations touching the Building. A ſecondary part of the Apoſtles Doctrine, and not of like neceſsity with the former. Epiphanius writeth (Hereſi 61.) There were a ſect, a branch of the old Cathari or Puritans (as he ſaith) which calleth themſelves Apoſtolici, propter exactum diſciplinæ ſtudium, &c. For an extraordinary deſire they had above other men to have diſcipline and all things, to the exact patterne of the Apoſtles daies; which is it ſelfe an imagination. b Touching the building

For, it were cacozelia an apiſh imitation, to retaine all in uſe then; ſeeing diverſe things; even then, were but temporaria. For beſide their Canon in matters of knowledge, they had their dogmata or decreta, not of equall importance; as was that of eating things ſtrangled, and bloud; which no man now thinketh himſelfe bound to abſtaine from. And, beſides their Epitaxes, commandements in matter of practice, they had their Diataxes, Injunctions, not of equall regard with the former. Such were their Agapæ, love-feaſts after the Sacrament: and their celebrating the Sacrament after Supper; which no Church at this day doth imitate. Therefore, to preſſe all that was in that time is an imagination. 1 Gal. 6. 16. Acts 16. 4. 1 Cor. 11. 10. Iude 12. 1 Cor. 11. 20.

And, as to preſſe all; ſo, of theſe things that remaine, to preſſe all alike, or thinke an equall neceſsity of them, which was a parcell of the imagination of the Donatiſts. For, ſome things the Apoſtles peremptorily commanded: Some things they had no commandement for, but onely gave counſell: Some things they commanded and taught: ſome things, they taught and exhorted: whereof each was to be eſteemed in his own value and worthineſſe: Neither to diſpenſe with the commandement; nor to make a matter of neceſsity of the Counſell. Both which have not a little harmed the Church. 2 1 Cor. 7. 10. 1 Cor. 7. 25. 1 Tim. 4. 11. 6. 2.

Laſtly, for theſe matters of Counſell, which for the moſt part are things indifferent, they alſo fall upon two imaginations: 1 Some ſay:

1 Cor.10.23. Omnia mihi licent : and, ſo it be not condemned as unlawfull, make no bones of it : which tendeth to all prophaneneſſe. Others ſay, Touch not, Col.4.21. Taſte not, Handle not ; which ſpeake of the things indifferent, as meerely unlawfull : which imagination ends in ſuperſtition. A meane way would 1 Cor. 7.35. be holden betweene them both, that neither a ſnare be caſt on mens conſciences, by turning Non expedit into Non licet : nor our liberty in Chriſt Gal.5.13. be made an occaſion to the fleſh, by caſting Non expedit out of doores. For the Spirit of CHRIST is the ſpirit of ingenuity, which will freely ſubmit it ſelfe to that which is expedient, even in things of their owne nature lawfull. The not obſerving whereof with good heed and diſcretion, hath in old time filled the world with many a ſuperſtitious imagination ; and in our dayes hath healed the imagination and ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, with another of riot and licentious liberty, as bad as the former yea a great déale worſe.

2 Imaginations in the ceremony. Imaginations touching the ceremony. Firſt, I take it to be a phancie, to imagine, there needs none: for, without them, neither comelineſſe, nor orderly uniformity, will be in the Church. Women will pray uncovered 1 Cor.11.13. (an uncomely ſight) unleſſe the Apoſtle enjoyne the contrary: therefore, 1 Cor.14.ult Let every thing be done decently and in order. Now, to adviſe what is comely and orderly in each Age and Place, is left in the power and diſcretion of the Governours of each Church ; Viſum eſt Spiritui Sancto & nobis. And the cuſtome of each Church is peaceably to be obſerved by the members of it. In a matter ceremoniall, touching the veiling of women (after ſome reaſons alleaged, which yet a troubleſome body might quarrell with) 1 Cor. 11.16. thus doth S. Paul determine the matter definitively: If any liſt to be contentious. Nos non habemus talem conſuetudinem, nec Eccleſiæ Dei. As if he ſhould ſay : In matters of that quality, each Churches cuſtome is to over-rule, as from that place S Hierome (*Eph.*28.) and S. *Aug. Ep.*86. & .118.) doe both reſolve.

It hath been ever thought meet (ſaith S. Gregory) that there ſhould be In unitate fidei conſuetudo diverſa: that is, the diverſity of cuſtomes, ſhould be in diverſe Churches, all in the unity of one faith, to ſhew the Churches liberty in thoſe matters. And therefore, the eating of things offered to Idols. wholly reſtrained the Churches of Syria & Cilicia, ſeemeth in ſome ſort 1 Cor.10.17. permitted the Church of Corinth, in caſe no man did challenge it.

And as for divers Churches, this hath been judged requiſite; ſo hath it likewiſe be deemed no leſſe requiſite, that every perſon ſhould inviolably obſerve the rites, and cuſtomes of his own Church. Therefore thoſe former ordinances, which, were not urged upon the Corinthians ; upon the Galathians, within the compaſſe of the Regions where they took place, (as we ſee) they were urged (as the fathers interpret thoſe pla- Gal.1 9. ces,) under the paine of Anathema, which cenſure is due to all thoſe that Col.5.12. trouble the Church : as thoſe doe, who for ſetting light by the cuſtomes and orders of the Church, are by S. Paul concluded within the number of persons contentious and troublesome. 1 Cor. 11 16.

Imaginations touching the manner of delivery. For, even in it also, for failing, men must imagine something, that, when they can take no exception to the matter, yet they may itch after a new manner, and heare it, after such and such a sort delivered, or they will not heare at all, and therefore after their owne liking get them a heape of Teachers. 1. They must heare no Latine, nor Greeke, no, though it be interpreted. A meere imagination. For, the Apostle writing to the Corinthians, which were Grecians, hath not feared to use termes as strange to them, as Latine or Greeke is to us (Maranatha, Belial, Abba.) All which he might easily enough have expressed in their vulgar, but that it liked him to retaine his liberty in this pnint. 2 In the manner of delivery. 2 Tim. 4. 3. 1 Cor. 16. 22. 2 Cor. 6. 16. Rom. 8. 15.

2 Nor none of the Apocrypha cited. Another imagination: For, S. Iude in his Epistle, hath not feared to alleage, out of the booke of Enoch (Iude 14.) which booke hath ever beene reckoned Apocrypha. And, by his example all the ancient Writers are full of allegations from them: ever, to these Writings yeelding the next place after the Canon of the Scriptures and preferring them before all forraine Writers whatsoever.

3 Nor any thing alleaged out of the Iewes Thalmud; a third Imagination. For, from their Records, S. Paul is judged to have set downe the names of the Sorcerers that withstood Moses; to be Iames and Iambres; which in Exodus, or the whole Canon or Scriptures are not named. As many other things in the new testament, from them receive great light. And the Iewes themselves are herein cleerely confuted. 2 Tim. 3. 8.

4 But, especially no heathen example or authority (for, with allegation of the ancient Fathers I have often dealt) a matter which the Primitive Church never imagined unlawfull. For, Clemens Alexandrinus (in Strom. 7.) by allusion to Sara and Agar, teacheth the contrary. So doth Basil, in a set Treatise de legendis Ethnicorum Scriptis; and Gregory Nyssen de vitâ Mosis, out of the XXI. of Deut. by the rites touching the marrying of heathen women taken captive: and last of all S. Augustine most plainly, De Doctrinâ Christianâ, 2. 40. And these all reckoned of the contrary, as a very imagination. Which they did the rather, for that, besides divers other places, not so apparant, they find S. Paul, in matter of doctrine, alleaging Aratus a heathen Writer, in his Sermon at Athens. And againe, in matter of life, alleaging Menander, a Writer of Commedies, in his Epistle: And thirdly, in matter of report onely without any urgent necessity, alleaging Epimenides, or as some thinke Callimachus. Acts 17. 28. 1 Cor. 15. 33.

And surely, if it be lawfull to reason from that which Nature teacheth, as S. Paul doth against mens wearing long heare; it is not unlawfull neither, to reason from the wisest and most pithy sayings of naturall 1 Cor. 11. 14.

men. Eſpecially, with the Apoſtle, uſing them (as in a manner they only are uſed) thereby to provoke Chriſtian men to emulation, by ſhewing them their own blindnes in matter of knowledge, that ſee not ſo much as the heathen did by the light of Nature: or their ſlackneſſe, in matter of converſation; that cannot be got ſo farre forward by GOD's Law, as the poore Pagan can by his Philoſophy. That if Grace will not move, ſhame may.

II Touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip.

Imaginations touching the Apoſtles fellowſhip. For, this doctrine received, doth incorporate the receivers of it into a fellowſhip or Society, which is called the fellowſhip, or corporation of the Goſpell: and they, that bring not this doctrine, are no waies to be received thereto. Which Iohn 2. 10. Heb. 10.25. 1 Cor. 11. 19. 1 Cor. 11. 17. Phil. 3. 18. fellowſhip is not to be forſaken, as the manner of ſome is (men of imaginations) in our daies, either becauſe there be hereſies, for oportet eſſe: Or, for that many at communions, come together, not for the better, but for the worſe, for ſo did they in Corinth: Or laſtly, for that many and many Chriſtians walke (which S. Paul wrote with teares) as enemies to the Croſſe of Chriſt; for ſo it was in the Church of Philippi.

1 Cor. 12. 8. Now it is plaine, there can no Society endure without government. And therefore GOD hath appointed in it Governours and Aſſiſtants: which ſeeing they have power from GOD, to reject or receive accuſations,
1 Tim. 5. 19. 1 Cor. 8. 12. and to judge thoſe that are within and of the fellowſhip; it is an idle imagination that ſome have imagined, to hold, the Church hath not her Iudgement-ſeat,
Mat. 18. 17. and power to cenſure her diſobedient children. It hath ever beene holden good Divinity, that the Church from CHRIST received power to cenſure and ſeparate wilfull offenders. Both, with the Heathenman's ſeparation, who might not ſo much as enter into the Church-door
Acts 21. 28, Luke 18. 10. (which is the greater cenſure) and with the Publicans ſeparation (which is the leſſe) who might enter and pray in the Temple, but was avoided in common converſation, and in the fellowſhip of the private table, and therefore much more of the Altar. Of which twaine, the former, the Apoſtle calleth cutting off, Gal. 5. 12. the latter abſtaining from; 2 Theſ 3. 6. The Primitive Church calleth the former excommunicatos, the latter abſtentos. So that, to phanſie no government, is an imagination. A Government there is.

Touching the forme of which Government, many imaginations have lately beene bred; in theſe our daies ſpecially. At the writing of this Acts 2. 42. Verſe, it is certaine, that the Government of Chriſtian people conſiſted in Luke 9. 1. 10. 1 two degrees onely. (Of both which our Saviour CHRIST Himſelfe was the Author.) 1 Of the twelve, 2 Of the ſeventy: both which were over the People, in things pertaining to GOD.

Theſe two, were one ſuperiour to another and not equall. And, that the Apoſtles eſtabliſhed an equality in the Clergy, is (I take it) an imagination. No man could periſh in the gain-ſaying of Coreh, under the Goſpell) which Saint Iude saith, they may) if there were not a superiority in the Clergy: For, Core's mutinie was, becauſe hee might not be equall to Aaron, appointed his ſuperior by GOD, Num. 16. 10. Which very humor (obſerve it who will) hath brought forth moſt part of the hereſies, ſince the time of the Goſpell: that Coreh might not bee Aarons equall. Now, of theſe two orders, the Apoſtles have ever beene reckoned the ſuperior to the other; till our times; as having even under our SAVIOUR CHRIST, a power to forbid others, Luk. 9.49. And after, exerciſing the ſame power; Silas (one of the Seventy) receiving a commandement (ἐπιτάγη) from Saint Paul an Apoſtle to come unto him. As the Auditory had their roome by themſelves, So among the perſons Eccleſiaſticall, the Apoſtles had a higher ſeat, as may bee gathered; and in the very place it ſelfe, were diſtinguiſhed. Now in the place of the Twelve, ſucceeded Biſhops; and in the place of the Seventy, Presbyterie, Prieſts, or Miniſters, and that by the judgement of Irenæus (lib. 3. cap. 3) who lived immediately upon the Apoſtles age: Of Tertullian (de præſcript.) Of S. Auguſtine (in Pſal. 44.) And this, till of late, was thought the forme of that fellowſhip, and never other imagined.

S. Iude

Acts 15. 32. 17 15. 1 Cor. 14. 16. Acts 4. 19.

But, not long ſince, ſome have phanſied another, that ſhould conſiſt of Lay-elders, Paſtors and Doctors, and whether of Deacons too, is not fully agreed yet. Which device is preſſed now upon our Church: not, as a forme of more convenience than that, it hath; but, as one abſolutely neceſſary, and of our Saviour CHRIST owne onely inſtitution, which maketh it the leſſe ſufferable. I know that by vertue of Saint Peters wrinch before mentioned, ſome places may be brought, which may ſeeme to give it colour: but, that is, if we allow thoſe new gloſſed ſenſes. But, if we ſeeke what ſenſes, the Primitive Church gave of them, not one of them, but will ſuffer it to fall to the ground. And, finding it a ſtranger to them, I know not how to terme it, but an imagination. To touch it briefly in a word.

If we aske Scripture for it, and where wee may finde it, they paſſe by the two moſt evident places in appearance; 1 Cor. 12. 28. Becauſe, there are no Paſtors; and Eph. 4. 11. Becauſe, there are no Lay-elders; and lay it upon, Rom. 12. 6, 7, 8. And there, by a ſtrange and un-heard of Expoſition, they will find them al foure. But not, except that Expoſition be allowed them: Nor, if the ancient Writers may be heard, what the true ſenſe of it is. There is no Epiſtle on which ſo many of them have written: Sixe only I will name: Origen, Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, Ambroſe, Hierome, Oecumenius; All which, have entreated of it. Let their Commentaries be looked on upon that place. Not one of them applieth it to the Church-government (which by any likelyhood cannot be imagined, but they would, if it were the maine place for it) or findeth thoſe offices in thoſe words, which they in good earneſt tell us of, as that διάκονος (in the ſeventh verſe) is not the Deacon: but, the Diſtributer (in the eighth verse) is hee: or that qui miseretur, is latine for a Widow, or such like.

But, if jointly they find them not: let us see how severally they warrant their Offices. 1 Of Elders, some both preach and governe: some governe onely: and there they imagine they have found their Lay-elder, 1 *Tim.*5.17. by implication, that there are Presbyteri, that labour not in preaching. Heare S. Chrysostome on 1 Cor. 1. 7. You shall find a farre other sense: Evangelizare (saith hee) perpaucorum est; baptizare autem cujuslibet, modò fungatur Sacerdotio. And a little after Siquidem Presbyteris quidem, qui simpliciores sunt, hoc munus tradimus, ut baptizent; verbum autem ut doceant, non nisi Sapientioribus: hîc sapientia est & labor. Quamobrem & alibi inquit: Qui bene præsunt Presbyteri, duplici honore digni sunt, maximè qui laborant in verbo. Whereby it is plaine, that in S. Chrysostome's time, it was not reckoned meet, that every one that ministred the Sacraments, should also preach. That the meaner sort dealt with the Baptizing; and they onely that were of the more wise sort, with the Word. And to prove, it should thus be, he citeth this their Scripture, as if in the Apostle's dayes, the like had been thought wisdome. But as for lay-elders, He nor any that writeth on it, can finde in this verse; nor any such in all antiquity ever understood by the name of Presbyter.

The Elders Preachers, they divide into Pastors and Doctors: and these they sever in function; limiting the one to his exhortation onely, the other to point of doctrine onely. An imagination, which none of the Fathers would ever acknowledg, search their writings. S. Chrysostome upon this Verse, *Eph.*4.11. taketh them both for one and maketh no difference. So S. Hierome in both his Commentaries upon that Epistle: Omnis enim Pastor Doctor est. But, S. Augustine may serve for all, to shew, how unknowne this device was then. Who being purposely written to, by Paulinus, to assigne a difference betweene them, thus answereth: PASTORES autem & DOCTORES, quos maximè ut discerneremus voluisti, eosdem puto esse, sicut & tibi visum est, ut non alios PASTORES, alios DOCTORES intelligeremus, &c. Hos enim sicut unum aliquod duobus nominibus complexus est, Aug. Ep. 59. ad Paulinum.

Lastly, for their Deacons too: that they should be men of occupation and trade, to deale with the Church-stocke and care of the poore onely, is also (I doubt not) an imagination: seing all Antiquity hath ever reckoned of that Calling, as of a step or degree to the Ministery, out of 1 Tim. 3.13. And, that the Churches practice hath been alwaies to imploy them in other parts and functions besides that, is plain by Iustine Martyr (who lived in the Apostles daies) Apol. 2. ad Antonium, namely, to distribute the Communion: by Tertullian (de Bap.) to baptize: by Cyprian (*Ser.*6 de lapsis) and divers others. So that, to conclude, these are imaginations touching the Apostles fellowship, howsoever, a great number of deceived people bow downe to them and worship them.

Imaginations

III. Imaginations touching the breaking of bread.

Imaginations touching the breaking of bread : which is joyned to that fellowſhip, as the chiefeſt badge of that fellowſhip. For, by it is gathered the communion; as may be gathered by conference with Acts 20.7. and as the Syrian Text tranſlateth it. For that, as by the other Sacrament in the Verſe immediately going before, they are received into the body of the Church; ſo, by this, they are made to drinke of the ſpirit (1 Cor. 13.13.) and ſo, perfected in the higheſt Myſtery of this Society.

Concerning which, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations: Firſt, in that ſhe many times celebrateth this myſtery ſine fractione, without any breaking at all. Whereas (as heretofore hath beene ſhewe d out of 1 Cor. 10.18.) it is of the nature of an Euchariſt or Peace-offering: which was never offered but it was eaten, that both there might be a repreſentation of the memory of that ſacrifice, and together an application to each perſon by partaking it. And ſecondly, in that ſhe hath indeed no breaking of bread at all. For, it being broken (ever) after it is conſecrated, there is (with them) no bread remaining to breake: and the body of CHRIST is now impaſsible, and cannot be broken; ſo that they are faine to ſay they breake Accidents, and indeed they well know not what. Contrary to Saint Luke here, who calleth it fractionem panis; and to Saint Paul (1 Cor. 10.16.) who ſaith Panis quem frangimus. As theſe are their imaginations: ſo we want not ours. For, many among us, phanſie onely a Sacrament in this action, and looke ſtrange at the mention of a Sacrifice: whereas, we not onely uſe it, as a nouriſhment ſpirituall (as, that, it is too) but as a meane alſo, to renew a covenant with GOD, by vertue of that Sacrifice, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, Pſal. 50.5. So our SAVIOUR CHRIST in the inſtitution, telleth us, Luke 22.10. And the Apoſtle, Heb. 13.10. And the old writers uſe no leſſe, the word Sacrifice, than Sacrament; Altar, than Table; Offer, than Eate; but both indifferently, to ſhew there is both.

And againe too, that to a many with us, it is indeed ſo fractio panis, as it is that onely and nothing beſide: Whereas, the bread, which we breake is the partaking of Chriſts true body (and not, of a Signe, figure or remembrance of it) 1 Cor. 10.16. For the Church hath ever beleeved a true fruition of the true body of Chriſt, in that Sacrament.

Further (as heretofore hath beene made plaine) it is an imagination, to think, that this breaking of bread can be ſevered from the other, ver. 46. which is ESAIAS breaking of bread to the needy. Whereby, as in the former, CHRIST communicateth Himſelfe with us; ſo we in this latter, communicate our ſelves with our poore brethren, that ſo, there may be perfect communion. For both in the Sacrifice, which was the figure of it, it was a matter of Commandement, Deut. 16.10. inſomuch, as the pooreſt were not exempt from GOD'S offerings: And our SAVIOUR CHRISTS practice was, at this feaſt, to command ſomewhat to be given to the poore, Iohn 13. 29. And last of all, the Agapæ or love-feasts of the Christians for releefe of the poore, doe most plainly expresse that, I meane. In place of which (when they after proved inconvenient) succeeded the Christian Offertorie.

Eſay 58.7.

Luke 21.4.

And lastly, whereas we continue in the Doctrine and Prayers of the Church, we do many times discontinue this action a whole yeare together. These long intermissions (so that, if it be panis annuus, once a yeare received, we thinke our duty discharged) and also (no doubt) a second imagination in our common practice. For sure, we should continue also in this part, and the frequenting of it, if not so often as the Primitive Church did (which, either thrice in the weeke, or at the furthest once, did communicate) yet, as often as the Church doth celebrate; which (I thinke) should do better to celebrate more often. And those exceptions which commonly we alleage to disturbe our selves for that action, make us no lesse meet for prayers than for it. For except a man abandon the purpose of sin, Psal. 66.18. and except he be in Charity, Mat. 6.14. he is no more fit to pray than to communicate; and therefore should abstaine from the one as well as from the other. Or, to say the truth, should by renewing himselfe in both these points, make himselfe meet for both, continuing no lesse in the breaking of bread, than in prayers and doctrine.

IIII. Imaginations touching Prayers.

Imaginations touching prayers. As the former was the most speciall exercise of a Christian, and chiefest in dignity; So, this is the most generall and chiefest in use. Therefore he puts it in the plurall number: as if, both in preaching, censuring, and communicating, it had his use; as indeed it hath. Before all things (1 Tim. 2.1.) In all things (1 Thes. 5.17.) After all things (Ephes. 6.18. Num. 6. verse ult.) And in this also we want not phansies: In this age especially, wherein, an idle conceit is taken up, that never came into the heads of any of the old heretikes, though never so brain-sicke once to imagine: Our SAVIOUR CHRIST thus willeth us, When yee pray, say, Our FATHER, &c. A most fond imagination is start up in our times, never once dreamed of before, that telleth us, in no case we must say, Our FATHER, &c. with which form (if Saint Augustine be to be beleeved as a witnesse of antiquity) the universall Church of CHRIST, hath ever used to begin and end all her prayers, Ep. 59. as striving indeed by divers other formes more largely to expresse the sense of that prayer, but not being able to come neere the high art, and most excellent spirit of perfection in that patterne, they alwaies conclude with it; as being sure, howsoever they may for divers defects not attaine to the depth of it; and by it, they shall be sure to beg all things necessary at GOD's hands. This, I named first, because it is appropriate to our times.

Luke 11.12.

Besides, as the Church of Rome hath her imaginations touching

Prayers

Prayers: firſt, againſt S. Paules Orabo & mente, in ſetting the people to pray they wote not what; and ſo making their underſtanding unfruitfull, 1. Cor. 14. 14. And againe, againſt our Saviour Chriſts Caveat (Mat. 6. 7.) in ſetting them to goe over whole Roſaries and Pſalters, as if much babling after the heathen manner, were acceptable to GOD: So likewiſe, doe others alſo among us, erre in their imaginations, no leſſe, and that even againſt the ſame places. Firſt, againſt Orabo ſpiritu (1 Cor. 14 15.) in the ſame verſe, by finding fault with a ſet Liturgie (which they call ſtinted prayers) and giving themſelves to imagine prayers at the ſame inſtant: wherby it is plain, they ſo occupie their minds, with deviſing ſtill what to ſay next, their ſpirit is unfruitfull, no leſſe than the others underſtanding: And both theſe, [1] the underſtanding of the minde, and the affection of the ſpirit are there neceſſarily required. And againe, that in ſtead of Roſaries and a number of praiers, they bring in the Phariſes imagination of long prayers (that is) a prayer as long as a whole Roſarie. And this they take to be a great part of holineſſe; but indeed it is nothing but the former ſuperſtition drawn in backward. In which, who ſo markes them, ſhall find, they commit both faults; that of the Phariſee, in tedious length procuring many times nauſeam ſpiritus, a dangerous paſsion: and the other of the Heathen, in fond repetitions, tautologies, inconſequences, and all the abſurdities that may fall into ſuch manner of ſpeech. Saint Cyprian ſaith, It was ever in Chriſt's Church counted an abſurd thing (which ſome count their glory) ventilari preces inconditis vocibus. The abſurditie whereof would better appeare, if (ſeeing under prayers here, Pſalmes, and ſpirituall ſongs are contained, both being parts of invocation) they would have no ſtinted Pſalmes, but conceive their ſongs too, upon the preſent out of the ſpirit, and ſo ſing them. For to ſay truth, there is no more reaſon for the one, than for the other. But GODS Church hath ever had, as a forme of doctrine, both of faith in the Creed; and of life, in the Decalogue; ſo of prayer too. Which, from Acts 13. 2. the Fathers in all ages have called a Liturgie, or ſervice of GOD.

[1] Mat. 23. 14.

Theſe are, of many imaginations, ſome ſet up and magnified by ſome, and by others adored and worſhipped, under the names of the [1] Apoſtle's Doctrine, [2] Government, [3] Sacraments, and [4] Prayers,

Saint Stephen telleth us (out of the fift of Amos) that if we doe thus make to our ſelves, Tabernacles and figures to worſhip them, our puniſhment ſhall be to be carryed away beyond Babylon (Acts 7. 43.) And good reaſon, for theſe idle phanſies, are not from Chriſt's Church, from Sion; but from Babylon they came, and if we delight in them, thither ſhall we be carryed.

And ſure, we are in a good way thitherward: for of Babel Saint Auguſtine ſaith; Civitas illa confuſionis indifferenter habuit Philoſophos inter ſe diverſa & adverſa ſentientes. In GOD's citie, it was never ſo; there was ever correction for Coyners: but, in Babel (the Citie of confuſion) every Philoſopher might ſet up; as now, every Sect-maſter may broach any imagination that taketh him in the head, without puniſhment. For in Babel, it is reckoned but an indifferent matter. Sure the Prophets tell us, that if Babylon's confuſion goe thus before, the captivity of Babylon is not far behinde. From which, Almightie GOD deliver us, and make us carefull, as to continue the Apoſtle's doctrine &c. So neither to engrave, nor to bow downe and worſhip any of theſe imaginations. Amen.

One of the Sermons upon the III. COMMANDEMENT

PREACHED IN THE PARISH Church of St. GILES Cripplegate, Iun. XI. AN. DOM. MDXCII.

IEREM. CHAP. IV. VER. II.

Et jurabis, vivit Dominus, in veritate, & in judicio, & in juſtitia.

And thou ſhalt ſweare, the LORD liveth, in truth, in judgement, and in righteouſneſſe.

OF this Commandement, there are two maine Propoſitions. 1. Thou ſhalt take the Name of GOD: Elſe, it ſhould have been, thou ſhalt not take it at all. 2. Thou ſhalt take it orderly, and not in vaine. Of the firſt: thou ſhalt take it to thoſe ends and uſes, to which GOD lendeth it. Of which one is, Thou ſhalt ſweare by it: which is limited by two waies.

Firſt, by what: The Lord liveth.

Secondly, how: In truth, judgement, juſtice. As in the former Commandements, ſo in this, there be two Extremes. 1. The one, of the Anabaptiſts, which hold all ſwearing unlawfull, contrarie to the firſt, Thou ſhalt ſweare. 2. The other of the licentious Chriſtian, which holds (at leaſt in practice) A man may ſweare how, and in what ſort he liſt: By Creatures, &c. Contrarie to The Lord liveth, &c. Falſly raſhly, lewdly; Contrarie to In truth, judgement, juſtice.

1. Thou ſhalt ſweare.

That it is lawfull to ſweare, it appeareth by the Law, Deut. 6. 13. By the Prophets: Ieremie heere. Eſai, (Chap. 45. Ver. 23.) more earneſtly: I have ſworne by My Selfe, the word is gone out of My mouth and ſhall not returne, That every knee ſhall bow to Me, & every tongue ſhall ſweare by Me. David, Pſal. 63. ult. Laudabuntur omnes, qui jurant per Eum. By the practice of the Saints, not only under Moſes; but, under the Law of Nature. Abraham ſweareth, Gen. 21. 24. Iſaac ſweareth, Gen. 26. 31. Iacob ſweareth, Gen. 31. 33. Now, our Saviour Chriſt came not to deſtroy the Law and the Prophets, in thoſe things wherein they agree with the Law of Nature. Therefore, not to take away an oath.

Whereas, they object firſt: That it ſtandeth not with Chriſtian profeſſion, but was tolerated, as an unperfect thing, under the Law.

We anſwere: It cannot be reckoned an Imperfection, to ſweare. For that, not onely Abraham, the patterne of humane perfection, both ſware himſelfe, Gen. 21. 24. and put his ſervant to an oath, Gen. 24. 3. But, even the Angels, neerer than we to perfection, ſware both under the Law (Dan. 12. 7.) and under the Goſpell (Apoc. 10. 6.) And, not onely they, but even God Himſelfe (in whom are all perfections) Gen. 22. 16. and Pſal. 110. 4. So that it cannot be imagined an imperfection.

Beſides, the holy Apoſtles, the moſt perfect Chriſtians, have in urgent cauſes done the like, 2 Corinth. 1. 23. I call God for a record againſt mine owne ſoule, and 1 Cor. 15. 31. By our rejoycing which I have in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord: which place cannot be avoided, having in the Greeke, the word (Nai) never uſed, but in an oath onely.

Whereas ſecondly, they object our Saviour's ſaying, I ſay unto you ſweare not at all: The Ancient Writers anſwere, that our Saviour Chriſt in the very ſame place, not reproving the other part, Reddes autem Domino Iuramenta tua, meant not to take all oathes away: But muſt be underſtood according to the Phariſees erroneous gloſſe of this Commandement, which He intendeth to overthrow, by oppoſing to dictum eſt antiquis, Ego autem dico: Which was of two ſorts: 1. For firſt, it ſeemeth they underſtood it of perjurie alone: So that, if a man forſware not himſelfe, he might ſweare an oath. And ſo Chriſt reproveth not onely falſe, but all raſh and unadviſed ſwearing.

2. Secondly, it ſeemeth, they had this conceipt: So a man ſware not by the great Name of God, all was well; He might ſweare by any creature at his pleaſure: and ſo Chriſt willeth, not to ſweare at all, by any creature.

Though indeed, we hold in Divinitie, that Iurare, of and by it ſelfe conſidered, is an act forbidden, no leſſe than Occîdere. And that, as it is an abſolute countermand, Non occîdes, and yet the Magiſtrate, by due courſe of Iuſtice, executing a malefactor is commended: So is it likewiſe wiſe Non jurabis; and yet being (as wee terme it) veſtitum debitis circumſtantiis, Laudabuntur omnes qui jurant per Eum, as King David ſaith, Pſal. 63. ult.

Laſtly, there is alſo a barre in the word Iurare. For, God in His Law: ever putting it paſſively (that is) rather, thou ſhalt be ſworne, or called to an oath, than, thou ſhalt ſweare, actively: our Saviour Chriſt heere utterly condemneth the active, voluntarie ſwearing of men, of their own heads: which was in deed never permitted: howſoever the Phariſees gloſſed the matter, If the matter were true, and ſo it were by Iehova.

So that, an oath is Lawfull: but with this condition limited; that the Partie doe therein habere ſe paſſivè, come to it not of his owne accord, but preſſed (as Saint Auguſtine well ſaith) vel autoritate deferentis, vel duritie non credentis, as to the lifting of a burden, as to the entring of a bond. Num. 30. 3.

Thou ſhalt ſweare, The Lord liveth, or (as Moſes ſaith Deut. 6. 13.) by God's Name. Which clauſe firſt doth limit, by what we are to ſweare: and doth exclude [1] Swearing by thoſe which are no gods, Ier. 5. 7. Either Idolls, forbidden in the Law, Exod. 23. 13. Ioſ. 23. 7. Either to ſweare by them alone, Amos 8. ult, Or to joine God and them together, Zeph. 1. 5. [2] Or creatures, which our Saviour Chriſt forbiddeth, Mat. 5. 34. 1. Limitation. The Lord liveth.

And ſure, as to ſweare by them is derogatorie to our ſelves, ſeeing thereby we make them our betters; for that every one that ſweareth, ſweareth by a greater than himſelfe, Heb. 6. 16. So it is highly injurious to the Majeſtie of God; ſeeing to ſweare by a creature, is to aſcribe unto it power, to ſee and know all things, and to doe vengeance on perjurie: Which in Divinitie, to thinke or ſay, is manifeſt blaſphemie.

Howbeit yet the Fathers (well weighing that ſpeech of Saint Paul, 1. Corinth. 15. 31. where he ſpeaketh on this wiſe, By our rejoicing which we have in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord, &c. wherein his oath, is not immediatly by the Name of God, but by a ſecondarie thing, iſſuing from it:) have thought it not abſolutely neceſſarie, that in every oath, the Name of God ſhould be expreſly mentioned; but ſufficient, if reductivè. It is ruled in Divinitie, that ſuch things as preſently are reduced to God, will beare an oath. In which reſpect, to ſweare by the Holy Goſpell (conſidering our rejoicing will beare an oath, and that, in the Goſpell, our matter of rejoicing is principally contained) hath in the Primitive Church been holden lawfull. As in the Councell of Conſtantinople 6. Act. 13. Eſpecially, ſeeing there is no direct conteſtation uſed, but rather by way of oppignoration, Engaging unto God our Salvation, Faith, Rejoicing, part in His Goſpell and promiſes, the Contents, &c. if we utter an untruth.

II. The manner, or ſecond limitation.

Secondly, the forme and manner of ſwearing. Which is of three ſorts: 1. Either by conteſtation as here, The Lord liveth. Before God, Gal. 1. 2. Or God knoweth it is ſo, 2 Cor. 11. 11. God is my witneſſe, 1 Theſ. 2. 5. 2. Or by a more earneſt aſſeveration: As ſure as God liveth, Iud. 8. 19. 3 Or by deteſtation and execration, as in other places: and that againe is of two ſorts: 1. By imprecation of evill: God be my Iudge, Gen. 31. 53. God behold it and rebuke it, 1 Chro. 12. 17. God doe ſo, and ſo unto me, 1 Sam. 14. 44. I call God a record againſt my ſoule, 2 Cor. 4. 23. 2. Or by oppignoration or engaging of ſome good which we would not loſe: as Our rejoicing in Chriſt, 1 Cor. 15. 3. Our Salvation, God's helpe, &c.

Both are oft, and may be joined together, if it be thought meete. God is my witneſſe, that thus it is, and GOD be my Iudge, if thus it be not. Wherein, as in Prayer; when all meanes faile, we acknowledge, that GOD can help, as well without, as with ſecond cauſes: So we confeſſe that He can diſcover our truth and falſhood, and can puniſh the ſame by waies and meanes to Him knowen, though no creature in the world beſide, know the thing or can take hold of us.

Thou ſhalt ſweare: In Truth, Iudgement, Iuſtice. The three Enclo-ſure and companions of a Chriſtian oath, are

In	Truth	Falſhood	the	matter.
	Iudgement	Lightneſſe		matter and manner both.
	Iuſtice	Vnlawfulneſſe		end.

I In truth.

In truth: Ye ſhall not ſweare by my name falſly, Levit. 19. 12. Which vice forbidden we call perjurie. Each action, we ſay, is too light ſuper debitam materiam. The due and owne matter of ſwearing, is a Truth. If it fall or light ſuper indebitam materiam (as, falſhood) it proveth a ſinne.

At all times are we bound to ſpeake truth to our neighbour, Eph. 4. 5. But; becauſe men are naturally given to have their mouth fraught with vanitie, Pſal. 144. 8. in ſolemne matters, to be ſure, to bring the truth from us, GOD is ſet before us. If then, when wee confeſſe the truth, We give glorie to GOD, Ioſ. 7. 21. So if, when GOD being ſet before us, we teſtifie an untruth, it is exceeding contumelious to Him: it is to make Him one, that knoweth not all things; or that can be deceived; or that if He know, cannot doe any harme; or (which is worſt) which will willingly be uſed to boulſter out our lyes. Pejerare, eſt dicere Deo, Deſcende de Cœlo, & aſſere mecum mendacium hoc.

1 Of Promiſe

In an oath of Promiſe, we are to ſweare in Truth, He that ſweareth an oath, and by it bindeth his ſoule with a bond, ſhall not violate his word, but doe according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth, Num. 30. 3. Reddes autem Domino Iuramenta, Matt. 5. 33. Yea, by the very light of nature Pharao willeth Ioſeph, Goe and bury thy Father, ſeeing he made thee ſweare to doe

doe ſo. Againſt which oath, men are two waies faulty. 1. If at the ſwearing they purpoſe not (as David ſaith, Pſ. 119. 106. I have ſworne and am utterly purpoſed:) Such is the nature of an oath. 2. If they then purpoſe, but after, a dammage being likely to enſue, they diſappoint their former oath, Pſa. 15. 15. Touching which, we ſee, that when Ioſua and the Iſraelites had ſworne to the men of Gibeon, though that oath coſt them foure great and faire Cities, which ſhould otherwiſe have come to their poſſeſsion; they would not breake though. As contrariewiſe, Zedekias having given his oath of Allegiance to the King of Babylon (2. Chro. 36. 9.) when he regarded it not, but roſe againſt him notwithſtanding, GOD ſendeth him word, he ſhall never proſper for ſo doing, Ezek. 17. 12. And to ſay truth, there is nothing more forcible to move us herein, than to conſider GOD's owne practice: Who having ſworne for our benefit, Pſal. 110. 4. though by many our unkindneſſes and hard uſages provoked, yet (as Himſelfe ſaith) will not breake His Covenant, nor alter the thing that is gone out of His lipps, Pſal. 89. 35. Which is it, that keepeth us all from periſhing; even the immutable truth of GOD's Oath, that we the rather may take it to imitation.

In an oath of Proofe: the charge ought to be, that we ſpeake nothing but that which is true in the Name of the Lord, 1 Reg. 22. 16. That we ſay the truth and lye not, our conſciences bearing us witneſſe in the Holy Ghoſt: which if we doe not, being charged by a Iudge, we beare our own iniquitie, Leviticus 5. 1. 1 Of Proofe. Rom. 9. 1.

Againſt which oath, men are two waies faulty: 1 If either they ſwear to that, which they know to be falſe; as if a man finde, and denie it, ſwearing falſly, Levit. 6. 3. 2 Or, if they preſume to ſweare directly, in a matter, wherein themſelves are doubtfull, or have no ſure ground of As if a man ſweare, and the thing be hid from him, Leviticus. 5. 4.

The breach of theſe two ſorts of oathes, in regard of the truth, is called perjurie; and both in old time and now, we greatly complaine of it in two places: 1. The one, they call Iuramenta Officinarum: When men in their ſhopps, So they may utter to their gaine, care not how untruly they abuſe the Name of GOD. Men, which (as the Wiſe man ſaith) reckon our life as a market, wherein they muſt be getting on every ſide, though it be by evill meanes, Sap. 15. 12. Or, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 1 Tim. 6. 15. That doe in practice ſeeme to hold, that gaine is godlineſſe; for all the world as the prophane man in the Comedie, Iuramentum, rei ſervandæ non perdendæ conditum; that Oathes were made to thrive by. Full little knew thoſe men, that whatſoever is gotten by falſe ſwearing, muſt by GOD's Law, both be reſtored in the whole Summe, and adde an overplus beſide: Elſe no atonement can be made for them, Leviticus 6. 5. And if that atonement be not made, that GOD by His Prophet hath denounced, that their gaine ſhall not proſper. For He will ſend the flying booke into their houſe, a Curſe appropriate to thoſe that both ſweare and ſteale,

(that is, ſteale by ſwearing) which ſhall conſume both the goods, and the very ſtone, timber and all, of the houſe it ſelfe, Zac. 5.4.

2. The other they call Iuramenta Tribunalium, much more fearefull and heynous than the former: when a man (or rather as Saint Auguſtine calleth him, deteſtanda bellua, no man, but a deteſtable beaſt) ſhall ſo farre preſume, as in the Iudgement it ſelfe, which is GOD's (2 Chro. 19.8.) before the Magiſtrates, which are GODS (Pſal. 82. 6.) to prophane the oath of GOD, Eccleſ. 8.2. Even, as it were, to come into GOD's owne place, and there to offer Him villanie to His face. A crime ſo grievous, as no Nation, were it never ſo barbarous, but have thought it ſeverely to be puniſhed: Some with loſſe of tongue; Some, of fingers; Some, of eares; and ſome, of life it ſelfe. And howſoever they eſcape man, the Prophet ſaith, the very Booke of the Law, which they have touched in teſtifying an untruth, ſhall have wings given it, and ſhall purſue them, and cut them off on this ſide, and on that ſide, till they and their name be rotted from the earth. It is a fearefull thing to fall into GOD's hands on this wiſe: and of no one ſinne, more dreadfull examples. For it is indeed, facere Deum mendacii conſortem. We hold it worſe in Divinitie, to lay upon GOD, that evill which we call malum culpæ, than the other which we terme malum pœnæ, which hath beene inflicted on many an innocent good man. Conſequently, a leſſe evill, to crucifie Chriſt by any bodily paine, than to draw Him into the ſocietie of Sinne, which every perjured perſon doth, as much as in him lieth. Yea, we ſay that the Name of GOD being fearefull to the devils themſelves, and bringing them to tremble, that that partie that treadeth that moſt glorious and fearefull Name, under his feet, is in worſe eſtate, not onely than the wickedeſt of all men, the Murderers of Chriſt, but even than the devill himſelfe. And all this, that we conceive aright of In veritate.

2 In Iudgement.

In Iudicio. For, thus far the Phariſees themſelves come; to thinke perjurie condemned. But, our righteouſneſſe is to exceed theirs, Mat. 5.20. and therefore we muſt ſeeke yet farther.

This Clauſe (we ſay) ſtandeth againſt a double vanitie, [1] as well in matter, if for a vaine, light, trifling matter we ſweare; [2] as in manner alſo, if with a vaine, light, unadviſed mind or affection. For, both the matter is to be weightie, grave, and judiciall; and we are with due advice and judgement to come to the action.

Againſt which Iudiciall ſwearing, we complaine of two evill kinds: 1. The one Iuramenta Platearum, ſuch as going through the ſtreets, a man ſhall every day heare (yea, even out of the mouthes of children,) light, undiſcreet, frivolous oathes. 2. The other Iuramenta Popinarum, much worſe yet than they. When men in Tabling-houſes, at their game blaſpheme the Name of GOD moſt grievouſly. Not content to ſweare by by Him whole, dismember Him and pluck Him in peeces, that they may have oaths enough. And that person of the Holy Trinitie, to whom and to His name, for taking our flesh upon Him, and performing our redemption, even by GOD's owne charge, a speciall regard is due: and that action of His, which among the rest is most venerable of all others, which is His Death, Passion, and shedding His Blood.

For the Matter: The very words of the Commandement teach us, it is to be weightie; which speake of GOD's Name, as a thing, to be lifted up with strength, as if it were heavy: and we use not to remove things heavy but upon good occasion. 1 For the Matter.

The nature of an Oath, is as of a bond; which none that is wise will easily enter: it is to be drawen from, or pressed out of a man upon necessarie cause. Yea, it is no further good, than it is necessarie. For so is our rule, Necessarium, extra terminos necessitatis, non est bonum: As, purging, blood-letting; which are no longer good than needfull. The Name of GOD is as a strong Castle, which men flye not to, but when they have need. These shew, that for every frivolous matter, and of no importance, we are not vainly to take up GOD's Name. GOD's Name is said to be holy, Psal. 111. 9. and holy things may not be put to common and vulgar uses, Numbers 18. ult. And in plaine words, Leviticus 22. 32. Ye shall not pollute my Name. Polluting, by GOD's owne word, being nothing else, but to make common, Acts 10. 15. Therefore they, to be condemned, that no man urging them, upon no sufficient ground, make it common.

For the Manner, with great regard, Eccle. 8. 1. we must sweare to the LORD, with all our heart. They are highly praised that did so, 1 Chro. 15. 15. that is, When they are to take an Oath, they are to call together the powers of their soule, and with sad and serious deliberation to undertake it; that is, to doe it in Iudicio. Therefore in the Law, GOD maketh it the entrie, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy GOD, and shalt sweare by His Name: that is, with due feare and reverence thou shalt sweare. For, as GOD's Name is holy; not for every common matter: so is it also reverend; not with an unregarding affection to be taken in our mouthes. 2 For the Manner.

To this end is it, that the Church of GOD excludeth such persons from oaths, as are presumed, that in Iudgement they cannot, or will take them: as persons already convict of perjurie, that they will not: Those that are under yeares, that they can not. To this end also, there have ever been used Ceremonies, that by that meanes, there might be a reverend regard stricken into the minde of the swearer. Therefore the very Angels, when they sweare, doe it not without ceremonie, but with lifting up their hands to heaven, Dan 12. 7. Apoc. 10. 5. The Patriarchs, under the Law of Nature, not without ceremonie, but laying their hand on the thigh, therein have reference to the incarnation of the Blessed Seed, Gen. 24. 3. and 47. 29. The people of GOD under the Law, came into the the Temple, and before the Altar (1 Reg. 8. 31.) and in the preſence of the Prieſt (Deut. 12. 8.) uncovered (Numbers 5. 18.) ſo tooke their Oath: all theſe ſerving to ſtir up their reverence, that what they did, they might doe in judgement.

Therefore, they are to be condemned, that paſſionately ſweare, Eccl. 5. 1. (which Paſsion alwaies bereaveth men of judgement:) either in anger, as David, which he repented of, 1 Samuel 25. 33. Or in deſire, as Saul, which proved prejudiciall to him and his people, 1 Samuel 14. 28. And they, that as not of any paſsion, ſo without al manner of reſpect, to avow any idle, fond fanſie of their owne, even as it were water, powre out the Name of GOD.

And they yet more, that not onely unadviſedly ſometimes, but continually (as it were by a cuſtome) make it an Interjection of filling, for all their ſpeeches, and cannot utter one ſentence without it: yea, which therby come to a diabetica paſsio of ſwearing, that Oathes runne from them, and they feele them not.

But, above all, they that are come to that pitch, that even in contempt they ſweare, and will ſwear, and the rather becauſe they be told of it. Theſe perſons the Church of GOD hath ſo deteſted, that they are excommunicate without ſentence of any Iudge or Canon, and Chriſtian people forbidden to have any fellowſhip with them.

I. In Juſtice. In Iuſtitiâ. As the Matter of the Oath is to be true and weighty; and the Manner, with due advice and judgement: ſo is it to be taken alſo, to a good and juſt end. And of this there is to be had chiefe regard, for that divers times, both falſe and raſh Oathes are not hurtfull ſave to the ſwearer only. But theſe tend alway to ſome miſchiefe, beſide the ſinne of the ſwearing.

An Oath is of the nature of a Bond, and bindeth a man to do that, he ſweareth: Now, it is ſinne enough, to doe evill of it ſelfe; but to bind himſelfe to doe evil, and to make the Name of GOD the Bond, that is ſinne out of meaſure ſinfull. GOD hath ordained, that onely for truth and right, His Name ſhould be uſed: to abuſe it, to uphold falſhood, and to enforce men to evill dealing, is to change a Sanctuarie, and make it a brothel-houſe. Theſe we call Latronum Iuramenta; ſuch Oathes, as theeves and ſuch kinde of perſons take one of another; For, they doe not only joyne hand in hand (as Salomon telleth us, Proverbes 26. 5.) but doe even alſo by oath bind themſelves to doe miſchiefe. Nehemiah 6. 28. Tobiah the ſpeciall hinderer of the Temple, had many in Iuda his ſwornemen.

II. Not of things impoſsible. That an Oath may be in juſtice, It is required that it be of a thing poſsible. No man ever required an Oath, to an Impoſsibilitie apparent: So Abraham's ſervant ſaith, Geneſis 24. What If I cannot poſsibly get any maiden to come with me? Abraham's anſwer is, then he ſhall be free from the oath:

So

So that, if at the preſent it ſeeme poſsible (otherwiſe not to be ſworne to) and after, there doe emergere impoſsibile, the partie is innocent. The ſame is obſerved, touching our knowledge: for, ſo the Law ſaith, A man ſhall teſtifie that onely, which he hath ſeene, heard or knowne, and more ſhall not be required of him. So, the law of Nature, onely de quibus ſciam poteroque. Levit. 5. 1.

Now becauſe (as Ioſeph well telleth us, Geneſis 39. 9.) that we only can doe that, which lawfully we can, and Chriſtian poſsibility implieth lawfulneſſe; that is the ſecond point of Injuſtitia, and the ſecond Caveat Ne illicitum. Which is either primâ facie, as Saul's oath, 1. Samuel 28.10. and Acts.23 14. Or it is likewiſe emergens, as in Herod's oath, at the firſt no harm being underſtood; but after the demand made, it was ſinne to keepe it. So ſaith Ezra in the Law, Secundùm legem fiat, Ezra 10. 5. And Saint Paul in the Goſpell, Acts 23.3. They ſit to judge ſecundùm id quod in Lege eſt. Nor unlawfulneſſe.

Put theſe together, that we be required to ſwear nothing but the truth, In veritate: that we doe it upon due advice and conſideration, In judicio: that we do it but of thoſe things we know & can tel, & of thoſe wherto Law bindeth us: There is no more required in a Chriſtian oath. This to be remembred, becauſe diverſe which will be accounted Chriſtians, refuſe in our daies, the Oath which hath all her attendents. If the Magiſtrate, either Civil (Exodus 22. 8. Nehemiah 5.12.) or Eccleſiaſticall (Numbers 5.19.) [1] Either by a curſe, where the partie is not knowne, as Proverbs 29. 24. Iudges 17.2. Leviticus 5. 1. [2] Or by tendring an oath; and that againe double: [1] Either by way of adjuration, 1 *Sam.*3.27. 1 Reg. 22. 16. [2] Or by way of ſwearing them, as Exodus 22.11. Numbers 5.13. 1 Reg. 8.31. 1. Reg. 18. 10. Where the party is accuſed by complaint, detection, (Geneſis 3.) preſumption (Geneſis) 4.) common fame (1. Corinthians 5.4.) Hee is bound to purge himſelfe, and ſatisfie the people, in Adultery, Theft, or any crime. Mat. 26.63.

But what if it end to his dammage, or to the prejudice of his liberty? Our rule is; Qui poteſt ad pœnam, poteſt ad quæ pœna conſequitur. Therefore in a matter of life or limme, we admit not the Oath: becauſe, no man can lawfully ſweare, to caſt away or maime himſelfe. But a man may directly ſweare to his loſſe, in his goods, as Geneſis 25. 33. and to become a priſoner, as (1. *Reg.*1.43.) Shemei did. Therefore, ſweare, and be ſworne in thoſe cauſes and queſtions, whereto Law doth bind to give anſwere, though, Fine and Commitment doe enſue upon them.

This queſtion remaineth, If a man have ſworn without thoſe, what he is to doe? when an oath binds, when it doth not?

Wee

We hold : No man is ſo ſtraightened betweene two ſinnes, but without committing a third, he may get forth. Herod thought he could not ; and therefore, being in a ſtrait, betwixt murder and perjurie, thought he could have no iſſue, but by putting Saint Iohn Baptiſt to death. It was not ſo : for, having ſworne, and his oath proving unlawfull, if he had repented him of his unadviſedneſſe in ſwearing, and gone no further, he had his iſſue, without any offence.

1. If then We have ſworne to be ſimply evill, the rule is, Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, vinculum iniquitatis.

2. If it hinder a greater or higher good, the rule ; Ne ſit Sacramentum pietatis, impedimentum pietatis.

3. If it be in things indifferent, as we terme them, abſque grano ſalis ; it is a raſh oath ; to be repented, not to be executed.

4. If the oath be ſimply made ; yet (as we ſay) it doth ſubjacere Civili intellectui : ſo as GOD'S oath doth, Ieremia 18. 8. and therefore thoſe conditions may exclude the event, and the Oath remaine good.

5. If in regard of the Manner, it be extorted from us, the rule is ; Injuſta vincula rumpit juſtitia.

6. If raſhly, Pœnitenda promiſsio, non perficienda præſumptio.

7. If to any man, for his benefit, or for favour to him ; if that partie releaſe it, it bindeth not.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED AT WHITEHALL;

upon the Sunday after EASTER, being
March XXX. An : Dom. MDC.

IOHN. CHAP. XX. VER. XXIII.

Quorum remiſeritis peccata, remittuntur eis: Et quorum retinueritis, retenta ſunt.

VVhoſe-ſoever ſinnes yee remit, they are remitted unto them: and whoſe-ſoever ye retaine, they are retained.

The concluſion of the Goſpell for the Sunday.

THEY be the vvords of our SAVIOUR CHRIST to His Apoſtles. A part of the firſt vvords, vvhich He ſpake to them at His Epiphanie, or firſt apparition after He roſe from the dead. And they containe a Commiſsion by Him granted to the Apoſtles, vvhich is the Summe or Contents of this Verſe.

Which Commiſsion, is His firſt largeſſe after His riſing againe. For, at His firſt appearing to them, it pleaſed Him not to come empty, but with a bleſsing, and to beſtow on them, and on the world by them, as the firſt fruits of His reſurrection, this Commiſsion; a part of that Commiſsion, vvhich the ſinfull vvorld moſt of all ſtood in need of for remiſsion of ſinnes.

The Summarie proceeding in it.

To the granting whereof, He proceedeth not without ſome ſolemnity or circumſtance, well worthy to be remembred.

For firſt, Verſe 21. He ſaith, As my Father ſent me, ſo I ſend you: which is their authorizing, or giving them their credence.

Secondly, Verſe 22. He doth breath upon them, and withall inſpireth them with the Holy Ghoſt: which is their enabling or furniſhing thereto.

And having ſo authorized and enabled them, now in this Verſ. here, He giveth them their Commiſſion, and thereby doth perfectly inaugurate them, into this part of their office.

A Commiſſion is nothing elſe, but the imparting of a power which before they had not. Firſt therefore, He imparteth to them a power, a power over ſinnes, over ſins, either for the remitting, or the retaining of them, as the perſons ſhall be qualified.

And after, to this power He addeth a promiſe (as the Lawyers terme it) of Ratihabition, that He will ratifie and make it good, that His power ſhall accompany this power, and the lawfull uſe of it in His Church for ever.

The dependance in reſpect of the time.

Why not before.

Eſa. 53.10.
Heb. 9.22.
Mat. 16.19.
18.18.

Why now.

And very agreeable is this power now beſtowed by Him upon his reſurrection. Not ſo conveniently before His death, becauſe till then, He had not made His ſoule an offering for ſinne, nor till then, He had not ſhed His bloud, without which there is no remiſſion of ſinnes. Therefore it was promiſed before, but not given till now, becauſe it was convenient, there ſhould be ſolutio, before there were abſolutio. Not before He was riſen, then.

And againe, no longer than till He was riſen, not till he was aſcended. Firſt, to ſhew that the remiſſion of ſins is the undivided and immediate effect of his death. Secondly, to ſhew how much the world needed it, for which cauſe he would not with-hold it, no not ſo much as one day (for, this was done in the very day of His reſurrection.) Thirdly, but eſpecially, to ſet forth his great love and tender care over us, in this, that as ſoone as he had accompliſhed his owne reſurrection, even preſently upon it, he ſets in hand with ours, and beginneth the firſt part of it, the very firſt day of his riſing.

The Scripture maketh mention of a firſt and ſecond death, and from them two, of a firſt and ſecond reſurrection. Both, expreſly ſet downe in one verſe; Happy is he that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection; for over ſuch the Second death hath no power. Apoc. 20.6. Vnderſtanding by the firſt, the death of the ſoule by ſinne, and the riſing thence to the life of grace: by the ſecond, the death of the body by corruption, and the riſing thence to the life of glory.

Chriſt truly is the Saviour of the whole man, both ſoule and body, from the firſt and ſecond death.

But beginneth firſt with the firſt, that is, with ſin, the death of the ſoule and the riſing from it. So is the method of Divinity preſcribed by himſelfe. Mat. 23.16. Firſt, to cleanſe that which is within (the ſoule) then, that which is without without (the body.) And ſo is the method of Phyſicke, firſt to cure the cauſe, and then the diſeaſe. Now the cauſe (or as the Apoſtle calleth it) the ſting of death is ſinne. Therefore firſt to remove ſinne, and then death afterwards. For, the cure of ſinne being performed, the other will follow of his owne accord. As Saint Iohn telleth us, He that hath his part in the firſt reſurrection, ſhall not faile of it in the ſecond. The firſt reſurrection then from ſin, is it which our Saviour Chriſt here goeth about, whereto there is no leſſe power required than a divine power. For look what power is neceſſary to raiſe the dead body out of the duſt; the very ſame, every way, is requiſite to raiſe the dead ſoule out of ſinne. For which cauſe the Remiſsion of ſinnes is an Article of faith, no leſſe than the Reſurrection of the body. For, in very deed, a reſurrection it is, and ſo it is termed, no leſſe than that. 1 Cor. 15. 56.

To the ſervice and miniſtery of which divine worke, a commiſsion is here granted to the Apoſtles. And firſt, they have here their ſending from GOD the Father; their inſpiring from GOD the Holy Ghoſt; their commiſsion from God the Sonne: that being thus ſent from the Father, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, in the perſon of Chriſt they may performe the Office, or (as the Apoſtle calleth it) the Embaſſage of reconciling ſinners unto God, to which they are appointed. And ſo much for the Summe and dependance of this Scripture. 2 Cor. 5. 19.

The points of ſpeciall obſervation are three: 1. Firſt, the Power that is granted. 2. The Matter or Subject, whereon the power is to be exerciſed. 3. The Promiſe of ratifying the exerciſe of that power. The Diviſion.

The power it ſelfe in which commeth firſt to be entreated. 1. What is meant by remitting and retaining. 2. After in generall, that there is a power to remit and retaine: but firſt to remit, and after to retaine. 3. Then in particular, of that power as it is ſet downe in both words, Remiſeritis and Remittuntur. I.

The Matter or ſubject: which is alſo two wayes to be conſidered, either as it is ſin in it ſelfe, which is the matter at large; or as it is the ſin of ſome perſons (for it is not quæ peccata, but quorum) which is the immediate or proper matter of this power. II.

The ratifying or promiſe of concurrence, to aſſure the conſcience of the ſinner of the certainty and efficacie of the Churches act, that what the Apoſtles doe in the perſon of Chriſt, by the inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt, he that ſent them, will certainly make good and effectuall from heaven. And of theſe three in order, III.

1 The termes how to be understood.

THe termes of remitting and retaining may be taken many wayes. To the end then, that wee may the more cleerely conceive that which ſhal be ſaid, it wil be expedient, that firſt of all we underſtand, in what ſenſe eſpecially, & according to what reſemblance, thoſe termes are to be taken.

The originall from Chriſts commiſsion.

This may wee beſt doe out of our Saviour Chriſts owne Commiſsion. For, this of the Apoſtles is nothing elſe but a branch out of his, which he Himſelfe (as man) had here upon earth. For as man; he himſelfe was ſent, and was anointed with the Spirit, and proceeded by Commiſsion.

Luke 4. 18. Eſay 61. 1.

His Commiſsion we find Luke 4. which he himſelfe read in the Synagogue at Nazareth at his firſt entring on it: Which is originally recorded Eſay 61. Wherein, among others, this power is one, to preach ἄφεσιν (that is) Remiſsion, as it is turned here; or deliverance, as it is turned there: but the word is one in both places, and that reſpectively to captives: and (as it followeth in that place of Eſay) to them that are bound, the opening of the priſon.

Sin, an imprisonment.

Which very terme (of Captives or ſuch as are in priſon) doth open unto us, with what reference or reſpect, this terme of remitting, or letting go, is to be conceived. And as it was in his, ſo muſt it be underſtood here in this, ſince this is but derived from that of Chriſts.

The minde of the Holy Ghoſt then; as in other places by divers other reſemblances, ſo in this here, is to compare the ſinners caſe, to the eſtate of a perſon impriſoned. And indeed, who ſo well weigheth the place, it cannot well be taken otherwiſe. For, not onely here, but elſewhere (where this Power is expreſſed) it ſeemeth ever, to be with reference (as it were) to parties committed. The very term of the Keyes (wherein it was promiſed, and wherein it is moſt uſually delivered;) the termes of opening and ſhutting, ſeme to have relation (as it were) to the priſon gate.

Mat. 18. 18.

The termes of binding and looſing, (as it were) to the fetters or bands. And theſe here of letting forth, or ſtill detaining (all and every of them) ſeeme to have an evident relation, to a priſoners eſtate; as if ſinne were a priſon, and the caſe of ſinners, like theirs that are ſhut up.

Verily, as ſinne at the firſt in committing, ſeemeth ſweete; that men cannot bee got to ſpit it out (ſaith Iob) but hold it cloſe under their tongues, till they have ſwallowed it downe; but after it is committed,

Iob 20. 12.

Ier. 2. 19.

the ſinner findeth then, that it is Malum & amarum dereliquiſſe Dominum (ſaith the Prophet;) that it turneth to a bitter and cholerike matter, of which there breedeth a worme which never leaveth gnawing: Even ſo doth ſin at the firſt alſo ſeem a matter of liberty. For a liberty it is, not to be reſtrained; not to be (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) committed to Moſes, to be kept and ſhut up under the Law; not to be forbidden any fruit (under which very terme, the Serpent did perſwade it:) But when it was done and paſt, then ſhall a man feele a pinching or ſtreightneſſe in his ſoule, termed by the Apoſtle στενοχωρία, which properly ſignifieth the paine which they ſuffer, that are ſhut up in a narrow room or ſome place of little eaſe. Eſa.66. ult. Gal.3.23. Gen.3.2. Rom.2.9.

So ſpeaketh Salomon of ſin. His own wickedneſſe ſhall attach the ſinner, and he ſhall be holden, or pinioned, with the cords of his own ſin. So S. Peter to Simon Magus: I perceive, thou art (to expreſſe the former reſemblance) in the gall of bitterneſſe (and to expreſſe the latter) in the bond of iniquity. And S. Paul: that ſinners, in ſtead of having Moſes to their keeper, become the Devils captives, and are of him holden and taken at his will and pleaſure. Pro.5.22. Acts 8.13. 2 Tim.2.ult.

Truly ſome have felt as much as I ſpake of, and have in pregnant termes complained of it. I am ſo faſt in priſon (ſaith David) that I cannot get out. And, bring my ſoule out of priſon and I will prayſe thee. And, I will run the way of thy commandements, when thou ſhalt ſet my heart at liberty. Pſal.88.8. 142.ult. 119.32.

Peradventure all feele not this preſently as ſoon as they have ſinned; nor (it may be) a good while after. So God told Cain at the beginning: his ſin ſhould lye at the doore; that is, while he kept within, he ſhould not be troubled with it perhaps; but at his comming forth, it ſhould certainly attach him. But ſaith Moſes, let every one that ſinneth be ſure, that his ſin at laſt wil find him out: For he ſhal no ſooner be under arreſt of any trouble, ſickneſſe, croſſe, or calamity, but he ſhall be ſhut into his στενοχωρία and feele it preſently. As the brethren of Joſeph, for very many yeares, after they had of envy and without all pity ſold him to be a bond-ſervant, ſeemed at liberty: No ſooner fell they into danger and diſpleaſure, in a ſtrange countrey, but it came to mind and they were ſerved with it ſtraight way. Even as in Iob, it is ſaid: The ſins of our youth ſhall let us go up and down quietly all our youth-time, but when we come to yeares we ſhall feele them pinch us in our very bones. Gen.4.7. Num.32.23 Gen.42.21. Iob 20.11.

Yea, though many, even then when they feele this ſtreightneſſe in their ſoule, make meanes to put it away for the time, and ſeeme merry and light enough (as many times, Priſoners be in the Goale, till the very day of the Aſſiſes come:) yet when it is come to that, that judex eſt præ foribus, when the terror of death commeth, and with it a fearefull expectation of judgement; then certainly, then without all doubt, the anguiſh S. Paul ſpeaketh of, ſhall be upon every ſoule of every one that doth evill. Then, there is no man never ſo wicked, that with his good will would die in his ſins, but would have thē releaſed while he is yet in via, yet in the way. Then we ſeek help at ſuch ſcriptures as this, & call for the perſons to whō this Commiſſion belongeth. And thoſe, whom we have gone by 7 yeares together, and never ſaid word to about it, then we are content to ſpeake Iames 5.9. Heb. 10.27. Ioh. 8. 27. Mat.5.25.

with, when the councell & direction they give, we are ſcarce able tor eceive, & much leſſe to put in practice. As if, all our life time we beleeved the permiſſion of ſinnes; as if that were the article of our faith all our life long, and the article of remiſsion of ſinnes, never till the point of death.

And this may ſerve, ſhortly to ſet forth unto us this priſon of the ſoule: which if any conceive not, by that which hath beene ſaid, I muſt ſay Ier. 30. ult. with the Prophet to them; that ſure, there is ſuch a thing and that In noviſsimo intelligetis hæc planè, at their latter end (I wiſh, before; but ſure then ſhall very plainely underſtand, that ſuch a thing there is.

But now, they that have either felt or beleeve, that ſuch an impriſonment there is, will be glad to heare, that there is a Power, whereby they
Good tydings that there is Remiſsion. may be enlarged: And this very tidings in generall, that there is a Remittuntur, that men may have deliverance from theſe fetters, this priſon, this ſtreitneſſe or anguiſh of the ſoule, muſt needs be very acceptable and welcome tydings to them. For which very point (even that there Heb. 2. 16. is a Remittuntur) what thankes are we eternally bound to render unto GOD? For I tell you, Nuſquam Angelos apprehendit, the Angels never found the like. For, the Angels, which kept not their firſt eſtate, hath He Iude 6. reſerved in everlaſting chaines of darkneſſe, to the judgement of the great Day. Their chaines, everlaſting; their impriſonment, perpetuall: No Commiſsion to be ſued for them: No Remittuntur eis. But with man it is not ſo. To him, deliverance; to him, looſing of the chaines: to him, opening of the priſon is promiſed. For his ſinnes, a commiſsion is granted out, his ſinnes have a Remittuntur. This, is a high and ſpeciall priviledge of our nature to be had by us in an everlaſting thankfull remembrance.

Ezra 10. 2. now doe what we liſt. No: but (as it is ſaid in Ezra) Though we have Exek. 18. 30. grievouſly ſinned: yet there is hope for all that: and (as in Ezekiel) that we may ſo uſe the matter, that Peccata noſtra non erunt nobis in ſcandalum, Our ſinnes ſhall not be our deſtruction. Which very point is both an eſpeciall ſtay of our hope, and a principall meanes of manifeſting unto us the great goodneſſe of God.

Remiſsion firſt, before Retentio. Which goodneſſe of God as it doth ſhew forth it ſelfe in this firſt (that, ſuch a power there is:) ſo doth it ſecondly and no leſſe, in the order that (which both acts are mentioned, as well retaining, as remitting) He placeth the power of remitting firſt. Which very ſorting of them in that order, doth plainly ſhew unto us, whereunto God of His goodnes is moſt inclinable; and which of them it is, that is the principall in His intent. That to remit, is more proper to Him, and that He is more ready to it, and that it is firſt; firſt in His purpoſe, firſt in His grant:
Eſay 28. 2. and that to the other He commeth but ſecondarily, but by occaſion, when the former cannot take place. For, of remitting ſinne, Hee taketh the ground from Himſelfe, and not from any other; and therefore,

fore, that more naturally: but of retaining it, the cauſe is miniſtred from us, even from our hardneſſe, and heart that cann ot repent. And as Himſelfe doth uſe this power, ſo giveth He it to them, to edification, and not to deſtruction. I ſay, not firſt or principally to deſtruction; nor of any, ſave onely of the wilfull impenitent ſinner. Thus much of the remitting and retaining in generall, and of their place and order. Now of the power it ſelfe in particular. 2 Cor. 10. 8.

Of this Power there is here in my Text twice mention; 1 One in Remiſeritis, and 2 againe in Remittuntur. Which two words doe plainely lead us to two Acts; of which two acts, by good conſequence are inferred two Powers. Which two powers, though they be concurrent to one end, yet are they diſtinct in themſelves. Diſtinct, in perſon; for, Remiſeritis is the ſecond perſon; and meant of the Apoſtles; and Remittuntur is the third perſon, and meant of GOD Himſelfe. And as diſtinct in perſon, ſo diſtinct in place: for, the one is exerciſed in earth, which is the Apoſtles; the other in heaven, which is GOD's, Quicquid ſolveritis in terra, ſolutum erit in Cœlo: Of Remiſſion in particular. The Power of it two-fold. 1 Remiſeritis. 2 Remittuntur. Mat. 16. 19.

Now where two powers are, & one of them in God, the other, muſt needs be ſubordinate and derived from it. For, Duo principia, two beginnings there are not, Therefore none other from whence it can proceed, but from God and from the power in Him alone.

Of theſe two then. Remittuntur, though latter in place, yet indeed is by nature and order firſt, and from it doth proceed the other of Remiſeritis; Which howſoever in the ſentence it ſtand before it, yet without all queſtion it is derived from it, and after it. So that, thus the caſe ſtands betweene them: Remittuntur, which is Gods power, is the primitive or originall; Remiſeritis, which is the Apoſtles power, is meerely derived. That in God, Soveraigne: This in the Apoſtles, Dependent. In Him only Abſolute: in them, Delegate. In Him Imperiall, in them, Miniſteriall. 1 Remittuntur (Gods power) firſt in order. Eſay 43. 25.

The Power of remitting ſinne is originally in God, and in God alone. And in CHRIST our SAVIOUR, by meanes of the union of the Godhead and manhood into one perſon: By vertue whereof, the Sonne of man hath power to forgive ſinnes upon earth. Mat. 2. 10.

This power being thus ſolely inveſted in God, He might without wrong to any, have retained and kept to Himſelfe, and without meanes of Word or Sacrament, and without Miniſters, either Apoſtles or others, have exerciſed immediately by Himſelfe from heaven.

But we ſhould then have ſaid of the remiſſion of ſinnes (ſaith Saint Paul) Who ſhall goe up to heaven for it, and fetch it thence? For which cauſe (ſaith he) the righteouſneſſe of faith ſpeaketh thus, ſay not ſo in thy heart. The word ſhall bee neere thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, and this is the word of faith which we preach. Rom. 10. 6.

Partly this, that there ſhould be no ſuch difficulty to ſhake our faith, as once to imagine to fetch CHRIST from Heaven for the Remiſsion of our ſinnes.

Partly alſo, becauſe CHRIST (to whom alone this Commiſsion was originally granted) having ordained himſelfe a body, would work by bodily things, and having taken the nature of a man upon Him, would honour the nature he had ſo taken. For theſe cauſes that which was His, and His alone, He vouchſafed to impart; and out of His commiſsion, to grant a commiſsion, and thereby to aſſociate them to himſelfe (it is his own word by the Prophet) and to make them συνεργους, that is, Co-operatores, workers together with him (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) to the worke of ſalvation, both of themſelves and of others.

2 Remiſeritis. Gods power derived to Men, and not to Angels.

From God, then it is derived: From God, and to men.

To men, and not to Angels. And this I take to be a ſecond Prerogative of our nature. That an Angel muſt give order to Cornelius, to ſend to Ioppe for one Simon, to ſpeake words to him, by which he and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved; but the Angel muſt not be the doer of it. That not to Angels, but to men, is committed this office, or Embaſſage of reconciliation. And that which is yet more, to ſinfull men, for ſo is the truth, and ſo themſelves confeſſe it. S. Peter: Goe from me, Lord, for I am a ſinfull man. S. Iames: In many things we offend all (putting himſelfe in the number.) And (leſt we ſhould think it to be but their modeſty) S. Iohn ſpeaketh plainly: If we ſay we have no ſin (what then? not we are proud, and there is no humility in us, but) we are lyars and there is no truth in us. And this is that, which is wonderfull in this point, that Saint Paul, who confeſſeth himſelfe a ſinner and a chiefe ſinner, quorum primus ego; The ſame concerning another ſinner (the inceſtuous Corinthian) I forgive it him (ſaith he) εν προσωπω χριστου in the perſon of Chriſt.

To ſinfull men.

1 Tim. 1. 15.

2 Cor. 2. 10.

To the Apoſtles.

Now if we aske, to what men? the Text is plaine. They to whom CHRIST ſaid this Remiſeritis, were the Apoſtles.

In the Apoſtles (that we may come nearer yet) we find 3 capacities as we may terme them. 1 As Chriſtians in generall. 2 As Preachers, Prieſts or Miniſters, more ſpeciall. 3 As thoſe twelve perſons, whom in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech we terme the Apoſtles.

Some things, that CHRIST ſpake to them, He ſpake to them as repreſenting the whole company of Chriſtians: as His vigilate.

Mar 13. ult.

Some things to them, not as Chriſtians, but as Preachers or Prieſts: as His Ite prædicate Evangelium, and His hoc facite; which no man thinketh, all Chriſtians may do.

Mat. 28. 18. Luke 22. 19

And ſome things, to themſelves perſonally: as that he had appointed them Witneſſes of His Miracles and Reſurrection, which cannot be applied but to them, and them in perſon. It remaineth, we enquire, in which of theſe three capacities, CHRIST imparteth to them this commiſsion.

Acts 1. 8.

Not

Not as to Apoſtles properly. That is, this was no perſonall priviledge to bee in them, and to die with them, that they ſhould only execute it for a time, and none ever after them. GOD forbid, we ſhould ſo think it. For, this power being more than needfull for the world (as in the beginning it was ſaid) it was not to be either perſonall, or for a time. Then thoſe perſons dying, & thoſe times determining, they in the ages following (as we now in this) that ſhould light into this priſon or captivity of ſinne, how could they or we receive any benefit by it? Of Nature, it is ſaid by the heathen Philoſopher; that it doth neither Abundare in ſuperfluis, nor deficere in neceſſarijs. God forbid, but we ſhould aſcribe as much to God at the leaſt; that neither He ſhould ordain a power ſuperfluous or more than needed, or elſe, it being needfull, would appropriate it unto one age, and leave all other deſtitute of it; and not rather as all Writers both new and old take it, continue it ſucceſsively to the worlds end.

And as not proper to the Apoſtles perſons, ſo neither common to all Chriſtians in generall, nor in the perſons of all Chriſtians conveighed to them. Which thing, the very circumſtances of the Text doe evict. For He ſent them firſt, & after inſpired them; and after both theſe, gave them this commiſsion. Now all Chriſtians are not ſo ſent, nor are all Chriſtians inſpired with the grace or gift of the Spirit, that they were here. Conſequently, it was not intended to the whole ſociety of Chriſtians. Yea, I adde, that foraſmuch as theſe two, both theſe two, muſt go before it; [1] Miſsio, and [2] Inſpiratio: that though God inſpire ſome Laymen, if I may have leave ſo to terme them, with very ſpeciall graces of knowledg to this end; yet inaſmuch as they have not the former of ſending, it agreeth not to them, neither may they exerciſe it, untill they be ſent, that is, untill they have their calling thereunto. Verſe 21. Verſe 22.

It being then neither perſonall nor peculiar to them as Apoſtles, nor againe common to all as Chriſtians, it muſt needs be committed to them as Miniſters, Prieſts, or Preachers; and conſequently to thoſe, that in that office and function doe ſucceed them, to whom, and by whom, this Commiſsion is ſtill continued. Neither are they, that are ordained or inſtituted to that calling, ordained or inſtituted by any other words or verſe, than this. Yet not ſo, that abſolutely without them, GOD cannot beſtow it, on whom, or when Him pleaſeth; or that he is bound to this meanes onely, and cannot worke without it. For, Gratia Dei non alligatur mediis, the grace of God is not bound but free, and can worke without meanes either of Word or Sacrament; and as without meanes, ſo without Miniſters, how and when to Him ſeemeth good. But ſpeaking of that which is proper and ordinary, in the courſe by him eſtabliſhed, this is an Eccleſiaſticall Act, committed, as the reſidue of the miniſtery of reconciliation, to eccleſiaſticall perſons. And if at any time Hee vouchſafe To them as Miniſters.

vouchsafe it by others that are not such, they be in that case, Ministri necessitatis, non Officii: in case of necessity, Ministers; but by Officæ, not so.

Of Gods soveraigne power still.

Now, as by committing this power, GOD doth not deprive or bereave himselfe of it: For there is a Remittuntur still, and that chiefe, soveraigne, and absolute: so on the other side, where GOD proceedeth by the Churches act, as ordinarily He doth, it being His owne ordinance; there, whosoever will be partaker of the Churches act, must be partaker of it by the Apostles meanes; there, doth Remiseritis concurre in his order and place, & there runneth still a correspondence between both. There doth GOD associate his Ministers, and maketh them Workers together with him. There, have they their parts in this worke, and cannot be excluded: no more in this, than in other acts and parts of their function. And to exclude them, is (after a sort) to wring the keyes out of their hands, to whom CHRIST hath given them; is, to cancell and make void this clause of Remiseritis, as if it were no part of the sentence; To account of all this solemne sending, and inspiring, as if it were an idle and fruitlesse ceremony: which if it may not be admitted, then sure it is, they have their part and concurrence in this worke, as in the rest of the ministery of reconciliation.

Zech. 13. 7. 1 Cor. 3. 7.

The act of the Church ordinary.

Neither is this a new or strange thing, from the beginning it was so. Vnder the law of Nature (saith Elihu in Iob, speaking of one for his sinnes in GODS prison,) If there be with him an Embassadour, Commissioner, or Interpreter (not any whosoever, but) one among a thousand, to shew unto Him his righteousnesse, Then shall God have mercy upon him and say, Let him go, for I have received a propitiation.

Iob 23. 25.

Mal. 2. 5. Lev. 4. 5, 6.

Vnder Moses, it is certaine, the Covenant of life and peace was made with Levi, and at the sacrifices for sin, he was ever a party.

Under the Prophets. It pleased GOD to use this concurrence towards David himselfe: Nathan the Prophet saying unto him, Transtulit Dominus peccatum tuum.

The necessity of the Priest therein.

Which course so established by GOD, till CHRIST should come; (for neither covenant nor Priest-hood was to endure any longer;) was by CHRIST re-established anew in the Church, in that calling, to whom he hath committed the Word of reconciliation. Neither are we (the ordinance of GOD thus standing) to rend off one part of the sentence. Three are here expressed three persons: 1 The person of the sinner, in quorum; 2 of God, in Remittuntur; 3 of the Priest in Remiserîtis. Three are expressed; and where three are expressed, three are required; and where three are required, two are not enough. It is Saint Augustine that thus speaketh of this Ecclesiasticall act in his time: Nemo sibi dicat, occultè ago pœnitentiam, apud Deum ago. Novit Deus qui mihi ignoscit, quia in corde ago. Ergo sine causâ dictum est; quæ solveritis in terra, soluta erunt in Cœlo, Ergo sine causa, Claves datæ sunt Eccle-

ſiæ Dei, Fruſtramus Evangelium Dei: Fruſtramus verba Chriſti.

Which may ſuffice for the diſtinguiſhing of theſe two Powers, the deriving of the one from whom, and to whom, the continuance and concurrence of them.

The Remiſsion of ſinnes, as it is from God onely, ſo is it by the death and bloud-ſhedding of Chriſt alone: but, for the applying of this unto us, there are diverſe meanes eſtabliſhed. There is Multiformis gratia (ſaith Saint Peter) variety of graces, whereof we are made the diſpoſers: Now, all and every of theſe meanes working to the remiſsion of ſinnes (which is the firſt and greateſt benefit, our SAVIOUR CHRIST hath obtained for us,) it reſteth that we further enquire, what that meanes is in particular, which is here imparted. Wherein this power conſists. 1 Pet. 4.10.

For ſure it is, that beſides this there are diverſe acts inſtituted by God, and executed by us, which all tend to the remiſsion of ſins. Sins remitted.

1. In the inſtitution of Baptiſme, there is a power to that end. Be baptized every one of you for the remiſsion of ſinnes (ſaith Saint Peter to three thouſand at once.) Ariſe and be baptized (ſaith Ananias to Paul) and waſh away thy ſinnes. And to be ſhort: I believe one baptiſme for the remiſsion of ſinnes (ſaith the Nicene Creed.) 1 By Baptiſme. Acts 2. 38. Acts 22.26.

2. Againe, there is alſo another power for the Remiſsion of ſinnes, in the inſtitution of the holy Euchariſt. The words are exceeding plaine: This is my bloud of the New Teſtament, for the remiſsion of ſins. 2 By the Euchariſt. Mat.26.28.

3. Beſides; in the Word it ſelfe, there is a like power ordained. Now are you cleane, ſaith Chriſt (no doubt from their ſinnes) propter Sermonem hunc. And the very Name giveth as much, that is intitled, The word of reconciliation. 3 By Preaching. Iohn 15.3. 2 Cor. 5.19.

4. Further, there is to the ſame effect, a power in prayer, and that in the Prieſts prayer, Call for the Prieſts (ſaith the Apoſtle) and let them pray for the ſick perſon, and if he have committed ſin, it ſhall be forgiven him. 4 By Prayer. Iames 5.14.

All and every of theſe, are acts for the remiſsion of ſinnes; and in all and every of theſe, is the perſon of the Miniſter required, and they cannot be diſpatched without him.

But the ceremonies and circumſtances that here I finde uſed, prevaile with me to think, that there is ſomewhat here imparted to them, that was not before. For, it carrieth no likelyhood, that our Saviour beſtowing on them nothing here, but that which before He had, would uſe ſo much ſolemnity, ſo diverſe and new circumſtances, no new or diverſe grace being here communicated. None of theſe meant here.

1. Now, for Baptiſme, it appeareth plainly; that the Apoſtles Baptized in a manner from the beginning; which I make no queſtion, they did not without a commiſsion. Iohn 4.2.

2. And for the power of adminiſtring the holy Sacrament, it was granted expreſly to them by Hoc facite, before his paſsion. Luke 22.19.

3 The

3. The like may we ſay of the power of Preaching, which was given them long before; even when He ſent them, and commanded them to preach the Kingdome of GOD, which was done, before this power was promiſed, which here is beſtowed; as will evidently appeare, the one being given, *Mat.*10. the other after promiſed, *Mat.*16.

Mat.10.7. Luke 9.2.

4. Neither can it be meant of prayer. There is no partition in prayer. Prayers and ſupplications are to be made for all men. But here is a plaine partition. There is a Quorum, whoſe ſinnes are remitted, and another Quorum whoſe ſinnes are retained.

1 Tim.2.2.

But the power of Abſolution.

Seing then, this new ceremony and ſolemne manner of proceeding in this, are able to perſwade any, it was ſome new power that here was conferred, and not thoſe which before had beene (though there be, that apply this, others to ſome one, and others to all of them:) I take it to be a power diſtinct from the former, and (not to hold you long) to bee the accompliſhment of the promiſe made, *Matth.*16.19. of the power of the Keyes, which here in this place and in theſe words is fulfilled; and have therein for me the joynt conſent of the Fathers. Which being a different power in it ſelfe, is that, which we call the Act or Benefit of Abſolution; in which (as in the reſt) there is in the due time and place of it, an uſe for the remiſsion of ſinnes. Whereunto our SAVIOUR CHRIST, by His ſending them; doth inſtitute them, and give them the key of authority: And by breathing on them and inſpiring them, doth enable them and give them the key of knowledge, to doe it well, and having beſtowed both theſe upon them as the Stewards of his Houſe, doth laſt of all deliver them their Commiſsion to doe it, having ſo enabled them and authorized them as before. So much for the power.

Verſe 21. Verſe 22.

II.

Quorum peccata.

The ſubject of this power.

Every power is not every where to be exerciſed, nor upon every matter; but each power hath his proper ſubject.

The matter or ſubject, whereon this power is to be exerciſed, is ſin. To be conſidered firſt in it ſelfe, as the matter at large. And then, as qualified with the perſon: (for it is quorum, and not quæ peccata;) As the neerer and more proper ſubject.

Peccata, at large.

Firſt then, the ſubject are ſinnes. Sinnes in themſelves, no wayes reſtrained or limited. No ſinnes at all, either for number, or greatneſſe being excepted.

Without exception of number. Mat. 18.22.

Nor for number. For Chriſt teaching us, That we our ſelves ſhould forgive untill ſeventy times ſeven times, doth thereby after a ſort give us to underſtand, that He will not ſticke with us for the like number in ours. For GOD forbid, we ſhould imagine, Hee taught us to be more mercifull or of greater perfection than He will be Himſelfe. That number amounteth to terme jubiles of pardon: For ſo many ſinnes, may wee then hope hope for pardon at His hands. If thoſe be not enough, wee have example of one, whoſe ſinnes were more in number than the haires of his head; and of another, whoſe were more than the ſands of the Sea: both which give us hope; for they both obtained pardon.

Pſal. 40. 12. Orat. Manaſſ.

But that which followeth in the place of Matthew, maketh both parts plaine. For there, a debt is remitted, not onely of five hundred (as Luc. 7.) but of ten thouſand, and thoſe (not as in Luke, pence, but) talents: A great and huge ſumme, yet for that hath He remiſsion in ſtore. So that, no man ſhall need to ſay, his ſinne is greater than can be remitted, as Cain did, ſince that aſſertion is convinced to be erroneous: For, his ſinne may be forgiven, that ſlew Abel, though his brother, ſeing S. Peter ſaith, that theirs was no greater than might be forgiven, that ſlew the Sonne of God. For no man but will conceive, that the betraying and murdering IESUS CHRIST, was farre a more heynous offence than that of Abels killing: But, that might (ſaith Saint Peter;) therefore, this much more may be forgiven. And to end this point, whereas it is affirmed, and that moſt truly, by the Apoſtle, that the weakeneſſe of GOD is ſtronger than men, if there were any ſinne greater than could be remitted, the weakeneſſe of man (for of that, commeth ſin) ſhould be ſtronger than GOD; which neither Religion nor reaſon will admit. In reſpect of the ſinne it ſelfe, therefore here is no exception.

Act. 31. 15. 19.

1 Cor. 1. 25.

But becauſe it is not quæ peccata but quorum, it ſheweth, that in the act of remiſsion, we are to reſpect, not the ſinne ſo much as the perſon. So that, though all ſinnes may be remitted, yet not to all perſons, but to a quorum, as we ſee. For, there is another quorum, whoſe ſinnes are retained: ſo that, this limiteth the former, and ſheweth indeed, what is the Materia propinqua, or immediate ſubject of this power committed.

Quorum, The proper immediate Subiect.

Our Saviour Chriſt Himſelfe, at the reading of His Commiſsion (whereof this is a branch) in effect expreſſeth as much. For He telleth them, There were many lepers in the daies of Eliſha, and many widowes in the daies of Elias; yet none cleanſed but Naaman, nor to none was Elias ſent, but to the widow of Sarephtha. And ſo the caſe ſtandeth here. Many ſinners there be, and many ſins may be remitted, but not to any, except they be of this Quorum. In which point there is a ſpecial uſe of the key of knowledge, to direct to whom, and to whom not; ſince it is not, but with advice, to be applied, nor hands haſtily to be layd on any man (as the Apoſtle teſtifieth) which place is referred by the ancient Writers, to the Act of Abſolution, and the circumſtance of the place giveth no leſſe. But diſcretion is to be uſed in applying of comfort, counſaile, and the benefit of Abſolution. Whereby it falleth out ſometimes, that the very ſame ſinnes to ſome may be remitted, being of the Quorum, that to ſome others may not, that are out of it.

Luc. 4. 18. 25.

1 Tim. 5. 22 Cypr. 3. 16. Pacian. in Paren. 6. Aug. de Bap. 5. 20. 23.

The Qualification of the Perſons.

To ſee then a little into this qualification, that thereby we may diſcerne who be of either Quorum. The conditions to be required, to be of Quorum remittuntur, are two.

That, in the Church.

First, that the partie be within the house and family, whereto those keyes belong (that is) be a member of the Church, be a faithfull believing Christian.

Exod.26.34. In the Law, the Propitiatory was annexed to the Arke and could not be severed from it: to shew, that they must hold of the Arke (that is) be of the number of the people of GOD, or else could they not be partakers of the

Psal.87.ult. Propitiation for their sinnes. So saith the Psalmist, in the Psalme of the

Psal.85.1. Church, Omnes canales mei erant in te. All the conduit-pipes of all my spirituall graces are conveyed into thee, and are no where else to be had. And namely, of this benefit of remission of sinnes: Thou hast (saith he) O Lord beene gratious unto Thy land, &c. Thou hast forgiven all their iniquitie, and

Esa.33.ult. covered all their sinne. But the Prophet Esai, most plainely: The people which dwelleth in her (that is, the Church) They shall have their iniquity forgiven. And to end this point, the Angell when he interpreteth the name

Mat.1.21. of IESUS, extendeth it no further than that, thus Hee shall save His people from their sinnes. To them then is the benefit of remission of sinnes entailed and limited; it is sors Sanctorum, and dos Ecclesiæ. And they that are of this Quorum, have their certaine hope thereof. They that are out of it, pertaine to the second sort, of them that have their sinnes

1.Cor.5.12. retained. The power of the keyes reacheth not to them: What have I to doe with them that are without (saith the Apostle?) Them that are without, GOD shall judge. Therefore, all Pagans, Infidels, Iewes, and Turkes are without the compasse of this Quorum. For who so beleiveth not in Christ, whoso is Iohn.6.24. not a faithfull Christian, shall die in his sinnes.

But are all that are within this house, thereby partakers of this remission? Is there nothing else required? Yes indeed, there is yet another

That, Repentant. condition requisite, whereby many are cut off, that are within the Quorum of the Church. And that is (as our Saviour Christ Himselfe setteth it downe) Repentance. For, He willeth Repentance and Remission of sinnes

Luk.24.47. to be preached in His name: both these; but Repentance first, and then Remission of sinnes to follow after. So that, the sinner, that is a member of the Church, if he want this, is not of the former, but of the latter Quorum.

1 That is, Feele the want of Remission, & desire it. To Repentance there goe two things (as heretofore hath beene entreated more at large.) To insist upon the resemblance here made. First, that he feele his chaines and imprisonment, and be grieved with them, and therefore would gladly be let loose, and discharged from them. And

Mat. 11.28. no otherwise doth our Saviour Christ proclaime it; That none should come to Him, but such as are weary and heavy laden. For, sentiat onus qui vult levari, & sentiat vincula qui vult solvi. And no reason there is, meanes should be made for his enlargement, that is wel enough already, and had rather be where He is, than at liberty abroad.

Out of which groweth this division of sinners, which make this double

Quorum

Quorum, For, there are ſinners, that are weary of their commitment, and would gladly be enlarged. Such as he was: O bring my ſoule out of priſon, that I may praiſe thee. And as he: Wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me? And to theſe belongeth the firſt cauſe of Remiſsion, even pœnitentibus & petentibus, to them that are weary of their durance, and that deſire and ſue for deliverance. Pſal.142. ult. Rom.7.24.

Againe there are ſinners, which care not greatly for their preſent eſtate, but are as it were without ſenſe of their miſerie. The priſon grieveth them not; being in it, they reckon themſelves well enough, either becauſe they have drunken of the ſlumbring cup, which is the very dregges of GOD'S wrath, having their hearts as brawne, and their conſciences ſeared with a hot iron, that is (as the Apoſtle doth interpret it) being paſt all feeling or remorſe of ſinne: Or elſe a worſe ſort of people, that not onely have no ſenſe of their preſent wretched caſe, but doe even take delight and pleaſure in the place, and (to chooſe) will not be out of it. Qui lætantur cum malum fecerint, & exultant in rebus peſsimis, that ſcorne the denouncing of GOD'S judgements, and when they heare the words of this curſe, abſolve themſelves and ſay, I ſhall have peace and doe full well for all that. Of ſuch, Dominus ne ignoſcat illis (ſaith Moſes) let not GOD be mercifull to them. Pitie it is, they ſhould be let go, or the Key once turned to let them out. Senſe and ſorrow is required of their reſtraint, and an earneſt deſire of enlargement, elſe they pertaine not to the firſt, but to latter Quorum. Eſa. 51.22. Pſa. 119.70 1 Tim. 4.2. Pro.2.14. Deut.29.19.

In which very point (of ſorrow for ſinne) there is an eſpeciall good uſe of the key of knowledge, for counſaile and direction. 1. For, inaſmuch as Repentance it ſelfe is an act of corrective Iuſtice, and to repent is to doe judgement (as the Prophet;) and to judge our ſelves, as the Apoſtle calleth it. 2. To which there belongeth not onely a ſentence, but alſo ἐκδίκησις, a revenge, or puniſhment. And becauſe it is not a fruitleſſe repentance which muſt ſerve the turne: but it muſt have fruits (ſaith Saint Iohn Baptiſt) and fruits worthy of repentance: that is, more plainely (as Saint Paul ſaith, he was charged to preach even from heaven) That men muſt not onely repent and turne to GOD, but alſo doe workes worthy of Repentance. Eze.33.14. 1 Cor.11.3. Eze.36.31. 2 Cor. 7.11. Luc.3.8. Act.26.20. Dan.4.24.

3. And for that the works of Repentance, all of them, are not meet and ſuitable to every ſinne, but as the ſinnes are diverſe, ſo are the workes to be alſo. 5. For that alſo, as a man may goe too farre in them (as appeareth in the caſe of the Corinthian;) ſo may one fall too ſhort, as appeareth in the caſe of Miriam: and a proportion or Analogie is to be kept, according as the caſe of the ſinne requireth. In both theſe to adviſe, both what workes are meete, and alſo what meaſure is to be kept, the Key of knowledge will helpe to direct, and we may have uſe of it, if wee meane to uſe it to that end. Ion 3 8. Act.8.22. 2 Cor.2.7. Num.12.14. Apoc.3.2.

The other condition which muſt be joyned to the former, is an unfeined purpoſe and endeavour, our ſelves to remit or let goe thoſe ſinnes, which we would have by GOD remitted. For, it is not enough to be ſorrie for ſinne paſt, or to ſeeke repentance, no though it be with teares: this will not make us of the firſt Quorum, if there be nothing but this; if there be in our hearts a purpoſe, our ſelves to retaine and hold faſt our old ſinne ſtill. Eſau lift up his voice with a great cry and bitter out of meaſure, and wept: Yet even at the ſame time, vowed in his heart, ſo ſoone as his Father was dead, to make away his brother. And this purpoſe of mind, for all his bitter crying and teares, caſt him into the latter Quorum. and made his ſinnes to be retained ſtill. And ſuch is the caſe of them, that would be let goe out of priſon; but would have liberty to goe in and out ſtill to viſit the company there, when and as often as them liſt. So doe not the Saints that be of the firſt Quorum, to whom GOD, as Hee ſpeaketh peace, ſo Hee ſpeaketh this too, that they turne not thither againe, that they fall not againe to their former folly.

Heb.12.17. Gen.27.38. 14. Mal.85.8.

But theſe later would have their ſinnes let go by GOD, but themſelvs would not let them go, but keep faſt their end ſtill. They would quoad reatum, heare that ſaying from CHRIST'S mouth, Thy ſinnes are forgiven thee: but quoad actum, would not willingly heare that other, Goe and ſinne no more. But we muſt be willing to heare them both: willing to have our ſinnes remitted by GOD, and willing too (our ſelves) to remit our ſinning, or from thenceforth remiſsius peccare, to ſinne more remiſsely, and nothing ſo licenciouſly as before. To the former ſorrow, ſentence, and revenge, we muſt (ſaith Saint Paul) joyne a deſire, ἐπιθυμίαν; and to that deſire and endeavour, σπουδὴν; and that, ſuch an endeavour, as may be able to alleage for it ſelfe ἀπολογίαν, an honeſt defence, that wee have uſed all good meanes to do that, which on our part is to be performed, that we may be of the firſt Quorum.

Luc.7.48. Ioh.8.11. 1.Cor.7.11.

In which point no leſſe than the former, there may be uſe of the Key of knowledge, to adviſe and direct our ſelves, no leſſe in the cure of ſinne, than in the ſorrow for it. They in the ſecond of the Acts, which were pricked in their hearts, knew of themſelves that ſomewhat they ſhould do (as by their queſtion appeareth:) but what it was they ſhould doe, they knew not. Sometimes men have good minds; but know not which way to turne them to ſet themſelves about it. Sometimes they are ſcrupulous and doubtfull, whether they doe as they ſhould, becauſe one may Propitius eſſe ſibi, favour himſelfe too much, and be over-partiall in his owne caſe, neither ſo carefull to uſe the meanes to good, nor to avoyde the occaſions of evill, as he ought. Wherein, it were good, for men to make ſure worke, and to be fully reſolved. For, moſt uſuall it is for men, at their ends to doubt, not of the power of remitting of ſinnes, but of their owne diſpoſition to receive it; and whether they have ordered the matter ſo, that they be within the compaſſe of GOD'S effectuall calling, or as the text is, of the Quorum to whom it belongeth. So much for the matter, or ſubject, whereto this power is to be applied.

Act.2.37.

And

And here I ſhould now ſpeak ſome what of the applying or uſe of it: but the time hath over-taken me and will not permit it. Now onely a word of the third part, of the Efficacie, or (as the Lawyers terme it) of GOD's Ratihabition, and ſo an end.

III. Of the Ratihabition.

Wherin GOD willing more abundantly, to ſhew to them that ſhould be partakers of it, the ſtableneſſe of His counſaile, He hath penned it exceeding effectually, and indeed ſtrangely to them that deepely conſider of it: which He hath ſo done, to the end, that thereby ſuch poore ſinners as ſhall be partakers of it, might have ſtrong conſolation and perfect aſſurance, not to waver in the hope which is ſet before them.

And to that end, even for comfort, I will onely point at foure things in the enditing of it; all expreſsing the efficacie of it, in more than common manner.

1. The order, in this; that Remiſeritis ſtandeth firſt, and Remittuntur ſecond. It is Saint Chryſoſtome's note, that it beginneth in earth, and that heaven followeth after. So that, whereas in prayer and in other parts of religion it is, Sicut in Cœlo, ſic in terrâ; here it is, Sicut in terrâ, ſic in Cœlo. A terrâ judicandi principalem authoritatem ſumit Cœlum. Nam Iudex ſedet in terrâ: Dominus ſequitur ſervum, & quicquid hic in inferioribus judicârit, hoc ille in ſupernis comprobat, ſaith he. Super verbis Eſaiæ Vidi Dominum. Homil. 5.

2. The time: in this, that it is Remittuntur in the preſent tenſe; there is no delay betweene, no deferring, or holding in ſuſpence, but the Abſolution pronounced upon earth, Remittuntur, preſently they are remitted; that He ſaith not, hereafter they ſhall be, but they are already remitted.

3. The Manner: in ſetting downe of the two words. For, it is ſo delivered by CHRIST, as if He were content, it ſhould be accounted their act, and that the Apoſtles were the agents in it, and Himſelfe but the patient, and ſuffered it to be done. For, the Apoſtle's part is delivered in the Active (Remiſeritis;) and His owne in the paſsive (Remittuntur.)

4. The Certainty: which in the Identitie of the word, in not changing the word, but keeping the ſelfe ſame in both parts. For, Chriſt hath not thus endited it, Whoſe ſinnes ye wiſh or ye pray for, or whoſe ſinnes yee declare to be remitted; but whoſe ſinnes ye remit: uſing no other word, in the Apoſtle's, than he uſeth in his owne. And to all theſe, in Saint Matthew He addeth His ſolemne proteſtation of Verily, Verily, or Amen, Amen, that ſo it is, and ſhall be. And all to certifie us, that He fully meaneth, with effect to ratifie in heaven, that is done one earth; to the ſure and ſtedfaſt comfort of them, that ſhall partake it. Mat. 18. 18.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED

at White-hall Vpon the XXIII of November, AN. DOM. MDC.

()

IERE. CHAP. XXIII. VER. VI.

Hoc eſt Nomen quo vocabunt Eum, Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra.

This is the Name whereby they ſhall call Him, the LORD our Righteouſneſſe.

THE former points, which the Prophet pointeth us to with his Ecce, and willed us to behold, wee then were ſo long in beholding, that we had no time, to take a view of this laſt: which I take to be the chiefeſt part of his Ecce, and the point of all points moſt worthy our beholding. Hoc eſt nomen, &c.

1. The chiefe, becauſe His Name is given him from this & not from any of the reſt. For (commonly) from his chiefeſt title doth every man take his denomination. In the verſe next following, GOD ſaith; Hee will no more be called, Their Deliverer from Egypt, becauſe He will vouchſafe them a greater deliverance from Babylon: And ſo Verſe. 7.

from thence, as from the greater, have His name given. And as GOD, ſo men. What title of honour is higheſt in their ſtyle, that of all other, doth each perſon delight, to be termed by.

Now thoſe (in the former part of this verſe) of Salvation, and Peace which He will procure them) be great and excellent Titles; and they be no leſſe verified of Him, than this of Righteouſneſſe: (The Lord is my light and my Salvation, by the Prophet: and, He is our Peace, by the Apoſtle.) Yet, of neither of theſe doth He take His Name. But, from this of Righteouſneſſe, He doth. And that, both His former name, in metaphore and figure, The Branch of Righteouſneſſe: and this His latter, in propriety and truth, His Royall Name, Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra. This, therefore is Chiefe in His accompt.

Pſal. 27. 1. Epheſ. 2. 14. Verſe 5.

2. Againe, the Chiefe: becauſe it is His peculiar. And, every man reckoneth of that, as his chiefeſt title, that is not common to him with others, but proper to him alone; (as wherin he hath a prerogative above all. He, and none but He.)

Now thoſe in the former verſe (of executing judgement and juſtice) are ſuch, as are alſo given to other Kings. King David is ſaid to have executed judgement and juſtice to all his people: So is King Salomon likewiſe; the Queene of Sheba giveth him that title. To doe juſtice, is the title alſo of others (and not many neither, but yet of ſome others) But to be juſtice, to be righteouſneſſe; that is the name of none, but CHRIST onely. His, and His onely, is that title. Therefore, as well in this regard, as in the former, this is the very chiefe part in the Ecce, The Name of Iehova our Righteouſneſſe.

2 Sam. 8. 15. 1 Reg 10. 9.

Which, becauſe it is nothing but a name, may ſeeme to ſome, a matter of no great importance. The Deputie of Achaia (Galli) in the Acts, ſeemeth of that minde: If it were ſome weighty matter, I would ſit the hearing (ſaith he:) But if it be a matter of Names, I take it not worth the while: Heare it who will, for I will not. And to ſay the truth, if it were a name of mens giving, he ſaid not much amiſſe. Their names are not greatly to be looked after. The argument taken from them, the Heathen Philoſopher confeſſeth, is ψεῦδος ἐμφάζον, an argument, that ſetteth a good face upon it, but no great ſubſtance in it. The reaſon whereof is, Becauſe with men, there be Nominals, and there be Reals: Names and things, are many times two. There is quædam dicuntur de, & non inſunt. There is learning (ſaith the Apoſtle) ψευδώνυμος, falſly ſo called. And as learning, ſo, many things beſide. The Churle is named liberall, and they worſhipfull, that have nothing worthy worſhip in them. Yea, it falleth out, that ſome have a name, that they live, and yet are dead: and many things beſides, quæ dicuntur de, & non inſunt in. Whereof, we need not ſeeke farre, we have an example here in the Prophet, of King Zedekia, that reigned at the time of this prophecie; one that had neither truth nor righteouſneſſe in him, a breaker of his league and Covenant, a falſifier of his oath; and yet, his name

Act. 18. 14. 1 Tim. 6 20 Eſai. 32. 5. Apoc. 3. 1. Eze. 17. 9.

is Zedekia, GODS righteous one, or the righteousnesse of GOD. Mens names for the most part are false.

2. And when they be true, emptie, and no great weight in them. For what are mens titles, but mens breath; but a blast of ayre, but winde. If they be popular titles, the wind of a common paire of bellowes: If of those of the better sort (as the heathen man well said ἐπιχρύσου φυσητῆρος, the wind of a gilt or wrought paire of bellowes; but both of them, winde.

But, the names of GODS imposition, are not so. They ever carrie truth in them. For seeing GOD cannot away with those that are title-givers (as saith Elihu) He will give none Himselfe. With Him, is not the division, that is with us, of Nominals and Reals; of quædam dicuntur de, quædam insunt in. If we be named the Sonnes of GOD, We are so (saith Saint Iohn:) and therefore, from His Name, a sound and substantiall argument may be drawne, as (we see) the Apostle doth: proving the excellencie of Christ's Nature, above the Angels, from the excellencie of His Name above theirs. Iob.32.2. 1 Ioh.3.1. Heb.11.1.

And, as they are free from falshood; so are they not empty sounds, but have ever some vertue in them. The Name of GOD (saith Salomon) is a strong Tower. So that, When some trust in Chariots and Horses; and other some, in the Name of GOD; they that trust in Chariots and horses, they go downe; they that in that Name, stand upright. And this, not onely in the dangers of this life; but, there is also, in the Name of GOD, a saving power for the life to come. A power, to justifie: Yee are justified in the Name of CHRIST (saith Saint Paul.) A power for remission of sinnes: Your sinnes are forgiven you, for His Name's sake (saith S. Iohn.) A power to save: In this Name you have Salvation (saith Saint Peter.) Pro.18.10. Psa.20.8. 1 Cor.6.11. 1 Ioh.2.12. Act.4.12.

And, such is the Name here named; Iehova, our righteousnesse. Our, righteousnese, to justifie, to forgive us our sinnes, to give us salvation. Such, is this Name: and there is not under heaven, any Name given to men wherein they may be saved, beside it. Act.4.11.

In the Ecce, or beholding whereof, two things present themselves to our view: 1. The Name it selfe. 2. The Calling Him by it. The Name in these words; Hoc est Nomen. The calling in these; Quo vocabunt Eum. The Division.

In either of which, two others. In the Name, these two; 1 The parts of it; and the reason of them. 2 The sense of it. I.

In the calling Him by it, likewise two. 1 As it is our duty, so to call Him. 2. As we have an use or benefit by so calling Him. The duty, and the use. II.

1
The Name, Pſal.16.2.

TO GOD Himſelfe (as the Pſalmiſt telleth us) all the ſervice, we can performe, reacheth not. The perfection of His Nature is ſuch, as it can from us receive nothing. But, two things of his there are, which he hath left, to expreſſe that duty, which we owe and beare to Himſelfe. Which two are in one verſe ſet down by the Pſal. 138.2. Prophet David: Thou haſt magnified, 1 Thy Name, and 2 Thy Word above all things, 1 His Name, and 2 His Word. His Name, for our invocation; His Word, for our inſtruction. And theſe two, as they are the higheſt things, in GOD's accompt; ſo are they to be in ours. Not the Word only (which carrieth all away in a manner, in theſe dayes;) But, His Name alſo, no leſſe. For, in the ſetting them down, the HOLY GHOST giveth the firſt place to the Name. Our very aſſembling, and comming together, is in this Name. Mat. 18.20. 1 Tim.2.1. And then, before all things, ſupplications are to be made in this Name. And the very hearing of the Word it ſelfe is, that we may call upon His Name: How ſhall they call upon His Name whom they have not heard? How ſhall they heare without a Preacher? Rom. 10.14. So that, preaching, and hearing of the Word, are both ordained for the calling on of this name.

Which being ſo high in GOD's accompt, of very civilitie, if there were nothing elſe, wee are not to be ignorant, what His name is, that He is to be called by. No man, that maketh any (yea, but common) accompt of a party, but he will learne by what name to call him. And ſo requiſite doth Salomon hold this, as he affirmeth, Pro.30.4. There is little more in that man than in a beaſt; yea, there is not the underſtanding of a Man in him; of GOD (of Him that ſtreacheth out the heavens, and gathereth the winds in his fiſt, bindeth the waters in a garment; eſtabliſheth all the ends of the earth) not to know what is His name, or what is His Sonne's name. That His name, is Iehova: And His Sonne's name, Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra.

This, were we bound to get notice of, if it were but civilitie; or (as Salomon reckoneth it) even humanity, But that is not all. For ſeeing (as the heathen man confeſſeth) Παντῇ ὁ Διὸς κεχρήμεθα πάντες, wee all either have, or may have need of GOD, in our neceſsities of this life, but ſpecially in our laſt need; of very neceſsitie it will ſtand us in hand, to know how to call unto Him. There is no Client, but will be ſure to learne his Advocate's name; nor no patient but will tell his Phyſitian's. Nor (in a word) any of them, of whom we are to have any ſpeciall uſe, but we will be carefull as to learne his true name, that we miſſe not in it;

ſo, if he have diverſe names, and love to be called by any one rather than other, to be ſure to be perfect in it, and ready to ſalute him by it. And ſuch is this Name here; and wee therefore not to bee to ſeeke in it; ſeeing not only Courteſie, but very neceſsitie commendeth it to us.

Which Name (as you ſee) is compounded of three words, 1 Iehova, 2 Iuſtitia, 3 Noſtra: all of them neceſsarie, all of them eſſentiall. And they all three concurring, as it were three twiſts, they make a threefold cord (like that which the Preacher mentioned) that cannot be broken. But except it be entire, and have all three, it looſeth the vertue; it worketh nothing. For ſever any one of them from the reſt, and the other are not of moment. A ſound, but not a name; or a name, but not Hoc Nomen this Name; a Name qualified to ſave them that call on it. Take Iehova from Iuſtitia noſtra, and Iuſtitia noſtra is nothing worth. And, take Iuſtitia from Iehova, and though there be worth in Iehova, yet there is not that which we ſeeke for. Yea, take noſtra from the other two, and how excellent ſoever they be, they concerne us not, but are againſt us, rather than for us. So that, together we muſt take them, or the Name is loſt. Eccle. 4.12.

To ſee this the better, it will not be amiſſe to take it in ſunder, and to ſee the ground of every part in order. Why, 1 Iehova, 2 Why Iuſtitia, 3 Why Iehova Iuſtitia, 4 Why Juſtitia noſtra, 5 Both noſtra, and Iuſtitia, The Parts of the Name. 1 Iehova. Pſal. 71.16.

1 Iehova. Touching which word, and the ground why it muſt be a part in this Name, the Prophet David reſolveth us: Memorabor (ſaith he) Iuſtitiæ Tuæ ſolius. Becauſe His righteouſneſſe, and onely His righteouſneſſe, is worth the remembring; and any others, beſide His, is not meet to be mentioned. For, as for our owne righteouſneſſe which we have without Him, Eſay telleth us, it is but a defiled cloth; and Saint Paul, that it is but dung. Two very homely compariſons; but they be the Holy Ghoſt's owne: yet nothing ſo homely as in the originall: where they be ſo odious, as what manner of defiled cloth, or what kind of dung, we have not dared to tranſlate.

Our owne then being no better, we are driven to ſeeke for it elſewhere. He ſhall receive His righteouſneſſe (ſaith the Prophet:) and the gift of righteouſneſſe (ſaith the Apoſtle.) It is then another, to be given us, and to be received by us, which we muſt ſeeke for. And whether ſhall we goe for it? Iob alone diſpatcheth this point. Not to the heavens or ſtarres: For, they are uncleane in His ſight. Not to the Saints: For in them He found folly. Nor to the Angels: For neither in them found He any ſtedfaſtneſſe. Now, if none of theſe will ſerve, we ſee a neceſſarie reaſon, why Iehova muſt be a part of this Name. And this is the reaſon, why Ieremie here expreſsing more fully the Name given Him before, Eſay. 64. 6. Phil. 3. 8. Pſal. 24. 5. Rom. 5. 17. Iob 15. 15. 4. 18. 25. 5.

fore in Eſay (Immanuel, GOD with us) inſtead of the name of GOD, in that name (which is El) ſetteth downe by the way of explanation, this Name here of Iehova. Becauſe, that (El) and the other Names of GOD are communicated to Creatures. As the Name of El, to Angels, for their Names end in it; Michael, Gabriel, &c. And, the Name of Iha to Saints, and their names end in it; Eſaiah, Ieremiah, Zachariah. To certifie us therefore, that it is neither the righteouſneſſe of Saints nor Angels, that will ſerve the turne, but the righteouſneſſe of GOD and very GOD, He uſeth that Name which is proper to GOD alone; ever reſerved to Him onely; and never imparted by any occaſion to Angel, or Saint, or any creature in heaven or earth.

2 Iuſtitia. Iuſtitia: Righteouſneſſe. Why that? If we aske, in regard of the other benefits which are before remembred (Salvation and Peace) Why Righteouſneſſe and not Salvation nor Peace? it is evident. Becauſe (as in the verſe next before, the Prophet tearmeth it) Righteouſneſſe is the Branch; and theſe two, Salvation and Peace are the fruits growing on it. So that, if this be had, both the other are had with it. Of Righteouſneſſe and Salvation, Eſai ſaith, they grow both together, as it were out of one ſtalke. And of Peace, that Opus Iuſtitiæ Pax, the very worke or proper effect of Righteouſneſſe is Peace. For which cauſe the Apoſtle interpreting the name of Melchiſedek, King of Salem: firſt (ſaith he) King of Righteouſneſſe; and after, King of Peace. Even as on the contrarie part, ſinne which is nothing elſe but ἀνομία, iniquitie or unrighteouſneſſe, as ſaith Saint Iohn, is that root of bitterneſſe, from whence ſhooteth forth both perdition of the ſoule, contrary to Salvation, and unquietneſſe of the conſcience, oppoſite to Peace. And both they, and all other miſeries are (as IOB termeth them) ſparkes of this brand of hell: as health and Peace, and all bleſsings, are the fruites of this branch of righteouſneſſe. Now, becauſe there is vana ſalus, a vaine ſalvation (as ſaith David;) and a peace falſly ſo called a Peace which is no peace (as ſaith Ieremie;) To the end therefore, that our ſalvation might be ſubſtantiall, and our peace uncounterfeit, it behooveth us to lay a ſure ground-worke of them both; and to ſet a true roote of this branch, which is the Name Iehova. For, ſuch as the roote of this branch is, ſuch will Salvation and Peace, the fruits thereof be. If it be man's righteouſneſſe which is vaine, it will be alſo vana ſalus hominis, vaine and ſoone at an end; and the peace, like to the worlds peace, vaine and of no certaintie. But if Iehova be our righteouſneſſe, looke how He is, ſo will they bee, everlaſting Salvation, a peace which paſſeth all underſtanding.

3 Iehova Iuſtitia. Iehova Iuſtitia. We are now to ſeeke the reaſon, why Iehova is in this Name per modum Iuſtitiæ, by the way or under the terme of Righteouſneſſe, rather than of ſome other Attribute, as of Power or Mercie; that it is not Iehova Miſericordia, or Iehova Potentia, but Iehova Iuſtitia. GOD with us (ſaith Eſay:) with us (ſaith Ieremy) of all His properties, by that of Righteouſneſſe, chiefly and above other.

Not of Power (as in Eſay) by His Name El: which is His Name of Power. For, in Power there is no true comfort, without Iuſtice bee joyned to it. For, what is Power, except Righteouſneſſe go before? We ſee it is a thing very agreeable to our Nature, to have that we ſhall have, by Iuſtice (to chooſe:) and that way doe even the mightieſt firſt ſeeke it; and when that way it will not come, they overbeare it with Power.

Nor of Mercy; not Iehova Miſericordia, by which Name David calleth Him. For, though it be a Name of ſpeciall comfort, and S. Auguſtine ſaith of it: O Nomen ſub quo nemini deſperandum! yet if we weigh it well of it ſelfe alone, we ſhall find, there is no full or perfect comfort in it, except this alſo be added; For that, we have in us two reſpects: Firſt, one, as perſons in Miſery: Secondly, the other, as perſons convict of ſin. And though Mercy be willing to relieve us, in the one; for her delight is to help thoſe in miſery: Yet what ſhall become of the other, how ſhall that be anſwered? We have in the verſe before, mention of a King ready to execute Iudgement and Iuſtice. Now, Iuſtice is profeſſed enemy to all ſin; and Iuſtice in her proceeding, may not admit of any reſpect, either of the might or of the miſery of any, to lead her from giving ſentence according to Law. Pſal. 59. ult.

True it is, Mercy is ours, ours wholly, there is no doubt; but Iuſtice is againſt us, and except Iuſtice may be made ours too, all is not as it ſhould be. But if Iuſtice, if that in God, which only is againſt, might be made for us, then were we ſafe. Therefore all our thought is to be, either how we may get Mercy to triumph over Iuſtice with the Apoſtle; or, how (at the leaſt) we may get them to meet together, and be friends in this work. For, except Iuſtice be ſatisfied, and do joyne in it alſo; in vaine we promiſe our ſelves, that Mercy, of it ſelfe, ſhall worke our ſalvation. Which may ſerve for the reaſon, why neither Iehova Potentia, or Iehova Miſericordia, are enough; but, it muſt be Iehova Iuſtitia; and Iuſtitia a part of the Name. Iam. 2. 13. Pſal. 85. 10.

Noſtra: And neither may this bee left out. For without this, Iehova alone doth not concerne us; and Iehova Iuſtitia is altogether againſt us. But if He bee Righteouſneſſe, and not only Righteouſneſſe, but ours too; all is at an end, we have our deſires: Verily this laſt, this poſſeſsive, this word of application is all in all. By it, wee have intereſt in both the former; and without it, our caſe is as theirs, Quid nobis & tibi, What have we to do with thee, Iehova Iuſtitia? Which is moſt fearefull, and nothing but terror and torment in the conſideration of it. Therefore we muſt make much of this. For, if once He be Nobiſcum with us, and not againſt us, and not only Nobiſcum with us, but Noſter our owne; all is ſafe. Otherwiſe it falleth 4 Noſtra. Mat. 8. 19.

out oft, there be many Nobiscum, that be not Nostri: with us talke with us, eat with us, sit with us, which yet are not ours for all that. And in this point also, doth this Name of Ieremy more fully expresse the Name of Esay's Immanuel, no lesse than in the two former, first of Iehova, which is more than El: and then of justitia, which is more agreeable than of Potentia: And now in this here, that there is Nobiscum (which is well;)

1 Cor. 1. 30 and there is Noster, which is better, and more surer by a great deale. For if He be (as the Apostle saith) Factus nobis, Made unto us righeousnesse, and Serm. 3. in Missus est, &c. that so, as He becommeth ours, what can we have more? What can hinder us (saith Saint Bernard) but that we should uti nostro in utilitatem nostram, & de Servatore salutem operari: Use Him, and His Righteousnesse; use that which is ours to our best behoofe, and work our Salvation out of this our Saviour. So that, Nostra may not be spared, no more than the other part of the Name. For all is in suspence, and there is no compleat comfort without it.

5 Justitia nostra. To which comfort, this may be added for a conclusion of this part, no lesse effectuall than any of the former. That it is Iustitia nostra in the Abstract; and not in the Concrete, Iustificans, or Iustificator noster, our Iustice or Righteousnesse it selfe; not our Iustifier or Maker of us Righteous. For thus delivered, I make no doubt, it hath much more efficacy in it; and more significant it is by farre, to say Iehova our ju-

Rom 3.26. stice, than Iehova our justifier. I know, Saint Paul saith much: That our SAVIOUR CHRIST shed His blood, to shew His Righteousnesse, that He might not only be just, but a justifier of those which are of His faith. And

Rom. 4. 5. much more again, in that when He should have so said, To him that beleeveth in GOD, He chooseth thus to set it down, To him that beleeveth in Him, that justifieth the ungodly: making these two to be all one; GOD and the justifier of sinners. Though this be very much, yet certainly this is

1 Cor. 1. 30. most forcible, that He is made unto us by GOD, very righteousnesse it selfe. And

2 Cor. 5. ult. that yet more, That he is made righteousnesse to us, that we be made the righteousnesse of GOD in Him. Which place Saint Chrysostome well weighing,

Gal. 3. 13. this very word δικαιοσύνη (saith he) the Apostle useth, δεικνὺς τὸ ἄφατον τῆς δωρεᾶς, to expresse the unspeakable bounty of that Gift, that He hath not given us the operation or effect of His Righteousnesse, but His very Righteousnesse, yea His very selfe unto us; Marke (saith he) how every thing is lively, and as full as can be imagined. CHRIST, one, not only that had done no sin, but that had not so much as known any sin, hath GOD made (not a sinner, but) sin it selfe; as in another place (not accursed, but) a curse it selfe: Sin, in respect of the guilt; a Curse, in respect of the punishment. And why this? To the end, that we might be made (not Righteous persons; that was not full enough, but) Righteousnesse it selfe, and there he stayes not yet, and not every righteousnesse, but the very Righteousnesse of GOD Himselfe. What can be further said, what can be conceived more comfortable? To have Him ours, not to make us Righteous, but to make us Righteouſneſſe, and that not any other but the Righteouſneſſe of GOD: the wit of man can deviſe no more. And all to this end: That we might ſee, there belongeth a ſpeciall Ecce to this Name; that there is more than ordinary comfort in it; that therefore we ſhould be carefull to honour Him with it; and ſo call Him by it; Iehova our Righteouſneſſe.

2 The ſenſe of this Name.

There is no Chriſtian man that will deny this Name, but will call CHRIST by it, and ſay of Him, that He is Iehova Juſtitia noſtra, without taking a ſyllable or letter from it: But it is not the Syllables, but the Senſe that maketh the Name. And the Senſe is it, we are to look unto; that we keepe it entire in Senſe, as well as in ſound, if we meane to preſerve this Name of Juſtitia noſtra full and whole unto Him. And as this is true; ſo is it true likewiſe, that even among Chriſtians, all take it not in one ſenſe: but ſome, of a greater latitude than other. There are that take it in that ſenſe which the Prophet Eſay hath ſet down; In Iehova juſtitia mea, that all our Righteouſneſſe is in Him; and we to be found in Him, not having our own Righteouſneſſe, but being made the Righteouſneſſe of GOD in Him. There are ſome other, that though in one part of our Righteouſneſſe they take it in that ſenſe; yet in another part, they ſhrinke it up, and in that, make it but a propoſition cauſall, and the interpretation thereof to be, A Iehova juſtitia mea. Which is true too. Firſt, whether we reſpect Him, as the Cauſe exemplary, or patterne; (For we are to be made conformable to the Image of CHRIST.) Secondly, or whether we reſpect Him, as the Cauſe efficient: For, of all His righteous works, the Prophet truly proteſteth, Domine, univerſa opera noſtra. Tu operatus es in nobis: and the Apoſtle when he had ſaid Ego, corrected himſelfe preſently and ſaith, Non ego, ſed gratia Dei mecum, Not I, but the grace of GOD. This meaning then is true and good: but not full enough. For either it taketh the name in ſunder, and giveth Him not all, but a part of it again: or elſe it maketh two Senſes, which may not be allowed in one Name.

1 Righteouſneſſe accounted.
2 Righteouſneſſe done.

For the more plaine conceiving of which point, we are to be put in minde, That the true Righteouſneſſe (as ſaith S. Paul) is not of mans device, but hath His witneſſe from the Law and Prophets; which he there proceedeth to ſhew, out of the example, firſt of Abraham, and after of David. In the Scripture then, there is a double Righteouſneſſe ſet down, both in the Old and in the New Teſtament.

Gen.15.6.

In the Old, and in the very firſt place, that Righteouſneſſe is named in the Bible: Abraham beleeved and it was accounted unto him for righteouſneſſe. A righteouſneſſe accounted. And again (in the very next line) it is mentioned, Abraham will teach his houſe to do righteouſneſſe. A Righteouſneſſe done. In the New likewiſe. The former in one Chapter (even the fourth to the Romans) no fewer than eleven times, Reputatum est illi ad

Gen.18.19.

1. Ioh.3.7. justitiam. A reputed Righteousnesse. The latter, in Saint Iohn. My beloved let no man deceive you, he that doth Righteousnesse is Righteous. A Righteousnesse done. Which is nothing else but our just dealing, upright carriage, honest conversation.

Of these, the latter, the Philosophers themselvs conceived and acknowledged; the other is proper to Christians only, and altogether unknown in Philosophy. The one is a quality of the party. The other, an act of the Judge, declaring or pronouncing righteous. The one, ours by influence or infusion: The other by accompt or imputation.

That both these there are, there is no question. The question is, whether of these the Prophet here principally meaneth, in this Name?

This shall wee best informe our selves of, by looking backe to the Verse before: and without so looking backe, we shall never do it to purpose.

There the Prophet setteth one before us, in his Royall Judiciall power, in the person of a King, and of a King set down to execute judgement; and this he telleth us, before he thinke meet to tell us his Name. Before this King, thus set down in his Throne, there to do judgement, the righteousnesse that will stand against the Law, or Conscience, Satan, Sin, the gates of hell and the power of darknesse; and so stand that we may be delivered by it, from death, despaire and damnation; and entitled by it to life, salvation and happinesse eternall; that is, righteousnesse indeed: that is it, we seeke for, if we may finde it. And that is not this latter, but the former only; and therefore that is the true inter-
Cont.Cres.4 pretation of Iehova justitia nostra. Look but how S. Augustine and the rest of the Fathers, when they have occasion to mention that place, in the Prov.20.8. Proverbs (Cum Rex justus sederit in solio, quis potest dicere, Mundum est cor meum?) Looke how they interpret it then, and it will give us light to understand this Name; and we shall see, that no name will serve then, but this name. Nor this name neither, but with this interpretation of it.

And that the Holy Ghost would have it ever thus understood, and us ever to represent before our eyes; this King thus sitting in his judgement seate, when wee speake of this Righteousnesse, it is plaine two wayes. First, by way of position. For the tenor of the Scripture touching our Justification, all along runneth in Judiciall termes, to admonish us still what to set before us. The usuall joyning of Justice and Judgement continually all along the Scriptures, shew, it is a

2 And again, by way of oppoſition. For uſually, where juſtifying is named, there condemning (which is a terme meerely judicial) is ſet againſt it. In the Law, When there ſhall be ſtrife, and the matter ſhall come before thee, and ſentence to be given, ſee the righteous be juſtified and the ſinner condemned. To juſtifie the wicked and condemn the innocent, both are alike abhominable before God. If man cannot judge, heare thou from heaven, condemne the wicked and juſtifie the righteous.

Deut. 25. 1. Pſal. 17. 15. 1 Reg. 8. 22.

In the Goſpell. By thy words ſhalt thou bee juſtified, and by thy words condemned. It is GOD that juſtifieth, who ſhall condemne? Grace, to juſtification, as ſinne to condemnation. All theſe ſhew manifeſtly, we muſt imagine our ſelves ſtanding at the barre, or we ſhall never take the ſtate of this queſtion aright, nor truly underſtand the myſtery of this Name.

Mat. 12. 27. Rom. 8. 34. Rom. 5. 16.

For it is not in queſtion, whether wee have an inherent Righteouſneſſe or no: Or whether GOD will accept it, or reward it: but whether that muſt be our Righteouſneſſe, Coram Rege juſto judicium faciente.

Which is a point very materiall, and in no wiſe to be forgotten: For, without this, if we compare our ſelves with our ſelvs, what heretofore we have been; or if we compare our ſelves with others, as did the Phariſee; we may take a phanſie perhaps, and have ſome good conceipt of our inherent righteouſneſſe. Yea, if we be to deale in Schooles by argument or diſputation, we may peradventure argue for it, and make ſome ſhew in the matter. But let us once be brought and arraigned, Coram Rege juſto ſedente in Solio, let us ſet our ſelves there, we ſhall then ſee, that all our former conceipt will vaniſh ſtraight, and Righteouſneſſe (in that ſenſe) will not abide the triall.

Bring them hither then, and aske them here of this Name, and never a Saint, nor Father, no nor the Schoolemen themſelves, none of them but will ſhew you how to underſtand it aright. In their Commentaries, it may be in their queſtions and debates they will hold hard for the other. But remove it hither, thy forſake it preſently, and take the Name Iob 1: 18. in the right ſenſe. Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant IOB (ſaith GOD to Satan) how juſt and perfect he is. This juſt and perfect IOB, ſtanding here, Iob.9.15. 10.15. Though I be juſt (ſaith he) I will not hold up my head (or as they ſay, Stare rectus in curia) will never pleade it, or ſtand upon it, but put up a ſupplication to be releeved by Iehova juſtitia noſtra.

1 Sam.13.14. David hath the witneſſe to have beene a man according to GOD'S owne heart. For all that, hee dareth not ſtand here: But deſireth, GOD Pſal.142.2. would not enter into judgement with him; For that, In conſpectu tuo, in His ſight, not he, nor any other living (which S. Bernard extendeth to the Angels) ſhall bee juſtified. But if he muſt come (as thither we muſt come Pſal.70.16. all) then Memorabor juſtitiæ tuæ ſolius, hee will never chaunt his owne Righteouſneſſe, but make mention only of this Name, IEHOVAH juſtitia noſtra.

Dan.9.4. Dan.7.9. Dan.9.7. Dan.9.18. DANIEL, Vir deſideriorum (as the Angell termed him) even he, that man ſo greatly beloved, after he ſaw the Ancient of dayes ſet downe in His Throne, and the books open before Him, then Tibi Domine juſtitia, nobis autem confuſio faciei. Non in juſtificationibus noſtris: Not in our Righteouſneſſe; yet was that righteouſneſſe à IEHOVA, but (here) it would not ſerve; hee Dan.9.24. muſt waite for the MESSIAS, and the Everlaſting Righteouſneſſe which he bringeth with Him.

Eſa.6.1. Eſa.6.5. And Eſay likewiſe, at the Viſion of the LORD ſedentis ſuper Thronum, and the Angels covering their faces, before Him, crieth out; Væ mihi: Woe is me, I am a man of polluted lips: Woe is me, for I have held my peace: and (there) hee ſeeth, the very ſinnes of his lippes, and the very ſinnes of omiſſion will bee enough to condemne him, though he had never in act, committed any.

Act.9.15. To end this point: Saint Paul, a Veſſell of Election (ſo GOD Himſelfe doth name him) ſaith plainely, if it were before the Corinthians; or any Aſsize of man, he would ſtand upon his Righteouſneſſe: But ſeeing, Qui 1 Cor.4.4. me judicat eſt Dominus, hee will give it over and confeſſe, that though Nihil mihi conſcius ſum (and ſo had juſtitia à Domino;) yet for all that, in hoc non ſum juſtificatus: it is another Righteouſneſſe, and not that, muſt acquit him.

Thus do the Saints, both of the Old, and of the New Teſtament take this Name. And do not the Fathers the like? S. Auguſtines report it is, of Saint Ambroſe, that being now at the point of death, hee alledged, that the cauſe why hee feared not death, was, Quia bonum habemus Dominum; and doth he not give this note upon it, that he did not preſume De ſuis purgatiſsimis moribus, of his converſation, though moſt holy and clean, but only ſtood on the goodneſſe of the LORD, the LORD our Righteouſneſſe?

And doth he not, in his own caſe, fly to the ſame, againſt Creſcentius the Donatiſt. That he ſhunned not, to have his life ſifted to the uttermoſt by any any Donatiſt of them all. Yet in the eyes of God, Cum Rex juſtus ſederit in ſolio (theſe very words he alledgeth) he ſaith plainely, he dare not juſtifie himſelfe; but rather waited for the overflowing bounty of His grace, than would abide the ſevere examination of His judgement. And Bernard (in his 310 Epiſtle, the very laſt he wrote a little before his death, to the Abbot of Chartres) concludeth he not, Calcaneum vacuum meritis curate munire precibus? Abandoneth he not then, his juſtitia à Domino, and confeſſeth, his heele (meaning the end of his life) is bare of all merits, and deſireth to have it, by prayers commended to Iehova juſtitia noſtra. Thus do the Fathers conceive of it.

Yea, the very Schoolemen themſelves, take them from their Queſtions, Quodlibets and Comments on the Sentences, let them bee in their ſoliloquies, meditations, or devotions, and ſpecially in directing how to deale with men in their laſt agony, quando Iudex præ foribus eſt; then take Anſelme, take Bonaventure, take Gerſon, you would not wiſh to find Iehovah juſtitia noſtra better, or more pregnantly acknowledged, than in them you ſhall find it. But this is by vertue of this Ecce Rex faciet judicium; out of whoſe ſight when we be; we may fall into a phanſie, or (as the Prophet ſaith) wee may have a dreame of Iuſtitia noſtra à Iehova.

Anſel. interrogat. Bonavent. in Breviloqnio. Gerſ. in Agone.

But, framing our ſelves as before him, we ſhall ſee, it is not that Righteouſneſſe, will conſiſt there: but we muſt come to Iuſtitia noſtra in Iehovah. It is the only way, how to ſettle the ſtate of this controverſie aright: and without this, we may well miſſe of the interpretation of this Name. And this, they that do not, or will not (now) conceive, the Prophet telleth them after, at the 20. verſ. quod in noviſſimo intelliget is plane, at the end they ſhall underſtand, whether they will or no.

Verſ. 17.

And indeed, to do them no wrong, it is true, that at his Judgement-ſeat, ſo far as it concerneth the ſatisfaction for ſin, and our eſcaping from eternall death, the Church of Rome taketh this Name aright; and that terme, which a great while ſeemed harſh unto them, now they find no ſuch abſurdity in it. That Chriſts righteouſneſſe and merits are imputed to us. So ſaith Bellarmine: Et hoc modo non eſſet abſurdum, ſi quis diceret, nobis imputari Chriſti juſtitiam & merita, cum nobis donentur & applicentur, ac ſi nos ipſi Deo ſatisfeciſſemus. And again, Solus Chriſtus pro ſalute noſtra ſatisfacere potuit, & re ipſa ex juſtitia ſatisfecit, & illa ſatisfactio nobis donatur, & applicatur, & noſtra reputatur, cum Deo reconciliamur & juſtificamur. So ſaith Stapleton, Illa ſane juſtitia, qua ſatisfecit pro nobis, per communicationem ſic noſtra eſt, ut perinde nobis imputetur, ac ſi nos ipſi ſufficienter ſatisfecimus: in as full termes, as one would wiſh. So that, this point is meetly well cleered now. Thus they underſtand this Name in that part of righteouſneſſe, which is ſatisfactory for puniſhment; and there they ſay with us (as we, with Eſay) in Iehovah juſtitia noſtra.

De Iuſtiſi. 2. 20. 2. 11.

De Juſtiſi. 7. 9.

But in the poſitive juſtice, or that part therof, which is meritorious for reward ward; there fall they into a phanſie, they may give it over: and ſuppoſe, that Iuſtitia à Domino, a righteouſneſſe (from God, they grant, yet) inherent in themſelves, without the Righteouſneſſe that is in Chriſt, will ſerve them; wherof they have a good conceipt, that it will endure God's juſtice and ſtandeth not by acceptation. So, by this meanes, ſhrinke they up their Name; and though they leave the full ſound, yet take they halfe the ſenſe from it.

Now as for us, in this point of Righteouſneſſe, if we both go no further, than the former of taking away ſin, then as much as we ſtrive for, they do yeeld us. And therein (we think) we have cauſe to blame them juſtly, for not contenting themſelves with that which contented the Pro-Eſay 27. 9. phet: Hic eſt omnis fructus (marke that omnis) ut auferatur peccatum.
Ioh. 1. 29. Which contented S. Iohn Baptiſt: Ecce Agnus Dei qui tollit peccata mundi.
Mat. 1. 21. Which contented the Angell: Hic ſervabit populum ſuum à peccatis eorum.
De verb. Apoſt. 16. Which contented the Fathers, S. Auguſtine, Puto hoc eſſe juſtus ſum, quod
In Cant. 22. peccator non ſum. S. Bernard, Factus eſt nobis juſtitia, ſapientia, &c. Sapientia in prædicatione, juſtitia in peccatorum abſolutione. So that, to bee abſolved from ſin with him, is our Righteouſneſſe. And yet more plainely, in his CXC. Epiſtle to Innocentius the Pope himſelfe, Ubi reconciliatio, ibi remiſſio peccatorum, & quid ipſa niſi juſtificatio? Which the very name and nature of a judgement-ſeat doth give, which proceedeth only in matters penall.

And as we blame them for that; ſo likewiſe for this, no leſſe, that (if they will needs have it a part of Juſtice) they allow not Christs Name as full in this part as in the former. For there they allow imputation, but here they do not.

For I aske what is the reaſon why in the other part (of ſatisfaction for ſinne) wee need Christ's Righteouſneſſe to bee accompted ours?
De Inſt. 2. 25 The reaſon is (ſaith Bellarmine) Non acceptat Deus in veram ſatisfactionem pro peccato, niſi juſtitiam infinitam, quoniam peccatum offenſa eſt infinita. If that bee the reaſon, that it muſt have an infinite ſatisfaction, becauſe the offence is infinite; Wee reaſon à pari, there muſt alſo bee an infinite merit, becauſe the reward is no leſſe infinite. Elſe, by what proportion do they proceed, or at what beame do they weigh theſe twaine, that cannot counterpoyze an infinite Sinne, but with an infinite ſatisfaction: and think they can weigh downe a reward every way as infinite, with a merit, (to ſay the leaſt) ſurely not infinite? Why ſhould there be a neceſſary uſe of the Sacrifice of Christ's death for the one, and not an uſe full as neceſſary of the Oblation of His life for the other? Or how commeth it to paſſe, that no leſſe than the one will ſerve to free us from eternall death, and a great deale leſſe will ſerve to entitle us to eternall life? Is there not as much requiſite to purchaſe for us the Crowne of Glory, as there is to redeeme us from the Torments of Hell? What difference

difference is there, are they not both equall, both alike infinite? Why is His death allowed ſolely ſufficient to put away ſinne, and why is not His life to be allowed like ſolely ſufficient to bring us to life? If in that the bleſſed Saints themſelves (were their ſufferings never ſo great, yea, though they endured never ſo cruell Martyrdome) if all thoſe could not ſerve to ſatisfie GODS juſtice for their ſinnes, but it is the death of CHRIST muſt deliver them; is it not the very ſame reaſon, that were their merits never ſo many, and their life never ſo holy, yet that by them, they could not, nor we cannot challenge the reward; but it is the life and obedience of CHRIST that de Iuſtitia muſt procure it, for us all? For ſure it is, that Finiti ad infinitum nulla eſt proportio. Eſpecially, if we adde hereunto that as it cannot be denied but to be finite, ſo withall, that the Auncient Fathers ſeeme further to be but meanly conceipted of it; reckoning it not to be full, but defective; not pure, but defiled; and if it be judged by the juſt Judge, Diſtricte, or cum diſtrictione examinis (they be Saint Gregories and Saint Bernards words) indeed, no righteouſneſſe at all.

Not full, but defective. So ſaith Saint Auguſtine: Neque totam, neque plenam, in hac vita, Iuſtitiam nos habere, confitendum nobis eſt. If neither whole, but a part; nor full, but wanting; then unperfect and defective. Now, which muſt be weighed in GODS Ballance, muſt not be found minus habens, and this is minus habens, ſaith Saint Bernard in expreſſe termes.

Not pure, but defiled. Noſtra recta forſan, ſed non pura juſtitia (ſaith Bernard) niſi forte meliores ſumus quàm patres noſtri, quorum illa vox, Omnes juſtitiæ noſtræ ſicut pannus menſtruatæ: Mala noſtra, pura mala, Bona noſtra, pura nequaquam, (ſaith Gregory.) Now κηλῖδα ἀναγκη πνὰ μὴ ἐυρεθῆναι (ſaith S. Chryſoſtome:) Neceſſary it is, that the righteouſneſſe, that ſhall preſent it ſelfe there, have not a ſpot in it. As for ours (as Pope Adrian the ſixth ſaid) the caſe ſtandeth thus, that Stillamus quotidie ſuper telam Iuſtitiæ noſtræ, ſaniem concupiſcentiæ noſtræ, and ſo it is defiled.

And laſt of all; if it be ſtraightly examined indeed no righteouſneſſe. Sancti viri omne meritum vitium eſt, ſi ab Æterno arbitro diſtricte judicetur. Mor. 9. 11. And againe: Quouſque pœna corruptionis aſtringimur, veram munditiam nequaquam apprehendimus. And, Omnis humana juſtitia injuſtitia eſſe invenitur, ſi diſtricte judicetur injuſta invenietur omnis juſtitia noſtra. And thus we ſee, the conceipt, theſe Fathers have, of our Righteouſneſſe inherent: That Mor. 9. 1. if it bee dealt with according to Righteouſneſſe, in illo examine etiam juſtorum vita ſuccumbet, in that examination it will ſinke and cannot ſtand before it. Yea, they themſelves, of the Church of Rome alſo, upon better examination, have begun to cry it down: and I doubt not, but the longer and further they look into it, the eaſier accompt they will make of it.

Gregory de Valentia, after a long debating the matter, thus reſolveth: Diſp. 8. Queſt. 6. p. 1. that that, Seclusâ promissione divinâ, non suppetit aliquis sufficiens titulus, cur opera nostra debent compensari. And thus he expresseth his meaning, touching their value: That they be like to base money (as Princes have somtime made leather-mony currant) wherewith, Plate is bought or other wares farre exceeding the Coyne in value, which is no way in respect of it self, but because it pleased the Prince so to allow of it. And what is this but a proclaiming our Righteousnesse base, or as I said before, a crying it down.

De Iust.6.8 Stapleton, in his seventh proposition, how the matter standeth in our justification, at length is faine to resolve thus: Facitque indulgendo, ut perinde simus coram Deo justi ac si universa, adamussim omnia mandata eademque perfectissimè fecissemus. Now, Indulgence (we know) belongeth unto sin, and Righteousnesse, if it be true, needeth none. Therefore he telleth us it is Perinde ac si justi; it is not justi, as they defend it. So that, he confesseth their righteousnesse needeth an indulgence: and it is but Perinde ac si; and not that neither in justice, but acceptation, which is meere matter of favour and not of judiciall proceeding.

De Iust. 5.7 And to conclude, Bellarmin after his long disputation, in the end taking upon him to answer a case of Conscience, Whether a man may repose any trust in that he had so long argued for, and how farre; compriseth the matter in three propositions well worth the noting. 1 For first, very stoutly he setteth down: Fiducia non ex fide solâ nascitur, sed ex bonis meritis. 2 Then in the second he falleth somewhat: In meritis (quæ verè talia compertum est) fiducia aliqua collocari potest. Not, unlesse it be compertum, they be talia (a case with them, impossible:) and not in them neither, but only aliqua fiducia.

3 And yet, there is some: But after, better bethinking himselfe (it may be, of the Iudge sitting in His throne) he spoileth all in the third, which is, that Propter incertitudinem propriæ justitiæ (against His compertum est) & periculum inanis gloriæ, tutissimum est, fiduciam totam in sola Dei misericordia reponere: Marke that same totam in sola; which is cleane contrary to his aliqua a little before. Marke his misericordia: and that he declineth the judiciall proceeding. And marke His reason; because His righteousnesse is such, as he is not sure of it, nor dare not put any trust in it, nor plead it coram Rege justo judicium faciente. Which is enough (I thinke) to shew, when they have forgot themselves a little out of the fervor of their oppositions, how light and small account they make of it themselys, for which they spoile CHRIST of one halfe of His Name.

This is then the interpretation or meaning of this Name, that is well in the one sense, as the other, CHRIST is our Righteousnesse and as the Prophet Esay putteth it downe, in the plurall number, in Domino justitiæ nostræ, as it were prophesying of these men: All our righteousnesse;

Righteouſneſſe; this, is that; that one as well as the other, are in the Lord. No abatement is to bee deviſed, the Name is not to bee mangled or divided, but entirely belongeth to CHRIST, full and whole, and we to call Him by it, Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra.

II. The calling Chriſt by this Name.

1 Our duty.

We to call Him by it; this is our duty firſt: and that ſo to call Him by it, as by His Name. And a Name is a note of diſtinction, and we therefore ſo to uſe it: To apply it to Him, and to none other whatſoever, as the nature of a Name is. The nature of all names: but chiefly of thoſe, which be titles of honour: For, howſoever wee diſpence with others, thoſe we will not in any wiſe divide with any: Gloriam meam alteri non dabo (ſaith GOD by the Prophet; which maketh the Prophet to proteſt, he will not meddle with it,) Non nobis Domine, and again more vehemently, Non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo da gloriam. And ſuch is this Name. For, that very place in the New Teſtament, where it is ſaid, that GOD hath given Him a Name, which is above all names, that in His Name all knees ſhould bow, and all tongues confeſſe; that place is taken out of the Prophet Eſay, where the very ſame is ſaid, that all knees ſhall bow, and all tongues ſhall acknowledge this Name; and that thus, by ſaying, in Iehova Iuſtitiæ meæ; and ſo acknowledging concludeth, that all the whole Seed of Iſrael, as they ſhall be juſtified, ſo ſhall they Glory in the Lord. It is the very queſtion which the Apoſtle of purpoſe doth propound, Vbi ergo eſt gloriatio tua? as if he ſhould admoniſh us, that this Name is given with expreſſe intent, to exclude it from us, and us from it. And therefore, in that very place where he ſaith, he is made unto us from GOD Righteouſneſſe: To this end (ſaith he) he is ſo made, Vt qui gloriatur, in Domino glorietur. All which I put you in minde of, to this end, that you may marke, that this nipping at this Name of CHRIST, is for no other reaſon, but that we may have ſome honour our ſelves, out of our Righteouſneſſe.

Eſay 42. 3. Pſal. 115. 1. Pſa. 2. 10. Eſay. 45. 24. 1 Cor. 1. 30.

Bellarmine doth diſcloſe as much, and doth not ſtick in plain termes to avow it. For, In anſwer to that argument, which is alleadged by us, that after we are acquit of our ſinnes at this barre, and that only for CHRIST our only Righteouſneſſe; we are received into GOD's favour, and made His Children by adoption, and then have heaven by way of inheritance: He anſwereth directly, Their meaning is, not to content themſelves with that ſingle title of inheritance; but they meane to lay claime to it, duplici jure. That is, not only titulo hæreditatis, but jure mercedis too. And thereof he giveth this reaſon, Quoniam magis honorificum eſt, habere aliquid ex merito: For, that it is more for their honour, to have it by merit. For, ſo (ſaith he) CHRIST had it, and they muſt not be behind Him, but go even as farre as He did. So that, it ſeemeth he is reſolved, that rather than they will loſe their honour, CHRIST muſt part with a peece of His Name, and be named Iuſtitia Noſtra, only in the latter ſenſe. Which is it, the Prophet after (in the twenty ſeventh verſe of this Chapter) ſetteth down as a marke of falſe Prophets; that by having a pleaſant Dreame of their own righteouſneſſe, they make Gods people to forget His Name. As indeed, by this meanes, this part of CHRISTS Name hath been forgotten. And ſo much doth Pighius confeſſe, Diſſimulare non poſſumus, hanc vel primam doctrinæ Chriſtianæ partem obſcuratam quàm illuſtratam magis à ſcholaſticis ſpinoſis pleriſque queſtionibus, that this, being the very chiefe part of a Chriſtian Doctrine, hath rather been obſcured, than received any light, by the Schoolemens queſtions and handling of it. As much to ſay, as they had made the people in a manner to forget this Name.

2 Our benefit.

Now as to call Him by this Name is a Duty; ſo to call Him by it, is an Uſe likewiſe, and a benefit there is, which we receive by it. For calling Him by that Name, which GOD hath preſcribed, and which therefore is to Him moſt acceptable, we ſhall not do it for nought, for He will anſwer us; anſwer us, and anſwer for us; for as an Advocate in our Cauſe. So calleth Ezekias to Him: Domine vim patior, reſponde pro me. So King David repoſeth himſelfe: Thou ſhalt anſwer for me, O LORD my GOD. And this ſhall He, in all things wherein we ſhall need Him: but above all, in that which concerneth His Name in particular, to be our Righteouſneſſe againſt ſin, and that before the righteous Iudge. And even ſo doth Ieremy teach us to pray unto Him; O Lord our miſdeeds teſtifie againſt us, yet deale thou with us according to thy Name; Which is Iehova Iuſtitia noſtra. In thy Name we are juſtified: deale Thou with us according to Thy Name and juſtifie us. Our ſins are forgiven for thy Names ſake: Deale Thou with us according to thy Name, and forgive us our ſins. Et noli ita reminiſci peccatum noſtrum, ut velis propterea obliviſci Nomen tuum: Let not the remembrance of our ſins make thee forget thine own Name. And this if we do, thus if we call on Him, Fidelis & juſtus eſt, He is faithfull (ſaith Saint Iohn) and juſt to forgive us our ſinnes, to juſtifie us, and to bee our Righteouſneſſe. For ſo is His Name, and He beareth not His Name for nought.

Eſa.38.14. Pſal.38.15. Chap.14.9. 1 Cor.6.11. 1 Ioh.1.9.

And, this if we do, and if He be our Righteouſneſſe, as we may ſay in reſpect of His other Name with the Prophet, Look Thou upon us and bee mercifull unto us, as thou uſeſt to do unto thoſe that love thy Name; ſo may we in reſpect of this, go further and ſafely ſay, Eſto Iuſtitia, & fac juſtitiam; eſto juſtitia, & intra in judicium cum Servo tuo. For with this Advocate, with this Righteouſneſſe, With this Name, we may without feare, appeare before the King executing judgment and juſtice.

Pſal.119.132.

So, for that duty which we are bound to acknowledge, we have this this benefit which we ſhall be ſure to receive; the greateſt benefit that can be received for importance in it ſelfe; and the greateſt in reſpect of the moſt dreadfull place and time, wherein we ſhall need to receive it, wherein heaven and earth and all in them ſhall not be able to ſtand us in ſtead, but IEHOVA our Righteouſneſſe onely. And this is the view of His Name, whereby we are called to Him as well for our duty to it, as for our benefit by it, which is that, the Prophet by his Ecce willeth us to behold, and the ſumme of this Scripture,

A SERMON PREACHED

AT WHITE-HALL,
upon the XV, of November,
Anno Domini MDCI.
()

MAT. CHAP. XXII. Ver. XXI.

Reddite ergo quæ ſunt Cæſaris Cæſari; & quæ ſunt DEI DEO.
Give therefore to Cæſar, the things which are Cæſars: and to GOD, thoſe things which are GOD's.

HIch XXII. of Mathew in effect, is nothing elſe but a Chapter of Controverſies: with the Saducee, Verſe 23, with the Phariſee, Verſe 22. with the Scribe, Verſe 34. and (here) with the Herodian. With the Saducees, of the Reſurrection: With the Phariſees, of the great Commandement: With the Scribes, of the Meſsias. All worthy to be weighed; and all at other times commended by the Church, to our conſideration. This here in this.

The Herodian was a Politique; and his queſtion according, about a ſecular point; Licetne ſolvere? The caſe ſtandeth not in this, as it did in the other. The Phariſees and Saducees had no further end, but to ſet Him on ground; and ſo, to expoſe Him to the contempt of the people. The Herodians had laid a more dangerous plot: they came with this Luke 20.20. mind, ſaith Saint Luke, Vt caperent Eum, &c. to catch Him; by catching ſomewhat from him whereby they might lay him faſt, and draw Him within danger of the ſtate. It ſtood our Saviour upon, to be well adviſed, to eſcape this ſnare thus laid for him, which accordingly he doth: leaving them in a muſe, & withall under one, leaving us a patterne; that he is no enemy, but a friend to Cæſar, and a friend, in this ſpeciall point, of his receipt. That there is no duty, no not in this kind, but Chriſt ſaith of it, Reddite; willeth and commandeth it, to be Rendred, That ſo, knowing what CHRIST held, we may make it our Tenet; and both hold it in opinion, and hold us to it in practice for ever.

At or about the birth of CHRIST, this came to be firſt a queſtion: Luke. 2.1. and ſo from thence, ſtill remained. So that, it was very meete, Chriſt ſhould reſolve it, At His birth, was the great Taxe of the world under Auguſtus: which being a new impoſition, and never heard of before, fell out to breed much matter of queſtion: Two ſorts of men taking two Acts 5.36. 37. ſeverall parts about it. There is in Acts 5. mention of Iudas of Galilee, that roſe in the daies of tribute. He it was, that held touching the Taxe, Quod non. The people of God, Abrahams ſeed, free borne, they to bee charged with taxes, by a ſtranger, a heathen idolater? No, rather riſe and take armes, as Ieroboam did. The peoples eares itched after this doctrine. The beſt religion for the Purſe, is the beſt for them; and they, ready to hold with Ieroboam, or Iudas, or any that will abrogate payments. And now, though Iudas was taken, and had as he deſerved; and after his execution, pay it they did, though with an ill will; yet the ſcruple of this queſtion remained in mens mindes ſtill; they continued irreſolute, touching the right of it. As indeed, is no one thing, men are ever ſo long in reſolving. Still there were, that muttered in corners, Iudas was right: Tribute was but a meere exaction. Men indeed of tumultuous Spirits; but in ſhew zealous preſervers of the peoples liberties; whom they called Gaulonites.

On the other ſide, Herod and they that were toward him, being all that they were by Cæſar; to make the tribute ſure worke, they held, that not onely Tribute, but whatſoever elſe was Cæſars, His quæ was quæcunque: He could not have enough; not till hee had quæ Dei too. The Roman Monarchie pricked faſt toward this point: Diviſum imperium cũ Iove, was received at this time with great applauſe. Cæſar and Iupiter at halves; halfe GOD. Not long after, full out a God; Edictum Domini, &c. the Edict of our Lord God Domitian. And this was not a peece of Poetry: but we finde in the Iewiſh ſtory, Petronius in good earneſt, ſought to bring in Caligula's image, into the Temple of God; and called for, not onely Tribute, but ſacrifice for Cæſar. Now them, that thus in derogation of the Peoples liberty, held this part, they termed Herodians; As it were men for Herods turne. And thus held this queſtion: Thus have wee both ſides; and both their abettours. Of which the People inclined to the Gaulonite, and liked them better : the Statesmen and Officers tooke part with the Herodian.

People

Now come they to CHRIST, to receive His resolution, which part Hee will take to. It is, for them, a very Quodlibet. If, to retaine the peoples favour, to avoid their out-cry, he speak but doubtfully of Cæsars tribute, habetur propositum, they have what they would: It is that, they came for; to bring him in disgrace with the State, and in danger of his life. Thus, would they fain have had it; and therefore, when truly they could not (as, by this answer, it is too plaine) untruly, they suggested, We found this man denying to pay tribute unto Cæsar. But, if this hit not : if He be for the tribute; yet will it not be from the purpose: they shall set the people (as good as a wasps nest) upon Him, they shall subject him to their clamour and obloquie. He that must be their MESSIAS, must proclaime a Iubile; must cry, No tribute, Other-wise, he is not for them; if he betray them to the servitude of Tolls and Taxes, away with him; Not Him, but Iudas of Galilee. So have they him, at a dangerous Dilemma: Imagining, hee must needes take one part. But that was in their error. For CHRIST tooke away between both. For as neither part is (simply) true: so is there some truth, in both. Therefore, He answers not absolutely (as they fondly conceived, he needs must) but with a double Quæ, as (indeed) he should; which, was not the answere, they looked for. But it was such, as they missed their purpose, & knew not how to reprove it. Luk. 23. 2.

The summe whereof is: that, CHRIST is neither Gaulonite nor Herodian: Nor no more are Christians, Gaulonites to deny Cæsar his Quæ; nor Herodians, to grant him GŌDS, and leave GOD none at all. But ready to acknowledge what due is, to either; both, of Faith to GOD, and Allegeance to Cæsar; and that in every point, and even in this here, of Licet ne solvere?

The substance of which answer, is the maine ground of all Iustice, Suum cuique, Let every one render to each, that which is his. And, if to every one; then to these two great ones, Cæsar, and GOD. To Cæsar, Cæsars Due; to GOD, GODS. Vpon which two Duties, by vertue of this Text, there goeth forth two degrees, for all the world to be taxed. The first taxing, to be for Cæsar, and his affaires. 2. The like taxe to be levied for GOD and for His. For, though many other duties be due to both, and to be rendered to them both; yet the matter of principall entendment in this place; is Ostende mihi numisma, matter of payment.

The Division

These be the two Capitall points. Wherein, I. of the joynt and mutuall consistene, of Cæsar and of GOD. I.

2. That there are, among the things we have, certaine of them, things of Cæsars. Certaine others, things of GODS. II.

3. That these things are to be rendred and given. III.

4. What these things are that are Cæsars in this kinde: and what those, that are GODS, that we may pay each his owne. IV.

I. Cæſar and God ioyntly.

FRom this happy conjunction of theſe two great Lights (Cæſar and GOD) here met together, linked with this Copulative, Cæſari and DEO; and both in the compaſſe of one Period; againſt the Gaulonite of our Age, the Anabaptiſt (who thinketh, they are in oppoſition, the whole heaven in ſunder; and that GOD hath not His due, unleſſe Cæſar lay downe His Scepter.) That Cæſar and GOD, CHRIST and a Chriſtian Magiſtrate, are ἀσύστατα incompatible; that they ſtand aloofe, and will not one come neere another; Here is a Syſtaſie, a Conſiſtence: they will ſtand together well (both they and their duties:) as cloſe as one Verſe, one breath, one period can joyne them.

To ſee then this paire thus neere, thus coupled, thus (as it were) arme in arme together, is a bleſsed ſight. Not here onely to be ſeene; but all the Scriptures through, with like aſpect. Here in one Goſpell, Cæſar and GOD. Before in one Law, GOD providing as for His owne worſhip, ſo for their honour that are ſet over us. In one Verſe the Prophet joyneth them (Pro. 24. 21.) My Sonne, feare GOD and the King: And in one Verſe the Apoſtle ſorteth them (1. Pet. 2 17.) Feare GOD, honour the King. So, GOD and CHRIST, the Law and Goſpell, the Prophets and Apoſtles, fetcht not their breath, come not to a full point, till they have taken in both. Sure it is, CHRIST and Belial agree not (2 Cor. 6. 11.) and as ſure, that they are the children of Belial; that have no part in David (that is, the lawfull Magiſtrate) by Sheba's caſe, 2 Sam 20.1.

Exod. 20.

This is enough to ſhew; GOD impeacheth not Cæſar; nor GOD's due, Cæſar's right. Either permitteth others intereſt; and both of them may joyntly be performed. That as GOD's Law ſupporteth the Law of Nations; So doth CHRIST plead for Cæſar: His Religion, for Cæſars Allegeance; His Goſpell, for Cæſars dutie, even to a penny. It was but a penny was ſhewed: Not ſo much as a penny of Cæſars, but CHRIST will ſpeake, he may have it. This againſt the Gaulonite, that ſteppes over Quæ Cæſaris, the firſt part, and is all for Quæ Dei, the latter. And againſt the Herodian too; by whom Quæ Cæſaris is ſtood on alone, and Quæ Dei ſlipped over. Two duties are ſet forth; there is a like regard to be had of both, that wee make not CHRIST's anſwere ſerve for either alone. I know not how, an evill uſe hath poſſeſſed the World: Commonly, one duty is ſingled out and much made of, without heed had had of the other. Quæ Cæſaris, audibly and with full voice; Quæ Dei drowned and ſcarce heard. And it is not in this alone, but in many others: We cannot raiſe the price of one vertue, but we muſt crie down al the reſt. Not canonize Preaching, but Prayer muſt grow out of requeſt. Not poſsible, to bring up Almes and workes of Mercie, but Offerings and workes of Devotion muſt bee laid downe. But by ſale of CHRISTVS, ointment, no way to provide for the poore. Senſible in others, and this too dull,

GOD is not entire (thinks the Gaulonite) unleſſe Cæſars image and ſuperſcription be blotted out. Cæſar hath not enough, till GOD have nothing left, thinkes the Herodian.

CHRIST's courſe is the beſt; to hold the meane betweene both: Either to be preſerved in his right. Not to looke ſo much on one, as we loſe ſight of the other. Not to give ſo good an eare to one, as wee care not though the other be never ſpoken of. GOD hath coupled them here: and ſince GOD hath coupled them, let not man ſever them. To Cæſar, and to GOD: Not to Cæſar only, but to Cæſar and GOD. And againe, not to GOD onely; but to GOD and Cæſar.

Cæſar and GOD then, will ſtand together: Deſcend yet one degree further, wee may put the Caſe harder yet. For, I demand, What Cæſar was this, for whoſe intereſt CHRIST here pleadeth? To quicken this point ſomewhat more; It is certaine, it was Tiberius, even hee under whom our SAVIOUR was (and knew He was to be) put to death: A ſtranger from Iſrael. A Heathen man, uncircumciſed, an idolater, and enemy to the Truth. So were Auguſtus and the reſt, you will ſay: But even in morall goodneſſe, he nothing ſo good as they. The Roman ſtories are in every mans hand: Men know, he was far from a good Prince, or good man either, as good went even among the Heathen. Yet even this Cæſar, and ſuch as he; any Cæſar will ſtand with GOD, and GOD with them, for all that.

Not only, to Cæſar, but to this, and ſuch as this; Reddite (ſaith CHRIST) Solvite (ſaith Paul) Subjecti eſtote (ſaith Peter) for all that: So was the old Divinitie. Though an evill ſpirit ſent from GOD vex Saul, yet (ſaith David) deſtroy not, it is his word; nay, Touch not the Lords Anointed. Though Nebuchadnezzar ſet up a great Idoll in the field Dura, and Balthazar his ſonne rather worſe, than his father; yet, Pray for Nebuchadnezzar ſaith Ieremie; and for Balthazar his ſonne, and for the peace even of that ſtate. From theſe examples, might Iudas of Galile have taken his directions. CHRIST did; and his Apoſtles after Him, willed duties to be paid and obedience to be yeelded, and yeelded it themſelves, to ſuch Cæſars as Claudius, Caligula and Nero; Dyſcolis Dominis (as S. Peters terme is) if ever there were any. Which ſheweth, they were all of minde, that Cæſar (though no better than theſe) and GOD will ſtand together well enough. Yea, that though Cæſar gave not GOD His due, as theſe did not certainely; yet, are wee to give Cæſar, that his is notwithſtanding.

I know, we all know; if this Cæſar be Conſtantine, or Theodoſius, the caſe is much the ſtronger, and the duty toucheth us neerer. But whether he be or no, the Powers that are, are ordained of GOD, though Tiberius or Nero have the powers. It is not the man, it is the ordinance of GOD, we owe and performe our ſubjection to. We yeeld it not to Tiberius, but to Cæſar; and Cæſar is Gods ordinance, be Tiberius what he will. This, for the conſorting of GOD and Cæſar, and even, of this Cæſar.

II. Certaine things Cæſars. Certaine things Gods.

That point eſtabliſhed, we come to the ſecond, out of theſe words quæ Cæſaris, & quæ Dei, This may we inferre: That among theſe things we have, we all and every of us, have certaine things of Cæſars, and certain other things of Gods. That all the things we have, are not our own, in aſmuch as out of them, there belong ſome things, to either of theſe. It is, as if CHRIST would make, all we have not to be fully and wholy ours; but three perſons to be intereſſed in them? Cæſar to have a right to ſome; GOD to other ſome; and the remainder onely, cleerly to be ours. (Weigh the words Quæ Dei.) So that, His meaning is every man ſhould thus make account with himſelfe, of that he hath, that there is in his hands ſomewhat that pertaineth to either of theſe two. That there is in our ſubſtance, a portion whereto they have as good right and title, as we to the reſt, That what we have is ours, GODS part and Cæſars part firſt deducted; Quæ Dei & quæ Cæſaris (it is the caſe poſſeſsive) doe carry thus much. Therefore ſaith the true Iſraelite, when he tendereth his offering to GOD, Suſtuli quod Sanctum eſt è domo meâ: I had a holy portion due to GOD amongſt my goods, I have ſevered it from the reſt, I have brought it and layd it upon the Altar. So, they in 1.Sam. 10. to Saul their lawfull Magiſtrate, preſented that was his. They that did ſo, Tetigit Deus cor eorum, GOD had touched their hearts, Conſequently, in their hearts that did it not, there was the Print of the Devils clawes, not the touch of the finger of GOD. This may ſerve for the ſecond of the duty: ſo wee ſhall ſtrike the ſame naile home, in the third of Reddite.

Deut.26.13.
1 Sam.10. 26.27.

III. Theſe to be rendred.

For, from this right thus imported in the words (Quæ Cæſaris quæ Dei) without any ſtreining, naturally doth follow the Reddite.

That theirs it is, and ſo being theirs, to be payd them. Not of courteſie, but of duty, Not, as a free largeſſe, but as a due debt. Not Date, but Reddite, ἀπόδοτε, As if our Saviour ſhould ſay, you aske me whether it be lawfull to pay, I tell you, it is as lawfull to pay it, as it is unlawfull to with-hold it: you would know whether you may; I ſay unto you, you not only may, but muſt anſwer it. Nor dare, as a matter of gift, but reddere, as a matter of repayment or reſtitution. Saint Paul maketh this point yet more plaine: indeed paſt all controverſie, where he addeth to ἀποδότε the other ὀφειλὰς, to the word of rendring, the plaine terme of debts: expreſly calling them debts, both Tribute and Cuſtome.

to

Then what is paid to the Prince, or to GOD, is not to be termed a donative, gratuity, or benevolence, but of the nature of things reſtored, which though they bee in our keeping, are in very deed other mens. And they that reckon of them as matters meerely voluntary, muſt alter CHRIST'S Reddite needs; and teach Him ſome other terme. But they that will learne of Him, muſt thinke and call them debts; muſt accompt themſelves debters; and that God and Cæſar are as two creditors, and they indebted to them both; and thereby as truely bound to diſcharge themſelves of theſe, as of any debt, or bond they owe. That, if they render not theſe duties, they detaine that which is none of theirs: and ſo doing, are not only hard and illiberall, but unrighteous and unjuſt men. Rom. 13.7.

This from Reddite, but this not all. There is yet a further matter in it, which giveth a great grace to this rendring.

For in that He willeth them, ἀπόδοτε, His meaning is withall it ſhould not bee ἀνάγκη, a forced yeelding, but ἀπόδοσις a Rendring, and that willingly; for ſo the nature of the word doth import, and ſo the Grecians diſtinguiſh ἀπο τίσαι, and ἀποδῶναι. Our tranſlation readeth Give to Cæſar; no doubt, with reference to this; that it ſhould (though duely) yet ſo willingly be paid, as it were even a franke gift. In our ſpeech we ſay, What is more due than debt? And againe, What is more free than gift? Yet both theſe may meete, as in an other caſe, the Apoſtle coupleth them ὀφειλομὴν εὐνοίαν, Duety, yet Benevolent; Benevolence and yet due; the one reſpecting the nature, the other the mind: So, both tranſlations not amiſſe, both readings reconciled.

That is not therefore to pay them, becauſe it will no better be. Cæſar hath vim coactivam. Hophni hath a fleſh-hooke, and can ſay, date vel auferetur à vobis: and therefore to part with it, as one delivereth a purſe, or to beare it as a Porter doth his load; groning under it: that is not the manner of Rendring it, that is here required. But wee muſt offer it as it were a Gift, voluntarily, willingly, cheerefully, ἑκουσίως, ἐκψυχῆς: Not, ἐξ ἀνάγκης, ἐκ λύπης. Διὰ τὸ κύριον (ſaith Saint Peter) διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν (ſaith St. Paul) Even for the Lord, even for conſcience ſake; though Hophni had no fleſh-hooke, though Cæſar had no Publican to take a ſtreſſe. 1 Sam. 2. 13. Col. 3. 23. 2 Cor. 9. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 13 Rom. 13. 5

To pay it with grudging and an evill eye, to ſay Vade & redi cras, to put off, to pay it after often comming and ſending; this is no ἀπόδοτε, theſe the heathen man termeth viſcata beneficia, when they hang to the fingers like bird-lime, and will not come away. Prov. 3. 28.

IV. What are Cæſars, what Gods.

Render then, and give, Quæ Cæſaris Cæſari (that is) the right duty to the right owner: As, dutifully and willingly, ſo to doe it wiſely. In Suum cuique, there is not onely juſtice, but wiſdome, to know and to preſerve to every one that is his owne; the right quæ, to him that of right it belongeth to.

1 Cor. 14. 33. Not to ſhuffle them together; Cæſar's to GOD, GOD'S to Cæſar; it skills not which to which. GOD is not the Author of confuſion: but, to know and diſcerne, what to each, pertaineth; and what pertaineth, that Deut. 19. 14. not confound: The Prophet calleth it removing the Land-marke, which GOD hath ſet to diſtinguiſh the duties, that neither invade the others right, but keepe the partition which He hath ſet up. Not to ſtand (as here they doe,) ſtreining at a penny, which was Cæſars without queſtion; and doe (as after they did) receive the Roman Eagle into their Temple, which was GOD'S right, and but ſleightly of them looked to. Ægerrimè pendere tributum, promptiſsimè ſuſcipere Religionem: with much adoe to pay any tribute at all, with little adoe to receive one religion after another. GOD forbid, Cæſar ſhould ſo readily receive GOD'S duties at their hands, as He might eaſily have them if He would.

To the end then, we may know, which to render to which, it remaineth we inquire what is eithers due, that we may tender it accordingly. And firſt, what is Cæſars.

If we aske then, what is Cæſars? Our anſwer muſt be; what GOD hath ſet over to him. For, though Quæ Dei ſtand laſt in place; yet ſure it is, the former quæ commeth out of the later, and Quæ Cæſaris, is derived out of quæ Dei.

1 Chro. 29. 19. Originally, in the perſon of all Kings, doth King David acknowledge; that, All things are of Him, and all things are His. But the ſovereigne bounty of GOD was ſuch, as He would not keepe all, in His owne owne hands; but as He hath vouchſafed to take unto Himſelfe a ſecondary meanes in the government of mankinde; ſo hath He ſet over unto them a part of his owne duty, that ſo one man might be one anothers debtor, and (after a ſort) Homo homini Deus. To the conveiance then, of divers benefits, He hath called to Himſelfe divers perſons, and joyned them with Himſelfe: As our Parents, to the worke of our bringing forth; our Teachers, in the worke of our training up; and many other, in their kindes, with Him, and under Him, His meanes and Miniſters, all for our good. Rom. 13.4

And in the high and heavenly worke of the Preſervation of all our lives, perſons, eſtates, and goods, in ſafety, peace and quietneſſe, in this His ſo great and divine benefit, He hath aſſociated Cæſar to Himſelfe: and in regard of His care and travell therein, hath intitled him to part of His owne right; hath made over this Quæ, and made it due to Cæſar, and ſo commeth he to claime it.

In which point we learn, if we pay tribute, what we have for it back in exchange: if we give, what Cæſar giveth us for it againe; our penny and our penny-worthes: Even this, Vt ſit pax & veritas in diebus noſtris. This is it, to which we doe debitum reddere, as he calleth it (*Romans.*13.) This, to which we doe mutuam vicem rependere, as he ſpeaketh, 1. *Tim.*5.4. διὰ τοῦτο, and even for this cauſe pay we tribute. For this, that whilo wee intend out private pleaſures and profits in particular, we have them that ſtudy how we may ſafely and quietly doe it; that counſell and contrive our peace, while we intend every man his owne affaires: that wake while we ſleepe ſecurely, and carke and care, while we are merry and never thinke of it. Perſons, by whoſe providence, an happy Peace we long have enjoyed, and many good bleſsings are come to our Nation. In which reſpect, we owe them a large quæ; larger than I (now) can ſtand to recount.

Eſay 39.8. Rom. 13.7. 1 Tim.5.4. Rom. 13.6.

1. We owe them honour inward, by a reverent conceipt. 2. And out ward, by an honourable teſtimony of the vertues in them and the good we receive by them, And ſure I am, this we owe, Not to ſpeake evil of them that are in authority: and if there were ſome infirmity, not to blaze, but to conceale and cover it; for that the Apoſtle maketh a part of honour, 1 *Cor.*12.23. 3. Wee owe them our Prayers, and daily devout remembrance; For all (ſaith Saint Paul) but by ſpeciall prerogative for Princes. 4. We owe them the ſervice of our bodies, which if we refuſe to come in perſon to doe, the Angell of the Lord will curſe us, as hee did Meroz, Iudges 5.24, And in a word to ſay with the Apoſtle, Non recuſo mori.

1 Pet.2.10. Iude 8. 1 Tim. 2.2. Acts 25.11.

All theſe we owe, and all theſe are parts of quæ Cæſaris, but theſe are without the compaſſe of this quæ here. Theſe be not the things here queſtioned. It is the coine with Cæſars ſtampe, it is a matter of payment. Let us hold us to that.

I ſay

I ſay then, that to be ſafe from the forreine enemy, from the Wolfe abroad, is a very great benefit. The ſword holdeth him out; propter hoc we owe to the ſword. To be quiet from the inward violent injurious oppreſsors, the fat and foregrown rammes within our own fold, is a ſpeciall bleſsing. The Scepter holds them in; Propter hoc we owe to the Scepter. That by meanes of Cæſars Sword, we have a free Sea, and ſafe port and harbour, Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar our cuſtome. That by meanes of his Sword, we have our ſeed-time to eare the ground, our harveſt, to inne the crop quiet and ſafe; Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar our Tribute or taxe. That by meanes of his Scepter, we have right in all wrongs, and are not overborne in our innocency, by ſuch as never ceaſe to trouble ſuch as are quiet in the land: Propter hoc we owe to Cæſar, the fees due to his Courts of Iuſtice.

There are Quæ Cæſaris; and not one of theſe but hath his ground in the Word of GOD. The Cuſtome, Luk 3.13. The Taxe, 1. *Sam.*17 25. The Fines, Ezra 7.26. The confiſcation, Ezra 10. 8.

Theſe then are Quæ Cæſaris. But theſe are current and ordinarie. But extraordinary occaſions cannot be anſwered with ordinary charges; Though, in peace, the ſet maintenance of Garriſons which is certaine, (the ordinance of Ioſaphat) is enough. 2 Chro. 17.3. yet when warre commeth πολεμὸς ἢ τεταγμένα ζητεῖ, Warre admits no ſtint, but as occaſions call for it, ſupply muſt be ready.

There is no ſafety or aſſurance of quietneſſe, except the Enemy feare. There is no feare without power, except we be able to hold our owne; maugre the malice and force of the enemies. There is no power, but by preparation of Souldiers and furniture for warre. Nor that, without Pay, (the Sinnewes of all affaires:) Nor Pay, without Contribution. And Propter hoc, διὰ τοῦτο, beſides thoſe other ordinary, the indictions for warre (which we call ſubſidies) are part of quæ Cæſaris too. And warranted by the Scripture: Amaziah, levying a hundred Talents, at one time againſt Edom: Menahem levying a thouſand Talents, at another, againſt Aſſur (a great contribution of fifty ſicles a man.) Indeed ſo it was, but ſuch were the occaſions: and the occaſions being ſuch, done; and done lawfully.

2 Ch. 25.6.
2 Kin. 15.19. 20.

Then, as generally we are bound to render all quæ Cæſaris: So, in particular, by this Text, and at this inſtant, this quæ; when the times make it requiſite, and it is orderly required.

CHRIST, that willeth us to render it, rendred it Himſelfe: and very timely He did it. For, He went to be taxed, being yet in His mothers wombe (as Levi is ſaid to pay tythe in his Fathers loynes.) And Hee was borne under the obedience of paying this duty. This may haply be ſaid not to bee His owne act: Therefore after at full yeares, then alſo, though Hee might have pleaded exemption (as He telleth S. Peter) yet payed He His Stater; thongh not due, yet to avoid the offence of refuſing

Luk. 2.5.
Heb. 7.9.10
Mat. 17.27.

to

to pay to Cæſar, Conditor Cæſaris cenſum ſolvit Cæſari : Seeing then, Cæſar's Creator paid Cæſar his due, will any deny to doe it? Eſpecially ſeeing He paid Cæſar his due, yea, even then, when Cæſar did not render to GOD His due, but to Idolls; and what colour then, can any have to deny it?

So have we His Example, whereof we have here His Precept: doing that before us, which He willeth us to doe after Him, and calling to us for no more, than He did Himſelfe. And enſuing His ſteps, His Apoſtle preſſeth the ſame point; telling us, Cuſtome and Tribute are ὀφειλαὶ, debts; Rom. 13. 7 ſhewing us, why they be debts, διὰ τοῦτο, for the good we receive; and willing us therefore to depart with them. even propter conſcientiam, for very conſcience ſake.

Let me adde but this one. The fore-fathers of theſe here that move this doubt, they forſook David's Houſe, only becauſe they thought much of paying the taxe which Salomon had ſet, and they revolted to Ieroboam: what got they by it? By denying Quæ Cæſaris, they loſt Quæ Dei, the true Religion; and beſides enthralled themſelves to farre greater exactions, which the erecting of a new Eſtate muſt needs require. Even theſe, not obeying this advice, this Reddite of our SAVIOUR, but mutining for the Roman tribute after, under Florus and Albinus Deputies for Cæſar; beſides that they loſt their Temple, Sacrifice, and Service, their Quæ Dei, upon this very point, overthrew their eſtate cleane, which to this day they never recovered. Therefore Reddite Quæ Cæſaris, is good counſell, leſt Quæ Dei and all goe after it.

To conclude then, 1 Cæſar and GOD will ſtand together; yea, Tiberius Cæſar and GOD. 2 To theſe, ſo ſtanding, there are certaine things due, of duty belonging. 3 Theſe things ſo due are to be rendred: Not given as Gratuities, but rendred as Debts: And againe, with good will to be rendred, not delivered by force: And as willingly, ſo wiſely; Cæſar to have his, GOD His; in diſtinction, not confuſion, but each his owne. 4 Cæſar, ſuch duties; all ſuch duties as pertaine to him at large; but as this Text occaſioneth, the duty of Tribute and Subſidie. This is the ſummè.

And if Tiberius Cæſar, much more that Prince, that every way CHRIST Himſelfe would commend before Tiberius; whom it were an injury, once to compare with Tiberius; Above any Cæſar of them all: who hath exalted Him whom Tiberius crucified; and profeſſed Him, with hazard of his eſtate and life, whom they perſecuted in all bloudy manner.

Who hath preſerved us, in the profeſsion of His holy Name and truth many yeares, quietly without feare, and peaceably without interruption; and, ſo may ſtill, many and many times many yeares more. To this, to ſuch a one, by ſpeciall due, Reddite more; and more willingly, and more bounteouſly, than to them. The concluſion is good, the Conſequent much more forcible. This, for Quæ Cæſaris now. For Quæ Dei, at ſome other time, when like Text ſhall offer like occaſion.

ידיון לך למקרא העדה

A Grant.

AMong divers and ſundry Commiſſions granted in the Law, for the benefit and better order of GODS people; this (which I have read) is one. Given (as wee ſee) per Ipſum DEUM, by GOD Himſelfe: and that vivæ vocis Oraculo, by expreſſe warrant from His owne mouth, Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, ſaying,

From God.

And it is a grant of the Right and Power of the Trumpets, and with them, of aſſembling the people of GOD. A Right and Power not to be lightly accounted of, or to be heard of with ſleight attention: It is a matter of great weight and conſequence, The calling of Aſſemblies.

Of the power of calling Aſſemblies. The Grant of this Power, a matter of importance. Chap. 29. 1.

There is yeerely a ſolemne Feaſt holden in memory of it, and that by GODS owne appointment, no leſſe than of the Paſſeover, or of the Law it ſelfe, Even the Feaſt of the trumpets, much about this time of the yeare, the latter Æquinoctiall. And GOD appointeth no Feaſt, but in remembrance of ſome ſpeciall benefit. It is therefore one of His ſpeciall benefits, and high favours vouchſafed them, and to be regarded accordingly.

In whose hands this Power was before.

This power hitherto, ever ſince they came out of Ægypt, and that GOD adopted them for His people, unto this very day and place had GOD kept in His owne hands, as to Him alone (of right) properly belonging. For unto this very day and place the people of GOD, as they had aſſembled many times & oft; ſo it was ever (they be the very laſt words of the laſt Chapter, which ſerve for an introduction to theſe of ours) ever, all their meetings and removings were, by immediate warrant from GOD Himſelfe. But here now, GOD no longer intending, thus to warrant them ſtill by ſpeciall direction from His owne ſelfe, but to ſet over this power, once for all: Here He doth it. This is the primary paſſing it from God, and deriving it to Moſes, who was the firſt that ever held it by force of the Law written. For, to this place they came by the ſound of Gods; and from this place they diſlodged, by the ſound of Moſes's Trumper.

Chap 9 V. 18. 20 23.

Exod. 19. 13.

The time and place of the Granting.

And it is a point very conſiderable, what day and place this was: for it appeareth, they were yet at Sinai, by the 12. verſe: yet, at the very Mount of GOD, by the 33. of this Chapter, even then, when this Commiſſion came forth: So that this power is as ancient as the Law. At no other place, nor no other time delivered, then even the Law it ſelfe: when the two Tables were given, the two Trumpets were given: and Moſes that was made keeper of both the Tables, made likewiſe keeper of both the Trumpets; Both at Sinai; both at one time: As if there were ſome neere alliance betweene the Law and Aſſemblies. And ſo there is: Aſſemblies being ever a ſpeciall meanes to revive the Law (as occaſions ſerve) and to keepe it in life. As if the Law it ſelfe therefore lacked yet ſomething, and were not perfect and full without them: So, till this grant was paſſed, they ſtayed ſtill at Sinai, and ſo ſoone as ever this was paſſed, they preſently removed.

To entreat then of this Power. The ſtorie of the Bible would ſerve our turne to ſhew us, who have had the exerciſe of it in their hands, from time to time, if that were enough. But that is not enough. For, the errours firſt and laſt about this point, from hence they ſeeme to grow, that men look not backe enough; have not an eye to this, how it was in the beginning, by the very Law of God. Being therefore to ſearch for the Originall warrant, by which the Aſſemblies of Gods people are called, and kept: this place of Numbers is generally agreed to be it: That here, it is firſt found, and here it is firſt founded; even in the Law, the beſt ground for a Power that may be.

Math. 19 4.

This the originall Grant of it.

Luke 10. 26. In Lege quid ſcriptum eſt? quomodo legis? (ſaith our SAVIOUR) What is written in the Law? how readeſt thou there? as if He ſhould ſay: If it be to be read there, it is well: then muſt it needs be yeelded to: there is no excepting to it then, unleſſe you will except to Law, and Law-giver, to GOD and all. Let us then come to this Commiſsion.

The Parts of the Grant.

The points of it be three: Firſt, two trumpets of ſilver, to be made out of one whole peece, both. Secondly, with theſe trumpets, the Congregation to be called, and the Campe removed. Thirdly, Moſes to make theſe Trumpets, and being made, to uſe them to theſe ends. Theſe three: 1 The Inſtrument: 2 The End, for which: 3 The Party, to whom.

Now (to marſhall theſe in their right order,) 1. The end is to be firſt: Sapiens ſemper incipit à fine (ſaith the Philoſopher.) A wiſe man begins ever at the end: for that (indeed) is Cauſa Cauſarum (as Logick teacheth us) the cauſe of all the cauſes; the cauſe that ſets them all on working. 2. Then next, the Inſtrument; which applieth this power to this end. 3. And ſo laſt, the Agent, who is to guide the Inſtrument, and to whom both Inſtrument and Power is committed.

1 The End, for which this Power is conveyed, is double; as the ſubject is double, whereon it hath his operation, 1 The Campe, and the 2 Congregation. On either of theſe, a ſpeciall act excerciſed: to remove the Campe: To call together the Congregation: One for Warre, the other for Peace.

That of the Campe, hath no longer uſe, than while it is warre. GOD forbid that ſhould be long: nay, GOD forbid, it ſhould be at all. The beſt removing of the Campe, is the removing of it quite and cleane away. But if it be not poſsible, if it lie not in us, to have peace with all men, if warre muſt be, here is order for it. But, the calling ling of the Congregation, that is it: that is to continue, and therefore, that, which we to deale with.

The calling of the Congregation (as in the two next verſes) either in whole, or in part; either of all the Tribes, or but of the chiefe and principall men in them. A power for both theſe. And (in a word) a power generall, for calling Aſſemblies: Aſſemblies in warre: Aſſemblies in peace: Aſſemblies, of the whole: Aſſemblies of each, or any part.

2 This Power, to be executed by Inſtruments; the Inſtruments to be Trumpets: two in number: thoſe to be of ſilver, and both of one entire peece of ſilver.

3 This power, and the executing of it by theſe Inſtruments, committed to Moſes. Firſt, he to have the making of theſe trumpets: Fac tibi: then, he to have the right to them being made: Et erunt tibi: then, he to uſe them to call the Congregation, and if need be, to remove the Campe. None to make any Trumpet but he. None to have any Trumpet but he. None to meddle with the calling of the Congregation, or removing the Campe with them but he, or by his leave and appointment.

Wherein as we finde the Grant full, ſo are we further to ſearch and ſee, whether this Grant tooke place or no? Whether as theſe trumpets were made and given to call the Congregation, ſo the Congregation from time to time, have beene called by theſe trumpets. And ſo firſt of the granting this Power to be executed, and then of the executing this Power ſo granted.

So have we two Subjects: the Campe, and the Congregation. Two Acts: to Aſſemble, and to Remove. Two Inſtruments: the two ſilver Trumpets. Two Powers: to make them; two owe them being made, for the two acts or ends before ſpecified: Firſt for calling the Aſſembly, and then for diſlodging the Campe. And all theſe committed to Moſes. The ſumme of all is: the eſtabliſhing in Moſes, the Prerogative and Power of calling and diſſolving Aſſemblies about publike affaires.

Then GOD ſpake to Moſes, &c.

IF we begin with the End: the End is Aſſembling. Aſſembling, is reduced to Motion. Not to every motion: but to the very cheifeſt of all; as that which draweth together all; and ſo at once moveth all. For as in the Soule, when the minde ſummoneth all the powers and faculties together: Or in the body, when all the ſinewes joyne their forces together, it is ultimum potentiæ: So in the body politicke, when all the Eſtates are drawne together into one, it is nixus rather than Motus, a maine ſway, rather than a motion: Or, if a motion, it is Motus magnus, no common and ordinary, but an extraordinary great Motion. Such a motion is Aſſembling, and ſuch is the nature of it. Aſſembling, a motion extraordinary.

Yet, even this (great and extraordinary as it is) ſuch and ſo urgent occaſions may, and doe daily ariſe, as very requiſite it is, ſuch Meetings there ſhould be: very requiſite (I ſay) both in Warre and in Peace, both for the Campe and for the Congregation. The ground whereof ſeemeth to be; that, power diſperſed may doe many things: but to doe ſome, it muſt be united. Vnited in conſultation: For, that which one eye cannot diſcerne, many may. Vnited in Action: For, many hands may diſcharge that by parts, which in whole, were too troubleſome for any. But, Action is more proper to Warre; that is the Aſſembly of Fortitude: And Conſultation rather for Peace; that is the Aſſembly of Prudence. And in Peace, cheifely, for making of Lawes: For that every man is more willing to ſubmit himſelfe to that, whereof all doe agree. The whole Campe, then, when it is aſſembled, will be the more ſurely fortified: And, the whole Yet neceſſary. For the Campe. For the Congregation.

Congregation, when it is Aſſembled, will be the more ſoundly adviſed. And, hereby it commeth to paſſe, that there ever hath, and ever will be, great uſe of calling Aſſemblies.

[a] Especially for this land of Britaine. Nec aliud adverſus validiſſimas gentes, pro nobis utilius, quàm quòd in commune non conſulunt. Rarus ad propulſandum commune periculum Conventus. Ita dum ſinguli pugnant, univerſi vincuntur. In vita Agric.

Let me adde yet one thing further, to bring it home to our ſelves. There is no people under heaven may better ſpeake for the uſe of Aſſemblies, than we: There was nothing that did our Anceſtors the Britains more hurt (ſaith Tacitus[a] of them) nothing that turned them to greater prejudice, than this one, That they met not, they conſulted not in common: but every man ran a courſe by himſelfe of his owne head: And, this was the greateſt advantage the Romane had of them: they were not ſo wiſe, as to know, what good there was in publike conventions. Therefore, great uſe of Aſſemblies; may we ſay of all others.

[b] Neceſſary for the Church.

Now if they be needfull for the Campe, and for the Congregation, as it is a Civill bodie; I doubt not, but I may adde, alſo, every way as needfull for the Congregation properly ſo called (that is) the Church. [b] The Church hath her warres to fight: The Church hath her Lawes to make.

Warres, with hereſies: wherein experience teacheth us, it is matter of leſſe difficultie to raze a good Fort, than to caſt downe a ſtrong imagination; and more eaſie to drive out of the field a good armie of men, than to chaſe out of mens mindes a heape of fond opinions, having once taken head. Now, hereſies have ever beene beſt put to flight by the Churches Aſſemblies (that is) Councells, as it were by the Armies of GODS Angels (as Euſebius calleth them:) yea, it is well knowne, ſome hereſies could never be throughly maſtered or conquered, but ſo.

De vita Conſtantini, lib. 3. cap. 6.

Then for the Churches Lawes (which we call Canons and Rules) made to reſtraine or redreſſe abuſes, they have alwayes likewiſe been made at her Aſſemblies in Councells, and not elſe-where. So that, as requiſite are Aſſemblies for the Congregation, in this ſenſe, as in any other: By this then that hath beene ſaid, it appeareth, that GODS Fac tibi here is no more than needs; but that meet it is, the Trumpets be put to making. And ſo I paſſe over the Inſtrument, which is the ſecond part.

2 Inſtruments

Aſſembling (we ſaid) is reduced to motion. Motion is a worke of Power. Power is executed Organicè. (that is) by Inſtrument: So, an Inſtrument we muſt have, wherewithall to ſtirre up, or to begin this Motion.

Trumpets.

1 That Inſtrument to be the Trumpet. It is the ſound that GOD Himſelfe made choyce of, to uſe at the publiſhing or proclaiming His Law, and the ſame ſound Hee will have continued, and uſed ſtill, for Aſſemblies, which are (as hath beene ſaid) ſpeciall ſupporters of His Law. And the very ſame He will uſe too, at the laſt when
1 Cor. 15. 52. He will take account of the keeping or breaking of it; which ſhall be done, in Tubâ noviſſimâ, by the ſound of the laſt Trumpe. And He holden on, or continueth one and the ſame Inſtrument, to ſhew, it is one and the ſame Power, that continueth ſtill: That, whether an Angell blow it, as at Sinai; or whether Moſes, as ever after; it is one ſound, even GODS ſound, GODS voice, we have in both.

Two.

2 They are to be twaine, for the two Aſſemblies, that follow in the next Verſes; Either, of the whole Tribes Coagmentativè: or of the chiefe and choyce perſons of them only, Repræſentativè. And for the two Tables, alſo. For, even this very moneth, the firſt day, they are uſed to a Civill end: the tenth day to a Holy, for the day of expiation: Of which this latter belongeth to the firſt; that former, to the ſecond Table.

3 Of ſilver.

3 They are to be of ſilver, (not to ſeeke after ſpeculations) onely, for the Metalls ſake, which hath the ſhrilleſt and cleareſt ſound of all others.

4 Of one entire peece.

4 They are to be of one whole peece both of them, not of two diverſe: and that muſt needs have a meaning: it cannot be for nothing. For, unleſſe it were for ſome meaning, what skilled it elſe, though they had beene made of two ſeverall plates? but only to ſhew, that both Aſſemblies are unius juris, both of one and the ſame right: as the Trumpets are wrought, and beaten out, both of one entire peece of Bullion.

3 But it will be to ſmall purpoſe, to ſtand much upon the Inſtrument: I make way therefore to the third point: how they ſhall be beſtowed, who ſhall have the dealing dealing with them: For on them depends, and with them goeth the Power of calling Assemblies.

First, to whom these Trumpets, to whom this Power was granted, to call the Congregation: And then, whether the Congregation were ever after so called, by this Power, and these Trumpets. To whom committed.

1 Where first, it will be soone agreed (I trust) that every body must not be allowed to be a maker of Trumpets: nor when they be made, that they hang, where who that list may blow them: (that is) that every man, hand over head is not to be in case, to draw multitudes together: There will be (saith Saint Luke) Turbatio non minima, no small adoe, if that may be suffered. If Demetrius getting together his fellow craftsmen, they may of their owne heads, rush into the common Hall, and there keepe a shouting and crying two houres together; not knowing most of them, why they came thither, and yet thither they came. There is not so much good, in publike meetings, but there is thrice as much hurt, in such as this: No common-wealth, no not Popular Estates could ever endure them. Nay, πάντα ἐν τάξει (say both Scripture and Nature) Let all be done in order: let us have ἔννομον ἐκκλησίαν, Lawfull orderly Assemblies, or else none at all. Away then with this confusion, (to begin with:) away with Demetrius Assemblies. Not, to all. Act. 19. 13. Act. 19. 36.

To avoid then this confusion, some must have this Power, for, and in the name of the rest. Shall it be one, or more? (for that is next.) Nay, but one (saith GOD) in saying, Tibi. Where I wish you marke this: That as at the first He tooke this Power into His owne hands, and called them still together Himselfe: So here, He deriveth this Power immediately from Himselfe, unto one: without first setling it, in any bodie collective at all. But some. Some, not many, but one.

It is from our purpose to enter the question, Whether the Power were in the whole body originally? seeing though it were, it is now by the positive ordinance of GOD otherwise disposed. The reason may seeme to be Partly; necessity of expedition: The trumpets may need to be blowen sometimes, suddenly, sooner, than divers can well meet, and agree upon it too. Partly, avoiding of distraction: The two Trumpets may be blowen, two diverse wayes, if they be in two hands; and so shall the Trumpet give an uncertaine sound (1 Cor. 14. 8.) and how shall the Congregation know, whither to Assemble? Nay (a worse matter yet than all that) so may we have Assembly against Assembly: and rather than so, better no Assembly at all,

Therefore as GOD would have them, both made of one peece: so will He have them both made over to one Person; for, Tibi implieth one. Who is that one? It is to Moses GOD speaketh, to him is this Tibi directed: Him doth GOD nominate, and of his Person make choice, first, to make these trumpets. No man to make, no man to have the hammering of any Trumpet, but he. 1 That one Moses. Moses to be maker of them.

And there is no question, but for Aaron, and his sons the Priests: they are to call the Levites, to call the people together to their Assemblies; How shall they warne them together, unlesse they may make a trumpet too? But if there be any question about this, GOD's proceeding here will put all out of question. For, to whom giveth He this charge? Not to Aaron, is this spoken; but to Moses: Aaron receiveth no charge to make any trumpet: Never a fac tibi, to him; neither in this, nor in any other place. To Moses is this charge given. And to Moses: Not, Make thee one (one for secular affaires; that, they would allow him) but Fac tibi duas: Make thee two Make both. וחור לך And owner of them.

2 Well, the making is not it. One may make, and another may have: Sic vos non vobis: You know the old Verse. When they be made and done, then who shall owe them? It is expressed that, too; Et erunt Tibi: They shall be for thee. They shall bee, not one for thee, and another for Aaron: but Erunt Tibi, They shall be both for thee: They shall be both thine. A third if they can finde, they may lay claime to that; But both these are for Moses.

We have then the delivery of them to Moses, to make, which is a kind of seizen, or a Ceremony investing him with the right of them. We have beside, plaine words, to lead their possession; and those words operative, Erunt Tibi. That as none to make them; them; ſo none to owne them being made, but Moſes. And what would we have more to ſhew us, Cujus ſunt Tubæ, whoſe the Trumpets be; or whoſe is the right of calling Aſſemblies? It is Moſes certainely, and he by vertue of theſe, ſtands ſeized of it.

That power to continue after Moſes.

To goe yet further: But was not all this to Moſes, for his time onely; and as it begun in him, ſo to take end with him? Was it not one of theſe ſame Privilegia Perſonalia, quæ non trahuntur in exemplum; A priviledge peculiar to him, and ſo no preſident to be made of it? No: for if you looke but a little forward (to the VIII. Verſe following) there you ſhall ſee, that this Power which GOD here conveyeth; this Law of the ſilver trumpets, is a Law to laſt for ever; even throughout all their generations, not that generation only. And there is great reaſon it ſhould be ſo, that ſeeing the Vſe ſhould never ceaſe, the Power likewiſe ſhould never determine.

Moſes received it as chiefe Magiſtrate.

Being then not to determine, but to continue, it muſt deſcend to thoſe that hold Moſes's place. I demand then, what place did Moſes hold? Sure it is, that Aaron was now the High Prieſt, annointed and fully inveſted in all the rights of it, ever ſince the eighth Chapter of the laſt Booke. Moſes had in him now, no other Right, but that of the Chiefe Magiſtrate. Therefore as in that Right (and no other) he received and held them: So, he was made Cuſtos utriúſque Tabulæ: So, he is made Cuſtos utiúſque Tubæ. But who can tell us better than he himſelfe, in what right he held them? He doth it in the third Verſe of Deut. XXXIII. (read it which way you will:) Erat in Iiſhrune Rex, or, in rectiſſimo Rex, or, in rectitudine Rex, or, in recto Regis, dum congregaret Principes populi, & Tribus Iſrael: All come to this; that, though in ſtrict propriety of ſpeech, Moſes were no King, yet in this, he was in rectitudine Rex, or in recto Regis, (that is) in this, had (as we ſay) Ius Regale, that he might and did aſſemble the Tribes and chiefe men of the Tribes, at his pleaſure. Herein he was, Rex in rectitudine. For this was rectitudo Regis, A power Regall. And ſo it was holden in Ægypt before Moſes, even in the Law of Nature: that without Pharao, no man might lift up hand or foot in all the Land of Ægypt (ſuppoſe, to no publike or principall motion:) And ſo hath it beene holden in all Nations, as a ſpeciall Power belonging to Dominion. Which maketh it ſeeme ſtrange, that thoſe men, which in no cauſe are ſo fervent as when they plead, that Church-men ſhould not κυριεύειν, that is, have Dominion; doe yet hold this Power, which hath ever beene reputed moſt proper to Dominion, ſhould belong to none, but to them onely. Our SAVIOUR CHRIST's Vos autem non ſic, may (I am ſure) be ſaid to them here in a truer ſenſe, than as they commonly uſe to apply it.

Gen. 41. 44.

Mat. 20. 26.

The chiefe Magiſtrate to ſucceed in it.

To conclude then this point, if Moſes as in the right of Chiefe Magiſtrate held this power, it was from him to deſcend to the chiefe Magiſtrates after him over the people of GOD, and they to ſucceed him, as in his place, ſo in this right, it being by GOD Himſelfe ſetled in Moſes and annexed to this place, lege perpetuâ, by an eſtate indefeizible, by a perpetuall Law, throughout all their generations. Therefore ever after by GOD's expreſſe order, from yeare to yeare, every yeare on the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth, were they blowen by Moſes firſt, and after by them that held his place, and the Feaſt of the Trumpets ſolemnely holden, and put them in minde of the benefit thereby comming to them, ſo withall to keepe alive and freſh ſtill in the knowledge of all, that this power belonged to their place, that ſo none might ever be ignorant, to whom it did of right appertaine, to call Aſſemblies.

Aarons Aſſemblies, how called.

And how then ſhall Aaron's Aſſemblies be called? with what Trumpet, they? God Himſelfe hath provided for that in the X. Ver. following, that with no other than theſe. (There is in all the Law, no order for calling an Aſſemblie, to what end, or for what cauſe ſoever, but this, and only this: No order for making any third Trumpet: Under theſe two therefore are all comprized.) This order there God taketh, that Moſes ſhall permit Aaron's ſonnes to have the uſe of theſe trumpets. But the uſe, not the property. They muſt take them from Moſes, as (in the XXXI. Chapter of this Booke) Phinees doth: But Erunt tibi (God's owne words, Erunt tibi) muſt ſtill be remembred: His they bee, for all that: Moſes the owner ſtill, the right remaines in him: their founding of them deprive not him of his interest, alter not the property: Erunt tibi, must still be true; that right must still be preserved. It may be, if we communicate with flesh and bloud, we may thinke it more convenient (as some doe) that God had delivered Moses and Aaron either of them one. But when we see Gods will by Gods Word what it is, that Moses is to have them both; we will let that passe as a Revelation of flesh and bloud, and thinke that, which God thinketh, to be most convenient.

The two duties.

Now then, if the Trumpets belong to Moses, and that to this end, that with them he may call the Congregation, these two things doe follow: First, that if he call, the Congregation must not refuse to come: Secondly, that unlesse hee call they must not assemble of their owne heads, but keepe their places. Briefly thus: the Congregation must come when it is called: and it must be called ere it come. These are the two duties we owe to the two Trumpets, and both these have Gods people ever duly performed.

And yet not so, but that this Right had heene called in question, yea, even in Moses owne time, (that we marvell not, if it be so, now;) and both these duties denied him, even by those who were alive and present then, when God gave him the Trumpets. But marke by whom, and what became of them.

To come when they be called.

The first dutie is, to come when they be called: and this was denied (in the XVI. Chap. following, Ver. 12.) by Core, Dathan, and their crew: Moses sounded his Trumpet, sent to call them: they answer flatly (and that not once, but once and again,) Non veniemus, they would not come, nor once stir for him or his Trumpet, they. A plaine contradiction indeed: neither is there in all that Chapter any contradiction veri nomi-nis, true and properly so to be called, but only that. You know what became of them; they went quick to hell for it: and woe be to them, even under the Gospell (saith Saint Iude) that perish in the same Contradiction, the Contradiction of Core.

Iude 11.

To be called yet they come.

The second duty is, to be called yet they come: this likewise denied, even Moses himselfe; (that they in his place may not thinke strange of it) in the XX, Chapter of this very booke. Water waxing scant, a company of them grew mutinous, and in tumultuous manner, without any sound of the Trumpet, assembled of themselves. But these are branded too: the water they got, is called the water of Meriba: and what followed you know; None of them that dranke of it, came into the Land of Promise. God swore, they should not enter into His Rest.

Chap. 20. 13.

Call'd, and come not.
Came uncall'd.

Now, as both these are bad: so of the twaine, this latter is the worse. The former (that came not, being called) doe but sit still, as if they were somewhat thicke of hearing: But these latter that come, being not called; either, they make themselves a trumpet, without ever a Fac tibi: Or else they offer to wring Mose's Trumpet out of his hands, and take it into their owne. Take heed of this latter: it is said their, to be adversus Mosen, even against Moses himselfe. It is the very next fore-runner to it: it prickes fast upon it. For they that meet, against Moses will, when they have once throughly learned that lesson, will quickly perhaps grow capable of another, even to meet against Moses himselfe, as these did, Periclitamur argui seditionis (saith the Towne-Clarke) We have done more than we can well answer: We may be indicted of treason. for this dayes worke, for comming together without a Trumpet: and yet it was for Diana, that is, for a matter of Religion.

Acts. 19. 40.

You see then whose the Right is, and what the duties be to it, and in whose steps they tread, that deny them. Sure, they have beene baptised, or made to drinke of the same water (the water of Meriba,) that ever shall offer to doe the like, to draw together without Moses Call.

And now to our Saviour Christs question: In the Law how is it written? How reade you? Our answere is: There it is thus written, and thus we reade: that Moses hath the Right of the Trumpets: that they to goe ever with him and his Successours: and that to them belongeth the power of calling the publike Assemblies.

Agreeable to the Law of Nature.

This is the Law of God; and that no judiciall Law, peculiar to that People alone, but agreeable to the Law of Nature and Nations; (two Lawes of force thorow the whole world.) For even in the little Empire of the body naturall, Principium motus, the beginning of all motion, is in, and from the head. There, all the knots, or (as they call them) all the conjugations of sinewes have their head, by which all the body is moved. And as the Law to Nature, by secret instinct by the light of the Creation annexeth the organ of the chiefest part: even so doth the Law of Nations, by the light of Reason, to the chiefest Person: And both fall just with the Law here written; where (but Erunt Tibi) the same organ and power is committed to Moses, the Principall Person, in that Common-wealth. The Law of Nations in this point (both before the Law written, and since, where the Law written was not knowne) might easily appeare, if time would suffer, both in their generall order for conventions so to be called; and in their generall opposing to all conventicles called otherwise.

To the Law of Nations.

Verily, the Heathen lawes made all such Assemblies unlawfull, which the highest authority did not cause to meet, yea, though they were ἱερῶν Ὀργίων ἕνεκα, say Solons Lawes: yea; though sub prætextu Religionis, say the Romane Lawes. Neither did the Christian Emperours thinke good, to abate any thing of that Right. Nay, they tooke more streight order: For, besides the exiling of the person, which was the law before they proscribed the place, where, under pretence of Religion, any such meeting should be. But I let them passe, and stand only on the written Law, the Law of God.

We have Law then for us, That Moses is ever to call the Congregation. But though we have Law, Mos vincit Legem; Custome over-ruleth Law. And the Custome or practice may goe another way; and it is practice that ever best bewrayeth a Power. How then hath the practice gone? It is a necessary question this, and pertinent to the Text it selfe. For, there is a Power granted: and in vaine is that Power that never commeth into act. Came then this Power into act? It is a Power to call the congregation together; Were the Congregations called together by it? A grant there is, That Erunt Tibi; So it should be: Did it take place? was it so; Erantne illi? Had he it? Did he enjoy it? Let us look into that another while, what became of this Grant; what place it took. And we shall offend not Moses in so doing. It is his advice, and desire both; that we should enquire into the daies past, that were before us, and aske, even from one end of heaven to the other; to see how matters have beene carried. So that, as our SAVIOUR CHRIST sendeth us to the Law, by His In Lege quid scriptum est? so doth Moses direct us to the use and practice, by His Interroga de diebus antiquis. I doe aske then, These Trumpets here given, this power to call together the Congregation, how hath it beene used? Hath the Congregation beene called accordingly, in this, and no other manner? by this, and no other power? It hath (as shall appeare:) and I will deale with no Assemblies, but only for matters of Religion.

The practice or use of this power, among the Iewes. Deut. 4. 32.

By Moses. Iosua. Ios. 1. 17.

Of Moses, first there is no question: it is yeelded that he called them, and dismissed them. And even so did Iosua after him, no lesse than he; and they obeyed him in that Power, no lesse than Moses. And as for that which is objected concerning Moses, that he for a time dealt in matters of the Priests Office, it hath no colour in Iosua, and those that succeded him.

Ios. 24. 18.

The Covenant, and the renewing of the Covenant, are matters meerly spirituall; yet, in that case did Iosua (Iosua, not Eleazar) assemble all the Tribes, Levi and all, to Sichem (Ios. XXIIII.) called the Assembly at the first ver. dissolved it at the XXVIII. For, if Iosua may call, he may dissolve, too: Law, Reason, Sence, teach, That Cujus est nolle, ejus est & velle. That calling, and discharging, belong both to one power. Nay, Demetrius assembly, though they had come together disorderly, yet when the Towne-clarke (that should have called them together) did discharge them; they added not one fault to another; but went their wayes, every man quietly, Demetrius, himselfe and all: that, they are worse than Demetrius, that deny this.

David. 1 Chron. 15.

But, I passe to the Kings (that estate fitteth us better.) There doth David call together the Priests and other persons Ecclesiasticall, and that, even with these Trumpets. And for what matters? Secular? Nay: but first, when the Arke was to be removed:

And

And againe, when the Offices of the Temple were to bee set in order: things meerely pertaining to Religion? And as he called them, 1 Chron. 15. 4. so he dismissed them, 1 Chron. 16. 43. — 1 Chron. 23. 2,3,6.

The like did Salomon, when the Temple was to be dedicated; Called the Assembly, 2 Chron. 5.2. dissolved the Assembly in the X. verse of the VII. Chapter following. — Salomon. 2 Chr. 15.14.

The like did Asa: When Religion was to bee restored, and a solemne oath of Association to be taken for the maintaining of it; with the sound of these Trumpets did he it. — Asa.

Iehoshaphat used them, [a] when a publike Fast to be proclaimed. Iehu used them, [b] when a solemne Sacrifice to be performed. Ioas [c] in a case of Dilapidations of the Temple a matter meerely Ecclesiasticall. Iosias, [d] when the Temple to be purified, and a masse of superstitions to be removed. — Iehoshaphat. a 2 Chr. 20 3. Iehu. b Reg. 10.20. Ioas. c 2 Chr. 24.5. Iosias. d 2 Chro. 34. 29,30.

In all these cases, did all these Kings call all these Conventions, of Priests and Levites, for matters of Religion. I insist onely on the fact of Ezekias. He was a King; he gave forth his precept for the Priests and all their brethren to assemble: Wherefore? Ad res Iehovæ, for the affaires of the service of GOD, yea, GOD Himselfe. There are fourteene chiefe men of the Priests set downe there, by name, that by vertue of that precept of the King, came together themselves, they and their brethren, all, ex præcepto Regis, ad res Iehovæ, by the Kings authority, for matters meerely of the Church. I know not what can be more plaine: the Matters, spirituall: the Persons assembled, spirituall: and yet called by the Kings Trumpet. — Ezekias. 2 Chr. 29.15.

Thus, till the Captivity. In the Captivity, there have we Mardochei (when hee came in place of authority) appointing the dayes of Purim, and calling all the Iewes in the Province together, to the celebrating of them. — Mardochæus. Hest. 9.17.

After the Captivity, Nehemiahs kept the Trumpet still: and by it, first called the Priests, to shew their right to their places, by their genealogies, and after reduced them also to their places againe, when they were all shrunke away in time of his absence. — Nehemias. Nehem. 7.14. Nehem. 13.11.

These lead the practice till you come to the Machabees: and there it is but too evident: they professe there expresly to Simeon, made then their ruler. That it should not be lawfull for any ἐπισυρέσθαι συνοδὸν τινὰ to call any assembly in the Land ἄνευ αὐτοῦ without him. A plaine evidence, that so had ever gone the course of their government: Else, how should it come to passe, that the altering of Religion, is still termed the deed of the King? that his disposition, godly, or otherwise, did alwayes accordingly change the publike face of Religion? which thing the Priests by themselves never did, neither could at any time hinder from being done. Had the Priests without him, beene possessed of this power of assembling, how had any Act concerning Religion passed without them? In them it had beene to stop it at any time, if they had (of themselves) had this power of Assembling themselves, to set order in matters of Religion) — The Maccabes. 1 Mac. 14.44.

Thus, from Moses to the Macchabees, we see in whose hands this power was. And what should I say more? There was in all GODS people no one religious King, but this Power he practised: And there was of all GODS Prophets no one, that ever interposed any prohibition against it.

Would Esay (shall we once imagine) have endured Ezekias, him to call, or the Priest to come together, onely by his precept, ad res Iehovæ; and not lift up his voice like a Trumpet against it, if it had not beene (in his knowledge) the Kings right, to command, and their duty to obey? Never, certainly. — Esay 38. 2.

What shall we say then? were all these wrong? shall we condemne them all? Take heed. In all that government, GOD hath no other child, but these: if wee condemn these, we condemn the whole generation of His children. Yet, to this we are come now: that either we must condemne them all, one after another; the Kings, as usurpers, for taking on them, to use more Power, than ever orderly they received; and the Prophets, for soothers of them, in that their unjust claime: Or else confesse, they did no more, than they might; and exceeded not therein, the bounds of their calling. And indeed, that we must confesse; for that is the truth. — Psal. 73.15.

This then may ſerve, for the cuſtome of GODS owne elect people. But they were Iewes, and wee would be loth, to Iudaize: and it may bee, this was one of the clauſes of the Law of Commandements, conſiſting of Ordinances which CHRIST came to abrogate.

Epheſ. 2.15.

The practice or uſe of this Power among Chriſtians.

I demand therefore, when CHRIST came, how was it then? will the like appeare in the aſſemblies ſince CHRIST? The very like, every way, as conſonant to that of the Old Teſtament, as may be. For CHRIST (Matth. XVIII.) giveth a promiſe of His aſſiſtance to ſuch meetings: but ſets no new order for calling of them, other than had beene taken in the Old. Therefore the ſame order to be kept ſtill.

A time there was (you know) after CHRIST, when they were Infidels; Kings and Kingdomes both. A time there followed, when Kings received Religion: and no ſooner received they it, but they received this Power of the Trumpets with it. This, to be made manifeſt. 1. By Generall Councels. 2. By Nationall and Provinciall Councels; that have been aſſembled, 3. under Emperours, 4. and under Kings, by the ſpace of many hundred yeares.

In Generall Councels.

1 And for Generall Councels, this firſt (to begin with:) that if thoſe aſſemblies be not rightly called, that by this Power are called; we have loſt all our Generall Councels at one blow. The Church of CHRIST hath to this day, never a Generall Councell, Vnâ liturâ, with one wipe, we daſh them out all: we leave never a one, no not one. For, all that ever have beene; have beene thus called and kept. Yea, thoſe foure firſt, which all Chriſtians have ever had in ſo great reverence, and high eſtimation; not one of them a lawfull Councell, if this new aſſertion take place. This is a perillous inconvenience: yet this we muſt yeeld to, and more than this; if we ſeeke to diſable Aſſemblies, ſo holden. For ſure it is, all the Generall Councels were thus aſſembled, all; all ſeven (for more are not to be reckoned: the eighth was onely for a private buſineſſe.) The reſt were onely of the Weſt Church alone, and ſo not Generall: The Eaſt and Weſt together, make a Generall: The Eaſt and Weſt together never met, but in one of thoſe ſeven, for publike affaires: unleſſe it were once after, in that of Ferrara.

And it is well knowne, that was in hope of helpe, on the Eaſt Churches part; which they never had; and ſo the Councell never kept, but broken, even as ſoone as it was broken up.

Briefly then to ſurvey thoſe ſeven. And I will not therein alleage the reports of Stories (they write things they ſaw not, many times, and ſo frame matters to their own conceits; and many times are tainted with a partiall humour:) but onely, out of authenticall Records in them, and out of the very acts of the Councels themſelves beſt able to teſtifie and tell, by whoſe authority they came together: And it is happy for the Church of CHRIST, there are ſo many of them extant as there are, to guide us to the truth in this point, that ſo the right may appeare.

Συνεκροτήθη τὸ θεοφιλέστατο Βασιλέως Κωνσταντίνου (μυριάρχους φησὶν ἐκ διαφόρων πολέων τε ἐπαρχιῶν.

Firſt then, for the great Nicene Councell, the firſt Generall Congregation of all that were called in the Chriſtian world: The whole Councell in their Synodicall Epiſtle written to the Church of Alexandria, witneſſe, they were aſſembled (the holy Emperour Conſtantine gathering them together out of divers Cities and Provinces.) The whole letter is extant upon record in Socrates, 1.9. and Theodoret, 1.9. Give mee leave to make here a little ſtand: For here, at this Councell, was the pale firſt broken, and the right (if any ſuch were) here, it went firſt away. At Nice there were then together, three hundred and eighteene Biſhops, totius orbis Lumina (as Victorinus well termeth them) the Lights of the whole world; the chiefeſt and choiceſt men for holineſs, learning, vertue and valour, that the Chriſtian Religion ever had before or ſince: Men that had laid downe their lives for the teſtimony of the truth: Did any of them refuſe to come, being called by him, as not called aright? Or, comming, was there any one of them that did proteſt againſt it? or pleaded the Churches intereſt, to meet of themſelves? Not one.

What was it then? want of skill, in ſo many famous men, that knew not their owne rights? Or want of valour, that knowing it for ſuch, would not ſo much as speake a word for it, but sit still, and say nothing all the while? There were then and there present, Spyridion, Paphnutius, Potamon, and divers besides, (but these I name) that had not long before, for their constancy, had their right eyes bored out, their right ham-strings, and the strings of their right arme-pits cut in sunder. Did these want courage, thinke we? Were they become so faint hearted, that they durst not open their mouth, for their owne due?

Verily, that Councell of Nice, (which is, and ever hath beene so much admired by all Christians,) cannot be excused before GOD or men; if they thus conspired (all) to betray the Churches right, and suffered it, contrary to all equity, to bee carried away, leaving a dangerous president therein, for all Councels ever after, to the worlds end. But, no such right there was: If there had beene, they neither wanted wit to discerne it, nor courage to claime it. But, they knew whose the Trumpets were: to whom (Erùnt tibi) was spoken: And therefore never offered to lay hold on either of them, and say, this is ours.

And yet (to say the truth,) there is no man of reason, but will think it reasonable, if this were the Churches owne peculiar, if appropriate unto it (and so knowne to them to be) there ought to have been plain dealing, now at the very first Councell of all; that if Constantine would embrace Religion, he must needs resigne up one of his Trumpets, and forbeare from thence to meddle with their Assemblies. Was there so? No such thing. Why was there not? Belike, because none where there, that had ever been present at any Assembly, holden under persecution, to know the Churches order and manner of meeting then. Yes there was Hosius Bishop of Cordova, who had held the Councell of Elvira in Spaine, even in time of persecution. Hosius for the West. And for the East, there was Eustathius Bishop of Antioch, had held the like at Ancyra then too: (both the Councels yet extant to be seen) and these two, Presidents of them. Yet were these twaine, two that came first, and sate for most at the Councell of Nice; and neither of them pleaded or knew of any such right; but that their Power then ceased: and that Constantines Trumpet now tooke place. Sure, if but this first Councell be well considered, it is able to move much. And the example of this first, was of great consequence; for all the rest followed it; and as this went, so went they. And this for the first.

2 The second Generall Councell at Constantinople; Who called that Congregation? Their owne Letter to the Emperour is yet to be seene, professing they were thither assembled by his Writ.

Σωζηδόντες καὶ τὸ χάραγμα τῆς εὐσεβείας.

3 For the third at Ephesus; let the Acts of the Councell (now set out in Greeke) be looked on: Foure severall times they acknowledge, they were thither summoned by the Emperours[a] Oracle, [b] Becke, [c] Charge, and [d] Commandement.

c Συναχθῆναι τὸ ὑμέτερον σεσέταχε κράτος.
d Συναχθῆναι ἐκέλευσον ἡ ὑμετέρα εὐσέβεια.

4 For the fourth at Chalcedon, looke but upon the very front of the Councell, it proclaimeth it selfe, to be there assembled, Facta est Synodus, ex decreto piissimorum, & fidelissimorum Imperatorum, Valentiniani, & Martiani. And it is well knowne, it was first called at Nice; and then recalled from thence, and removed to Chalcedon, all wholly by the disposing of the Emperour.

Tom. 2 129.

5 So saith the fifth at Constantinople, Iuxta pium jussum à CHRISTO amati, & à DEO custoditi Iustiniani Imperatoris. They be their owne words.

6 And so the sixth at Constantinople, Secundum Imperialem sanctionem congregata est; And pro obedientiâ quam debuimus. They be the expresse words of Agatho Bishop of Rome in the same Councell.

7 [e] And even so the seventh at Nice, Quæ per pium Imperatorum decretum, congregata est; (meaning Constantine and Irene.)

And these be all the Generall. In all which the force of the truth presenteth it selfe so clearely, that [f] Bellarmine is even dazled with it: For as one dazled, hee sets downe diverse reasons, why the Emperours were to call them; in that very place,

In National and Provinciall, from Constantine to Iustinian.

2. But it may be, Generall Councels have a fashion by themselves: Those Congregations may be called, thus: But Nationall, or Provinciall (such as ours) how? Even so too, and no otherwise. Constantine began with them first, before he proceeded to the Generall at Nice. His Tractoria, or Writ, is extant to be seene, in Eusebius. Whereby he called the first Provinciall Councell in France. For sure, by no Canon could the Bishop of Syracuse in Sicily, or Restitutus Bishop of London in Britaine, be lawfully summoned, to the Synode in France (which they were) but (as it was indeed) by the Emperours Writ onely. But this he did at the beginning of his reigne; perhaps, while he was yet an unperfect Christian. Nay, even first and last, he did the same: as at the beginning he called this; so, in the end of his Reigne, the thirtieth yeare, the yeare before his death, called he the Councell at Tyre, and from thence, removed it to Ierusalem and from thence called them to appeare before himselfe at Constantinople. The letters are to be seene, by which they were called, Socr. 1.34. The like after him did [g] Constans at Sardis, [h] Valentinian at Lampsacus, [i] Theodosius at Aquileia, [k] Gratian at Thessalonica.

It is too tedious to goe thorow them all: Onely for that of Aquileia, thus much, Saint Ambrose; a man of as much spirit, and as high a courage, as ever the Church had, and one that stood as much as ever did any, for the Churches right; he was there present, and President both. Thus writeth he from the Councell to the Emperour in his owne name, and in the name of all the rest: Iuxta Masuetudinis Vestræ statuta convenimus: Hither we are assembled, by the appointment of Your Clemencie: and there is no one Councell more plaine, than that of Saint Ambrose for this purpose. Yea, I adde this (which is a point to be considered) that even then, when the Emperours were professed Arrians; even then did the Bishops acknowledge their Power to call Councels: came to them being called: sued to them, that they might be called. Came to them, as Hosius, to that of [l] Aramine; Liberius, to that of [m] Sirmium, and that of Seleucia. Sued for them, as [n] Liberius to Constantius: as [o] Leo to Theodosius, for the second Ephesine Councell; Innocentius to Arcadius. And sometimes they sped, as, Leo; and sometimes not, as Liberius, and Innocentius: and yet, when they sped not, they held themselves quiet, and never presumed to draw together of their owne heads.

But it may be, this was some Imperiall Power, and that Emperours had in this point more jurisdiction than Kings. Nor that neither: For about five hundred yeares after CHRIST, when the Empire fell in peeces, and these Westerne parts came into the hands of Kings, those Kings had, held, enjoyed, and practised the same power. And if it be excepted; there are of the Councels which carry in their acts no mention how they were called: For them, we are to understand, that after the decrees of the first Nicene Councell were by Constantines Edict confirmed, wherein (as likewise in the Councell of Chalcedon) it was ordered, each Province should yearely hold their Synods twice: but specially, after Iustinian had made the decrees of the foure first Generall Councells to have the nature and force of Imperiall Lawes: (a Law being thus passed from them,) we are to conceive, the Emperours authority was in all afterward, habitually at least: that is, if not (as in the other) by expresse and formall consent, yet by way of implied allowance, as passed by a former Grant.

Well, thus farre the Trumpet giveth a certaine sound. Now after this; there is a great silence in the Volumes of the Councels, in a manner for the space of two hundred yeares, untill the yeare MCLXXX. or thereabout, when the councell of Lateran was: and then (indeed) the case was altered. By that time had the Bishop of Rome by his skill and practice, got one of the Trumpets away, and carried it with him to Rome: so leaving Princes but one: But, so long they held it.

Tom. 4. 101. One of the Trumpets gotten away.

Truely, three times so much time as we are allowed, would not serve for this one point of the Councels; but even barely to recite them, and to cite them, they are so many. You remember how Abraham dealt with God for the saving of the five Cities, how he went downe from fiftie, to ten: I might well take a course the other way, and rise from ten to fifty, nay, sixty, nay, seventy, nay, eightie, not so few. of Councels Generall, Nationall, Provinciall, called by Emperours, by Kings: Emperours of the East, of the West: Kings of Italy, France, Spaine, Germany, (as before, from Moses to the Maccabees: so here from Constantine to Arnulphus) for so many hundred yeares together, extant all, to be shewed and seene, all cleare and evident, all full and forcible for this Power: as indeed it is a cause that laboureth rather of plenty, than penury of proofe. And this was the course that of old was well thought of in the Christian world. Thus was the Congregation so long called; neither is there yet brought any thing to force us to swarve from the way, wherein so many and so holy ages have gone before us.

Yes, something: For what say you to the three hundred yeares before Constantine? How went Assemblies then? Who called them, all that while? For diverse were holden that while: In Palestine, about Easter; At Carthage, about Heretikes Baptisme; at Rome, about Novatus; at Antioch, about Paulus Samosatenus. How assembled these?

How in the time of persecution for 300. yeares before Constantine.

Truely, even as these people here, of the Iewes, did before in Ægypt, under the tyranny of Pharoah: they were then a Church under persecution, untill Moses was raised up by GOD, a lawfull Magistrate over them. The cases are like for all the world. No Magistrate did assemble them in Ægypt. And good reason: they had then none to doe it. Pharoah (we may be sure) would not offer to doe it: not for any conscience (I trust) or feare, to encroach upon the Churches right; but because he hated both Assembly and Congregation, and sought by all meanes to extinguish both. But this was no barre; but that when Moses arose, authorized by God, and had the Trumpets here, by GOD delivered him; he might take them, keepe them, and use them, to that end, for which GOD gave them; to call the Congregation,

tion. And none then but he, could doe it, becauſe to none, but him then, was this Power conveighed. They could not ſay to him now, as before one of them did in Ægypt, Who made you a Commander over us, to call us together? nor plead in barre of Exod. 2. 14. the Trumpets, and ſay: Nay, but we will meet ſtill of our ſelves, even as we did before in Ægypt; we will ſtill keepe our old manner of conventions. No: for GOD had now taken another order: GOD (I ſay) had now done it: And GOD ſhall (I truſt) be allowed, to tranſlate this Power to the principall member of the body, and to diſpoſe of it, as it beſt pleaſeth Him.

2 As, under the Captivity. The very ſame caſe fell out againe after, in the captivity of Babylon; and againe after that in the perſecution under Antiochus: and theſe three, are all the paternes we have in the Old Teſtament. As before in Ægypt; ſo, then, they had meetings:
3 As under Antiochus. but they were all by ſtealth: yet meetings, then they had. For Moſes ceaſing, and his right with him, the Power devolved to the bodie, to gather it ſelfe (as is uſuall in ſuch caſes.) But then, when Nehemias after the Captivity, and Simeon Maccabeus after the fury of Antiochus, were raiſed them by GOD; when GOD had ſet them in Moſes's place, they might lawfully doe, as Moſes before had done; and take the ſilver Trumpets into their hands againe. So ſoone as they had a lawfull Governour, the right returned to him ſtraight: And the Congregation, none of them might then plead: Nay, but as he did in Babylon, or as we did under Antiochus: So,
1 Mic. 14. 44. and no otherwiſe, will we aſſemble ſtill. No, wee ſee the contrary rather: Even of themſelves, they profeſſe to Simeon plainly: now, they have a lawfull Governour, no meeting ſhould from thenceforth be in the Land, without him, his privity and permiſſion.

4 So before Conſtantine. And even as theſe two Nehemias and Simeon: even by the ſame right Conſtantine · by Moſes right, all, all by the Commiſſion here penned. By it, did Conſtantine reſume the Trumpet, & enjoy & everciſe the Power of calling the Congregation: (For even Moſes's paterne and practice five ſundry times at leaſt doth Euſebius alledge in the life of Conſtantine to juſtifie his proceedings ſtill by Moſes's example.) True it is therefore, that before Conſtantines time, they met together as they durſt, & tooke ſuch order as they could. They muſt venture it: there was no Moſes: they had no Trumpet: and if they had, they durſt not have blowen it. But when Conſtantine came in place, in Moſes's place, it was lawfull for him to doe as Moſes did: And ſo he did; and they never ſaid to him, Nay, ſpare your Trumpet: looke how we have done hitherto, we will do ſo even ſtill: meet no otherwiſe now, than in former times we have; by our owne agreement. As before it was ſaid, this had beene plain dealing: Thus (if rightly they might) they ſhould have done: Did they ſo? No: but to him they went, as to Moſes, for their meetings; at his hands they ſought them; without his leave or liking they would not attempt them: Yea; (I dare ſay) they bleſſed GOD from their hearts, that they had lived to ſee the day, they might now aſſemble by the ſound of the Trumpet.

To conclude this point then. Theſe two times or eſtates of the Church are not to be confounded: There is a plaine difference betweene them, and a diverſe reſpect to be had of each. If the ſucceſſion of Magiſtrates be interrupted, in ſuch caſe of neceſſity, the Church of her ſelfe maketh ſupply, becauſe then, Gods Order ceaſeth. But GOD granting a Conſtantine to them againe, GODS former poſitive order returneth, and the courſe is to proceed and goe on, as before. When the Magiſtrate and his authority was at any time wanting to the Church, forced ſhe was to deale with her owne affaires, within her ſelfe: for then was the Church wholly divided from Princes and they from it. But, when this wall of partition is pulled downe, ſhall Moſes have no more to doe than Pharaoh, or Conſtantine than Nero? Congregations were ſo called under them: muſt they be ſo ſtill under theſe too? No: no more than their manner of meeting in Ægypt (for all the world like this of the Primitive Church perſecuted) was to be a rule, and to over-rule theſe Trumpets here (in the Text) either GOD for giving them, or Moſes for taking them at His hands. This rather: If ever the Church fall into ſuch bloudy times, they muſt meet as they may, and come together as they can: They have no Moſes, no trumpet to call them. The times of Pharaoh and Nero are then their patterne. But, if it be ſo happy as to finde the dayes of peace, Moſes and Conſtantine are patternes for the daies of peace: they have a Moſes then: from that time forward they muſt give eare to the Trumpet. In a word, none can ſeek to have the Congregation ſo called (as before Conſtantine) but they muſt ſecretly, and by implication confeſſe, they are a perſecuted Church, as that then was, without a Moſes, without a Conſtantine.

The times then before Conſtantine, are no bar, no kind of impeachment to Conſtantine's, no more than the times in Ægypt were to Moſes's right. And indeed no more they were: for, Conſtantine and his Succeſſors had them, and held them till a thouſand yeares after CHRIST, and then one of them (by what meanes we all know) was let goe by them, or gotten away from them: It was then gotten away and carried to Rome. But that getting, hath hitherto beene holden a plaine uſurping; and uſurping (not upon the Congregation; but) upon Princes and their Right; and that they, in their owne wrong, ſuffered it to be wrung from them. And why? Becauſe not to Aaron, but to Moſes it was ſaid, Et erunt tibi.

1. To draw to an end, it was then gotten away; and with ſome adoe it was recovered not long ſince: and what? ſhall we now let it goe, and deſtroy ſo ſoone that which ſo lately we built againe? You may pleaſe to remember, there was not long ſince a Clergy in place, that was wholly ad oppoſitum, and would never have yeelded to reforme ought: Nothing they would doe, and (in eye of law) without them, nothing could then be done; they had encroached the power of Aſſembling into their owne hands. How then? how ſhall we doe for an Aſſembly? Then Erunt tibi, was a good Text: it muſt needs be meant of the Prince: he had his power, and to him of right it belonged. This was then good Divinity (and what Writer is there extant of thoſe times, but it may be turned to, in him?) and was it good Divinity then, and is it now no longer ſo? Was the King but licenced for a while, to hold this power, till another Clergy were in; and muſt he then be deprived of it againe? Was it then uſurped from Princes; and are now Princes uſurpers of it themſelves? And is this all the difference in the matter of Aſſemblies, and calling of them: that there muſt be onely a change; and that in ſtead of a forraine, they ſhall have a domeſticall, and in ſtead of one, many: and no remedy now, but one of theſe two they muſt needs admit of? Is this now become good Divinity? Nay (I truſt) if Erunt tibi were once true, it is ſo ſtill: and if (Tibi) were then Moſes, it is ſo ſtill. That we will be better adviſed, and not thus goe againſt our ſelves, and let truth be no longer truth, then it will ſerve our turnes.

The recovery of the Trumpets.

Now ſought to be gotten away.

1 By the Presbytery.

2. And this calleth to my minde the like dealing of a ſort of men, not long ſince here among us. A while they plied Prince and Parliament, with Admonitions, Supplications, Motions and Petitions. And in them, it was: their duty, their right, to frame all things to their new invented plot: And this, ſo long as any hope blew out of that Coaſt. But when, that way they ſaw it would not be, then tooke they up a new Tenet, ſtraight: They needed neither Magiſtrate nor Trumpet, they: The godly among the people might doe it of themſelves. For confuſion to the wiſe and mighty, the poore and ſimple muſt take this worke in hand, and ſo by this meanes the Trumpet prove their right, in the end: and ſo come by devolution to Demetrius and the crafeſmen. Now, if not for love of the truth, yet for very ſhame of theſe ſhifting abſurdities, let theſe phantaſies be abandoned: and (that which Gods owne mouth hath here ſpoken) let it be for once and for ever true; That which once we truly held and maintained for truth, let us doe ſo ſtill: that we be not like evill ſervants, judged (Ex ore proprio) out of their owne mouthes.

2 By the people themſelves. Perry, Barrow &c.

Let me not over-weary you; let this rather ſuffice. 1. We have done as our Saviour CHRIST willed us, reſorted to the Law, and found what there is written: (The Grand of this Power to Moſes, to call the Congregation:) 2. We have followed Moſes's advice; enquired of the dayes before us, even from one end of heaven to the other, and found the practice of this Grant in Moſes's Succeſſors: and the Luke 19.22. The Concluſion.

Congregation ſo by them called. It remaineth, that as GOD by His Law, hath taken this order, and His people in former ages have kept this order; that wee doe ſo too: that we ſay as GOD ſaith, Brunt tibi, this Power pertaineth to Moſes. And thát neither with Core we ſay, Non venimus: Nor with Demetrius, runne together of our ſelves, and thinke to carry it away with crying Great is DIANA. But as we ſee the Power is of GOD: ſo, truly to acknowledge it, and dutifully to yeeld it: that ſo they, whoſe it is, may quietly hold it, and laudably uſe it, to His glory that gave it, and their good for whom it was given: Which GOD Almighty grant, &c.

IUDGES. CHAP. XVII. VER. VI.

In Diebus illis non erat Rex in Iſrael; ſed unuſquiſque, *quod ſibi rectum videbatur, hoc faciebat.

* Vel, quod rectum videbatur in oculis ſuis.

In thoſe daies, there was no King in Iſrael: But every man did that, which was good in his owne eyes.

His Chapter (the XVII. of Iudges) is the Chapter, which by the courſe of the Kalendar, is proper to this very day. Not as now it is: For now, by reaſon this day, God ſet us a King in Iſrael, it hath a ſelect Service, both of Pſalmes and of Chapters. But by order of the Church ſervice, this Chapter is for this day: and ſo it was this time foure yeares (I am ſure,) we all that then heard it, have good cauſe to remember it. And though we have got us a new, it will not be amiſſe, to call our ſelvs back to our old Chapter, being this day come hither, to render our thankes even for this very thing, In theſe daies, it is not with us, as In thoſe daies, it was with them; but that, to the joy and comfort of us all there is a King in Iſrael.

This, how great a benefit it is, it is not (it may be) the beſt Way ſimply to informe our ſelves, by Non erat Rex. Not ſimply; but ſure to us as our nature is, to us I ſay, there is no way better. It is an old obſervation (but experience daily reneweth it) that of Carendo magis quàm fruendo: What it is to have, no better way, to make us truly to value, than by feeling a while, how great a plague it is to bee without. Our nature ſurely is more ſenſible that way, and never taketh perfect impreſsion of that we enjoy, but by the privation or want; nor underſtandeth throughly (in hiis diebus eſt) now there is one, but by thoſe (in illis non erat.) And that is our verſe.

Of which, this is the occaſion. The Book of the Iudges, and the eſtate of the Iudges now growing to an end, the Holy Ghoſt here beginneth to make a paſſage, to the eſtate and Bookes of the Kings. To which ſtate, this Chapter (and ſo to the end of the booke) is a preparative, or introduction: to ſhew, that now the time was at hand.

[a] Gen. 17. 6. [b] Gen. 49. 10. [c] Deut. 17.

There ſhould be Kings of his race, GOD firſt told[a] Abraham, by way of promiſe. That thoſe Kings ſhould come of Iuda, and the [b] Scepter be his, Iacob foretold, by way of prophecie. The dutie of thoſe Kings, againſt the time came, was ſet downe by [c] Moſes, by way of previſion long before. This ſhewed, Kings there ſhould be.

[d] Eccl. 3. 1. [e] Gal. 4. 4. [f] Iud. 8. 22. [g] 9. 2.

But all things have a time, ſaith [d] Salomon: and time hath a fulneſſe, ſaith [e] Saint Paul. And till that time, it is not onely a folly, but a fault, to preſſe things out of ſeaſon: We ſee, offer was twice made to [f] Gedeon, to take it: by [g] Abimelech, to get it: both came to nothing; the time was not yet come. But ſtill, as the time drew neere, every thing did cooperate, every thing made way, and gave occaſion, to the purpoſe of GOD.

The Summe.

And now here, in this Chapter, is ſet downe the very firſt occaſion, on which GOD firſt miſſeth Kings: that, for all the Iudges, one Micah, a private man of Mount Ephraim, he and his old mother, it tooke them in the heads, they would have a new religion by themſelvs; & that was plaine Idolatry: and up with an Idoll they went. And becauſe they lacked a Prieſt, it came into Micah's head, to give Orders; and ſo he did. Why, could he be ſuffered? It was, and then commeth in this Verſe, This was all for want of a King. And when he had done with this; he goeth to another; and when with that, to a third, diſorder upon diſorder. And ſtill at the end of every one this commeth in, All theſe, becauſe there was no King. Which all is nothing elſe, but a Preparative againſt the time came, that GOD ſhould give Kings; that they might with joy receive that his gift, and with thanks celebrate it, from yeare to yeare; do as we do now. And this is the Summe.

Verſe 2. Verſe 5. Chap. 18. 1. 21. 25. 1. 19.

Three

Three points there are in it. Two are ad oculum apparent, the third by neceſſary inference. 1. The want of a King. 2. For want of a King, what miſchiefe enſued; Every man did what he thought good: this in generall. 3. And thirdly, Every man, but namely Micah; he went up with Idols. For, Miachs fact it was, begat this Verſe, and ſo of neceſsity falleth into it. Thoſe two both generall and particular diſorder, are linked to the firſt, as to the efficient cauſe, or rather deficient. For, evill it is, & malum non habet efficientem, ſed deficientem cauſam; Evill hath a deficient, but no efficient cauſe. For the want of ſome notable good (as here, a King) is the cauſe of ſome notorious evill; as greater evill cannot poſſibly come to a people, than to be in this caſe, every one to doe what hee liſts. The Diviſion.

For the handling of theſe, though in nature the cauſe be firſt (and ſo ſtandeth it ever) to us, the effect firſt offereth it ſelfe; and through it (as through the veile) we enter into the cauſe; and ſo, erunt noviſsimi primi, the laſt ſhall be firſt. 1. Firſt then, of Fecit quiſque. 2. And then, of Non erat Rex.

In the former of theſe we have two parts: 1 The Eye, rectum in oculis, 2 The Hand, Fecit quiſque: 3 And then together, that what ſeemed to the eye, the hand did; and that was miſchiefe enough. I.

In the latter likewiſe three. 1 There was no King (in oppoſition to other eſtates; they had Iudges and Prieſts, but there was no King.) 2 No King in Iſrael, with reference to other Nations. Not in Canaan, nor in Edom; but not in Iſrael: Even there, it is a want, to want a King. 3 And then out of theſe, Quid faciat nobis Rex, what a King hath to performe. To repreſſe all inſolencies, not only in generall; but particularly this of Micah. Where will fall in, that the good or evill eſtate of Religion doth much depend, on the having, or Not having a King. For it is as if he ſhould ſay; Had there beene a King, this of Micah had never beene endured. Now becauſe there was not; Religion firſt, and after it, all went to wrack. II.

And laſt, we ſhall ſee, how farre all this doth touch us, in matter of our bounden duty of thankes to GOD, for this day. III.

1. Of the effect: fecit quiſque, &c.

IN Thoſe daies, when, &c. What daies were thoſe: were they good or evill daies? And this whole Verſe, is ſet downe by way of liking, or Complaint. At the firſt one would thinke, that it were a merry world, if every one might doe what he liſted; that there were no harme in the world: they be faire words all. Right, and doing right, and the eye, the faireſt member, not an evill word amongſt them?

But yet ſure, thoſe dayes were evill. This a complaint. Quaſi ingemiſcit ſuper hæc Scriptura, the Scripture doth (as it were) fetch a deepe ſigh, ſo oft as it repeateth this verſe, and ſaith thus in effect: Tanta mala conciliat non habere Regem, ſo much miſchiefe commeth there in Iſrael, or any where, where there is no King (ſaith Theoderet.)

1 Quod rectũ in oculis. The eye.

To let you ſee then, what a monſter lurketh under theſe ſmooth terms doing that which is right in our eyes. Two parts there be, 1 the Eye, 2 and the Hand. To begin with the eye, and that which is right in the eye. There began all evill, in the firſt tentation: even from this perſwaſion, they ſhould need no direction from GOD, or from any; their owne eie ſhould be their director to what was right, they ſhould do but what was right in their owne eyes.

Three evils in it. 1 Quod in oculis.

Three evils are in it. It is not ſafe, to commit the judgement of what is right to the eye: and yet (I know) it is our ſureſt ſenſe, as that which apprehendeth greateſt varietie of differences. But I know withall, the Optikes (the Maſters of that faculty) reckon up twenty ſeverall wayes, all which it may be, and is deceived. The Object full of deceipt: things are not as they ſeeme. The Medium is not evenly diſpoſed. The Organ it ſelfe hath his ſuffuſions. Take but one: that of the Oare in the water. Though the Oare be ſtraight, yet if the eye be judge, it ſeemeth bowed. And, if that which is right, may ſeem crooked; that which is crooked, may ſeeme right: So, the eye, no competent judge. The Rule is the judge of right: If it touch the Rule, and runne even with it, it is right, if it varie from the Rule, let it ſeeme to the eye as it will, it is awry. GOD ſaw, this was not good: an expreſſe countermand we have from Him in Deuteronomie; You ſhall not doe every man, that which is right in his eyes: that is, you ſhall have a ſurer Rule of right, than your eyes.

Deut. 12. 18.

2 Quod quiſque.

But admit, wee will make the eye judge, yet (I hope) not Quiſque, not Every mans eye, that were too much, Many weake and dimme eyes there be; many goggle, and miſ-ſet, many little better than blind: ſhall all, and every of theſe be allowed, to define what is right? Some, it may may be (perhaps, the Eagles:) but ſhall the Owle and all? I trow not. Many miſhapen kindes of right ſhall we have, if that may be ſuffered: yea, otherwhile, diverſe of them contrary one to the other.

To goe yet further. Say we would allow every eye his priviledge; (it were great folly to doe it, but ſay we ſhould) if we ſhould allow it every one, yet not every one In ſuis. Not his owne eye, to direct his owne doings, or (as we ſay) to ſit Iudge in his owne right. No not the Eagle, not the beſt eye to be allowed to right it ſelfe. The Iudge himſelfe commeth downe from the Bench, when his owne right is in hearing. We all know, Selfe-love, what a thing it is, how it dazleth the ſight; how every thing appeareth right and good, that appeareth thorow thoſe Spectacles. Therefore, 1 Not right, by the eye: 2 At leaſt, not every mans eye. 3 Nay, not any mans right, by his owne eye. 3 Quod in ſuis.

We ſhall never ſee this ſo well in the generall, as if we looke in ſome few examples upon it, In individuo. And that can we no where better, than in this Chapter, and thoſe that follow it to the end of the Booke. They be nothing elſe, but a Commentary at large upon theſe words, Right in every mans eyes, &c.

1. What ſay you to making and worſhipping a graven Image. Lay it to the Rule: the Rule is, Non facies, non adorabis: then it is crooked and nought. Yet, to Micha's eyes, and his mother, a goodly graven image ſheweth faire and well. Exod. 20. 4. 5.

2. Goe to the next chapter. What ſay you to Burghlary, robbing, and rifling of houſes; yea, whole Cities, of harmeleſſe poore people, & cutting all their throats? Fie upon it, it is crooked. Put it to the men of Dan, they ſaw nothing but it was right enough.

3. Goe to the next to that. How thinke you by raviſhing of women, and that to death? How? away with that: Let it not be once named. No man will thinke that right. Yes, they of Gibeah (in the XIX. Chapter) did, & ſtood to it, to maintaine it. You ſee a good Gloſſe of this Text. Vpon the matter, there are no worſe things in the world than theſe were; if theſe ſeemed ſtraight, there is nothing but will ſeeme ſo to the eye. There is no truſting in oculis.

But this is not all. I now paſſe to the next point; Here is a Hand too, Fecit quiſque. Fecit is but one word; but there is more in this one, than in all the former. For, here at this, breaketh in the whole Sea of confuſion, when the hand followeth the eye, and men proceed to doe as lewdly, as they ſee perverſly. And ſure, the hand will follow the eye, and men do as it ſeemeth right, to them, be it never ſo abſurd that ſo ſeemeth. To dye for it; Eve, if her eye like it, her hand will have it: and Eves children, that have no other guide but their eye, if their eye rove at it, their hand will reach at it: their is no parting them. Therefore, if a bad eye light upon an hand that hath ſtrength: and there be not Rex, or the 2 Fecit quiſque: The hand.

ſtronger barre, it will be done. You may ſee it in all the former: 1. Micah liked an Idoll well; Micah had a good purſe; he told out two hundred ſicles, and ſo up went the Idoll. 2. The men of Dan liked well of ſpoyling: they were well appointed; their ſwords were ſharpe; Fecerunt, they did it. 3. They of Gibea: to their luſt, Rape ſeemed a ſmall matter: they were a multitude, no reſiſting them; and ſo they committed that abhominable villany.

By this time wee ſee, what a maſſe of miſchiefe there is in theſe few words. For ſure, if theſe all ſeemed right, and ſo ſeeming were done: Then are we come to quidlibet à quolibet, any man doe any thing, which is the next doore to confuſion, nay confuſion it ſelfe. For ſo, no mans ſoule ſhall be ſafe, if idolatry go e up. Alas, what talke we of the ſoule! they have leaſt ſenſe of it, talke to them of that they have feeling. No mans goods, or wife, or life in ſafety, if this may goe on thus. If robbery, rape and murther be right, what is wrong?

See then now, what a wofull face of a Common-wealth is here? Idols and murther ſeene and allowed for good; done and practiſed for good. Againe, Micah a private man; Gibeah, a City, Dan, a whole Tribe: Tribes, Cities, Families, all out of courſe. Out of courſe, in Religion; and not in religion alone, but in morall matters: and ſo, that the like never heard of, no, not among the heathen.

Laſt, this was now not in a corner, but all over the Land. Micah was at Mount Ephraim, in the midſts; Gibeah, was at one end, and Dan at the other. So in the midſt and both ends, all were wrapped in the ſame confuſion.

But what, ſhall this be ſuffered and no remedy ſought? God forbid.

Firſt, the Eye, error in the eye, is harme enough; and order muſt be taken even for that. For, men doe not erre in judgement but with hazard of their ſoules; very requiſite therefore, that men be travelled with, that they may ſee their owne blindneſſe. Then, that the counſell be followed (Apoc. 3.) that eye-ſalve be bought of him and applied to the eyes, that that may ſeeme to them right, that is ſo indeed. This, if it may be, is beſt.

Revel. 3. 18.

But, if they be ſtrongly conceited of their owne ſight, and marvell at CHRIST (as they, Iohn 9. 40. What, are we blinde too?) and will not endure any to come neere their eyes: if we cannot cure their eyes, what ſhall we not hold their hands neither? Yes, in any wiſe. So long, as they but ſee, though they ſee amiſſe, they hurt none but themſelves; it is but ſuo damno, to their owne hurt, (and that is enough, nay too much; it may be as much as their ſoules be worth.) But that is all, if it ſtay there, and goe no further than the eye. But, when they ſee amiſſe and that groſſely; What, ſhall their hand be ſuffered to follow their eye? their hand to be as deſperate, in miſ-doing, as their eye darke, in miſtaking, to the detriment of others, and the ſcandall of all? That may not be:

we

We cannot pull mens eyes out of their heads; nor their opinions neither; but ſhall we not pinion their hands, or binde them to the peace? Yes, whatſoever become of rectum in oculis, order muſt be taken with fecit, or elſe farewell all. Foule rule we are like to have; even (for all the world) ſuch as was here in Iſrael.

II. The cauſe, 1 Non erat Rex.

We ſee then the maladie; more than time we ſought out a remedy for it. That ſhall we beſt doe, if we know the cauſe. The cauſe is here ſet downe; and this is it, Non erat Rex. Is this the cauſe? We would (perhaps) imagine many cauſes beſides, but GOD paſſeth by them all, and layeth it upon none but this, Non erat Rex. And ſeeing hee hath aſsigned that onely for the cauſe, we will not be wiſer than He, but reſt our ſelves in it. The rather, for that, Ex ore inimici we have as much. For theſe miſcreants, whom He ſets on worke, to bring Realmes to confuſion, and to root out Religion, that every one may doe that, is good in their owne eyes: to this point they all drive, Vt ne ſit Rex. Away with the King, that is their onely way. Heaven and hell both are agreed, that is the cauſe.

To make ſhort worke then: If the cauſe be [There is no King;] Let there be one, that is the remedy: A good King will helpe all. If it be of abſolute neceſsity, that neither Micah, for all his wealth; nor Dan, for all their forces; nor Gibeah, for all their multitude, doe what they liſt: And if the miſſe of the Kings were the cauſe, that all this were amiſſe; no better way to ceaſe it, no better way to keepe Religion from Idolatry, mens lives and goods in ſafety, their veſſels in honour, than by Kings. No more effectuall barre to fecit quiſque quod rectum in oculis, than Rex in Iſrael.

This will better appeare, if we take it in ſunder: There was no King. He doth not charge them with a flat Anarchie; that there was no Eſtates, no kind of government among them: but this onely, there was no King. What then? there were Prieſts: would not they ſerve? It ſeemed, they would not. Phinees was to looke to their eyes: But, ſomewhere there be ſome ſuch, as Hoſee ſpeakes of, Populus hic quaſi qui contradicit Sacerdoti, This people will looke to Phinees eyes: Set their Prieſts and Preachers to ſchoole; and not learne of them, but learne them Divinity. The Iudges are to looke to their hands: But, there are too ſomewhere ſuch, as he ſpeaketh of (Chapter VII. Verſe VII.) Devorabunt Iudices; ſuch, as (if it take them in the head) will not ſtick to ſet up; and ſwallow downe the Iudges; ſpecially, inter arma. How then, ſhall wee have Military Government? Nay, that is too violent: and if it lye long, the remedy proves as ill, as the diſeaſe. To me, a plaine evidence: that, though all theſe were, all theſe were not perfect. There, was one yet miſsing, that was to doe this to better purpoſe, than yet it had beene done; and till he were had, they were not, where they ſhould be.

Oſe. 4 4.

Oſe. 7 7.

This

This is then GODS meanes. We cannot say, His onely meanes, in that (we see) there are States that subsist without them. But this we may say, His best meanes. The best (saith the Philosopher) for Order, Peace, Strength, Steadinesse, and proves them all, one by one. But, best (say the Fathers) for that, had there beene a better than this, GOD would not last have resolved on this. This is the most perfect, He last brought them to, Hither till they came, He changed their government : From Iosua a Captaine, to the Iudges; From the Iudges, to Eli and Samuel, Priests : But here when He had setled them, He changed no more. And this act of GOD in this change, is enough to shew, where it is not, there is a defect certainly, and such a State we may repute defective.

Besides, you shall observe : Of those three estates, which swayeth most, that in a manner doth over-top the rest, and like a foregrowne member depriveth the other of their proportion of growth. The world hath seene it in two already, and shall daily more and more see it in the third. Requisite therefore, there be One over all, that is none of all, but a common Father to all, that may poize and keepe them all in æquilibrio; that so all the Estates may be evenly ballanced.

This Act then of God in this change, is enough to teach, that this Non erat Rex is a defect certainly; and where there is not one, we may report the estate for deficient. At least, thus farre; that God yet may change it into a more perfect, as He did His owne. And againe this; that it is not conformed to the government, simply the most perfect of all, the government of the whole : when, as the inferior bodies are ruled by the Superior, so a multitude, by unitie; that is, all by one. Thus farre on these words, There was no King, howsoever other States there were.

2 Non Rex in Israel.

The next point is. No King in Israel. That this is not noted as a defect in grosse, or at large; but even in Israel, Gods owne chosen people, It is a want (not in Edom, or Canaan, but) even in Israel too, the want of a King. Truly Israel, being Gods owne peculiar, might seeme to claime a Prerogative above other Nations, in this, that they had the knowledge of His Lawes, whereby their eyes were lightned, and their hands taught; and so the most likely to spare one : others had not like light: yet this, non obstante their light and their law, & that they which were Gods owne people, is no super-sedeas, for having a King. Of which there needeth no reason but this; that a King is a good meanes to keepe them Gods Israel. Here, for want of a King, Israel began and was faire onward, to be no longer Israel, but even Babel. When Micah (and by good reason any other as well as he) might set up Religions, and give Orders themselves; as it were in open contempt of God and His Law. So that, the people of God can plead no exemption from this, Since it is His owne Ordinance, to make them and keepe them the people of God.

Was

Was it thus here, in the Old Teſtament, and is it not ſo likewiſe in the New? Yes, even in the New too. For there, Saint Peter willeth them that they be ſubject to the King, as to the Soveraigne, or moſt excellent. 1 Pet. 2. 13. And Saint Paul goeth further, and expreſſeth it more ſtrongly, in the ſtyle of Parlament, and (like a Law-giver) ſaith ὑποτασσέσθω : Be it enacted, that they ſubmit themſelves. And when Saint Paul there, had in his Act ſaid, Omnis anima; that this Act reacheth to every ſoule, which was enough: yet, becauſe that ſeemed too generall, Saint Peter came after, and goeth to the very point, and ſaith, Gens ſancta muſt doe thus too: that is, there muſt be a King even in GOD's Iſrael. And, what would we more? Rom. 13. 1. 1 Pet. 1. 9.

I come to the third part. And to what end a King? Quid faciet nobis? What will a King doe unto us? It hath beene ſaid already: He will looke, that every one doe not that which is good in his owne, and evill in Gods eyes. He will in His generall care looke to both parts, the eye and the hand. The Eye, that men ſinne not blindely, for want of direction. The Hand, that men ſinne not with an high hand (that is wilfully) for want of correction. He will, there be good Ophthalmiſts, with right Eye-ſalve, that the ſight may be cured, and things ſeeme as they be, and not be as they ſeeme. At the hardeſt, Si nolaerunt intelligere, but the eye will rove and runne aſtray, that the hand be bound to the good abearing. That they doe it not: or if they doe it (as doe it they will, yea though there be a King) yet that they may not doe it impunè; doe it, and nothing done to them for it, and ſcape the puniſhment due unto it. For, that is the caſe, when there is no King in Iſrael. And if, when there is one, that be the caſe too, where have we beene all this while? For if ſo, Etiam non eſt Rex, cùm eſt Rex; Then, where there is a King, there is no King; or one in name, but none in deed. Which as it is not good for the ſtate, ſo neither is it ſafe for themſelves. To this ſpeciall regard will be had. Non enim fruſtra (ſaith Saint Paul) for they beare not the ſword in vaine. Quid faciat nobis Rex. Rom. 13. 5.

2. That every one doe not thus. Every one, but namely (which is the occaſion of this text) that not Mica. For, Mica's fact brought forth this firſt ſight: that they were now come to this paſſe, that he, or any ſuch as he was, might ſet up in his houſe any Religion he would, and no man controll him for it. To looke to every one therefore, but ſpecially Mica: and to care for all, but above all, the matter of Religion. Ne quiſquæ videat quod rectum eſt, there; that every one be not allowed to ſee viſions there: At leaſt, Ne quiſque faciat, that ſee what they liſt, they be not ſuffered to ſet them up: but if the eye will not be rectified, the hand be reſtrained.

And ſure, no where doth the eye more miſſe, nor the hand ſwerve, then in this: and therefore no where more cauſe to call for a King, than for this. One would thinke, this were impertinent, & we were free enough from Mica. We are not. Even to this day, do men ſtill caſt images or imaginations (all is one) in the mould of their conceipts, and up they ſet them; them; at leaſt for their owne houſhold to adore. And then, if they can get ſuch a fellow as is here after deſcribed, a Levite, for ten ſicles & a ſuite; (or becauſe now the world is harder, ten pound;) they are ſafe: and there they have and hold a Religion by themſelves.

3. For, evident it is by this text: ſetting up of falſe worſhip, is the cauſe why Kings were miſſed; and the redreſſe of it, the cauſe, why they were placed. The cauſe I ſay, and the firſt cauſe of their placing: and therefore this a part, and a principall part of this charge. I will touch them ſeverally. 1. A part, to looke to Mica, and his falſe worſhip. Why, this is matter Eccleſiaſticall? It is ſo, and thereby it appeareth (I thinke) that Kings have, and are to have a hand in matters of that nature: If Religion were at a fault, becauſe there was no King; and that one there muſt be, to ſet it right againe. For, is it once to be imagined, that the cauſe of corrupt Religion is layd on the want of a King; and yet when there is one he ſhould not meddle with it? Rather the conſequence is ſtrong on the other ſide. Mica thus did, becauſe there was then no King: therefore when there is one, he will look better to it, that never a Mica of them all ſhall doe the like. Thus it went, when there was no King: after, when there was one, I finde again, the not taking away the High places (which were places meerly religious, where the people did ſacrifice) imputed ſtill to the King, as his fault; And yet, ſhall we have nothing to doe with high places, or ſacrificing, either there or any where elſe?.

Very ſtrange it were, that they who are by God Himſelfe, by an expreſſe Ego dixi, termed GODS, ſhould yet have nothing to doe with GODS affaires! And no leſſe, that being termed by Eſay, Nutritii, Foſter-fathers, to whoſe care the Church is committed, to cheriſh & bring up, ſhould yet be forbidden to intermeddle with the Church, in that which is of all foſtering the principall part! Verily, when the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of the ſervice that Kings doe unto GOD, he doth not onely uſe the terme of λειτουργὸς (that is) Publique Officer, but διάκονος too (as it were Gods Deacon, or Servitor) by a name peculiar to the Church-Offices: and this hee uſeth twice, for one other. It can therefore neither be denied, nor doubted of, in that Idolatry came up by defect of Kings, but that Kings were placed, to pull downe Idolatry, and to plant and preſerve the true Service of God. In a word: there is a King in Iſrael, that there may not be a Mica in Iſrael.

Eſa. 49. 23.

Rom. 13. 6, 4.

But this is not all; the Text carrieth us yet further: That it is not onely the charge of the King; but the very firſt and chiefe article in his charge. For, this marke I pray you: that this, is the firſt place in all the Scripture, where; and the firſt cauſe, why Kings were miſſed; this the very firſt occaſion, that drew this complaint from GOD. Being to ſet downe the diſorders, that then multiplied; other there were, beſides this; yet; this he beginneth with (not with the outrage of Gibea, or the riot of Dan, but) with Micas idolatry: as that, which he chiefly miſ-liked, and therefore would have firſt and chiefeſt care to ſee it reformed. This with GOD is firſt; and GOD was not well pleaſed, it was not ſo with them. It is that wherewith GOD upbraideth them (*Hoſ.*10.) with their hot taking the matter of Gibea. Why, were they too blame for it, being ſo villanous an act? No indeed, it was ſo good a peece of Juſtice. This only it is, God findeth fault with, that they could be ſo forward and fervent, in the caſe of wrong offered to a woman; and ſo cold and careleſſe, when His worſhip received ſo great a wound, ſo ſenſible of their own wrong, ſo paſt all feeling in His. For when injury was offered one of their Concubins, they cry; The like was never ſeen in Iſrael. They were all up in armes, and upon the point to root out the whole Tribe of Benjamin. But when Idolatry was ſet up, firſt here in an Houſe, after in a whole Tribe, even as it were in open defiance of God & his Law, no man drew a ſword: Nay, no man ſo much as ſpake a word in reproofe of it; not cry then, The like was never ſeen in Iſrael. Their fathers were more tender in this point. They, upon the erecting of a thing but like an Altar (but no Altar indeed) were all ready to have bidden battell, till they were ſufficiently ſatisfied, that no ſuch thing was meant. Here there is not a ſhew of an Altar, but (paſt a ſhew) very Idols, an whole houſe full of them, and no man ſaith to Micah ſo much as, What doeſt thou? This is that, He blameth them for, there. This, it, which he taketh in evill part; and ſaith, He will truſt them no longer with his worſhip: He will have one who ſhall look better to his worſhip, than they had done.

and

Hoſ. 10.8,9.

Iude 19.30.

Ioſ.22.11.

One, that ſeeing that was the firſt cauſe, that made God think of ſetting up Kings, will therefore think it his firſt duty, primum & ante omnia to have regard of that point.

To conclude, if the want of Kings, Kings in Iſrael, be evill (as evill it is, being the cauſe of ſo much evill) it is Gods Will, there ſhould be a remedy for it: That remedy is a King; It is Gods Will therefore, there be Kings. S. Peter ſpeaketh it totidem verbis: this is the Will of God that ye be ſubject to your Kings.

1 Pet.2.15.

Then ſecondly, being Evill, it is Gods Will, that Iſrael bee not onely kept from it at ſometime, but at all. Evill is not to bee allowed any though never ſo ſhort a time; but it agreeth well with His pleaſure, that once and ever, it be kept from Iſrael. Conſequently that there never be a time wherein it may be ſaid, Non erat Rex. That there be not only Kings, but a Succeſſion of Kings: Not only Rex, but ſanguis, ſemen, ſtirps Regis; they be all in Scripture. The Bloud, 1 Kings 11.14. The Seed, Ieremy, 41.1. The Race, 2 *Chron.*22.10. It is among other, one of the differences of the State of Kings, and Judges: and a maine inconvenience of the ſtate of Judges (and ſo is it of all Elective Kingdoms) the Inter-regna, as we terme them; times between the old Judges death and the raiſing of a new: in which times, all ran to riot, and much diſorder got head. To the end then, there be no ſuch inconvenience, no

Inter-regna at all, not ſo much as a minute of time, wherein it may be ſaid, Non eſt Rex in Iſrael, it agreeth with his will, there be not only Kings, but a Race of Kings; that ſo ſoon as the breath is gone from one, inſtantly it may be reſted in another; that ſo, the good may ever be, and the evill never found in Iſrael.

III. Our duty.

Thus have we gone through the matter of inſtruction; and now come to the matter of our own thankeſgiving riſing out of it.

As there cannot be a greater plague to a Land, than to be in that caſe, ſo is there not a higher benefit, that God beſtoweth on any people, to be fairely bleſſed from in it, than for the removing from us ſo many miſchiefs and for the preſerving to us the oppoſite bleſsings. For freeing us from that miſery, and not only conveighing, but intailing to us and ours, this happineſſe. For this, are we all now met here, in his preſence every man to put in his thankes, into one common ſtock, and ſo all joyntly to offer it up unto God, that (as this day) ſent us a King in Iſrael.

We come not for this alone to thank him; (yet well might we come for this, if there were none but this:) But there is more beſides: And even ſeven times are we bound, this day to prayſe GOD, for ſo many benefits and yet go not out of the Text.

1 Our firſt thankes then ſhall be for this firſt, the ground of all the reſt: For a King. This very thing, that there is one: and that this defect Non erat Rex hath not taken hold on us. The ſhout of a King, is a joyfull ſhout, was a true ſaying out of the mouth of a falſe Prophet (Balaam) but forced thereto by GOD. That a joyfull ſhout; and this a woefull cry, Nonne ideo nobis nullus Rex, quia non timemus Dominum? Are we not therefore without any King at all, becauſe we feared not God? And, our feare to God, was not ſuch, but He might juſtly have brought us to that miſerable plight. The more cauſe have we to thanke Him, that we have one. And when I ſay one; I meane firſt, have any one. For, be he Nebuchodonozar, yet muſt we pray for him: Or be it Ieroboam, him though GOD gave in His wrath, yet He tooke away in His fury, the worſe wrath of the twaine. Or, be he who he will, to have one, though but ſuch an one, is a matter of thankſgiving. For, better any, than an Anarchy: Better, any one a King, than every one a King: and every one is more than a King, if he do what he liſts. It calleth to mind the cry of the Beaſts in the Fable, when they were in conſultation, to ſubmit themſelves to the Lion, as to their King. For when it was alleaged; it was like enough hee would do they knew not well what, what he liſted which they had cauſe to feare: they all cried Præſtat unum timere quam multos; Better one Lion do ſo, than all the Beares and Wolfes and wild beaſts of the forreſt, as before they did. Firſt then, for this; that there is a King.

Num.23.21.

Hoſ.10.3.

Ier.26.7.

Oſe.13 11.

Secondly, For this: that, a King, not many. For to have many, is a plague plague for the peoples ſins.) Not many; Nay, not two, as of late: But now, Rex indeed, one King over all Iſrael. We know, when there were two Kings, one in Iuda, and the other in the ten Tribes; two in one territory; it was a maime and a blemiſh both: That there was not Rex, one entire King, but two diverſe Kings (as it were) over two halves of a Countrey. The like imperfection was it, even the dividing of this one Iſland, under two Soveraigns. The reducing of both theſe under one, was promiſed Iſrael, as an high favour. The ſame, to us performed, can be no leſſe: even, that (now) there is a King indeed. Rex, one King: One (and no more) abſolute, entire King over all the Tribes, over all Iſrael. Let this be the Second. Ezek. 37. 22

And this our Third. That not only over Iſrael: but (as the words are) in Iſrael. Theſe are two different things. To ſpeake (as the Prophet doth) that, this King is not Aſſur. For this cauſe Aſſur ſhall be your King, is a fearfull threat, GOD uſeth to His people, for their unkindneſſe. To have a meere Alien, one from beyond the water, as Nebuchodonozor was; out of a people, whoſe ſpeech they did not underſtand. One, not in, but extra Iſraelem; that is, over Iſrael, but neither in it, nor of it. That this is not our caſe, as (it is known) ſome would have had it. Therein then, muſt we alſo acknowledge, GOD hath dealt gratiouſly with us, ſending us ſuch an one, as, by more than one or two, before this very laſt of all, is come of the Race Royal, and is by due and undoubted right a King, not only over, but in, and of Iſrael. Is not this a Third? Hoſ. 1. 5?

And ſure, this Fourth. That, as he ſent us not Aſſur a ſtranger: ſo, neither ſent he a Ieroboam. No ſtranger, in birth, he; but one addicted to a ſtrange worſhip; a ſtranger in Religion. (And, it was even Micha's religion juſt: As, Micha's Countrey-man he was; for, both, were of Ephraim.) Who did that which was evill in GODS eyes, by doing that, which was good in his own, and ſo, made Iſrael to ſin. Such an one he hath not ſent us; but one that knoweth GOD: doth neither favour Micah, nor Micha's worſhip; ſince that was a principall cauſe, why there is a King in Iſrael, that Micah's Idols might not be ſet up. 1 Kin. 15. 26.

And then fifthly. As not a Ieroboam favouring Micah, not a Reboboam neither; who was (indeed) well for his religion, but otherwiſe not able to adviſe himſelfe, and ſo ready to be adviſed to the worſe. One, that was ful of great words, but ſo faint-hearted, as not able to reſiſt ought: that under him every one did what he would, for all the King. It was (as in another caſe the Prophet ſpeaketh) Rex, Rex, & non eſt Rex. It is otherwiſe, where Princes are intelligent, learned, and (as David was) both religious and wiſe, wiſe as an Angel of God, to diſcerne good and evill. Such a King as David, a ſpeciall bleſſing: not omnibus data, not given to every people; Nay, many times, not to Iſrael it ſelfe. May we not report this for a Fifth? 2 Chro. 10. 14. 2 Chro. 13. 17. 2 Sam. 19. 27

And for a Sixth, this. That not as David neither, though he were both gentle and wiſe, which Reboboam was not. For, though he were both, yet was he ſo intangled with wars all his time, and forced ſtill by continuall effuſion of bloud, firſt to recover, and then to maintain his right, as that he was rather Dux, than Rex in Iſrael, a Generall of an Army, rather than a King: No, but (that which addeth ſtill to the heap of our bleſſings) like Salomon, more happy than his father; as one that procured to his people peace with all the Nations round about. Of him, of ſuch an one as he, ſaith the Queen of Saba, becauſe the Lord thy God loved Iſrael, to eſtabliſh it for ever, therefore hath he ſet thee King over them, to bring them to, and to preſerve them in the happy dayes of peace. That is indeed the right King, to be as Melchiſedech King of Salem, that is, King of peace. To be as the great King of Iſrael, whoſe ſtile is Princeps pacis.

Eſay 9.6.

And laſt of all, which is the complete perfection of all; that in and by him GOD hath not only ſent us a King, but a Race and ſucceſsion of Kings. A bleſsing yet further, a greater hope, by bleſſing him, and in him us all, with an iſſue of ſuch hope, and with hope ſtill of more. Who ſhall (wee truſt, and pray they may) ſtretch their line to the worlds end; and ever keep this land, from this plague here mentioned; from dayes, wherof it may be ſaid, Non erat Rex in Iſrael. Even ſo Lord Jeſus, ſo be it.

And thus ſeventimes a day, prayſe we GOD, for this His ſevenfold goodnes. 1 For a King, 2 an abſolute entire King, 3 a King both in, and of Iſrael, 4 a King neither favoring nor favored by Micah, 5 a King too wiſe to endure, Fecit quiſque quod rectum, 6 a King of peace, 7 a King, who hath already by himſelfe, and ſhall for ever by his ſeed, preſerve this Land from the evill dayes, wherein Iſrael was, without a King. There is not any one of theſe ſeven, but we owe our ſpeciall thanks for it: But for them all, all that ever we have or can make.

And theſe now we offer and preſent, to the Divinè Majeſty, all: and together with our thankes, a commixtion of Prayers, that this bleſsing of a King in Iſrael, and of this King in Iſrael, may to us, and our poſterity, long, and many yeares, yea, many times many be continued, and wee or they often ſee the renewing of this bleſſed day. Which Almighty GOD grant, &c.

A

A SERMON PREACHED BEFORE THE KINGS MAIESTIE AT GREENWICH, An. Dom. M.DC.VII.

IAMES CHAP. I. VERS. XXII.

Eſtote autem factores Verbi, & non auditores tantum, fallentes voſmetipſos.

And be ye doers of the Word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own ſelves.

IN advice of Caution of S. Iames, to thoſe that receive the Word ingrafted. And that ſo neceſſary an advice, as without which, all our receiving the Word, or hearing Sermons, is nothing elſe (ſaith he) but a very cooſening or deceiving our ſelves.

Which I therefore thought very meet to attend upon the former verſe, ſo lately handled. That, being a commandement, to do it: This, a caution to do it well.

There is not any time, but this caution of S. Iames is needfull: But, the ſpeciall time for it is, when hearing of the Word is grown into ſuch requeſt, as it hath got the ſtart of all the reſt of the parts of GOD's ſervice. So as, but that ſure we are, the World will not like any one thing long, it might juſtly be feared, leſt this part eating out the reſt ſhould grow indeed the ſole and only worſhip of GOD: which S. Iames by no meanes would have it.

Now, if this be a proper Text for ſuch times, our times, are ſuch: This way our Age is affected; now, is the world of Sermons. For proofe whereof (as if all Godlineſſe were in hearing of Sermons) take this very place, the houſe of God, which now you ſee meetly well repleniſhed: Come at any other parts of the Service of GOD (parts, I ſay, of the Service of GOD no leſſe than this) you ſhall find it in a manner deſolate: And, not here only, but, go any whither elſe, ye ſhall find even the like.

Eccl. 5. 12. And this (to ſpeak with Salomon) is an evill diſeaſe under the Sun, which hath poſſeſſed the world; or (with S. Iames) a ſtrong illuſion of our ghoſtly enemy. Who when he cannot draw us wholly from the Service of GOD, maketh us ſingle out ſome one part of it from all the reſt, and to be ſuperſtitiouſly conceited of that part, to make much of it, and to magnifie it highly, nay only; with neglect, and (even as it were) with ſome diſgrace to all beſides it.

Of which I may well ſay with S. Iames (the 3. Chap. following at the 10. Verſ.) My beloved, theſe things ought not ſo to be: nor they cannot ſo bee, without manifeſt impeachment of the wiſdom of GOD, who hath appointed all the reſt, as well as this; and would have us make a conſcience of all the reſt, no leſſe than of this. And, we cannot ſo ſever out one (as we do) but this will follow; that, GOD did well and wiſely in appointing that one, but not ſo in the reſt. For, as for them, they might well have been ſpared; we can ſerve GOD without them, well enough.

Truly, though we cannot turne the ſtream or torrent of the Time (for Ioh. 3. 32. that men will not heare of ought againſt hearing;) yet, ſure it is, this is ut-
1 Cor. 6, 7. terly a fault: Hearing is not the only thing: And, ſo much we muſt, and do teſtifie unto you, though our witneſſe be not received.

But, this is not properly S. Iames his only: This rather; that, in hearing when we have made it the only thing, we ſo carry our ſelves, as, when we have heard, and heard only, though we do nothing elſe, but heare and only heare, we think we have done enough; we ſtand diſcharged before GOD; no further thing can be required at our hands. This (ſaith Saint Iames) is (certainly) an illuſion, or deceiving our ſelves. For, if all other parts be neglected for this; and then, in this, ſo great an error be committed; if all we do, be hearing, and even in that, we be deceived too, what ſhall become of us?

The Summe. For remedy (then) of this, doth S. Iames give us this Item: Se that ye be, Verſ. 19. 21. &c. In effect, as if he ſhould ſay: You are ſwift to heare, you receive the word with all gladneſſe, you will not miſſe a Sermon: all this I allow of, and like well. But then, See, (that is) do it not blindly: to heare the word, is not a blind mans work: He had need, not only have his eares, but his eyes too, that ſhall do it to purpoſe: Yea, both his eyes; for there is work for both:
Mat. 4. 24. Luc. 8. 18. Videte, quid audiatis, to ſee, what he heares: Videte, quomodo audiatis, to ſee how how he heares; In any wiſe, to ſee, he be not a hearer only, and nothing but a Hearer, and when he hath done that, thinke he hath nothing elſe to do.

Yet ſuch there were in Ezechiels time (which place in the Old Teſtament, matcheth this in the New) that called one to another, Come, let us go to the Sermon: Et audiunt (ſaith he) ſed nihil faciunt, and heard, but did nothing. Eze.33.31.

Such in S. Iames's time, elſe was his Caution without cauſe. And ſuch in our time: not, in dogmate, for they maintaine it not; but their practice plainly diſcovers as much; that ſo they heare, they care neither what, nor how; ipſum audire, very hearing ſerves their turne.

Well, whoſoever ſo doth, how ſure ſoever he makes himſelfe, how well and wiſely ſo ever he thinkes he carries the matter, it is ſure (ſaith S. Iames) if he ſee not to it, he is fallen into deceptio viſus. And if he heare no otherwiſe, into deceptio auditus. His receiving of the Word, is nothing but a deceiving himſelfe.

So have we two principall parts of this Text. Firſt, his advice, or caution: See that ye be doers of the Word, and not hearers only. And ſecondly, that which giveth an edge to this advice, which is a maine inconvenience, we fall into, if we follow it not: Leſt we deceive our ſelves. The diviſion.

The former of the advice, thus we put in order: Be not hearers only of the word, but doers; So is the true placing of the words, though it ſtands otherwiſe in the Text. Now, he that ſaith, Be not hearers only, ſaith two things: 1 Be ye hearers. 2 But, not hearers only. So that the points grow to be three: 1 An allowing us, to be hearers (firſt.) 2 But not hearers only, but ſomewhat elſe (the ſecond.) 3 Thirdly, what that is: Namely, to be doers of the word: which is nothing elſe, but the fruit of that graft, which ſo lately ye heard of. And this is the Caution. I. Verſe.21.

Then ſecondly, he giveth it an edge, by ſaying, if we follow not his Caution, we fall into a flat Paralogiſme, we make a falſe concluſion, or fallacy. Yea, a double edge: Firſt, that we are deceived: The ſecond, that we deceive our ſelves. II.

I. The Advice. 1 Be hearers

WE begin with this, that S. Iames, in ſaying, Be not hearers only, this he ſaith: Be hearers, but not only hearers; be ye doers too: but, be hearers ſtill.

For, in dealing with Scriptures that conſiſt of negatives by compariſon (not hearers, but doers; and ſuch like) we had need walke warily: and (as the Schoolemen ſay) reſolve them cum grano ſalis, leſt we caſt out one Devill with another, as the manner of ſome is: the Devill of hearing only, with the Devill of not hearing at all: And ſo, the laſt error prove worſe than the firſt. We muſt take heed we preſerve both, both hearing and doing; each in their ſeverall right: and ſo do the former, that the latter we leave not undone.

Mat. 12.24. Mat.27.64. Mat.23.23

For, S. Iames, by opening our hands to do, hath no meaning to ſhut our eares, to heare: by wiſhing us to fall to doing, he willeth us not to give over hearing: by bringing in the latter, taketh not away the former. But (as I ſaid) to hold on our hearing ſtill, only with this caution, that we reckon not that for all, or to be the thing ſolly or wholly to be intended by us. This being ſeen unto, to heare on, as we did.

Verſ. 19. 21.

For, he that had (two Verſes before) willed us to be ſwift to heare; he that (the very next verſe before) meekly to receive the Word: he could not poſsibly ſo ſoon forget himſelfe, as to have any ſuch meaning. No certainly, he had given it the honor of the firſt place, and his purpoſe is not to take it away again.

Deut.4.1. Mat.17.5.

GOD from heaven ſo began His Law with hearing: heare Iſrael. GOD from heaven too, ſo began His Goſpel; This is my beloved Son, heare Him. So GOD began, and ſo muſt we begin, or elſe we begin wrong.

Pſa.95.7. Heb.13.3.

And, not begin only, but continue ſtill hearing: For ſo doth the Apoſtle comment on the place of the Pſalme (To day if you will heare His voice) that, by to day is meant Donec cognominatur hodiè, while it is called to day. And to morrow, and every day (when it comes) is called to day: ſo that, to day is all the dayes of our life.

The reaſon of which our continuall being hearers, is the continual neceſsity of hearing of the Word of GOD: Which neceſsity our SAVIOUR CHRIST Himſelfe ſetteth down, in expreſſe termes, ſpeaking of Maries choice, to ſit and heare his words, Vnum eſt neceſſarium; One of the neceſſary things it is, and for ſuch we may boldly affirme it.

Luc.10.34.

What that neceſsity is He tels us, when He cals it the Key of Knowledge. That there is a doore ſhut; this is the Key: no opening, no entrance without it; none at all. For Quomodo poſſunt (ſaith Saint Paul)

Luc.11.52. Rom.10.14.

How

How can they poſsibly be ſaved, except they call upon God, or call upon him except they heare? It ſeemes, he knew not how: and if not he, not any man elſe. For, if we muſt be doers of the Word (as, by and by he tels us we muſt) we muſt needs heare firſt, what we do, before we can do it. Acts 9. 6.

At the firſt, we are in his caſe, that ſaid, Domine quid me vis facere? we know not what to do: then it is neceſſary to teach us. Ioh. 14. 6.

After we know, we forget again. Then, it is neceſſary to call us to remembrance.

When we remember, we grow dull in our duty: Then, it is neceſſary to ſtir up and quicken us. So, every way it is neceſſary, and we cannot be quit of it donec cognominatur hodiè, while it is called to day. 2 Pet. 3. 1.

As the Philoſopher ſaid, of the Celeſtiall bodies and lights, that they were dignum & idoneum ſpectaculum, ſi tantum præterirent (it is Seneca,) if they only paſſed by over our heads, & we received not the benefit of their motion and influence (which we do,) yet were they a ſpectacle worth the beholding. So may we juſtly ſay of the Word: though it only diſcloſed the high and admirable treaſure of wiſdom and knowledge (it doth,) yet were it worth the while to heare it. For the Queene of the South, came a great long journey, only to be partaker of Salomons wiſdome, and for nothing elſe: & ecce major Salomone hic, and He that was the Author of this Word, is greater than Salomon. Mat. 12. 42.

How much more then, when beſides this excellency, we have further ſo neceſſary uſe of it? It ſerves us firſt, as a Key, or ſpeciall meanes, wherby we may eſcape the place of torments. So ſaith Abraham to him that was in them: if your five brethren would not come where you are, they have Moſes and the Prophets, audiant ipſos, let them heare them: that ſhall quit them, for ever comming there. Luke 16. 29.

And it ſerves us, not only as a Key to lock that place, but to open us another, even the Kingdome of heaven. For, not ſo few as twenty times in the Goſpel, is the Preaching of the Word, called the Kingdome of heaven, as a ſpeciall meanes to bring us thither. It is that, which S. Iames, in the verſ. before ſaith, It is able to ſave our ſoules. The very words which the Angel uſed to Cornelius, that when S. Peter came, he ſhould ſpeake words, by which he and his houſhold ſhould be ſaved. Such and ſo neceſſary is the uſe of hearing the Word both ways. Luk. 11. 52. Verſe 21. Acts 11. 14.

I conclude then with S. Peter: Cui bene facitis attendentes, that yee doe well in giving heed to it; as Saint Iames here ſaith, not as ἀκροαταὶ, bare hearers; but, as ἀκροαταὶ, Attentive hearers: that in ſo doing, you do well. 2 Pet. 1. 19.

But S. Paul is ſo farre carried, with this deſire to have us heare, that he ſaith: Let the Word be Preached, and let it be heard, be it ſincerily, or bee it pretenſedly, ſo it be done, it is to him, and ſhould be to us, matter (not only of contentment, but alſo) of rejoycing. As much to ſay, as let them come and be hearers, though it be but to mocke: let them come and be hearers, Phil. 1. 18.

though it be but to carpe, ſo they come and be hearers. And it is not a-Acts 2. 6. miſſe. They, that came to mocke the Apoſtles, as men gone with drinke, were Ioh. 7. 32. caught by their hearing. They that came to take our Saviour Chriſt, were taken themſelves by their hearing. Therefore Quocunq; modo (ſaith S. Paul, and though it be more than S. Iames ſeems to warrant, ſay we) howſoever, and with what condition ſoever it be, Be ye hearers of the word, ſtill.

Hearers, but of the Word.

Hearers: but hearers of the Word. For, it ſhould bee the Word, wee heare. Words we heare every foot: but I dare not ſay, the Word always. Much chaffe is ſowne, in ſtead of right graine: Many a dry ſtick ingrafted, in ſtead of a Siene with life and ſap in it. That was it, our Saviour CHRIST
Mat. 4. 24. Luk. 8. 18. willed us to look to; Quid, what we heard, as well as Quomodo, how. And indeed, for all our hearing, few have exerciſed ſenſes, to diſcerne this point. Whatſoever it be, that we heare out of the Pulpit, it ſerves our turn, it is all one: There is much deceit in this point. But, a point it is, that would not be ſaluted a far off, or touched lightly, but the very core of it ſearched, if it were dealt with as it ſhould. But indeed, it is not ſo pertinent to S. Iames his purpoſe in this place; therfore, I will not enter into it, but go on to the ſecond.

2 Not Hearers only.

Hearers of the Word: But not hearers only, For all the matter is in the word (Only.) The more hearers, the better: the more hearers only, the worſe. We cannot ſay ſo much good of hearing, as we muſt ſpeak evill of ſuch as content themſelves with hearing only.

And, why not only? Becauſe to heare, is ſomwhat; but it is not all. A part it is; but, in no wiſe the whole. It is one thing; but not the only one thing. And therefore we muſt not ſtay in it; there is a plus ultra: when we have done hearing, ſomewhat elſe is to be done.

This appeareth plainly, from our Saviour CHRIST's own mouth, even in that very place, where he ſo much commendeth hearing, and ſo ſetteth out the neceſsity of it. He commendeth it by ſaying, Mary hath
Luk. 10. 42. choſen the better part: The better part is but a part, yet: therfore, not the whole then. He ſetteth out the neceſsity of it by ſaying: Vnum eſt neceſſarium: Vnum, he ſaith, not unicum: That, one thing it is, but not the only one thing, that is neceſſary, nor ſo to be reputed.

But of all other, S. Paul doth beſt ſhew the abſurdity of them, that ſo
1 Cor. 12. 17. eſteem it. What (ſaith he) is all the body and eare? Is all hearing? As if hee ſhould ſay: that is too groſſe. Yet thither they muſt come, even to make all the ſenſes hearing, and all the body an eare, that place all Religion in Lectures and Sermons.

This then being but a part only, being but one thing, wee muſt not ſtay here: Wee muſt not ſtay; for, the Scripture it ſelfe (marke it where you will) never maketh a ſtay at this of hearing. Ever, the ſentence is ſuſpended; ever, there followeth a Copulative, an (And) in the necke of it. It never commeth to a pawſe, or full point, till ſomewhat elſe be ſupplied.

This people hath well ſaid (ſaith GOD in Deuteronomy:) What was that, that we may ſay ſo too? This it was, they ſaid to Moſes: Bring thou GODS Word to us, and we will heare it, and do it. Not heare it only (for then it ſhould not have been commended) but heare it, and do it. And ſo, it is well ſaid, and not otherwiſe. I will tell you (ſaith our SAVIOUR CHRIST) who is a wiſe builder: He that heareth my words (and no period there, but) and doth them. And, to the woman, that heard His words with a great paſsion; Bleſsed are they that heare the Word of GOD, and keepe it. And not to trouble you with many allegations, ſo concludeth He in the Revelation: Bleſſed is he that readeth, and they that heare the words of this Prophecy, and keep the things written therein. Marke it well: Never a pawſe, a breath, a full point, or ſtay at hearing; but ſtill an And: and do, and keepe, and fulfill; and ſomewhat elſe. To ſhew, it is neither the ſole, nor the whole thing: There remaineth ſtill for us ſome further duty behind.

Deut. 5.28.

Luk. 11.28.

Rev. 1.3.

In as much then, as it is never put alone, but ſtill coupled with ſome other: And, it is a Rule (not only for marriage, but for all things elſe) What GOD hath coupled, let no man put aſunder: Let us ſee, what that other thing is, which GOD hath coupled, and S. Iames ſupplieth to be joyned with it.

Mat. 16.6.

What is that? Is it to be moved a little with that we heare? Upon our hearing, to ſay with Agrippa, ὀλίγῳ, ſomewhat I was; I was a little moved with it? No: this is to ſuffer, not to do. S. Iames ſpeaketh of doing.

3. But doers of the Word.

Acts 26.38.

What is it then? Is it to cry, Magiſter bene dixiſti, Sir you well ſaid, you have made us a good Sermon? Nay then, what ſay you to Nunquam quiſquam, we never heard a better: Is not that it? No: for, this is to ſay, and not to do. S. Iames ſpeaketh of doing.

Luke 20.29.

Ioh. 7. 46.

What ſay you to conferring of it, by the wals of our houſe, and making that we have heard matter of diſcourſe or queſtion? I can tell what I would ſay, if our queſtions & diſcourſes tended to that of S. Iames (there) to doing: that then, we were in a good way. But, ye ſhall obſerve, for the moſt part, they be about ſome pretty ſpeculative point, ſome ſubtill objection; Somewhat (ever) tending to curioſity of knowledge, rather than conſcience of practice. But, if we did ſo, yet it were but to talke of doing, not to do. Still we are ſhort of S. Iames: who, whatſoever we do, to ſatisfie him beſides, will not leave us, till we be doers of it. And (ſure) any that obſerveth it, ſhall find, that thoſe I have named (1 to heare, 2 to be moved with it a little, 3 to commend it, 4 to ſpend a little talke about it) this is all. And that all theſe be but by-wayes, which the enemy of our ſoules

ſeeketh to lead us into, ſo to divert us from the true end, that we may reſt in theſe, as in our finall concluſion, and never come to this of S. Iames (which is the point indeed) to be doers.

We ſee then what the other part is: to heare, that we may do; to receive, that we may bring forth, to be grafted, that we may fructifie.

And that our care of it may be according, I adde; that this is not only a part, but far the better part of the twain. For, though Maries part, was
Luk. 10. ult. better than Martha's: (Maries, in hearing; than Martha's in entertaining:) yet, Maries part in doing (that is) in annointing CHRIST, was better, than her part in hearing CHRIST, and hath a greater praiſe and promiſe from
Mat. 26. 13. CHRIST's own mouth: This that ſhe hath done ſhall be ſpoken of through the world. It is our Rule; Unumquodque propter quid, & illud magis: In that doing is the propter quid, the end of hearing; and we therefore heare, what to do, that we may do, what we heare: In that (as the Schoolemen ſay) Scire eſt propter ire; We know the way, to go the way: Doing muſt be the worthier of the twaine: Worthier in it ſelfe, and conſequently worthier our care and intendment.

Rom. 2. 13. To make it plaine, do but take them in ſunder, and ſever them: S. Paul ſaith plainly, then, Non auditores, Hearing is nothing; ſed factores, but doing is all. And when they be joyned, ſtill there is a marke ſet upon this part, to ſhew it for the chiefe. As here (at the 25 verſe following) he ſaith
Ioh. 13. 17. plainly. Beatus erit in opere ſuo; hee that ſhall be bleſſed, ſhall be bleſſed in his work; not in any thing elſe. Our Saviour Himſelfe ſaith the ſame in expreſſe termes: If ye know theſe things, how then? bleſſed ſhall ye be if ye Iames 4 ult. do them: Marke, Bleſſed, if ye do them. Otherwiſe, if ye know them never ſo much, never the more bleſſed. Never the more bleſſed? Nay ſcienti & non facienti (ſaith S. Iames) Knowing and not doing is an encreaſe of our ſin, and conſequently a greater heap of our condemnation. This therefore is the principall part to be doers.

If then we would faine be doers, and aske what that is? It is a materiall point to know. There are two kinds of doers 1 ποιηταὶ, & 2 πρακτικοὶ; Which the Latine likewiſe expreſſeth, in 1 Agere, and 2 Facere. Agere, as in Muſike; where, when we have done ſinging or playing, nothing remaineth: Facere, as in building; where, after we have done, there is a thing permanent. And ποιηταὶ, Factores, they are S. Iames his doers: But we have both the words in the Engliſh tongue. Actors, as in a Play: Factors, as in Merchandiſe. When the Play is done, all the Actors do vaniſh: But of the Factors doing, there is a gaine, a reall thing remaining.

To bee a Doer of the Word, is (as S. Gregory ſaith well) Convertere Scripturas in operas, To change the Word which is audible, into a Worke which is viſible: the Word which is tranſient, into a Worke which is permanent.

Or

Or rather, not to change it, but (as Saint Auguſtine ſaith) Accedat ad verbum, unto the word, that we heare, let there be joyned the Element of the Worke (that is) ſome reall Elementall deed: Et ſic fit magnum Sacramentum pietatis, and ſo ſhall you have the great Myſtery or Sacrament of Godlineſſe. For indeed, Godlineſſe is as a Sacrament: hath not onely the Myſtery, to be knowne, but the exerciſe to be done; not the Word to be heard, but the worke alſo to be performed: or elſe, if it be not a Sacrament, it is not true godlineſſe. 1 Tim. 3. 16. 1 Tim. 4. 7.

Which very Sacrament of godlineſſe is there ſaid to be the manifeſting of the Word in the fleſh: which it ſelfe is lively expreſſed by us, when we are doers of the Word; as it is well gathered out of our Saviour CHRISTS ſpeech, to them which interrupted Him in His Sermon, and told him, his mother was without: Who is my mother (ſaith He?) Theſe here, that heare and doe my words, are my mother. They travell of me till I am faſhioned in them. Hearing, they receive the immortall ſeed of the Word; by a firme purpoſe of doing, they conceive, by a longing deſire, they quicken; by an earneſt endeavour, they travell with it; and when the Worke is wrought, Verbum caro factum eſt, they have incarnate the word. Therefore to the womans acclamation, Bleſſed be the wombe that bare thee; true (ſaith CHRIST) but that bleſsing can extend but onely to one, and to no more; I will tell you, how you may be bleſſed too; Bleſſed are they, that ſo incarnate the written word by doing it, as the Bleſſed Virgin gave fleſh to the eternall Word, by bearing it. Mat. 12. 50. Gal. 4. 9. 1 Pet. 1. 23. Iohn. 1. 14. Luk. 11. 27.

It is that which Saint Iames meaneth in the next Chapter, where hee ſaith, Oſtende mihi fidem: Faith commeth by hearing; ſhew me thy faith and thy hearing (ſaith he, in the perſon of an Heathen man.) The Chriſtian faith is, Quando creditur quod dicitur; the heathen ſaith, Quando fit quod dicitur (for, ſo they define it in their Bookes of Offices) Ye ſhall never ſhew them your faith, cùm creditur quod dicitur; but by that they underſtand (that is) their owne faith, cum fit quod dicitur, by doing the word. Enough to ſhew what is meant, by doers of the Word. Cha. 2. Ver. 18. Rom. 10. 17.

And leaſt we excuſe our ſelvs by this, that all Sermons (are not de Theologia practica, entreat not of matters of action, and ſo not to be done. By this that hath beene ſaid of the Sacrament of godlineſſe, we may eaſily underſtand, that there is no Article of Faith, or Myſtery of Religion at all, but is as a key to open, and as a hand to lead us to ſome operative vertue. Even thoſe myſticall points, being by the Holy Ghoſt's wiſdome, ſo tempered, that they miniſter every one of them, ſomewhat to bee doing with; ſomewhat pertaining to the exerciſe of Godlineſſe, no leſſe than the morall points themſelves. So that, if we would diſpoſe our ſelves, to keepe Saint Iames-his Caution, I make no queſtion, we might well doe it through all. At leaſt, when the points are plainely practike, meere Agents, then to make a conſcience of doing them, and to call our ſelves to account of what we have heard, what we have done, till as Saint 1 Tim. 4. 7.

ames-his terme is, wee finde our ſelves to be doers of the word : till as Saint Iames-his terme was, the verbum inſitum, the ingrafted word have his fruit in a worke ſuitable to the ſeed or ſien, it came of. And this is the Summe of his Caution.

II. The edge of the caution, 1 the inconvenience. 1 Deceiving.

What if we doe thus, what then? So doing, ſaith Saint Iames, wee ſhall doe wiſely, and make ſure worke; in ſaying that, Not doing ſo, we ſhall but beguile our ſelves. For indeed, thoſe are the onely hearers, that are doers too: The other, that are hearers onely, as good not heare; for when all is done, doing muſt doe it. That is plaineſt, that Scripture telleth us, how it ſhall goe at laſt : They that have done good, ſhall goe into life everlaſting; and they that have done evill, goe (I need not tell you) y ou know whither well enough.

Iohn. 8.29.

This very thing had David ſaid long before of the word; A good underſtanding have all they that doe thereafter.

Pſa.111.10.

And ſo had our Saviour Chriſt, who ſaith of him that heareth and doeth, that hee approveth himſelfe for a wiſe builder. Which is that and nothing elſe, which Saint Iames here implieth, that they make a ſound concluſion, or true Syllogiſme.

Mat.7.24.

As, on the other ſide, ſuppoſing they doe it not, they be fooliſh builders, fooliſh Virgins (ſaith CHRIST:) ſaith Saith Iames, they fall into a flat fallacie, or Paralogiſme : are deceived by a peece of the Devils ſophiſtry.

Mat.7.26. Mat.5.23.

And the Apoſtle could not poſsibly deviſe to ſpeake more fitly, or to give his caution a better edge. For, theſe great hearers, nothing ſo much nettles them, as to be counted men deceived, unwiſe, or overſeene. Men are deceived for want of knowledge: They reckon themſelves the onely people, as if knowledge ſhould dye with them. And, being men of knowledge, conſequently freeſt from error, of any men alive. They pity much the blindneſſe of the former times: but as for them, they ſee light cleerely, and are not deceived you may be ſure. Therefore this ſeemeth very ſtrange to them, and in evill part they muſt needs take it, to bee holden for men deceived. The more it moveth them, the liker it is to worke with them; and therefore Saint Iames the rather chooſeth it.

It is the courſe, the Holy Ghoſt ſtill keepes with them. For ſuch were in our Saviours time, the Phariſees. None, ſuch men of knowledge, as they, they were knowledge all over: in their fore-head, at their wriſts down to the very fringe and skirts of their garment. Notwithſtanding upon this very point of Non faciunt, our Saviour Chriſt lets not to call them fooles and blinde though they took themſelves to be the onely Eagles of the world. Even ſo were thoſe in the Pſalme, when they had heard the Law, Sabboth after Sabboth, forty yeares together, yet (ſaith he) It is a people that doth erre in their hearts; for all that: and though they have heard ſo long, yet they know not my wayes. And even ſo Saint Paul, with ſome in his time, whom though he termes alwayes learning, continually hearing, ſtill at Sermons; yet for all that he ſaith, they never came to the knowledge of the truth: not the true knowledge, which conſiſteth in the practice; but a kinde of jangling knowledge, and holding of oppoſition, which he calleth knowledge falſly ſo called. Therefore, for all their Sermons, and all their Lectures, a deceipt, there is certainly. 2 Tim. 3. 7. 1 Tim. 6. 20.

For, let us examine it. If that which is heard, be therefore heard that it may be done, and it be not done, a deceipt there is: ſomebody there is deceived, light where it will. Now, there be but three in all, that bee parties to it: 1 GOD, 2 the Preacher, 3 and the Hearer. One of theſe it muſt be.

Bee not deeceived (ſaith the Apoſtle) God is not mocked: No deceiving of Him. It is not He ſure. Gal. 6. 8.

Then it is we: ſo one would thinke; ſo thought Eſay: Alas (ſaith he) I have laboured in vaine, I have ſpent my ſtrength in vaine, I finde I am deceived. But he receives anſwer of God, it was not ſo. That neither he had preached the word, nor the word he had preached, had beene, or ſhould be in vaine. For himſelfe; that his reward was with God, whether the hearer profited or no. For the Word that, as the raine or ſnow going forth, it ſhould not returne empty without his effects. Eſay. 49. 4. Verſe 5. Eſay 55. 11.

Which anſwer to Eſay, was it which put comfort in Saint Paul: that were his preaching the ſavour of life, or of death; both wayes, it was in him a ſweet ſmelling ſavour, accepted of GOD. And if neither GOD, nor the Preacher, then muſt the deceipt fall on the Hearer: and he it is that is deceived. 2 Cor 2. 15.

Deceived? Wherein, or how? many wayes. 1 And firſt, in groſly miſtaking the very nature of Sermons. Vpon Audiunt & non faciunt, Ezechiel ſaith plainely of thoſe in his dayes, they ſeemed to reckon of Sermons, no otherwiſe than of Songs: to give them the hearing, to commend the aire of them, and ſo let them goe. The Muſicke of a ſong and the Rhetorique of a ſermon, all is one. A foule error, even in the very nature of the word: for, that is a Law, a Teſtament, and neither ſong nor ſonnet. A Law, enacted to be done. For, it ſhall not ſerve the three children, to ſay of Nebuchadnezars Law, They had heard it proclaimed from point to point: but doe it they muſt, or into the furnace; for ſuch is the nature of a Law. A Teſtament: which, though it be but a mans (as Saint Paul ſaith) muſt be executed; and we are compellable to the execution of it: and to GODS much more. Dan. 3. 8. Gal. 3. 15.

To ſpeake but according to the Metaphore in the Verſe before: It is a plaine miſtaking of the word (which is, as Seed in a ſoile, or as a Sien in a ſtocke) to take it for a ſtake in a hedge, there to ſticke and ſtand ſtill and bring forth nothing. Or, according to the Metaphore in the Verſe next after; where it is termed a Glaſſe, which we ſhould looke in, to doe ſomewhat by: to take away ſome ſpot, to mend ſomewhat amiſſe, Verſe 21. Verſe 23.

to ſet ſomewhat right: And it is plainely to miſtake it, to look in it, and looke off it, and forget our chiefe errand to it.

As this is a manifeſt miſtaking in the Nature; ſo is there a like in the End. For whereas they heare, to doe; and to doe, is the End, why they heare; theſe Auditores tantum doe (even as Saint Paul ſaith) requieſcunt in lege, make the Law their pillow, lay them downe upon it, and there take their reſt: Never ſeeke farther, and ſo miſſe their marke quite.

Rom. 2.19.

But a worſe error yet than this is, that they which when they have heard, have done, ſeeme to thinke that hearing and doing is all one: inaſmuch as all they doe, is onely that they heare: and ſo, groſly confound the two parts, that are plainely diſtinguiſhed. For, hearing is a ſenſe, and ſenſe is in ſuffering: but the hearing of the Word is ſo eaſie a ſuffering, as if we looke not to our ſelves, we often fall aſleepe at it. Now, ſuffering and doing are plainely diſtinguiſhed: and not only plainly diſtinguiſhed, but (as we ſee) flatly oppoſed (by Saint Iames in the Text) either to other.

Not to hold you over-long: ſeeing the Apoſtle borroweth his terme of Paralogiſme from the Schooles, to ſpeake in Schoole-termes. In hearing onely, and not doing, there is (firſt) the Elench, A ſenſu compoſito ad diviſum: which they fall into, that where two things are required, reſt in one. And againe, Elench, A dicto ſecundum quid, ad dictum ſimpliciter: wherewith they are deceived that having a part, think that part ſhall ſerve them, inſtead of the whole. Which two, are a peece of the Devils ſophiſtry; and ſo you ſee, both [1] that they are deceived; [2] and how they are deceived that reſt upon hearing onely.

Deceiving your ſelves.

But to be deceived ſimply, is no ſo great matter; wiſe men (many of them have ſo, and any of them may be. This is that which edgeth it yet more, which giveth it a double edge: that they deceive themſelves.

1 In which point, firſt certaine it is, there is no man, that willingly would be deceived, can endure to be deceived himſelfe. Saith the firſt and greateſt Deceiver, to Eve, even then, when he came purpoſely to deceive her, אַף כִּי, Is it for a troth, that God hath forbidden you to eat of all the trees? As if he ſhould ſay: I would not have you deceive me, tell me true, whether it be ſo or no. Lo, he would not be deceived himſelfe, though he came meerly about deceipt.

Gen. 3.1.

2 But then ſecondly: If deceived we muſt be, of all men we would not bee deceived of ſuch, as we truſt: that grieves us exceedingly. Saith David, He hath beguiled me whom I truſted; my Guide, my Counſellor, my familiar friend. He can never ſay enough of it, for it is a griefe above all griefes to be ſo deceived.

Pſa. 55.14.

3 Thirdly then, if not by one wee truſt, leaſt of all, by that party, whom moſt of all we truſt (that is) by our ſelves; for, we truſt none

none better, I ſuppoſe. If we muſt be deceived; of another, of any other rather than of our ſelves. For, he that deceiveth himſelfe, is both the deceived and the deceiver too. The deceived may be pitied: the deceiver is ever to be blamed: Therefore, he is utterly without excuſe, that is the author of his own deceiving. And there is no man pitieth him, but every one mocketh him, and takes up Proverbes over him, of ſelfe doe ſelfe have, and I wot not what. So that, this of all other, is the worſt, [1] To be deceived: [2] To be deceivers: [3] To be their owne deceivers.

Will ye ſee an example of this, that they doe but deceive themſelves, that build upon Auditores tantùm? You may, Luc. 13. where you ſhall ſee ſome, that upon their bare hearing, bare themſelves very confidently, as if they could by no meanes be deceived in it, and yet they were. CHRIST ſaith to them, Neſcio vos. They thinke very ſtrange of that ſpeech, and reply, Lord, why haſt not thou preached in our ſtreets, and have not we heard thee duly, and never miſſed? Well for all that, for all their hearing, he telleth them againe, Neſcio vos. Though He had ſeene them at never ſo many Sermons, He taketh no notice of them by their being, or hearing there; but by their doing afterward. By which it appeareth, that upon this very point, they promiſed themſelves very much; but found at laſt, they had but deceived themſelves. Luk. 13. 25.

And (which is worſt of all) found it then, when it was too late; when no Writ of error could be brought; when it was paſt time, and they no way to be releeved.

And yet to goe further. If this deceipt of themſelves were in ſome light matter, of no great importance, it were ſo much the more tolerable; but ſo it is not, here. The laſt words of the laſt Verſe, are (as you remember) ſalvare animas veſtras: ſo that, it is a matter of ſaving our ſoules; a matter as much as our ſoules or ſalvation are worth. Life or Death; Heaven, or Hell; no leſſe matters depend upon our being deceived here. Things which moſt of all, it concerneth us, not to be deceived in.

One point more, and ſo an end. They will be hearers of the Word, and not doe it: what ſay you to this, that when they have beene hearers onely all their life long: they ſhall in the end, be forced to be doers; and doers of that Word, which leaſt of all others they would doe: Is not this evidently to be deceived themſelves? In the Prophet Ieremie they ſay, They will give God the hearing, but not doe any of His Words: But, they ſhall not go away with it ſo. For, when they have done what they can, they ſhall finde themſelves deceived in that too. A word there is, they ſhall not heare only, but heare and doe, whether they will or no. And, what is that word? Even Diſcedite maledicti in ignem æternum. For they that will do none elſe; that they ſhall doe: and fulfill that Commandement that breake all the reſt. And, who is able to fulfil, nay, to abide that Word? Who can endure to goe whither that will ſend him? Of all words, that is durus ſermo, nay duriſsimus, the hardeſt to doe of all: better doe any, yea, better doe all, than doe that. Ier. 18. 18. Mat. 25. 41. Iohn. 6. 50.

You ſee then, what an edge the Apoſtle hath ſet upon his advice: how great an inconvenience they runne themſelves into, that be hearers onely. Which if it be intollerable (as ſure, it is) it will import us, to take heed to the Caution, that ſo we may avoid this double edge.

Firſt then, that we doe as we doe, heare ſtill. For, Bené-facitis Attendentes.

Yet not to be carried away with the common error, that Sermon-hearing is the Conſummatum eſt of all Chriſtianity; and, ſo we heare our Sermons duly, all is ſafe, more needs not. But, to reſolve with our ſelves, that onely will not doe it: ſomewhat there muſt be beſides. And when all is done, it muſt be Factores verbi.

Laſtly, that we may (if we pleaſe) entertaine other opinions touching this point; but they will deceive us, and we in holding them, be deceived. And that, in a matter of great weight and conſequence: which then we ſhall finde and feele, when it will be too late to helpe it.

Then, that hearing, and not doing, we ſhall in the end be forced both to heare and to doe a word, the heavieſt to be heard, and the worſt to be done, of all others. Therefore, that we ſee to it in time, and keepe the Caution, that we may avoid the penalty. Which Allmighty God open our eyes, that we may ſee, &c.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED AT THE OPENING OF THE PARLIAMENT,

An. Dom. MDCXXI.

PSAL. LXXXII. VER. I.

Deus ſtat in Synagoga Deorum : in medio Deos judicavit.

The Greeke, word for word, the ſame.

[a]GOD ſtandeth in the Congregation of Princes.

[b] or, in the Aſſembly of the Gods,

[c] or, of the Mighty.

In the midſt will he judge the Gods.

[a] The Pſalter.
[b] The Geneva.
[c] The New Tranſlation.

Which was the Pſalme for the day, viz. the XVI, day of the month, on which day the Parliament was firſt begun.

GOD ſtandeth in the Congregation of Princes, &c. Of a Congregation of Princes is this Pſalme (as you have heard.) And behold, here, ſuch a Congregation (and God, I truſt, ſtanding in it.) And who then can doubt but this Pſalme is for this day.

The words (ſure) ſeeme to favour it: The uſe much more, which hath ever gone with it.

For, ſtanding the Policie of the Common-wealth of Iſrael (their Writers tell us,) when ought was to be done, for choo'ing their Rulers, for placing them and giving them their charge: but ſpecially, when there was any meeting of them in their Synagoga magna, their great Congregation, this was ever the Pſalme before they ſate downe. Purpoſely ſet (as it ſemeth) for the Aſſembly, to ſet them in tune. For that end ſet: and to that end ever uſed.

It was Moſes the man of God, that by ſpeciall direction from God Himſelfe, Deut. 19. began and brought up this order firſt, of making mens duty into muſike; putting it into their mouthes, that ſo, with the ſweetneſſe of melody it might be conveighed into their mindes. And David ſince continued it, and brought it to perfection, as having a ſpeciall grace and felicity; he for a Song, and his ſonne Salomon for a Proverbe: By which two (the unhappy Adage, and a wanton ſong) Satan hath ever breathed moſt of his infection and poiſon, into the minde of man.

Now in this holy and heavenly uſe of his harpe, He doth by his tunes (as it were) teach all ſorts of men, how to tune themſelves. And there is no eſtate whatſoever, but in this Booke he ſweetly ſingeth their duty into them. Into his Court, Pſal. 101. and ſo ſeverally, into the reſt. And here now, in this Pſalme, how to preſerve harmony in a Congregation.

The Diviſion. Of which Pſalme this is the firſt verſe, the Key, and the Compendium of the whole. And thus we divide it. 1. Into two Parties, firſt. 2. Into two Acts, ſecond. Two Parties, [1] the firſt word of it is God, God in the ſingular: [2] the laſt is Gods, Gods in the plurall: theſe two Parties are diſtinct, [1] one from another, [2] one above another.

1 GOD that ſtandeth, from the Congregation He ſtandeth in. 2. GOD that judgeth, from and above the Gods whom He will judge.

The Gods we conſider two wayes, as the word is twice repeated; [1] Deorum, and [2] Deos. [1] In Synagoga Deorum, and [2] In medio Deos. Deorum, in the Congregation [2] Deos out of it. If you will, thus, Into the [1] Gods of the Congregation, and the [2] Congregation of the Gods.

Now of the firſt God in and upon the laſt Gods, and in and upon the Congregation of them, two Acts there are ſet downe, [1] His ſtanding, [2] His Judgement.

1 In the Congregation, He ſtands: Stat in Synagoga Deorum.

2 Out of it, the Gods He will judge: Deos judicabit (that is) call them to accompt (every God of them:) and even upon this very point, how they carried themſelves before Him ſtanding in the Congregation. 1 This He will doe: and doe it in medio, not in a corner, but bring them forth into the midſt, and doe it in the view of all. In medio Deos judicabit.

The Order lieth plaine. [1] Of the Gods, firſt, [2] Then, of the Congregation of them. After, of GOD; His ſtanding, and His judging. Standing, now; Deus ſtat? Iudging, hereafter; Deus iudicabit. Judging, [1] even the Gods themſelves. And that [2] in medio, that all the world may ſee it.

1. In the whole courſe of our lives, we may have good uſe of theſe two.

2. But

But the Pſalmiſt ſeemeth to thinke, not at any time ſo good, as at this.

Therefore, what ever elſe ſlip you, my deſire is, theſe two may ſtick with you, and be ever in your mindes all the Seſſion long. Two they be; and ſhort ones; and plaine ones they be (but two words a-peece) [1] Deus ſtat, [2] Deus judicabit: [1] God doth ſtand, and [2] God will judge. [1] Doth ſtand for the preſent: [2] And will judge, will take a time to call each party to a reckoning, for every thing ſhall here paſſe.

[1] The taking to heart; a true impreſsion there of theſe two, cannot but doe much good, keepe all in true meaſure, time and tune. [2] The ignorantibus or non recordantibus of it (as it is at the fourth Verſe) like enough to put all out of courſe: while men runne on and carry things away before them, as if there were no judicare in the Creed, as if they ſhould never come to accompt againe.

It hath beene thought, there needeth no more to make a good Parliament, but the due recording of this Verſe. It will ſerve as a wreſt to tune, and to ſet all right. To ſet GOD, [1] Firſt ſtanding, and then [2] judging, before our eyes.

But ſpecially ſtanding. For, if we ſhall regard Him well, when He ſtands, we ſhall never need to feare Him, when He judges; and then I ſhall never need to trouble you, with that part. The regard then of Gods ſtanding, to be our onely care for the preſent, and we to commend it to your care, and ſo to conclude.

OF the Gods firſt. And firſt on our parts that be men: after, on theirs that be the Gods.

The two parties.

On our parts: When we read, and weigh well with our ſelves, this high terme and title of Gods, given to them that are in authority; wee learn, To hold them for Gods, to owe & to beare all reverend regard to their Places and Perſons. And above all, highly to magnifie ſuch Aſſemblies as this. So taught by the Prophet here; who once and twice, over and over againe, ſo ſtileth them, their perſons themſelves, Deos; their Aſſembly, Synagogam Deorum. In the Congregation they are ſo: Out of it they are ſo. Adde to theſe two, a third yet, more authenticall (and it is in this Pſalme too.) The Prophet ſpeaketh here; GOD Himſelfe; there, Ego dixi dij eſtis, This ſaith our SAVIOUR (*Ioh.*10.35.) is ſermo Dei. The other two may ſeeme to drop out of the Prophets penne, but this came from GODS owne mouth: the more (ſay I) to be regarded. And this is not Old Teſtament (as ſay our Anabaptiſts.) Our bleſſed Saviour, in the New, comments upon theſe words (the beſt Commenter, that ever was) and two things he tels us. 1 One, we thought it to be but a Pſalme, He tels us it is a Law, Nonne ſcriptum eſt in Lege? And ſo gives it the force of a Law. 2 The other, that it is a binding Law ſtill: ſo binding that Non poteſt ſolvi (they be His owne words) it cannot be looſed. Was not by Him; nor can, by any other: And ſo, is in full force ſtill.

1 Pet. 2.18.

Theſe then, Dij, Deorum, and Deos, are not S. Peters ὑπέρογκα ματαιότητος ſwelling words of vanity. This is not to give titles, but of GODS owne giving: Nor to ſay one ſyllable more than GOD hath ſaid before us. Said it muſt be, that God hath ſaid, who never gives titulum ſine Re. So they are by Him intituled: and ſo they are.

Yet not to hold all the Gods equall

But I take it my duty not to keepe from you, that all that are compriſed here under Dij, Deorum, and Deos are not all Gods alike. No: in this God-head, Some are before or after other, Some are greater and leſſer than another. There ſome higher than other (ſaith Salomon, Eccleſ. 5.12.) And there are others yet higher than they. For the powers that are, are by God, both ordained, and ſet in order (ſaith Saint Paul.) So in order, (ſaith Saint Peter) as there is one ὑπερέχων, and that (he ſaith) is the King by name, ſupereminent above the reſt, and the reſt ab eo miſſi, have their miſſion, and commiſſion from him. Many Superiors, but one Soveraigne.

Rom 13.2. 1 Pet. 2.13.

Ego dixi, was ſaid to all; but not to all at once. To ſome one, before the reſt: even to David, to whom before the writing of this Pſalme. 1. Sam. 23.3. GOD (ſaith he) even the ſtrength of Iſrael ſpake to me and ſaid, Thou ſhalt beare rule over men. Nor did all the ſonnes of the moſt High (as they are after called at the ſixth Verſe) come into the world, at one time. There was Primogenitus inter fratres: Of whoſe Primogeniture or birthright, this was a part, Geneſis 27.29. Be thou Lord over thy brethren, and let thy mothers ſonnes bow unto thee. And take even the word Synagoga: Never was there Synagogue heard of, but there was an Archiſynagogus, a Ruler of it.

Nazianzen ſpeaking of Magiſtrates as of the Images of God, and ſorting them, compareth the higheſt to a picture drawne cleane through downe to the feet; The middle ſort, to halfe pictures drawne but to the girdle; The loweſt, to thoſe ſame Idyllia, no further but to the neck and ſhoulders. But all in ſome degree, carry the image of God, as all have the honour to be called by His Name. This for our parts. Now for theirs, the Gods.

What infer we of this? Nothing, but that, what they are, they would be: having obtained ſo excellent a name, they would be even what their name bodeth. They that weare Gods name, hold Gods place, repreſent His perſon, what manner perſons ought they to bee: Choice perſons they would bee; taken, as the fat from the ſacrifice; having more ſparks of the Deity, a larger portion of the ſpirit of God, more lively expreſſing the image and ſimilitude whereto man was made, than the reſt. If it were poſsible, ſuch, as of them might be ſaid in the Lycaonian tongue, Gods are come downe to us, in the likeneſſe of men. Sure, they that are ſtyled Gods a The duty of the Gods: To be as they be called, Gods, indeed. Heb. 1.4. 2 Pet. 2.11. Gen. 1.26. Acts. 14.11.

ſomewhat more than they would be; as like, come as neere rem nominis, the truth of that they are named, as humane frailty will permit.

But have they beene ever ſo? I cannot ſay it. Aſſemblies there have beene, [a] Abimelech had one; and [b] Roboam his, and Ieroboam his. But Abimelech, with his needy indigent Sichemites: Roboam, with his youth, that never ſtood before Salomon: [c] Ieroboam, with his crue of malecontents, Sons of Belial, ſhall I call any of theſe Synagoga Deorum? I cannot, I ſee no lineaments, no reſemblance at all, nothing, for which this name ſhould once be vouchſafed them (of Gods,) Nay, nor ſcarce of Synagoga neither; as deſerving, not onely to be left out of the liſt of Gods, but even to be put extra Synagogam. Scarce a Synagogue, much leſſe of Gods.

Yet have they not alwayes beene ſuch.

a Iudg. 9. 4.
b 1 Reg. 12. 8.
c 2 Chro. 13. 7.

After, in this Pſalme, at the V. Verſe, they are told as much, when by their ignorantibus, or non intelligentibus, things were growne out of courſe. And told it by GOD Himſelfe, and that with a kinde of indignation, that He had ſaid they were Gods, and they carried themſelves ſcarce like men: gone from their names quite.

But I leave them, and come to this of ours. There is not in the world a more reaſonable requeſt than this, what you would be, that to bee: what you would be in name, that to be in deed; to make good your name. Every one to be Homo homini Deus, by doing good: ſpecially, that good which is the good of all, that is, the good of this Aſſembly. This the time and place for it: And, ſo my wiſh is, you may, and my truſt is you will. And ſo I leave Deorum, the Gods of the Congregation: and come to Synagoga, the Congregation it ſelfe.

But ours we wiſh to be ſuch.

II.

The Congregation of the Gods.

Ezek. 1. 20.

For when we conſider theſe Gods each apart, they are as in Ezechiel, Every ſpirit on his wheele, and every wheele in his owne courſe, when they are at home in their ſeverall countries. But when as in a Congregation, then are they to come and to be together.

God alloweth ſuch Congregations, when there is cauſe.

d Num. 10. 34.

And this (if cauſe be) GOD alloweth well of. 1. For he hath to that end left with His Lieutenant; a power d to blow the trumpets, one or both, to call together a part, or the whole Congregation. By the Trumpets, while they were all within the Trumpets ſound: but after, when they were ſetled all Canaan over, to call them by the penne of the writer (that is, by Writ:) Of which we have a faire example, Iudg. 5. 14. 2. For Secondly, He hath willed the Angels of His Church, by the Angels example (Iudge. 5. 23.) to lay Meroz's curſe to them that come not to it. 3. For thirdly, Hee heere calleth their meeting by the name of Synagogue, which is a Holy place; a Sanctuary, a High place, or Court of refuge, (מועד ſignifies all theſe.) 4. For fourthly, He hath to that end ſpared them a peece of His owne Temple, to have their meetings in, e On the South ſide of it, called twice by the name of Aſſuppim (which was to them, as the Parliament-houſe is to us) that ſo their feet might ſtand on holy ground. And they knew themſelves e 1 Chro. 26. 15.

ſelves, to be, no קהל common or prophane, but עדה a ſacred Aſſembly to him.
5 For fifthly, he hath ſet them here a Monitorie Pſalme of this, to put them in minde, how to beare themſelves in it, like Gods (that is) Divinely.
6. For laſt when they are together, He comes Himſelfe in perſon and ſtands among them. All which ſhew, He favours and likes well ſuch Aſſemblies as this.

The cauſe of the meeting of ſuch Congregations.
f 1 Cor. 11. 17.
g Iudg. 5. 16.

But then, there muſt be a Cauſe: And indeed, elſe it is Concurſus atomorum, rather than Congregatio Deorum. Thus many, ſo goodly a Company to meete to no end, GOD forbid. If the Apoſtle had not, Nature doth teach us, f When we come together, to come together for the better not for the worſe. And nothing is worſe, than to come together for nothing. Better (as Debora ſaith well) g ſtay at home, and heare the bleating of their flockes. This be farre from any Aſſembly; ſpecially the Aſſembly of the Gods, who are herein to imitate GOD, who doth nothing in vaine, or without a cauſe.

This cauſe double.
1 One from Synagoga.
2 The other from Deorum.

If you aske me the cauſe, the two words themſelves, Synagoga and Deorum, containe either of them a cauſe of it. As a Congregation, for the good of the Congregation: As Gods, Cœtus Deorum Cœtus Dei (ſaith Saint Hieron.) the Congregation of Gods is GOD's Congregation: As Him, for Him, for His honour, who gave them theirs; to the high pleaſure for [illegible] GOD, whoſe Ego dixi Gods [illegible] them all. And ſo (as I remember) it is written In capite libri, the firſt page, or front of your acts, To the high pleaſure of Almighty God (there, ſo, it is) and for the weale publike (there is the Congregation.) Not this onely here, the Congregation of Gods, but the Congregation of men (I know not how many) all the Land over, even the great Congregation.

1 From Synagoga when it is in danger.

Learne a Parable of the Naturall Body. If there be no other cauſe, each Member is left to looke to it ſelfe; but if there be any danger toward the whole body, preſently all the parts are ſummoned (as it were) to come together, and every Veine ſends his bloud, and every ſinew his ſtrength, and every artery his ſpirits, and all draw together about the heart for a while, till the ſafety of the whole be provided for; and then returne backe, every one to his place againe. So it is with the Body Civill, in caſe of danger, and never but in it.

The danger of two ſorts
1 Ordinarie.
2. Or upon ſpeciall occaſion.
1 Ordinary By Sinagogavitiorum.
2 Ex malis moribus.

But is there any danger then towards? There is, and that to both. To the Synagogue firſt, and that from a twofold Synagogue, and of two ſorts: 1 One continuall or ordinary: 2 The other not ſo, but ſpeciall and upon occaſion. The danger, this Pſalme expreſſeth thus (Verſe V.) That things are brought out of courſe, yea, foundations and all. Thus: there be (I may call them a Synagogue, for they be many) of theſe ſame mali mores, that like tubera terræ, ſhoot out daily, no man knowes whence, or how; never heard of before: Theſe if they be ſuffered to grow, will bring all out of courſe. And grow they doe; for even of them, ſome that have penalties already ſet (I know not how) ſuch a head they get, as they overgrow their punishments : that if this Congregation grinde not on a new and a sharper edge, they will bring things yet further out of Course.

puniſhments

Besides, those that should keep all in course, the Lawes themselvs are in danger too. There be a sort of men (I may well say of the Synagogue of Satan) that give their wayes, and bend their wits to nothing, but even to devise, how to fret through the Lawes, as soone as they be made; as it were in scorne of this Congregation, and of all the Gods in it. These goe to the foundations (for so, are the Lawes;) undermine them and in a sort, though after another manner, seeke to blow up all. Great pitie, but this Congregation here should look well to the foundations of all. Great pitie, that it should be overcome of their evill, but that their evill should be overcome of our good, and this of yours goe beyond them. b Ex legibus depravatis. Rom. 12.21.

It is not to goe through all. Generally, Quid populo, quòd flet? What the Congregation of men have just cause to complaine of, the Congregation of Gods sit to redresse. Whatsoever Synagoga Satanæ per malos mores doth put out; Synagoga Deorum, per bonas Leges, is to set in joint againe. And that is the proper worke of this Assembly, to make Lawes. And that is properly the worke of God: His worke, at Sinai, and at Sion both. And in truth, That there is but one Lawgiver, and that is God (saith S. Iames, Chap. 4. Ver. 12.) As, till Ego dixi, till then, there was but one God: but together with His Name, He imparted also His Power, and made you a Congregation of Lawgivers, and of Gods, both at once. A high Power, the highest in earth, save one: Next to the Scepter in Iuda's hand, is the Lawgiver betweene his feet, even with Iacob. And so with Salomon: After Per me Reges regnant, presently followes Et Legum conditores justa decernunt. To this so high a worke, a whole Synagogue of wisedome is little enough; to bring into course that is out, to set the foundations fast, against this Synagogue of Satan. And this lo, is the ordinary and continuall danger, I spake of. 1 Sam. 11. 15. These to be helped with good lawes. Gen. 49. 10. Pro. 8. 15.

But for all this danger, we might well enough stay a longer time and not come together, ther is no such present haste to meet with that. There is another (I take it) more presing, as I said before, upon a more speciall and present occasion. Will you but looke over into the next Psalme following, into the beginning of it? there, you shall find another Congregation, a second, casting their heads, and confederate together, able to put foundations and all out of course. And then he reckons up a rabble of them. Edomites: the Edomites first, and you know what they cried, Exinanite usque ad fundamenta, Vp withall, foundations and all: the Edomites, and Ismaelites, and Moabites, and Agarenes, Gebal, and Ammon, and Amalek. And at last, Assur also was joyned with them: (Assur, that even then, purposed; and after did eat them all up one after another; yet he was then joyned with them.) Such a Congregation (as is said) there is now abroad, and what will they doe? No harme; bring nothing out of course (they say.) But it will be the wisedome of this Congregation, to be provided for them 2 Vpon special occasion. By Synagoga inimicorum. Psal. 83. 3. Ver. 6. Psa. 137. 7.

if they ſhould not doe as they ſay: This Pſalme ſtands before that, that this Congregation may be before-hand, with that.

Peace and perfect amitie to be wiſhed before all: (no man doubts of Rom. 12. 18. that:) If it be poſsible as much as in us lieth, peace with all men. But, Peace will be had, with never the leſſe aſſurance, and with never the worſe conditions, if the Congregation be well appointed, that ſeeke it.

And this is the ſecond worke of this Congregation (if not the firſt.) Therefore (it may bee thought) at this time called together, that there may be Multitudo Conſilii, ſoundly to adviſe of it; and Multitudo Auxilii, roundly to goe through with it. The Text intends this of helpe ſpecially; for, in ſome tranſlations, it is the Congregation of the Mighty; but howſoever, the very name is taken from אל, that Name of GOD, that is given Him for His ſtrength and Power. Of thoſe that are Mighty and ſo can ſhew themſelves, of thoſe is this Congregation. Ever remembring this, that they who aſſemble for an End, aſſemble alſo to deviſe how to furniſh meanes to compaſſe that End: (and indeed, of the End, pro-Luc. 14. 13. perly, we conſult not, but of meanes rather.) Our SAVIOUR CHRIST, ſpake with His owne mouth, Who will ever reſolve upon Warre, but they will ſit downe firſt, and ſet downe what forces will be needfull? and how much they will ſtand in? and how that is to be had or levied, that (as the wiſeman ſaith) Reſpondit omnibus; Anſwers, takes order for all.

Eccl. 10. 19. Thus for the Synagogue: What for GOD? There is no doubt (bleſ-

Iudg. 5. 23. us, if we helpe Him. Helpe GOD? what a word is that? Even the very word, the Angell uſed, when he had laid a curſe upon Meroz, for not comming to helpe the LORD: againe, leſt wee might thinke it ſcaped him, upon deliberation hee ſaith, to helpe the LORD againſt the Mighty, that is Siſera and Iabins mighty preparations. Ever, where the right is, there GOD is; when that in Danger, GOD in danger: they that helpe that, helpe him; and hee will helpe them. If the Congregation, God; God, the congre-

And in ſigne, that He will ſo, when they are met together about theſe matters, GOD comes Himſelfe here in perſon, and ſtands among them. GOD, in the Congregation of Gods, what more proper and kindly? And ſo much for the Gods, and for their Congregation.

III.

The two acts.

Now for the two Acts of GOD: in and upon this Congregation: 1 His Standing, and 2 Iudging: Firſt, jointly; After, apart: 1. Iointly: They are thought to be ſet firſt (theſe two) as two Correctors of the two former, Deorum and Deos, leſt the Gods of the Congregation ſhould bee exalted

1 Iointly.

1 To correct the word. (Gods.)

above

above measure with this deifying revelation. Secondly, as two Markes of difference betweene the first GOD, and the last Gods; so to let them see what manner of Gods they be indeed, how differing from Him.

2 To put a difference betweene them & God.

GOD stands: This may well referre that in the sixth Verse: But you shall fall. A standing GOD; He who onely stands, and will stand, when they all shall fall, and fall even to dust, every God of them. And this could not be told us in a fitter place: the place where we stand, is compassed about with a Congregation of these fallen Gods, these same Dij caduci; with Monuments of the mortality of many a great Elohim in their times. And let me tell you this, that in the Hebrew tongue the Grave is called a Synagogue as well as the Church. All shall be gathered, even the Gods, even the whole Synagogue of them, into this Synagogue at last. So this first shewes them, Their Godships give them no immortality. Gods: but mortall, temporall Gods they be.

God stands: they fall.

The other is of judging. That as they have no exemption from the first statute, * Statutum est omnibus semel mori: So neither from the second, Et post mortem judicium. They be Dij sub Iudice: They be not Gods, absque aliquo computo reddendo. When they have done judging others, they shall come to be judged themselves. Dij caduci, Dij judicandi: Gods that shall fall, Gods that must come to judgement. From neither of these shall their Godhead excuse themselves.

God judges: they are called to accompt.

*Heb. 9.27.

These two then, sever them from the first GOD; the Eternall GOD, and the Soveraigne Iudge of all. And shew (the one, their judging) that their Glory is not equall; (the other, their falling) that their Majesty is not co-eternall, that so they may understand themselves aright.

1 Severally. The first Act.

And now to standing and judging, either of them a part by it selfe. Standing, first. The members of man, the eye, hand, and foot; and the acts of them, seeing, doing, standing, are not in GOD (to speake properly:) onely by them, is noted in GOD, the efficacie of those acts and members. By the eye, His knowledge: by the hand, His Power: by the foot, His Presence. The meaning then is first, that GOD is present. It is not enough for Him to looke downe from heaven, and behold us afarre off, but hee comes and stands heere. And not (as in the Canticles) Behind the wall, and lookes in by the gates: but it is even in the Assembly it selfe, even in the place where the Gods are.

The Metaphor of standing.

1 Gods presence.

Can. 9. 2.

Present? Why what great matter is that? Where is He not present? [a] Heaven and earth He fils, the earth is His footstoole, where then stands He not? Indeed GOD is present in all places; yet not in all alike. In some by a more speciall presence, than in othersome: And among all, and above all; there where the Gods are together.

Not as every where.

[a] Ier. 23. 24.

[b] Esay. 63. 1.

For though GOD be both in heaven and earth; yet we say (which art in heaven:) intending that there He is with a far more high and glorious presence. And so, here is He in a more eminent sort, For, no where on earth doth

But in a more speciall manner.

His glory ſhine, and ſhew forth it ſelfe, as in a well ordered Aſſembly.

Mat.18.20. And, if where Two or three common Chriſtians be together in His name, there is He in the middeſt of them; when three or foure hundred, and thoſe no common ordinary perſons, but of His owne name (Gods) even a whole Congregation of them, (Of His Name, and in His Name too;) are together, in moſt ſolemne manner aſſembled; and to doe His Worke: ſhall He not much more be there, and in a much more excellent manner of preſence to aſsiſt them? Yes ſure: it toucheth His providence in the higheſt degree.

2 Gods Attention. Preſent then: And ſecondly, the manner of His preſence: ſtanding. And that is a word of Site. Standing is a ſite, and it is ſite of Attention. When we ſit and heare ought, that we would liſten better to, up we ſtand and leave ſitting: So doe we (without the occaſion) uſually; Even to ſtirre up our ſelves: For, ſitting we may fall on ſleepe. This, to ſhew we ſhall not need to ſay to Him here, as in another Pſalme, they doe, Vp Lord why ſleepeſt thou? For He ſtands, and they never ſleepe. The truth is: to be preſent, as good be abſent, if we doe not intend. This then Pſal.44.23. ſheweth GOD is ſo preſent, as He is alſo attentive: nothing paſſes but Deo aſtante & atteſtante; but He is an eare, nay an eye-witneſſe, nay more than that, a heart-witneſſe of all.

3 Gods perſeverance. Stands then: and thirdly, the manner of His ſtanding. Which is (as is obſerved) נצב; and that is not the ordinary word for ſtanding, when one flitts; ſo ſtands, as he will remove: no, but as one fixed, not to ſtart: It is Statio militaris this, that pitch about their ſtandard, not to remove thence, but ſtill to maintaine and keep their ſtanding. So He, where you leave Him, you ſhall be ſure to find Him. He make it His reſt, meanes to ſtand it out to the very laſt.

These three [1] Preſence, [2] Attendance, [3] Perſeverance, be in this ſtanding of His. Preſent, for he ſtands; and ſtanding marks: marks, and will marke from the beginning to the end. So we, not to conceive of Him, [1] as if he were away, [2] or here ſtood and noted not, [3] or did for a time, but would leave off and give over, and not ſtand it out. This, for ſtanding.

IV.

2 The latter Act. Gods judging. He not only ſtands. The Act. But will judge alſo.

And, ſo long as it is but Standing and no more, it is no great matter; So he ſuffer them to go on quietly and trouble them not. And indeed ſo long as GOD doth no more, he may be ſaid to ſtand, and but even to ſtand. But (ſaith the Text) when He hath done ſtanding, He hath not done. Stay a while, you ſhall ſee, He ſo ſtands as he will judge alſo before He have done.

The Congregation will not alwaies ſit; nor GOD alwaies ſtand. But that is over and paſt, the Prophet here begins to ſet him up a State, to erect Him a Throne to ſit downe and iudge in. And then (lo) the courſes will change. We ſit now, and he ſtands: he will ſit then, and we all ſhall ſtand. All; Omnes ſtabimus ante Tribunal, Before his Iudgement ſeat. His firſt act (ſtanding) then to take an end; and his latter act (iudicabit) to have his turne too.

2 Cor.5.10.

But

But by this we ſee (as before I told you) while He ſtood; He ſtood attentive: He ſtood not like an idol: was all the while no idle ſtander by, or looker on, but as the Writing was on the Wall, Mene, Mene, He told and numbred; and Tekel, Stetit cum ſtatera, Hee weighed and pondred well, every Motion that was made, every Bill that was read, every Conſent or otherwiſe paſſed upon it. And weighed withall, whence every of them proceeded, whether from a dutifull regard of him and his Preſence; or otherwiſe, for ſome by-reſpect of our owne. Stetit ut teſtis; as a Witneſſe, he ſtood: Sedet ut Iudex; Now ſits as a Iudge, and will give His doome accordingly. And upon whom will He give it? Not upon the meaner ſort, upon inferior perſons, but even upon the greateſt: Vpon Deos, the Gods themſelves. For even to them, doth this his iudgment extend. They that ſit and iudge others, ſhall then ſtand and be iudged themſelves. They be Gods; but he is Deus Deorum, Pſal. 50. 1. They are Iudges; but He Iudex Iudicum: Iudex iudicum and iudiciorum both; Iudge of iudges and of Courts; and even of this high Court and all. Men may not, GOD may and will convent even the Conventions themſelves, if they forget themſelves: Yea even the rather, for that they are Gods, ſhall he judge them. And namely, how they uſed themſelves in their Deitie, when they ſate in his place, and went under his Name.

So while he ſtood, he ſtood attentive. Dan. 5.

The Perſons. He will iudge the Gods, Deos.

And not for any fault they ever have made; as for thoſe they have made here, in Synagoga. Above all, for them: for not regarding his Preſence and ſtanding here.

And becauſe there is here a double mention of Deorum, and Deos; Deorum in Synagoga, and Deos in iudicio: It will not be amiſſe to ſet them before us both at once. Now when they ſit in Synagoga, how glorious! But when in iudicio, they ſhall ſtand to be iudged, how poore then! When GOD but ſtands and lookes on, how ſecure! when he ſhall ſit down to his Sentence, how full of feare then! Specially, when he ſhall take, and they ſhall give accompt of abuſing His Preſence here. For a ſpeciall iudicabit belongs to that, and remaines for them that ſo doe. They that deſpiſe GODS long ſuffering, when he ſtands here, ſhall find and ſuffer his ſeverity, and ſuffer it long, when he ſits to iudge there.

The difference of the Perſons; Deorum in Synagoga, and Deos iudicabit.

But I cannot ſay, this will be preſently, or out of hand. It may be, it will be deferred yet, for a while: it is not Iudicat in the preſent; but iudicabit in the Future, he will iudge; Cum accepero tempus (as he ſaith Pſal. 75. 3.) he will take a time for it.

The time. The iudgement will not be preſent. It is iudicabit the Future.

But take a time he will, and iudge he will. Even the heathen, that have written de ſera Numinis vindicta, are cleere for this point; That you may well accompt of it, he that ſtands, will ſit, and ſitting, iudge: Iudge, and never a God of them all ſhall eſcape him.

The place. He will iudge in medio. 1 Of Themſelves.

And in medio he will doe it; in the midſt, it ſhall bee. The midſt, either Inwardly of the Gods owne ſelves, even of their owne hearts (בקרב will beare it, and ſo it is taken, Ierem. 31. 33.) There in the middeſt, in their their heart : their Conſcience accuſing them, and a worme their gnawing when they ſhall ſee the evill, that doth follow of their carrying matters unduely; ſee any foundation ſhaken by it.

2 Of the world.

Or, in the middeſt (that is) openly: as, openly He hath ever made it appeare, that evill counſell, firſt or laſt, ſhall prove worſt for them that gave it.

3 Of them that regard, and them that regard not.

Or, in medio, referring it to the Parties: that is, in the middeſt betweene them both. Thoſe that regard: and thoſe other, that never looked after, nor cared for Him nor His ſtanding.

The future judicabit, & in medio, are two favours to us.

And it is well for us, it is Iudicabit: for ſo wee have a time to bethinke us of it, and to prevent it. And againe it is well for us, that it is In medio: For ſo, we may yet chooſe our ſide, which ſide we will fall on: for indeed, Iudicare is Actus in medio; it may be for, and it may be againſt. It is not neceſſary it ſhould be againſt: GOD forbid: we may not prejudice it then.

All is, as wee carry our ſelves here. For, as wee here, ſo Hee there. They that ſaw Him ſtanding and demeaned themſelves accordingly; a judicabit for them. Thoſe other, that ranne on their owne courſes (His ſtanding there, notwithſtanding) a hard judgement will they have, they that be loth to endure it. And this for GOD, His ſtanding, and His judging.

V

Our owne duty to the Text.

And now to our ſelves, and to our duty to GOD, thus ſtanding and judging.

To regard Gods ſtandings.

To avoid GODS judgement (the Apoſtle tell us) there is but one way: To judge our ſelves.* And here now in this, not upon many, but upon this one Point only of GODS ſtanding (for, I will bee bold to cut off the other, His judging:) Regard His ſtanding, and you ſhall never need to feare His judging.

*1 Cor. 11. 31.

Foure things to be done.

To regard that; doe but theſe foure: 1 Set downe this and beleeve it, that He is preſent. 2 So behave your ſelves, as if you did ſo beleeve. 3 To doe that, ſhew your ſelves well affected to His ſtanding. 4 To ſhew that, Procure but thoſe meanes, that He may take pleaſure in His ſtanding. Theſe foure.

1 To beleeve God is preſent.

Iob. 9. 11.

Ioh. 1. 26.

Heb. 11. 26.

Firſt, never imagine this, that GOD is farre enough off, or hath otherwiſe to buſy Himſelfe, than to have a hand or foot in theſe Aſſemblies. But (with Iob) beleeve, He is hard by us, though wee perceive Him not: Or (as the Baptiſt ſaid of CHRIST) Medius veſtrûm ſtetit, quem vos neſcitis; He ſtandeth in the middeſt of us, though we know not ſo much. To ſee Him ſo ſtanding, with the eyes of faith, with which (the Apoſtle ſaith) Moſes ſaw Him that was inviſible.

2 To behave our ſelves as if preſent.

Then will it follow of it ſelfe, To doe all we do, Tanquam DEO ſtante & inſpectante, As if GOD ſtood and beheld us. This we behove to thinke: When He comes thus to ſtand among us, He will ſay as much for Himſelfe, as he did for his Sonne in the Goſpell, Certè reverebuntur Me, Surely they will yet reverence Me; my ſtanding, my being there, will make them the more carefull: If I come and ſtand among them, all will go the better, if it be but becauſe I am there. Not any thing at all ſhall (I truſt;) but if ought ſhould be moved againſt His good liking, ſhall not our owne hearts ſmite us, and tell us ſtraight, What? GOD ſtanding, and looking on, ſhall we offer this? What give Him an affront in His owne preſence, to His owne face? Nonne iudicabit ſuper hoc? what, will He never iudge for this geare? And when He doth, ſhall it goe for nought? Thus, to behave our ſelves as in His preſence. Mat. 21. 37.

as

But yet (I know not how) this is not it; To doe it for feare of Him, or of His iudicabit: but to doe it willingly, that is it. For, as if ſome were not willing to allow Him a place, not ſo much as to ſtand in, with a kind of Ironie (ſome thinke) he ſaith: Well yet howſoever, GOD ſtands in the Congregation, though againſt ſomebodies will, that would be content (if they durſt) to ſay with them in Eſay, 30. 11. Cauſe the HOLY-ONE of Iſrael to ceaſe from us, Get Him away; Or with them in the Goſpell (the Gergeſites) not onely give CHRIST good leave, but even to pray Him faire to be gone, and take His eaſe ſome where elſe, their matters would ſpeed better, if He were out of the way. 5 To ſtand well affected to Gods ſtanding. Mat. 8. 34.

Never ſpeake of that: there He ſtands, and there He will ſtand; He ought not, will not, cannot be excluded. To endure Him, that is not it: The point is, how we ſtand affected to His ſtanding: Whether we be willing with it: whether it be the deſire of our hearts, that He ſhould, and the joy, that He doth ſtand, and will ſtand there.

Put caſe He ſtood not: would we earneſtly intreat Him to vouchſafe us His preſence, to take up His ſtanding among us? If He made as if hee would be gone (as Luc. 24. 29.) would we be inſtant with Mane nobiſcum Domine, Stay with us ſtill good Lord? MOSES ſaid, If Thou goe not with us, carry us not hence; would we ſay, If thou Lord ſtay not with us, what doe we here? GOD bee gone, migremus hinc, let us be gone too; And never hope for good of that Aſſembly where He is not. Exo. 33. 15.

Now fourthly, if we be willing and glad, if we take comfort in His ſtanding, hereby ſhall wee be tried; if we uſe all meanes, as will procure Him to ſtay in our Aſſembly the more willingly; as will make His ſtanding pleaſant and not grow tedious to him. And ſuch things there are: And theſe they are. 4 To procure the meanes that God may bee willing to ſtand.

Thoſe be foure.

One ſpeciall thing that gives Him content, is a Place where there is Concord and Vnitie. a At Salem (that is) where peace is, In pace factus eſt locus Ejus (So read the Fathers) there is his Tabernacle: And that Tabernacle is the Tabernacle of the Congregation: His feet, and our feet, and both ſtand willingly in the Gates there. (The reaſon:) b For, it is at unitie within it ſelfe. There loves He to ſtand. And there, his Spirit, where c they were all, with one accord, in one place. d Qui facit unanimes habitare in domo, if He 1 To be of one minde.

Psal.133.2. make all of one minde that are in the house, if brethren to dwell together in unitie, O how good, ô how pleasing is that standing to Him! It passes Aarons perfume, His ointment is nothing to the delight of it.

And in very deed, if we consider it well, it is the vertue (this of Concord) that is most proper, nay essentiall (then) to a Congregation: without it, a gregation it may be, but no Congregation. The Con is gone: a disgregation rather. Enough to make him to be gone (that.) For, if there [a] spring up a root of bitternesse: if the evill spirit get in, that was sent upon Abimelech and the men of Sichem: [c] If the divisions of Reuben doe make great thoughts of heart: there, GOD stands upon thornes. But where [d] the hearts of all the Congregation are bowed as the heart of one man, there stands GOD, and there he delights to stand.

a Heb.12.15. b Iud.9.23. c Iud.5.15.16. d 2 Sam.19.14.

To use no cunning but plain dealing Psal.51.6. Another: he takes pleasure to stand among them, that are good and true of heart. Where he finds truth in the inward parts: Where, without art or artificiall glosing or cunning carrying of things under-hand, men goe plainly to worke, every one in the sincerity and singlenesse of an honest upright meaning. And the more plainnesse, ever the more pleasure God takes, there to stand. Truth, as it is the mightiest, so is it the wisest thing, when all is done. They that love it not, but to cover, and colour, and carry all by cunning, they shall never stand in Gods Tabernacle. Neither they in his, nor he in theirs. Psal.15 1.

To looke to Idipsum. One more. There is a word, and it is a great word in this Booke τὸ αὐτό In idipsum; that is, to looke to the thing it selfe, the very point, the principall matter of all; to have our eye on that, and not of it, upon alia omnia, any thing but it.

Neither to by matters. Nor to personall respects. So say I (againe) upon the thing it selfe, not upon some persons or personall respects: God accepts no person, nor loves them that doe. The very first thing, that in the very next Verse, he finds fault with, and charges them with, is this: when men are for, or against a thing (be it what it will be) and neither, for it selfe, but onely, because it proceeds from such or such persons: Neither of these is in medio. Idipsum, that is the Centre, that the middle: That place is GODS place To goe to the point, drive all to that; as also to goe to the matter reall, without declining from it, this way or that, to the right hand or to the left for any personall regard.

To doe that we do, cheerfully. And last of all, that which pleaseth him best of all: And that is, where he finds a ready well-willing mind, his heart is upon such. And where his heart is, ever his feet stand at ease: Cal cat rosas, he treads upon roses there. In the Song of Debora it is thought, there is set downe a patterne of the Vertues or Faults of an Assembly. In that Song, there are two Halleluja's, two Benedicite's for it. First, at the very beginning, Halleluja, Praise the Lord: Why? for the people that came off, and offered themselves so willingly. Iud.5.2. And againe seven verses after, My heart is upon the Governors, that offered (themselves) and made the people to offer so willingly, Halleluja, Praise the Lord. Ver 9. Halleluja, for the Princes; Halleluja for the people; Blessed be GOD, for both Iud.5.9.

Then

Then have you againe after thoſe, two verſes together : in the one, Meroz curſed for their backwardneſſe; And Iael, for her forwardneſſe, bleſſed and bleſſed againe. For, this inded is the marrow of the Sacrifice, the fat of the offering: and without this, all is poore and leane. Iudg.5.23. 24.

This is ſure: GOD, loves not to dwell in Meſech : that is interpreted, prolongatus eſt. And His Sonne calling on, Serve nequam & piger, ſhewes, He loves piger as evill, as He does nequam. And His Spirit cannot skill of theſe ſame tarda molimina. In a word, none of them to be wearied, with ſtanding I know not how long. b And redily *Pſa.120.5. Mat.25.21.

And ſee the very next word of all, the next that followes theſe immediatly, is How long! So he begins his complaint, the firſt word of the next Verſe: which ſhewes, he loves it not.

Not, that he can be weary. It is an Infirmity (that) and ſo is griefe, and ſo is repentance; and they cannot fall into GOD : They are attributed to him though. And GOD is ſayd as to [a] repent, and [b] to be grieved, ſo to be ſtarcke [c] weary. In no other ſenſe, but this : That if he be not weary, no thankes to us : For, if it were poſsible, if the divine Nature were or could be ſubject to it, if GOD could be weary, if his feet were not of braſſe (Apoc. 1.5.) we would put him to it : we do even what in us lieth to tire him outright, to make him crie uſque quo, how long! a Gen.6.6. b Eph.4.30. c Ier.6.11.

But, 1 where there is accord without Reubens diviſions; 2 where plaine meaning, and dealing, without (as Eſay calls them) theſe ſame deepe digged devices; 3 where the eye is upon idipſum, and no ipſum elſe; 4 where GOD is not conſtrained to dwell in Meſech, but the People and their Governours offer willingly; there ſtands GOD, and there will he ever ſtand. Of that place he ſaith; Hæc eſt requies mea, This is my reſt, here will I ſtay, for I have a delight therein. Eſay.29.15. Pſa.132.14.

Thus doing then, thus procuring, our Aſſembly thus qualified, we performe our duty to GOD, and to his ſtanding. And this done, we ſhall never need to feare iudicabit: come when it will.

And now to conclude. Mine unfained hearty prayer to GOD is and dayly ſhall be, that if ever in any, he would ſtand in this Congregation. And if ever any uſed the meanes ſo to procure him, we may uſe them: The rather, that Eccleſia malignantium, the malignant Synagogue may not aske with deriſion, Where was then their GOD? Where ſtood he? Behind the wall (ſure) not in the Aſſembly : Such, proceedings, and his ſtanding will never ſtand together. To have regard what will be ſaid abroad. Pſal.26.5.

But rather, that all may ſay, Verily GOD was among them, Of a truth GOD ſtood in that Congregation; where, with ſo good accord, ſo good things, ſo readily were paſſed. CHRIST was in the midſt of them, his holy Spirit reſted on them. 1 Cor.2.14.

Yet I know, what men ſay off or on, is not it; what GOD ſaith, that is all in all. To men we doe not; To GOD, we ſtand or fall, whoſe iudicabit we cannot ſcape, either the one way or the other : but have a iudica- bit for us, that we may, if we yeeld his ſtanding all due reſpect, Even Euge ſerve bone, intra in gaudium Domini, which in the end will be worth all.

But if any ſhall ſay; O the time is long to that (peradventure not ſo long though, as we reckon:) well yet in the meane time, now for the preſent, it ſtands us in hand to uſe him well, and our ſelves well to him. For if hee ſtand not to us, we ſhall not ſubſiſt, we ſhall not ſtand, but fall before our enemies. This time is now; this danger is at hand.

To have regard of our preſent uſe of Him againſt our enemies.

Uſe him well then: Stand before Him thus ſtanding, with all due reverence and regard: that as by His preſence, he doth ſtand among us; ſo hee may not onely doe that, but by His Mercy alſo ſtand by us, and by His Power ſtand for us. So ſhall we ſtand and with-ſtand all the adverſe forces: and at laſt (for thither at laſt we muſt all come) ſtand in His judgment, Stand there upright: To our comfort (for the preſent) of His ſtanding by us; and to our endleſſe comfort (for the time to come) of His judging for us.

A SER-

A SERMON PREACHED AT CHESWICKE IN THE time of Peſtilence, AUGUST XXI, An. Dom. MDCIII.

PSAL. CVI. Ver. XXIX, XXX.

Thus they provoked Him to anger with their owne inventions, and the Plague was great (or brake in*) among them.*
Then ſtood up Phinees, and prayed (or, executed judgment*) and ſo the Plague was ceaſed (or,* ſtayed.)

HERE is mention of a Plague: of a great Plague; For, there died of it foure and twenty thouſand. And we complain of a Plague at this time. The ſame axe is layd to the root of our trees. Or rather, becauſe an axe is long in cutting downe of one tree, the Raſor is hired for us, that ſweeps away a great number of haires at once (as Eſay calleth it) or a Scithe that mowes downe graſſe, a great deale at once. Num. 35.9. Eſay. 7.20.

But here is not onely mention of the Breaking in of the Plague; in the XXIX. Verſe; but of the ſtaying or ceaſing of the Plague, in the XXX.

Now, whatſoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; and ſo was this Text. Vnder one, to teach us how the Plague comes, and how it may be ſtayed. Rom. 5.4.

The

The Diviſion. The Plague is a diſeaſe. In every diſeaſe, we conſider the Cauſe, and the Cure. Both which are here ſet forth unto us in theſe two verſes. In the former, the Cauſe how it comes. In the latter, the Cure how it may be ſtaid. To know the Cauſe is expedient; for if we know it not, our Cure will be but palliative, as not going to the right. And if knowing the Cauſe, wee adde not the Cure, when we are taught it, who will pity us? For, none is then to blame, but our ſelves.

I Of the Cauſe firſt: and then of the Cure. The cauſe is ſet downe to be twofold: 1 GOD'S anger, and 2 their inventions.

GOD'S anger, by the which: and their inventions, for the which, the Plague brake in among them.

II. The Cure is likewiſe ſet downe: and it is twofold, out of two ſignifications of one word, the word (Palal) in the Verſe. Phinees prayed (ſome read it:) Phinees executed judgement (ſome other;) and the word beares both. Two then, 1 Phinees Prayer, one: 2 Phinees executing iudgement, the other; by both which the Plague ceaſed. His Prayer referring to GOD'S anger: His executing iudgement, to their inventions. GODS wrath was appeaſed by his prayer: Prayer referres to that. Their inventions were removed by his executing of iudgement: The execution of iudgment referres to that. If his anger provoked doe ſend the Plague; His anger appeaſed will ſtay it. If our inventions provoke his anger, the puniſhing of our inventions will appeaſe it. The one worketh upon GOD, pacifieth Him: The other worketh upon our ſoule; and cures it. For there is a cure of the ſoule, no leſſe than of the body, as appeareth by the Pſalme, Heale my ſoule, for I have ſinned againſt thee.

Pſal. 99. 8.

Pſa. 41. 4.

We are to beginne with the Cauſe of the plague, in the firſt Verſe: And ſo to come to the Cure, in the ſecond.

I. Of the Cauſe

OF the Cauſe. 1 Firſt, there is a Cauſe. 2 And ſecondly, What that Cauſe may be.

A Cauſe there is.

1 That there is a cauſe (that is) that the plague is a thing cauſall, not caſuall; comes not meerly by chance, but hath ſomewhat, ſome cauſe that procureth it.

Sure, if a Sparrow fall not to the ground without the providence of GOD, of which two are ſold for a farthing; much leſſe doth any man, or woman, which are more worth than many ſparrowes.

Mat. 10. 29.

And if any one man comes not to his End (as we call it) by caſualty, but it is GOD, that delivers him ſo to die: How much more then, when

Exod. 21. 13.

not

not one, but many thouſands are ſwept away at once? The Philiſtines, in their plague, put the matter upon triall of both theſe waies: 1 Whether it were GODS hand, 2 Or whether it were but a chance. And the event ſhewed, it was no caſualty, but the very handy-worke of GOD upon them.

And indeed, the very name of the Plague doth tell us as much. For Deber in hebrew ſheweth, there is a reaſon, there is a cauſe, why it commeth. And the engliſh word Plague, comming from the Latine word Plaga, which is properly a ſtroke, neceſſarily inferreth a Cauſe. For where there is a ſtroke, there muſt be One that ſtriketh. And in that both it, and other evill things (that come upon us) are uſually in Scripture called Gods judgements; If they be judgements, it followeth, there is a Iudge they come from. They come not by adventure; by chance they come not. Chance and Iudgement are utterly oppoſite. Not Caſually then, but Iudicially. Iudged we are; For when we are chaſtened, we are judged of the Lord.

1 Sam. 6. 9.

1 Cor. 11. 32.

There is a Cauſe: Now, what that Cauſe is, Concerning which, if you aſk the Phyſitian, he will ſay, the cauſe is in the aire. The Aire is infected; the Humors corrupted: the Contagion of the ſicke, comming to and converſing with the ſound. And they be all true cauſes.

1 That Cauſes. 1 Naturall.

The Aire. For ſo we ſee, by caſting * aſhes of the furnace towards heaven in the aire, the aire became infected, and the plague of botches, and blaines, was ſo brought forth in Egypt.

1 The aire infected.

*Exod. 9. 8.

The Humors. For to that doth King David aſcribe the Cauſe of his diſeaſe: (that is) that his moiſture in him was corrupt, dried up, turned into the drought of Summer.

2 The Humors corrupted.

Contagion. Which is cleare by the Law: where, the leprous perſon for feare of contagion from him, was ordered to cry, that no body ſhould come neere him: To dwell apart from other men: The clothing he had worne to be waſhed, & in ſome caſe to be burnt: The houſe-walls he had dwelt in, to be ſcraped; and in ſome caſe, the houſe it ſelfe to be pulled downe.

Pſal. 32. 4.
3 Contagion.
Levi. 13. 45. 46. 52.

In all which three reſpects, Salomon ſaith, A wiſe man feareth the Plague and departeth from it, and fooles runne on and be careleſſe. A wiſe man doth it, and a good man too. For King David himſelfe durſt not goe to the Altar of GOD at Gibeon, to enquire of GOD there, becauſe the Angell that ſmote the people with the plague, ſtood betweene him and it: (that is) becauſe he was to paſſe through infected places thither.

Pro. 14 16.

1 Chro. 21. 30.

But as we acknowledge theſe to be true, that in all diſeaſes, and even in this alſo, there is a Naturall cauſe: ſo we ſay, there is ſomewhat more, ſomething Divine, and above nature. As ſome what, which the Phyſitian is to looke unto, in the Plague: ſo likewiſe ſomething for Phinees to do, and Phinees was a Prieſt. And ſo ſome worke for the Prieſt, as well as for the Phyſitian, and more, then (it may be.)

2 Supernaturall. By which. GOD.

It was King Aſa's fault. He in his ſickneſſe, looked all to Phyſitians, and looked not after GOD at all. That, is noted as his fault. It ſeemes his fault. It ſeemes, his conceit was, there was nothing in a diſeaſe, but naturall, nothing but bodily: which is not ſo. For, infirmity, is not onely a thing bodily; there is a Spirit of infirmity, we finde, Luk. 13. 11. And ſomething ſpirituall there is, in all infirmities; ſomething in the ſoule to bee healed. In all, but ſpecially in this: wherein that wee might know it to bee ſpirituall, we finde it oft times to be executed by ſpirits.

Exo. 12. 13. We ſee an Angell, a deſtroying Angell, in the Plague of Egypt: another in the Rev. 16. 2. upon man and beaſt. So that no man looketh deeply enough into the Cauſe of this ſickneſſe, unleſſe he acknowledg the Finger of God in it, over and above any cauſes naturall.

God then hath his part. GOD; But how affected? God provoked to anger: ſo it is in the Text: His anger, His wrath it is, that bringeth the plague among us. The Verſe is plaine; They provoked Him to anger, and the plague brake in among them.

God provoked to anger.

Generally, there is no evill (ſaith Iob) but it is a ſparke of Gods wrath.
Iob 5. 6. And of all evills, the plague by Name. There is wrath gone out from the
1 Chro. 21 LORD, and the plague is begun (ſaith Moſes, Numbers 16. 46.) So it
7. is ſaid GOD was diſpleaſed with David, and he ſmote Iſrael with the plague. So that if there be a plague. GOD is angry: and if there be a great plague, God is very angry. Thus much for By what; for the anger of God, by which the plague is ſent. Now for what.

For Which. Sin in generall. There is a cauſe in God, that he is angry. And there is a Cauſe, for which he is angry. For he is not angry without a Cauſe. And what is that cauſe? For what is God angry? What, is God angry with the waters
Hab. 3. 8. when He ſends a tempeſt? (it is Habacuk's queſtion.) Or is God angry with
Eph. 5. 6. the earth, when He ſends barrenneſſe? Or with the aire, when he makes it contagious? No indeed, His anger is not againſt the Elements, they provoke him not. Againſt them it is, that provoke Him to anger? Againſt men it is, and againſt their ſinnes, and for them commeth the wrath of God upon the children of diſobedience.

And this is the very Cauſe indeed. As there is Putredo humorum; ſo there is alſo putredo morum. And putredo morum, is more a Cauſe, than putredo humorum. The Corruption of the ſoule, the [a] corruption of our waies, more than the [b] corrupting of the aire. The [c] Plague of the Heart, more than the ſore, that is ſeene in the body. [d] The cauſe of death, (that is) ſinne, the ſame is the cauſe, of this [e] kind of death, of the Plague of mortality. And as the [f] Balme of Gilead, and the [g] Phyſitian there, may yeeld us helpe, when Gods wrath is removed: ſo, if it be not, no balme, no medicine will ſerve. Let us with the Woman in the Goſpell, [h] ſpend upon all Phyſitians, we ſhall be never the better, till we come to CHRIST, and he cure us of our ſins, who is the onely Phyſitian of the diſeaſes of the ſoule.

firſt, and his limbes after. As likewiſe when wee are once well, Chriſts counſell is, ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto thee. As if ſin would certainly bring a relapſe in a ſickneſſe.

But ſhall we ſay, the wrath of GOD for ſins indefinitely? That were ſomewhat too generall: may we not ſpecifie them, or ſet them downe in particular? Yes, I will point you at three or foure. Particular ſin.

Firſt, this Plague here, as appeareth by the XXVIII. Verſe, the Verſe next before, came for the ſin of Peor (that is) for fornication (as you may read.) And not every fornication, but fornication paſt ſhame; as was that of Zamri there, with a daughter of Moab. And indeed if we marke it well, it fits well. For, that kind of ſin (fornication) doth end in Vlcers and ſores; and thoſe as infectious as the Plague it ſelfe: a proper puniſhment; ſuch ſore for ſuch evill. 1 Fornication. Num. 25. 1.

Secondly, Davids plague of ſeventy thouſand (which we mention in our Prayer) that, came for Pride, plainly: His heart was lifted up to number the people. And that ſeemes ſomewhat kindly too, and to agree with this diſeaſe. That pride which ſwels it ſelfe, ſhould end in a tumor, or ſwelling; as for the moſt part this diſeaſe doth. 2 Pride. 1 Chr. 21. 14

Thirdly, Zenacheribs plague (it is plaine) came from Rabſhakes blaſphemie: Blaſphemy able to infect the aire, it was ſo foule. In which regard, Aarons act might be juſtified, in putting odours into his Cenſer, to purifie the Aire from ſuch corruption. 3 Blaſphemy Eſay 37. 36. Num. 16. 46

And laſt, the Apoſtle ſets downe the Cauſe of the plague at Corinth: For this cauſe (ſaith he) that is, for neglect of the Sacrament: Either in not caring to come to it; or in comming to it, we care not how: For this cauſe, is there a mortality among you; and many are ſicke, and many are weake, and many are fallen a ſleepe. And this is no new thing. Moſes Himſelfe, his neglect of the Sacrament, made him bee ſtricken of God, that it was like to have coſt him his life. And hee ſaith plainly to Pharaoh: If they neglected their ſacrifice, GOD would fall upon them with the Peſtilence: which appeareth by this, that the Sacrament of the Paſſeover, and the bloud of it, was the meanes to ſave them from the Plague of the deſtroying ANGELL in Ægypt. 4 Neglect of the Sacrament. 1 Cor. 11. 30 Exod. 4. 24. Exod. 5. 3.

A little now of the phraſe; that their ſins are here called by the name of their inventions. And ſo (ſure) they are: as no wayes taught us by God, but of our own imagining or finding out. For indeed, our inventions are the cauſe of all ſins. And if we look well into it we ſhal find our inventions are ſo. By Gods injunction we ſhould all live, and His injunction is: You ſhall not doe every man what ſeemes good in his owne eyes (or finds out in his own braines) but, whatſoever I command you, that only ſhall you doe. But we, ſetting light by that charge of his, out of the old diſeaſe of our Father Adam (Eritis ſicut Dii, ſcientes bonum & malum) thinke it a goodly matter to be witty, and to finde out things our ſelves to make to our ſelves, to bee Authors, and inven- The phraſe for ſin, Their inventions. In matters of Religion, Deut. 12. 8.

tors of ſomewhat, that ſo we may ſeeme to be as wiſe as God, if not wiſer: and to know what is for our turnes, as well as he, if not better. It was Sauls fault. God bade deſtroy Amaleck all; and he, would invent a better way to ſave ſome (forſooth) for ſacrifice, which God could not thinke of.

Mat. 16.22. And it was S. Peters fault, when hee perſwaded Chriſt from His Paſsion, and found out a better way (as he thought) than Chriſt could deviſe.

This is the proud invention, which will not be kept in, but makes men even not to forbeare in things pertaining to Gods Worſhip, but there, to be ſtill deviſing new tricks, opinions and faſhions, freſh and newly taken

Deut. 32.17. up, which their Fathers never knew of. And this is that, which makes men

2 Tim. 4.3. that have itching eares, to heape to themſelves Teachers, according to their owne luſts, which may fill their heads full, with new inventions.

In the common life. And this is that, that even out of Religion, in the common life, ſpoiles all. The wanton invention, in finding out new meats in diet, in inventing new faſhions in apparell, which men ſo dote on (as the Pſalme ſaith at the 39. Verſe) as they even goe a whoring with them, with their owne inventions, and care not what they ſpend on them. And know no end of them: but as faſt as they are weary of one, a new invention is found out, which whatſoever it coſt, how much ſoever it take from our Almes, or good deeds, muſt be had, till all come to nought. That the Pſalmiſt hath choſen a very fit word, that for our inventions, the plague breakes in among us: for them, as for the primary, or firſt moving cauſe of all. Indeed for them, as much, and more than for any thing elſe.

We ſee then, 1 Firſt, that a Cauſe there is. 2 That that cauſe is not only naturall, but that God Himſelfe hath a hand in it. 3 God as being provoked to anger. 4 To anger for our ſinnes in generall (and for what ſins in ſpeciall) For our ſins proceeding from nothing, but our inventions. Which cauſe if it continue, and yet we turne not to the Lord (as Amos the fourth,) then will not his anger be turned away, but His hand will be ſtretched out ſtill (as Eſay the ninth.) And no way to avoyd the one, but by appeaſing the other.

II. Of the Cure. For the cure now One contrary is ever cured by another. If then it bee anger; which is the cauſe in God, anger would be appeaſed. If it be Inventions, which is the cauſe in us, of the anger of God, they would be puniſhed and removed. That ſo, the Cauſe being taken away, the effect may ceaſe. Take away our inventions, Gods anger will ceaſe. Take away Gods anger, the plague will ceaſe.

Two Readings (we ſaid) there were: 1 Phinees prayed, or 2 Phinees executed judgment. Palal, the Hebrew word will beare both. And both are good: And ſo we will take them both in.

Againſt Gods anger. 1 Prayer. Prayer is good againſt the Plague, as appeareth: Not onely in this plague in the text, wherein all the Congregation [a] were weeping, and praying before the doore of the Tabernacle: But in King [b] Davids Plague alſo; where we ſee, what his prayer was, and the very words of it.

[a] Num. 25.6. [b] 2 Sam. 24. 17.

And

And in [c] Ezechias's plague, who turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto GOD (and his prayer is ſet downe:) GOD heard his prayer, and healed him. And (for a generall rule) [d] If there bee in the Land any peſtilent diſeaſe; Whatſoever plague, whatſoever ſickneſſe it bee, the prayer and ſupplication in the Temple made by the people, every man knowing the plague of his owne heart, God in Heaven will heare it, and remove his hand from afflicting them any further.

[c] Eſay 38 3.

[d] 1 Kings 8. 37, 38, 39.

And it ſtandeth with good reaſon. For, as the Aire is infected with noyſome ſents or ſmels, ſo the infection is removed by ſweet odours, or incenſe: which Aaron did in the Plague (put ſweet odours in his Cenſer, and went betweene the living and the dead.) Now there is a fit reſemblance betweene Incenſe and Prayers: [f] Let my Prayer come before thy preſence, as the Incenſe. And when the Prieſt was within, burning Incenſe, [g] the people were without at their prayers. And it is expreſly ſaid, [h] that the ſweet odors were nothing elſe, but the prayers of the Saints.

Num. 16. 48.

[f] Pſal. 141. 2.

[g] Luk. 1. 10.

[h] Rev. 5. 8.

Prayer is good, and that Phinees prayer. Phinees was a Prieſt, the ſon of Eleazar, the Nephew of Aaron. So as, there is Vertue, as in the prayer, ſo in the perſon that did pray: in Phinees himſelfe.

2 Phinees prayer, as a Prieſt.

As (wee know) the office of a Sergeant being to arreſt; the Office of a Notary to make acts; the act that is done by one of them, is much more authenticall, than that which is done by any common perſon. So every Prieſt being taken from among men, and ordained for men, in things pertaining to GOD, that he may offer prayers: the prayers hee offereth, hee offereth out of his office, and ſo even in that reſpect there is (cæteris paribus) a more force, and energie in them, as comming from him, whoſe calling it is to offer them; than in thoſe, that come from another, whoſe calling it is not ſo to doe.

Heb. 5. 1.

To this end, God ſaith to Abimelech: Abraham is a Prophet, and he ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live. So that the prayer of a Prophet, in that he is a Prophet, is more effectuall.

Gen. 20. 7.

And in the Law, you ſhall find it all along: when men come to bring their ſacrifice for their ſins, it is ſaid, the Prieſt ſhall make an attonement for them before the Lord, and their ſins ſhall be forgiven them.

And in the Prophets we ſee plainely, in time of diſtreſſe, Ezekia ſent unto the Prophet Eſay, to entreat him to lift up his prayer for the remnant that were left: and ſo he did, and was heard by God.

And in the New Teſtament, S. Iames advice is, In the time of ſickneſſe to call for the Prieſts, and they to pray over the party, and that Prayer ſhall work his health; and if he have committed ſins they ſhall be forgiven him. For, where the grace of prayer is, and the calling both, they cannot but availe more, than where no calling is, but the Grace alone.

The prayer of Phinees, and of Phinees ſtanding. What need there be any mention of Phinees ſtanding? Was it not enough to ſay Phinees prayed? It skils not whether he ſate or ſtood; for praying it ſelfe was enough.

No: we muſt not thinke, the Holy Ghoſt ſets downe any thing that is ſuperfluous. Somewhat there is, in that he ſtood. Of Moſes it is ſaid before Ier.18.20. in this Pſalme, that he ſtood in the gap to turne away the wrath of God. In Ieremie it is ſaid, though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me: So there is mention made of ſtanding alſo. And the Prophet himſelfe puts God in minde, that hee ſtood before Him, to ſpeake good for the people, and to turne away His wrath from them (that is) put God in minde of the very ſight of His body.

Ioh.4.24. For, though God be a Spirit, and ſo in Spirit to be worſhipped; yet in aſmuch as He hath given us a body, with that alſo are we to worſhip Him, and 1 Cor.6.20. Rom.12.1. to glorifie him in our body and ſpirit, which both are Gods: and to preſent (or offer) our bodies to God, as a holy and acceptable ſacrifice, in the reaſonable ſervice of Him.

1 Cor.14.40 And to preſent them decently. For that alſo is required in the ſervice of
1 Cor.11.13 God. Now judge in your ſelves, Is it comely to ſpeake unto our betters; ſitting? Sedentem orare, extra diſciplinam eſt (ſaith Tertullian) to pray ſitting or ſit praying, is againſt the order of the Church. The Church of God never had, nor hath any ſuch faſhion.

All tendeth to this, as Cyprians advice is, Etiam habitu corporis placere Deo, even by our very geſture, and the carriage of our body, to behave our ſelves ſo, as with it we may pleaſe God. Unreverent, careleſſe, undevout behaviour pleaſeth Him not.

It is noted of the very Angels, Iob 1. 6. Eſay 6.2. *Dan.*7.10. that they were ſtanding before God. If them it becomes; if Phinees, if Moſes, if Samuel, and Ieremy, it may well become us to learne our geſture of them.

Againſt their inventions. 1 Execution of judgment.

Prayer is available to appeaſe Gods wrath, and ſo conſequently to remove the Plague: but not prayer alone. For though it abate the anger of God (which is the firſt) yet it goeth not high enough, takes not away the ſecond cauſe (that is) our inventions, which are the cauſe of Gods anger. We ſee it plaine in Num. 25. 6. they were all at prayers, and Phinees among them, he Num.25.7,8 and the reſt. But yet the plague ceaſed not for all that: till (in the verſe following) Phinees tooke his javelin, wherewith in the very act of fornication, he thruſt them both through, Zamri and his Woman, and then the Plague was ſtayed from the children of Iſrael. For, as prayer referreth properly to anger: ſo doth executing judgement to ſin, or to our inventions the cauſe of it.

Prayer then doth well: but prayer and doing juſtice, both theſe together (joyntly) will doe it indeed. And if you disjoyne or ſeparate them, no-
Eſay 29.14. thing will be done. If we draw neere to God with our mouthes, and honour Him with our lips, it will not availe us, if judgment be turned back, or juſtice ſtand afarre off.

2 By Phinees as a Prince in his Tribe, and a Magiſtrate.

There are two perſons. Both of them were in Phinees. For, as hee was a Prieſt; ſo he was a Prince of his Tribe. So then, both theſe muſt joyne together, as well the devotion of the Prieſt in prayer, which is his Office: as the zeale of the Magiſtrate in executing judgement, which is His. For, Phinees the Prieſt, muſt not onely ſtand up, and pray: but Moſes the Magiſtrate Magiſtrate alſo) muſt ſtand in the gap, to turne away the wrath of God, that he deſtroy not the people. No leſſe he, than Aaron, with his golden Cenſer, to run into the midſts of the Congregation, to make atonement for them when the plague is begunne.

Moſes he gave in charge for the executing of them, that were joyned to Baal-Peor, Num.25.4. Phinees, he executed the charge: Moſes ſtood in the gap, when he gave the ſentence: Phinees ſtood up, when he did the execution. And theſe two are a bleſſed conjunction. One of them without the other, may miſſe; but both together never faile. For when Zamri was ſlaine; and ſo when Rabſhakeh periſhed; and ſo when the inceſtuous Corinthian was excommunicated; in all three, the plague ceaſed.

But what if Moſes give no charge: what if Phinees doe no execution, as oft it falleth out? How then? In that caſe, every private man is to be Phinees to himſelfe, is not only to pray to God, but to be wreaked, do judgement, chaſten his own body; and ſo judge himſelfe that he may not be judged of the Lord. For every one, for his part, is a cauſe of the judgments of Gods ſent down; & ſo may be, & is to be, a cauſe of the removing them. Somewhile the King, as David by the pride of his heart. Otherwhile the people, by their murmuring againſt Moſes, & Aaron. So that, King & people, both, muſt judg themſelves; every private offender, himſelfe. Zamri if he had judged himſelfe, Phinees ſhould not have judged him. The inceſtuous Corinthian, if he had judged himſelfe, S. Paul had not judged him. For, either by our ſelves, or by the Magiſtrate; or if by neither of both, by GOD Himſelfe. For, one way or other ſin muſt by judged. Zamri, by his repentance; Phinees, by his Prayer or doing juſtice; or GOD, by the plague ſent among them.

3 By every man upon himſelfe.

2 Cor.2.11.
1 Cor.9.27.
1 Cor.11.3.

1 Chro. 21. 1.8.
Num. 16.3

Now then, theſe two [1] Phinees ſtood up and prayed, [2] and Phinees ſtood up and executed judgment, if they might be coupled together I durſt undertake, the concluſion would be, and the plague ceaſed. But either of them wanting I dare promiſe nothing.

To conclude then. 1. The plague comes not by chance, but hath a Cauſe. 2. That Cauſe is not altogether naturall, and pertaines to Phyſicke; but hath ſomething ſupernaturall in it, and pertaines to Divinity. 3. That Supernaturall Cauſe is the Wrath of God. 4. Which yet is not the firſt cauſe. For, the Wrath of God, would not riſe, but that he is provoked by our ſins (and the certain ſins, that provoke it, have been ſet down.) 5 And the cauſe of thē, our owne inventions. So, our inventions beget ſinne; ſinne provokes the Wrath of God: the Wrath of God ſends the Plague among us. To ſtay the plague, Gods Wrath muſt be ſtayed: to ſtay it, there muſt be a ceaſing from ſinne: That ſinne may ceaſe, we muſt be out of love with our own inventions and not goe a whoring after them. Prayer, that aſſwageth anger: To execute juſtice, that abateth ſinne: To execute juſtice, either publikely, as doth the Magiſtrate; or privately, as every man doth, or may doe upon himſelfe. which joyned with prayer and prayer with it, will ſoon rid us of that we complaine: and otherwiſe, his anger will not be turned away, but his hand ſtreched out ſtill.

HEB. Chap. XIII. Ver. XVI.

To doe good, and to diſtribute forget not: for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed.

IN the tenth Verſe the Apoſtle ſaith, Wee have an Altar, of which they have no right to eate, that ſerve the Tabernacle. Habemus Altare. We have, that is, Chriſtians: So it is proprium Chriſtianorum, proper to Chriſtians: not common to the Iewes together with Chriſtians; they have no right to communicate, and eate there, that ſerve the Tabernacle. And yet it is commune Altare, a common Altar to all Chriſtians, they have all right to eate there. And ſo it is externum Altare, not only a ſpirituall Altar in the heart of every Chriſtian; then Saint Paul ſhould have ſaid habeo, or habet unuſquiſque, I have, and every Chriſtian hath in private to himſelfe: but We have an Altar, that is, all Chriſtians have; and it muſt be Externall, elſe all Chriſtians cannot have it.

Our Head CHRIST offered His Sacrifice of Himſelfe upon the Croſſe; Crux Altare CHRISTI; and the Croſſe of CHRIST was the Altar of our Head, where he offered the unicum, verum, & proprium Sacrificium, the only, true, proper ſacrifice, propitiatory for the ſins of mankind; in which all other ſacrifices are accepted, and applicatory of this propitiation.

1 The Onely Sacrifice, one in it ſelfe, and once only offered, that purchaſed eternall redemption: and if the redemption be eternall, what need is there, that it ſhould bee offered more than once, when once is all-ſufficient?

2 And the True Sacrifice: All other are but Types and Repreſentations of this ſacrifice; this onely hath power to appeaſe GODS wrath, and make all other Sacrificers, and ſacrifices acceptable.

3 And the Proper Sacrifice: As the Pſalme ſaith, Corpus aptaſti mihi, thou haſt fitted me with a Body; the Deity aſſumed the Humanity, that it might accipere a nobis quod offerret pro nobis; being the Deity could not offer, nor be offered to it ſelfe, He tooke fleſh of ours, that he might offer for us.

Now as Chriſts Croſſe was His Altar, where He offered Himſelfe for us; ſo the Church hath an Altar alſo, where it offereth it ſelfe: not Chriſtum in capite, but Chriſtum in membris, not Chriſt the Head properly (but onely by commemoration) but Chriſt the Members. For, Chriſt cannot be offered truly, and properly, no more but once upon the Croſſe: For Hee cannot bee offered againe, no more than Hee can be dead againe: and dying and ſhedding bloud, as He did upon the Croſſe; and not dying, and not ſhedding bloud, as in the Euchariſt, cannot be one Action of Chriſt offered on the Croſſe, & of Chriſt offered in the Church at the Altar by the Prieſt, by Repreſentation only, no more than Chriſt and the Prieſt are one perſon: & therefore though in the Croſſe and the Euchariſt there be Idem ſacrificatum, the ſame ſacrificed thing, that is the Body and Bloud of Chriſt, offered by Chriſt to His Father on the croſſe, and received and participated by the Cõmunicants in the Sacrifice of the Altar; yet Idem ſacrificium quoad actionem ſacrificii, or ſacrificandi, it is impoſſible there ſhould be the ſame ſacrifice, underſtanding by ſacrifice the action of ſacrifice. For then, the Action of Chriſts ſacrifice, which is long ſince paſt, ſhould continue as long as the Euchariſt ſhall endure, even unto the worlds end; and his conſummatum eſt is not yet finiſhed: And dying and not dying, ſhedding of bloud and not ſhedding of bloud, and ſuffering and not ſuffering cannot poſſibly be one action: and the Repreſentation of an Action cannot be the Action it ſelfe.

And this conceipt was unknowne to Antiquity. All the Fathers held it a ſacrifice, onely becauſe it is a Repreſentation or Commemoration of the True ſacrifice of Chriſt upon the Croſſe; even as our Saviour commanded, Doe this in remembrance of me. Saint Auguſtine ſaith, Hujus ſacrificij caro & ſanguis, ante adventum Chriſti, per victimas ſimilitudinum promittebatur: in paſsione Chriſti, per ipſam Veritatem reddebatur: poſt aſcenſum Chriſti, per Sacramentum memoriæ celebratur, &c. And Saint Chryſoſtome, Hoc eſt exemplar illius, &c. And Thomas Aquinas giving the reaſon of the diverſe Names given to this Sacrament ſaith, that it hath a triple ſignification. 1 Reſpectu præteriti, one in reſpect of the Time paſt, inaſmuch as it is commemorative of the LORDS Paſsion, which is called a true ſacrifice; and according to this, it is called a ſacrifice. 2 Reſpectu præſentis, in reſpect of the preſent, that is, of the Vnity of the Church, unto which men are gathered by this Sacrament, and according to this it is named a Communion, or Synaxis, becauſe by it we communicate with Chriſt, and are partakers of His Fleſh and Deity. 3. Reſpectu futuri, in reſpect of that which is to come, inaſmuch as this Sacrament is prefigurative of the fruition of GOD, which ſhall be in heaven; and accordingly it is called viaticum, becauſe it heere furniſheth us in the way, that leads us thither. Againe it is called the Euchariſt, that is, bona gratia, the good grace, becauſe eternall life is the grace of God, Rom. VI. or elſe, becauſe it really containes Chriſt, who is full of grace. It is alſo called Metalepſis, or Aſsumptio, becauſe by it we aſſume the Deity of the Sonne. All this, Part. III. Q. LXXII. Artic. IIII. In corpore. And in his Anſwer ad III^m. he addeth, That this Sacrament is called a Sacrifice, inaſmuch as it doth repreſent the Paſsion of Chriſt; it is likewiſe called Hoſtia an Hoſt, inaſmuch as it containeth Chriſt himſelfe, who is Hoſtia ſalutaris, Epheſ. V.

Contra Fauſtum, lib. 20. 21.

Ad Hebr. Hom.

Here is a Repreſentative, or Commemorative, and Participated Sacrifice of the Paſsion of Chriſt, the True Sacrifice, that is paſt; and here is an Euchariſticall Sacrifice: but for any Externall proper ſacrifice, eſpecially as ſacrifice doth ſignifie the Action of ſacrificing, here is not one word. And therefore this is a new conceipt of latter men, ſince Thomas his time, unknowne to him, and a meere Novelliſme. And the cure is as bad as the Diſeaſe: Though Thomas gives no other reaſons, why it is called a ſacrifice, yet (ſay they) Thomas denieth it not. For, that is plainly to confeſſe that this is but a patch added to Antiquity. And yet when he ſaith, it is a Repreſentative or Commemorative morative Sacrifice reſpectu præteriti; in reſpect of that which is paſt, that is, the Paſsion of Chriſt, which was the true Sacrifice, he doth deny by conſequent, that it is the true ſacrifice it ſelfe which is paſt. And if Chriſt be ſacrificed daily in the Euchariſt, according to the Action of Sacrifice, & it be one & the ſame ſacrifice offered by Chriſt on the Croſſe, and the Prieſt at the Altar, then can it not be a Repreſentation of that ſacrifice which is paſt, becauſe it is one and the ſame ſacrifice and action preſent.

Therefore Saint Paul proceeds in the XV. Verſe: By him therefore let us offer the ſacrifice of praiſe to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thankes to His Name. Let us offer up to GOD; Chriſtians then have an offering: and let us offer up to GOD continually; this is the ground of the daily Sacrifice of Chriſtians, that anſwereth to the daily ſacrifice of the Iewes. And this ſacrifice of praiſe and thanks may well be underſtood the Euchariſt, in which we chiefly praiſe and thanke God for this his chiefe and great bleſſing of our Redemption. And this and all other Sacrifices of the Church external or ſpiritual muſt be offered up & accepted per Ipſum, in, by, and through Chriſt. S. Paul ſaith not, Ipſum offeramus, Let us offer Him (that is) Chriſt; but let us offer and ſacrifice per Ipſum by him, in whom only we and our ſacrifices are accepted. And Rom. XII. I. Offerte corpora, Offer your bodies living ſacrifices, holy and acceptable to God, which is your reaſonable ſervice: It is not Corpora ſine animis, not bodies without ſoules; For in them without ſoules, there is no life, no holineſſe, no accepting: and this is mans reaſonable ſervice; all elſe is without reaſon. And S. Peter (the firſt Pope as they reckon him, who I am aſſured had infallibility) ſaith I Pe. II. V, Ye alſo as lively ſtones are built up a ſpirituall houſe, and holy Prieſthood, to offer up ſpirituall Sacrifices acceptable to God, per Ipſum Chriſtum, by IESUS CHRIST. And S. Iames (Cha. I. Ver, XVIII.) tels us, that to this end God begat us by his word of truth, that we might be primitiæ creaturarum: not offer to God the firſt fruits of our fields or cattle, but that we might offer up our ſelves as firſt fruits to God. So all the offerings of the Church are the Church it ſelfe; and Chriſt the Head offered corpus naturale, his naturall Body, his ſoule and fleſh for a ſacrifice; for the ranſome & price of our ſin, therby purchaſing eternall redemption, Heb, X. XI. and by this one offering He perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, Ver, XIII. Neither doth Chriſt there (that is) in heaven where he now appears in the preſence of God, offer often, or any more for us, but this once; there is appearing, but no offering, And the Apoſtle gives the reaſon of it. For then he muſt have often ſuffered ſince the foundation of the world, Heb. IX, 24, 25, 26. He appeares in heaven as our High Prieſt; and makes interceſsion for us; but Hee offers his naturall body no more but once, becauſe he ſuffers but once. No offering of Chriſt (by S. Pauls rule) without the ſuffering of Chriſt: the Prieſt cannot offer Chriſts naturall body without the ſuffering of Chriſts naturall body.

So likewiſe the Church, which is Chriſts myſticall body, offers not Chriſts naturall body: it hath no power to offer the naturall body, which is proper to Chriſt only, Pono animã & nemo tollit; not the Church, nor they that are not the Church. And there is no ſuch thing in Scripture, nor I preſume can eaſily be ſhewed out of any of the probable and undoubted Fathers, but the Church offers corpus myſticum, Chriſts myſticall body (that is, it ſelfe) to God in her daily Sacrifice.

Firſt, all ſacrifice is proper & due only to God. Be men never ſo venerable, never ſo worſhipfull, yea adorandi, to be adored alſo, yet no man ever offered ſacrifice to any, unleſſe he knew him, or thought him or feigned him to be God. True Angels would never accept Sacrifice: and wicked Angels only ſought it, becauſe they alſo affected to be deified. Saint Aug. de Civ. Dei, l. 10. c. 4. Et cont. Fauſt, l. 20. 21.

In which reſpect, never any Prieſt at the Altar, even ſuper corpus Martyris, over the body or ſepulcher of any Martyr, prayed thus, Offero tibi Sacrificium, Petre, Paule, Cypriane, I offer ſacrifice to Thee, ô Saint Peter, Saint Paul, or Saint Cyprian. All celebrities towards them, whether prayſes to GOD for their victories, or Exhortations to their imitation, are onely Ornamenta memoriarum, the Ornaments of their memories, not Sacra, nor Sacrificia mortuorum, tanquam Deorum, not the ſacred things or Sacrifices of the dead, as if they were GODS, Lib. VIII. C. XXVII.

And therefore Saint Auguſtine often denies Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices inward and outward, viſible and inviſible to all Martyrs and Saints, as being proper and peculiar to GOD onely. And I truſt, Prayers and Invocation be in this number. For as Orantes & Laudantes, praying & praiſing, we direct our ſignifying words to him, to whom we offer the things ſignified in our hearts: ſo ſacrificing, we know the viſible ſacrifice is to be offered to no other but to him, whoſe viſible ſacrifice in our hearts we our ſelves ought to be, Nos eſſe debemus, Lib. X, Cap. XIX. And then it followeth in the XX. Chapter: The true Mediator inaſmuch as taking upon Him the forme of a ſervant, the Man IESUS CHRIST became a Mediator of God and Man; whereas in the forme of GOD He takes ſacrifice with His Father, yet in the forme of a ſervant, Maluit eſſe, quam ſumere, He choſe rather to be a Sacrifice, than to receive Sacrifice; leſt even by this occaſion any man might think he might ſacrifice to a Creature, by this (Nature) He is a Prieſt; the ſame the offerer, and the ſame the thing offered: Cujus rei ſacramentum, of which things he would have the daily Sacrifice of the Church to be a Sacrament, quæ cum ipſius capitis corpus ſit, ſeipſam per ipſum diſcit offerre: which Church being the body of our Head himſelfe, doth learne to offer it ſelfe (that is, the Church) by Him, that is, by Chriſt. Here the Body of the Head, is the myſticall body of Chriſt: and therefore the daily Sacrifice of the Church is not the Naturall Body of Chriſt, but the Myſticall Body that offers it ſelfe to God by Chriſt. This made Saint Auguſtine to ſay of Angels, and Elect and Glorious Saints, Nec illis ſacrificemus, ſed cum illis ſacrificium Deo ſimus, Let us not ſacrifice to them, but let us bee a ſacrifice to God together with them, Cap. XXV.

But a ſingular and full place we have in the ſame X^th^. Booke, and VI. Ch. Where having ſhewed what Sacrifice is, that is, every worke w^ch^ is performed, that we may cleave to God in an holy Society, being referred to that end of good, by which wee may bee truly bleſſed: (as a man conſecrated to the name of God, and dying to the world, that he may live to God, is a Sacrifice; as the Body chaſtened by temperance, is a Sacrifice, ſuch as the Apoſtle cals for, Offer up your bodies to be a Living Sacrifice, Rom. XII. I. And if the body, the ſervant and inſtrument of the ſoule, much more the ſoule it ſelfe is a ſacrifice; As likewiſe workes of mercy and the like:) Hence (ſaith hee) it commeth to paſſe, Vt tota ipſa, redempta Civitas ſocietaſq; ſanctorum univerſale ſacrificium offeratur DEO, &c. [That the whole redeemed City and Society of the Saints is offered up an univerſall ſacrifice to God, by our great Prieſt; who alſo offered himſelfe in His paſſion for us, that we might be the body of ſo great a Head, in the forme of a ſervant. For this he offered: in this he was offered, becauſe according to this he is our Mediator, in this our Prieſt, in this our Sacrifice.] And then urging againe the Apoſtles words. Rom. XII. I. of offering our bodies a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to GOD, which is our reaſonable ſervice of Him, he adds, Quod totum ſacrificium ipſi nos ſumus [All which whol ſacrifice we are:] We the Members are this whol ſacrifice, not Chriſt the Head. For as in the body there are many members, and many offices of thoſe members; ſo we being many, are one Body in Chriſt, and every one members of one another, having divers gifts according to the grace given us. Hoc eſt ſacrificium Chriſtianorum, multi unum Corpus ſumus in Chriſto, [this is the ſacrifice of Chriſtians, many are one body in Chriſt.] This muſt neceſſarily be the myſticall body of Chriſt; the naturall body it cannot be: Quod etiam Sacramento Altaris Fidelibus noto frequentat Eccleſia; ubi ei demonſtratur, quod in illâ oblatione quam offert, ipſa offeratur: [Which Sacrifice the Church alſo frequents in the Sacrament of the Altar, well knowne to the faithfull; in which it is demonſtrated to the Church, that in that oblation which the Church offers, the Church it ſelfe is offered.] I hope, the Church is the myſticall body of Chriſt, not the naturall. Lib. XX. cap. X. Ipſum verò ſacrificium Corpus eſt Chriſti, quod non offertur ipſis, quia hoc ſunt et ipſi; denying Temples, Altars, and Sacrifices to Martyrs and Saints, he ſaith [The ſacrifice it ſelfe is the Body of Chriſt, which is not offered to them, becauſe they are alſo this ſacrifice.] This may ſuffice to ſatisfie any reaſonable man of the Sacrifice of the Church, in Saint Auguſtines judgment, Yet give me leave to adde one place more, becauſe it may ſtand for many, a nd that is Lib. X.

*cap.*13. Nec jubent, &c. [Neither do they command, that we ſhould Sacrifice to them, but only to Him, whoſe Sacrifice we together with them ought to be a Sacrifice, Vt ſæpe dixi, & ſæpe dicendum eſt, as I have often ſaid, and muſt often ſay.]

This then is the daily Sacrifice of the Church in Saint Auguſtine's reſolute judgement, even the Church it ſelfe, the Vniverſall body of Chriſt, not the Naturall Body; whereof the Sacrament is an Exemplar, and a Memoriall onely, as hath been ſhewed. And when they ſhall prove the Churches Sacrifice to be the Naturall Body of Chriſt, and the ſame Sacrifice with the Sacrifice of the Croſſe, as it denoteth the Action of Sacrificing, becauſe the Fathers often uſe the word Corpus Chriſti, The Body of Chriſt; they ſhall be further anſwered.

In the meane time the Church of England in her reformed Liturgie [offering our ſelves, our ſoules, and bodies to be a living Sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is our reaſonable ſervice of him] may truly and boldly ſay, that in this ſhe hath far exceeded their Canon of their Maſſe, in which there is not one ſyllable, that mentions the Sacrifice of our ſelves and ſoules and bodies, which is the onely thing that God lookes and cals for at our hands, and in Chriſt our Head is moſt pleaſing; nay more, onely pleaſing to Him, and in our power to offer properly.

We denie not then the dayly Sacrifice of the Church (that is, the Church it ſelfe) warranted by Scriptures and Fathers. We take not upon us to Sacrifice the naturall Body of CHRIST otherwiſe than by the commemoration, as CHRIST Himſelfe, and Saint Paul doth preſcribe. They rather, that take a power never given them over the naturall body of CHRIST, which once offered by Himſelfe purchaſed eternall redemption all-ſufficient for ſinne, to offer it againe and often, never thinking of the offering of CHRISTS myſticall body, the Church, that is, our ſelves, our ſoules and bodies; they (I ſay) doe deſtroy the daily Sacrifice of Chriſtians, which is moſt acceptable to God.

Now then that which went before in the Head Chriſt on the Croſſe; is daily performed in the members, in the Church. Chriſt there offered Himſelfe once for us; we daily offer our ſelves by Chriſt, that ſo the whole myſticall body of Chriſt in due time may be offered to GOD.

This was begun in the Apoſtles, in their Liturgie, of whom it is ſaid (*Acts.*13.) Miniſtrantibus illis, while they miniſtred and prayed, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid unto them, &c. Eraſmus reads it, Sacrificantibus illis, while they Sacrificed and prayed. If they had offered Chriſts Naturall body, the Apoſtles would ſurely have made ſome mention of it in their writings, as well as they doe of the Commemorative Sacrifice. The word is λειτουργούντων ſo it is a Liturgicall Sacrifice; or a Sacrifice performed or offered in our Liturgy or forme of Gods worſhip: ſo the offering of our ſelves, our ſoules, and bodies, is a part of Divine worſhip.

Now as it is not enough to feed our owne ſoules, unleſſe we alſo feed both the ſoules and bodies of the poore; And there is no true faſt, unleſſe we diſtribute that to the poore, which we denie to our owne bellies and ſtomachs; And there cannot bee a perfect and compleate adoration of GOD in our devotions; unleſſe there be alſo doing good and diſtributing to our neighbours; therefore to the Sacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving in the Euchariſt, in the Church, mentioned in the fifteenth Verſe, we muſt alſo adde beneficence and communication in this Text: For, Devotio debetur Capiti, Beneficentia membris, the ſacrifice of devotion is due to our Head CHRIST, and piety and charity is due to the Members. So then, offer the Sacrifice of praiſe to GOD daily in the Church, as in the fifteenth Verſe; and diſtribute and communicate the Sacrifice of compaſsion and Almes to the poore out of the Church, as in this Text.

Shall I ſay extra Eccleſiam, out of the Church? I do not ſay amiſſe, if I doe ſay ſo: yet I muſt ſay alſo, intra Eccleſiam, this ſhould be a Sacrifice in the Church, the Apoſtles kept it ſo in their time; Primo Die, the firſt day of the weeke, when they came together to pray and to breake bread, Saint Pauls rule was, Separet unuſquiſque; Let every one ſet apart; or lay by in ſtore, as GOD hath proſpered him, that there be no gatherings, gatherings, when I come. And our Liturgy in the Offertory tenders her Prayers and Almes on the Lords day or Sunday, as a part of the Sacrifice or Service of that day and of GOD's Worship; which I wish were more carefully observed among us. For this also is a Liturgie or Office, so called by the Apostle, 2. Cor. 9. 12. ἡ διακονία τῆς λειτουργίας, the Administration of this Service, or Office, or Liturgie: there is the word Liturgie or Office. For, the daily Service and Sacrifice, not onely supplieth the want of the Saints; but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto GOD. So the Lords day or Sunday is then best kept and observed, when to our Prayers and Prayses and Sacrifices of our selvs, our soules and Bodies, we also adde the Sacrifice of our goods and Almes, and other workes of mercy to make it up perfect and compleat, that there may be Opus diei in die suo, the worke of the day in the proper day thereof, and these two Sacrifices of praise and Almes joyned here by GOD and His Apostle, may never be parted by us in our lives and practice.

First then we see, that as our SAVIOUR first preached in the Mount, and then healed in the Cities and townes; so when we have offered our selves, our soules, and bodies, to be living and spirituall sacrifices in the Church unto GOD, by our High Priest CHRIST, we must not rest there, but must also offer our goods and almes, whether in the Church or out of the Church, to the relieſe of the poore members of CHRIST, that are in want. And that these two, [1] the sacrifice of Praise, [2] & the sacrifice of Almes may appeare to be indivisible and separable, insomuch that he that will give himselfe, his soule, and body to GOD, will never spare also to give his goods to those that sufferhunger, and thirst, and nakednesse; See how our Apostle joynes these two. [1] First, Per Ipsum offeramus; By CHRIST our High Priest, Let us offer our selves: [2] and lest that should be thought, to be all the whole Sacrifice, that man is to render to His GOD, He adds this second, with a Nolite oblivisci, by a kind of Negative, which is may times more forcible than an ordinary Affirmative: to doe good, and to distribute forget not: fearing as it were, lest when man had done his homage and fealty to GOD, of whom he holds in chiefe, he might think, that were enough to sacrifice to GOD in the Church on the Lords day, and then forget his Brother all the week after, and never to take compassion on him: whereas the truth is, Vnus amor, but duplex objectum; the love is but one, wherewith we love God for Himselfe, & our brother who is Gods image for His sake, as there be two eyes, yet but one visuall faculty. For as it is to no purpose, to learne our duty at the mouth of Gods Preachers, on the Lords day, and never to put it in practice all our weeke, or life following, as if it were a matter onely for the braine and understanding; whereas in truth, first it should edifie our faith, and then fructifie in our lives: So it is a very short love to professe to love God, whom we have not seene, and starve our poore brethren, who lye at our gates in such sort, that we cannot choose but see them.

The Division.

So then the words containe, first an Act, Beneficentia & communionis; to doe good, and to distribute: and that must needs be a great worke, for it is to doe good, and nothing is truly great, but that which is good. 1

2. A Caveat, Nolite oblivisci, it is a work of great consequence, very important to our salvation, it may not be forgotten. 2

3. How small or vile it may seem in it selfe, yet it is of a high rate and great esteeme: sacrificia sunt, & talia sunt; they are sacrifices and sacrifices of much price, though they be but Crummes of bread, or drops of water: And so much the more precious, because they are gratefull to God; delectatur, or placatur Deus, God is pacified, or God is well pleased: and all the world is well given to appease and pacifie His wrath, and gaine His favour. 3

Now the worke is comprised in two words, Beneficentia & communicatio: beneficence and distribution. Beneficence or bounty, that is, Affectio cordis; the affection and compassion of the heart: And Communication and distribution, that is Opus manuum; the worke of the hand. And these two may be no more divided, than the two other sacrifices, of devotion in the sacrifice of our selves, and Charity in the Releefe of the poore: For Beneficence is ut Fons, as the fountaine and spring or cisterne, whence all workes of Compassion doe arise; and distribution is ut Rivuli, as the Rivers or channels or pipes, by which the waters of comfort and goodneſſe are carried to hungry ſoules.

Beneficence is as the Sunne, diſtribution is as the light that proceeds from the Sun: At the beneficence of the heart there we muſt begin, & by the diſtribution and communication of the hand, there is the progreſſe. And it is not enough that our heart is charitable, and full of compaſſion, if we be cluſter-fiſted, and cloſe-handed, and give nothing: Goe and be warme, and goe and be fedde, and goe and be cloathed, they bee verba compaſſionis, words of compaſſion: but if we doe not as well feed and cloath, as our tongue bleſſeth, we may have gentle hearts like Iacobs voice, but our hands will be cruell and hayry like Eſaus, that vowed to kill his Brother.

And true Religion is no way a gargaliſme onely, to waſh the tongue and mouth, to ſpeake good words: it muſt root in the heart, and then fructifie in the hand; elſe it will not cleanſe the whole man.

Now, God only is good, and the univerſall good of all things, and goodneſſe it ſelfe: If there be any good in man, it is particular, not univerſall, and it is participatum: man is not good in himſelfe, but only by participation: Goodneſſe in God is Eſſentia; eſſence and being: and He is ſo goodneſſe, that He cannot be but goodneſſe, good in Himſelfe, and good of Himſelfe.

In man goodneſſe is Accidens, an Accident; and ſuch an accident, as moſt commonly he is devoid of it, but onely by the grace and likeneſſe of GOD: So that man is good ſolâ ſimilitudine bonitatis divinæ, onely by the ſimilitude and imitation of the divine good: the neerer to God, the neerer to goodneſſe; and the further from God the more removed from all goodneſſe. So that as in every good, the greateſt good is moſt deſired: ſo in doing good, that is ever beſt, that joynes us moſt to our greateſt good.

All Creatures are ſaid to be good, by the goodneſſe of God, Vt principio, as the principle, and efficient cauſe of all good. 1
2. Vt Exemplari, as the patterne and exemplar, and Idea, according to which all good things are faſhioned. 2
3. Vt fine, as the end and finall cauſe for which all things were made. 3

And the like is in this beneficence and doing of good. For firſt, it muſt be good à cauſa, in regard of the firſt & efficient cauſe, which is God: as the good fruit proceeds from the good tree, and the tree owes his goodneſſe to God that tranſplants and waters it. 1
2. It muſt be good in fundamento, in reſpect of the foundation: as the houſe, and the living ſtones and ſpirituall buildings are therefore good, becauſe they are built upon the immovable foundation, the Rock Chriſt. 2
And 3. it muſt be good à fine, from the end to which it is referred: it takes beginning from the Holy Ghoſt, and the riches of grace, and it muſt be directed only to the ſupreme and grand end of all things, Gods glory, and the reliefe of the poore members of Chriſt. 3

And theſe two, Beneficence & Communication, the eminent and imperated Acts of true Religion, the mother of all vertues they are alſo the acts of many other particular vertues. For firſt, they are the Acts of Charity, becauſe they proceed from the love of God: 1
2. They are the acts of Iuſtice, becauſe Reliefe and ſuſtentation is the due debt, that is owing to the poore: 2
3. They are the acts of Liberality and Bounty, becauſe the free gift of men, not the merit of the needy: 3
4. They are the acts of Mercy, becauſe they participate with the wants and miſeries of the afflicted. 4

So that as impendere, is Bonitatis: to doe good, and diſtribute, and beſtow is the act of goodneſſe; ſo likewiſe rependere, to pay them, where we owe them, is Iuſtitiæ, the worke of Iuſtice. And therefore our goods, they are not properly ours, in ſuch ſort that we can carry them with us, when we go hence: but they are bona pauperum; ſo our goods, that they are alſo the goods of the poor, wherof we are rather Stewards, than Proprietaries and Lords: and he that ſo keepes and hoords them, that he doth not expend them, to buy the kingdome of heaven with them, at the hands of the poor (Ipſorum eſt Regnum) he doth indeed detinere alienum, he defrauds the poore, and detaines that which is anothers. And therefore the Pſalme ſaith, Diſperſit, dedit pauperibus, Iuſtitia Ejus manet in æternum (Pſalme 112. 9.) Hee hath diſperſed and given to the

poore: his righteouſneſſe endures for ever; not his mercy only, but his Iuſtice alſo.

Where, by the way obſerve; that there it is firſt, Diſperſit, dedit; he diſperſed and gave to the poore: here, in the Text that lies before me this day, it is Dedit, diſperſit; He gave it, and then he diſperſed it, to the poore, in ſuch ſort, that He did as it were ſtudy how to diſpenſe it to all ſorts of poore, even as many kindes of poore, as Hee could deviſe and find fit to receive it, learned old men, widowes, children and priſoners, and the like.

And this goodneſſe whether wee underſtand it plainly, as the Intention of the heart, that doth the good, and the works of the hand, that diſtributes and divides it: or whether we underſtand it, as ſome doe, that there is Beneficentia in iis quæ dantur; beneficence in thoſe things that are given: and Communicatio in iis quæ ſervantur, Communication in thoſe things that we give not: becauſe in theſe times, Omnia erant communia, All things were in common, & ſo they did communicate even thoſe things which they did not communicate and diſtribute: This goodneſſe I ſay, hath two properties of true goodneſſe: Firſt, it is diffuſivum ſui; diffuſiue of it ſelfe, it 1 imparts it ſelfe to as many as can, it heapes not all upon one, as thoſe doe that rob all others, that they may enrich their heire: Secondly, it is unitivum Deo, & proximo; 2 it is unitive, and unites us to God, for whoſe ſake we doe it, and to our Neighbour to whom wee do it.

And ſurely as in the civill States, Quid leges ſine moribus vanæ proficiunt? what will the beſt lawes profit us, if there be no obedience, no manners? are they not altogether vaine, of leſſe force that Spiders webs? and in Chriſtianity, Quid fides ſine operibus? what will faith and knowledge profit us, if it fructifie not in life and worke? what can Devotion, and Iuſtice profit, if Almes follow not? He that will ſend an Embaſſage to God, that ſhall ſurely ſpeed, he muſt ſend ſighs from his heart: teares from his eyes, prayers from his mouth, & alſo almes from his hands, and they will prove of that force, that God cannot deny them.

And if we will take with us the reſolution of the learned, out of the forme of the laſt Iudgement, it will amount to thus much; that not onely Peccata commiſſionis, ſinnes of commiſſion, or ſinnes committed will condemne us, but alſo Peccata omiſſionis, ſinnes of omiſſion, or omiſſion of doing good, as not feeding and clothing the poore, will caſt us into hell: and auferre aliena & non dare ſua, to take other mens goods from them, either by force or fraud; and not to give our owne to the poore, both are damnable, though not in the ſame degree. And therefore our Saviours councell is well worth our learning (Luke XVI.) Make you friends of the unrighteous Mammon, that when you ſhall faile, they may receive you into everlaſting Tabernacles. And theſe externall gifts they are the viaticum, or vians to carry us to heaven: for though Non hîc Cælum, heaven be not here in this life; yet Hîc quæritur Cælum, here in this life heaven is to be ſought, and here it is either found or loſt. So then, ſhall wee faſt from meat, and not from ſinne? ſhall wee pray, and rob the poore? ſhall our tongue praiſe charity, and our hands ſpoyle thoſe that need our charity? GOD forbid.

And now, moſt glorious Bounty, and Communication, and Diſtribution, what ſhall I ſay of thee? but that thou art Vita ſanctorum; the very life, and joy, and delight of all Saints: and when Saints muſt leave this life, and all things els leave them, and they leave all things; yet thou leaveſt them not, but are Comes defunctorum, the unſeparable companion of the dying. For of all that a man hath, there is nothing that ſhall accompany him to the Tribunall of the great Iudge of the quicke and the dead, but Peccata & bona opera, Sins and good works: and then it will appeare, that the voice of a few good workes, done for Chriſts ſake, will ſpeake lowder and plead harder, and more effectually for us, than all our glorious words and profeſſions.

And this doing good and diſtributing, is not only profitable, but admirable alſo, For why? by evils and wants of others, it ſelfe is bettered; and it becomes beautifull, by the uncleannes & naſtineſſe of the wretched; it is enriched by others poverty, by others infirmities it growes ſtrong; the bearing of burdens attols and lifts it up: and therein of all other it is happy, de ſpinis colligit uvas; it does that, which CHRIST denies to be feiſable, it gathers grapes of thornes, and ſweeteſt conſolation out of greateſt miſeries; and that which is contrary to all Nature, and Naturall reaſon, ex agro ſteriliſsimo paupertatis, meſſem copioſiſsimam colligit, out of the moſt barren fields of poverty, it reapes the moſt plentifull harveſt. And herein are theſe two Vertues moſt to be admired: Miſericordia miſeriam aliorum facit noſtram, Mercy makes other mens miſeries and calamities to be our owne: and Charitas facit bona noſtra proximorum, Charitie makes our goods to be our Neighbours.

If a travelling man were heavy loaden, were it not a great and happy eaſe for him, if his fellow-traveller would beare part of his burden? And Divitiæ, onus: Riches is a heavy load, it preſſes downe many ſo much, that they are never able to climbe up to heaven. What is then to be done? Da partem comiti: give thy companion (the poore man) a part with thee, thou ſhall refreſh him that is weary of his wants, and thy ſelfe ſhall runne moſt lightly and nimbly to heaven gates.

And now if thou wilt doe as my Text teacheth (that is, to doe good, and diſtribute) yet take theſe few rules in the way, they will make thee to make the more and better ſpeed. Firſt, doe it Voluntary, willingly: not by compulſion, as if it were a grievous tax or ſeaze: For GOD more regards thy affection, than thy gift; the widowes two mites, more than great heapes of treaſure: and why? GOD is Ponderator ſpirituum, non panis aut monetæ: GOD is a weigher of the ſpirits, rather than of bread and money. 1 2. Doe it hilariter, cheerefully: for thou well knoweſt what GOD loves moſt, that is, a cheerefull giver. He doth not reſpect Quid, what it is that thou giveſt; but Ex Quanto, the cheerefull heart it comes from. 3. Doe it Affabiliter, with kinde words and faire language: Not of a wearineſſe to be rid of a begger, as the unjuſt Iudge righted the importunate widow; but out of compaſſion to releev him. And certainly, when there is Pietas in re, Compaſſion and pity in the deed, non ſit in verbis contumelia: though thou give him good counſell, yet load him not with reproches and contumelies; upbraid him not with his wants or diſeaſes; for GOD might have turned the tables, and made him as rich as Abraham, and thee as poore and infirm as Iob or Lazarus. 4 Doe it Feſtinanter, ſpeedily: for Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poore and needie, and prevents his petition: For, this is indeed to give twice, to give quickly; to have his money or his bread prepared and ready at his hand, as more ready to give, than they to ask: And this is indeed Quærere pauperes, quibus benefacias, to ſeek and ſearch for poore, to whom thou maiſt do good: and know withall that Abraham's ſpeed to entertaine CHRIST and His Angels, made ſinum Abrahæ receptaculum Lazari: Abraham's boſome to be the receptacle and place of Reſt to Lazarus, as well as Lazarus's patience advanced him to Abraham's boſome. And 5. Doe it Humiliter, in all humility: Vt eluas peccatum, non ut corrumpas Iudicem: to Redeeme thine owne ſinnes by thine Almes, as David ſaid to Nebuchodonozor; but not to corrupt thy Iudge, that thou may'ſt ſinne more freely, more ſecurely. For, GOD is like to heare the loudeſt cry; and it may be the cry of thy ſinne, may decry or cry downe thine Almes; and the ſcale of ſinne may make thine Almes to be found too light.

1 2 3 4 5

Againe, take I beſeech you theſe things into your conſideration: Firſt, Quis petit? Who it is, that askes an Almes of thee. Thou takeſt it to be the poore man, but thou miſtakeſt it, It is DEUS in paupere, & CHRISTUS in paupere: GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer in the poore man: and doeſt thou hoord up for thy wife, or thy childe, or thy ſervant, that will ſpend it in ryot; Et negas Creatori, vel Redemptori; and doſt thou deny to GOD thy Creator, and CHRIST thy Redeemer, that bought thee with His owne bloud and life?

Secondly, Quid petit? what it is that he doth aske: in ſhort, Suum non tuum: He askes not thine, thou haſt only the uſe, and diſpoſe of it, but He askes His owne; and what haſt thou, that thou haſt not received; even to thy ſelfe, thy ſoule, and thy body, all the gifts of Nature, and all the gifts of grace? And when all is ſaid, this is indeed all, Da quod dedi: give me that I firſt gave thee, a fruit of mine owne tree; I beſtowed it on thee: Da et reddam, give me but ſome crummes, ſome drops out of thy heape, out of thy fountaine, I will repay it: Nay, da & debitor ero; give me any part, I will become a debtour to thee upon my word and promiſe, to repay it in heaven.

3 Thirdly, Ad quid, To what purpoſe doth GOD aske thee by the poore man? to gaine it to himſelfe? No: ad mutuandum, only to borrow of thee; and be aſſured, he is the beſt pay-maſter, he will reſtore to thee an hundred fold. And wilt thou lend to a Iew, or a Turke for ten or eight in the hundred; Et Deo non accommodas, and wilt thou not lend to thy Creator and Redeemer, who will give an everlaſting weight of glory for thy crummes and drops.

4 And fourthly, Quid daturus, qui petit; what will He give thee, that now begs of thee? For thy broken bread & meat, He will make thee partaker of the Feaſt of the Lambe; and for a few drops of water, He will crowne thee in the Kingdome of glory: pro poculo aquæ frigidæ, torrens voluptatis; for a cup of cold water (water the common element, and cold water, that coſt thee not the charg of a fire to warme it) there is a torrent, nay, a very ſea of pleaſures provided for thee for all eternity.

Doe good then and diſtribute: but doe it Manibus proprijs with thine owne hands, if thou canſt ſpare it: not by other mens hands, which may die ſoone after thee, or elſe deceive thy truſt. Lucerna in manibus, non à tergo; hang not thy light at thy back, to ſhine after thy death, but carry it in thy hand; be Executor of thine owne Will. And doe it Secretò; in ſecret, without a Trumpet: The ſeed muſt be buried or harrowed under the earth, elſe it neither roots nor multiplies: which though perdi videtur, it ſeemes to be loſt, yet unleſſe it be thus ſowed and buried, reverà perditur, it will be loſt indeed: And the more thou ſoweſt, the more thou ſhalt reape, for he that ſowes ſparingly, ſhall reape ſparingly.

Pars II. And now in the ſecond place, marke the Caution: Nolite oblivisci: to doe good, and to diſtribute forget not. Offer the ſacrifice of praiſe daily: and if daily, it is likely enough to be remembred, becauſe it never was forgotten, never omitted in the Church, whither thou art put, as to the Schoole of Memory. This is but a lip-labour; or at the moſt, but an heart-labour, it coſts nothing but breath: but to give Almes; to doe good, and to diſtribute, that coſts more; it will put thee to the charge of bread, and water, and cloathes, and the like, which is chargable and burdenſome. Any thing but our purſes: No, that muſt not be left out neither: To doe good and to diſtribute, to'rob thine owne back and thy belly, to feed the hungry and cloath the naked, Nolite oblivisci; forget not to adde the Sacrifice of Almes, to that other of devotion and praiſe.

And ſurely, I may call this the Chapter of Remembrances, or the Remembrancers Chapter. In the ſecond Verſe: Memento hoſpitalitatis, forget not to be hoſpitable: Abraham entertained Angels, yea, the Son of GOD, the LORD of Angels by his hoſpitality. In the third Verſe: Memento vinctorum, & afflictorum laborantium; Remember thoſe that are in bonds, & afflicted, being your ſelves in bonds and adverſity together with them: for, as CHRISTUS paſcitur in iis, ſo incarceratur; as CHRIST is fed in the poore, ſo He is impriſoned with them that are in bonds, & exiled with His exiled members, and condemned to the Mines, with thoſe that are chained in the Mines: and it is an impoſſibility to baniſh the Head from His members, in whom He lives, and they in Him. In the eight Verſe: Memento Præpoſitorum, Remember your Governours, that have the Rule over you: you owe much to them that have ſowen in you the Word of GOD, whoſe faith is a light or example to you. So here, To doe good, and to diſtribute forget not. The reſt are particulars, Hoſpitality to ſtrangers, Viſitation to priſoners, comfort to the perſecuted, and Suſtentation to our ſpirituall Governours: but this is generall, and extends to all; ſtrangers, priſoners, perſecuted, Governours, and all other men in need, in generall; though with a præcipuè, chiefly to the houſhold of faith. For, every man is our neighbour, to whom charity is to be extended; but they are more neerely our neighbours, to whom we ſtand bound by a double obligation and fraternity, of Nature, and Grace.

Why

Why then is our Apoſtle ſo ſolicitous, that we forget not this doing good and diſtributing? A man would thinke, the precept need not be ſo ſtrictly urged and inculcated, and that in the negative which binds Semper & ad ſemper, and therefore never to be forgotten. The Moraliſt gives a good Rule, Homo in homine calamitoſo miſericors, meminit ſui: That man that is mercifull to a man in miſery and calamity, remembers himſelfe: he might have beene in miſery and need, as well as his afflicted neighbour, if GOD had ſo diſpoſed. Is it ſuch a matter, to be ſo much and ſo often inculcated? Can a man forget himſelfe? or can any man thinke that, that which fals to another man, might not fall upon him? Equall in nature and grace, may alſo be equall in miſery, if GOD will: Yes ſurely there is need; for, he that beheld his face in the glaſſe, Iames 1. 24. he went away, & ſtatim oblitus eſt; ſtraight-way he forgetteth his owne ſhape, his owne ſpots and deformities, amends none of them, never thinkes on them more, till he come to the glaſſe againe: be the glaſſe never ſo true, never ſo pure, even as pure as the word of GOD it ſelfe, yet ſo often as he comes, ſo often he forgets, therefore nothing is more needfull then this not forgetting.

And the truth is, moſt men are like to the young man, that ſaid to our SAVIOUR CHRIST: All theſe things, the Commandements of GOD, cuſtodivi ab adoleſcentia, have I kept from my youth: but yet he had not ſo ſtrictly kept GOD's Commandements, but that withall, cuſtodivit bona omnia à pauperibus; he had more ſtrictly kept all his goods from the poore: and becauſe hee had great ſubſtance, and loved it greatly, he had need to be remembred with Nolite obliviſci, Forget not to doe good, and to diſtribute: for he was Cuſtos pecuniæ, potiùs quàm præcepti; he was a keeper, but a keeper of money; and no keeper, but a breaker of the Commandements. Mat. 19. 20.

The Rich-man and all his fellowes, Luke 16. have need of this, Forget not: He ſaw Lazarus full of ſores, from the crowne of the head to the ſole of the foot, and the very ſight of him, was conflatorium pietatis; the very bellowes and Anvile of compaſſion: and he lay at his gate, he could neither goe in, nor out, but he muſt look upon him, yet obliviſcitur quod vidit; he forgot him that he ſaw, and could not chooſe but ſee him: Nay, he ſaw the dogs more mercifull in licking his ſores than himſelfe was, in curing or feeding him: and therefore non accepit guttam aquæ, he received not one drop of water to coole his tongue. (He was a great, but a moſt miſerable profeſſour, and therefore his tongue was moſt tormented, becauſe therein conſiſted all his Religion.) And the reaſon is, becauſe Non dedit micam panis, he would not give him ſo much as he gave his dogs, not one crumme of bread.

There be ſome that ſay, Mat. 25. 37, 44. Quando te vidimus eſurientem, nudum, &c? When did we ſee Thee hungry or naked? peradventure they never ſaw Him, in His owne perſon, in capite, as a particular man, the Head; but they could not but ſee Him, in membris; in His members, the poore: Vident pauperem, but CHRISTUM in paupere non vident; they ſaw the poore man, but CHRIST they ſaw not in the poore man: Here is great need of this Nolite obliviſci, Forget not to put them in minde, that they flatter not themſelves with this ambiguity. Te & Te totum: they ſee not the Man JESUS, the Head alone, but they cannot chooſe but ſee whole CHRIST, that is CHRIST the Head, and the poore His members.

There is one, and I would there were but one, that received a talent and hid it in a napkin under the earth: he was worthy to heare Serve nequam, Evill ſervant: For hee knew his Maſters will, that gave his talents to receive them with increaſe; his memory failed and had need to be rubbed with oblitus tradere uſurariis; he forgot that which he did not forget; he forgot not to take uſe for his money, and uſe upon uſe, but hee forgot the true and lawfull uſury, to give it to the poore, and ſo to lend it to the LORD, who would ſurely have paid both principall and intereſt alſo; both the ſubſtantiall reward of eternall life, and alſo the accidentall degree and meaſure of glory. Mat. 25. 18. 27.

How many are there that forget the Preachers precept, Caſt thy bread upon the waters? How many are there that ſay, My barnes are too little, I will pull them downe and build bigger? who have beene at the Schoole of forgetfulneſſe, and do not remember, Quòd ventres pauperum capiunt. quod horrea non capiunt, that the bellies of the poore are Eccleſ. 11. 1. Luk. 12.

greater than the greateſt barnes, and will receive and conſume all that which the greateſt barnes cannot hold; yea, the poore doe ſoe multiply, that the rich are not able to feed them. The fooliſh Rich-man ſaid in the Goſpell, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up in ſtore for many yeares: but when he ſaid ſo, he had not many houres to reckon, to eate and drinke and take his pleaſure. Malè recondita, melius erogata; they were ill layed up, they had beene much better diſtributed and ſcattered abroad. It may be they may paſſe all the degrees of compariſon. Malè parta; ill gotten by oppreſſion, and fraud, and Rapine: And Pejùs detenta, worſe kept and detained; that which is ill gotten may be worſe kept; and ſo that is, that is ſcraped and extorted from all others, is denyed to all others, and moſt of all to himſelfe, and GOD, and CHRIST: And Peſſimè erogata expended worſt of all, in ryot and exceſſe, in pride and vanity, in cruelty and rebellion, in denying maintenance to the King and Country, or to the poore.

Luk. 12. 18, 19

But howſoever ill gotten, worſe impriſoned and debarred the light of the Sun: and worſt of all ſo ſpent, that with them, the ſoule, and life, and Heaven it ſelfe is ſpent and loſt: yet the truth is, they are then beſt kept, when they are well expended, and never better, then on the poore afflicted members of CHRIST, than in buying of Heaven. But if you will make a true conjunction indeed, they are then bene recondita, when bene erogata; well ſtored and laid up, when they are well laid out. Reconde in ſinu pauperum; The beſt houſe to lay them up, is to put them into the box and boſome of the poore: for, that indeed is the ſafeſt and ſureſt Treaſury, ſafer than the Temple it ſelfe, the living Temples of GOD: A Treaſury, Sine fure, Sine verme; without thiefe, without worme; whatſoever is put there, defertur Deo; the poore man will carry it to GOD, out of whoſe hands it can never be taken.

And this is indeed the Art of Arts. Not the gold-making Juggling art, which under the name of gold-making, is the conſumer of gold: but the art of turning earth into heaven, and earthly almes into celeſtiall riches; dando, cæleſtes fiunt, theſe tranſitory earthly things procure us the unſpeakable riches and treaſures of heaven. And now conſider, Cornelius's Almes and prayers aſcended as a memoriall to GOD, and procured the great grace of the knowledge of CHRIST, and the gift of the HOLY GHOST: And Dorcas's Almes obtained her Reſurrection to life: GOD remembred them both, and ſhall we forget to do good and diſtribute our almes, which have that force, that GOD will never forget them?

Act. 11.

Part III. GOD cannot forget them, if we doe remember, and performe them: Nay GOD holds them at a great rate, He accepts them as ſacrifices, and ſuch ſacrifices as both paciſie and pleaſe Him. Talibus ſacrificiis, with ſuch ſacrifice GOD is pleaſed; talibus, with theſe of Praiſe and Almes; and with all thoſe that are like, or of the ſame nature with theſe. Not with the ſacrifices of Nature and Moſes's Law: ſuch are both Mortua, and mortifera; dead in themſelves, and mortiferous and deadly to all that ſhall uſe them. Theſe had their time, and were accepted as types and figures, of the true ſacrifice of CHRIST upon the Croſſe, in whom all ſacrifices were accepted; In which they were partakers of CHRIST, and did eat the ſame ſpirituall meat, and drinke the ſame ſpirituall drinke, that we now eat and drink by faith, and the Rock that followed them was CHRIST.

No more then to doe with the ſacrifice pecoris trucidati, of the ſlaine beaſts; that is paſt: but cordis contriti, with the ſacrifice of a broken and contrite heart: that was from the beginning, and ſo ſhall continue acceptable to God even to the end: the ſpirituall ſacrifice, or the ſacrifice of the ſoule and ſpirit, that is it, which GOD ever accepted in the ſacrifice of His Sonne CHRIST, even from the firſt Adam, to the laſt Son of Adam, the laſt man that ſhall live at the laſt day. And GOD hath been and is weary of carnall and externall ſacrifice, and neglected, yea, rejected it, for default and want of the inward ſacrifice, but of this inward and ſpirituall ſacrifice GOD will never be wearied with it.

In vocall prayer, and faſting, and outward almes, and the like, there may be Nimium, too much; but of inward prayer and faſting from ſin, and compaſſion and mercy, there can can never be nimium, too much; nay, not satis, not enough; for GOD cals for all, and all we are not able to performe which we owe. So then, the sacrificia must be talia: such sacrifices, that is, spirituall.

And they be sacrificia; in the plurall number, sacrifices the sacrifice representative, or memoriall of CHRIST's sacrifice, the Eucharist, which is truly the sacrifice of praise; and the daily sacrifice, of our selves, our soules and bodies in devotion and adoration to GOD. And the sacrifice of Mercy and Almes (both here recorded) these be the sacrifices here mentioned that please GOD: and all others not here mentioned, that are included in the talibus: in such like sacrifices, GOD is pleased.

And be the number of them as great as any man please to make them, yet because they are all reducible to three, I will comprise them in the number of three. First, Sacrificium cordis contriti, the sacrifice of the contrite and broken heart, as before, which we tender to God in our Repentance, and sighes and teares for our sinnes. 1 The second, Sacrificium cordis grati, the sacrifice of the thankfull heart, in praise & thanksgiving to GOD, called here, the sacrifice of praise. 2 The third, Sacrificium cordis pii, the sacrifice of a pious and mercifull heart, in compassion and workes of Mercy, and Almes-deeds, called here, doing good and distributing. 3

All these, and every one of these, which are indeed but the variations, or divers affections of one and the same heart, they are the talia sacrificia: such sacrifices which GOD accepts: Saint Bernard was a skilfull confectioner, he made three rare and most odoriferous Oyntments of them, most pleasing unto GOD Himselfe: The first, Unguentum contritionis, the oyntment of contrition, made of the sighes of the heart, and the teares of the eyes, the confession and prayers of the tongue, the revenge, the judgement, and execution done upon our owne soules, for our sinnes: And this compunction in heart, though it be all made of bitter and sharpe poynant ingredients, yet the more sowre it is, the sweeter and more welcome it is to GOD. 1 The second is Unguentum pietatis: the oyntment of piety and compassion, made up of the miseries and the wants of the poore, wherein the greater is the miserie, the greater is the mercy; and the more fellow-feeling and compassion of the pressures of the poore, the more odoriferous is this sacrifice to pacifie GOD's wrath. 2 The third is Unguentum devotionis, the oyntment of Devotion, which spends it selfe in praise and thanksgiving, by the remembrance of His manifold blessings and graces, which cannot but be acceptable unto GOD, because though praise and glory be nothing unto GOD, who cannot be encreased by the breath of a mortall man; yet because it is all the Rent & tribute that man can render to his GOD, whereof to rob GOD is the greatest sacriledge, it is an oyntment most welcome to GOD; the rather, because man ever did himselfe the most hurt, when he kept glory backe from GOD and ascribed it to himselfe. In the LI. Psalme, The Oyntment of Contrition is accepted of God, with a Non despicies: the sacrifice of the broken and contrite heart, God will not despise. The Oyntment of compassion in this place, is accepted of God, with delectatur Deus: with such sacrifices God is pleased, The Oyntment of Praise goes somewhat higher with an Honorificat me: he that offers me praise he honoureth me, Psal. L. So the contrite heart, the mercifull heart, and the thankfull heart; Talibus sacrificiis, with such sacrifices God is pleased: all of these together, and every one of these severally, and all others like unto these, they doe pacifie, and please, and delight God Himselfe.

Placatur or conciliatur, God is pacified or reconciled, as some reade: Delectatur, God is pleased or delighted. Hilarescit, or pulchrescit, God is cheered or lookes upon us with a serene or pleasant countenance: but the Vulgar will have it Promeretur Deus, God is promerited, in favour of merits. I will not much stand upon the word; be it promeretur, in the Fathers sense, in which, merit is via obtinendi, the way and meanes of obtaining, the matter is not great.

But the word in the proper sense, signifies no more but this, that God is pleased, or at most pacified with such sacrifices: and this is remarkable, that the same word, Hebr, XI. VI. ſignifies onely, GOD is well pleaſed, when it is ſpoken of faith. For, without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe GOD, εὐαρεστῆσαι: but here εὐαρεστῆσαι, muſt be Promeriti, as if workes were more meritorious than faith: when all the merits of workes proceed from grace and faith, as the goodneſſe of the fruit is from the root, and the ſappe thereof. And ſo, GOD may be both pacified & pleaſed, and yet no merit in us, but acceptation in GOD: for the beſt workes and ſacrifices and righteouſneſſe in man, are ſo farre from true merit, out of any dignitie, or condignity of the worke, that they cannot ſtand before GOD without mercy and grace. The beſt and moſt laudable life of the beſt man, hath a Va, or VVoe, lying upon it, Si ſine miſericordiâ diſcutiatur, if it come to be diſcuſſed without mercy: and in the diſtinct judgement of GOD, no man, no not the man after Gods owne heart dare enter, but prayes againſt it, Ne intres in judicium cum ſervo tuo, Enter not into judgement with thy ſervant O LORD (Pſalme CXLIV. III.) and why? For, no fleſh is righteous in thy ſight: no fleſh, no man righteous or juſtified, then ſurely no true merit.

Braſſe or copper money may be made currant by the Kings Proclamation, but ſtill it is but braſſe and copper, and wants of the true value of Gold and ſilver: and good workes, and to doe good and diſtribute, may goe for currant, by GOD's promiſe, & receive a reward out of juſtice, but Iuſtice with mercy: for, there is Iuſtitia in reddendo, Iuſtice in giving the Crowne according to his promiſe: but there is Miſericordia in promittendo; Mercy that triumpheth over juſtice, in promiſing to give an infinite reward, to a finite worke, as heaven for a Cup of cold water, or bread, or drinke, or clothes and the like: and betweene the kingdome of heaven, and the crowne of glory, and eternall life, which is infinite, and a few crummes, or drops, or rags, which are ſcant ſo much as finite, there is no equality. Inter finitum & infinitum nulla eſt proportio: there is no proportion betweene that which is finite, and that which is infinite. So that as much as infinite doth exceed that which is finite, ſo much doth GOD's infinite rewards, exceed the beſt finete workes, of the beſt man. And the Rule of the Schoole in this is true: GOD puniſhes citra condignum, leſſe than we deſerve; ſo there is mercy in GOD's Iuſtice and puniſhments: and GOD rewards ultra meritum, beyond our merit or deſert; and ſo eternall life is the grace and free gift of God.

1 Inſomuch that we may thus reſolve; Firſt, Non tenetur Deus: GOD is not bound
2 to give us any reward for any dignity or worthineſſe of our workes. Secondly, Non Meremur nos, we deſerve nothing, but are unprofitable ſervants, and our beſt workes are unperfect, and fall ſhort of that perfection that Law and Iuſtice doe require. And thirdly, Non deerit tamen Deus: though GOD be not bound, and man merits
3 not, yet GOD never failed any man, that did doe any good worke, but he was ſure of his reward. For, though we be bound to good workes ex debito, of duty: God commands them, and requires an account of them: yet God is not bound to reward them ex debito, out of any debt owing to us for them; but onely ex pacto, out of His promiſe, and agreement. For, eternall life is not a reward which men may exact and require in Iuſtice at Gods hands, for his labour and hire; but it is His free gift: and therefore He calleth it not tuum, thine, but Meum, mine owne; May I not doe what I liſt with my owne.

What is the reaſon the Prophet ſaith (Pſal. LXXI. XVI.) O Lord, Memorabor Iuſtitiæ tuæ ſolius, I will remember thy righteouſneſſe only, but becauſe there is no other righteouſneſſe worth the remembring, but only thy righteouſneſſe only: that righte-Eſay 64.6. ouſneſſe that is à Domino, inherent in us by ſanctification of the gifts and graces of the LORD, is not worth the remembrance, for it is a defiled cloth, and dung in it ſelfe; and were it never ſo good, God hath no need of it; nay, being offred to God, He is nothing increaſed by it. If thou do all good works, Deus meus es, & bonorum meorum non indiges: Thou art my God (ſaith David, Pſal. XVII. II.) my goods, and therein are his good workes alſo, are nothing to thee: God is not increaſed or inriched by them. If thou doe commit all manner of ſins with all manner of greedineſſe, thou canſt not defile God, nor take any thing from him; thy evill cannot decreaſe or diminiſh him. But it is Iuſtitia in Domino, Righteouſnes in the Lord (that is) Chriſt's righteouſneſſe communicated municated, or imputed to us; for CHRIST is made to us wisdome from GOD, and Iustice, or righteousnesse and sanctification and redemption, and Hee doth not say fecit nos, He made us righteous in the concrete; but factus est nobis, He was made righteousnesse to us in the abstract, becauſe He communicates His righteouſnes to us, and thereby covers our nakednesse, as Iacob clothed in his elder brothers garments received the blessing. And therefore the Name of the Sonne of GOD is IEHOVAH Iustitia nostra, The Lord our righteousnesse. 1 Cor. 1. Ierem. 23. 6.

Besides, no man is accepted or well pleasing to GOD for his workes sake, but rather the worke is accepted for the workemans sake: as GOD first Respexit Abelem, He respected or accepted of Abels person; and then followes & sacrificium ejus, and then his sacrifice: For, GOD cares not for Abels lambe, but becauſe Abel the lambe offered it; his heart and willing readinesse to offer a lambe, was pleasing, and He accepted the sacrifice. As in the Father of the Faithfull, GOD could not accept the sacrifice of Isaac, becauſe he was not sacrificed facto, sed voto or voluntate: not in deed, but only in vow, and will, and purpose: in him, Voluntas reputatur pro facto, his will was accepted for the sacrifice.

And in Cain's sacrifice, GOD made no difference betweene the lambe and the sheafe of corne, both which were after commanded equally in the Law, and the Panes propositionis were ever joyned with a lambe. The difference was, he offered his eares of corne, but not himselfe: and therefore the words be, ad Cain verò, & ad munera ejus non respexit, But to Cain, and to his offering GOD had not respect: He accepted not his person, and therefore He regarded not his sacrifice. And therefore the Ancient say: That either of them offered parem cultu & religione hostiam, an equall sacrifice in respect of Religion, and the worship of GOD: Sed non rectè uterq; divisit: Cain made an ill division, he offered the fruits of the earth to GOD; Cor retinuit sibi, seipsum non obtulit; he reserved his heart to himselfe, and he offered not himselfe to GOD: but Abel first offered himselfe to GOD, and then his lambe. Rupert. in Gen. lib. 4 cap. 2.

And so Saint Paul's words are true; Abel offered a greater sacrifice to GOD than Cain. Greater first, Quia hostia copiosior; becauſe he offered a double sacrifice, himselfe and his lambe: but Cain only offered his corne. Secondly, Quia excellentior: he offered a more excellent sacrifice, better chosen, becauſe de adipibus, of the fattest, and best of the flocke: Cain carelesly tooke that came first to hand; de fructibus, of the fruit, and no more. Thirdly, Quia ex fide: by faith he offered it; and that faith justified him and his sacrifice, becauſe he beleeved in the Seed of the Woman, that should bruise the serpents head. And so it is true, dignitas operantis, the faith and piety of the sacrificer, and worker, dignitatem confert operi, conferres all the worth to the worke, For if an Heathen or Turke doe the same worke of Almes or mercy that the faithfull Christian doth, it shall passe without all regard; whereas the faithfull heart and person makes the worke of the hand acceptable to the Lord.

So then sacrifices of goodnesse and Almes or distribution there must be, they are necessary to Salvation in them that have time and opportunitie, and meanes: and therefore sufficit ad pœnam meritis carere, It is sufficient to punish us, if wee want good workes. But there can be no trust or confidence placed in them; for, they are unperfect and defective, and therefore merit nothing at GOD's hand out of Iustice, but onely are accepted out of GOD's mercie, and the infinite Merit of CHRIST, which is equall to His Person that is infinite, as Hee is the eternall Sonne of GOD: and therefore, Sufficit ad præmium, demeritis non præsumere; the greatest part of the dignitie of the best workes, of the best men, is to renounce all trust and confidence in our selves, and our best workes, and to repose all our hope in the mercy and merits of CHRIST.

Now to returne to the use of the word [Promeretur:] in Antiquity, I remember Saint Cyprian useth it not for the dignity and merit of the best worke, but onely for the way or meanes of obtaining. For, reading that place of Saint Paul, 1 Tim. I. XIII. [But I obtained mercy, becauſe I did it ignorantly in unbeleefe:] he reades it thus: Sed Misericordiam merui: But I merited Mercie: what was Merui, in Epiſt.73. N.11. Saint Cyprian's ſenſe, but I obtained mercy, and ſo the Vulgar reads that place.

Againe, ſpeaking of thoſe that were baptized, and ſigned in the fore-head with the ſign of the Croſſe, he ſaith of Ozias the Leper, that he was maculated with leproſy, in that part of his body in which they are ſigned, qui Dominum promerentur, which promerit the LORD; ſo would our Rhemiſts reade it: But the true underſtanding is, they that promerited the LORD, that is, they that enter Covenant with the LORD in Baptiſme (de unitate Eccleſiæ, Num.16.) And I preſume, rather the keeping the Covenant, than the entring ſhould be meritorious, if there be any merit at all.

And Saint Auguſtine (de gratiâ, & libero arbitrio, cap. 5. & 6.) ſpeaking of Saint Paul, ſaith; Meritum fuit in Paulo, ſed malum; in Paul, there was merit, but evill merit, when he perſecuted the Church, and received good for it. And after; Let us returne to the Apoſtle, whom we finde without any good merits (Sine ullis bonis meritis, imo cum multis malis meritis) yea with many evill merits, to have obtained the grace of GOD: and then he adds, Vt poſt bona merita conſequatur coronam, qui poſt mala merita conſecutus eſt gratiam; that after his good merits obtained the crowne, who after his evill merits had obtained grace. 1. Here, firſt it is plaine, merit is joyned in both with obtaining. 2. Againe, Merits are good, and merits are bad: the word is common to both. 3. Merit ſignifies in Saint Auguſtines ſenſe, no dignity of worke, but onely a meanes of obtaining. For, it is impoſſible, that evill merit (that is, ſinne) out of the dignity of the worke ſhould merit grace; and by the ſame proportion and forme of ſpeech, it is as impoſſible, that the dignity of the worke ſhould merit a crowne; ſince Saint Auguſtine in the ſame place doth ſay, There would be none unto whom GOD the juſt Iudge, redderet coronam; ſhould render a crowne, unleſſe firſt, as a mercifull Father, donâßet gratiam, He had given His grace: And then he adds Dona ſua coronat Deus, non merita tua; GOD crownes not thy merit, but His owne gifts: His reaſon is, for, if they be ſuch (that is, thine) they are evill, and if they be evill, GOD crownes them not; if they be good, they are GOD's gifts, and He crownes them not as thy merits, but as His owne gifts, cap.7.

But I have troubled you too long with this Schoole-Doctrine, and Pulpit divinity of magnifying mans merits, before men, ſince their death-bed divinity recants it all; and then, they are all forced, learned and ignorant, utterly to renounce it, and put all their truſt in CHRIST'S mercy and merits, as their ſure Anchor-head: Of which I have onely this to ſay; that merit may have ſome place in their ſcience, but their owne conſciences, unleſſe they be feared, tell them, there is no true merit, but CHRIST'S onely.

Application. I have now done with my Text: and now I apply my ſelfe and my Text to the preſent Text, that lyes before us: Vir nec ſilendus, nec dicendus ſine curâ, A man whoſe worth may not be paſſed over in ſilence, whom all ages with us may celebrate and admire; nor to be ſpoken of without great care and ſtudy: Of whom I can ſay nothing, but his worth and vertues will farre exceed all mens words. Here I deſire neither the tongue of man, nor Angels: if it were lawfull, I ſhould wiſh no other but his owne tongue and pen, Ipſe, Ipſe quem loquar, loquatur: let him ſpeake of himſelfe, none ſo fit as himſelfe was, of whom I am to ſpeake this day. Et jam loquitur, And he now ſpeakes: Hee ſpeakes in his learned Workes and Sermons, and hee ſpeakes in his life and workes of mercy; and he ſpeakes in his death: And what hee taught in his life and workes, he taught and expreſſed in his death. Hee is the great Actor and performer, I but the poore cryer, Vox clamantis, He was the Vox clamans: he was the loud and great crying voice, I am but the poore Eccho: and it is well with me, if as an Eccho, of his large and learned bookes and workes, I onely repeat a few of the laſt words.

No man can blame me, if I commend him at his death, whoſe whole life was every way commendable: Iuſtus ſine mendacio candor, apud bonos crimini non eſt; Iuſt commend-

commendation without flattery, is no fault in the opinion of the beſt men: And the ancient cuſtome of the Church, did celebrate the memories of holy men, to the praiſe of GOD that gave ſuch eminent graces to them, and to ſtirre up others by their example to the Imitation of their vertues.

I ſpeake my knowledge of him in many things: I loved, and honoured him for above thirty yeares ſpace. I loved him I confeſſe, but yet Iudicio meo non obſtat Amor, qui ex judicio natus eſt; my love doth not blinde or out-ſway my Iudgement, becauſe it proceeded from Iudgement. Of whom what can I ſay leſſe, than that hee was vitâ innocentiſsimus, ingenio florentiſsimus, & propoſito ſanctiſsimus: In his life moſt innocent, in his knowledge and learning moſt flouriſhing and eminent, and in his purpoſe and life moſt holy and devout: whoſe carriage was ſo happy, Quem nemo vituperat, niſi etiam laudet; no man could ever diſcommend him, but will he nill he, he muſt withall commend him. And no mans words were ever able to diſgrace him: Vera, neceſſe eſt benedicat; falſam vita moréſque ſuperant: They that ſpake trueth of him, could not but ſpeak well of him; and if they ſpake falſely of him, his life and manners did confute them.

And if this Text were ever fully applied in any, I preſume it was in him; for, he was totus in his ſacrificijs; he wholly ſpent himſelfe, and his ſtudies, and eſtate in theſe ſacrifices, in prayer and the praiſe of GOD, and compaſsion and works of charity, as if he had minded nothing elſe, all his life long, but this, to offer himſelfe, his ſoule and body a contrite and a broken heart, a pitifull and compaſsionate heart, and a thankefull and gratefull heart, a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to GOD, by IESUS CHRIST, which is our reaſonable ſervice of Him.

He was borne in this City of London, of honeſt aud godly parents; who beſides his breeding in learning, left him a ſufficient patrimony & inheritance, which is deſcended to his heire, at Rawreth in Eſſex. It is true: Senum vita compoſita, the lives of old men, many times are orderly and well compoſed, and diſpoſed, and ſtayed; whereas in youth, many things that are in true judgement not altogether decent, are not ſo indecent in them, but that they well enough become their younger yeares: In this, hee was happy, Hujus vita compoſita à pueritiâ. His life was well compoſed and ordered even from his child-hood. I may well ſay of him, as the Prophet doth; Bonum eſt portare Iugum Domini ab Adoleſcentiâ: herein was his happineſſe, that he tooke up, and did ſtoutly beare the yoke of the Lord even from his youth.

In his tendereſt yeares, he ſhewed ſuch readineſſe and ſharpenes of wit and capacity, that his teachers and Maſters fore-ſaw in him, that he would prove lumen literarum & literatorum: The burning and ſhining Candle of all learning and learned men. And therefore, thoſe two firſt Maſters, that had the care of the firſt elements of his learning (M. Ward of Ratcliffe, and M. Mulcaſter, of the Merchant-Taylors Schoole) contended for him, who ſhould have the honour of his breeding, that after became the honour of their Schooles, and all learning. M. Ward firſt obtained of his parents, that hee ſhould not be a prentiſe: and at length M. Mulcaſter got him to his Schoole: and from this time, perit omne tempus quod ſtudijs non impenditur, hee accounted all that time loſt, that he ſpent not in his ſtudies, wherein in learning he outſtript all his equalls; and his indefatigable induſtry, had almoſt outſtript himſelfe: He ſtudied ſo hard when others played, that if his Parents and maſters had not forced him to play with them alſo, all the play had been marred. His late ſtudying by candle, & earely riſing at 4 in the morning, procured him envy among his equals, yea, with the uſhers alſo, becauſe he called them up too ſoone: Not like to our moderne ſcholars, qui nondum heſternam edormiverunt crapulam; who at ſeven and eight of the clocke, have their heads and ſtomacks aking, becauſe they have not yet ſlept out their laſt nights ſurfets and fulneſſe.

Their paines and care, he ſo carefully remembred all his life long, that he ſtudied alwayes how to doe good to them and theirs. In which gratefulneſſe he promoted Doctor Ward to the Parſonage of Waltham: and ever loved and honoured his Maſter Mulcaſter Mulcaſter during his life, and was a continuall helper to him, and his Sonne Peter Mulcaſter, to whom he gave a legacy of twenty pound by his Will: And as if he had made M. Mulcaſter his Tutor or Superviſor, he placed his picture over the doore of his Studie: whereas in all the reſt of his houſe, you could ſcantly ſee a picture.

From Maſter Mulcaſter hee went to Cambridge, to Pembroke-Hall, and was there admitted one of Doctor Wats Scholars: a notable Grammarian, well entered in the Latine, Greeke, and Hebrew tongues, and likewiſe in the Geometry, and ſome of the Mathematicks: and after a Fellow there, in which hee paſſed over all Degrees and Places in ſuch ſort, Vt majoribus ſemper dignus haberetur; hee ever ſeemed worthy of higher and greater Places, and would in the end attaine the higheſt: Virtutes enim ejus matura erant; for his abilities and vertues were mature, and ripe for greater imployments.

And in this hee owed little to his Tutors, but moſt to his owne paines and ſtudy. In which, give mee leave to remember one thing which hee hath often lamented himſelfe to mee and others, that he never could finde a fit opportunity to ſhew his thankefulneſſe to Doctor Wats, his Patron, nor to any of his poſterity: Yet he did not utterly forget him in his Will, having ordered that the two fellowſhips to be founded by him in Pembroke-Hall, ſhould alwayes be choſen and filled, out of the Scholars of Doctor Wats Foundation, if they were found fit, of which himſelfe had beene one.

Being in holy Orders, he attended the Noble and zealous Henry Earle of Huntington, Preſident of Yorke, and was imployed by him in often preaching, and conference with Recuſants, both of the Clergie, and Laitie; In which, God ſo bleſt his endeavours, that he converted ſome of the Prieſts, and many of the Laitie; with great ſucceſſe; bringing many to the Church, and ſeldome looſing his labour; none ever converting ſo many as he did.

After this M. Secretary Walſingham takes notice of him, and obtained him of the Earle, intending his preferment, in which he would never permit him to take any Country-benefice, leſt he and his great learning ſhould be buried in a Countrey-Church. His intent was to make him Reader of Controverſies in Cambridge, and for his maintenance he aſſigned to him (as I am informed) the Leaſe of the Parſonage of Alton, in Hampſhire, which after his death he returned to his Lady, which ſhee never knew, nor thought of.

After this, he obtained the Vicarage of Saint Giles without Creeple-Gate, London, and a Prebend Reſidentiaries place in Pauls, and was choſen Maſter of Pembroke-Hall; and afterward was advanced to the Deanry of Weſtminſter: and all this without all ambition or ſuite of his owne: God turning the hearts of his friends to promote him for his great worth.

When he tooke the degree of D. D. in Cambridge, one of his queſtions was, that Decimæ debentur jure divino: which he betrayed not, as ſome have done, but made it good by Scriptures, and divine and naturall reaſon, as will appeare to the Reader, when that, among other of his Workes, ſhall enrich the Engliſh Church, with a happy treaſure of learning.

He was, as all our Engliſh world well knowes, a ſingular Preacher, and a moſt famous Writer. He was ſo ſingular a Preacher, and ſo profound a Writer, that you will doubt in which he did excell: whoſe weapons in the mouthes of the adverſaries proved as ſtones in the teeth of dogs; while they thought to withſtand or anſwere them, they bit the ſtones and brake their owne teeth: and ſo it is true of him, Reſponſa ejus ſine reſponſionibus, His anſwers were anſwerleſſe: Never durſt any Romaniſts anſwere him; as their common uſe is, that which they cannot anſwere and confute, they ſlight it, and let it paſſe without any anſwere at all.

His admirable knowledge in the learned tongues, Latine, Greeke, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriack, Arabick, beſides other moderne Tongues to the number of fifteene (as I am informed) was ſuch & ſo rare, that he may well be ranked in the firſt place, to be one of the rareſt Linguiſts in Chriſtendom; In which, he was ſo perfect & abſolute, both for Grammar and profound knowledge therein, that he was ſo perfect in the Grammar and Criticiſmes of them, as if he had utterly neglected the matter it ſelfe; and yet he was ſo exquiſite and ſound in the matter and learning of theſe Tongues, as if he had never regarded the Grammar.

Scientia magna, Memoria major, Iudicium maximum: his Knowledge was great and rare, his Memory greater, and his Iudgement profoundeſt and greateſt of all; and over and above all theſe, Induſtria infinita, his paines and induſtry was infinite: For in the things the world hath ſeene, he uſed no man to reade for him; as thoſe great Clerks, Bellarmine, and others faſhion is, to imploy whole Colledges and Societies to ſtudie and reade for them, and ſo furniſh them; he onely uſed an Amanuenſis, to tranſcribe that, which himſelfe had firſt written with his owne hand.

So that now I may propoſe him, Vt exemplum ſine exemplo maximum, as a great Example example-leſſe: Nec ante eum, quem ille imitaretur; nec poſt eum, qui eum imitari & aſſequi poſsit, inventus eſt: There was none before him, whom he did imitate: nor none will come, after him, that will eaſily overtake him: Inſomuch that his great gifts may well be taken, a little to cloud and over-ſhadow and obſcure all men of his Age and Order: and ſurely the fame of this ſingular Biſhop will become ſuch a light to all poſterity, Vt nec bona eorum, nec mala latere patietur, twill not ſuffer neither there good, nor, their evill to lye hid.

Was his fame great? Major inventus eſt, Hee was ever found to be greater than fame made him. In which as he was a wonderfull Mirrour of learning and learned men, ſo he was a ſingular Lover and encourager of learning and learned men: which appeared in his liberality and bounty to Maſter Cauſabon, Maſter Cluverius, Maſter Voſsius, Maſter Grotius, Maſter Erpenius, whom he attempted with the offer of a very large ſtipend, of his owne purſe, to draw into England; to have reade and taught the Orientall tongues here: even as one well ſaid, Omnes quod in ſe amant, in alijs venerantur: thoſe gifts and knowledges, which he loved in himſelfe, he honoured and rewarded in others.

When the Biſhoprickes of Ely and Salisbury were void, and ſome things were to be pared from them, ſome overture being made to him to take them, hee refuſed them utterly: If it pleaſe you to give me leave, I will make his anſwer for him; Nolo Epiſcopari, quia nolo alienare, I will not be made a Biſhop, becauſe I will not alienate Biſhops lands.

After this, by ſome perſwaſion he accepted of Chicheſter; yet with ſome feare of the burden: and after that, of Ely; and laſt of this of Wincheſter; whence GOD hath tranſlated him to heaven: in which he freed himſelfe and his Succeſſor of a penſion of foure hundred pound per annum, which many of his Predeceſſors had paid. He was Almoner, Deane of the Chappell, and a Privie Councellor to King Iames, and King Charles: In which he ſpake and medled little in Civill and Temporall affaires, being out of his profeſſion and element: but in cauſes that any wayes concerned the Church and his Calling, hee ſpake fully and home to the purpoſe; that he made all know, that he underſtood and could ſpeake, when it concerned him, as by thoſe few ſpeeches which are preſerved, you may judge, ex ungue leonem, a wiſe man by his words and deeds.

And herein he was like the Arke of GOD: all places where it reſted were bleſſed by the preſence of GOD in it; ſo, whereſoever he came and lived, they all taſted and were bettered by his providence and goodneſſe. Saint Giles was reduced to him by a Rate toward the better maintenance of the place, and the houſe repaired. He found nothing in the Treaſury in Pembroke-Hall; he left in it, in ready mony a thouſand pound. Being Prebend Reſidentiary in Pauls, he built the Houſe in Creed-lane, belonging to his Prebend, and recovered it to the Church. He repaired the Deanes lodging in Weſtminſter. When he came to Chicheſter, he repaired the Palace there, and the houſe in Aldingbourne. At Ely, he ſpent in Reparation of Ely-houſe in Holborne, of Ely-palace, at Downham, and Wiſbich Caſtle two thouſand pound. At Wincheſter-houſe, at Farneham, at VValtham, and VVolveſey, likewiſe two thouſand pound.

It

It ſeemes plainely, he loved the Churches in which he was promoted and lived, better than he did his money, or his owne gaine. For if we conſider theſe expences in his Epiſcopall Houſes, and his moſt magnificent entertainment of his moſt gracious Soveraign King IAMES, at Farneham, where in three dayes he ſpent three thouſand pound; as great and bountifull entertainment as ever King IAMES received at a Subjects hand: beſides he refuſed to make ſome Leaſes in his laſt yeares, which might have beene very beneficiall to him, for the good of his Succeſſors; his reaſon was, Many are too ready to ſpoyle Biſhopricks, and few enough to uphold them: Adde to theſe the many Almes hee gave in his life, and now at his death, and wee ſhall ſee he was free from all avarice and love of money. In him, is true that word of Saint Iohn, Nolite diligere mundum: he doth not ſay, Nolite habere, but Nolite diligere, Love not the world: he doth not ſay, have not, poſſeſſe not the world, or goods of the world; but love them not: He had them, but he loved them not: Vt diſpenſator, ut Erogator; he had them but as a Steward to diſpoſe and expend them, to procure an everlaſting Tabernacle in the higheſt heavens.

He medled little with them, but left the taking of his accounts from his Officers to his Brothers: and when he began his Will at Waltham a yeare before his death, he underſtood not his owne eſtate; nay till about ſix weekes before his death, when his Accounts were delivered up and perfected, he did not fully know his owne eſtate: & therfore in his firſt draught of his Will, he gave but little to his kindred, doubting he might give away more than he had, and therefore in a Codicill annexed to his Will he doubled all his legacies to them, and made every hundred to be two hundred, & every two hundred to be foure hundred: And yet notwithſtanding this encreaſe, hee gave more to the maintenance of learning, and the poore, than to his kindred: His charity and love of GOD and the poore, was greater in him, than Naturall affection; and yet he forgot not his naturall affection to them.

It was ſaid of him, that in his time was held to be Deliciæ hominum (Titus,) Abſtinuit alieno, ut ſi quis unquam: If ever any man abſtained from that which was not his owne, he was the man. This is as true of this moſt Reverend Prelate: he never tooke any mans goods, or right from him. Give me leave to adde a little more of him: Diſtribuit ſua, ut ſi quis unquam; If ever any ſtudied to diſperſe and diſtribute his owne, either to kindred or to the poore, ſurely this is the Man.

Neither did he ſtay to doe good & diſtribute till his death, that is, then gave his goods to the poore, when he could keepe them no longer: The firſt place he lived on, was Saint Giles; there, I ſpeake my knowledge, I doe not ſay, he began; ſure I am, he continued his charity: his certaine Almes there, was ten pound per annum; which was payed quarterly by equall portions, and twelve pence every Sunday hee came to Church, and five ſhillings at every Communion: and for many yeares, ſince he left that Cure, he ſent five pound, about Chriſtmaſſe, beſides the number of gownes given to the poore of that Pariſh when he was Almoner. And I have reaſon to preſume the like of thoſe other pariſhes mentioned in his Will, to which he alſo gave Legacies: to Saint Giles an hundred pound, where he had beene Vicar. To Alhallowes Barkin, where he was borne, twentie pound. To Saint Martins Ludgate, where he dwelt, five pound. To Saint Andrewes in Holborne where Ely-houſe ſtands ten pound. And to this Pariſh, of Saint Saviours in Southwarke where he died, twenty pound: which Pariſhes he hath remembred, for his Almes to the poore, when the land ſhall be purchaſed for the reliefe and uſe of the poore.

When he came to Oxford, attending King IAMES in the end of his progreſſe, his cuſtome was to ſend fifty pound to be diſtributed among poore Scholars. And the like hee did at Cambridge, in his Iourney to Ely. And leaſt his left hand ſhould know what his right hand did, he ſent great Almes to many poore places, under other mens names; and he ſtayed not till the poore ſought him, for he firſt ſought them (as his ſervants imployed in that ſervice can witneſſe) as appeared at Farneham, at Waltham and Wincheſter: And in the laſt yeare of great Sickneſſe, hee gave in this Pariſh of Saint Saviours, an hundred Marks. Beſides, ſince the yeare one thouſand ſix hundred and twentie, twenty, as I have my information from him, that kept his bookes of Accounts, and delivered him the money, he gave in private Almes to the ſumme of one thouſand three hundred and forty pounds.

The totall of his pious and charitable works mentioned in his Will, amounts to the ſumme of ſix thouſand three hundred twenty ſix pounds. Of which, to Pembrooke-Hall, for the erection of two Fellowſhips, and other uſes mentioned in the Codicill, a thouſand pound, to buy fifty pound Land per Annum, to that purpoſe. Beſide a Baſon and Ewer, like that of their Foundreſſe, and ſome Bookes.

To buy two hundred pound per Annum, foure thouſand pound : Viz. for aged poore men, fifty pound per Annum : for poore widdowes, the wives of one husband, fifty pound : for the putting of poore Orphants to prentiſe, fifty pound : to priſoners, fifty pound.

He was alwayes a diligent and painfull Preacher : moſt of his Solemne Sermons he was moſt carefull of, and exact ; I dare ſay, few of them, but they paſſed his hand, and were thriſe reviſed, before they were preached : and he ever miſliked often and looſe preaching, without ſtudy of Antiquity : and he would be bold with himſelfe, and ſay, when he preached twiſe a day at Saint Giles, he prated once : And when his weakneſſe grew on him, and that by infirmity of his body he grew unable to preach, he began to go little to the Court, not ſo much for weakneſſe, as for inability to preach.

After he came to have an Epiſcopall houſe with a Chappell, he kept monethly Communions inviolably ; yea, though himſelf had received at the Court, the ſame moneth. In which, his carriage was not only decent and Religious, but alſo exemplary : hee ever offered twiſe at the Altar, and ſo did every one of his Servants, to which purpoſe he gave them money, leſt it ſhould be burthenſome to them.

Now before I come to his laſt end, give me leave to tell you, that privately he did much finde fault and reproove three ſins, too common, and reigning in this later age. 1. Vſury was one, from which, what by his Sermons, what by private conference, he withdrew many : 2. Another was Simony, for which he endured many troubles by Quare Impedit, and Duplex querela : as for himſelfe, he ſeldome gave a Benefice or preferment to him that petitioned or made ſuit for it : he rather ſent for men of note, that he thought wanted preferment, and gave them Prebends, and Benefices, under Seale, before they knew of it ; as to M. Boys, and M. Fuller : The 3. and greateſt was Sacriledge, which he did abhorre, as one principall cauſe among many, of the forren and Civill warres in Chriſtendome, and invaſion of the Turke. Wherein even the reformed, and otherwiſe the true profeſſours and ſervants of CHRIST, becauſe they tooke GOD's portion, and turned it to publike prophane uſes, or to private advancements, did ſuffer juſt chaſtiſement and correction at GOD's hand : And at home it had beene obſerved, and he wiſhed ſome man would take the paines to collect, how many Families, that were raiſed by the ſpoiles of the Church, were now vaniſhed, and the place thereof knowes them no more.

And now I draw to an end. GOD's Houſe is truly called, and is indeed, Domus Orationis, the Houſe of Prayer, it accompanies all acts done in GOD's Houſe : of this Reverend Prelate, I may ſay, vita ejus, vita orationis, his life was a life of prayer : A great part of five houres every day, did he ſpend in prayer and devotion to GOD. After the death of his Brother M. Thomas Andrewes, in the ſickneſſe time, whom he loved dearely, he began to foretell his owne death, before the end of ſummer, or before the beginning of winter. And when his Brother M. Nicholas Andrews died, he tooke that as a certaine ſigne and prognoſticke, and warning of his owne death, and from that time till the houre of his diſſolution, he ſpent all his time in prayer ; and his prayer booke, when he was private, was ſeldome ſeene out of his hands : and in the time of his feaver and laſt ſickneſſe, beſides the often prayers which were read to him, in which he repeated all the parts of the Confeſſion and other petitions, with an audible voyce, as long as his ſtrength endured, he did (as was well obſerved by certaine tokens in him) continually pray to himſelfe, though he ſeemed otherwiſe to reſt or

ſlumber: And when he could pray no longer voce, with his voice, yet oculis & manibus, by lifting up his eyes and hands he prayed ſtill: and when nec manus, nec vox officium faciunt; both voice, and eyes, and hands failed in their office; then Corde, with his heart he ſtill prayed, untill it pleaſed GOD to receive his bleſſed ſoule to himſelfe.

And ſo, hujus mortalitas magis finita, quàm vita; his Mortality had an end, and hee died peaceably and quietly in the LORD, but his life ſhall have no end: yea, then his life did begin, when his Mortality made an end; that was Natalis his birth-day, September XXV. being Munday about foure of the clock in the morning. So died he aliorum majore damno, quàm ſuo; with greater damage to others; even to all this Engliſh Church and all Chriſtendome, than to himſelfe: And GOD grant that many ages may be ſo happy to bring forth and enjoy ſuch a Prelate, ſo furniſhed with all endowments of learning and knowledge, with innocency and holineſſe of life, and with ſuch piety and charity, as he ſhewed in his life and death.

My concluſion is ſhort. I have ſpoken ſomewhat of this moſt Reverend Prelate, but much ſhort of his graces and worth. In ſumme thus much: In his life he was Concionator & Scriptor potentiſsimus; a moſt powerfull Preacher, and Writer: in his deeds and actions he was potentior & diuturnior; more powerfull and laſting. Death hath bereaved us of him: but his life, and his works of learning, and his works of piety and charity, I doubt not but GOD in His goodneſſe will make them Monumentum ære perennius; a Monument more laſting than braſſe, and ſtone, even to the comming of our LORD CHRIST.

For, no doubt while he lived he ſowed the ſincere Word of life in the ſoules of men; and in his life and death, poſuit eleemoſynam in ſinu pauperis; he put his Almes into the boſome of the poore: and ſhall I ſay, Oravit pro eo; it prayed for him, and by it hee procured himſelfe a ſtrong Armie, and bellatores fortes, valiant ſouldiers, whoſe many prayers and bleſſings GOD could not reſiſt, the rather becauſe they knew him not? that is too ſhort, and the Text goes farther, Exoravit; it ſhall pray and prevaile too: and he and they have prevailed, and he is now at reſt and peace in heaven, and followes the Lamb whereſoever he goes.

And after him let us all ſend this bleſſing which the voyce from heaven uttered, Apoc 14. 13. Write, Bleſſed are the dead, which dye in the LORD. For the LORD, there was no cauſe he ſhould die; but he died in the LORD, becauſe he alwayes lived to the LORD, and a happy death muſt needs accompany and crowne ſuch a life, From henceforth, ſaith the Spirit, they reſt from their labours, all teares are wiped from their eyes, and all
2 Tim. 2, 5. ſighs from their hearts, and their workes follow them; Opera ſequuntur, & opera præcedunt; their works goe before them: ſo no doubt but his workes have done, as the prayer and Almes, and faſting of Cornelius did; they have procured a place for him in heaven, and his works ſhall follow him, and the fame of him ſhall ſtirre up many to follow his example.

And ſo I end, beſeeching GOD to give us all, as He gave to him, our parts in the firſt Reſurrection, from ſin to grace: And to grant to him, and all the faithfull, and Saints departed, and us all with him, a joyfull Reſurrection to everlaſting life and glory in JESUS CHRIST, AMEN.
